Professor

David W.
Whitehead

Distinguished Practitioner
in Residence

David W. Whitehead, a graduate of Cleveland State University and Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, is the law school's first Distinguished Practitioner in Residence.

He brings to our classrooms the experience of almost three decades in the electric energy industry, including more than a decade as a corporate officer. This fall, he is teaching Corporations at the law school; in the spring he will teach a seminar in Energy Regulations Policy in CSU's Levin College of Urban Affairs. Throughout the year he will assist the law school in recruiting and advising our law students.

Professor Whitehead has recently retired from FirstEnergy Corporation, the fifth largest electric utility in the United States, where as Vice President and Corporate Secretary, he supervised many of the corporation's most important functions—from the day-to-day operations of the giant industry to real estate transactions, records management, internal facilities supervision as well as management activities related to the board of directors. He is also a conscientious public citizen—a member of the boards of the Cuyahoga Community College, the United Way, the Cleveland Scholarship Programs, Inc., the Cleveland State University Foundation and a valued member of the law school's Visiting Committee. He has received many awards, including the Black Professional of the Year (2005) and the African American Male Achiever (2006) from the 100 Black Men of Greater Cleveland organization.
