The 2016 Conference formally launched Cleveland-Marshall's Center for Cybersecurity and Privacy Protection, and was one of the first events in the Great Lakes region dedicated to these critical issues. The Center seeks to address the increasing demand for legal and policy analysis of the complex challenges government, law enforcement and the private sector face in securing and managing data while protecting privacy and economic interests. To that end, the Center coordinates and develops education and practical training programs for students, lawyers and other professionals. This annual conference serves as the Center's signature event each year.
