I. History of the Law School and University

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Mission Statement

We educate students from diverse backgrounds in the substantive knowledge, ethical values, and professional skills necessary to become outstanding lawyers and leaders in their communities and chosen professions. We foster a more just society through excellence in teaching, scholarship, and civic engagement. We are committed to the principle of Learn Law. Live Justice.

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Vision Statement

We strive to be recognized for exceptional achievements in legal education and scholarship. We will prepare our students to succeed in increasingly diverse, global, and technology-driven professions through academic excellence, practical experience, critical inquiry, and the robust exchange of ideas. We will continue to be distinguished by our commitment to ethical values, social justice, and public service.

A. Cleveland-Marshall College of Law History and Present

Cleveland-Marshall has a long-standing commitment to providing an excellent education to a diverse student body that prepares them to leave law school ready to practice in the legal or other professions. The Northeast Ohio legal community has long recognized that Cleveland-Marshall graduates have strong practical skills—well before “practice-ready” gained prominence in legal education.

Cleveland-Marshall traces its roots to the Cleveland Law School founded in 1897. Common to the period, it was a for-profit law school, charging an annual tuition of fifty dollars. Strikingly uncommon, the law school from its inception admitted women, ethnic minorities, and people of color, providing an entry into the legal profession for these groups at a time when almost no other law schools did. The John Marshall School of Law began in 1916 and merged with the Cleveland Law School in 1946 to become the Cleveland-Marshall Law School.

The law school received ABA accreditation in 1957. In 1967 we initiated our first full-time legal education program after 70 years of exclusively part-time evening programs. In 1969 Cleveland-Marshall Law School joined the newly created Cleveland State University as Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and was elected to membership in the Association of American Law Schools in 1970.

Cleveland-Marshall is a school of excellence and of opportunity. We recognize the importance of looking beyond traditional metrics of predicting success in law school. We take seriously our obligations to prepare our students to excel in law school and in the legal profession. We work at keeping our curriculum meaningful and relevant—and recognize that this requires both theoretical and practical learning.
We have a strong record of meeting new challenges and helping our students. In 2003 we adopted a comprehensive and far-reaching Bar-Passage Plan to address persistently low bar-passage rates. See Chapter V, Students, Section C.1, Bar Passage. This multi-faceted plan affected our admissions program, our academic program, and our budget. The University administration and the Board of Trustees committed to a strategic reduction in class size while maintaining the quality of our academic program. Our efforts have succeeded—prior to 2006 our highest pass rate for first-time takers was 84%, since 2006 our lowest pass rate for first-time takers was 84% and our highest was 90%—but we remain vigilant. See id.

Over the past three years we faced new challenges—substantial reductions in law-school applications, fewer jobs for our graduates, state cuts in higher education, and a call for greater practice-ready graduates. Our 140 Plan, approved by the Provost in May 2012, reduced the size of the 2012 IL class to 140 students. See Chapter II, Self Study and Strategic Planning, Section C, Strategic Planning. This plan required substantial budget cuts on top of University-mandated budget reductions we made the previous year—including future commitments to reduce the size of the tenure/tenure-track faculty. Id. More important, the Plan demonstrates our commitment to student-centered solutions in this new environment. Coupled with our recently reformed curriculum, the result of two years of study and conversations (see Chapter III, Program of Legal Education, Section C, Changes to the Curriculum), we are well positioned to think strategically about the future.

In 2008 we developed a new mark—C|M|LAW—and a motto that capture the essence of who we are: “Learn Law. Live Justice.” These words speak to our historic and current mission and vision—to prepare our students to be outstanding lawyers and leaders and to inspire them to serve others in the pursuit of a more just society. This Self Study shows the ways in which we work together to carry out our mission and vision.

This Self Study comes at an opportune time. Legal education and the legal profession are changing. A clear consensus exists at Cleveland-Marshall that these changes require a response and the 140-plan is our first step in that direction. But, as the rest of this Study shows, we do not all agree on what other measures we should take—or even on the nature and effects of these changes in the long term.

B. Cleveland State University

Cleveland State University is a comprehensive regional state University, located in downtown Cleveland, that began admitting students as a new public University in Fall 1965. The Ohio General Assembly mandated the creation of the University to serve the citizens of Northeast Ohio who otherwise might not have access to higher education and to be an urban institution, sensitive to the particular needs of the community in which it is located. CSU has thrived under the leadership of the two most recent Presidents, Dr. Michael Schwartz (2002-2009) and Dr. Ronald K. Berkman (2009-present). In the last seven years, the 85-acre campus has undergone a physical transformation, and the University community has developed a much more positive sense of itself and strengthened its relationship to Cleveland and the region.

CSU has changed in many ways academically over the last seven years. At the undergraduate level the University adopted more rigorous admissions standards and strengthened its core general education requirements. The University colleges were reorganized to better align academic departments and disciplines. CSU is now divided into nine colleges: College of Liberal Arts and Social Sciences, College of Sciences and Health Professions, Monte Ahuja College of Business, College of Education and Human Services, Fenn College of Engineering, Maxine Goodman Levin College of Urban Affairs, Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, College of Graduate Studies, and School of Nursing.

Today CSU serves approximately 17,000 students. Its student profile reflects its historic mission as an urban University; approximately 26 percent are minorities, of which 18 percent are African American; the average student age is 28; 55 percent are women; 45 percent are men. About one-third are in graduate school or law school. More than half are part-time students and transfer students.

The University employs 524 full-time faculty (91 percent have the Ph.D. or highest degree in their field) and 1,019 staff. It offers 71 undergraduate programs, 42 master’s-level programs, three advanced degrees in law, eight doctorates, two education specialist degrees, and several joint degrees in law and other disciplines. The University also administers $60 million in federal, state, local, and private grants (FY11) and collaborates with leading enterprises including Cleveland Clinic Foundation, Cleveland Municipal School District, City of Cleveland, and NASA Glenn Research Center, as well as other higher education institutions.
II. Self Study and Strategic Planning

A. Self Study Process 2011-13

In Fall 2011 Dean Boise appointed a Self Study Committee composed of C|M|LAW faculty, staff, administrators, and students (recommended by the Student Bar Association). The Committee members are: Jennifer Blaga (Director, Office of Career Planning), Phyllis L. Crocker (Professor of Law and Chair), Kelly Curtis (Professor of Legal Writing and Director of Academic Support), David Forte (Professor of Law), Carole Heyward (Clinical Law Professor and Director of Engaged Learning), Jean Lifter (Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs), Christopher Lucak (Assistant Dean for Admission and Financial Aid), Kristina Niedringhaus (Associate Professor of Law and Law Library Director), Mark Sundahl (Associate Dean for Administration and Associate Professor of Law), Brian Ray (Associate Professor of Law), Julia Salashour (3L student), Christopher Stuart (3L student), and Jeane White (Director of Budget and Administration).

The Committee tackled several projects in Fall 2011. At Dean Boise’s request, we gathered data relevant to and helped lead the faculty and staff discussions about the 140 Plan. Appendix 10, The 140 Plan: Towards a Smaller and Stronger Law School. We constructed, administered, and began analyzing faculty and staff surveys. Appendices 1A and 1B, Faculty Survey Results Charts and Graphs and Staff Survey Results Charts and Graphs. We began reviewing our Mission and Vision, but decided to postpone full consideration until Spring so that we could focus on the 140 Plan. The Library created a website for us to post all relevant Self Study documents.

In Spring 2012 we continued to meet as a committee to discuss the 140 Plan, the results of the faculty and staff surveys, and our Mission and Vision statements. We were pleased that a high percentage of faculty (77%) and staff (68%) participated in the online surveys. The committee worked with Thomas R. Geaghan, the University’s Director of Institutional Research, to better understand the survey results. During Spring we hosted four lunches with faculty and staff for conversations about the 140 Plan, the results of the faculty and staff surveys, and our Mission and Vision statements. We also divided responsibility for the sections of the Self Study and began meeting in teams.

In March 2012 we participated in the Law School Survey of Student Engagement. Fifty percent of our students answered the survey questions. The demographics of the respondents correspond to the demographics of our student body, by year in school, gender, race, and full-time and part time status\(^1\). Appendix 2, LSSSE 2012 Respondent Demographics; see also Appendices 3, 4, 5, and 6, LSSSE 2012 Frequency Distributions, LSSSE 2012 Mean Comparisons, LSSSE 2012 Student Comments, and LSSSE 2012 Summary of Results.

\(^1\)We have decided to participate in the LSSSE every year. Some of the results from the 2012 survey strike us as possible anomalies, so it makes sense to chart student experiences on a yearly basis rather than sporadically.
In April and May members of the committee met with the law school Visiting Committee and National Advisory Council to talk about the newly drafted Mission and Vision statements. We were fortunate to be able to spend several hours with the members of the National Advisory Council talking about the mission, vision, and future of the law school.

In Summer 2012 committee members began assembling data required for the Self Study.

In Fall 2012 we drafted and presented chapters of the Self Study to the faculty and staff for review and comment. In September Professor Crocker also met with Dean Boise’s Student Advisory Council to talk about the results of LSSSE and in October with the CMLAA Board of Trustees to present the proposed new Mission and Vision statements. In October, to encourage the greatest participation, we held lunches on a Tuesday and Wednesday for faculty and staff to discuss the chapters on Program of Legal Education, Students, Administration, Information Resources—Law Library, and Information Technology. In November we did the same for the discussion of the remaining chapters and topics—the Introduction, Bar Passage, Faculty, Finances, and Facilities. Prior to each set of lunches we provided the faculty and staff with drafts of the chapters. At each lunch our conversations focused on the Strengths and Weaknesses identified for each chapter.

The Self Study Committee incorporated comments and suggestions from all of the various constituencies into the final versions of the Mission and Vision statements that appear at the beginning of the Self Study. We also have incorporated the results of the faculty, staff and student surveys throughout the Self Study. Finally, we reworked the strengths and weaknesses, found at the end of each chapter, in light of our conversations with faculty and staff in Fall 2012.

The faculty approved the Self Study at our December 12, 2012, faculty meeting.

B. ABA Accreditation Committee Actions 2006-2008

In January 2007 the ABA Accreditation Committee made Findings of Fact and Conclusions based on the 2006 site evaluation. The Committee concluded that C|M|LAW was not in compliance with four Standards and had insufficient information to make a conclusion about one Standard. In its reports in January and October 2008, based on information we provided, the Accreditation Committee terminated the previously initiated Rule 13(a) proceeding regarding our compliance with noted standards. We remain on the list of ABA approved law schools and have no compliance matters pending. The specific standards, as well as our response to and resolution of each concern, are addressed below.
1. Not in Compliance

   a. Standard 212(b) requiring “a law school shall demonstrate by concrete action a commitment to having a faculty and staff that are diverse with respect to gender, race and ethnicity.”

   Response: Between Fall 2005 and Fall 2008 our hiring of full-time faculty was the result of concrete actions that reflected our commitment to racial, gender, and ethnic diversity. While we continued to participate in the AALS recruiting conference, we also decided to pursue lateral hires. Seven full-time faculty joined our faculty between Fall 2005 and Fall 2008: one African-American man, one African-American woman, one Asian-American man, one woman of Serbian descent, one Caucasian man, and two Caucasian women. Our commitment to diversity among our faculty has continued past Fall 2008. See Chapter IV, Faculty, Section B, Recruitment and Diversity.

   Resolution: In January 2008 the Accreditation Committee terminated the previously initiated Rule 13(a) proceeding regarding our compliance with Standard 212(b).

   b. Standard 304(f) and Interpretation 304-6 requiring a law school demonstrate the adoption and enforcement of policies that students may not be employed for more than twenty hours/week in any week in which they are enrolled for more than twelve class hours.

   Response: We instituted a number of mechanisms to inform students about and to better enforce the 20-hour/12-credit rule: we advise students about the limitations in the packet of information we send to admitted students, we discuss the requirement during 1L Orientation and during our one-on-one 2L advising sessions, and at the beginning of each semester we send an e-mail to students reminding them of the rule. In addition, we had the online registration system modified so that students who are in the system as part-time students cannot enroll for more than 12 hours per semester. If a part-time student wants to enroll for more than 12 credits, s/he must speak to our Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs, who may approve it if they advise her that they are not working more than 20 hours per week or if the extra hours are for an intersession course.

   Resolution: In January 2008 the Accreditation Committee terminated the previously initiated Rule 13(a) proceeding regarding our compliance with Standard 304(f) and Interpretation 304-6.

   c. Standards 404(a) and (b) requiring a law school have established polices about full-time faculty members’ “responsibilities in teaching, scholarship, service to the law school community, and professional activities outside the law school” and the law school periodically evaluate each faculty member’s compliance with those responsibilities.
Response: The faculty adopted a Statement on Professional Ethics and Academic Responsibility on January 17, 2008, and we provided a copy of the policy to the ABA. In addition, we informed the ABA that we had a yearly evaluation process for all faculty.

Resolution: In October 2008 the Accreditation Committee terminated the previously initiated Rule 13(a) proceeding regarding our compliance with Standards 404 (a) and (b).

d. Standard 701 and Interpretation 701-2(2) regarding educationally appropriate facilities for our clinics.

Response: In Spring 2008 we completed a substantial renovation project that included a new clinic suite. See Chapter X, Facilities.

Resolution: In March 2008, the ABA found we demonstrated compliance with Standard 701, subject to submitting a final report regarding completion, occupation, and use of the new clinic space. It appears we did not submit a final report, nor was it raised again by the ABA.

2. Insufficient Information to Determine Compliance

The Committee found it had insufficient information to conclude whether we complied with Standard 320(a)(4) requiring each student receive substantial instruction in “other professional skills generally regarded as necessary for the effective and responsible participation in the legal profession.”

Response: The faculty amended our graduation requirements to include completion of a skills course on May 8, 2008, effective with the 2008 entering class.

Resolution: In October 2008 the Accreditation Committee terminated the previously initiated Rule 13(a) proceeding regarding our compliance with Standard 320(a)(4). More recently we strengthened that requirement. See Chapter III, Program of Legal Education, Section D, Experiential Skills Courses.

C. Strategic Planning

In 2007 the faculty adopted a five-year strategic plan. Appendix 7, Strategic Plan 2007. The plan began in 2005-06 when, as part of a University-wide strategic planning process, we identified six areas in which we wanted to improve in order to fulfill our institutional vision. During the 2006-07 academic year, we held several sessions to prioritize our goals and develop specific tactics to accomplish those strategic goals. As then-Dean Mearns noted at the time: “We developed these goals and tactics with the understanding and expectation that the financial resources available to the law school will remain stable.” Id.

The goals unanimously adopted by the faculty were:
Goal 1: Substantially improve our graduates’ first-time bar passage rate on the Ohio State Bar Exam
Goal 2: Enhance the quality and diversity of the student body, and expand the professional opportunities available to them.2
Goal 3: Improve the scholarly reputation and productivity of our faculty.
Goal 4: Develop signature programs or centers of excellence at the law school.
Goal 5: Strengthen our curriculum and expand our teaching strategies to maximize the educational experience for our students in order to prepare them to practice law in the 21st century.
Goal 6: Expand our long-standing commitment to public service.

As the 2010 and 2012 updates show, we have employed the vast majority of the tactics we set forth in order to achieve our goals including those directed toward improving our graduates’ first-time bar-passage rates, enhancing the quality and diversity of the student body, and improving our faculty’s scholarly reputation and productivity. In terms of completed goals, we have created a Center for Health Law and Policy, adopted curriculum reform that strengthens our students’ educational experience and better prepares them for entering the legal profession, and increased our commitment to public service. Appendices 8 and 9, Strategic Plan 2010 Update and Strategic Plan 2013 Update. We discuss specific tactics, developments, accomplishments, and challenges within the text of this Self Study.

We recognize that the 2007 Strategic Plan was a five-year plan—technically ending in Spring 2012. We did not, however, end the process of strategic planning in Spring 2012.

In Dean Boise’s first year, he developed what we call the 140 Plan—a plan to immediately reduce the size of incoming classes to 140 students as a way to address the crisis in legal education engendered by the confluence of a shrinking job market, widespread criticisms of the traditional legal education model, and changes in student loans. Appendix 10, The 140 Plan: Towards a Stronger and Smaller Law School. Faculty and staff met to discuss the 140 Plan in Fall 2011; Dean Boise sought advice and counsel from our National Advisory Council and Visiting Committee. Dean Boise met with our Budget Task Force composed of faculty and staff on four separate occasions in Spring 2012 to develop a set of budget reductions that would be acceptable to the University. Dean Boise presented the 140 Plan to the University Provost and President in April 2012, and they approved the 140 Plan in May 2012. Id.

Reducing the size of the incoming class to 140 has immediate and future potential benefits. It maintains the academic quality of our students, increases student scholarship funds and will increase experiential learning opportunities. We expect it also will improve bar-passage and job-placement rates beginning with this 1L class; it also may improve our rankings. Id. at 6-9.

The 140 Plan also affected a budget that we previously reduced by approximately $406,000 in response to subsidy reductions by the State of Ohio detailed in Chapter IX, Finances. With the assistance of the Budget Task Force, Dean Boise negotiated a revised budget plan for the law school designed in part to address a shortfall in the law school’s projected budget target for FY12 due to a decision to reduce enrollment to 168 students for the 2011 1L class and also to make up the revenue lost from the 140 Plan. The Provost asked for proposed budget cuts at three levels—$500,000, $900,000 and $1.3 million. Id. at 10. In the end, the Provost required reduction of our FY13 budget by $800,599, and proposed, and the CSU Board of Trustees approved, a 9.5% tuition increase in each of FY13, FY14, and FY15. Id. The Provost also required the law school to further reduce its budget by an additional $750,000 by FY15 through cuts to tenure-track positions through attrition. While the budget reductions are considerable, we believe that the class-size reduction was essential to maintaining our ethical responsibilities to our current and future law students. As Dean Boise concluded in his memo presenting the 140 Plan:

Reducing our entering class size to 140 will help us survive these challenges by maintaining the critical admissions selectivity that will ensure that our admitted students are capable of passing the bar examination and becoming practicing lawyers. More importantly, coupled with some of the curricular and programmatic changes outlined above, a smaller class size will enable us to thrive as we continue to anticipate the direction that the evolving legal services industry will take and respond in ways that will best prepare our students to build meaningful and fulfilling careers in the law.

Id. at 10.

In this academic year, 2012-13, we continued to engage in short- and long-term planning. In November 2012 the faculty voted to elect a committee to examine the effects of the 140 Plan, identify ways to respond to the challenges we face, and report to the faculty in Spring 2013. See Appendix 11, Committee Charges 2012-13. In addition, Dean Boise began a series of Strategic Roundtable Discussions in preparation for an all-day faculty retreat in May 2013 that will kick off our next strategic planning cycle. The first two roundtables, in December 2012, focused on admissions and bar passage; other proposed topics are academic support, the future of the legal profession and job market, our LCOP program, and planning for required and elective course coverage between full-time and adjunct faculty as we continue to downsize.

D. C|M|LAW Strengths and Weaknesses

Each chapter of this Self Study identifies strengths and weaknesses specific to that substantive topic. Here we list the most important of those strengths and weaknesses.
Strengths

1. We educate our students in a manner that distinguishes them as being ready to practice law upon graduation.

2. C|M|LAW provides an excellent education for the lowest tuition in the state.

3. Our faculty care deeply about the quality of our teaching.

4. We offer a flexible course of study: full- and part-time programs with day and evening classes.

5. The downtown location of the University and law school provides our students with access to government offices, judicial chambers and courtrooms, businesses, and private law firms; in turn, lawyers and judges are a welcome part of our law school on a daily basis.

6. The C|M|LAW Library staff provide an exceptional program of library support services including the Research Assistant Program and interdisciplinary support of faculty research.

7. We have a strong commitment to service, including service to the University, and a long tradition of strong faculty governance.

8. Students benefit from our strong and involved alumni base and name recognition locally.

9. The Law Library provides students with quiet, accessible, and technologically up-to-date space for individual and group study.

10. Experienced IT personnel provide a high level of support to the Law School faculty, staff, and students.

11. The law school administration thinks strategically about how to ensure that the administrative structure best serves the needs of the law school community.

Weaknesses

1. C|M|LAW continues to have insufficient scholarship funds, compared to our competitor law schools, for enrolling the most qualified and diverse students.

2. A series of substantial budget cuts resulting from reductions in state funding and our decision to reduce enrollment under the 140-plan as well as the prospect of future cuts have created resource constraints that drive several of the most significant weaknesses we identified including: (1) faculty reductions that may make it challenging for us to continue to provide the same quality of legal education; (2) a constrained library budget that required aggressive acquisitions cancellations and severely limits all areas, including the IT capital purchases, and staff development and training; and (3) funding and staffing for the Academic Support Program, which is integral to our students’ academic success and bar-passage rates.

3. The law school needs more effective communication between the administration and faculty and staff.

4. Scholarly productivity is not consistent across the faculty.

5. The morale of the faculty and staff is a concern.

6. Academic support is limited and available almost exclusively to 1Ls.
III. Program of Legal Education

I. Degree Requirements

The College of Law has full-time and part-time programs leading to the Juris Doctor degree. The degree requirements are identical for both full-time and part-time students. For students entering in 2012, the requirements are:

1. The completion of 90 semester credit hours; with
2. A cumulative grade point average of at least 2.00; and
3. Satisfactory completion of the following course requirements:
   a. The core curriculum
      i. Contracts (4 credits)
      ii. Torts (4 credits)
      iii. Legal Writing (6 credits over 2 semesters)
      iv. Criminal Law (3 credits)
      v. Civil Procedure (4 credits)
      vi. Property (4 credits)
      vii. Legislation & the Regulatory State (4 credits) viii. Constitutional Law (5 credits over 2 semesters)
   b. Evidence (4 credits)
   c. Legal Profession (3 credits)
   d. 3rd Semester of Legal Writing (2 credits)
   e. Perspective course (2 or 3 credits)
   f. Experiential skills course (variable credits)
   g. Upper level writing requirement (2 or 3 credits)

Full-time students complete the core curriculum, except for Constitutional Law, in the first year; part-time students complete the core curriculum and some elective courses by the end of the second year. See Appendix 12, Student Handbook 2012-13, at 11-13.

The curriculum also offers a full range of courses tested on the bar examinations in Ohio and other states as well as an array of elective courses taught by both full-time and adjunct faculty. Simulation and other practice-related courses, in-house clinics, and off-campus externships provide numerous opportunities for practical skills training. Id. at 13-17; see also Appendix 13, Course Schedules Fall 2011-Spring 2013.

B. Attendance

Class attendance is an important element of student success. Our academic regulations require that students attend classes with substantial regularity. Appendix 12, Student Handbook 2012-13, Academic Regulations 1 (hereinafter Ac. Reg.). Generally speaking, absence from more than two weeks of classes in a single semester (or, in the case of Summer term, absence from more than one week of classes) is cause for lowering a student’s grade, administratively withdrawing a student from the course, or giving the student an “F” grade. Id. Faculty members enforce this rule by taking attendance at the beginning of every class. This is done by a variety of techniques, such as taking roll, reviewing a seating chart, or passing around a sign-in sheet.

C. Changes to the Curriculum

The curriculum has changed in significant ways since the last site visit. We engaged in a two-year curriculum reform project, culminating with changes to both our 1L and upper level curriculum effective Fall 2012. In 2009 we created a Center for Health Law and Policy that builds on our faculty strength in this area and is part of the University’s focus on public health. We made these changes in the spirit of strengthening the legal education we provide our students by identifying new areas and skills that we believe will benefit our students.

1. 2009-11 Curriculum Reform

In April 2011 the faculty approved major changes to the first year curriculum along with other modifications to the upper level academic program proposed by the Ad Hoc Committee to Review the Curriculum and Academic programs (Ad Hoc Curriculum Review Committee) to review the curriculum and academic programs. Appendix 14, Ad Hoc Curriculum Review Committee Report to the Faculty. In 2009 then-Dean Mearns created the committee, giving it a two-year charge to engage in a “comprehensive evaluation of our entire law school curriculum and academic program and propose appropriate, necessary, and progressive changes to our curriculum and our academic program in order to prepare our graduates to practice law and pursue other professional opportunities in the 21st century.” See Appendix 7, Strategic Plan 2007, Goal 5: “Strengthen our curriculum and expand our teaching strategies to maximize the educational experience for our students in order to prepare them to practice law in the 21st century.”

Fall 2009-Spring 2011 the Ad Hoc Curriculum Review Committee undertook a comprehensive evaluation of the law school curriculum and academic program. See Appendix 14, Ad Hoc Curriculum Review Committee Report to the Faculty. The Committee process included group meetings with faculty designed to educate the faculty on curricular issues, elicit discussion and solicit faculty feedback on general and specific curricular proposals, and present specific proposals for faculty vote. Id. In addition, the Committee solicited faculty input through individual faculty interviews and created a curriculum mapping survey to identify competencies covered in required courses. Id. The Committee held discussions with the Curriculum Review Advisory Group, a group of 30 local practitioners brought together specifically to consult with the Ad Hoc Curriculum Review Committee, as well as Visiting Committee and National Advisory Council. Id. The Committee also consulted students in a town hall meeting and reviewed student responses to the 2007 Law School Survey of Student Engagement. Id. Finally, Committee members reviewed current literature on law school curriculum and curricular reform, attended conferences on law school curriculum, and reviewed ABA Standards and potential revisions. Id. The Committee presented its report and proposals to the faculty for a vote in Spring 2011.

In April 2011 the faculty adopted the following changes:

a. Semesterization of four core courses—Contracts, Torts, Civil Procedure, and Property. The courses had previously been offered over the course of two terms for five credits (six credits for Civil Procedure). Beginning Fall 2012 the courses are offered as four-credit one-semester courses.

b. Creation of a new required first year course titled Legislation & the Regulatory State. The course replaces an upper level requirement that students take a course with a component of administrative law.

c. A mandate that we offer Legal Profession, our course that focuses on legal ethics and professionalism, only as a 3-credit course (the course could previously be offered for either 2 or 3 credits). Beginning with 2011-12, Legal Profession has been offered for 3 credits only.

d. Creation of a Professionalism Problem of the Semester to infuse professionalism into the curriculum. We introduced the first Professionalism Problem of the Semester in Spring 2012. September 2012 we held a faculty lunch to discuss Fall 2012 Professionalism Problem, including ways to integrate the problem or other discussions of ethics and professionalism into class discussions.

e. A charge to the Curriculum Committee to redefine the existing skills course requirement. See Section D below.

2. Health Law

In May 2009 the faculty approved the creation of a Center for Health Law and Policy. We chose to focus on health law for a number of reasons: the University made a commitment to introduce health initiatives across the academic curriculum, Cleveland’s extensive health care industry made us uniquely suited to train future health care attorneys, students were increasingly interested in health care law, and we had several professors whose teaching and scholarship focused on health law. See Appendix 15, Health Law Policy Center Proposal. Although we lost one of our senior health law professors who accepted a Chair at Lehigh University, the Center has flourished. Within the first two years we hired Professor Gwendolyn Majette, whose expertise is in U.S. health care regulatory matters and global health, and Professor Browne Lewis was named Director of the Center.

Our curriculum has expanded in a number of ways. We approved Certificates in Health Law and in Health Care Compliance. The Certificate in Health Law is open to J.D. candidates and is similar in design to the concentrations offered in other areas. See id. The Health Care Compliance Certificate reflects our belief that health care compliance is a growing field. The compliance certificate is open to J.D. and non-J.D. students, and we intend that ultimately graduates of the program will be certified by the Health Care Compliance Association. See Appendix 16, Health Care Compliance Proposal. In addition, we created the Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic (see Appendix 17, Clinic Descriptions).

The Center has also engaged the community in its programs. We formed a Health Law Advisory Council composed of leading attorneys and business persons working in health law at private law firms, the U.S. Attorney’s Office, general counsel offices at hospitals, and other health care facilities. See Appendix 18, Health Law Advisory Council Membership. The Council works closely with the health law faculty and Office of Career Planning on identifying course needs and also networking and employment opportunities. The Center has held two public health law summits dealing with cyberbullying, prescription drug abuse, health literacy, childhood obesity, and emergency preparedness. The Center also organized and presented symposia on health care compliance, cyberbullying, Munchausen Syndrome by Proxy, and food safety. The Journal of Law and Health co-sponsored two of these conferences, Munchausen Syndrome by Proxy and Cyberbullying.

3. Challenges Ahead

It is too early to assess many of these changes as they have just gone into effect this academic year or will be fully implemented next year. The Ad Hoc Curriculum Review Committee Report of April 2011 called for the adoption of a system to evaluate and monitor the effects of the plan, but those steps have not yet been put in place. The Health Certificate programs have attracted a number of current students although it has been impossible, thus far, for students to fully complete either program. Because one of our health law professors left the law school, we were unable to offer one of the core courses in the general health law certificate for two years; the Director of the program will be filling that gap, beginning Spring 2013. The Health Care Compliance program is just getting underway; we have not yet created all of the courses that are required elements of the program.

With the recent shrinkage of incoming classes, it will be necessary to plan our course offerings more carefully. When the school was larger, many of the basic courses for the bar and the concentrations were offered frequently in both the day and evening divisions. With a smaller student body, the demand, even for basic courses, is reduced. In addition, with the expectation that some number of full-time faculty will retire in the next three to five years and the understanding that three or four of those slots will be eliminated because of the reduction in the size of the student body, careful planning will be needed to ensure that faculty will be able to teach not only basic and required courses but also more advanced courses that reflect the areas of their own scholarly interests. The switch to semesterized core classes should help by freeing faculty who taught the two-term versions of the classes from one of the terms. Still, it will be necessary to make clear to students how often and when the courses will be offered so that they can plan—whether they just want to be sure to take courses tested on the bar exam, want to complete a concentration or certificate, or participate in one of the dual degree programs.
We will have to balance the need to offer and staff basic and bar-tested upper level courses with the desire to develop curricular specialties, utilizing both full-time and adjunct faculty. Given the employment prospects facing our students, we need to determine whether we should be helping them to develop skills that are applicable across a wide range of practice areas or developing more specialties that cater to existing or prospective niche areas of law practice.

D. Experiential Skills Courses

One of the most important developments since the last Self Study was the faculty’s adoption of a more rigorous experiential skills course requirement. To satisfy this requirement, a course must meet the following criteria. A substantial (at least 50% of class time) and regular part of the course consists of providing each student with multiple opportunities to engage in Experiential Learning.

Experiential Learning is defined as:

a. exercising lawyering skills in real-world or simulated real-world settings,
b. interacting personally and immediately with others to work toward resolution of a legal matter, and
c. receiving substantial individualized feedback on the assigned lawyering skill tasks.

Examples of lawyering skills include:

a. Trial advocacy
b. Advocacy before appellate courts, administrative agencies, or legislative bodies
c. Alternative dispute resolution
d. Counseling
e. Interviewing
f. Negotiation
g. Investigating and organizing facts
h. Organization and management of legal work
i. Drafting

In no event may a student satisfy both the 3rd semester legal writing requirement and the experiential skills requirement with a single course, even if the course could satisfy either of those requirements individually. Appendix 19, Curriculum Committee Memorandum on Experiential Learning Skills.

3In Spring 2012 the faculty adopted this requirement, which strengthened the skills requirement we adopted in 2008. See Appendix 19, Curriculum Committee Memorandum on Experiential Learning Skills. The Curriculum Committee is evaluating all existing skills courses this year to determine whether they meet our more robust skills requirement. See Appendix 11, Committee Charges 2012-13.
1. Overview of Experiential Skills Offerings

a. Clinics

We have made substantial changes to our clinics that are designed to strengthen our offerings and increase the types of experiences that are available to our students. The changes were occasioned by the recognized need for additional experiential opportunities for our students as well as the retirement of two clinical professors, budgetary pressures, and policy changes at the University (described below). Two of our five clinical professors, Gordon Beggs and Kermit Lind, retired in January 2011 and June 2011 respectively. Professor Beggs taught in the Employment Law Clinic, and Professor Lind in the Urban Development Law Clinic (formerly known as the Community Advocacy Clinic and now known as the Transactional Law Clinic).

When Dean Boise submitted a request to the Provost to hire two new clinical professors, the Provost viewed reinstating the positions as unnecessary given the historically low enrollments in the clinics and the fact that our entering class in Fall 2011 was predicted to be significantly smaller than our targeted enrollment of 190. The Provost agreed to permit the law school to keep the positions on the condition that we dramatically transform the clinics to increase their enrollment. The Dean, Associate Deans, and clinical faculty met over Summer 2011 and 2011-12 academic year to determine how to increase enrollment in the clinics, provide additional experiential offerings, and better prepare students for the practice of law.

After meetings during the 2011-2012 academic year, the clinical faculty in conjunction with the Dean and the Associate Deans decided that a variety of approaches would increase the level and quality of the experiential skills offerings as well as increase clinical enrollment. The clinical faculty’s goal is to create a variety of experiential skills offerings so that every student may engage in one or more experiences designed to build their professional skills and increase their chances of employment.

Specifically, the clinical faculty agreed to: 1) encourage students to take a clinic for one semester versus two semesters as was preferred in the past; 2) seek course approval for a General Civil Litigation Clinic; 3) seek to change the name of the Urban Development Law Clinic to the Transactional Law Clinic so that students would more easily identify the type of experience that was being offered; 4) experiment with using practitioners to assist the clinical professors with client supervision; 5) propose and offer a course called Transition to Practice that would prepare students for clinical or real-world practice by teaching skills such as problem solving, interviewing, negotiating, and counseling; and 6) assume responsibility for supervising the law school’s externship program.

In Fall 2012 the Transactional Law Clinic, supervised by Professor Carole Heyward, began using practitioners to assist with supervision of client matters. Professor Heyward assigns client work to teams of students and practitioners and closely monitors team work generated by students and practitioners by assigning client matters, monitoring team progress, and reviewing work-product.

In Summer 2012 several personnel changes occurred in the clinics. We hired Doron Kalir as a clinical professor for litigation. Dean Boise created the position of Director of Engaged Learning to coordinate our experiential skills offerings in our clinics and externships and appointed Clinical Professor Carole Heyward to serve in that position.

C|M|LAW currently offers five in-house legal clinics and one clinical course housed off campus. The five in-house clinical programs are the Community Health Advocacy Clinic, Employment Law Clinic, Transactional Law Clinic, Law and Public Policy Clinic, and Environmental Law Clinic. The Fair Housing Clinic is operated at the offices of a public interest law firm, and students in that clinic are supervised by an adjunct professor and staff attorneys from that firm. Professor Stephen Lazarus participates in the weekly seminar meetings of the Fair Housing Clinic. See Appendix 17, Clinic Descriptions.

In Spring 2013 we will begin offering a General Civil Litigation Clinic, of which the Employment Law Clinic will become a part. Clinical Professors Kowalski and Kalir will supervise this new clinical offering in Spring 2013 on an experimental basis. The clinic is designed to offer a broader litigation experience than that offered by the Employment Law Clinic; it will give students an opportunity to engage in client representation across a wide variety of fields and on multiple levels. Because the General Civil Litigation Clinic will offer a broader range of litigation experience, we believe that enrollment in this clinic will be significantly higher than enrollment in the Employment Law Clinic. The Clinic will represent clients in short-term matters such as evictions, the collection of credit card debt, and unemployment compensation in addition to cases that are longer and more complex such as asylum cases and public impact litigation. The course will be one semester in length and offered for 3 or 4 credit hours.

b. Externships

Since the last self-study, we have greatly expanded our externship program. We tripled the number of placement sites and the number of students enrolled in externships. We also created a new position, Manager of Student Affairs, whose primary responsibility was to administratively oversee the externship program in 2008. We quickly recognized that it would make more sense for the Office of Career Planning to assume administrative and counseling responsibility for the program because they work so closely with each of our students as well as with employers able to provide externship opportunities. In addition, we are implementing a new program of faculty supervision for the program.

4We also hired a clinical professor for the Transactional Law Clinic, who was to begin in January 2013. In November 2012 she decided to return to her former employer. In January 2013 we reopened the search, and Dean Boise appointed a new search committee chaired by Professor Heyward.
The level of student satisfaction with the externship experience continues to be very high. Students almost invariably report that their experience was extremely positive, enriching their understanding of the law and giving them an exciting taste of what it will be like to practice law.

We offer six types of externships: 1) General Counsel, 2) Judicial, 3) Public Interest, 4) Government, 5) United States Attorney, and 6) Independent. In Fall 2012 approximately forty placements were available to our students at a variety of sites including the Federal Public Defender’s Office, Legal Aid Society of Cleveland, and Cleveland Clinic General Counsel’s Office. A list of our current externship placements is provided in Appendix 20A, Externships List.

Students who have completed 29 credits (the core first year curriculum) with a 2.50 GPA or better may apply for an externship. Some externship sites have additional qualifications such as a higher minimum GPA or a background check. During Spring and Fall, students must work 16 hours per week (for 4 credits) or 24 hours per week (for 6 credits). In the seven-week Summer term, students must work for 24 hours per week (for 3 credits) or 40 hours per week (for 5 credits). See Appendix 20B, Externship Program Handbook.

Beginning in Summer 2013 responsibility for faculty supervision of the externship program is being transferred to the clinical faculty. Until Fall 2011 a number of professors rotated the faculty advisor responsibilities of overseeing operation of each placement, conducting seminars, collecting and reviewing weekly student journals, conducting site visits, and maintaining a quality educational experience by working with students and their supervising attorneys or judges. Students and site supervisors found this confusing. In Fall 2011 Professor Crocker became the full-time faculty advisor. She and the clinical faculty are sharing supervision of the externship program during the 2012-2013 academic year. The change to clinical faculty advisors for the externship program will provide continuity for the sites and closer advising for the students.

The Dean has charged the Curriculum Committee to review the current prohibition on externship placements in law firms. See Appendix 11, Committee Charges 2012-13. We also are reviewing the number of hours of student work required for our externships as compared to our clinics, as well as increasing the number of credit hours available Summer term.

c. Moot Court

C|M|LAW’s Moot Court Program has been in existence for over 40 years. The team has enjoyed great success since its inception. The program is administered jointly by the faculty advisors and the 2L and 3L students on the team. Since the last site visit, the faculty advisor of the program has changed twice. Professor Karin Mika was the faculty advisor until the end of the 2006-07 academic year, and Professor Stephen Gard served in that role for the academic years from 2007-08 to 2010-11.
Beginning in Summer 2011 Professors Kelly Curtis and Carolyn Broering-Jacobs assumed faculty responsibility for the program, when Professor Gard asked to step down.

Students take Moot Court I their first year on the team. Students who join the team for a second year take Moot Court II. Both Moot Court I and II are designed to teach advanced legal research, writing, and oral advocacy via regular instruction and participation in extramural moot court competitions. Students in Moot Court I are invited to participate based upon either their participation in a Spring competition at the end of their first year and chosen for Moot Court II based on their successful completion of Moot Court I. Each student is assigned to a team of two or three students who, together, compete in an extramural moot court competition sometime during the academic year.

Students earn three graded credits for Moot Court I and three graded credits for Moot Court II. Grades are based upon three equally weighted factors: 1) brief writing, 2) oral advocacy, and 3) professionalism and other contributions to the program. Grades are based on students’ work the entire year, not on competition results.

In the 2012-13 academic year, there are 22 members of the Moot Court Program. This represents a reduction in the size of the program. With the progressive reduction in the size of C|M|LAW’s incoming class and many worthwhile extracurricular activities for our students to choose from, a reduction in team size seemed appropriate. The Moot Court Program will send eight teams to five appellate advocacy competitions this year: Burton D. Wechsler First Amendment Moot Court Competition, National Moot Court Competition, American Bar Association National Appellate Advocacy Competition, William E. McGee Civil Rights Moot Court Competition, and August A. Rendigs Products Liability Moot Court Competition.

Outside-attorney involvement has been integral to the Moot Court Program in recent years. Each team is coached by an attorney or group of attorneys from the local bar. Typically, one coach works closely with a team and that coach draws on colleagues to assist with judging practice oral arguments at the coach’s law firm. Teams frequently are invited to their coaches’ firms for practice rounds. In addition to assisting as coaches, dozens of local attorneys come to the law school to judge practice oral arguments while the students are preparing for competition. The guidance and mentoring that students receive from the attorneys who assist in the program are invaluable.

d. Frederick Douglass Moot Court Competition

5In May 2007 the faculty approved changes to the credits and grades we gave for Moot Court. Based on recommendations by the Ad Hoc Committee on Moot Court, the faculty agreed that the maximum number of credits for Moot Court should remain at six. See Appendix 97, Ad Hoc Committee on Moot Court Memo. The faculty also approved reorganizing how the credits are distributed: we replaced the prior arrangements of 1 credit for Moot Court Tryout (P/F), 3 credits for Moot Court Competition (graded), and 2 Credits for Moot Court Board (graded) with 3 credits each for Moot Court I and II (both graded). In May 2008, based on recommendations by the Committee, the faculty approved a new course for independent subject-specific moot court competitions: 1 credit, P/F, that may be taken no more than twice.
Beginning in 2010, each year the Black Law Students Association has sent two teams to the Frederick Douglass Moot Court Competition hosted by the National Black Law Students Association. We have supported this independent moot court competition with intensive faculty advising and financial support. In addition, members of the legal community have played an active role by judging practice rounds for our teams. The teams have been successful: each year our teams have advanced to the finals where the first year one of our students won Best Oralist and the next year one of our teams finished fourth in the nation.

e. Trial Advocacy Team

Since 1999, lawyers at the Reminger law firm have served as adjuncts who teach and coach the Trial Advocacy Competition course. The Trial Advocacy Team holds a competition for team members in Spring each year. In Spring 2012 more than fifty students competed for 17 spaces on the team. The students chosen meet in Fall to begin developing their trial skills. The students meet with the adjunct professors on a weekly basis and in Spring each year register for the Trial Advocacy Competition course (2 credit hours). There are two trial competitions each year—one in Fall and a regional three-day event in Spring. The law firm pays for all team travel. Given the school’s new Trial Courtroom, a renewed focus on trial competition teams may be appropriate. We need to consider how to expand the scope of trial practice training.

f. Law Journals

C|M|LAW publishes three student-edited journals: Cleveland State Law Review, Journal of Law and Health and Global Business Law Review. Our newest journal, Global Business Law Review, was founded in 2010. Students are selected for the editorial boards and staff of the journals based on their academic success and their research and writing abilities. Each of the journals has one or more faculty advisors and a student led board. Students who participate receive academic credit, graded Pass/Fail. In 2012, each of the three journals has undertaken the creation an online journal component through Bepress’s Digital Commons product. As a result, by Fall 2013, each journal’s current and back issues will be available online and accessible through the law school’s EngagedScholarship portal.

Cleveland State Law Review publishes articles of local and national significance four times a year, and gives preference to articles between 20 and 60 law review pages in length including text and footnotes. Journal of Law and Health publishes two issues per year that focus on the interactions between health care, the various branches of the health care industry, and law. In addition to the traditional law review articles, the Journal accepts shorter submissions. The Journal also co-sponsors, with the Center for Health Law and Policy, an annual lecture on the subject of the Note written by the recipient of the Barbara J. Tyler Award for Best Note. Global Business Law Review publishes cutting-edge articles addressing current legal issues that impact the world of transnational business and finance. GBLR publishes two volumes every year. Fall volume is a Symposium Edition with articles from their annual Spring symposium, the most recent of which was “Navigating Anti-Bribery Legislation: Remaining Compliant and Competitive in the Global Marketplace”.

6There are two ways to become a member of the journals. The first way is by grading on class percentile: Cleveland State Law Review invites students in the top 10 percent of their class, after the first year, to join. Global Business Law Review invites students in the top 15 percent of their class, after the first year, to join. Journal of Law & Health invites students in the top 20 percent of their class, after the first year, to join. The second way is through a Summer writing competition following the first year. Part-time students often wait until the end of their second year to participate in the writing competition.

g. Other Skills Courses

In addition to our clinics, externships and organized competitions, we offer other skills courses on a regular basis. Each year we offer Trial Advocacy as a full-term evening course and as a two-week intensive course in Summer. We offer Mediation twice a year as a short intensive course between Fall and Spring terms and between Spring and Summer terms. We also offer it every other year as a full-term course taught by a federal district court judge and an attorney. We offer Arbitration on a regular basis.

E. Legal Writing

The required core curriculum includes two legal writing courses: the first-year course and an upper level semester of writing instruction.

1. The First-Year Course

Legal Writing, Research, and Advocacy is a two-semester six-credit course. In order to give students significant individualized instruction, the first-year course is taught in small sections of between 15-18 students. Legal Writing professors teach no more than two sections of the first-year course, giving most professors an average teaching load of between 30-35 students per year—a significant reduction from the 48-50 students per professor at the time of the last Site Visit in 2006. Having fewer students allows for more individualized instruction that comes in many forms: written feedback on students’ work, work with small groups of students inside and outside the classroom, required conferences to discuss drafts, liberal office hours for students to drop in for additional or follow-up instruction, and responding to frequent student questions via e-mail.

The legal writing faculty agree on and regularly evaluate a common curriculum. While the course content is the same, each professor decides how best to deliver that content. Allowing each professor to teach to her/his strengths and to try different approaches benefits our students. Also, a professor who tries something new and succeeds can share that experience with other faculty. For example, we learned from the Office of Career Planning that Professor May’s students were writing markedly better cover letters than their classmates. It turned out that Professor May had incorporated a cover-letter writing segment into her course as an introduction to persuasive writing. The legal writing faculty agreed to add cover-letter writing to the first-year legal writing curriculum, and Professor May shared her instructional materials for others to use if they wished.

2. Third Semester Courses

In addition to the first-year course, students are required to take one additional semester of legal writing, which we call the third-semester of legal writing. Students satisfy this requirement by choosing among Advanced Brief Writing, Legal Writing and Litigation, Legal Drafting: General, Legal Drafting: Transactional, Patent Drafting, and Scholarly Writing. In each third-semester course, students learn writing and research skills that build on and reinforce the skills developed in the first-year course, while focusing on a subject of interest.

The third-semester courses are taught primarily by adjunct faculty in sections of no more than 12 students. The 12-student cap on adjunct-taught third-semester courses is a change since the last Site Visit. Recognizing that the hallmark of good writing instruction is regular individualized feedback, and further recognizing that our adjunct faculty have other full-time jobs, we capped the class size to ensure that they could provide students sufficient feedback.

Innovations in the third-semester offerings include team-taught classes with an adjunct/adjunct combination as well as a full-time faculty/adjunct combination, collaboration in the transactional drafting course between Professors Broering-Jacobs and Heyward, from the Transactional Clinic, and the addition of the Patent Drafting course.

F. Professional Responsibility

In addition to taking the required three-credit Professional Responsibility course, students and faculty also participate in the Professionalism Problem of the Semester, which provides an opportunity for the entire Law School to consider and discuss common ethical and professional problems that lawyers routinely encounter. Introducing a new scenario each semester will give students the chance to grapple with these problems prior to entering the profession officially, to consider different views on how to handle difficult situations, and to emphasize that C|M|LAW emphasizes ethical and professional behavior by its students and graduates. Professors have discretion to decide whether to discuss this problem in their classes and may choose to focus on one or two questions or issues that are of particular interest to their class or area of interest. See Appendix 21, Professionalism Problem Fall 2012.
G. Additional Components of the Curriculum

1. Perspective course requirement

The perspective course requirement provides students with a viewpoint on the nature and function of law that is different from traditional doctrinal analysis of American law, whether that analysis involves cases, statutes, codes, constitutions, or other traditional sources of law. A perspective course should help students understand how law shapes and is shaped by forces outside the legal system, including such forces as economics, politics, culture, ideas, society, and religion. Because many students come to law school with deficient training in the humanities and social sciences, a perspective course may help them understand how other disciplines illuminate the study of law. We believe students can also gain understanding of how our legal system works by studying another legal system or body of law, or by studying the theory or history of law. For a full description of the perspective requirement, see Appendix 22, New Course Proposals, Attachment B, Description of and Criteria for the Perspective Course.

As part of its review of the curriculum, the Curriculum Review Committee considered eliminating the perspective course requirement. Faculty discussion, however, showed significant support for retaining it. The requirement remains a graduation requirement that students fulfill after the first year of law school.

2. Legal Career Opportunities Program

In Fall 2008 then-Dean Mearns appointed a Special Committee to Evaluate the Legal Career Opportunities Program (LCOP) and charged the Committee to evaluate and propose appropriate modifications to the current Summer LCOP. In April 2009 the Committee reported back to the faculty, summarizing its work over the previous year. The Committee looked at a number of issues including whether 1) LCOP should be changed from a regular admission to a conditional admission program, 2) LCOP should be expanded to include some designated percentage of the incoming class, and 3) the Summer LCOP course should be changed. In the end the Committee recommended that the program not be changed to a conditional admit program, that we should continue to explore expansion of the program, and that the Summer course should be modified to include more substantive content and a strong skills component and should provide regular feedback to students on their progress. See Appendix 23, Report of the Special Committee to Evaluate LCOP. In Summer 2009 through Summer 2012 the course, which had previously been taught by a legal writing professor, was taught by a tenured professor with the assistance of the Manager of the Academic Excellence Program. Quizzes, both multiple choice and essay, were administered regularly throughout the term along with a final exam. It is anticipated that, beginning Summer 2013, the course will be co-taught by a tenured professor and the legal writing professor who has been appointed Director of Academic Support.
3. Great Lakes Sports and Entertainment Law Academy

In 2012 C|M|LAW launched the Great Lakes Sports & Entertainment Law Academy in partnership with the Case Western Reserve University School of Law. The Academy is an intensive three-week academic program housed at C|M|LAW during the Summer in which students take three two-credit-hour courses in the areas of sports law or entertainment law. The classes are taught by leading figures in the fields of sports and entertainment law. Following this three-week program some of the Academy students participate in nine-week externships in a variety of settings, including the Cleveland Cavaliers, the Cleveland Film Commission, Vuguru Studios LLC, the Lake County Captains (Class A affiliate of the Cleveland Indians) and outside counsel for NCAA Athletic Conferences where they are exposed to the practice of sports law or entertainment law. The objective of the Academy is to provide students with an intensive doctrinal and experiential learning opportunity in the field of sports and entertainment law. The curriculum provides students the opportunity to negotiate and draft agreements that a lawyer advising an athlete, a sports team, or an entertainer would encounter. The inaugural year of the program exceeded expectations by attracting over 50 students from Northeast Ohio and across the country.

H. Dual Degrees and Concentrations

We offer five dual-degree programs, allowing J.D. candidates to complete the J.D. and a Master’s degree in as little as four years of full-time study. The existing dual degree programs combine the J.D. with the Master of Business Administration; Master of Public Administration; Master of Urban Planning, Design and Development; Master of Arts in Environmental Studies; and Master of Science in Environmental Science. See Appendix 12, Student Handbook 2012-13, at 17-18.

Students have the opportunity, but are not required, to complete concentrations in five areas: Business Law, Civil Litigation and Dispute Resolution, Criminal Law, Employment and Labor Law, and International and Comparative Law (added in 2008). In addition, we have two certificate programs offered under the aegis of our Center for Health Law and Policy—a general Health Law Certificate and, new in 2012, a certificate in Health Law Compliance. In each case, students must complete specified foundational courses, elective courses, and a writing project or experiential course, and maintain a 3.00 GPA in the concentration or certificate courses. Id. at 19-20.

In 2008 we suspended our Tax concentration because we had only one full-time tax professor and could not guarantee that we would be able to offer the range of tax courses required for the concentration on a regular basis. We have continued to offer a rich array of tax courses, utilizing now two full-time (new tax professor, John Plecnik, hired in 2010) and several adjunct faculty. This increase in our tax faculty has triggered discussions of possibly reviving the tax concentration. Since 2006, a number of graduates have gone on to LL.M. programs in Tax and, in 2011 and 2012, C|M|LAW students reached the semi-finals in the ABA Law Student Tax Challenge sponsored by the ABA Tax Section.
I. Survey Results Regarding our Curriculum

The 2011-12 faculty survey included numerous questions about our academic program. Close to 75% agreed that the part-time program was a strength of the school and more than half believed that we excel in teaching rigorous analysis and research skills. See Appendix 1A, Faculty Survey Results Charts and Graphs. Faculty expressed strong support for the clinical faculty’s professional experience. Id. We believe the externship program is a strength of the curriculum and believe it should be emphasized for students in the future. Id. We believe that preparing students for the legal profession of the future should emphasize written and oral communication skills, and research and analysis, as well as practical skills. Id. We consider it essential that we foster students’ intellectual curiosity and give them the tools to pass the bar exam.

Responses to the Law School Survey of Student Engagement indicate that our graduating students believe they have developed clear and effective writing skills and have learned to tackle real-world problems. An overwhelming majority believe that they have gained in critical and analytical thinking ability and in job and work-related skills. A clear majority of students are satisfied with academic planning and advising provided—with 1L students utilizing advising services the least but expressing the most satisfaction. Nearly all upper level students make use of academic advising and a significant majority express satisfaction. Student Bar Representatives reported that students express some dissatisfaction with course selection and scheduling. See below Sections K.3, Advising Students, and K.4, Academic Support, for further discussion regarding our advising and academic support services.

J. Pro Bono Program

The law school established the Pro Bono Program in 1997. Its goals are: (1) to engage law students in the delivery of legal assistance in cooperation with faculty, local attorneys, and community agencies serving the poor and other under-represented groups, (2) to introduce law students to the difficulties of the poor and other under-represented groups, (3) to demonstrate the reward of public service, and (4) to encourage law students to discharge their professional obligations to render pro bono service when they graduate and become lawyers. Clinical Professor Pamela Daiker-Middaugh spends half of her time coordinating the Pro Bono Program.

Our Pro Bono/Public Interest Program has been recognized as a leading program in the country. In 2008 we ranked #49 in National Jurist’s Change the World: Best Public Interest Law Schools. In 2011 we received a B+ in National Jurist (a total of 23 law schools received a grade of B+ and 36 schools received a grade of A). Factors used to evaluate the programs included: public interest clinics, faculty oversight of public interest, LRAP, tuition, pro bono efforts.

Generally, Pro Bono projects are separated into three categories: community service (non-legal), hybrid (partially legal), and pro bono (legal). Representative projects include: preparing and serving lunch at a local soup kitchen; team teaching the United States Constitution in city high schools through the 3Rs Program sponsored by the Cleveland Metropolitan Bar Association; assisting residents in getting their drivers’ licenses back through the Driver’s License Reinstatement Project; preparing and filing taxes for low-income workers through the Cuyahoga County Earned Income Tax Credit Coalition; and performing intake, conducting research, and preparing for trial with the Legal Aid Society of Cleveland.

Students participate in the Pro Bono Program on a voluntary basis. Approximately one-fourth of our students take part in one or more projects each year. Over the past few years, student participation has been strong and steadily increasing. In 2010-2011, 187 students contributed over 10,400 volunteer hours to the community. In addition, twenty faculty and staff members and twelve alumni volunteered for one or more projects. During the 2011-2012 academic year, 204 students volunteered more than 11,600 hours to the community. Also, twenty-one faculty and staff members and eleven alumni assisted with one or more projects. In Fall 2012 we instituted a Live Justice Day as part of IL Orientation—over forty students, faculty, and staff participated.

Law students who complete at least 40 hours of service are recognized at our annual Honors Ceremony. Five law students who have demonstrated exceptional commitment to Pro Bono Work are selected to win $1,000 Dean’s Community Service Awards. And, to designate tireless work on behalf of the community, one law student each year is the recipient of the $1,000 Blair Award for Service Before Self and is recognized as C|M|LAW’s Pro Bono Student of the Year.

Each Summer, the Pro Bono Program invites law students to propose and design their own Pro Bono projects. Eighteen law students are selected to spend their Summer as Public Interest Fellows performing service in the community. Each student is provided with a $2,500 educational stipend to help defray costs. Projects have included volunteering for county public defender’s offices, local non-profits, and legal services agencies. Because the law students are able to craft their own dream initiatives, volunteer experiences have also included service not only all over the country—recently in New York, Georgia, and Alaska—but also all over the world. In the last few years our law students have held Public Interest Fellowships with Amnesty International in Sydney, Australia, a judicial tribunal in the Seychelles Islands, and a women’s micro-loan program in Tanzania.

Despite the high number of hours spent on pro bono work and the public recognition of our program, the 2012 LSSSE revealed that the involvement of 2Ls in pro bono activities was substantially lower compared to every comparator group of schools. See Appendix 4, LSSSE 2012 Mean Comparisons Report. Our 2Ls reported spending an average .38 hours per week performing pro bono activities that were not required by a class or clinic as compared to 1.15

7 In the 3R’s (Rights, Responsibilities, and Realities) Program lawyers, judges, and law students team teach 10th grade social studies students in the Cleveland public schools to improve their understanding of and respect for the rule of law and our Constitution, provide practical career counseling, and improve the pipeline of minority students who may pursue a legal career.
hours per week at our peer schools, 1.64 at schools with 500-900 students, 1.52 at public schools, and 1.64 at all LSSSE participating schools. We are not certain why these differences exist with our 2L students. One reason for the low numbers, however, may have been the fact that due to technical issues our students did not receive notices of a popular pro bono activity—Legal Aid legal advice clinics.

We see a disconnect between the 2012 LSSSE Survey results, the high number of hours our students put in on pro bono projects, and the national recognition we have received. This is one example of why we decided to participate in the LSSSE every year: we want to know if the 2012 responses were an aberration or show a pattern that we need to address.

K. Evaluation of Scholastic Achievements

1. Grading Policy

The faculty grade student performance in accordance with grading guidelines applicable to most courses and with an understanding that grading in courses not covered by the guidelines (such as seminars, clinical programs, third semester legal writing courses, and courses with limited enrollment) should reflect a spectrum of grades. First-year and upper level courses have different grading guidelines. See Appendix 24, Faculty Manual 2012, at 45. Compliance with the guidelines is prima facie evidence of a reasonable grade distribution. In practice, although the guidelines are advisory, compliance is strongly urged and any substantial deviations are only approved by the Associate Dean for Administration under extraordinary circumstances. The guidelines are in the Faculty Manual and are distributed to all faculty members when grades are due. Id. The Student Handbook contains a copy of the Guidelines. Appendix 12, Student Handbook 2012-13, Grading Guidelines, at 20.

In April 2007 we modified the available grade options (and made corresponding changes in recommended allocation of grades in the Grading Guidelines) to include the option of assigning A-, B-, and C- grades. We adopted this change to bring our grading system more in line with the grading systems of the other Ohio law schools. See Appendix 25, Academic Standards Committee Memo Re: Grading System and Related Matters. According to the analysis undertaken by the Academic Standards Committee, the broader spectrum of grades utilized by other laws schools resulted in a higher average GPA for their students, which placed our students at an unfair disadvantage when entering the job market. Other rationales for this change included the understanding that the greater number of available grades would enable professors to assign grades that more fairly represent the performance of a student in class in comparison with other classmates and would yield greater consistency in grading among multi-section courses.

Grades for 1L and upper level courses (except seminars, see below) are based, at a minimum, on a final written examination or paper. All examinations that count for ten percent or more of a student’s final grade are graded anonymously. See Appendix 12, Student Handbook 2012-13, Ac. Reg. 3.9(a). In all courses professors can adjust the final grade based on class participation, quizzes, papers, and/or other course projects. Students enrolled in trial advocacy, moot court, and clinical courses receive grades based on their performance and the projects completed as part of the course of study.\(^8\) Students in research-oriented courses such as Independent Legal Research receive grades based on the papers submitted to fulfill course requirements.

For seminars, law school policy requires that students complete a “substantial paper or equivalent written product.” See Appendix 22, New Course Proposals, Attachment C, Criteria for Designation of a Course as a Seminar. The Dean has charged the Curriculum Committee this year to evaluate whether the paper requirement for seminars is of sufficient rigor to satisfy the upper level writing requirement. Appendix 11, Committee Charges 2012-13.

For courses that satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement, students must complete a paper, brief, case note, or other piece of legal writing that combines writing, research, analytical and organizational skills into one substantial written product under the direction of a faculty supervisor. See Appendix 26, Upper Level Writing Requirements and Independent Legal Research Standards. What constitutes a “substantial” written product is left to the discretion of the instructor, subject to review by the Curriculum Committee at the time the course is submitted for approval. Id. When the Upper Level Writing Requirement is satisfied in an Independent Study course, the student is ordinarily required to write 12 to 15 double-spaced pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, per credit hour, but in no case less than 10 pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, per credit hour. Id.

2. Advancement, Graduation, and Academic Dismissal

Students with a cumulative GPA of 2.0 and above are in good standing. Students who within the allowable timeframe have completed the Required Core Curriculum, all other graduation requirements, and earned a minimum of 90 credit hours with a cumulative GPA of at least 2.0 are awarded the J.D. degree. See Appendix 12, Student Handbook 2012-13, Ac. Reg. 4.3.

Faculty members are regularly encouraged by the administration to grade rigorously so that the law school does not continue to enroll students who we do not believe can complete their legal education, pass the bar, or succeed as lawyers. Giving a student low grades when justified also assists the law school in identifying at-risk or failing students early so that we can provide academic support to them. Any student who earns a GPA below 2.00 at the completion of the first year of study, or any term thereafter, is dismissed. Id. Ac. Reg. 5.1. Students who are academically dismissed with a GPA of 1.80 or higher may petition for Academic Probation. See id., Ac. Reg. 5.3(a). A student placed on Academic Probation must raise his/her cumulative GPA to 2.0 or better at the completion of the probationary semester. Failure to attain this GPA results in dismissal. Id. A student may be placed on Academic Probation no more than one time. If, after raising the GPA to the 2.0 level, the student’s GPA again falls below that level, the student is dismissed. Id.

C|M|LAW’s attrition rates for recent incoming first-year classes are as follows: 2006, 14.9%; 2007, 17.5%; 2008, 17.3%; 2009, 15.9%; 2010, 17.5%; 2011, 16.4%.

The 16.4% attrition rate for the 2011 incoming class was the result of 30 students leaving the law school. This was comprised of 16 academic dismissals, 8 withdrawals (for personal and academic reasons), and 6 transfers. Of the 16 student who were dismissed for academic reasons, 10 were minority students, 2 of whom were LCOP (and they were the only two LCOP students academically dismissed). We are especially troubled by the high dismissal number of students of color—it comprises 50% of the students of color in the 1L class. We need to understand why this happened so that we can better assist our students in order for them to succeed.

In comparison with the other eight Ohio law schools, we fall somewhere in the middle in terms of 1L attrition. To illustrate, for the incoming class of 2006, we had the fifth highest attrition rate (14.9%) after Capital (23%), Akron (20.9%), Ohio Northern (20%), and Dayton (15.3%). For the class of 2007, we had the third highest attrition rate (17.5%), in Ohio, behind Capital (24%), Akron (23%). For the class of 2008, we were fifth again, behind Capital (20.4%), Akron (19.6%), Ohio Northern (18.8%), and Dayton (17.5%). For the 2009 entering class, we were fourth behind Dayton (18.1%), Akron (17.2%), and Capital (17%). Finally, for the 2010 entering class, we had the third highest attrition rate (17.5%), behind Capital (23.7%) and Toledo (20.6%).

We view academic attrition as an important way of identifying students whose poor academic performance indicates that they should not continue in law school because we do not believe that they will pass the bar and therefore succeed as lawyers. In our continuing efforts to be honest with students, and to best utilize the information we glean from the data we have about our graduates’ bar passage, the Dean charged the Academic Standards Committee this year with considering raising the required minimum GPA at C|M|LAW from 2.0 to 2.25. Appendix 11, Committee Charges 2012-13.

3. Advising Students

C|M|LAW understands the importance of providing continuing advice to our students in order to ensure that they succeed in law school, prepare themselves for the bar exam, and prepare themselves to enter the job market. In addition to informal advice provided by faculty members and staff, we advise students in a number of ways including 1) orientation sessions for incoming students, 2) orientation sessions for returning students, 3) classroom visits to first-year students prior to registration of their second year of classes, 4) mandatory one-on-one counseling sessions for all 2Ls, 5) our Peer Advisor Program, and 6) advice on a walk-in basis provided by our Director of Student Life, our Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs, and our Associate Deans.

Our students benefit from a rich program of information and advice at the very outset of their law school career through the mandatory orientation program that all incoming students attend. This orientation program, called First Years’ First Week, is a week-long program that takes place during the week prior to the beginning of the academic year and includes an array of experiences to introduce students to law school and set them on a path toward their career as a professional. During this first week, incoming students begin one of their substantive classes (in 2012, it was Torts) as well as their Legal Writing, Research and Advocacy course. It is during this week that students are introduced to the Peer Advisor Program (as described below). The incoming students also have an opportunity to have lunch in small groups with faculty members who often provide them with informal advice.

In order to help prepare the new students to succeed in their classes, a Case Briefing Seminar is held to teach the skill of briefing cases. A mandatory session entitled “Entering the Profession” is also held in which the Associate Deans impress upon the new students that they will be entering the professional ranks of lawyers and that they need to comport themselves as professionals even during their student years. A session is also held to inform the students of the support services that are available at the law school and at the University, including counseling services, health and wellness services, and accommodations for disabilities. At the close of the week, an advising session is held for significant others to help them understand the pressures and demands of law school so that they will be better prepared to support our students during their time at the law school.

In Fall 2012 the law school held, for the first time, a mandatory Upper Class Orientation session for all returning students (one session for day students and one for evening students). During this meeting, the Associate Deans, the Directors of Bar Preparation, the Library, and the Office of Career Planning spoke to the returning students about those issues on which 2Ls and 3Ls need to focus. While 1Ls are largely focused on succeeding in their pre-set first-year curriculum, upper class students need to understand 1) how to select courses that best match their needs and career goals, 2) the nature of the legal profession and career options, 3) the nature of the bar exam and how to prepare for it, 4) how to become involved in the legal community and develop professional relationships, 5) the benefits of being involved in student organizations and other extracurricular activities, and 6) how to gain work experience and prepare to enter the job market. This inaugural Upper Class Orientation was well received by students and will be annual event at the beginning of every year.

Every year during Spring (just prior to the opening of registration for Summer and following Fall courses), the Associate Deans and Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs visit a class in every first-year section to remind students of the graduation requirements that they will have to fulfill during their remaining years at the law school as well as provide with information on concentrations, courses tested on the Ohio bar exam, and special curricular offerings such as Law Review, Journal, Moot Court, externships, and clinics. Part-time students are also advised regarding the scheduling options for completing the core curriculum.10

Beginning 2007 the law school initiated mandatory one-on-one counseling sessions for all 2Ls, which take place in Fall. Every 2L meets with the Dean, an Associate Dean, the Director of Student Life or Bar Preparation, or a professor to ensure that the student is fully aware and informed about 1) graduation requirements, 2) the need to register with the Ohio Supreme Court to initiate the character and fitness process for bar admission, and 3) the bar preparation support that is offered by the law school. See Appendix 27, 2L Advising Information Sheet. During this meeting we seek to learn how the student is faring and offer advice regarding course selection, time management, and support services, among other things. This meeting gives the law school a chance to check-in with each and every student to make sure that the student does not have any issues that need addressing.

Our Peer Advisor Program provides an opportunity for 1Ls to seek advice and support from an upper level student who serves as their Peer Advisor. Students often feel more comfortable seeking advice from other students (rather than from faculty and staff members), 10 Student leaders also visit the first-year Legal Research, Writing and Advocacy sections to inform students about (and promote) certain opportunities such as Moot Court and the three law journals.

and peer advisors are also able to share knowledge and advice stemming from their own experiences as students that faculty and staff may not be able to provide. Each peer advisor is assigned a small number of 1Ls with whom he or she maintains regular contact for the entire academic year. The peer advisors are expected to 1) contact each student in his/her assigned group twice a month by e-mail, text or phone, 2) schedule one hour of face-to-face meetings with each student every month, and 3) attend at least two of the social events that are held for peer advisors and the first-year students during the course of the year.

In addition, students are encouraged to seek advice on a walk-in basis from the Director of Student Life, Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs, or Associate Deans. The Associate Dean for Administration holds office hours one evening per week to ensure availability to evening students for walk-in advising.

Finally, faculty directors of the joint degree programs hold informational meetings to explain the programs and the admissions procedures for current law students. Faculty in some of the various concentration groupings occasionally hold meetings to talk to students about the courses offered and practice opportunities in the field.

When asked in the LSSSE to express their opinion about academic advising at the law school, 146 of the 259 respondents (56%) said that they were “satisfied” or “very satisfied”\(^{11}\) Appendix 3, LSSSE 2012 Frequency Distributions. We would certainly like to see a higher satisfaction rate among our students and have been aware of the need to improve student advising. The new Director of Student Life and the recently instituted orientation for returning students should improve this aspect of the law school, and we will continue to monitor this critical aspect of the student experience.

4. Academic Support

In addition to the Summer preparatory course provided to those students entering the law school through the Legal Career Opportunities Program (described in Chapter V, Students, Section A.7, Legal Career Opportunities Program (LCOP): an alternate admission program), C|M|LAW’s academic support services consist of our Academic Enrichment Program (AEP) and special sections of Legal Research, Writing and Advocacy for at-risk students. In Fall 2012 we restructured our academic support program to increase faculty involvement and to ensure that the program is focused on our most at-risk students.

Prior to this restructuring, the Manager of the Academic Excellence Program, a staff member, was in charge of our academic support program. The purpose of the program was twofold: to aid in student retention and to help improve the bar passage rate by helping at-risk participants improve their performance as law students.

\(^{11}\) Although this is not a reason for complacency, it should be noted that our scores in this area are comparable to (and in some cases better than) the scores of our peer schools. See Appendix 4, LSSSE 2012 Mean Comparisons Report.
The Manager of the AEP identified 10-15 at-risk students from each first-year section and invited them to participate in study groups focused solely on the first year Contracts course. The Teaching Assistant who led each study group was an academically successful upper-level student. Participants were invited based upon factors that indicated they might be at-risk for success in law school such as low LSAT scores, low undergraduate GPAs, and low index scores. Participation was voluntary. Other students who were not at-risk could also participate in the study groups.

In weekly meetings, the TAs reviewed and answered questions about the previous week’s Contracts course material. While the TAs were supposed to help students develop basic law school skills such as note-taking, outlining, case briefing, and exam writing, the reality was that the TAs mainly reviewed substantive course material and helped with outlining because they did not know, and were not taught, how to teach at-risk students. In addition to weekly sessions, TAs held office hours for two hours per week, during which they were available to any student from the section. The AEP Manager also offered occasional seminars and workshops to help students increase their comprehension of substantive law and build the analytical skills necessary for law school success. These sessions were not well attended.

The data suggests that the AEP benefitted some at-risk students in two ways. First, at-risk AEP participants outperformed the at-risk students who chose not to participate in the program in terms of their grades in Contracts. Second, it appears that the AEP had a beneficial effect on students’ overall performance in law school. At-risk participants outperformed at-risk non-participants by an average of 4/10ths of a grade, or the difference between a C+ and a B-. The following charts summarize differences between at-risk participants and at-risk non-participants in mean Contracts grades and cumulative first-year LGPAs for the past seven years.

In Spring 2009 the AEP was expanded, on an experimental basis, to include Criminal Law, a first-year Spring semester course. The AEP Manager believed it might be possible to reach a greater number of 1Ls providing an additional point of entry into AEP in the second semester. As with Contracts, TAs offered small group sessions for students and maintained office hours for all members of the class. This program had a more inconsistent level of success than the Contracts groups. Unlike the Contracts groups, where at-risk students were identified by their LSAT score and UGPA, the Criminal Law sections defined at-risk students as those with a first semester GPA below 2.7. We have not analyzed why the results were not as good in Criminal Law, but it may be because, based on first semester grades, the at-risk students in the Criminal Law groups were truly at-risk, and not just thought to be at-risk based on incoming test scores. Therefore, the limited review and outlining assistance may not have provided the assistance that was needed.

In Fall 2012 Dean Boise restructured academic support services to bring the AEP under the supervision of the faculty rather than a staff member. This decision was based on our understanding that the TA-led sessions were functioning as high level study groups, somewhat dominated by high performing students, and not focused on the legal analysis skills needed by at-risk students. (University funding for the AEP program requires the program specifically target at-risk students.). Under the new model, the AEP Manager position was eliminated. One of our legal writing professors, Kelly Curtis, assumed the newly created role of Director of Academic Support in addition to continuing as a full-time faculty member. As a faculty member, Professor Curtis reports directly to the Dean rather than to the Director of Bar Preparation as the AEP Manager did in the past. Professor Curtis, as the Director of Academic Support, is in charge of our academic support program, which consists of teaching two small sections of Legal Writing populated by identified at-risk students, supervising the AEP for Contracts and Criminal Law, as well as one-on-one assistance to upper level students, including those on academic probation.

The two new Legal Writing sections (one day and one evening) are for our most at-risk 1L students, based on an index composed of LSAT scores and undergraduate GPAs. The sections are smaller than our standard legal writing sections, allowing Professor Curtis to work intensively and individually with these students.

13 Each section began with ten students, and now has 9, compared to the other Legal Writing sections which have 15-20 in the day sections and 26 in the evening section.
The Contracts study groups are led by Academic Excellence Program Fellows who teach note-taking, outlining, case briefing, exam writing, and more. Professor Curtis and invited faculty meet with the Fellows to address these topics and help the Fellows learn how to teach these basic skills. Students, therefore, are learning skills that are helpful in Contracts as well as being transferable to other courses—unlike the prior AEP where they simply reviewed substantive material from Contracts.

Participation in these study groups is by invitation to those students most at-risk in each 1L section. Unlike in prior years, in Fall 2012 virtually every student identified as such is participating in the program. In addition, students who ask are permitted to join. AEP Fellows hold office hours where they are available to provide academic support to any law student in their assigned first-year section. For Spring 2012, after we have data on who the at-risk students are based on first semester grades, Professor Curtis intends to limit enrollment.

Professor Curtis also holds office hours where any member of the student body is welcome to seek academic counseling. This includes other 1Ls not in her Legal Writing sections as well as upper level students. In particular, students who are on academic probation are encouraged to seek out Professor Curtis’s assistance. Overall, Professor Curtis sees about ten students each week who are seeking academic support. (Our prior AEP Manager saw about two students per week.)

While it is vital that we provide academic support to 1Ls who are at risk for not succeeding in law school, it is also important to provide academic support for upper level students who are not thriving, because they did not master skills as 1Ls. One year we had TAs for the upper level Constitutional Law classes, but it was not well received. We believe this was because it is far more difficult to admit to a peer (another upper level student) that one does not understand the material or how to study it, than it is to admit that as a 1L to an upper level student. Our current academic support program is not capable of providing the kind of programming our struggling upper level students need.

In the LSSSE, 68% of our students, when asked whether the law school was “providing the support you need to help you succeed academically,” responded either “very much” or “quite a bit.” See Appendix 3, LSSSE 2012 Frequency Distributions. Only 54% of the 4L part-time students responded in this way. Id.14 In addition, several students commented that we needed to be clearer about who could participate in the AEP. See Appendix 5, LSSSE 2012 Student Comments. We will make efforts to send more explicit information about our academic support services so that the expectations of our students do not go unmet.

By moving the academic support function from the staff to the faculty, the law school believes it can better prepare our most at-risk students for success in law school and, 14Although concerns about the quality of our academic support were expressed in a few comments in the staff and faculty surveys, the staff survey also showed that 80% of the respondents thought that our Student Services were “especially strong” with respect to academic assistance. See Appendices 1A and 1B, Faculty Survey Results Charts and Graphs and Staff Survey Results Charts and Graphs.

ultimately, on the Ohio bar exam. We are hopeful that creating the two special Legal Writing sections will greatly improve our most at risk students’ opportunities to succeed. We expect teaching our AEP Fellows how to teach basic skills will improve the success of students in our Contracts and Criminal Law study groups. We are confident that Professor Curtis’s work with 1Ls and 2Ls will be beneficial to them. This model, however, is not sustainable even in the short term. Our students need more academic support than one professor can, or should be expected, to provide. We must address how to staff properly and strengthen our academic support program.

L. International Program

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, University of Arkansas School of Law, and University of the Pacific McGeorge School of Law sponsor the St. Petersburg Summer Law Institute. It is approved by the ABA. The Summer Law Institute represents a continuing educational relationship between the U.S. sponsors, the St. Petersburg State University Law Faculty and the Novgorod State University Law Faculty that has endured since 1993, through some of the most momentous times in Russia’s ongoing transformation. Cleveland-Marshall administered the program until 2007 when the University of Arkansas assumed the administrative role. This change was made because one of the founders of the program Professor Jane Picker retired from Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and we did not have the capacity to continue to administer the program. Associate Dean Mark Sundahl oversees the promotion of the program on campus as well as organizing Cleveland-Marshall faculty participation in the program.

The St. Petersburg Summer Law Institute presents English-speaking law students with the opportunity to study international and comparative law in the historic city of St. Petersburg, Russia. Participating students live and study at the prestigious St. Petersburg State University for four weeks during Summer. Students attend four intensive courses in various areas of international and comparative law during the program. Each student takes two courses during the first two-week period and two courses during the second two-week period. Courses taught in the program in recent years include International Criminal Law, Public International Law, International Arbitration, International Environmental Law, Russian Business Law, Space Law, Comparative Antitrust Law, and Comparative Legal Ethics. The program faculty consists primarily of professors from the sponsoring schools in the United States. However, at least one Russian professor also typically teaches a course. Students earn five credit hours toward their law degrees for participating in the program—subject to any policies adopted by their particular law school.

Enrollment is open to all law students in the United States or abroad. The enrollment in the program from 2007 to 2010 has ranged from 10 to 12 American students. In 2011, enrollment reached 16 students. Unfortunately, enrollment fell below 10 in 2012 and, as a result, the program was not held last year. Although it is difficult to be sure why more students did not enroll, it is likely to be due (at least in part) to the weak economy and challenging job market. In light of these conditions, students may be more reluctant to bear the expense of overseas travel. However, the partner schools have agreed to undertake more vigorous promotional activity this year and plan to hold the program in 2013.

M. Degrees in Addition to the J.D.

1. Master of Laws (LL.M.)

Applicants for admission as candidates for the Master of Laws (LL.M.) degree must have received the first degree in law from an accredited United States law school or an equivalent law school in any other English-speaking country that follows the common law system. Graduates from other foreign law schools will be admitted as candidates for the LL.M. degree only upon submission of evidence of knowledge of the English language and the common law system sufficient to permit the candidate to conduct advanced studies. Such students may be required to take one or two core common law courses (Contracts, Property, and/or Torts) that may be included in the credits required for the LL.M. degree.

The Master of Laws (LL.M.) degree is awarded upon the satisfactory completion of a program of study approved by the Committee on Graduate Studies. Graduates of U.S. law schools must complete a minimum of 20 semester hours of course work and a thesis reflecting a substantial degree of scholarship and original research. The LL.M. program for graduates of foreign law schools does not include a thesis requirement. Such students are instead required to complete a minimum of 24 semester hours of course credit, including at least one course for upper-level writing credit.

The LL.M. program is not attracting large numbers of students. Since 2006, 17 students have been admitted to the LL.M. program. Currently 7 students are enrolled. Eight students have graduated since 2006 with the LL.M. degree (with another student to graduate in December 2012). There has been no specific outreach targeted to attract more LL.M students. The committee overseeing graduate programs is currently charged with identifying opportunities to increase the enrollment of foreign LL.M students.

2. Master in Legal Studies (MLS)

In 2012 the ABA approved our new Master in Legal Studies program (MLS). The MLS is an entry-level non-professional degree designed for individuals who seek a better understanding of the law, legal institutions, and legal methods but who are not interested in obtaining a J.D. Applicants to the MLS program are advised that the program does not qualify them to take the bar examination; should not be seen as a back door for admission to the J.D. program; and that ABA rules preclude credit being given towards the J.D. degree for any courses taken prior to matriculation into the J.D. program.
N. Program of Legal Education Strengths and Weaknesses

Strengths

1. We educate our students in a manner that distinguishes them as being ready to practice law upon graduation.

2. We offer a flexible course of study: full- and part-time programs with day and evening classes.

3. Our redesigned first-year curriculum recognizes the importance of legislative and administrative law, while continuing to recognize the importance of a thorough grounding in core, common law subjects.

4. Our curriculum provides our students with a growing range of experiential learning opportunities.

5. We offer a variety of dual-degrees with other colleges in the University.

Weaknesses

1. Academic support is limited and available almost exclusively to 1Ls. (Also listed under Chapter V, Students, Section D, under Weaknesses.)

2. The increasingly smaller size of the law school hinders our ability to offer on a consistent basis the breadth and depth of courses to which our students are accustomed.
IV. FACULTY

A. Qualifications and Size of Faculty

1. Composition

The law school faculty is composed of forty members: thirty tenured/tenure-track professors, four clinical professors, and six legal writing professors. Our ages range from twenty-nine to seventy-three. See Appendix 28, Professor Demographics, Age. Twenty of our faculty are women, twenty-one are men; six are African American, one Asian, and thirty-three Caucasian. See Appendix 29, Demographics, Race and Gender. Since Fall 2006, eight tenured faculty members retired, five resigned, and one was terminated for personal reasons.15 See Appendix 30, Faculty Hires and Departures 2006-12. During the same period, we hired ten tenured/tenure-track faculty members. Id. As a result, our tenured/tenure-track faculty has been reduced by almost 12%—from thirty-four members to thirty. Based on age and/or years of service, it is likely that as many as ten tenured faculty could retire in the next seven years. Since 2006, two legal writing professors retired and one passed away. Id. During that period, we hired three legal writing professors, one of whom (Carolyn Broering-Jacobs) serves as Director of the Legal Writing Program. Id.16 Since 2006, two clinical law professors retired and we hired two new clinicians.17 Id.

The backgrounds of our faculty are rich and varied. Nearly half the faculty members have advanced degrees beyond the J.D.: 7 have Masters degrees in a field other than law, 14 have LL.M. degrees (2 of those have two LL.M. degrees), five have Ph.D. degrees, and one has a J.S.D. degree. Seventeen clerked for judges: 8 on the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, 3 on the U.S. District Court, and 6 in other courts. The vast majority of the faculty practiced in a law firm or at a government or non-profit agency prior to joining the faculty here. See Appendix 31, Faculty Resumes.

Two law faculty members have joint appointments with other colleges and two faculty members from other colleges have joint appointments with us. Professor Heidi Gorovitz Robertson and Associate Professor Alan Weinstein are members of the law faculty with a joint appointment to faculty of the College of Urban Affairs. Professor Weinstein serves as the Program Director for the Joint Degree programs with the Urban Affairs College. Professor Dennis Keating is a member of the College of Urban Affairs faculty with a joint appointment to the faculty of the College of Law. Professor Ralph Mawdsley is a member of the College of 15 Three retired faculty members continue to teach on a limited basis: Thomas Buckley, Lloyd Snyder, and Stephen Werber.

16 During this same timeframe, we lost a Legal Writing position. After Professor Aitken died in July 2010, we hired a visitor to assume her responsibilities—Jamie Bouvier, who was a Visiting Professor for two years. In the budget reductions of 2011, we relinquished that position.

17 As noted in n. 4, we are hiring an additional clinical professor.
Education and Human Services faculty with a joint appointment to the faculty of the College of Law.

Four faculty members hold named professorships in recognition of their scholarship. The professors and professorships are: Lolita Buckner Inniss, Joseph C. Hostetler-Baker & Hostetler Chair in Law; Browne Lewis, Leon M. and Gloria Plevin Endowed Professor of Law; Patricia Falk, Charles R. Emrick, Jr.-Calfee, Halter & Griswold Endowed Professor of Law; and Christopher Sagers, James A. Thomas Distinguished Professor of Law.

2. Faculty Engaged in the Practice of Law

Faculty devote substantially all working time to teaching, legal scholarship, service, and governance. Only two faculty members, Mark Sundahl and Karin Mika, have ongoing relationships with law firms. Dean Sundahl serves as Of Counsel to The Law Offices of Jon P. Yormick Co., L.P.A., and Professor Mika works on a contractual basis with the firm of Buckingham, Doolittle & Burroughs. Professor Carole Heyward is affiliated with a private law firm where she occasionally represents nonprofit entities. In addition, she serves as a part-time assistant law director for a local municipality where her role is limited to assisting the City with issues involving housing discrimination and economic development. Professor Steve Gard has represented a half-dozen clients in legal matters over the last four years, although this representation is winding down, and currently involves only one client. These faculty members practice on a limited basis in accordance with the limitations for external work set by the university. No other faculty member regularly engages in law practice, has an ongoing relationship with a law firm, is named on law firm letterhead, or has a professional telephone listing.

Even though no faculty regularly engages in law practice, faculty members participate in litigation by consulting with individuals and/or attorneys, submitting amicus briefs, and representing clients on a limited basis. See Appendix 31, Faculty Resumes. Some faculty members work on a pro bono basis; others are paid as experts, consultants, or court-appointed counsel. In each instance the work relates either to the faculty member’s area of expertise, contributes to the faculty member’s teaching and/or scholarship, or is of service to the legal profession and public.

3. Student-Faculty Ratio

ABA Interpretation 402-2 states that a ratio of 20:1 or less of full-time equivalent students to full-time equivalent faculty “presumptively indicates that a law school complies with the Standards.” ABA Standards for Approval of Law Schools Standard 402 (Interp. 402-2). The law school’s current student/faculty ratio is 12.3:1. Since 2006, our student/faculty ratio has ranged between 13.8:1 (in 2008) to 11.8:1 (in 2011).
4. Teaching by Full-Time Faculty and Adjunct Faculty

Full-time faculty members provide substantially all of any given student’s instruction. We also have a robust roster of adjunct faculty members who teach a significant number of courses. From Fall 2006 to Fall 2012, the percentage of full-time faculty credit hours in all divisions ranged from 69.9% to 79.3% (with an average of 74.9%). See Appendices 32 and 33, Full-Time/Part-Time Faculty Credit Hours for All Courses (Fall 2006-Fall 2012) and Full-Time/Part-Time Faculty Credit Hours for All Courses Underlying Data (Fall 2006-Fall 2012). In the full-time division, the range of credit hours taught by full-time faculty was 80.2% to 92.3% (with an average of 87.3%); in the part-time evening division, the range of credit hours taught by full-time faculty was 40.7% to 64.5% (with an average of 47.9%). Student contact hours of full-time faculty in the part-time evening division were higher, ranging from 50.1% to 71.1% (with an average of 57.0%).

Although the percentage of credit hours and student contact hours taught by full-time faculty in the evening division is significantly less than the percentages for the day program, a study of the individual transcripts of evening students who have graduated between 2010 and 2012 shows that, on average, the students received more than two-thirds of their credit hours from courses taught by full-time faculty. Appendix 34, Credit Hours Taught by Full-Time Faculty for Part-Time Students Graduating December 2009-May 2012. Some students received far more than two-thirds of their credit hours in courses taught by full-time faculty (the highest percentage being 93.62%). Others received less than two-thirds (the lowest being 52.22%).

18Pursuant to AALS Memorandum 98-9, a “full-time” faculty member includes faculty members who “devote substantially his or her entire time to the responsibilities of teacher, scholar, and educator” and includes “full-time administrators or librarians, emeriti faculty who are present at the law school essentially full-time while teaching part-time, and faculty with joint appointments who teach in the law school may be counted as full-time faculty.”

19These percentages are based on information provided to the AALS in compliance with Bylaw 6-4(d).

20In Spring 2012 the fact that only 40.7% of the total credit hours were taught by full-time faculty in the evening division was an anomaly and resulted from not offering as many electives taught by full-time faculty as is usually the case. This was partially a result of an adjunct filling in for one of our full-time professors who succumbed to a disability that prevented her from teaching Nonprofit Corporations.

21The low percentage (50.1%) of total student contact hours for full-time faculty in the evening division during Spring 2011 is not attributable to a reduction of courses taught by full-time faculty, but resulted instead from an unusually large number of courses taught by part-time faculty in comparison with other semesters.

22The AALS Bylaws state “in each division...each student shall have the opportunity to obtain substantially all of his or her instruction...from the school’s full-time faculty.” AALS Bylaw 6-4(d). The Executive Committee Regulations interpreting these Bylaws states that full-time faculty offering “at least two-thirds of the credit hours or student contact hours leading to the J.D. degree” demonstrates that compliance with 6-4(d). Based on these criteria, our evening division was only in compliance for 3 of the 14 semesters. However, AALS Memorandum 98-9 also allows for compliance to be shown “through review of individual student transcripts in each division, to ensure that every student received two-thirds of instruction from full-time faculty.” Copies of the individual student transcripts that form the basis of our analysis are attached to the AALS Questionnaire.
graduates) received at least two-thirds of their credit hours from full-time faculty. Id. Whether a student received more or less than two-thirds of their credit hours from courses taught by full-time faculty is a function of the courses that the student selects. The only way to ensure that all of our students meet the two-thirds standard would be to police their course selection.

The evening division has a lower percentage of full-time faculty members teaching electives, in part, because adjunct faculty members, who are full-time practitioners, are more available to teach in the evening. Both full-time and part-time students take advantage of taking classes from these practitioners. Appendix 35, Full-Time Students in Evening Courses Fall 2006-Fall 2012.

Substantially all of the first-year courses in both the day (full-time) and evening (part-time) divisions are taught by full-time faculty. See Appendix 36, Full-Time/Part-Time Faculty Credit Hours for First-Year Courses (Fall 2006-Fall 2012). For first-year courses from Fall 2006 to Fall 2012, the overall percent of academic credit hours taught by full-time faculty ranged from 87.7% to 100%. Id. In the day division the range was 84.8% to 100%, while in the evening division all first-year courses were taught by full-time faculty. Id.

Part-time faculty—i.e., Adjuncts, Professors Emeriti, and Visitors—teach relatively few of the courses in subject areas that are tested on the Ohio bar exam—and the number of such courses taught by part-time faculty has declined over recent years. See Appendix 37, Adjuncts, Visitors and Emeriti Teaching Bar Courses (Fall 2006-Fall 2012). To illustrate, during AY06-07 part-time faculty taught 23 bar courses, while in AY11-12 this number went down to 10 courses. Id.

5. General Obligations and Course Loads

The standard course load for legal writing, tenured and tenure-track faculty is two courses in Fall and two courses in Spring, typically totaling 11 to 13 credit hours. See Appendix 38, Policies on Standard Teaching Schedules, Variances, and Course Releases. With rare exception, faculty members accomplish this by teaching two courses each Fall and Spring. In the event that a faculty member teaches courses totaling 14 or more credit hours in one academic year (exclusive of Summer teaching), the Dean has the discretion to reduce the faculty member’s course load for the following year to three courses, provided that the three 21In those cases when full-time faculty did not teach the first-year courses, those courses were taught by emeriti faculty, visiting faculty who held full-time positions at Akron University School of Law, or Adjunct Professor Harold Babbitt (a retired partner from a local law firm who was once a full-time faculty member at the law school).

24The courses that cover topics tested on the Ohio bar exam are Agency and Partnership, Corporations, Civil Procedure, Commercial Law, Secured Transactions, Constitutional Law, Contracts, Criminal Law, Criminal Procedure I, Criminal Procedure II, Evidence, Legal Profession, Property, Torts, and Estates and Trusts.

courses total 10 or more credit hours. Id. The faculty survey indicated a general sense of satisfaction among faculty with respect to their ability to teach the classes of their choice (with 26 of 34 respondents agreeing with this assessment). See Appendix 1A, Faculty Survey Results Charts and Graphs.

Tenure-track faculty members are given two semesters of reduced teaching load as a matter of course—usually one in their first year and the second in the year before they seek tenure and promotion. In addition to these automatic course releases, a faculty member may apply for a course release if other substantial professional commitments (such as chairing a major committee), working on a significant publication, assuming a particularly burdensome teaching load, or similar professional commitments place significant demands on the faculty member’s time and the Dean determines that a course release is in the law school’s best interests. Id. Over the last six years, our Deans have granted course releases for a variety of reasons, including the chairing of major committees (such as the Self Study Committee), the simultaneous development of multiple new courses, and significant research projects. In addition, faculty members who hold a named professorship receive an automatic course release each academic year. See Appendix 39, Named Professorship Appointment Policy.

Faculty members are expected to teach in both the day and evening divisions in order to provide the same quality and variety of instruction to both day and evening students. The general policy is that every faculty member should teach one evening course every year. If a faculty member teaches two evening courses one year, that professor is not expected to teach at night during the following year. A review of Appendix 40, Night Teaching Fall 2006-Fall 2012, which tracks night teaching shows that this policy has been implemented with consistency, although there are some anomalies. For example, Professors Michael Davis, David Forte, and Debora Geier had periods when they taught in the evening more often than is generally required. In some cases, this is the result of the professor’s choice. In other cases, it is necessitated by a need of the law school. In the case of Professor Geier, she taught in the evening every semester for a number of years because we had not yet replaced retired tax professors. The recent hire of Professor John Plecnik has remedied this situation.

B. Recruitment and Diversity

As mentioned above, since Fall 2006, the law school has hired sixteen new faculty members: nine tenured/tenure-track faculty members, three legal writing professors, and two clinical law professors. These new hires have strengthened the law school with respect to its teaching, scholarship, and diversity. These new faculty members have provided greater depth in subject areas where depth had been lacking—most notably in the fields of international law (Professors Milena Sterio and Brian Ray) and tax (Professor John Plecnik). Two new hires in the field of health law, Professors Browne Lewis and Gwendolyn Majette, also provided the law school with the expertise needed to form the foundation of our new Center for Health Law and Policy. The hiring of Professor Jonathan Witmer-Rich added further depth to our strong criminal law faculty, and the hiring of Professor Matthew Green similarly reinforced the law school’s strength in the field of employment and labor law (which area suffered a setback with the departure of Professor Joan Flynn in 2010). The hiring of our new Director of Legal Writing, Professor Carolyn Broering-Jacobs, has provided our legal writing program with fresh leadership. Finally, the new members of our clinical law faculty (Professors Carole Heyward and Doron Kalir) have invigorated our clinical program, which has undertaken innovations that will increase the variety and number of experiential learning opportunities for our students.

The diversity of our faculty is important to the law school, and the lack of diversity at times has also been a concern. The law school strongly affirms the University’s affirmative action policy, which encourages us to recruit applicants of color and women.26 We are pleased that our efforts to attract a diverse group of applicants in terms of race and gender have resulted in recent hires that have increased the diversity of our faculty. Of the fifteen new faculty hires since Fall 2006, three are women of color, five are white women, three are men of color, and four are white men.27 See Appendices 30, Faculty Hires and Departures 2006-2012, and 29, Professor Demographics, Race and Gender. Our current Dean is the first African-American Dean in the history of C|M|LAW. Specific data on the race and gender of current faculty members is provided above in Section A, Qualifications and Size of Faculty.

Of the six tenured faculty members who left C|M|LAW since Fall 2006 for positions at other schools, two were white women, one was an African-American woman, and one was an Asian-Indian man. These individuals left for personal and professional reasons that were unrelated to our commitment to retaining a diverse faculty. The ranks of our faculty were also reduced when Professor Janice Aitken, an American Indian, passed away. The faculty survey revealed a significant concern about the ability of the law school to retain current faculty members (with 19 of 30 respondents agreeing with this). Appendix 1A, Faculty Survey Results Charts and Graphs. Although we do not expect to hire any new faculty in the near future, the faculty survey also showed concern among the faculty about the ability of the law school to attract strong new faculty members (with 26 of 30 respondents agreeing). Id.

C. Faculty Responsibilities

The responsibilities of faculty members have three components: teaching, research, and service. See Appendix 41, Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Statement on Professional Ethics and Academic Responsibility. The teaching load for faculty members is discussed supra in Section A.5, General Obligations and Course Loads. In addition to teaching a certain number of credit hours, faculty are expected to teach effectively and are encouraged to experiment with new teaching techniques (by, for example, integrating technology into the classroom). See 26 We seek new faculty through a number of avenues. For tenured/tenure-track faculty we participate in the annual AALS hiring conference, consider those who apply directly to us, advertise in Black Issues in Higher Education and Hispanic Outlook, post our hiring ad on relevant law professor discussion lists, look for lateral hires, and talk with alumni whose careers suggest an interest in and ability to be an outstanding faculty member. Recruiting of Clinical Professors and Legal Writing Professors occurs on a national level as well by publishing our ad in the Chronicle of Higher Education, relevant discussion lists, and local newspapers.

27 Professor Reginald Oh is currently on medical leave from the University.
infra Section E, Teaching. Our faculty publish a great deal of traditional scholarship in the form of books and articles, but they have also increasingly published in less formal venues, such as blogs. See infra, Section F, Research and Publications. The duty to provide service responsibilities are typically fulfilled by serving on law school and University committees, but faculty members also engage in service to the community and the legal profession in a variety of ways, ranging from the drafting of amici curiae briefs to the Supreme Court to serving as officers in the local bar association or other organizations. See infra Section G, Service Activities. The Faculty Manual contains a variety of procedures related to teaching with which faculty are expected to comply, such as preparing course syllabi, monitoring class attendance, and grading policies. See Appendix 24, Faculty Manual 2012.

D. Evaluation of Faculty Performance

Each Spring every faculty member must prepare an Annual Report for the Dean. Appendices 42, 43, and 44, Annual Faculty Report Forms for Tenured/Tenure Track, Legal Writing, and Clinical Professors. The Report asks, among other things, for information on courses taught, including new methodologies or materials, provision of feedback to students, supervision of students for the Upper Level Writing Requirement, publication of scholarship, participation in law school and University committees, and service outside of the University including professional and community organizations. Every faculty member is expected to meet with the Dean to discuss her/his report. The contents of the Annual Report is similar for tenured/tenure track faculty, legal writing faculty, and clinical faculty, although the reports for legal writing and clinical faculty make clear that scholarship is not a requirement of these positions. Faculty members receive student evaluations of teaching every semester for their review as well as comparative data of all law faculty based on the numeric portions of the student evaluations. See Appendix 45, Course Evaluations Memo. In the event that teaching evaluations indicate a significant problem, the Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment works with that professor to help provide training or teaching support as necessary.

E. Teaching

Enhancing teaching effectiveness has been a primary aim of the faculty for many years. It was an integral part of the 2003 Bar Passage Plan and the 2011 curricular reforms, and is a key part of our thinking about the effects of the 140 Plan, in particular the smaller class size. Based on visits to one another’s classes, development of new teaching methodologies, teaching retreats, and statements by faculty, effective teaching is an object of great interest and pride as well as of continuing concern of how to improve.

1. Faculty and Student Opinions

In the most recent faculty survey, over half of the faculty agreed/strongly agreed that the faculty is strong in their teaching in both the first year and upper level courses. See Appendix 14, Faculty Survey Results Charts and Graphs. Very few faculty thought that faculty teaching competence was a problem. Id. Two of our faculty have won the University-wide Distinguished Faculty Award for Teaching. Another received The University System of Ohio Faculty Innovator Award for his development of cost-effective teaching materials. But perhaps because of the efforts our faculty put into teaching, few of the faculty were satisfied with the recognition that is given to them for their teaching.

In surveys where faculty reflected upon teaching in the law school, a majority believed that CM|LA W teaches “rigorous analysis” and “legal research skills” well. See id. Yet “instilling intellectual curiosity” among the students remained an area of concern. Id. Perhaps because of the faculty’s concentration in imparting analytical and research skills expertly, few faculty agreed that “preparing for the bar exam” or “teaching practical lawyering skills” was strong at the law school. Id.

Faculty opinion seemed also to register some disappointment in the way students responded to our pedagogical demands in such areas as analytical skills, substantive knowledge, and class preparation. Id. In addition, to the extent that the episodic LSSSE gives any indication of long-term student attitudes, the 2012 survey found that 2Ls were less engaged or felt less positive than students at other schools in their ability to “analyze basic elements of an idea, experience or theory.” See Appendix 4, LSSSE 2012 Mean Comparisons Report. But 2Ls were more comfortable in “memorizing facts, ideas, or methods from your courses and readings so you can repeat them pretty much in the same form.” Id. More positively, 3Ls believed themselves more engaged in writing clearly and effectively and in solving real-world problems. Id.

2. Strategies and Innovation in Teaching Methodologies

Faculty members utilize many different teaching methodologies. Some of these strategies have sought to respond narrowly to the bar passage issue, while others have been innovations intended to expand students’ critical thinking, engage in practical applications of classroom learning, and enliven the classroom experience itself. The common denominator of classroom teaching experimentation is to change the student from a passive note-taker to one who is engaged in his/her own learning of the subject matter and, more important, in learning how to think and express oneself.

Faculty members have spent considerable time talking about and changing the amount and kind of feedback students receive in the classroom. At least one faculty member provides frequent multiple choice quizzes, which he grades and then reviews in class. Another has experimented with “question time” in his Contracts class, which is a period of time once a week, after class, in which students are permitted to ask any question. Another requires students who were absent on a given day to turn in a summary and reflection on the reading assignment for that day. Others assign frequent short essays. A technique that is spreading throughout our faculty is group learning. A number of professors establish sub-groups among students who learn to solve problems among themselves, prepare for class leadership roles on various assignments, and engage in cross-group debate. This methodology is utilized in both first year core courses and upper level electives. In one professor’s Civil Procedure course, she offers a series of optional classes where the class reviews previously covered topics, as well as basic law school survival skills such as how to outline the course materials and how to prepare for quizzes and exams. Attendance rate is usually close to 100%. Others require students to moot arguments on both sides of the issue in significant cases.

In Fall 2012 each 1L received an iPad during orientation. In addition, the law school loaned iPads to several faculty members to experiment with how to use this new tool.

3. Peer Review

As part of seeking tenure and/or promotion, faculty members review a colleague’s teaching. We also have a program of longitudinal teaching evaluation that requires at least two visits per course per semester by a faculty member in the years preceding a professor’s application for tenure and/or promotion. See Appendix 46, Procedures and Criteria for Promotion and Tenure in the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and Supplement—Procedures for Mentoring and Evaluation of Faculty in the Years Preceding Application for Personnel Action. New faculty members are assigned mentors (more senior faculty) who help the individual become acclimated to the law school. In addition, a few faculty voluntarily participate in yearly peer review by visiting another professor’s class and having a professor return the visit. To date, there is no mandatory peer review, nor any post-tenure review aside from that associated promotion to full professor.

4. Student Evaluations

Written student evaluations are required for every course. The Dean discusses the evaluation results at each professor’s Annual Review, and they are an essential part of the consideration of faculty for tenure and promotion. The Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment meets with faculty who receive unfavorable student evaluations to suggest improvements.

5. Support for Professional Development

The law school supports professional development in teaching through presentations on teaching, library programs, teaching retreats, and Summer grants.

For many years, we have had a Summer grant program to encourage innovation and excellence in teaching. Tenured, tenure-track, and legal writing professors are eligible for these grants. A professor must submit an application that identifies a project that “addresses the Law school’s teaching and learning priorities.” See Appendix 47, Summer Teaching Grant Criteria. The Teaching Committee evaluates the proposals and makes recommendations to the Dean based on the overall quality of the proposal and the extent to which the proposal meets the stated criteria. Recipients are expected to discuss their work under the awards at a faculty luncheon. Faculty members, including Clinical Professors, are also eligible to apply for Teaching Enhancement Awards from the University Center for Teaching and Learning.
In Fall 2006 and Spring 2008, then-Associate Dean Patricia Falk organized half-day teaching retreats for all faculty. These were the result of our 2007 Strategic Plan in which we identified conducting faculty retreats or workshops on teaching as a tactic for implementing Goal 5: Strengthen our curriculum and expand our teaching strategies to maximize the educational experience for our students in order to prepare them to practice law in the 21st century. See Appendix 7, Strategic Plan 2007. In Fall 2006 Professors Gerald Hess (Gonzaga University Law School and Co-Director of the Institute for Law Teaching and Learning) and Sophie Sparrow (University of New Hampshire School of Law) facilitated our conversations about how to improve our teaching and in Spring 2008 Professor Michael Hunter Swartz (Washburn University School of Law and Co-Director of the Institute for Law Teaching and Learning). Approximately two-thirds of the faculty attended each retreat.

F. Research and Publications

1. General Observations and Comments

Out of a total of 41 tenured/tenure track faculty who are or were at the law school since Fall 2009, 30 have produced scholarship in traditional print media, 28 have made scholarly presentations, and 8 engaged in exchanges on electronic media such as blog posts. See Appendix 48, Scholarship All Faculty 2009-2012. Of the present faculty, 27 have produced scholarship in traditional print media, 24 have made scholarly presentations, and 7 engaged in exchanges on electronic media such as blog posts. See Appendix 49, Scholarship Current Faculty 2009-2012. Since Fall 2009, the tenured/tenure track faculty have published a total of 27 books, including treatises, monographs and textbooks, as well as 101 scholarly articles as book chapters, law review articles, and book reviews. Id. Of the present faculty, the tenured/tenure track faculty have published a total of 23 books, including treatises, monographs and textbooks, as well as 94 scholarly articles as book chapters, law review articles, and book reviews. The Clinical and Legal Writing faculty, who are under no obligation to publish, have, since Fall 2009, published one textbook and five law review articles. Id. Popular print articles, court briefs, and 300 scholarly presentations formed an additional part of the scholarly outreach of all our faculty since Fall 2009. Id. In addition, a number of the faculty members serve as editors or peer reviewers or on editorial boards or journals. See Appendix 31, Faculty Resumes.

Support for faculty scholarship takes many forms. Listed below are many of the specific forms of support. For a full list, see Appendix 24, Faculty Manual 2012, at 26-30, Faculty Development: Scholarship and Teaching.

The Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment routinely circulates to the faculty lists of symposia, conferences and requests for article and papers. She also posts a “Faculty News”
We participate in the Northeast Ohio Law Schools’ Colloquia Series with the University of Akron and Case Western Reserve University School of Law. For several years the three schools had an exchange where a professor from one school gave a talk on a current project at another school. In more recent years we created a new format: twice a year we gather at a restaurant, equidistant from all of the law schools, for lunch and scholarly presentations from three professors, one from each school.

Each faculty member is accorded 320 hours of student research per year but may request more. Thus far, no faculty member has been denied a request for additional research assistance hours. Annually since 2009, between 24 and 26 faculty have utilized student researchers.

The library is also a source of information and research for the faculty, who have consistently rated the library and its staff as one of the strongest elements of the law school. Both librarians and student research assistants working for the library are available to service faculty research requests. In AY11-12, the library staff handled 148 faculty research and support requests. The library also trains individual RAs working for faculty members. Librarians and RAs also assist faculty in preparing near-finished articles and books for publication by cite-checking, formatting footnotes in the required styles, and formatting bibliographies for publication.

In addition, librarians monitor and provide regular updates about new developments in a faculty member’s research area. The library will locate requested material either at the University, other Ohio academic institutions, or on the Internet, and, upon request, arrange delivery to faculty offices. It provides regular online current awareness services tailored to the faculty member’s interests. The library also offers training to faculty on new research software, such as Bloomberg Law. In addition, the library affords each faculty member an annual stipend to purchase materials that are then housed in the faculty member’s office. Faculty may use their allowance to purchase subscriptions to loose-leaf titles or journals, or books.

The law school participates in the online SSRN/Legal Scholarship Network. In addition, the University’s EngagedScholarship@CSU repository, which went live in Spring 2012, holds 1,045 of the works of 33 of our faculty. As of October 2012 our library has uploaded 302 faculty articles and continues to load material. See Chapter VII, Information Resources—Law Library, Section A, Support of Teaching, Scholarship, Research, and Services.

We have a long-standing Summer research program. The Cleveland-Marshall Fund Summer Research Grant Subcommittee reviews the applications and makes recommendations to the Dean in early Spring based on the quality of the proposal and the applicant’s past productivity. See Appendix 52, Summer Research Grant Criteria. See Chapter IX, Law School Finances and University Support, Section E., Income from Gifts, for an explanation of the Cleveland-Marshall Fund. Of late, the Subcommittee has been more insistent on scrutinizing the level of the applicant’s past productivity. The policy is to give tenure-track faculty a preference in awarding grants. Since Fall 2009, the Dean has awarded 45 faculty Summer research grants.

The law school pays for a faculty member to travel when representing C|M|LAW on official business or for professional development, including presenting papers to or attending professional and scholarly conferences, or attending national or regional committee meetings of professional organizations. The Dean has discretion to approve or deny travel requests. Prior to Fall 2009, we had no formal cap on the amount of travel funds an individual professor could use each year.29 In Fall 2009 the cap was $2,000, Fall 2010 it increased to $2,500, and Fall 2012 to $3,000. See Appendix 53, Faculty Travel Policy 2012-13. Although the Dean frequently makes exceptions to these limits when requested to do so, some faculty feel that the caps inhibit travel related to scholarly conferences and other professional matters.

In Spring 2009, Spring 2010, and Fall 2012 the faculty held retreats or workshops to discuss our scholarship quality, productivity, and publishing. These retreats were part of carrying out Goal 3 of our 2007 Strategic Plan—Improve the scholarly reputation and productivity of our faculty. See Appendix 7, Strategic Plan 2007. About half the faculty attended these gatherings. As a result of the second retreat, a number of faculty formed small scholarship groups that meet throughout the year to support members’ research and writing by talking about current and planned projects and/or reading and commenting on outlines and drafts. At the third event Dean Boise invited Professor Andrew Morris, from University of Alabama School of Law, to present his research on law reviews acceptance and publishing policies and practices.

In Spring 2010 the faculty voted to turn the Ad Hoc Committee on Scholarship into one of our standing committees. This year the charge to the committee is to conduct an evaluation of the scholarly productivity of the faculty compared to peer schools. See Appendix 11, Committee Charges 2012-13.

29The Cleveland-Marshall Fund also provides funding for faculty travel. When the stock market dropped in 2009, the available funds from the Cleveland-Marshall Fund became limited.
According to the most recent faculty survey, 80% of the faculty have taken advantage of Summer research grants, travel support, presenting works to the faculty, student research assistants, and posting works on SSRN.

Tenured faculty may apply for one- or two-semester sabbatical leaves after their seventh full year of teaching.\(^{30}\) One may not accept a visiting teaching position for the year of the sabbatical. Since 2007, 17 faculty have received sabbaticals, while three received a leave of absence supported by other sources. Faculty receiving a sabbatical are required to return to full-time teaching at the University for at least one year following the award. They must also submit a report on their accomplishments during the sabbatical. The University does not grant sabbatical leaves to Clinical and Legal Writing faculty.\(^{31}\)

2. _____ Speakers Series\(^{32}\)

C|M|LAW has a wide variety of lecture series that provide faculty the opportunity to talk about their own scholarship and hear about others’ work. Some of the series are geared more to a public audience, but they all enrich the educational and intellectual life of the law school. Attendance by students and the public at the lectures varies widely. Faculty attendance at the lectures is usually low. A list of all of our public lectures and conferences is provided in Appendix 54, Public Lectures Fall 2006-Fall 2012. Below is a description of our speaker series.

a. _____ Cleveland-Marshall Fund/Joseph C. Hostetler-Baker & Hostetler Scholars

The Cleveland-Marshall Fund or Joseph C. Hostetler-Baker & Hostetler Visiting Scholar comes to the law school for two days during which s/he participates in the life of the college in several different ways.\(^{33}\) The Visitor is a guest professor in a substantive course, leads a faculty \(^{31}\)See Appendix 68, CSU Personnel Policies and Bylaws Section 8.1.8, Leaves of Absence (Non-Bargaining Unit Members Only). Fall 2011 the law faculty approved a proposal to recommend making clinical and legal writing professors eligible for professional leaves. The University Faculty Affairs Committee (UFAC) initially approved the proposal. The Faculty Senate Steering Committee raised several concerns, including the potential effect this change could have on lecturers in other colleges, and sent it back to UFAC for reconsideration. UFAC then voted to reject the proposal.

\(^{32}\)Since Fall 2006, we discontinued one speaker series. The Cleveland-Marshall Faculty Speaker Series, designed by the former law library director to showcase the scholarly and professional interests of our faculty to our students, ended when the director departed the college for another position.

\(^{33}\)In 2008, with the consent of the donor, we changed the funding that supported a year or semester-long Joseph C. Hostetler-Baker & Hostetler Visiting Chair and Lecture into a fourth named professorship and a two-day scholar program comparable to the Cleveland-Marshall Fund Scholar.
seminar discussing the Visitor’s current research, makes an informal presentation at a faculty lunch, and presents a public lecture. Often the scholar’s public lecture forms the basis of an article that is published in the Cleveland State Law Review. In the past, we have invited two scholars each year, one in Fall and one in Spring. Recently, visits have been somewhat more irregular. Professor William B. Allen spoke on “What Constitution Have I? A Moral Perspective”, dealing with Uncle Tom’s Cabin, in Fall 2010; Professor Michael D. Green spoke on “Deforming Tort Law: The Role of the American Jury” in Fall 2011; and Professor Phillip Hamburger lectured on “Censorship and Death,” dealing with government imposed speech limitations on researchers in Spring 2012. See Appendix 55, Cleveland-Marshall Fund/Joseph C. Hostetler-Baker & Hostetler Scholars.

In 2011-12 the Cleveland-Marshall Fund Committee considered proposing a change in direction of the speaker series due to episodic faculty interest in the series and uneven faculty input in proposing speakers. The committee thought we should move away from a two-speakers-per-year model and instead offer one speaker per academic year with a larger, more elaborate program featuring that speaker. The sense of the committee was that we should look well beyond the names that were in consideration if in fact we envisioned a speaker of greater renown. The current Cleveland-Marshall Fund Committee is considering the proposal.

b. Criminal Justice Forum

The Criminal Justice Forum is in its fourteenth year. Each year the criminal law faculty bring three or four nationally recognized scholars and practitioners to present public lectures on a current issue in criminal law. Since 2006 the law firm of Friedman and Gilbert has sponsored one of the lectures. The most recent speaker was Jeffrey Rosen, Professor of Law at George Washington University School of Law who spoke on “DNA Exonerations: How to Reform the Criminal Justice System to Avoid Convicting the Innocent.” See Appendix 56, Criminal Justice Forum speakers 2006-2013.

c. Labor and Employment Speaker Series

Beginning in 2002 the labor and employment faculty have presented three lectures each year by a distinguished scholar or practitioner in the field. The most recent was Jason R. Bristol, Esq., Partner, Cohen Rosenthal & Kramer LLP, who spoke on “The Fair Labor Standards Act at 75: Why Congress’s stated policy of eliminating substandard labor conditions remains as necessary today as it was in 1938.” The law firm of Duvin Cahn & Hutton, merged into Littler Mendelson, sponsors one of these lectures each year. The Cleveland-Marshall Fund also supports this series. See Appendix 57, Labor and Employment Speaker Series 2006-2013.

3. Faculty Attitudes Toward Scholarship

Although the vast majority of the faculty have taken advantage of the college’s support programs for scholarship and over 70% of the faculty are happy to be able to “research and write on topics I want,” most of the faculty remain quite dissatisfied with the faculty’s scholarly output. Appendix 1A, Faculty Survey Results Charts and Graphs. Only 30% are pleased with the recognition afforded for their scholarly work, just 15% think that the faculty is strong in regard to publishing academic research, and no one believes that faculty had a strong national reputation. Id. Over half the faculty think that the lack of scholarly publishing is a problem for the college, and nearly 70% think that publishing academic scholarship is an area that “our faculty should seek particularly to improve.” Id.

G. Service Activities

Every faculty member participates in law school committees and faculty governance. We have a strong tradition of faculty governance. The law school is represented by five Senators in the University Faculty Senate, one of whom also is a member of the Faculty Senate Steering Committee. Many Faculty Senate Committees have designated law school representatives. Law faculty have been elected or appointed to several leadership positions in the Faculty Senate in recent years, including two Faculty Senate Presidents and Vice Presidents (Professor Sheldon Gelman is the current Vice President), Presidential Search Committee, University Faculty Affairs Committee, Presidential Budget Advisory Task Force, and Chair of the Faculty Budget and Finance Committee.

Faculty members serve the legal profession, the public, and the academic community in a range of capacities. Complete faculty resumes are in Appendix 31, Faculty Resumes. Select examples include:

Legal Profession. FAA’s Commercial Space Transportation Advisory Committee; Ohio Supreme Court and Ohio State Bar Association Joint Task Force to Review the Administration of Ohio’s Death Penalty; Northern District of Ohio Advisory Committee; Task Force on the Funding of Ohio Courts; and the Colloquium Planning Committee for the Ohio Constitutional Modernization Commission; White House Summit on Judicial Vacancies; Ohio State Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights; Public Interest Law Group High-Level Working Group on Piracy; the Ohio Commission on the Rules of Practice and Procedure; ABA Forum Committee on Affordable Housing & Community Development Law; and President of the ACLU of Ohio.

Public. Vice President and Trustee of a local synagogue, Trustee of Willoughby-Eastlake Library System, U.S. Senate Finance Committee Academic Roundtable, Judicial Candidates Rating Coalition, Stephanie Tubbs Jones Summer Legal Academy.

H. Faculty Governance

1. Faculty Participation

Since the last Self-Study, the faculty has worked with successive Deans on three key governance projects: 1) creating the five-year Strategic Plan, 2) developing a revised curriculum, and 3) developing a University-mandated budget-reduction proposal for FY11 and FY12. Governance issues arose in connection with the Interim Dean and Dean search processes in 2010. More recently several faculty raised governance concerns related to the 140-plan and several other new initiatives, including changes to the academic support and clinical programs.

Strategic Plan. We created the 2007-12 Strategic Plan in Spring 2007 with substantial input and a vote of approval from the faculty. See Appendix 7, Strategic Plan 2007.

Curriculum Review. Then-Dean Mearns established the Ad-hoc Curriculum Review Committee in Fall 2009. Chapter III, Program of Legal Education, Section C, Changes to the Curriculum, describes the Committee’s process, which included extensive faculty consultation and a vote by the full faculty approving the recommended changes.

Budget Cuts. Facing a close to 20% reduction in funding from the State of Ohio, in Spring 2011 President Berkman and then-Provost Mearns implemented a structured budget-reduction plan that used a range of criteria to rank colleges into three tiers and required each college to provide a report of possible budget reductions and/or revenue increases to reach a range of three targets. The President placed the law school in the second tier requiring that we develop plans for meeting 5%, 7.5% and 10% targets. Then-Interim Dean Crocker convened an Ad Hoc Budget Task Force with representatives from the faculty, staff, and administration to consult on the law school’s plan. See Appendix 58, 2011 Budget Proposal and Follow-Up. The President ultimately approved a target of 7.5% (over $917,000) implemented across FY11-12 through a combination of tuition increases, operating budget reductions, loss of several open faculty lines and significant cuts to the library budget. Id.

As detailed in Chapter IX, Law School Finances and University Support, Dean Boise recently negotiated a revised budget plan for the law school designed in part to address a shortfall in the law school’s projected budget target and also to make up the revenue lost from reducing the 2013 1L class to 140 students. Dean Boise re-convened the same Ad Hoc Budget Task Force convened by Interim Dean Crocker to develop three different levels of budget reductions. The Task Force met four times in March and April of 2012. Ultimately, the Provost required the law school not only to decrease its operating budget in FY13 by $800,000, but to also achieve additional reductions in FY13 through FY15 of $750,000 through faculty attrition. See Appendix 10, The 140 Plan: Towards a Smaller and Stronger Law School.
Budget pressures are likely to continue to pose governance and other challenges both for the law school and the University more generally. At the University level, the Board of Trustees recently approved a close to $150 million bond issuance, the debt service for which will be approximately $5 million in FY13 rising to close to $7 million beginning in FY14. State support is likely at best to stay level and may be cut back in the next biennial budget process, which will conclude in Summer 2013. And the Governor of Ohio has requested changes to the formula for allocating the state subsidy that may disadvantage Cleveland State University relative to other state institutions.

Within the University, the President has implemented a new budget approach that contains two elements likely to adversely affect the law school in the foreseeable future. First, beginning in Spring 2012, the Provost implemented an instructional resource model for allocating faculty positions among colleges. Under this system, all faculty vacancies are controlled by the Provost’s office and reallocated each year based on recommendations generated through a complex set of voting procedures guided by several criteria. The law school fits only uneasily into this framework relative to other colleges in the University, in part because of our commitment to enrolling smaller, stronger classes and in part because the external benchmarking criteria either do not include law faculties (e.g., Academic Analytics) or focus on metrics that apply only partially to law faculties (e.g., the Delaware Study). More generally, the process substantially reduces the faculty role in core governance decisions about curriculum and hiring by channeling them through a centralized administrative process.

Second, the Interim Provost has announced that he plans to conduct a comprehensive program classification process designed to identify colleges and programs deserving increased funding and others that should have their funding reduced and possibly closed. The President rejected a recent proposal from an ad hoc task force detailing how that process would proceed, so the law school does not yet know what criteria the Provost will use in this process. The task force’s recommendation recognized the critical governance issues raised by a process designed to close programs, and presumably fire faculty in those programs, and advised a joint faculty-administrative process. The Interim Provost has not stated what faculty involvement he plans to seek.

Interim Dean and Dean Searches. After President Berkman appointed then-Dean Mearns as Interim Provost in Spring 2010, the faculty, represented by the Faculty Senators, began consulting with the President regarding the process for appointing an Interim Dean and Dean. Following established practice, the Senators requested that the appointment processes include consultation with and a vote by the full faculty to approve candidates. After several meetings with the Senators, the President met with the full faculty. At that meeting the President described his view that appointment of interim deans is an administrative prerogative. Despite this, he agreed to consult with the law faculty and accept a report from the Senators regarding each candidate, although he stated that he would not accept a reported vote ranking the candidates. Five candidates applied for the interim position: three current law faculty members, one emeritus law professor, and one local attorney. The faculty met to discuss each candidate and the Senators prepared a report for the President, who ultimately selected Professor Phyllis L. Crocker as Interim Dean.

The Dean Search process was much smoother and involved substantial faculty input. The 12-person committee included seven faculty members elected by the entire faculty and the Vice-Chair was Professor Alan Weinstein. The President had requested that the faculty submit three finalists to him. Following an extensive process detailed in Appendix 50, Description of the 2010-11 Dean Search, the law faculty approved only two names, and the President selected Dean Craig M. Boise.

140-Plan and Related Changes. In October 2012 Dean Boise, in his annual State-of-the-Law-School presentation, summarized a range of successful initiatives from the previous year, reported on the results of the 140-plan, and outlined several changes to the academic support and clinical programs and to administrative restructuring in other areas. He also identified several important challenges facing the legal profession and legal education, including likely continued declines in applications, a constrained legal employment market, and rising tuition debt for students. Dean Boise reported that C|M|LAW had been invited to participate with a group of other law schools and law-firm partners over the course of this year to identify potential solutions to these issues. He also called for a May Day Summit with the faculty at C|M|LAW to launch a new strategic planning process at the law school. Dean Boise also noted that, while the 140-plan positioned the law school well to respond this year, it also reduced an already tight budget, and that depending on University budget demands, maintaining a smaller class size might require additional budget-tightening measures, especially from the faculty.

Several faculty expressed concerns about the role of faculty governance in some of the changes outlined in the presentation as well as the need for a robust faculty role in addressing the looming challenges Dean Boise identified. One faculty member proposed establishing an elected faculty committee, the Strategic Priorities Committee, to assess the effects of the 140-plan and other measures the law school could consider to respond to these challenges. Dean Boise scheduled a brown bag meeting with the faculty to discuss these issues and a special faculty meeting in early November to consider the new committee. The faculty voted to approve the new committee at the special meeting. A description of the Committee and its charges is in Appendix 11, Committee Charges 2012-13.

2. Committee Structure and Operation

Article V of the Bylaws governs committee structure and operation. See Appendix 59, Bylaws, CSU, Cleveland-Marshall College of Law. The Dean in consultation with individual faculty members constitutes and appoints the Chair of each committee, except for the Dean’s Faculty Advisory Committee, Faculty Affairs Committee, and Personnel Action Committee, the membership of which is provided for in Article V, Section 1 of the Faculty Bylaws. Id. Each committee that has an active charge files a written report with the Dean by the end of the academic year. Committee reports from the 2011-12 year are in Appendix 60, Committee Reports 2011-12. The current committees and their charges for the 2012-13 year are included in Appendix 11, Committee Charges 2012-13.

3. Faculty Meetings

Article IV of the Bylaws governs faculty meetings and requires at least four meetings during each year (two in Spring and two in Fall). More typically, the law faculty meets at least once a month during the academic year. We hold separate meetings for Promotions and Faculty Hiring in Fall. The Dean frequently convenes an extra meeting in Spring to resolve all unfinished business. No later than 48 hours before a meeting, the Dean’s office submits an agenda, which usually includes the minutes of the last meeting, any committee proposals, committee updates, information from the Dean’s office, and student petitions (heard in Executive Session by tenured, tenure-track, clinical and legal writing faculty). A schedule of last year’s faculty meetings, this year’s faculty meetings, and the minutes of faculty meetings from September 2011-December 2012 is attached as Appendix 61, Faculty Meeting Minutes and Schedule.

4. Unionization Movement

On November 20, 2012, the faculty was informed that a collective bargaining “card campaign” succeeded and that, as a result, the faculty requested the State Employment Relations Board recognize a bargaining unit at the law school. This prompted a frank e-mail exchange among the faculty. Some faculty expressed concerns about—and other faculty expressed support for—the prospects of unionization. As of January 18, 2013, CSU and the AAUP entered into a consent agreement for a union election at the law school, subject to approval by the State Employment Relations Board.

5. Faculty Morale

Faculty morale is mixed with 50% of faculty agreeing or strongly agreeing that morale is a problem and nine faculty rating this as the most important faculty issue—placing it second within the “faculty problems” category of the faculty survey. See Appendix 1A, Faculty Survey Results Charts and Graphs. We list the most prominent faculty problems the survey identified here. If SERB approves the agreement, it will mail ballots in early February and count ballots in early March.

- 75% of faculty agree or strongly agree that attracting strong new faculty is a problem and 12 faculty—the highest score in faculty problems—rated this as the most important issue. The 140-plan budget reductions and the University’s new budgeting process mean that the University is unlikely to allow the law school to fill future vacancies, potentially exacerbating this problem.

- Close to 53% of faculty rate faculty scholarship as a problem. That category ties for third place as most-important issue with three votes. Fifteen faculty voted publishing academic research the most important issue (and 67% agreed/disagreed it should be an area of improvement), reinforcing this concern.

- Retaining present faculty was the only other category in faculty problems that generated close to 50% or greater agree/strongly agree votes at roughly 48%—with only 10% disagreeing/strongly disagreeing. This category tied for third in most important voting in faculty problems with three votes.

When asked about specific roles at the law school, more than 50% of faculty agreed/strongly agreed that they are generally satisfied in 8 out of 12 categories. See Appendix 1A, Faculty Survey Results Charts and Graphs. Faculty did not disagree/strongly disagree in any category, with teaching recognition attracting the strongest negative percentage at 25% closely followed by service recognition at slightly over 24%. Id. Outside of publishing academic research, the faculty did not express any clear consensus on where we should seek to improve, with no other category exceeding 50% agree/disagree.

Several recent events that post-date the Faculty Survey, including the Dean’s State of the Law School address, the Strategic Priorities Committee proposal, and the unionization movement, also have affected faculty morale.

I. Professional Environment

1. University Academic Freedom Policy and Practice

The University subscribes to the 1940 Statement of Principles on Academic Freedom and Tenure of the American Association of University Professors and the Association of American Colleges. The University recognizes that free speech is essential and provides for the right to demonstrate and protest on University property. Appendix 62, CSU Personnel Policies and Bylaws, Section 8.1.3, Academic Freedom. The University supports and has never interfered with the full exercise of academic freedom by members of the College of Law whether in terms of teaching, scholarship, or other means of expression.

2. Criteria for Selection of Faculty

   a. Faculty Appointments Standards and Procedures

Other than the one clinical professor position filled in Fall 2012, the law school has not hired any new faculty since 2010. As we highlighted above, the 140-plan budget reductions likely mean that the University will not allow us to hire new faculty to replace at least the next three or four faculty openings when they occur. The new instructional resource model will structurally disadvantage the law school in recapturing open positions even after we have met the 140-plan reductions.
When we hire new faculty, the law school uses the same criteria as virtually every other law school, including curricular needs, legal education, other postgraduate education, clerkships, publications, diversity, teaching experience, and professional experience. Appendix 63, Faculty Appointments Advertisements, contains the most recent advertisements used in the clinical professor search in Spring 2012 and the 2009 AALS Faculty Appointments Bulletin from our process that year.

b. Policies and Practices Concerning Promotion and the Award of Tenure

The University criteria for promotion and tenure are in Appendix 64, CSU Personnel Policies and Bylaws, Section 8.1.2, Standards and Procedures for Faculty Appointments, Continuation, Promotion and Tenure. The law school’s more specific criteria are in Appendix 46, Procedures and Criteria for Promotion and Tenure in the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and Supplement—Procedures for Mentoring and Evaluation of Faculty in the Years Preceding Application for Personnel Action.

Every year the tenure-track faculty elects the chair of all of the Personnel Action Committees (tenured PAC, full Professor PAC, and five-year contract PAC). That person consults with the Dean to appoint three-person subcommittees for any person seeking promotion or tenure. The three-person subcommittee works with the candidate to gather materials for the application and then presents its report to the relevant Personnel Action Committee.

The procedures for the PAC evaluation process are detailed in Appendix 46, Procedures and Criteria for Promotion and Tenure in the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and Supplement—Procedures for Mentoring and Evaluation of Faculty in the Years Preceding Application for Personnel Action. The memoranda created by the three-person subcommittees in the most recent Associate Professor and full Professor applications are found in Appendices 65, Subcommittee Report-Matthew Green, and 66, Subcommittee Report-Candice Hoke.

3. Employment Status of Professional Skills Faculty

Clinical and legal writing professors, after completing five one-year contracts, may apply for appointment to a five-year renewable contract. The criteria for the initial five-year appointment are in Appendix 67, Criteria, Standards, and Procedures for the Appointment of Non-Tenure-Track Clinical and Legal Writing Professors. As described in that memorandum, award of the initial five-year appointment establishes a presumption of renewal for successive five-year appointments. The procedures for hiring, initial five-year contract applications, and five-year contract renewals are detailed in Section IV of Appendix 67, Criteria, Standards, and Procedures for the Appointment of Non-Tenure-Track Clinical and Legal Writing Professors. Clinical professors are on 12-month contracts and legal writing professors are on 10-month contracts.
The status of clinical and legal writing professors is close, but not equivalent, to that of tenured/tenure-track faculty. Legal writing and clinical professors serve and vote on faculty committees, teach courses other than clinical or legal writing ones, supervise independent legal research papers, and receive travel and library allowances. Article II of the Bylaws makes clinical and legal writing professors members of the faculty. Article II.2 gives all faculty the right to vote on all matters, except that it makes clinical and legal writing professors ineligible to vote on matters related to hiring, tenure, and promotion of tenured or tenure-track faculty, and also the hiring or retention of the Dean. Appendix 59, Bylaws, CSU, Cleveland-Marshall College of Law. Legal writing faculty are eligible for Summer research and teaching grants, but, under University policies, they are not eligible for professional leaves. See Appendices 52, Summer Research Grant Criteria, 47, Summer Teaching Grant Criteria, and 68, CSU Personnel Policies and Bylaws Section 8.1.8, Leaves of Absence (Non-Bargaining Unit Members Only). Clinical faculty are not eligible for Summer research and teaching grants because they are on either 11- or 12-month contracts; they cannot satisfy the requirement that a grant recipient accept paid employment for no more than two weeks during Summer term. Like legal writing faculty, clinicians are ineligible for professional leaves.

Since the last Self Study, the law faculty has considered several changes that either did or would have affected the status of legal writing and clinical faculty:

In May 2006 the law faculty passed a resolution that clinical and legal writing faculty should be eligible for emeritus/emerita status. Approximately one year later, the Faculty Senate unanimously approved amendments to the CSU Personnel Policies and Bylaws, Section 8.1.2, Standards and Procedures for Faculty Appointments, Continuation, Promotion and Tenure, making clinical and legal writing faculty eligible for emeritus status under the same restrictions and with the same provisions as other faculty. The Board approved this amendment in September 2007. 35

In May 2006 the law faculty also approved eligibility of clinical and legal writing faculty to serve on the Faculty Senate, but the University Faculty Affairs Committee (UFAC) did not implement this proposal.

In 2007, in response the 2006 ABA site team’s suggestion that the College “might consider an outside evaluation” of the legal writing program, then-Dean Mearns hired three outside legal writing professors to evaluate the program. Because the consultant’s report raised some concerns about the program, then-Dean Mearns established an Ad Hoc Committee to evaluate which of the consultant’s suggestions, if any, the college should adopt. In its report to the faculty, the committee recommended that the College conduct a nationwide search for a 35 In 2009 after the Provost sought to deny emerita faculty status to Professor Debra Klein in spite of a unanimous recommendation by the law faculty, the UFAC interpreted the CSU Personnel Policies and Bylaws, Section 8.1.2, Standards and Procedures for Faculty Appointments, Continuation, Promotion and Tenure to allow emerita status for Professor Klein. The Board approved Professor Klein’s emerita status in Fall 2010. In September 2011 the Board of Trustees awarded emeritus faculty status to Clinical Professors Kermit Lind and Gordon Beggs.

director of legal writing. See Appendix 69, Report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Legal Writing. Professor Carolyn Broering-Jacobs was hired for this position in 2008.

In 2008 the faculty clarified the renewal procedures for clinical and legal writing faculty five-year appointments and reaffirmed the presumptive renewal standard.

In Fall 2010 several faculty members proposed amending the law school Bylaws to make clinical and legal writing faculty eligible to vote on the hiring and retention of the Dean. The faculty voted to reject that proposal.

J. Adjunct Professors

A number of courses at the law school are taught by adjunct faculty members. Currently, we employ, on average, thirty adjunct professors per semester. Adjunct professors are typically practitioners or judges who have extensive experience in a given field and are then hired to fill a need within the course curriculum. The law school has retained a dedicated core of adjunct professors even though they are not well compensated for their services. Our ranks of adjunct professor are a great strength of the law school because of the practical knowledge that they impart to our students. The location of the law school in downtown Cleveland enables the law school to take advantage of the many judges and first-rate practitioners in the Cleveland legal community who are able to commute easily to the campus from their law offices or chambers. C|M|LAW is recognized for equipping our students with the practical skills needed for the practice of law, and our adjunct faculty plays an important role in achieving this. 36

Although we believe that the law school is fortunate to benefit from a strong cohort of adjunct professors, we are also careful to strike the right balance between full-time faculty and adjunct faculty. As discussed supra in Section A.4, Teaching by Full-Time Faculty and Adjunct Faculty, the area of particular concern has been the possibility that our part-time evening students do not take sufficient courses from full-time faculty. However, as explained in that section, an analysis of the transcripts of recently graduated evening students show that these students do have sufficient access to full-time faculty. The number of adjuncts teaching bar courses has been reduced in recent years and first-year courses, with only three exceptions in the past seven years, see id., are all taught by full-time faculty. We continue to monitor the balance of adjunct faculty to full-time faculty and make adjustments as necessary to ensure that our evening students have the same quality of professors as our day students.

Adjunct professors teach substantive courses and third semester legal writing courses. Since 2006 the Associate Dean for Academic Affairs (now the Associate Dean for Administration) and now the Director of Legal Writing, have responsibility for recruiting, 36This reputation for preparing practice-ready graduates is reflected in the faculty survey where 23 of 34 respondents agreed that the law school excels in teaching practical lawyering skills and 21 of 33 respondents agreed that we excel in preparing students for the practice of law. Appendix 1A, Faculty Survey Results Charts and Graphs.

selecting, training, evaluating and making recommendations for promotion from lecturer status to full adjunct status. Associate Dean Mark Sundahl oversees adjuncts who teach substantive classes and the Director of Legal Writing, Professor Carolyn Broering-Jacobs, oversees legal writing adjuncts. The faculty recommends which adjunct faculty should receive three-year contracts, \(^{37}\) and the Dean makes recommendations to the Provost, who makes the final decision.

The Associate Dean for Administration assigns a member of the tenured/tenure-track faculty to serve as a mentor for each new adjunct. The full-time faculty member is assigned to assist the adjunct in matters such as course book selection, teaching methodologies, and exam ideas. In addition, the mentor observes the adjunct professor in the classroom and files a report with the Associate Dean.

The Director of Legal Writing serves as mentor to the legal writing adjuncts. She works with them on course book selection and the creation of their syllabi and observes their teaching. In Fall 2012 she organized a workshop for the adjunct faculty who teach legal writing courses on how to provide effective feedback on written assignments. Although designed for legal writing adjuncts, we invited all adjunct faculty.

Each semester the Associate Dean for Administration or the Director of Legal Writing reviews in detail the student evaluations of every adjunct. If a problem presents itself, the Associate Dean or Director of Legal Writing discusses the issue with the adjunct faculty member and develops a course of action to address the issue. For example, the adjunct faculty member may be asked to observe classes taught by another professor or be asked to revise their course materials or change their teaching style as necessary.

In Spring of every year since 2008, the Associate Dean organizes an Adjunct Faculty Appreciation Lunch, which not only serves to recognize the contributions of our adjunct faculty but also contains an educational component to help strengthen teaching skills. Examples of recent topics addressed include the integration of technology into the classroom and techniques for engaging students more actively in the classroom. See Appendix 70, Sample Materials for Adjunct Workshops. Professors are invited to present to the adjuncts in order to share their experiences and knowledge about teaching.

We have worked at better integrating adjunct faculty into the law school community so that we (and the students in particular) can fully benefit from these practitioners’ connection to \(^{37}\)Each Fall the Associate Dean for Administration makes recommendations to the faculty about which part-time faculty should be awarded three-year appointments as a full Adjunct Professor of Law. Initially, a part-time faculty member is classified as a Lecturer of Law; once an individual has taught three courses over a three-year period, s/he may become an adjunct. See Appendix 71, Adjunct Faculty Manual 2012. To make this recommendation, the Associate Dean reviews the individual's student evaluations, written classroom visitation evaluations by the mentor, and letters from recommendation solicited from student and colleagues of the adjunct faculty member.

the law school. We invite adjunct faculty to attend our faculty lunch presentations, the public lectures as well as social events that take place at the school.

Since the last Self Study, the law school designated office space in the law library for the sole use of our adjunct faculty. This provides space for adjuncts to prepare for class and meet with students. Although holding regular office hours is a challenge for adjuncts, they are very responsive to student inquiries by e-mail or phone. Since 2008, adjuncts have received their own Adjunct Faculty Manual. See Appendix 71, Adjunct Faculty Manual 2012.

K. Faculty Strengths and Weaknesses

Strengths

1. Our faculty care deeply about the quality of our teaching.
2. Many faculty members are leaders in their academic and professional fields.
3. We have an increasingly diverse faculty in terms of race and gender.
4. We have strong support for scholarship in the form of Summer grants, research assistants, and library services.
5. Faculty are committed to teaching in the evening program.
6. We have a strong cohort of excellent adjunct professors.
7. We have a strong commitment to service, including service to the University and a long tradition of strong faculty governance.

Weaknesses

1. Scholarly productivity is not consistent across the faculty.
2. Generally speaking, our faculty members do not place scholarship in highly ranked journals.
3. The morale of the faculty is a concern.
4. Our ability to retain existing faculty and attract new faculty is uncertain.
5. We are concerned about the potential negative effects of a smaller faculty on our ability to meet future teaching needs.
V. STUDENTS

A. Admission

1. Overview

The Office of Admission strives to attract and enroll talented and diverse students. Appendix 72, Final 2012 Admission Report, details our successes in meeting this important goal. We benefit from having the lowest tuition in the state of Ohio, our location in a large legal community, and strong support from alumni and other members of the Bench and Bar. We face a number of challenges, however, including a declining national applicant pool and limited scholarship funds. The Office of Admission works to attract and enroll a class of the most qualified students, of appropriate size and demographic, and with the greatest likelihood of passing the Bar.

C|M|LAW experienced a drop in application volume in 2007 (-14%), rebounding in 2008 (+19%) and peaking in 2009 (+9%). Applications dropped steadily in 2010 (-4%) and 2011 (-13%) with a more dramatic drop in 2012 (28.8%). According to Law School Admission Council data, 170 law schools experienced a decline in application volume in 2012. Thirty-eight schools experienced declines between 20% and 29%, and 9 schools experienced declines of 30% or more. We cannot be certain why we are among the schools with the greatest declines; however, a number of factors bear consideration. Our primary competitor, the University of Akron, experienced only a 12% decline in applications. In the U.S. News rankings, a significant influence in prospective student decision making, Akron ranked higher than C|M|LAW in several categories in 2011: assessment score by lawyers and judges, employment at graduation, employment 9 months after graduation, bar passage rate, and overall rank. Many applicants view C|M|LAW and the University of Akron as comparable; therefore, U.S. News rankings give Akron an advantage. C|M|LAW is not differentiated in the market, especially in the northeast Ohio area. We have not identified programs or services that are uniquely ours that could potentially bring greater attention and recognition.

Despite these fluctuations, we have successfully maintained the quality of the incoming class. Relative to the other Ohio law schools, C|M|LAW is the most selective law school based on reported admission rates and second to Capital University Law School in yield. In 2011 C|M|LAW was the second most selective law school in Ohio, just behind Ohio State. Our low admit rate reflects our ability to successfully use historic data to predict yield rates at various LSAT ranges in crafting a class and meeting institutional goals. In 2012, 46% of our applicants had LSAT scores below 150; however, only 11% of the incoming class had LSAT scores below 150. The remaining 89% of the entering class was selected from the top 54% of our applicant pool. Our median LSAT is ranked 4th out of 9 Ohio law schools and 3rd out of 5 Ohio public law schools. Our undergraduate GPA is 5th out of 9 Ohio law schools and 4th out of 5 Ohio public law schools. Our minority enrollment is 4th out of 9 Ohio law schools and 2nd out of 5 Ohio public law schools. Our percentage of women is 7th out of 9 Ohio law schools and 3rd out of 5 Ohio public law schools. See Appendix 73, Fall 2012 Entering Class Profiles Ohio Law Schools.
2. Commitment to Diversity

C|M|LAW is committed to admitting and enrolling high caliber students with diverse backgrounds and experiences, who will enrich the classroom and help to make the law school community exciting and dynamic. C|M|LAW offers equal educational opportunity for persons irrespective of race, ethnicity, religion, national origin, gender, age, handicap or disability, sexual orientation, and veteran status.

The percentage of minority students entering C|M|LAW has generally improved, from 14.5% in 2006 to 18.4% in 2012. See Appendix 74, Applications, Offers, Enrollment by Ethnicity 2006-12.

We are involved in a number of community outreach and pipeline initiatives designed to expose racial and ethnic minorities to potential opportunities in the law. For example, more than ten years ago we established the Stephanie Tubbs Jones Summer Legal Academy in partnership with Case Western Reserve University School of Law, Norman Minor Bar Association, and Cleveland Metropolitan Bar Association through which area high school students from underrepresented minority groups are exposed to career possibilities in law. They participate in a two-week intensive law institute during which the faculty of judges and attorneys introduce the participants to numerous legal issues. The students spend two days shadowing legal professionals in a variety of settings. Law professors and admission personnel from the two law schools address the students on the law school admission process and on the benefits of attaining a legal education. The Summer Legal Academy draws students from high schools in the City of Cleveland and its inner-ring suburbs.

Similarly, the Law and Leadership Institute (LLI) is a statewide initiative in collaboration with the legal community that inspires and prepares students from underserved communities for post-secondary and professional success through a comprehensive four-year academic program in law, leadership, analytical thinking, problem solving, writing skills and professionalism. LLI began in 2008 at C|M|LAW and Ohio State University Moritz College of Law with 40 rising ninth-grade students from the Cleveland Metropolitan School District and Columbus City Schools. C|M|LAW continues to host the program for ninth-grade students each summer. These pipeline initiatives are managed at the law school through the Associate Dean for Administration.

The Office of Admission hosts a number of prospective student open houses and visitation events throughout the year. In addition to pipeline initiatives, the Office of Admission is active in attracting diverse students to the study and practice of law. Multicultural Perspectives Day provides prospective students the opportunity to visit the law school, participates in a classroom experience, speak with current students and learn about scholarships, financial aid, and career opportunities. Multicultural Perspectives Day is held each Fall and Spring. The Multicultural Roundtable Breakfast takes place the morning of Admitted Student Days. Targeting diverse students but open to all admitted students, this event provides a forum to engage in a conversation on diversity in the law with current faculty and students, and highlight how C|M|LAW values diversity.

The Office of Admission also participates in the Law School Admission Council’s Diversity Initiatives Grant Programs. Summer 2010 C|M|LAW received the first-ever Diversity Matters Award from the Law School Admission Council in recognition of our efforts to educate high school and early college students about law school preparation and careers in law. The efforts included our Jump Start visitation program for high school sophomores, juniors, and seniors from the Cleveland Metropolitan School District and surrounding suburbs with significant minority student enrollments, outreach to community college students and a partnership with Central State University, Ohio’s first and only historically black public college. C|M|LAW was among the ten finalists for the award in 2011 and we received a Certificate of Recognition for our efforts.

C|M|LAW is committed to providing access to legal study through a robust part-time day and part-time evening program. The following chart shows the percentage of enrolled part-time day, part-time evening, and total part-time students for each entering class from 2007 to 2012.

Over the past 10 years, there has been a relatively low demand for part-time day enrollment. Only once during that time, in 2009, did the number of applications for part-time day exceed 100. In 2012 there were 32 applications for part-time day. Historically, prospective applicants perceived part-time programs as having lower admission standards which meant a greater likelihood of admission. That is not the case at C|M|LAW. In fact, the credentials of our part-time students often improve our overall admission profile.

Applications for admission by women have ranged between 44% and 46% of our total applicants each year since 2007. The following chart shows the percentage of women applicants, women admitted, and women enrolled in each entering class from 2007 to 2012.

The low percentage of women at the law school caused the admission office to aggressively admit a greater percentage of women applicants. In 2011 and 2012 the percentage of applications from women was 46%, the highest level from 2007-12. Despite increasing the percentage of women applicants and our rate of admission, the percentage of women enrolled in 2011 was 44% in 2011 and 39% in 2012—the highest and lowest percentage of women enrolled between 2007 and 2012. The admission office continues to develop recruitment and yield strategies to address the low percentage of women in our 1L classes, including targeted e-mail campaigns and direct contact outreach by women student, faculty, and alumni.

While C|M|LAW continues to participate in LSAC Forums and other law school fairs, we have expanded outreach to student organizations at area colleges and universities as many prospective law students are not part of traditional pre-law societies. Some of these include Black United Students at Kent State University, Multicultural Resource Center at Oberlin College, and Latinos Unidos at Cleveland State University.

The Legal Career Opportunities Program (LCOP), described infra at Section 7, is also a means for identifying and admitting students and providing a supportive introduction to the study of law.

3. Admission Process and Responsibilities

The Office of Admission staff has undergone a number of changes in response to the changing needs of the law school and the demands of our prospective students. In 2006 the office was staffed by an Assistant Dean for Admission, a full-time Admission Coordinator, and two secretaries. Additionally, the Assistant Dean supervised the law school’s Financial Aid Administrator. C|M|LAW employed additional recruiting staff on a seasonal basis during Fall recruiting season. In November 2006 the Assistant Dean for Admission was elected to the Ohio Court of Appeals—Eighth Appellate District. A new Assistant Dean for Admission and Financial Aid was appointed in February 2007. During the transition, the Admission Coordinator served as Interim Assistant Dean; she left in March 2007 to work at another Ohio law school. In Spring 2007 we hired two new Admission Coordinators, one with particular responsibility for multicultural recruitment. In 2012 the Office of Admission was restructured again. Both Admission Coordinator level positions were eliminated and replaced by an Assistant Director of Admission and an Admission Specialist with responsibility for “virtual” admission counseling and social media initiatives. The office is still supported by two secretaries, one with responsibilities for receptionist duties, the other for data entry and file maintenance.

The Office of Admission employs a paperless application process. Applicants apply through the Law School Admission Council’s online application service or via the C|M|LAW website. Application instructions and guidelines are available online and are published in the C|M|LAW Viewbook, Appendix 75. All regular applications to the law school (except for LCOP, see section 7 infra) are first evaluated by an admission professional staff member. Staff members make an initial recommendation to admit or deny the applicant. These evaluations and recommendations are reviewed by the Assistant Dean for Admission and Financial Aid and an admission decision is rendered.

Criteria for admission are identical for the full-time and part-time programs, day and evening. Each applicant must have received a bachelor’s degree from a regionally accredited college or University (or equivalent for foreign-educated applicants) prior to enrollment at the College of Law. Applicants are urged to take the LSAT no later than February of the year in which they intend to enroll. However, C|M|LAW will consider June LSAT scores for admission the following Fall. The application deadline is May 1 (March 15 for LCOP).

In accordance with admission policy, adopted by the law school faculty in 2003, each applicant’s file is evaluated individually. Experience reveals that undergraduate GPAs and LSAT scores are important, although imperfect, measures for predicting success in law school. For this reason, we also consider other information about our applicants including: an upward trend in undergraduate grades; length of time since graduation from college; achievement after college; graduate work; volunteer and public service records; employment in a professional or managerial capacity; economic disadvantage or the need to work a significant number of hours while completing an undergraduate degree; extraordinary extracurricular activity; and one’s cultural, racial, and economic background. Our selection process also takes into account exceptional letters of recommendation, unusual and outstanding achievements or accomplishments, and demonstrated commitment to bettering society. Applicants are encouraged to use their answers on the application form and their personal statements to provide the Admission staff with information regarding any of these factors or any other relevant information that they would like to have considered.

The faculty Admission Committee works with the Assistant Dean for Admission and the administration to expand faculty, student, and alumni involvement in the admissions process, especially in activities designed to increase the number of highly qualified and diverse admits who enroll. Each Spring it reviews and makes decisions on applications to LCOP. It also provides oversight of applicant character and fitness issues.

4. Character and Fitness

A letter is mailed to admitted students whose files suggest that a character or fitness issue may arise with respect to their bar admission (e.g., students whose applications reveal past legal or academic honor/disciplinary issues) to register as a candidate for admission with the Supreme Court of Ohio (or with the appropriate office if they plan to practice in another state) as soon as possible, and direct them to the appropriate resources at the law school, so that any character issues can be resolved well in advance of their completion of law school. See Appendix 76, Admission Admit Letter.

All entering students are advised, during orientation, of the registration requirements of the Ohio Supreme Court and are urged to investigate the requirements of other states as applicable. In addition, during first year orientation, the associate deans conduct a session for both day and evening students, highlighting the ethical requirements of the profession and the need for future lawyers to adhere to those requirements from the beginning of their law school careers. We advise students who believe they may have neglected to include relevant information on their law school applications to rectify the situation immediately.

5. Recruitment

Each year C|M|LAW participates in several national law forums organized by the Law School Admission Council. In 2012, these were forums in Washington, D.C., Chicago, Atlanta, New York, Miami, and the San Francisco Bay area. We also attend regional fairs such as the Greater Western New York Law Fair, and at individual school law fairs held in Florida (University of Tampa, Florida Gulf Coast University), Michigan (Michigan State, University of Michigan), Pennsylvania (University of Pittsburgh, Carnegie Mellon University), Utah (University of Utah, Brigham Young University), and Ohio (Ohio State University, Miami University). Each year we decide which recruitment events to attend based on location, number of recent applicants, relationships with pre-law advisors, or direct contact with the College of Law. As the number of prospective students attending national, regional, and campus-based recruitment events continues to shrink, however, we evaluate the benefit of each event and make strategic decisions based on event outcomes.

In addition, the College of Law holds a series of Open Houses at the Law School during the academic year. Information about the Open Houses is available on the prospective student web page and is e-mailed widely to law school prospects. In addition to the Multicultural Perspectives Day events mentioned above, the law school hosts a Twilight Open House event in Fall for part-time evening prospects and our Winter Open House in January. We invite prospective students to visit the law school when classes are in session for a tour, information session, and a classroom experience.

The Office of Admission makes admission decisions on a rolling basis, beginning as early as December and continuing through Summer. An initial seat deposit of $200 is required when the student confirms his/her admission. A second non-refundable seat deposit of $300, payable June 1. Applicants admitted through LCOP are required to pay only one non-refundable deposit of $350.

Admitted students are invited to Admitted Student Days each Spring. This day-long event includes a diversity breakfast, student panels, lunch with faculty, academic and administrative sessions, and tours. Scholarship recipients are invited to Scholarship Cocktail Receptions held at area law firms the evening before Admitted Student Days.

C|M|LAW admits a limited number of transfer students from ABA accredited law schools each year, based on academic records that demonstrate their ability to succeed in law school. C|M|LAW has not admitted graduates of foreign law schools as transfer students although some have been admitted as first year students in the J.D. program and/or to the LL.M. program.
In 2009, the Office of Admission fully revised and redesigned the recruitment Viewbook. The publication is a substantial change in look, feel, and content, and it represents all aspects of C|M|LAW and our community. The redesign was developed as part of a college-wide re-branding strategy. The Viewbook was planned and designed to be used for four years. At the end of the 2013 admission cycle, we will revise our publications in a smaller format and with more focus on online formats.

6. Scholarships

The Admission Office uses scholarships to attract and enroll the most academically talented students. Competitor law schools continue to outspend us in this area, with some providing grants in excess of full tuition. See Appendix 77, Average Scholarship Awarded at Ohio Law Schools, 2007-2012.

From 2006 to 2010, our scholarships ranged from $2,000 to full tuition and were renewable so long as the recipient maintained the requisite GPA. In an attempt to reach more qualified and deserving students with our scholarship dollars, in 2011, we changed our scholarship strategy to a two-tier award: $5,000 and $12,000 while retaining GPA requirements (3.10 and 3.20 respectively) for scholarship renewals each year. In 2012 we again modified the tiers to $5,000 (3.10 GPA requirement) and $16,000 (3.20 GPA requirement) to come closer to the dollar amounts awarded by our closest competitor schools. Though we recognized that we would lose a number of students at the highest LSAT ranges, we were successful in making more and larger awards to students with LSAT scores in the 155-160 range. In 2010 we awarded scholarships to 49% of our admitted students. In 2011 that increased to 55% and in 2012 to 61%. See Appendix 72, Final 2012 Admission Report, for additional information on the number and dollar totals of merit scholarships awarded.

In 2012, 41% of our merit scholarship recipients who entered in 2011 achieved the requisite GPA and, therefore, retained their scholarships. This is a decline from 49% in 2011 for students entering in 2010, and from 53% in 2010 for students entering in 2009. During this time frame the size of our 1L classes has gotten significantly smaller—203 in 2009, 195 in 2010, and 168 in 2011. We plan to analyze how the smaller size of the 1L classes affects the number of students able to attain GPA levels to retain scholarship awards and whether we need to change our GPA requirements.

7. Legal Career Opportunities Program (LCOP): an alternate admission program

The Legal Career Opportunities Program is an alternate admission program for applicants who have encountered adversity that negatively affected their traditional academic indicators (i.e., LSAT scores and/or undergraduate grades) but whose background and experience warrant additional consideration. Since 2007, students admitted to C|M|LAW through LCOP represent, on average, 10% of the incoming class. Appendix 72, Final 2012 Admission Report.

Applicants to LCOP have academic indicators that are lower than those of regularly admitted applicants. However, LCOP applicants may demonstrate—through their career and professional accomplishments, personal statements, letters of recommendation, graduate work, and/or significantly improved academic performance over a period of time—their likelihood for success in law school. In considering applicants to LCOP, the Admissions Committee reviews an applicant’s:

- Undergraduate academic record, to determine the pattern of performance over a period of time
- LSAT Score(s) and a Law School Admission Council Credential Assembly Services report
- Personal statement to understand the nature of the adversity faced by the applicant and how it has affected the pursuit of the academic goals or career achievements
- Work history or career experiences demonstrating a record of accomplishments
- Graduate transcripts, if applicable
- Letters of recommendation (3 are required)

LCOP applications are reviewed by a professional admission staff member to determine if a) an adversity or other obstacle existed that may have impacted the applicants’ academic performance and b) the applicant has demonstrated readiness for the rigors of legal education in other ways, such as work experience or further education. Applicants who satisfy both criteria are referred to the Admissions Committee for full file review and an admission decision. The Admissions Committee is composed of four faculty, the Assistant Dean for Admission and Financial Aid, and two students, all of whom are voting members of the Committee.

Applicants admitted to LCOP begin their academic program in Summer by taking Legal Process, a 3-hour evening course. In the Legal Process course, students develop basic analytical skills that are critical to success in law school. Satisfactory completion of the course counts toward the credit-hour requirements for graduation from the J.D. program. LCOP is not a conditional admission program, and all LCOP students are eligible to continue their legal studies in Fall.

In Fall 2008 then-Dean Mearns appointed the Special Committee to Evaluate LCOP. The committee considered a number of proposals regarding LCOP, including whether we should adopt a conditional admission LCOP. See Appendix 23, Report of the Special Committee to Evaluate LCOP. The committee concluded that we should not adopt a conditional admission LCOP.
B. Student Services

1. Financial Aid

C|M|LAW and the University Office of Financial Aid share responsibility in the administration of federal loan programs for law students. C|M|LAW had its own Financial Aid Administrator until 2007, when the position was eliminated upon the recommendation of the University Director of Financial Aid.\(^\text{38}\) As a result, the University Financial Aid Office is responsible for obtaining all law student FAFSA data and awarding federal aid. The Assistant Dean for Admission and Financial Aid provides in-house financial aid counseling, troubleshooting, and programming for law students. In addition, the University’s Campus 411 All-In-One Enrollment Center personnel have been trained to address the financial aid concerns of law students and provide an additional resource for information and service.

In 2012 we transferred the responsibility for the in-house financial aid counseling, troubleshooting, and programming to our new Director of Student Life. This is in response to the concern of current students that financial aid counseling was insufficient. The Assistant Dean for Admission and Financial Aid will consult with the Director of Student Life on issues and programs and will also continue to be the primary financial aid resource for prospective and admitted students.

2. Service to Disabled Students

C|M|LAW is committed to ensuring that all of our students have access to all of our classes and programs. C|M|LAW invites voluntary self-identification by students with disabilities for purposes of verifying the disability and identifying the reasonable accommodations that C|M|LAW provides. Students seeking to establish a disability and arrange for reasonable appropriate accommodations contact the Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs.

Once the student has established a disability, the Assistant Dean’s office coordinates the provision of accommodations at C|M|LAW. Accommodations are individualized and arranged on a case-by-case basis. See Appendix 12, Student Handbook 2012-13, Disability Services, for a more complete description of the documentation process and provision of services.

Generally, we are able to meet a student’s needs when s/he makes a request for accommodations regarding class sessions. The Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs handles the provision of alternate textbooks by contacting the book publishers once the student has purchased the book and provided a receipt. The publishers then provide an electronic version of the text, which can then be “read” to the student by the computer. Providing volunteer note

Provide postings for students and alumni in order to best position them for their job search and to maintain our current relationships with employers and cultivate new employer relationships in order to identify opportunities for our students. The ways in which we achieve these goals include, but are not limited to:

- Open-door policy for current students and recent graduates, with extended office hours until 6 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays.
- Daily updates to the Symplicity job board that allows all students and alumni to review job postings for their class year only to ensure students and alumni see and apply only to those positions for which they are qualified.
- Fall and Spring Interview Programs where employers either come on campus or collect resumes.
- In-house and published handbooks (online and hard copy) related to job search tips and resources.
- Facilitate student participation in off-site job fairs such as Equal Justice Works and the Midwest Public Interest Law Conference.
- Provide guidance through the federal judicial clerkship OSCAR system.
- Participate in the Cleveland Metropolitan Bar Association Minority Clerkship Program.
- Provide requests for reciprocity with other law schools.
- Targeted law firm visits with the Dean.
- Targeted employer outreach soliciting internship, externship, and career information.
- Provide programming that highlights networking and career paths.
- Maintain active membership with the local bar association.
- Alumni counseling by appointment.

OCP has undergone significant changes since the last site visit. These changes involve staffing, programming initiatives, resources, and administrative responsibilities:
a. Staffing

- In 2009, C|M|LAW hired a new OCP Director.
- In 2009 the new Director created a 5-year strategic plan for the office (Appendix 78, OCP 2009 Strategic Plan and 2012 update), which will be revisited in 2013/2014.
- In 2010 the office elevated the support staff role to a Coordinator and hired a 10-year law library employee into the position.
- In 2011, due to a retirement, OCP restructured the Assistant Director position into a job-share position and hired two new part-time Assistant Directors.
- In 2011 OCP re-evaluated the department responsibilities and decided that the two Assistant Directors would handle the lion’s share of daily student counseling (previously the Director was one of the two primary counselors), in order to allow the Director to work on employer outreach, strategic planning initiatives for the office, and alumni.

b. Programming

- Fall 2010 we created a solo/small firm alumni task force to assist in counseling and programming related to small firm practice. We began this initiative to address issues facing the large number of our graduates who go into solo/small firm practice.
- The faculty reestablished a Judicial Clerkship committee in 2010 to assist in counseling and programming related to judicial clerkship applications, hiring processes, and experience.
- Spring 2010 the office began an annual (now biannual) Speed Networking/Legal Mocktail event, which teaches students how to work a room and network effectively.
- In 2009 we instituted a mandatory 1L OCP orientation.
- In 2011 the office created JAG day, presenting a panel discussion of the various arms of the JAG corps followed by one-one interviews.
- We began to digitally record a majority of OCP programs in 2010 in order to provide a link on the C|M|LAW website for those unable to attend.
- In 2010 we expanded the mock interview program to allow for more students to participate, to provide the option to have the interview videotaped for self-review, and to conduct interviews on-site at the mock interviewer’s office to acclimate and sensitize students to time/location issues.

c. Administrative and Counseling Responsibilities

- In 2011 we significantly expanded our use of Symplicity to include management of events and programs, tracking counseling notes and student employment information, and electronic appointment setting for students and relevant calendar information.
- The office assumed responsibility of the administration and counseling for the externship program in 2011—our use of Symplicity has allowed us to organize and streamline the application process and to be more responsive and effective in our externship placements.
- In 2009 we opened alumni counseling to all alumni (previously the office excluded alumni more than 18 months out of law school) and provide lifetime access to Symplicity.
d. Resources

- CoffeeTalk—a monthly newsletter (via e-mail and hard copy) established in 2011 by our Assistant Directors—highlights internal and external programs, job search tips, and class year specific advice.
- Our Public Interest Opportunities Calendar—publicized first in early Spring 2012 via e-mail and in Symplicity—highlights national conferences, events, and relevant deadlines for public interest related jobs.
- Our Diversity Opportunities Calendar, which we began to publicize in Spring 2012 via e-mail and in Symplicity, highlights national conferences, events, and relevant deadlines for diversity opportunities.
- In 2012 we began to populate the Symplicity Document Library, which houses OCP publications related to calendars, OCI, judicial clerkships, externships, government handbook, and specific lists of employers (e.g., small firms, prosecutors and public defenders).
- Our OCP Multi-Purpose Handbook (available online and in hard copy), completely revised twice between 2009 and 2012, highlights advice on and examples of resumes and cover letters, interviewing, follow up, and networking. Appendix 79, OCP Multi-Purpose Handbook.

These changes appear to have paid off as the results of the recent LSSSE student survey indicate a high level of satisfaction with both the career counseling services and job search advice that we provide to our students. See Appendices 4 and 6, LSSSE 2012 Mean Comparisons and LSSSE 2012 Summary of Results. These changes and initiatives have also enabled us to better-weather the challenges of the current job market. Fortunately, in their second and third year of law school, a good number of students are able to secure part-time legal employment that gives them practical experience. This—in addition to the existing ties in the local community they bring to law school, the practical skills they learn in law school, and our strong and supportive alumni network—has given our students a solid foundation, and often an advantage, as the legal market has evolved since 2008. During that year, many students who received offers from the larger firms had those offers deferred or revoked. Subsequently, recruiting for both Summer and entry-level positions came to a halt in some firms and to a significant slowdown in others. We are fortunate in that, historically, we are not dependent upon the large firms for the hiring of students. Rather, a significant majority of students have always been hired by the smaller, often 2-10 attorney, firms.

The legal job market as a whole has required small offices such as ours to be even more available, more creative, more proactive, and more strategic than ever before. The initiatives, resources, and added administrative and counseling responsibilities have gone a long way in addressing the needs of our students and the challenges of the market. Additional law school wide initiatives that we believe go directly to the heart of the market matter include:

- The expansion and requirement of engaged learning coursework requires students to take an externship, clinic, or skills-based class during their law school career.
• Our office focuses on a targeted job search and interview preparation for individual students, including our mandatory mock interview program for students wishing to participate in our formal interview programs.

• C|M|LAW’s mandatory graduation fair survey, effective Spring 2012, now provides us with a better opportunity to gain accurate information with our graduates and more effectively communicate with them about their post-graduation job search.

• C|M|LAW’s Loan Repayment Assistance Program began in 2006 with a generous donation be an alumnus with the intention of providing forgivable loan assistance to the graduates serving the public sector and the people and causes traditionally under-represented by the bar. This program has remained relatively small and we are in the process of reevaluating the best use of the donated funds for the benefit of our graduates who go into public service.

• A Solo Practice Incubator that will be housed in the law library (see Chapter VII (D)) is being designed and planned for opening in Fall 2013, in order for us to assist our graduates with building their own solo practice with the benefit of being part of a greater legal cohort, receive mentoring and guidance from fellow Cleveland attorneys, and create a business plan to ensure a solid start to their legal future. In Spring 2012 C|M|LAW hosted Fred Rooney, Director of CUNY School of Law’s Community Legal Resource Network and creator of the first law school incubator in the country, in order to get his guidance and advice in the planning stages of our incubator. Dean Boise then visited the CUNY incubator and talked with staff and graduates about their program in order to continue to gain insight on how best to proceed with our incubator plans.

4. Student Groups

The Student Bar Association is the elected student government at C|M|LAW. The officers recommend student appointees to law school standing committees and distribute University funding to the many student organizations at C|M|LAW. See Appendix 80, List and Descriptions of Law Student Organizations. In Fall 2012 we had thirty recognized student organizations. In the past, law students expressed some frustration in working with the University Office of Student Life. As a result, effective for the 2012-13 academic year, all accounts and advising have shifted to the law school and the oversight of the Director of Student Life. Student organizations, particularly programming and the role of faculty advisors, is one of the Director’s top priorities.

The student groups are active participants in the life of C|M|LAW. The Student Bar Association President recommends to the Dean student appointees to the faculty committees that include voting student members. Student groups are active in sponsoring conferences, working with faculty to organize programs, and organizing student activities. For example:

• The Entertainment and Sports Law Association began an annual Entertainment and Sports Law Symposium in 2010, providing relevant panel discussions from the industry, including the NBA, NFL, and MLB, and offering free CLE to lawyers in the community, drawing over 150 attendees in 2011 and 2012.
• C|M|LAW Allies has presented two conferences in recent years (one in conjunction with the Ohio ACLU), drawing 400 attendees in 2009 to discuss the current state of the law affecting LGBT persons locally, nationally, and internationally; and 200 attendees in 2011 to discuss the politicization of judicial elections and its effect on judicial independence and LGBT rights.

• The Student Public Interest Law Organization has coordinated student attendance at the annual Equal Justice Works career fair and conference, hosting nearly a dozen students each year.

• The Black Law Students Association formed the 1L Concerns Committee and assists students in outlining, brief writing, and research; conducts final exam reviews; and hosts an annual scholarship and awards banquet.

• The Employment and Labor Law Association hosts movie nights presenting films on relevant law topics, and presents panels of experts in the field.

5. Communication with and Services to Students

The law school has made significant positive strides in improving our methods for communicating with students and ensuring the accessibility of the services we provide to our students. Since the 2006 Self-Study, e-mail has been the primary mode of communication and the law school has been diligent in streamlining and reducing the e-mail traffic in order to more effectively communicate with students about important matters. With the creation of the new Director of Student Life position, we will continue to streamline communication and provide students with an initial point of contact in order to direct student issues and concerns properly. In addition, the new Director of Student Life is working with the SBA and student organizations on creating a shared calendar in order for students to have one place student organizations can publicize their events and all students can view events occurring at the law school.

Student services are accessible and available to all students, no matter the time of day they are present in the building. Specifically:

• The Student Services Center hours are 8 p.m. on Mondays and Tuesdays, and until 6 p.m. on Wednesdays and Thursdays.

• The Associate Dean for Administration holds extended office hours to address student concerns every Tuesday until 7 p.m.

• OCP and other departments have extended office hours at least two days each week and are available by appointment both before and after the school day.

• Various programs are now digitally recorded and made available on the website for students unable to attend.

• In Fall 2006 we began a 2L counseling program, talking individually with each 2L regarding the bar examination, including a six-point plan for bar success. See infra Section C.1, Bar Passage.
In Fall 2012 we instituted a mandatory 2L/3L orientation which occurs at the start of the school year, at both noon and 5 p.m., to address issues relevant to upper class students (Financial Aid, Career Planning, Bar Exam, and Registration).

In 2012 we created a formal ABA compliant student complaint procedure that we publicize via e-mail and on the law school website. The Associate Dean of Administration is responsible for ensuring the law school community follows this procedure and for maintaining the appropriate records. See Appendix 81, C|M|LAW Policy on Student Complaints Implicating ABA Compliance.

Transcripts are now available online in electronic format.

C. Evaluation of Outputs

1. Bar Passage

The vast majority of our graduates take the Ohio bar exam in July. The percentage of our first-time takers passing the July bar from 2007 through July 2012 has fallen from 90% to 84%. Appendix 82, Bar Passage Rates 2001-2012. Our February results during that same timeframe have varied substantially, ranging from 74% to 95%.\(^\text{39}\) Id. On nine of the twelve bar exams our graduates’ pass rate was over 80%. While we are pleased that more than four out of five C|M|LAW students pass the bar, we are also mindful of how they compare to other Ohio law schools. Our relative bar passage rate on the July bar fell from 2008 through 2011. We ranked fourth in July 2008 among the nine Ohio law schools, fifth in July 2009, sixth in 2010 and seventh in 2011; we moved back up to sixth on the July 2012 bar exam results. More important, among Ohio public law schools, from 2009 to 2011 C|M|LAW was last—in the most recent July 2012 bar results, we improved slightly to fourth among five. See Appendix 82, Bar Passage Rates 2001-2012.

In 2003 we renewed our focus on bar passage. The impetus for this was when, after several years of lackluster performance, the CSU Board of Trustees passed a resolution mandating that we raise our bar passage rate within five years to be in the top one-third of Ohio law schools’ bar passage rates. See Appendix 83, 2010 Annual Report on Improving Cleveland-Marshall’s Bar Passage Rates. In November 2003 the faculty approved an Action Plan for Improving CSU Bar Passage rates, and the President and Provost approved our plan in December 2003. Id.

We recommitted ourselves to improving our graduates’ bar passage rates in April 2007 when we unanimously adopted, as a key component of our Five-Year Strategic Plan, Goal Number 1: “Substantially improve our graduates’ first-time bar passage rate on the Ohio State Bar Exam.” See Appendix 7, Strategic Plan 2007. Throughout this time, the University has \(^{39}\)One of the reasons for the large range and fluctuation in February bar passage percentage rates compared to July rates is that many fewer students take the exam in February than in July, resulting in each February taker representing a much larger percentage of the whole in February than in July. Accordingly the passage or failure of a handful of graduates in February has a much more significant impact on February rates than it does in July.

Our approach to improving our graduates’ bar pass rate is multidimensional and has evolved over time as both our student body and legal education have changed. It begins with the size and credentials of each incoming class, continues with, among other things, mandatory advising, better feedback in courses, and a for-credit bar strategies and tactics course, through to the time our graduates take the bar exam. This year, in cooperation with BarBri, we began a new program that provides our students with access to a full-service bar preparation course and course-related material.

Our 2003 Action Plan called for us to enroll academically stronger and smaller 1L classes and provide them with more scholarships. We achieved our goal of an entering class of 200 in 2009. Since then, as noted in the Admission section, other forces have caused us to reduce the incoming class size even further. Overall, we have consistently maintained the academic strength of our entering class. As an example, in 2003 a student with an LSAT of 153 was in the top of the entering class, by 2007 that score put the student in the bottom of the class. See Appendix 72, Final 2012 Admission Report. Our scholarship dollars have increased over time, but this continues to be a challenge for us. See supra Section A.6, Scholarships. As our incoming classes have gotten smaller, we have maintained our commitment to the diversity of our class, LCOP, and our part-time programs. See supra Sections A.2, Commitment to Diversity, and A.7, Legal Career Opportunities Program (LCOP): an alternate admission program. Also see Appendices 72, Final 2012 Admission Report, and 84, 2008 Implementation Review of Cleveland State University, Cleveland-Marshall College of Law’s 2003 Action Plan to Strengthen Students’ Performance on the Ohio Bar Exam.

We begin talking to students about the bar exam in the 1L orientation sessions. We want students to be aware of the requirements of the bar exam and the importance of their law school studies to their success on the bar. In Fall 2006 we instituted a mandatory 2L advising program in which every 2L meets individually with either the Dean, an Associate Dean, or other administrator or faculty member. See Chapter III, Section K.3, Advising Students, and Appendix 27, 2L Advising Information Sheet. While we talk with every student about our six-point plan for success on the bar exam, the advantage of individual meetings is that we can focus on and discuss each student’s individual circumstances. Counseling a student at the top of the class is different than advising someone near the bottom of the class in terms of bar exam success strategy and how to take a compliment of courses that meets their individual needs and interests. We also added a bar exam component to our Spring pre-registration academic advising sessions for each first year section so that students are aware of bar-related courses when registering for 2L classes.

Our 2003 Action Plan called for the creation of a full-time Bar Coordinator position. From 2004 until 2007, Gary Williams served as both the Assistant Dean for Students and the Bar Coordinator. In 2007 he retired as Assistant Dean and became the full-time Director of Bar Preparation. Director Williams retired from the latter position in 2010. We hired Mary Jane McGinty as the Director of Bar Preparation in 2010. Gary Williams was, and now Mary Jane McGinty is, responsible for all of our bar-related programs: teaching the 3-credit Ohio Bar Exam Strategies and Tactics course and workshops on the MBE and MPT, working with individual students, coordinating faculty review sessions, being on-site at the July and February bar exams, and much more.

Ohio Bar Exam Strategies and Tactics ("OBEST") is a three-credit law school course that provides you with an opportunity to preview some of the substantive law covered on the bar and to become familiar with the modes of testing. Data analysis conducted for a review of our bar preparation program confirms that students who successfully complete the OBEST course and who also participate in other bar preparation programs have higher passage rates than their non-participating counterparts. The data for the last fourteen bar exams indicate that the passing rate for those who took OBEST is 86% compared to 83% for those who did not take the class. The difference in passing rates is even more pronounced for students with a law school GPA below 3.0—those most likely to benefit from the class: 73% of students with a law school GPA less than 3.0 who took OBEST passed while only 49% of students with similar law school GPAs who did not take OBEST passed the exam—a difference of more than 20 percentage points.

In Spring 2009 our Bar Exam Committee considered whether to make OBEST mandatory for all students or those with a GPA below a certain level. After surveying 2009 graduates who did not take OBEST and considering other potentially negative consequences of forcing students to take the class, the committee advised against making the OBEST course mandatory. See Appendix 83, 2010 Annual Report on Improving Cleveland-Marshall’s Bar Passage Rates, at 10. The faculty concurred in this recommendation.

As a faculty, we have changed the way we assess student knowledge in our courses. Faculty surveys in 2006 and 2008 showed that we no longer rely on one final examination at the end of the semester. Rather, we incorporate quizzes, midterm exams, research and writing assignments, problem sets, and other feedback mechanisms. In addition, more of us give closed-book exams and incorporate short-answer and multiple-choice questions into our exams, testing modalities similar to those on the Ohio State Bar Examination. Finally, we provide additional feedback on exams, including more written comments, individual conferences, and in-class reviews of exams. See Appendix 84, 2008 Implementation Review of Cleveland State University, Cleveland-Marshall College of Law’s 2003 Action Plan to Strengthen Students’ Performance on the Ohio Bar Exam.

We have adopted other changes that are not strictly academic, but which affect our students’ ability to pass the bar exam. For example, effective January 2007, we moved the Spring start date earlier by one week so that our students finish their last exams at approximately the same time as students graduating from the other eight Ohio law schools. This gives students an additional week to study for the July bar examination and prevents the possibility of overlap between the end of final exams and the commencement of the commercial bar preparation classes. From April 2007 to October 2012, we partnered with a private entity, PMBR, to more effectively prepare our students for the Multistate Bar Examination. Under our new arrangement with BarBri, graduates will participate in a MBE program similar to the PMBR. In addition, we offer an MBE Boot Camp in-house.

Beginning Fall 2012, we entered into an arrangement with BarBri that benefits our students in a number of ways. Based on our analysis of the multitude of factors that affect our graduates’ bar passage rates, it became clear that taking a commercial bar preparation course is a critical factor for bar passage.\(^41\) We learned that, unfortunately, many of our students do not take commercial bar preparation courses for financial reasons. To help address this problem, Dean Boise and Associate Dean Robertson negotiated an exclusive agreement with BarBri to provide an enhanced bar preparation course for all of our students.\(^42\) Dean Boise obtained agreement from the Provost to fund the course from increased tuition revenue. Beginning with the 2012 entering class, the BarBri bar preparation course will be a benefit every C|M|LAW student will receive as part of their law school tuition.\(^43\) Our students also receive BarBri course outlines and online study aids and a BarBri representative will provide periodic workshops on essay writing, multiple choice questions, and the multistate performance exam as well as hold weekly office hours.

\(^{41}\)In 2011-12 we built a spreadsheet that included many factors, including 1L GPA, undergraduate GPA, LSAT, whether the student took a review course, whether the student participated in our MPT workshops. We worked with Tom Geaghan, the University Director of Institutional Research, to determine the relative values of each factor. This was not conclusive because of the mixed quality of the data. For example, we could not find out whether students who passed the bar exam had taken a commercial bar review course because we did not have access to that information. We could get the information only by calling graduates individually. We spoke with most of the students who had failed the bar exam over a period of four exams. Although we could not reach all of them, many of those who failed had not taken a bar preparation course because they could not pay the course tuition at the time that it was due.

\(^{42}\)In 2011-12 we met with the three bar preparation companies that had either been serving our students or building a presence in the area: BarBri, Supreme Bar Review, and Kaplan. At that meeting, Associate Dean Robertson described our difficulty in understanding student pass/fail rates and how they relate to commercial bar review courses. BarBri immediately sent us their pass rate data for C|M|LAW: it was 89%. Supreme did not offer the information and would not provide when asked. Kaplan has only two C|M students who had taken their course, and therefore a 50%, unreliable rate. The best we could do was create two categories, BarBri, and Supreme/Kaplan/no course. The second category was not even close to the BarBri passage rate. In the meantime, Supreme went out of the full service bar review course business. We met several additional times with Kaplan and received a proposal from them, but ultimately felt that we could get the best service for our students and success of the exam by working with BarBri.

\(^{43}\)Current upper level students are also receiving a substantial savings on the BarBri bar course. The law school will pay BarBri out of our general fund. The CSU General Counsel approved this arrangement.
Our relationship with BarBri does not mean, however, that we are outsourcing our responsibility to help our students prepare for the bar exam. To the contrary, the addition of the BarBri program enhances rather than replaces our multifaceted program designed to give every student the tools necessary to successfully complete the bar exam.

As we expand and improve the avenues of support that improve our graduates’ bar passage, we remain cognizant of the need to assess our effectiveness. This requires not only the collection and analysis of hard data but also listening to our students about their individual experiences in preparing for and taking the bar exam.

Based on many years of hard data, for example, we know that a student’s 1L GPA is the strongest predictor of success on the bar exam. Based on the close relationships with individual students formed by virtue of our extensive bar preparation interaction with them, we also know that a myriad of other factors plays a role. For example, students who continue to work while preparing for the bar exam, those who cannot afford to take a commercial bar preparation course, and those who experience personal crises (i.e., financial, relationship, health) while preparing for or taking the exam bar often perform poorly.

We have not always been able to systematically gather the kind of information we would like in order to better understand what contributes to our students passing the bar exam. In 2010 we began calling all students who failed the bar exam to both inform them of the services available to them in retaking the bar and to find out factors that may have affected their performance. Spring 2012 we began asking graduating students for permission to obtain detailed information from the Ohio Supreme Court regarding their bar exams—this will help us better analyze success and failure. Perhaps most significantly, in the past year the University has been more willing to allow us access to data in PeopleSoft and to work with us to analyze the data we collect.

We recognize that we must remain vigilant about our efforts to support our students and graduates in preparing for the bar exam, and we remain committed to analyzing the various components of our program and the program as a whole to help ensure their success in this regard.

2. Student Employment upon Graduating

Employment for graduating students has remained relatively consistent from 2007-2011 (last year statistics are available) with some notable drops in positions requiring bar passage or a law degree. Students report employment in accordance with the late February reporting deadline set by the National Association for Law Placement and the ABA, ranging from a recent low of 85.3% for the class of 2011 to a high of 94.8% for the class of 2007. See Appendix 85, Summary of Career Planning Statistics Classes of 2007-2011.

The challenging economy in recent years and the issues related to law school transparency of placement statistics has brought to light many discrepancies in law school placement data across the country. C|M|LAW has always been, and will continue to be, transparent in our communications regarding placement data with prospective students, current students, and employers. We recognize that law students come to law school to earn a law degree and, no matter the career path they choose, it is important to publicize the employment that allows them to use this degree in a substantive, meaningful capacity. Accordingly, since beginning his tenure, Dean Boise has insisted that the law school focus on publicizing only our full-time J.D.-required job placement statistics.

The percentage of C|M|LAW graduates employed in law firms dropped from 61.3% for the class of 2007 to a low of 48.3% for the class of 2010, but rose to 56.5% for the class of 2011. The number and percentage employed in large law firms (more than 500 attorneys) has remained fairly steady, averaging about 14% for the last several years. In terms of full-time J.D.-required employment percentages for the class of 2011, we surpassed 10 law schools ranked among the U.S. News top 50, and tied 3 schools ranked in U.S. News top 20. We rank 44th nationally in percentage of graduates going to law firms with 100 or more lawyers.

Judicial clerkships have become increasingly competitive with applications up by the thousands and competition from practicing attorneys becoming more and more prevalent. Thus, the number of recent graduates going into these positions has been unpredictable and discouraging (5 in 2010 and 1 in 2011). Public interest funding has challenged recent hiring and, in fact, has reduced the overall number of jobs available in the non-profit sector. C|M|LAW was no exception, as we only have had only 5 students secure these positions in each of the past 2 years. The percentage of students staying in Northeast Ohio has skyrocketed over recent years, topping off at 95% in 2011. See id. All relevant ABA compliant information is also available on the law school website at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/careerplanning/employmentstatistics.

D. Students Strengths and Weaknesses

Strengths

1. C|M|LAW provides an excellent education for the lowest tuition in the state.

2. Students benefit from our strong and involved alumni base and name recognition locally.

3. We provide excellent career counseling and job search assistance to students and alumni.

4. Many of our students come to us with ties to the community and leave with practical experience, all of which benefits them in their job search.

5. C|M|LAW administrators, faculty and staff remain committed to monitoring and improving our multi-faceted bar passage program and our graduates’ bar passage rates.
Weaknesses

1. Although we are able to attract outstanding applicants, we struggle with enrolling the best qualified students.

2. C|M|LAW continues to have insufficient scholarship funds, compared to our competitor law schools, for enrolling the most qualified and diverse students. (Also listed under Chapter IX, Law School Finances and University Support Weaknesses.)

3. Our graduates bar passage rates are not as consistently high as we would like, either in absolute numbers or in comparison to other Ohio law schools.

4. The law school has not dedicated sufficient resources to our Academic Support program which is an integral part of improving our students’ academic success and bar passage rates. (Also listed under Chapter III, Program of Legal Education Weaknesses.)

5. Staffing resources are stretched thinly across student service departments.

6. We must continue to improve the level of financial aid counseling to our students.
VI. Administration

A. Place of Law School in the University Structure

The Dean of the law school, Craig M. Boise, reports to Interim Provost and Senior Vice President of Academic Affairs George Walker, who reports, in turn, to President Ronald M. Berkman. The Board of Trustees oversees the general operations of the University. President Berkman was unanimously selected by the Board of Trustees to serve as President of the University on April 26, 2009. Dr. Berkman came to CSU from Florida International University in Miami where he served most recently as Executive Vice President, Provost and Chief Operating Officer. Dr. Walker began serving as Interim Provost on July 1, 2012. Prior to serving as Interim Provost, Dr. Walker served as the University’s Vice President of Research and Graduate Studies. Prior to joining the University, Dr. Walker served as Senior Vice President for Research Development and Graduate Education as well as Dean of the University Graduate School at Florida International University in Miami. See Appendix 86, CSU Organization Chart.

B. Institutional Context

1. How the University enhances the law school’s programs.

The University enhances the law school’s programs in a variety of ways: distributes a subsidy from the State of Ohio to the law school; helps represent the law school at both the Ohio Board of Regents and the Ohio legislature; monitors the law school’s performance in terms of student quality, bar passage rates, and budgetary management; ensures that the law school will continue its scholarly, research agenda by reviewing faculty promotions and by reassessing any major change in law school policies.

There are several interdisciplinary projects and degrees that benefit law school faculty and students, as well as students and faculty in other areas of the University, including dual-degree programs with the College of Business, College of Science, and College of Urban Affairs. The law faculty also participates in University governance, which provides the opportunity for law faculty to influence University policies and interact with their peers who work in different disciplines.

The relationship between the University and the law school is generally a productive working relationship. Since the Board of Trustees approved our Bar Passage Plan in 2004, the University has continued to support the gradual reduction of our incoming class size. See Chapter V, Students, Section C.1, Bar Passage. In the face of declining applications Fall 2011 as well as the challenging job market for our graduates, Dean Boise proposed, and the Provost and President approved, the law school’s 140 Plan to reduce the incoming 2012-13 class to a target of 140 students versus the target admissions of 200 students in prior years. See Chapter II.C, Strategic Planning. The law school faces additional reductions in budget over the next three academic years due to the 140 Plan. For further information concerning the law school’s finances and resources, see Chapter IX, Law School Finances and University Support.

2. Separate law school policies

The principal policy distinctions that arise between the law school and the rest of the University do so because the law school faculty, unlike the rest of the University faculty, is not unionized. The law faculty has separate tenure and promotion policies and separate policies for legal writing and clinical professor long-term contracts. See Chapter IV, Faculty Section I.2, Criteria for Selection of Faculty. A document—CSU Personnel Policies and Bylaws (generally referred as the Greenbook)—which states University policies and procedures, has a separate process for law faculty with respect to appeals involving disputes over faculty promotion, tenure, or disciplinary action. During AY11-12 the Provost proposed changes to the Greenbook, some of which would have had a significant impact on the law faculty. As of Fall 2012 it appears that the proposed changes are not priority for the Interim Provost.

The law school distributes faculty salary increases differently from the rest of the University because we are not unionized. The Dean has significant discretion to determine how much of the raise pool should be allocated to merit raises and which faculty members should be rewarded based on their merit.

There are a myriad of other policy differences reflecting the differences between a professional postgraduate school and a predominately undergraduate school. C|M|LAW has its own development program and a separate student services program handling admissions, academic affairs, records, and career planning. C|M|LAW has its own grading guidelines, examination rules, and rules governing academic dismissal. See Appendix 12, Student Handbook 2012-13. The calendar is slightly different from that of the University, and graduation ceremonies occur separately.

C. Law School Administrative Structure

1. Overview

Dean Craig Boise became the C|M|LAW Dean on July 1, 2011. Prior to joining the University, Dean Boise served as Professor of Law and Director of the Graduate Tax Program at DePaul University in Chicago. Prior to that, Dean Boise was first Assistant Professor and then Associate Professor at Case Western Reserve University School of Law. When he joined CSU, he was appointed full Professor with tenure. His resume is attached as Appendix 87, Resume of Dean Craig M. Boise. A description of the search process is provided in Appendix 50, Description of the 2010-11 Dean Search.

Geoffrey S. Mearns served as the C|M|LAW Dean in July 2005-February 2010, when President Berkman appointed him Interim Provost. Then-Dean Mearns joined the law school after a distinguished career in private practice and government service. In August 2010 then-
Dean Mearns was appointed as the University’s Provost. Professor Phyllis L. Crocker, who was Associate Dean for Academic Affairs at the time, served as Interim Dean in March 2010-June 2011.

Two Associate Deans report to Dean Boise. Associate Professor Mark Sundahl is Associate Dean for Administration and is primarily responsible for the daily administration of the law school. Professor Heidi Gorovitz Robertson is Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment. Both Associate Deans are tenured. The resumes of the Associate Deans are found in Appendix 31, Faculty Resumes.

Members of the faculty serve as Directors and report to Dean Boise. Associate Professor Kristina Niedringhaus serves as Law Library Director. Clinical Professor Carole Heyward serves as Director of Engaged Learning. Legal Writing Professor Carolyn Broering-Jacobs serves as Director of the Legal Writing Program. Legal Writing Professor Kelly Curtis serves as Director of Academic Support. See Appendix 31, Faculty Resumes.

The Dean meets with the faculty as a whole on a regular basis to share information, discuss problems and issues, and debate and vote on policies and directions for C|M|LAW. See Appendix 61, Faculty Meeting Minutes and Schedule. The Dean also meets regularly with the Associate Deans, who administer the college on a day-to-day basis and the Directors. In addition, the Dean provides direction by making formal charges to each faculty committee. See Appendix 11, Committee Charges 2012-13.

There are two Assistant Deans, and neither is a faculty member. Jean Lifter serves as Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs. Christopher Lucak serves as Assistant Dean for Admission and Financial Aid.

In addition, C|M|LAW has a Director of Career Planning, Jennifer Blaga; Director of Advancement, Jennifer Nye; Director of Bar Exam Preparation, Mary Jane McGinty; and Director of Budget and Administration, Jeane White. The Executive Director of the C|M|LAW Alumni Association, Mary McKenna, works closely with the administration.

Both faculty and administrators are supported by a variety of clerical and administrative staffs, which are unionized. See Appendix 88, C|M|LAW Organization Charts.

2. External Organizations

C|M|LAW interacts with a wide variety of stakeholders in both formal and informal settings. For instance, then-Dean Mearns began holding a yearly Community Leaders Breakfast in 2009 for the purpose of updating leaders in the legal and business communities, including managing and hiring partners and judges, about the law school’s activities. Interim Dean Crocker and Dean Boise have continued this tradition. The Ad Hoc Curriculum Review Committee sought significant input from outside stakeholders when developing curriculum changes. See Chapter III, Program of Legal Education, Section C.1, 2009-11 Curricular
Reform. The Moot Court teams work with several law firms as they prepare for competitions. See Chapter III, Program of Legal Education, Section D.2, Moot Court, and D.3, Fredrick Douglass Moot Court Competition. We have a Solo/Small Firm Task Force that is working with us on the development of the Solo Incubator. See Chapter V, Students, Section D.3, Career Planning. C|M|LAW regularly consults with three formal groups representing the outside community: National Advisory Council, Visiting Committee, and C|M|LAW Alumni Association.

Each college at CSU is required to have a visiting committee. C|M|LAW’s Visiting Committee is composed of over 30 prominent attorneys, judges, and business and community leaders who serve in an advisory capacity to the law school, the Dean, and the administration. See Appendix 89, Visiting Committee Members. The Committee works to strengthen C|M|LAW by assisting in the areas of admission, advocacy, development, career planning, and reputation. It meets three times each academic year, and members are limited to three-year terms, with the opportunity to serve two terms.

C|M|LAW’s National Advisory Council is composed of over 60 attorneys, judges, and business and community leaders from across the country. See Appendix 90, National Advisory Council members. The Council works to strengthen C|M|LAW’s national reputation and influence. It advises the law school and Dean on state and national issues affecting legal education and provides insight regarding critical topics at C|M|LAW. In 2012 we instituted two-year terms for Council members that can be renewed twice.

The C|M|LAW Alumni Association represents approximately 10,000 C|M|LAW graduates. It supports, serves and promotes C|M|LAW, its alumni, students, faculty, and staff by offering quality educational and professional programs and opportunities designed to enhance the reputation and foster pride and involvement in the C|M|LAW community. The C|M|LAW Alumni Association is a self-supporting organization funded by its membership dues and programs. It employs a full-time Executive Director who is responsible for the educational and professional programs of the organization.

The C|M|LAW Alumni Association is governed by a Board of Trustees consisting of six Executive Officers and 29 Trustees, with representation from most of the major firms in the Cleveland area. There are currently 78 Honorary Trustees, composed of members of the judiciary including the Federal Bench, Court of Appeals, Court of Common Pleas, and Cleveland Municipal Court, as well as a former member of the U.S. House of Representatives, and various corporate counsels. See Appendix 91, Law Alumni Association Officers and Trustees 2012-13.

3. The Appointment of an Interim Dean and the Dean Search Process

After President Berkman appointed then-Dean Mearns as Interim Provost, the faculty, represented by the Faculty Senators, consulted with the President regarding the process for appointing an Interim Dean and Dean. Following established practice, the Senators requested that the appointment processes include consultation with and a vote by the full faculty to approve candidates. After several meetings with the Senators, the President met with the full faculty. At that meeting the President described his view that appointment of interim deans is an administrative prerogative. Despite this, he agreed to consult with the law faculty and accept a report from the Senators regarding each candidate, although he stated that he would not accept a reported vote ranking the candidates. Five candidates applied for the position: two current law faculty members, one emeritus professor of law, and one local attorney. The faculty met to discuss each candidate and the Senators prepared a report for the President, who ultimately selected Professor Phyllis L. Crocker to serve as Interim Dean.

The law school conducted a successful search for a new Dean in AY10-2011. The 12-person committee included seven faculty members elected by the entire faculty. Bette Bonder, Dean of the College of Science and Health Professions, served as Chair of the Committee, and Professor Alan Weinstein as Vice-Chair. The committee received 43 applications and interviewed 12 people. They reduced that group to 5 finalists. The finalists spent two days interviewing at the law school. Based upon all the information received, the committee brought forth two candidates. On March 3, 2011, the law faculty met and discussed the candidates. The tenured/tenure-track faculty voted their preferences. Two applicants met the threshold requirement of a 60% affirmative vote. President Berkman appointed Dean Boise. See Appendix 50, Description of the 2010-11 Dean Search.

D. Adequacy of Administrative Services and Support

1. Whether the Law school is well-organized

The law school administration is well organized with clear divisions of responsibility and lines of authority. See Appendix 88, C|M|LAW Organization Charts. In general, the administrative burden is distributed evenly.

Each C|M|LAW Dean has strategically made changes to the administrative structure of the law school in order to provide better service to our students. In 2006 then-Dean Mearns made the Director of Bar Preparation a full-time position (first filled by former Assistant Dean of Students Gary Williams, and then, after his retirement, by Mary Jane McGinty). Then-Dean Mearns also created the positions of Manager, Student Affairs (filled by Inga Laurent 2008-10, Valissa Turner 2010-11, and then eliminated in 2011), and Director of Legal Writing (filled by Legal Writing Professor Carolyn Broering-Jacobs).

Since his arrival in July 2011, Dean Boise has made significant organizational changes to the administrative structure of the Law school. He created and filled two academic director positions—Director of Academic Support (Legal Writing Professor Kelly Curtis) (replacing the position of Manager, Academic Excellence Program; see Chapter III, Program of Legal Education, Section K.4, Academic Support), and Director of Engaged Learning (Clinical Professor Carole Heyward). He also created and filled a Director of Student Life position that is held by former Admissions Coordinator Amy Miller. See Chapter III, Students, Sections 4, Student Groups, and 5, Communication with and Services to Students.
The composition and structure of the Development office, now known as Advancement, has been reorganized several times. In 2008 then-Dean Mearns worked with the University’s Office of Advancement to hire a Director of Development (filled by Anne Marie Connors until 2010 and then vacant until we had a permanent dean) and have a University Development Associate assigned to the law school (Megan McFadden). In Fall 2011, when two members of the four-person Advancement Department announced their retirements, Dean Boise reorganized the department to better delineate responsibilities and improve overall donor outreach. Dean Boise hired Jennifer Nye as the Director of Advancement in September 2011 and Megan McFadden became the Manager of Donor Relations. Her salary was assumed by the law school in January 2012 when the University discontinued its development associate program. A new Manager of Annual Giving, Laurie Gettings, was hired in January 2013. Rita Pawlik serves as the Advancement administrative secretary, coordinating many of the acknowledgment letters and event RSVPs.

In Fall 2012 the Dean and Budget Director moved Advancement’s operating budget to soft dollar funding, with a total budget of $158,367. This total does not include salaries or fringe benefits, but does include Advancement-related travel for the Dean.

Since 2006, the structure of the Admission Office has changed three times. In 2006 the office had been staffed by an Assistant Dean, a full-time Coordinator, and two secretaries. Currently, the Admission Office is staffed by an Assistant Dean, an Assistant Director, an Admission Specialist, and two secretaries. Further discussion of these reorganizations may be found in Chapter V, Students, Section A.3, Admission Process and Responsibilities.

Dean Boise has also moved administrative functions to a responsibility-centered management (RCM) model, by giving each department director responsibility for his or her budget.

2. Adequacy of records

Overall, C|M|LAW maintains adequate records documenting its admission process, budgetary decisions, personnel decisions, and education of students. As of Spring 2011 we have an index of significant faculty decisions made at faculty meeting, beginning Fall 1975. The Dean’s Office is responsible for updating the index, which is available to all faculty online at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/facultystaff/resources/meetingminutesindex. Other important documents are on our website: tenure and promotion standards and criteria, standards, and procedures for the appointment of clinical and legal writing professors, the faculty manual, student handbook, exam procedures, and others. See https://www.law.csuohio.edu/facultystaff/pac and https://www.law.csuohio.edu/facultystaff/resources. We need to continue to enhance our record-keeping by creating an official repository for fundamental law school policies, resolutions, and bylaws.
E. Staff Survey Results

We surveyed the staff at the same time as the faculty in 2011. The results of that survey indicated that staff morale is low. See Appendix 1B, Staff Survey Results Charts and Graphs. For example, only 14% of the staff believe that collegiality is a strength of the law school. Id. Staff also expressed dissatisfaction with their interactions with the faculty as opposed to other law school constituencies; only 40% reported satisfactory interactions with faculty. Id. Only 20% of the staff felt that they had strong support from the faculty. Id. Finally, 58.8% of the staff agreed that staff morale was an issue. Id. After receiving the staff survey results, the Dean and the Chair of the Self Study Committee met with the staff to discuss morale. At that meeting, staff expressed dissatisfaction with the level and frequency of communications from the Dean’s Office. In response, Dean Boise initiated a periodic, recurring staff breakfast to provide a forum in which staff members can discuss concerns with the dean.

F. Marketing and Communications

C|M|LAW’s approach to marketing and communications has grown significantly in recent years. In 2009 the school worked with an advertising agency to create a more contemporary, dynamic new brand. All print and electronic publications adhere to color, mark, and brand language to maintain the integrity of the C|M|LAW identity.

Electronic marketing has replaced many of the school’s print pieces for cost and reach effectiveness, and to direct resources toward the broader reach available through the social nature of the Internet and the prevalence of mobile devices that give greater access to e-mail.

The school engages prospective and current students, alumni, faculty and staff through several social media channels, including Facebook, Twitter, and Linked in. Dean Boise also provides thoughtful leadership components through posts on the Dean’s own Twitter and Linked in accounts. The plans for the school’s re-designed website, which is in the process of being created with an outside marketing firm, include optimized social and content marketing strategies that will further extend the school’s message.

The primary method of internal communication is e-mail. Several student groups maintain their own social networks for communication, and they collaborate well with the law school’s official Facebook and Twitter, growing an ever more cohesive communication network. Communications are also broadcast via html e-mail to C|M|LAW alumni via e-mail distribution lists operated by the CSU Advancement Department. The same e-mails are sent to non-alumni constituents through internally maintained lists. The Admission Department sends targeted html e-mails to prospective and admitted students via Aces II software.

Faculty news is communicated both internally and externally through a publicly accessible blog, http://cmlawfaculty.org. The faculty and administration also convey information to each other through e-mail, faculty meetings, and brownbag lunches.
As of 2011 C|M|LAW Advancement produces three major annual print publications: Giving Book, which details annual donations; Stories Book, which features personal narratives of C|M|LAW alumni; and Year Book, which highlights student and faculty accomplishments during the school year.

C|M|LAW has increased advertising, including banner ads at Cleveland International Airport featuring prominent alumni. The school plans to develop more strategic media buys throughout the year.

The school’s organizational structure reflects a new commitment to reaching more audiences, raising the national profile of C|M|LAW, and communicating the value of legal education. As of Fall 2012 a full-time Communications Coordinator handled all communications. We are working toward having a full-time Director of Marketing and Communications and have employed a full-time Communications Specialist who will provide resources to work with a larger group of internal and external constituents, and offer the professional agility to respond strategically to the vastly changing world of communications and law school marketing.

G. Administration Strengths and Weaknesses

Strengths

1. The law school administration thinks strategically about how to ensure that the administrative structure best serves the needs of the law school community.

2. The law school experienced smooth transitions between then-Dean Mearns and then-Interim Dean Crocker and, in turn, to Dean Boise.

Weaknesses

1. The law school needs more effective communication between the administration and faculty and staff.

2. The morale of the law school’s administrative staff is low.

3. The law school needs to create a central repository for fundamental law school policies.
VII. Information Resources—Law Library

A. Support of Teaching, Scholarship, Research and Services

The primary mission of the law library is to serve the educational and research needs of the students, faculty, and staff of C|M|LAW. Other important roles are to be the law library for CSU, and to serve as a continuing resource for alumni, the broader communities of legal practitioners, the citizens of Northeastern Ohio, and faculty and scholars from other universities.

To fulfill its mission, the C|M|LAW Library staff is committed to offering a law library that performs at the highest level of excellence in support of C|M|LAW’s missions and goals. An outstanding law library is an integral part of C|M|LAW’s overall commitment to quality legal education and scholarship.

C|M|LAW Library provides access to a wide variety of information resources in both print and electronic formats. Most of the electronic resources are available through authentication from off-campus. Librarians train users how to locate and use this information through on-demand, informal bibliographic instruction, the library’s Research Certificate Seminars, guest lectures and one-on-one or small group sessions as requested with students, faculty and staff. During the 2011-2012 academic year, librarians conducted seventy-one educational sessions for students, sixty-eight for C|M|LAW classes or student groups, two for Cleveland State University classes, and one tour for paralegal students. The Research Certificate Seminars are a series of, typically, one hour classes on a variety of legal research topics such as Ohio Legal Research, Administrative Law Research, Fastcase, Lexis Advance, Westlaw Next, Managing Research with Zotero, Scholarly Writing, and Research Strategies.

Fourteen of our C|M|LAW sessions were part of the orientation program, and thirteen were Research Certificate seminars. Two sessions were provided at the request of the Black Law Students Association, three sessions were provided for law journal staff and research assistants, two were individual training for faculty, and thirty-seven were guest lectures at the request of faculty. Topics included the effective use of Lexis, Westlaw, and other Internet sources; searching dockets; research techniques in specialized areas such as comparative constitutional law and war crimes; and research strategies in non-law disciplines. The Director of the law library also teaches Advanced Legal Research for 3 credits once a year.

Library staff publish and maintain over 110 research guides on a variety of topics targeted at research and writing, intensive classes, commonly accessed materials, and special events and symposia held at the law school. The library purchased LibGuides and staff have been converting our research guides to this new platform. The research guides can be accessed at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/guides.

The library is typically open 95 hours per week with extended hours during reading and exam periods and reduced hours during intersessions. The Reference Desk is normally staffed 53 hours per week with a reduced schedule of 45 hours per week during intersessions. Reference services are available in person, by telephone, e-mail, or chat service.

Faculty Services have expanded significantly over the past few years. In February 2009 the faculty was surveyed regarding whether they would use or not use current services and proposed services. The survey was designed to help determine which services would be of the greatest use to the faculty. Based on the survey results, the library, with the financial support of the law school, hired several student Research Assistants to support faculty research projects under the supervision of the Access and Faculty Services Librarian. All Research Services Librarians and Access Services staff also assist with faculty support. The library has been able to expand its faculty support services to include more intensive research support for scholarly projects, copyediting, and cite checking. The library’s RA program is quite popular and faculty requests have been plentiful. Faculty Services continues traditional services such as document delivery, course reserves and course/TWEN page support while increasing research and publication support. Faculty also receive an allowance of $500 per year with which to purchase texts, periodicals, or other research materials for office use.

Librarians and RAs completed 148 faculty research and support requests in AY11-12. These requests included writing research memos, compiling bibliographies, conducting non-legal research and literature reviews for a number of faculty members. Librarians and RAs have also assisted faculty in preparing near-finished articles and books for publication, cite-checking, formatting footnotes in the required styles, and formatting bibliographies for publication.

The law library is responsive to student needs. In September 2008 the previous policy restricting food and drink in the library was lifted. Shortly thereafter, copiers were moved out of a copy room to various points in the library, and the copy room was converted to a student lounge. The new lounge is equipped with tables and sofas, a small refrigerator and a microwave. This space has proven particularly popular with both day and evening students. The library receives input from students in a variety of ways including communication with SBA members, law school town halls, surveys after Research Certificate seminars and, most recently, the LSSSE survey.

Another service that the library provides includes the new Institutional Repository (IR), EngagedScholarship@CSU, on the bepress platform. In 2011 the Director of the law library worked in conjunction with the main campus library director and the Provost to acquire the bepress Digital Commons and Selected Works platforms for CSU. The library has worked extensively on the design and implementation of the IR and populating the C|M|LAW portion of the IR. The goal is to transfer all the records in the library’s Faculty Publications Database, set up faculty Selected Works profiles, use the conference module for law school events, and host the three student journals on the platform. The Access Services staff is assisting the Digital Content Services Librarian with this massive project. The IR can be accessed at http://engagedscholarship.csuohio.edu/ and the C|M|LAW portion can be accessed at http://engagedscholarship.csuohio.edu/law/.
The law library is a selective member of the Federal Depository Library Program, currently selecting 15% which is more than Schwartz Library. With the retirement of the Government Information and Special Projects Librarian in June 2012, we have shifted responsibility for the program to Laura Ray, Instructional Services Librarian. We are reviewing the materials we are currently receiving and investigating the possibility of transitioning to a substantially electronic depository.

Finally, in January and February 2012, the Library hosted the travelling exhibit Lincoln: The Constitution and the Civil War, organized by the National Constitution Center and the American Library Association and made possible by a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities. The library organized programming for the local bench and bar, University community and general public related to the exhibit, and hosted numerous school tours of the exhibit.

More information about law library activities and services can be found in the most recent Information and Technical Services Annual Report FY12. Appendix 92, Information and Technical Services Annual Report FY12.

B. Current Technology

The Director directs the operations of both the law library and the law school’s Information Technology department. This provides an important link between the two departments and facilitates technology innovations in the library. The Director and library staff members strive to stay aware of technological developments and understand the imperative to maintain a modern library with materials available in a variety of formats from a variety of locations and devices. In support of this effort, the library sends several staff to the CALI conference each year and librarians also attend technology-focused sessions at AALL.

All databases, except those which have license agreements prohibiting such access, are available off-campus through authentication. A list of databases with information about accessibility is available at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/databases. While convenient for all students, faculty and staff, this access is particularly vital for the success of C|M|LAW’s part-time students.

The library maintains a blog (on the CALI Classcaster platform) that is prominent on the library’s home page and can be subscribed to via RSS. Blog posts are fed to the Library’s Twitter feed (@CMLawLibrary) and Facebook (http://www.facebook.com/pages/Cleveland-Marshall-College-of-Law-Library/22382136237) page. The Electronic Services Librarian has primary responsibility for these services although most Information Services staff create blog posts. The Digital Content Services Librarian has primary responsibility for the Law portion of new Institutional Repository, EngagedScholarship@CSU (http://engagedscholarship.csuohio.edu/law/) and the faculty Selected Works pages. She is also overseeing the digitization of materials from our recent acquisition of the case files from the Sheppard cases and creation of digital exhibits related to that collection.
C. The Collection

Materials that support the teaching program and student/faculty research and scholarship make up the main elements of the law library collection. The law library’s Collection Development Policy dictates that supporting these needs is paramount. Students and faculty are further served by the ability of the library staff to access materials beyond our walls through our membership in the statewide OhioLINK Consortium, through the use of Interlibrary Loan, and via the Internet.

The library has in place a written plan for the development of the collection. See Appendix 93, Law Library Collection Development Policy (revised September 2012). This plan is revised regularly and reflects a thoughtful process ensuring that the library develops its collection in a manner consistent with the curricular and research needs of C|M|LAW. Taking into account the realities of our current financial situation, the Collection Development Policy is guided by the need to be flexible given limited funding for acquisitions, the availability of information in many formats, and ever changing scholarly and teaching needs. The current plan focuses on acquiring information in whatever form works best for patrons, rather than, as was the case with previous plans, on the development of a vast all-inclusive subject-based print collection.

The C|M|LAW Library collection serves the research and instructional needs of C|M|LAW. The collection consists of 521,046 volumes and volume equivalents, of which 127,372 are serials and 1,540 are active subscriptions. The collection has increased over 540,000 volumes and volume equivalents since the last ABA inspection and is now decreasing as we remove serials that have been cancelled for several years, weed the Government Documents collection and prepare for the loss of shelf space due to the construction of the Solo Practice Incubator, see Chapter X, Facilities. Details about the guidelines for building and maintaining the collection are set forth in the Collection Development Policy. See Appendix 93, Law Library Collection Development Policy (revised September 2012).

In addition to print and microform collections, the library also provides law students, faculty, and staff free access to BloombergLaw, Westlaw, Lexis, HeinOnline, BNA, CCH and a variety of other research databases. The CSU community benefits from our membership in the OhioLINK Consortium, which provides students and faculty direct access to the collections of eighty-four member libraries as well as hundreds of research databases. The C|M|LAW Library is a member of OCLC and shares a joint library catalog (SCHOLAR, http://scholar.csuohio.edu) with Michael Schwartz Library, the main University library. The C|M|LAW Library is a selective United States Government Documents (GPO) Depository.

The library budget fluctuated from FY07 to FY10 but has decreased since FY10. The increase in the Acquisitions portion of the budget has been achieved by taking money from other areas of the library budget. At the same time, we have continued to cancel print subscriptions with an annual impact of approximately $340,000 simply to keep pace with the increase in prices and the need to provide our faculty and staff with adequate access to electronic resources. With the library budget decreasing and acquisitions costs continuing to rise, this solution will not be workable in the future, and our ability to meet curricular and scholarship needs will be severely compromised.

In order to keep pace with a shrinking budget and increasing costs, the library has been making difficult choices such as cutting print copies of many law journals, discontinuing print copies of particular reference sets, and shifting most monograph purchasing from prospective to reactive purchasing.

The chart below shows the library’s total budget and acquisitions budget, along with ABA rank of those budgets, since the last ABA site visit. In FY00, the law library’s total budget was ranked 48th and the Acquisitions budget was ranked 84th amongst all accredited law schools. In FY06, the total budget was ranked 71st and the Acquisitions budget was ranked 129th. In FY11, the library’s total budget was ranked 97th and the Acquisitions budget was ranked 129th among all accredited law schools. Since a recent budget high in FY10, both the total budget and the Acquisitions budget have been cut by nearly 11%.

*FY12 expenditures were reduced by $94,449 reflecting acquisitions rolled over to FY13 in accordance with new University Accounting rules. The total budget would have been $2,397,527 and the Acquisitions portion would have been $977,140.

D. The Law Library Building

The C|M|LAW Library building opened in August 1997. Although a separate building, the library is seamlessly connected to the Law Building by an indoor bridge and atrium. It is a spacious and comfortable facility that has been well-maintained. The majority of the carpet on the main floor as well as the stairwell flooring was replaced in Summer 2012. At the same time, the student lounge was renovated to create more usable space.
The library is home to the law school’s student computer lab. It was updated in Summer 2012 with 35 new workstations. In addition, 12 laptop/iPad/smartphone charging stations were created and power cords were made available for circulation. The computer lab contains two 14-seat training labs which may be used for training sessions by faculty and librarians. These rooms are open to law student use when they are not in use for training.

The building contains 411 “open” seats for patrons. These are seats that are not in rooms that require key access (such as study rooms). Seats in rooms with key access add an additional 88 seats. 214 of the seats are at study carrels. 16 study rooms are available to students on a daily basis, while an additional two special purpose rooms (a room with equipment for the visually-impaired and an audio-visual equipment room) are also used as student study rooms during times of high demand. With a present student body of approximately 500, our open seating is more than adequate for the needs of our students.

Our building is the largest law library space in Ohio, containing 84,670 net square feet. According to the 2011 ABA Annual Questionnaire data, the Law Library ranks 13th in size among the 201 ABA accredited law schools. Many of the carrels and other seats in the law library have electrical power outlets, and the library and law school buildings provide wireless network access for patrons.

In March 2013 the offices of the Education Law Association (ELA) will move into office space previously occupied by the law library administrative offices. ELA’s offices will utilize three individual offices and some storage space and occasionally make use of the law library conference room or law school meeting space.

In May 2013 construction will begin on C|M|LAW’s Solo Practice Incubator. The Incubator will be housed in 3,450 square feet of what is currently law library space on the Atrium level. As already demonstrated, the library has sufficient space to absorb this loss for an important C|M|LAW project. As part of the construction, the library will gain five additional study rooms, space which is always in high-demand by law students.

E. Integration within the College of Law and Autonomy

The C|M|LAW Library is a unit within and of C|M|LAW allowing it to be administered in a manner that best permits it to successfully perform educational and support functions for the law school.

The C|M|LAW Library is autonomous from the administration of the Michael Schwartz (University) Library, although close and active ties of cooperation and support exist between the two libraries. Both libraries have committed to work together in a number of important ways for mutual benefit. The C|M|LAW Library and Schwartz Library work collaboratively on collection development and have worked to fund jointly the purchase of some electronic resources and a discovery layer for the shared catalog. In Summer 2011 the Director of the law library and the Director of Schwartz Library worked together with the University Provost to purchase and implement an Institutional Repository based on the bepress Digital Commons platform. The current Interim Provost has withdrawn substantial funding from this project and the Law Library and Schwartz Library are working together to seek replacement funding. The C|M|LAW Library Director also serves with the Director of the University Library as an ex officio member of CSU’s Faculty Senate Library Committee.

The C|M|LAW Library Director bears full administrative responsibility for supervision of library personnel and the library’s annual budget. The budget is reviewed by the law school’s Budget Director and the Dean, and is then submitted to the University as part of the law school’s overall budget request. The library budget for FY13 is $2,359,458. The library staff finds this budget tight in some lines, and would benefit from additional funding for items such as staff development and acquisitions.

F. Staff

Professor Kristina L. Niedringhaus, Director of the Law Library since 2008, is a tenured associate professor on the law faculty. Professor Niedringhaus also has primary responsibility for Law School technology.

The law library staff, including the Director, is made up of 19 full-time employees and 1 half-time employee including: eight librarians, four Information Technology staff (two of whom are funded through the Law School budget), and 7.5 support staff. In addition to the Director, five of the librarians hold J.D. Degrees. The backgrounds and job descriptions of all full-time support staff are contained in Appendix 94, Law Library Staff.

The library staff is talented, innovative, energetic, service-oriented and well-directed. The library is organized into four divisions: Administration (Law Library Director and Administrative Secretary Sylvia Dunham); Research Services (Associate Director Jan Ryan Babbit, 6 librarians including the Collection Development and Acquisitions Librarians and the Head of Access & Faculty Services); Access and Faculty Services (one librarian, Amy Burchfield, Head, and 3.5 staff); Technical Services (one librarian, Beth Farrell and three support staff); and Information Technology (Technology Operations Assistant Director Dan Thomas, and three IT staff). For more detail, see Appendix 88, C|M|LAW Organization Charts, Chart 6: Library, and see Chapter VIII, Computer Technology and Information Delivery.

G. User Opinion & Responses

The Self-Study Committee survey of faculty and staff conducted in December 2011 and January 2012 revealed very strong agreement among all constituencies that the law library and its services are one of the top three greatest strengths of C|M|LAW. See Appendices 1A and

44 Professor Niedringhaus has accepted a new position as the Library Director at Georgia State University College of Law as of July 2013. We will begin a search for a new Law Library Director early in 2013.
1B, Faculty Survey Results Charts and Graphs and Staff Survey Results Charts and Graphs. The law library also received positive responses on the Law School Survey of Student Engagement, conducted in March 2012. Appendix 4, LSSSE 2012 Mean Comparisons Report.

The law library also conducted a survey of faculty in February 2009 seeking information about which services, if offered to faculty, would be most desirable. For more information about this survey and how the law library responded to the results, please see supra Section A, Support of Teaching, Scholarship, Research and Services, in this Chapter.

Attendees at Research Certificate Seminars complete a course evaluation at the end of the session to help determine strengths and weaknesses of the class. In addition, students are asked to indicate what topics they would like to see covered by Research Certificate Seminars in the future. These results are used to help determine future programming.

Survey responses about the law library have been overwhelmingly positive. The law school community believes that the law library is providing excellent support for the teaching and research mission of C|M|LAW. The positive results from the surveys are a tribute to the efforts of the law library staff, all of whom are dedicated to providing the highest possible level of support and service to faculty, students and staff.

H. Conclusion

C|M|LAW has a strong law library that provides excellent support for the mission of C|M|LAW. Our facility has ample space, is effectively organized, comfortable for patrons, and technologically up-to-date. The law library collection meets the research and scholarly needs of faculty and students. The law library staff is capably led, talented, and dedicated to their work. Survey results show that students, faculty and staff are well served by the law library and its staff. The law library is a significant resource to the CSU community, C|M|LAW alumni, the Bench and Bar, and those citizens who desire to conduct legal research. There is one overarching area of concern. The budget, in particular the acquisitions budget, is a continuing problem that is becoming more difficult over time. Difficult cuts to the collection will need to be made, and these cuts will likely reduce the ability of the law library to serve its community.

I. Information Resources—Law Library Strengths and Weaknesses

Strengths

1. The C|M|LAW Library staff provide an exceptional program of library support services including the Research Assistant Program and interdisciplinary support of faculty research.

2. We have an energetic and creative law library staff.
3. We have a cooperative working relationship with Schwartz Library and expanded resources through the OhioLINK consortium.

4. Our expansive and well-lit facility with updated wireless access is conducive to both group and individual study and research.

Weaknesses

1. Continuing shortfalls in the acquisitions budget result in an aggressive cancellation program that threatens the core of the collection.

2. The overall budget is tight in all areas, including staff development and training.

3. Decreased staff budget prevents the law library from expanding hours and makes covering staff emergencies extremely difficult.
VIII. Computer Technology and Information Delivery

A. Introduction & Organization

Information Technology support responsibilities and administration are primarily managed by C|M|LAW Information Technology department. The University Information Services and Technology (IS&T) operates the wired and wireless networks that facilitate network access. The University also maintains responsibility for PeopleSoft and other systems for financial data, payroll, human resources, and other administrative computing needs.

C|M|LAW runs Linux and Windows-based server platforms. IT currently operates six servers for the law school: mail, web, student file and print, law school faculty/staff file and print, law library staff file and print, and an exam server. The servers are scalable and protected by multiple firewalls. All servers are regularly backed up on a daily basis with varying retention policies. Within the past year, IT has moved C|M|LAW’s servers from a server room in the law school to the University’s data center. This was done to provide greater security and disaster recovery capabilities. C|M|LAW IT personnel maintain both remote and hands on access to the servers in the data center.

C|M|LAW currently runs its own e-mail system. The University is moving toward the cloud-based Microsoft Office 365 e-mail system. C|M|LAW IT staff have been included in the vetting process for e-mail solutions. C|M|LAW and University IS&T consolidated student e-mail systems on Office 365 in December 2012. IS&T and the C|M|LAW IT will evaluate the migrated student e-mail system. Based on this assessment, faculty and staff e-mail systems may be transitioned and consolidated in either a cloud-based or on-premise solution.

All of the main classrooms are equipped with smart podiums and projectors. The Moot and Trial courtrooms have Mediasite servers that can stream live video and archive sessions for later viewing.

B. Staffing

Assistant Director of Technology Operations, Dan Thomas, and three full-time staff support C|M|LAW technology. The IT department reports to the Law Library Director, Kristina L. Niedringhaus. Eric Domanski provides primary oversight of e-mail, the student computer lab, and student and library staff servers. Greg Golembiski provides desktop support and provides primary oversight of video and audio recording services. Rick Zhang provides support for faculty and staff computing needs, including the operation of the Law Building faculty and staff servers. Rick also provides web design and support services for the C|M|LAW website.

Dan Thomas provides the overall responsibility for the day-to-day supervision of all law school and law library IT operations. He works closely with Kristina Niedringhaus in planning for and implementing technology. He also bears the primary responsibility for supporting technology in the classroom and coordinating projects run by the University IS&T Department that involve the law school.

Since the last ABA site visit, there have been staffing changes in the IT group. After the last site visit, a fifth position was added and Greg Golembiski was hired. In August 2010 Dan Maynard, Senior UNIX Administrator, resigned his position. This position was then eliminated as part of budget cuts in Spring 2011. In October 2011 Director of Technology Operations, David Genzen, left CSU. This position remained vacant until June 2012 when Dan Thomas, Assistant Director of Technology Operations, was hired. The backgrounds and job descriptions of all full-time staff are contained in Appendix 94, Law Library Staff. For more detail regarding the organization of the department, see Appendix 88, C|M|LAW Organization Charts, Chart 6: Library.

C. Computer Systems

All faculty and staff have computers with a minimum of a Core2Duo CPU. Most users have a desktop or minitower with a 19” monitor; however, some users have a laptop with docking station and external monitor. Subject to budgetary availability, the law school upgrades PCs as individual needs change, technical requirements mandate, or important software changes occur.

D. Computing for Law Journals, Clinics, and Student Organizations

The IT Department provides students organizations with computer support. For example, the three law journals, Moot Court Board, and Student Bar Association are provided with PCs, printers, and technical support. Every student organization has an opportunity to have a web page created on the C|M|LAW website. See https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/studentorganizations. Both desktop computers and several laptops are provided in the clinic for students engaged in clinical practice.

E. Administrative Computing: Registration, Financial Aid, and Class Scheduling

PeopleSoft is the main student records database for the University and includes modules for student records, financial aid, and registration.

The University Development Office provides access to Millennium software to facilitate maintaining and tracking giving records. Millennium is used by the C|M|LAW Development staff.

The Office of Career Planning uses Symplicity and OSCAR, web-based programs, to match students with potential employers and for judicial clerkship applications.

The Office of Admission uses ACES2 to track prospective applicants and to monitor the receipt of application materials. The Assistant Dean for Admission uses PeopleSoft to enter admissions data to satisfy University requirements. The Assistant Dean for Admission and the Director of Student Life use PowerFaids to do financial aid counseling.

F. Classroom Technology

All C|M|LAW classrooms have classroom presentation capabilities and most have power to each student seat for laptop use. The smart podiums in the main classrooms contain several pieces of instructional technology including workstations with presentation software, document cameras, wired and/or wireless lavaliere microphones, etc. Laptops and other device output can be connected through the Extron interface and projected to the class.

The Trial Courtroom contains additional technology via the Crestron control system. This system brings many modern courtroom features to the students, including multiple camera controls with Mediasite recording capabilities, display screens where content can be approved by the judge/bailiff before being displayed, virtual annotation of any screen being displayed, white noise for bench privacy, and direct input control.

G. Budget

In recent years there has been no standing budget for technology purchases. Purchases of technology for faculty and staff have been funded with combined funds from various budget lines and from vacancy savings. Student computing upgrades are mainly accomplished via requests to the University for Student Technology Fee, or House Bill funds earmarked for technology. The College of Law, like other units in the University, gets one opportunity each year to seek funding for specific technology projects that will benefit students. Student Technology Fee funds also provide support for the computer lab and maintenance of technology equipment in classrooms. In the past few years the College of Law has received the following Technology Fee awards: FY13, N/A; FY12, $85,000; FY11, $120,000; FY10, $63,000; FY09, $116,620; FY08, $92,970.

General system upgrades, such as the installation of networks and new servers, are considered on a case-by-case basis and funds are generally found with the approval of the Dean in other parts of the law school budget. Lack of an IT capital budget inhibits rational planning for capital purchases. This encompasses both the cyclical replacement of computer workstations as well as enterprise equipment (servers and server components, battery backup, etc.) and equipment is frequently used past its average life expectancy. While this can be viewed as an economical approach, expensive, unplanned purchases can be required to replace equipment that fails unexpectedly or becomes unstable.

H. User Opinion & Response

The Self Study Committee surveyed the faculty and staff in December 2011 and January 2012 and the students participated in the Law School Survey of Student Engagement (LSSSE) in March 2012. The LSSSE survey indicated significant dissatisfaction with College of Law IT.
Appendix 4, LSSSE 2012 Mean Comparisons Report. There were two major technology problems contributing to this dissatisfaction. The most severe problem was the University wireless system. While C|M|LAW IT personnel are not responsible for the wireless network, the network was outdated and deteriorated quickly over the past 12 to 18 months. Wireless service became nearly impossible to receive in the Law Building and Law Library in Fall 2011 and continued to get even worse in Spring 2012. The University upgraded the wireless hardware and software in Summer 2012, and the network is now working as expected.

The second problem students experienced was the aging of the workstations in the student computer lab. The hardware and software had reached its useful life span and students were experiencing slowness and delays. C|M|LAW had requested Technology Fee funding the previous year to purchase new hardware for the computer lab but did not receive an award. The lab was upgraded in Summer 2012 when Technology Fee funding was secured for FY12. To better accommodate laptop and mobile tablet users, spaces have been designated in the computer lab that contain power outlets on the desktop and USB charging ports. Various charging cables are also now available for students to checkout.

I. Conclusion

The IT Department staff does a good job supporting the technological needs of the law school. Staffing transitions, lack of a defined budget for upgrades and University-controlled technology issues have presented some difficulties for the department over the past several years. However, faculty and staff indicate that they believe they get good service from IT personnel. The new Assistant Director for Technology Operations, Dan Thomas, has implemented a new service plan designed to further improve service request response times and accountability. Wireless network issues have been resolved by the University and the student computer lab has been upgraded. Server hardware and software are being evaluated for upgrade, if funding is available.

While there have been some issues with technology in the law school, these issues are being resolved by a helpful and innovative staff committed to the success of C|M|LAW. One outstanding issue to be resolved is the matter of budgetary planning for hardware and software upgrades.

J. Information Technology Strengths and Weaknesses

Strengths

1. Experienced IT personnel provide a high level of support to the law school faculty, staff, and students.

2. IT staff support both day and evening classes and are available from 8:00 a.m.-9:00 p.m. Monday-Friday.
3. Open source products and other creative solutions are commonly used in place of more expensive options that are cost prohibitive.

Weaknesses

1. Lack of an IT budget inhibits rational planning for capital purchases.

2. Loss of an IT position eliminated standard weekend support.
IX. Law School Finances and University Support

A. Overview of Financial Condition

This chapter provides detail regarding the finances and resources of CSU, in general, and of C|M|LAW, in particular. Before laying out that detail, however, it is important to note more broadly that, like many U.S. law schools, C|M|LAW operates under increasingly difficult financial constraints. C|M|LAW has been required by the University to make substantial budget reductions in each of FY07, FY09, FY11, FY12 and FY13. The reductions in FY07, FY09, FY11, and FY12 were largely due to changes implemented by the Provost’s Office regarding vacant faculty positions. Specifically, the Provost’s Office implemented a policy in 2008, under which funding for all faculty positions that becomes vacant by virtue of departures, retirements or other attrition, is immediately removed from C|M|LAW’s budget and returned to the Provost’s Office. That funding remains with the Provost’s Office unless and until the Provost authorizes a search to fill the vacated position. C|M|LAW has not received authorization from the Provost to fill most vacated faculty positions over the last five years, but did receive authorization to fill two clinical faculty positions.

The budget reductions in FY07 through FY12 were also, in part, the result of a significant decline of subsidy support (State Share of Instruction, or SSI) received by the University from the state of Ohio. The percentage of the University operating budget funded by SSI has fallen from 36% in FY09 to just 29% in FY13. SSI funding to the University fell by approximately 15% in FY12 alone, as the state of Ohio lost federal stimulus funding. As a result, C|M|LAW was required to implement budget reductions of approximately $406,000 (3.3%) in FY12. See Appendix 58, 2011 Budget Proposal and Follow-Up.

Most recently, C|M|LAW’s fiscal circumstances have been adversely impacted by a two-year decline in applications of nearly 45%. The Fall 2011 entering class was 168 students, which fell short of the 200-student target on which the just-reduced FY12 budget was based. C|M|LAW immediately began work on a strategy to address its declining applications that resulted in the adoption of the 140 Plan in Spring 2012, which called for a permanent reduction of the target entering class from 200 to 140 students. The resulting 30% reduction in tuition revenue necessitated a revised budget for FY13 through FY15. That budget reflected FY13 reductions of approximately $800,000, and additional reductions in FY13 through FY15 of $750,000 through faculty attrition. See Appendix 10, The 140 Plan: Towards a Smaller and Stronger Law School.

For Fall 2013 it is not clear whether we will be able to maintain our current LSAT numbers (median, 25th percentile and 75th percentile) given a projected decline in enrollment. Applications currently are down by over 30%. Any decline in entering LSAT numbers will have a deleterious effect on the law school’s bar passage rates and reverse the substantial progress made in that regard over the last decade. University President Berkman has directed the law school to adhere to the 140 Plan and not deviate below an entering class of 140 students, even if this means accepting students with lower entering credentials. Accepting fewer than 140 students would likely trigger immediate budget cuts, in addition to those contemplated by the 140 Plan.

B. University Budget

CSU receives operating revenues from three sources: the state subsidy appropriated by the Ohio General Assembly and distributed by the Ohio Board of Regents’ funding formula, student tuition and fees, and other sources of revenues such as technology fees, other miscellaneous fees, interest income and indirect cost recoveries. 29% of CSU’s FY13 Operating Budget is funded from the state subsidy. In comparison, state subsidy funded 36% of the FY09 Operating Budget, 38% of the FY10’s, 35% of FY11’s, and 29% of FY12’s. In absolute dollars, the FY13 subsidy is approximately $.343 million lower than the subsidy received in FY12.

68% of CSU’s FY13 Operating Budget is funded through tuition and student fees. There has been an average annual increase of 3.75% in the University’s total enrollment over the past 3 years with the majority of the growth coming in undergraduate enrollment. Undergraduate tuition has increased an average of 3.5% per year for the period FY10-FY13, the cap set by the Ohio General Assembly. While no legislative cap is set for the annual percentage increase for graduate and law tuition, the University maintained a 3.5% increase for graduate tuition and authorized a 9.5% tuition increase for law in FY13. Tuition generated for FY12 was $140.7 million dollars. The FY13 budget estimates tuition revenue at $143.4 million. For FY13, the Board of Trustees approved a $265.6 million budget for the entire University, which includes a $219.5 million allocation for operations of the academic and administrative support sectors of the University.

In FY07 the University issued $42.1 million Series A bond to fund the construction of a new Student Center and Series B bond in the amount of $9.2 million to fund the construction of a new building to house the College of Education and Human Services. In September 2011 the University issued Series 2011 Bond to finance a portion of the costs of public improvements identified as the North Campus Neighborhood. During Summer 2012 the University issued Series 2012 General Receipts Bonds in the amount of $152 million. The proceeds of the bonds will be used to (1) cover the costs of constructing a new facility advancing the University’s growing role in health sciences and expand its alliance with Northeast Ohio Medical University (NEOMED); (2) refund portions of the Series 2003A Bonds, Series 2004 Bond and Series 2008 Bonds; and (3) pay costs relating to the issuance of the Series 2012 Bond.

The University’s bonds are rated “A+” by Standard & Poor’s. According to Plante & Moran, “The University’s capacity to meet its financial obligations is considered strong...” See Appendix 96, Plante & Moran Audited Financial Statement (2012 & 2011).

In their most recent audit, Plante & Moran noted the University continues to face significant cost pressures in the future from the declining state support. For FY13, it appears that, barring unforeseen events, CSU should receive its expected FY13 allocation of subsidy from the state.
C. College of Law Budgeting Process

The budgeting process of C|M|LAW begins in the Spring preceding the fiscal year that commences July 1. The budget timeline, as well as the budget itself, is dependent on the health of the state budget, the budget of the University and its other units, projected enrollment, and the expected subsidy and tuition levels.\(^{45}\)

The first stage begins when the Provost’s office provides C|M|LAW with a pool for salary increases for faculty. The Dean, after receiving year-end reports from the faculty and meeting with all faculty members individually, submits across the board and merit increase recommendations to the Provost. In FY13 CSU implemented across the board and merit \(^{45}\)Within the University, the President has implemented a new budget approach that has three components. First, beginning Spring 2012 the Provost implemented an instructional resource model for allocating faculty positions among colleges. Under this system, all faculty vacancies are controlled by the Provost’s office and reallocated each year based on recommendations generated through a complex 100-point scoring system focused several criteria. Fifty-five of the 100 points rely heavily on factors that disfavor the Law School, including faculty-to-student credit hours, and external metrics that either do not evaluate law programs or evaluate them incompletely. The Provost retains discretion to depart from the recommendations generated by this system, but the system is designed to ensure transparency and strategic consistency in allocating faculty resources across the University. It also is explicitly designed to shift resources over time from underperforming to higher performing colleges as measured by the metrics reflected in the scores.

Second, then-Provost Mearns recommended a new Financial Incentive Model to replace the existing college-based budgeting model. The new model is now in place. This model separates the entire University budget into three sectors, Academic Units (the individual colleges and the School of Nursing); Academic Support Units (Provost, Vice-Provosts, Main Library and the VP for Research and Graduate College); and University Support Units (everything else). Rather than distributing the cost of centralized functions across colleges, the model makes four recommendations for distributing funds remaining at the end of each fiscal year. First, it recommends establishing a $1.5M strategic initiative fund distributed in a competitive proposal process. Second, it recommends returning 100% of “carryover” funds to individual colleges in years where the University does not run a budget deficit. Third, it creates a formula for distributing year-end surpluses in instructional fee revenue based on three criteria: operating margin, enrollment growth and degree completion. Fourth, it creates a pilot program to create incentives for Summer teaching by permitting individual colleges to retain 50% of any total increase over a rolling five-year average in Summer-teaching revenues. The Law School could potentially benefit from the recommendation to return 100% of carryover because in previous years the University has swept some or all carryover surpluses, but this will depend on the University meeting its budget, which it did not this past fiscal year, resulting in the loss of most carryover for colleges. Under the formula for redistributing instructional fee surpluses, the Law School is unlikely to receive a share of any surplus for the foreseeable future based on historical budget patterns and because the decision to reduce the class size both reduces operating margin for the Law School and obviously decreases enrollment—two of the three factors the model uses.

Third, Interim Provost Walker announced that he plans to conduct a comprehensive program prioritization process designed to identify colleges and programs deserving increased funding and others that should have their funding reduced and possibly close. The President rejected a recent proposal from an ad-hoc task force detailing how that process would proceed, and so the Law School does not yet know what criteria the Provost will use in this process. The Interim Provost has not yet provided detailed information on how the administration will implement prioritization.
increases for staff as well. The percentage increases are controlled by the several union contracts. Non-bargaining staff raises parallel those accorded unionized employees.

Subsequently, during Spring the University Budget Office forwards a target budget figure for the new fiscal year, based on last year’s base (including line items such as admissions, postage, supplies, etc.) plus raises, promotions, fringe benefit increases, and financial aid increases, but rarely for new programs and other needs. The figures are then verified by C|M|LAW’s Budget Director.

The Law Library Director monitors the library’s own budget and informs C|M|LAW’s Budget Director regarding changes to be made to the line item budget. The Budget Director then reviews the line item budgets for the rest of C|M|LAW, incorporates the library portion, and finalizes the budget process.

After C|M|LAW’s line item budget is submitted, the Provost’s Office reviews it and works with the Dean and the Budget Director to resolve any questions or problems. The projected law school budget is then incorporated into the University Budget, which is usually approved by the Board of Trustees in late May or early June in order to be in place by July 1.

The actual expenditures by C|M|LAW of the hard line items in the approved projected budget are termed the “Expense Budget.” C|M|LAW strives to keep its Expense Budget at or below the University-approved projected budget.

C|M|LAW pays for additional programs and needs or supplements hard line-items with incidental income, such as seat deposit fees, and with soft money from gifts and endowment income.

D. Income from Tuition and Subsidy

Income for C|M|LAW, as well as for the University, is derived primarily from enrollment in the form of tuition and state subsidy.

Since the last inspection, C|M|LAW’s operating budget increased from $12.7 million in FY07 to $14 million in FY09 and has decreased to $13 million in FY13. Tuition for in- and out-of-state residents increased over the last seven years. For in-state students tuition increased from $16,478 in FY07 to $21,749 in FY13 (an increase of 24%); for out-of-state students it increased from $22,608 to $29,817 (an increase of 32%).

Generally speaking, the increase in

46 Faculty and staff believe that maintaining an affordable tuition is one of C|M|LAW’s strengths. See Appendices 1A and 1B, Faculty Survey Results Charts and Graphs and Staff Survey Results Charts and Graphs. While our tuition is the lowest in the state for in- and out-of-state students, we need to be mindful of how increases affect the ability of well-qualified students to attend C|M|LAW.

47 In 2004 we instituted a 40% discount on tuition for out-of-state residents based on the theory that a lower tuition would attract more students. This did not happen—our percentage of out-of-state applicants and admitted tuition reflects the change in the financing of higher education in Ohio. In FY07 the state subsidy proportion of the instruction costs in higher education in Ohio was approximately 35% of the total, while tuition constituted approximately 59%. Today, the state subsidy proportion is 29% and the tuition is approximately 68%.

To obtain University approval of the 140 Plan, C|M|LAW’s substantial budget reduction was accompanied by a 9.5% increase in tuition in each of FY13, FY14 and FY15. When these tuition increases are fully phased in, in-state tuition will have risen to $24,092 per year, but a corresponding increase in C|M|LAW’s scholarship budget will result in the average in-state student paying roughly $15,660 in tuition per year. It is important to note that in determining how much tuition should be increased under the 140 Plan, C|M|LAW’s administration calculated the total discounted cost of attendance (including tuition and fees, room, board and transportation) over three years at various tuition levels, estimated the percentage of that cost financed by students through school loans to determine total indebtedness at graduation, and determined the resulting monthly payments on that debt. The proposed tuition increase was then capped at a percentage that would keep total student law school indebtedness under $100,000 (through FY15).

C|M|LAW receives a small amount of supplemental income from incidental fees and other various sources. In FY08, we eliminated the application fee which reduced the school’s supplemental income by at least $50,000. In FY12 the college collected $33,360 in incidental fees, using approximately 60% to cover the graduation ceremony costs. The University collected $97,659 in Technology Fees from law schools students and transferred $85,000 to us for technology improvements. C|M|LAW student organizations received 29% of the $393,807 in student fees collected from law school students.

E. Income from Gifts

In FY12 as part of an overall restructuring of the Advancement office and for improved clarity when reporting out the law school’s annual attainment, the Director and Development Associate created a new gift structure, where endowment and potential endowment funds are tracked separately from annual and operating funds. This separation allows the Dean and the Advancement Director to better identify trends in giving, without having the College’s annual attainment swayed by large endowment or estate gifts. In the totals described below, endowed (which includes potential endowment) and annual, operating funds are reported separately, unless otherwise indicated.

In FY05, C|M|LAW received a $5 million pledge from the Bert L. Wolstein Fund for the renovation of the law building, and a second pledge of $1.25 million to create the Bert L. and Iris S. Wolstein Endowed Scholarship Fund. The latter pledge was a matching challenge of up to $1.25 million: Iris Wolstein matched gifts to the Scholarship Fund from alumni and friends, up students increased but students who enrolled remained at about 25%. In addition our out-of-state tuition was significantly lower that other Ohio law schools. In FY12 we eliminated the out-of-state discount.

to $1.25 million. At the time the Wolstein gift was the largest in the University’s history and remains the largest gift in the Law school's history. As part of the Wolstein Challenge, to raise an additional $1.25 million in support of the scholarship fund, a number of individuals, law firms, and other organizations made multi-year pledges, with the majority of pledges ending in FY10 or FY11. Because of the size of the Wolstein pledge payments, the following totals exclude those pledge payments, to provide a more accurate account of the overall totals.

Since FY07 annual operating giving increased dramatically, while endowed and potential endowed giving has decreased, mostly due to the Wolstein Scholarship matching pledges being fulfilled. Excluding the Wolstein’s individual commitment, since FY 2007, the annual amount of total gifts (both endowment and annual fund) to the Law school decreased by 27% from $986,941 (FY07) to $713,916 (FY12). For endowment gifts only, in FY07, $729,120 was raised and in FY12, $128,507 was raised, a decrease of 82%. The majority of these decreases are due to the fulfillment of individuals’, law firms’, and other organization’s multi-year pledges in FY10 and FY11. By comparison, during this same period, gifts to the annual, operating funds increased by 318% from $140,004 (FY07) to $585,409 (FY12). Because annual, operating dollars are expended in the year received and, typically, are not restricted, this growth is particularly beneficial to the College.

Concerning donors, the percent of alumni giving to C|M|LAW has remained relatively static, on average. In FY07, 742 donors made a gift to the college and in FY12, 975 gave, an increase of 31% or 233 donors. When considering overall alumni participation, in FY07, participation was 7.5%, while it was 9.5% in FY12, a gain of 2%. Alumni participation varies significantly over time, though; during the five years between FY07 and FY12, alumni donors varied from the FY07 low to a high of 1,045 in FY09. On average, 923 alumni made gifts to C|M|LAW from FY07-FY12.

Presently, C|M|LAW has 10,241 living alumni. In FY12, 975 alumni made gifts to the college, while 992 made gifts in FY11 (a decrease of 1.7%). In FY12, 1352 donors made a gift, which includes alumni and friends, while in FY11, 1272 donors gave (an increase of 6%). Through segmentation, targeted solicitations, and volunteer engagement, the college seeks to see our alumni participation percentage increase over the next seven years.

Since FY07, the law school has engaged in two notable fundraising campaigns: 1) construction of the Trial Courtroom, and 2) raising support for the Fund for Excellence. Fundraising for the Trial Courtroom, a state-of-the-art trial courtroom, began in FY09 and was completed in FY11, with over $580,000 in new gifts raised for the project. The Trial Courtroom’s construction was completed in Spring 2011, and it is now available for students and invited guests to use. Then-Dean Mearns created the Fund for Excellence in FY09 with the goal of raising $1 million in annual fund dollars to support projects that raise the national profile of the Law school. The target completion date was June 30, 2012. Dean Boise made the Fund a priority upon the commencement of his tenure as dean, and raised over $600,000 in 2011-12, completing the Fund campaign goal of $1 million as of September 15, 2012.
We also receive significant support for key initiatives from the Cleveland-Marshall Fund, an endowed fund that is independent of the University endowment. These include the Visiting Scholar Program, conference support for faculty to attend and host conferences, faculty research support, professional development for faculty and staff, faculty Summer research grants, and faculty library support. As of June 30, 2012, the value of the Cleveland-Marshall Fund was $4,391,182 and the spendable income for FY12 was $219,822.

In FY12, Dean Boise identified scholarship support as a continuing priority and has raised over $250,000 in new scholarship dollars. In FY13 Dean Boise identified construction of the Solo Practice Incubator (see Chapter VII.D, The Law Library Building), a suite of law offices available for rent to recent graduates of C|M|LAW beginning in November 2013, as a fundraising priority for the Advancement office. The Director of Advancement and the Dean are presently engaged in raising $1.5 million for this project from a targeted pool of donors.

F. Expenses

Instructional costs take up the largest share of C|M|LAW’s expense budget. For convenience in categorization, the 2012 site evaluation for the ABA totals Instructional Salaries including Summer salaries at $4,617,166. Administrative and Student Service Salaries total $2,035,005. Library, $926,296, and other salaries (mainly instructional), $162,260. Fringe benefits were $2,489,850. Thus, total personnel costs were $10,230,577. Library operations were $1,063,165, other Law school expenses (supplies, travel, speakers, etc.) were $1,200,056, and financial aid was $1,809,773.

We are a smaller faculty than we were in FY07. A comparison, in current dollars, shows that between FY07 and FY12 Instructional Salaries decreased by $278,396 or a loss of 5.69%. Administrative and Student Service Salaries decreased by $227,319 or a loss of 10.0%. Library and other Salaries decreased $228,255, or a loss of 17.3%. Fringe benefits decreased by $82,970, or a loss of 3.2%. Library operations increased by $2,633 or 0.25%. Other Law school expenses (supplies, travel, speakers, etc.) increased by $211,753, or an increase of 21.4%. Financial aid, on the other hand, has grown by $354,011, or an increase of 24.3%. This increase is also due to increase of tuition.

In terms of proportion of the total budget since FY07, Instructional Salaries dropped by 3%, Administrative Salaries increased by 1%, and Fringes remained the same. Financial Aid rose by 4%. The other items dropped by 2% since FY07.

In meeting the changing needs of C|M|LAW prior to FY08, we were able to retain its vacancy savings giving the Dean more flexibility in supporting or initiating new programs. Vacancy savings were routed to support, among other things, adjunct and emeritus faculty, Summer teaching, research assistants, the library, student services, security, classroom renovation, and technology replacements. Beginning FY08, vacancy savings from faculty positions are under the scrutiny of the Provost Office but savings from administrative positions may be used to support instructional and operational needs. Carryover policies change from year to year. The amount is determined by the Provost Office. For FY12 the Interim Provost did not authorize the carryover to be transferred back to the Law School. Carryover is another avenue of resources that the law school uses to cover instructional and operational needs.

G. Law School Finances and University Support Strengths and Weaknesses

Strengths

1. Over the last year, C|M|LAW has reorganized its advancement and development functions and is well-positioned to convert strong positive alumni sentiment into an increasing annual fund.

2. C|M|LAW’s historically low tuition has permitted raising of revenue through tuition increases without making a legal education cost-prohibitive.

Weaknesses

1. Current and future budget reductions required in connection with the 140 Plan make it challenging for C|M|LAW to continue to provide the same quality of legal education due to the smaller size of the faculty.

2. As part of a public University, C|M|LAW will face increasing budgetary pressures as both direct and indirect state and federal subsidies for higher education continue to decline.

3. C|M|LAW must increasingly rely on alumni and other contributions in order to continue to provide a high-quality legal education.

4. Our scholarship dollars continue to be insufficient especially in comparison to other Ohio law schools. (Also listed under Chapter V, Student Weaknesses.)

5. C|M|LAW is challenged in its ability to engage in budget planning across fiscal years because of uncertainty in the University’s budgeting process and the size of our future 1L classes.
X. Facilities

Since 2007, the law school has undergone extensive renovations that have transformed the look, feel, and accessibility of the institution. We created a permanent home for our clinics, modernized our moot courtroom, built a state-of-the-art trial courtroom, refurbished common areas and Student Services, and expanded our nascent art collection throughout the law school. Changes at the law school have occurred at the same time as the transformation of the University. Since 2007 the University has built a new Student Center and renovated the adjoining Main Plaza, built a complex of new dorms for undergraduates (Euclid Commons), a new administration building, new Recreation Center, a new building for the College of Education (Julka Hall), two garages, refurbished two other administration buildings (Parker Hannifin and Fenn Tower), and created a new art center, The Allen Theatre Complex in collaboration with Playhouse Square. The law school buildings are an integral part of the new look of the University campus.

In Spring 2008 we completed an $8.8 million renovation project that improved the educational as well as daily experience of the law school for our students, faculty, and staff. We created new offices and work areas for our law clinics, new seminar rooms, a new suite of rooms for our student organizations, a new faculty presentation room, a new main conference room, and a dramatic new entrance on the corner of East 18th Street and Euclid Avenue. The new entrance physically represents our connection to the University and to Cleveland—we are a part of the community.

The new clinic space was long in coming but one with which we, our students, and our clinic clients, are quite pleased. Three of our in-house clinics are located in a spacious, self-contained suite occupying approximately 4,460 square feet. There are seven faculty offices, three meeting/deposition rooms, a resource room, a project room, a work area for support staff and a client waiting area. There is also an open work area for students where students may use their own laptop, or one of the laptops or desktops we provide—all of which share a 49 Construction as of Fall 2012 includes the North Campus Project which is leasing land to a real estate company to build and lease apartments and retail space, the demolition of an old residence hall in order to build a Center for Innovations in Health Professions, and renovation of a building across from the law school that will house some administrative departments as well as be a temporary home for NEOMED (Northeast Ohio Medical School).

50 The renovation was made possible by a $5 million gift from Mrs. Iris Wolstein, in honor of her husband Bert L. Wolstein, as well as $3.8 million from the University. As part of the renovation, the University reconfigured the second floor walkway between the law school and the Music and Communication Building. This part of the project meant that the law school gave up space on the second floor that had once been part of the law school library, and since 1997 had been classrooms shared by the law school and the University. The loss of classrooms has not had any negative effect on the education our students receive.

51 The inadequacy of our clinic space had been noted in the two prior ABA site evaluations. In March 2008 the ABA found we demonstrated compliance with Standard 701, subject to submitting a final report regarding completion, occupation, and use of the new clinic space. It appears we did not submit a final report, nor was it raised again by the ABA.
printer. The suite has computers for students to use and audio and video recording capabilities. There is one dedicated public entrance to the suite and one internal entrance.

The 2007-08 renovation also included our Moot Courtroom. We made the well of the courtroom wheelchair accessible by adding a ramp and wheelchair lift. We installed a new sound system and added a retractable screen for visual presentations. We also added the ability to record all of our public lectures and conferences so that we can immediately post them on our web site for others to view. Finally, we added windows which brighten the room and exemplify our connection to the city. The Moot Courtroom is used extensively by faculty and students for speakers and symposia.

In 2011 we completed the construction of a technologically state-of-the-art trial courtroom on the ground floor of the law school. The courtroom is a unique facility in downtown Cleveland that provides our students, as well as lawyers and judges, the opportunity to learn and hone litigation skills. The courtroom is about 2,000 square feet. It has a Judge’s bench and chambers, witness stand, IT manager/bailiff and court reporter stations, two counsel tables, a main podium for presenting evidence electronically and a movable podium, a twelve seat jury box, jury deliberation room, and gallery. The courtroom has state-of-the-art technology throughout. Students can learn to present still and video evidence that jurors and the Judge will see on monitors as well as a large moveable LCD screen. The Judge and Bailiff control the courtroom technology through an AV control system. Observers in the gallery may view the evidence as well on screens mounted on the side walls. Jurors may review evidence on a LCD screen in the deliberation room. Cameras that pan, zoom, and tilt may be used to digitally record as well as live stream proceedings in the courtroom and the jury deliberation room.

The trial courtroom is used in a variety of way. Faculty teaching Trial Advocacy and Evidence use the courtroom to have students practice trial skills. Students use the courtroom to prepare for moot court appellate and trial competitions, and to work with high school mock trial teams.\footnote{We have not yet realized the full use of the courtroom, especially by lawyers and judges. This is in large part due to our own staffing limitations.}

In addition to these major renovation and construction projects, we have made numerous other improvements to the law school. On the ground floor entrances to the law school and the atrium level we added digital directories. We painted and installed new furniture in the atrium, the legal writing conference room and common area, the student lounge, the staff lounge, and the main secretarial area; painted and installed new lockers in the student locker room; remodeled two classrooms (207 and 208); painted and replaced all of the chairs in the classrooms; added seating for students in faculty hallways by moving file cabinets that had lined the hallways into faculty offices or readily accessible storage rooms; and renovated bathrooms on the ground, first and second floors. In the student lounge we also added a food preparation area and a location for the SBA to sell C|M|LAW clothing.
All of the classrooms have technology accessible for faculty and students. Every classroom is electrified so that students may use laptops. Most of the classrooms have smart podiums for faculty, or the ability to connect laptops to the internet and an LCD screen. See Section XYZ.

The configuration of most classrooms is problematic—for different reasons. In some rooms the location of the technology makes it difficult to use. In other rooms the acoustics, lighting, and/or placement of the podiums often get in the way of being able to engage in the most effective teaching and learning.

In the Student Services area, between 2007 and 2010, we added two new reception areas in the front for Admissions and the Office of Career Planning, three staff offices for our Administrative Coordinator and Bar Preparation, and recarpeted the entire space. In January 2013 we reconfigured the front area of Student Services to make it more user-friendly by adding a large screen for displaying announcements about CSU and the law school, adding privacy screens and installing better signage, and we reconfigured parts of the back of Student Services to add, among other changes, a better seating area for students.

Unfortunately, the changes to the Student Services area have been piece-meal. Student Services is still not configured in a way that makes the best use of the space. For example, we do not have individual rooms that we can use for those students needing ADA accommodations for exams. Instead we must use Library study rooms. This places a premium on study space for our students at the time they most need study rooms—during exams. In addition, we have to use the Library study rooms as interview rooms for employers. And, we do not have separate rooms for Teaching Assistants to meet with students—they must sit at open tables, which is not the most conducive to learning.

In the Library we turned a copy room into a student lounge and recarpeted the first floor. See Chapter VII, Information Resources—Law Library, Section D, The Law Library Building. We also added digital signage outside of the library that allows us to provide up to date information about the library hours and events and faculty and student publications.

Finally, we greatly expanded our art collection. Virtually every wall in the law school has an original work of art—oil paintings, photographs, quilting, and prints. This is the result of diligent and creative work by a committee of faculty and staff.

The University has also renovated key infrastructure at the law school. In 2007 the University installed a new roof. In 2008 and 2010 the University overhauled the HVAC system throughout the law school (except the Library). Despite the reworking of the HVAC, maintaining appropriate temperatures remain uneven throughout the building. Most recently, in 2012 the University upgraded the wireless system throughout the campus.
In the past six years the University has made significant improvements in security for the law school, but security concerns remain. Card access is now required when the law school building is closed. In 2010, in response to student concerns, we made the bathrooms on the ground level that are closest to the Euclid Avenue entrance accessible only with CSU ID cards. As a public University and law school, we value our access to the public. It can, however, be challenging or frightening at times for students, faculty, and staff. This is especially true in the evening prior to the building being closed.

The law school anticipates opening a Solo Practice Incubator Fall 2013. This will be a 3450 square foot suite of law offices on the Atrium level of the Library. The suite will include a lobby, three conference rooms, fifteen offices, a break room and file/storage room. See Appendix 95, Solo Incubator Floor Plan. Although the Library is giving up space for this endeavor, the build-out of the space includes adding five study rooms for students. Practitioners and clients will access the suite through an outside entrance.

A. Facilities Strengths and Weaknesses

Strengths

1. The downtown location of the University and college of law provides our students with access to government offices, judicial chambers and courtrooms, businesses, and private law firms; in turn lawyers and judges are a welcome part of our law school on a daily basis.

2. The recent renovations—including a new entrance on Euclid Avenue, new clinic space, and better areas for students to gather—have made the law school a more inviting and vibrant building.

3. The law library provides students with quiet, accessible, and technologically up-to-date space for individual and group study.

4. The refurbished Moot Courtroom is a well-used space for faculty and students sponsored speakers and symposia.

5. The new technologically state of the art trial courtroom is a unique facility in downtown Cleveland that gives out students the opportunity to learn and hone litigation skills.

6. Classrooms have current technology for use by faculty and students.

Weaknesses

1. We have insufficient security protections throughout the law school and library.

2. We lack a cohesive plan for making the best use of the Student Services area.
3. The physical configuration of most classrooms often gets in the way of effective pedagogy.

Notes

- a The adjusted sample size does not include students with non-deliverable e-mail addresses and students who were ineligible (e.g. no longer enrolled).
- b Number of respondents divided by adjusted sample size. Response rates by class based on school-reported information (if available). Students for whom this information was not provided are included in the overall response rates, but not class response rates.
- c Within student characteristics, student-reported class level was used when school-reported information was not available. Students for whom class level is unknown are not reported in the 'All' columns.
- d Comparative data for LSSSE 2012 schools selected by your institution. Comparison group does not include respondents from your law school.
- e Comparative data for LSSSE 2012 schools of similar population size (Less than 500, 500-900, or More than 900) based on adjusted sample size (see note a). Comparison group does not include respondents from your law school.
- f Comparative data for LSSSE 2012 schools of similar affiliation (Public, Private Religiously Affiliated, or Private Not Religiously Affiliated). Comparison group does not include respondents from your law school.

LSSSE Student Comments 2012
Organized by year

1
I feel that the school should describe the grading curve to incoming students.

2
Torts needs an AEP session. Also, I strongly believe that AEP should be open to everyone. Currently it is invitation only- I find this discriminatory.

There seems to be a general disconnect between the interests of students and the interests of the faculty and administration here. Students want to learn and get jobs; faculty want to get tenure and be published. There are many great teachers, but the incentive is not to be a great teacher. For example, we had a pretty bad teacher last semester, but he'll still be around next year. If I did some of the things that he did in my job as an engineer, I would have been fired 10 times over (and escorted out of the building). Where's the accountability? We took surveys, and I'm certain his average score would have been 1-2 out of 5, and yet he can still teach? Unbelievable, especially in light of budget issues. Also, a lot of these survey questions were pointless and would tell you nothing about law school experience, or help make positive changes. For example, it doesn't matter if my faculty "cares about me as an individual"! I'm here to learn, they're here to teach. If they can teach well, that shows they care. This isn't 1st grade, and even then I would be suspect of any teacher who "cared" more about students feelings than about their education (which is what that question implies). If someone isn't cut out to be a teacher, but is a really nice person, it isn't really helping me much is it? Some of the other questions were silly as well, and seemed to be pushing an agenda more than really trying to find out if I'm engaged in the school or if the school is meeting my needs. I'd be a whole lot better off with WiFi that lets me actually get on the internet than a lot of what was asked :) Finally, we have a lot of classes offered that might be interesting to faculty, but that don't reflect the needs of students. There are many classes on "diversity" issues (I guess that's the current legal fad in academia?), but almost none on IP law (just 2 that I can tell). I'm biased since that's what I plan on going into, but that's a HUGE area of law that is growing and actually hiring, and we aren't trying to prepare students for it.

I would like to make a comment that I hope will be taken seriously. The Academic Support webpage reads: “Cleveland-Marshall's Academic Support Programs help students develop the skills needed to succeed in law school... Academic Support uses diverse teaching methods including small group discussions...” (http://preview.tinyurl.com/6lsl98). The idea of a small group program is very appealing to a person applying to law school. In fact, this was a factor in my decision of applying to Cleveland Marshall. Nowhere in the statement does it say a select group of students will be allowed into these small group discussions. There is no mention of a selection process. There is no mention of an actual group anywhere on the webpage other than this statement. Without such a statement it seems that these group discussions are opened to all who seek them. However, I have found this not to be the case. The small group program at Cleveland Marshall is deceptive to those who apply to Cleveland Marshall. I have sought access to the small group sessions. My grades are not poor, however I wished to improve. Upon talking to members of the AEP program I have found resistance in joining these programs. The reasoning, as I understand it, is that the groups need to be kept small to be effective and therefore only certain students will be allowed to join. Still, a simple note of the exclusivity regarding these small groups would banish any thoughts that the program is open to all who seek it. To have this statement without such a caveat is deceptive and dishonorable. Additionally, the small group program at Cleveland Marshall has no transparency. As previously mentioned, there is no information on the Cleveland Marshall website other than that it exists. Apparently, not all students are able to join this privileged group. Rumors have swirled that this is for students who were more likely to receive lower grades without its help and were invited. That sounds like a worthy goal; to help those students learn law and live justice when they would otherwise be at a disadvantage. However, these are only rumors and speculation. There is no information on the number of groups or the number of people invited/allowed to join them. There is no information on if these groups change from semester to semester based on performance and need. Students may need help or likely need help in the first semester but no longer need them as much as others. To not base admission into the program on need would be perpetuating favoritism for a small group at the expense of others who may struggle in later semesters. There is no information regarding a selection process. Students can only speculate if grades, LSAT scores, socio-economic status, race, color, national origin, religion, sex, familial status, or handicap are taken into account. For all the students know this selection process is based on if the person wears white the day after Labor Day! Without making this process transparent it leads questions to wonder if certain students are arbitrarily favored while all pay the same tuition. It is simply absurd that there is no information on this. Students who attend these programs do not have to be embarrassed by more transparency. My goal in advocating transparency here is not to have the students in these programs have their names in lights for all to see. My goal is simply for the selection process to be easily found and understood by students. This would not only alleviate concerns of this process but give credibility to the idea that Cleveland Marshall is open and honest with prospective and current students. In conclusion, the current state of the small group program is deceptive and lacks transparency. It is easy to understand that when students see that small groups are available they would assume that they are open to all students. Moreover, when an institution is not transparent regarding a selection process it often

5 I think the faculty at Cleveland Marshall are extremely supportive.

6 I wished there were more scholarship opportunities available, or that the ones offered would not be restricted to only the top of the class.

7 I enjoy attending school here, but there are some aspects of this school which are unacceptable. For example, the fact that there was tutoring program ran for individuals who were selected to participate and any other individual who wanted help was denied the opportunity to attend the sessions. Individuals not invited to the group were told just to go ask the TA during their office hours what was taught even though very few people attended the TA study sessions. The lack of transparency in how people were selected for these groups angered me and many of my colleagues. I also do not feel that I would be able to give a donation to this school seeing how fiscally irresponsible they are with financing. Money is wasted on a daily basis by having an extra sheet of paper printed out every time a print job is sent to the printer. Also, the way SBA spends funds is fiscally irresponsible. The computer lab also is a disappointment with half of the computer's no longer turning on or those that do operate are very slow. The IT staff is always in their office, but you never see them fixing any of the computers of trying to determine what is wrong with them. Also, the inability to wirelessly print stuff to the printers in the computer lab is outdated. A new system should be put in place in which you can print wirelessly to the printers and then swipe your ID card to retrieve the print job. Overall my experience has been okay at CM law, but there are many ways in which this school could improve.

I have been very disappointed with my overall experience at C|M. One of my concerns is about safety; I think it is inappropriate to have homeless men walking around the library, without anyone around to stop it. The IT people do not perform regular maintenance on the computers in the Law Library computer lab. The e-mail system is slow and inefficient and I do everything possible to not use it. The majority of the faculty I have encountered are completely disrespectful of students. The small study sessions for first-year classes should be open to more students. There is no transparency between the administration and students. Faculty and administrators are unapproachable. Faculty members are not available even during their office hours. SBA mainly plans parties, rather than representing the students' interests and there are no established forums or mechanisms for students to express their concerns. Student feedback is never requested and there are no updates for students about the direction of C|M Law or future plans. In addition, I think it's ridiculous that students receive so many e-mails on a daily basis. Some sort of newsletter format once a day with all the messages from various departments would fix that problem. I have been very disappointed in my experience with C|M and had high expectations that I have realized will never be met by this institution.

2L student comments

I would like to know exactly where the tuition money goes. Why is law school so expensive?

The academic excellence program is an exceptional resource. The computer lab is satisfactory, but could use improvement. The computers are too slow and the keyboards are dirty. The LCOP program is wonderful.
Some professors do not seem to understand the other demands (work, children, other family member dependants) that night students try to balance. Oftentimes, they give us assignments with a day or less notice which is nearly impossible for us to complete given our other responsibilities (most of us have full-time jobs and cant do homework during the day). It is as though they dont respect us or our time which can be disheartening.

Cleveland-Marshall needs to seriously reconsider its motto considering the criminals they not only allow attend the school, but provide financial backing in that pursuit. This is both unethical and demoralizing to those students who take the responsibilities of being an ethical lawyer seriously. With the current status of the convicted felons attending this school, numerous students have regretted choosing to attend Marshall.

This is a great school. Biggest strength is Office of Career Planning. The programs they put on are amazing and all students should be required--or more strongly encouraged--to attend.

In the credits per semester section, one is unable to give notice of half-credits taken. I was/am actually enrolled in 15.5 credits during each semester, so I rounded one up and one down to identify the correct total number of credits for this year.

The school could work on course scheduling as it seems that many bar courses and required courses are scheduled exclusively at night, which is not convenient for those wishing to attend classes during the day.

Overall, I enjoy being a student at CSU and think that I am recieving a quality education, however, I do think that it would be a better law school experience if more of an effort was made to include evening students. Many students work full time and cannot join organizations because all meetings are held at noon. Maybe some meetings could be held at 5pm to allow evening students to attend. Same thing holds true for speakers. The Student Services Center is awful - they only accept checks, they & open during the most inconvenient hours. I want to get my class supplements before class starts and when they are only open until 5pm it is very hard to do without taking time off work. Most professors only have office hours during the day time. If a professor is teaching an evening class they should have some office hours in the evening, or at least in the late afternoon.

I would have appreciated having an academic advisor after first year, I am not happy with the course selections I made on my own and screwed myself GPA wise. I wish I would have shelled out the $2 grand to take an LSAT prep course so I could have gotten into a better school. It would have been more beneficial to my future employment status to be in the middle of my class at a better school.
I have had some great professors, which makes up the majority of my experience at Cleveland-Marshall. I have also had professors like [deleted] who doesn't show up to class and don't teach the law that is on the bar exam, which seems to be a waste of my money and time and a huge disappointment. The school has done nothing to correct this issue, as the school has been notified of her poor performance for several years. The school also allows felons to walk the halls just weeks after release from prison, or even felons sit in class with ankle bracelets for remote monitoring, which further cheapens the value of our Cleveland-Marshall JD.

I transferred here and I have enjoyed my experience so far much better than my previous institution. It has been hard getting to know the administration but my classmates have been very welcoming.

24-hour access to the library is a must. At least open before 8a, especially since some classes start at 8a and use of the lab before class would be nice. Keep up the good work.

Cleveland-Marshall is a decent school if you want to be in Cleveland and do not want to practice in big law or secure a clerkship. Professors are either very excellent or very poor without much in between.

When I was a 1L looking for my first summer internship, I was so disgusted with the rudeness of the Career Services workers that I went back to my undergraduate institution for a resume critique and job search help. Not only was my undergrad school more helpful and more friendly, but they stated that most of their graduates that go on to CM Law come back to get their help, and that they routinely hear complaints about the CM Law Career Services office. Furthermore, I have an issue with the overall administration and feel of CM Law. Law school is challenging enough without the administration trying to turn students against one another, which is what I've experienced in my time here. This fosters unfriendly competition and cutthroat attitudes between the students, which is ridiculous considering this is a third-tier school.

I think that there are some faculty members at this school that are fantastic, are wholly supportive, and show respect for their students. There are others that assign long reading assignments and then expect us to re-read them weeks later since they have cancelled class. They show complete disregard to the life of law students, and completely revolve the class around their schedules instead of scheduled class times (i.e. have a makeup class on Saturday after the professor was on vacation for a week). Overall, I believe the faculty at CSU is very professional and would not change my decision to come here. Additionally, the career services office needs to be honest with students. A lot of us gave up careers for what we thought would be a better path for us to take. We were told that 80% of graduates got job. Although a fact, it was extremely misleading as to the amount of those were legal jobs, or even adequate jobs! I would hate to give up 3 years of income in a past career to end up somewhere that isn't as good as the job I was AND be $50,000 in debt.

The lack of use of career services is not necessarily due to a lack of time but also might be attributed to a sense of distrust or lack of belief in producing results, although the current job market might partly be to blame.

17
Overall, the greatest disappointment at this school has been the Career Services office. The fact that some students are given preferential treatment is absurd. My job is to be a student, not to learn how to kiss up to the Career Services representatives so they remember me enough to pass along my resume when employers call them personally. The Career Services office here perpetuates all of the negative stereotypes surrounding the legal profession, and frankly, I would rather scrounge along by myself that attempt to receive any further "assistance" from that office.

18
I have been very disappointed with the class scheduling each semester. Only a small percentage of the general catalog is ever offered each semester, and the Fall of 2012 has a bar course--Estates and Trusts--offered only once, in the evening. I would highly suggest better opportunities to take bar classes and more opportunities for us to enroll in the classes the school claims to offer.

19
With implementing the legislation and administrative law requirement for 1Ls, I think that there needs to be a legislative and administrative expansion in the curriculum for 2Ls and 3Ls as well. There should also be more support for jobs in administrative law in the career services department. Additionally, I personally seek professors out, and I enjoy engaging in discussion with them, but, especially as a 1L, I wish I had an academic advisor. I loved having that in my undergraduate education.

20
Do not promote an atmosphere where we compete with one another, but one where we need to compete against other schools. Our GPAs hinder us, especially in times where jobs are tough to come by, and so work on the grading scale and the arbitrariness that follows with the grading (because the faculty voted to eliminate certain appeals processes).

It's hard to rate my professors this year because one poor experience has soured my time here. Two of my professors have extreme respect for me as a person and for my time. One professor is disrespectful and has zero respect for my time. One semester she cancels half the classes and the next semester she keeps us late every class to make up for her cancellations. I work full time and spend a lot of time earning my law degree -having zero respect for students time is completely disrespectful. Unfortunately, this has made me think less of the institution that employs her.
I think the school's faculty review policy is terribly out of date. While the majority of academic staff members are great, a handful of tenured professors teach very little, but get raises for being published. And this isn't just me complaining about professors who "grade tough." My favorite professors have made me work my ass off for a B+. Please take the student evaluations more seriously.

Cleveland-Marshall has been outstanding with regard to public interest career development (resources for conferences, providing information about volunteer opportunities, summer public interest fellowships, etc.).

2
C-M's faculty is very understanding and compassionate for students. They are always available to help. Support staff are also excellent.

I came to law school from a liberal arts background and an interest generally in the big picture of society. Many of my heroes were lawyers (or had gone to law school): Thomas Jefferson, Gandhi, Franz Kafka, Theodore Roethke, and so at the completion of my undergraduate studies I thought I might as well try it, knowing that if I didn't like it I could leave after a year and do something else with my undergraduate degree. To be honest I didn't know what to really expect from law school. But over the past three years, I have come to realize that much of my initial idealism and reason for coming to law school has vanished, and it kills me. One of the first things I realized in law school is that in our system, you buy as much justice as you can afford. As I saw the crimes (fraud being the biggest) of entities like Bank of America and Wells Fargo accumulate and decimate our neighborhoods, I realized that the only way they could accomplish such acts was by finding lawyers willing to represent them. Many of these firms are well-respected, lauded even as they assist the wealthiest 1% exert an ever-increasing control over our political, economic, and legal systems. It is very frustrating to learn rules of law that are essentially constructed on a false premise (that everyone has an equal voice in making society's rules, therefore they are fair, and everyone has equal access the legal and legislative systems). It is even more frustrating to be in an environment where most other students were either apolitical or actually defenders of this flawed system. Issues of social justice are often downplayed or ignored, unless they are of the most superficial nature. Actually examining the root causes for our current societal conditions are rarely spoken of, in class or otherwise (see: Citizens United, Santa Clara Railroad). The emphasis of the student body seemed to be on partying, making connections with moneyed alumni, and landing a job defending corporations or prosecuting 'criminals'. That's not what I came to law school for, but based on my experiences attending national conferences and talking to other like-minded law students, I have gathered that it is a similar story at other schools across the country. This is not a comment against the school. I think this law school is providing good instruction. I just wish more students were less apathetic about the state of affairs in the world into which we are graduating. It is the unsolvable problem: how to cure student apathy? To that, I have no answer.

The school’s preoccupation with "community building" is counterproductive. All Sidebar does is encourage classmates to show up to class drunk. The only people I've learned anything from are adjuncts who actually practice law, to the exclusion of Professor [deleted], who should IMMEDIATELY BE TENURED. The "career planning" people avoid giving a straight answer at all costs, especially the two new workers; in fact, [deleted] has been downright rude to me because of my career ambitions. If I had to change something about this school, I'd tap into Cleveland's vibrant legal community more and get more adjunct professors teaching more classes. I would also minimize the SBA; we don't need a glorified student council to play politics and waste money on fliers for events that boil down to middle-school dances with free booze while bickering over nonsense and rewarding each other with inflated titles.

I am fortunate to graduate law school with relatively low debt. There is no such thing as over-counseling incoming students about minimizing their future financial burdens. I remember during the admission program three years ago the advice was to take the loans. Three years later, I am very happy I didn't take that advice. The student reaction every time tuition is raised is furiously blogged about on facebook and other social media websites. The outrage also results in students searching their professors' salary information on the Buckeye Institute's website in order to compare recent increases, and then, blogging about this information. While it is appreciated that Cleveland-Marshall has the lowest tuition in the state and the law school is under pressure from the university to bring in revenue, any tuition increases (particularly those more than the average 5% increase) are obviously extremely unpopular. Students get upset because the university computers the undergrads use are much nicer and function better than the computers in the law library, despite law students paying much more for tuition. Law students also get upset when, especially around finals time, the law library is crowded with undergrad students. The Office of Career Planning and librarians at the law library have been extremely helpful the past three years. Dean Boise is a good addition to the law school, and I appreciate his introduction of Side Bar. Generally, I am very satisfied with the education I received at Cleveland-Marshall.

Great law school experience so far!

7
The faculty and staff members I work with on a weekly basis are amazing, but others are aloof. Accounting for human nature, it would be nice if there was a little more balance and sincerity without the need to develop a personal on-on-one relationship.

I can think of only one professor who created a very negative experience and learning environment for the students during my first year. Although students complained, the school did not take action. This was extremely disappointing, to the point where I wish to make a note of it here. It has consequently lowered the school's (and the faculty's) overall scores in my survey responses.

Your moot court program is one of the few programs that is recognized nationally, every year. Show a little support. I figure I could put a list a mile long here of suggestions, but now that I'm going to be leaving, that is the one true thing I worry about for this school moving forward. It appears as though the current admin. has other areas of interest. Your current ideas are nice and all, but that moot court program has a history of excellence in this school in large part because of the institutional support of past administrations. Also, with the current advisors, I've learned more from them in the 6 months I worked on my problem than I did in my entire 3 years of law school combined about how to be a lawyer. So they deserve whatever you give them and more.

10
It is hard to take these types of surveys because they are so broad. Some of the faculty are great while other faculty are terrible. I hate to give a bad overall rating because of the few that are great.

I have had a very positive experience at Cleveland-Marshall and I truly believe I made the most sensible decision when I chose to enroll here, even though I had several other options (including admission and at least some scholarship money to every other law school in Ohio). I point that out not to self-promote, but to show that there was plenty of room for error on my part. And thankfully, I definitely made a good choice. I received an excellent practical education, participated in a Clinic, and had the pleasure of working directly with and for my favorite first-year professor during my latter two years of school. Most importantly, the school gave me the skills I needed to secure a full-time job after graduation. My biggest complaint about the school is that sometimes, it simply doesn't "sweat the 'small' stuff." The school's focus on giving students a practical education is admirable, and it follows through on that goal. But there are perennial student complaints that seem to go unaddressed or even unacknowledged. Two particular areas warrant further explanation. First, the quality and speed of Internet access throughout the building is woeful and has gone unaddressed for at least the 3 years I've spent here. I have some past experience in computing and networking, and there is simply no good practical or economic reason why this problem has persisted despite copious student complaints over the years. Good Internet service is both available and reasonably priced in major metropolitan areas like Cleveland, and it was frustrating to feel these complaints routinely fell on deaf ears. This problem needs to be addressed as legal research and law practice moves increasingly online (in the latter category, through the use of cloud computing, online practice management software, and the like). Second, the perceived lack of accountability for professors who habitually turn in very late grades and cancel multiple classes per semester denigrates the respect for both the school and the mostly excellent professors who do not shirk their obligations. Whether this is an unfortunate byproduct of the tenure system or simply the school not ensuring certain professors pull their weight, I don't know. But I do know that students grow increasingly frustrated (and in some cases, neurotic) when their grades are not posted when they are seeking jobs or when they feel they are not grasping the course material because the professor cancels class several times throughout the semester for no good reason. This is unfortunate and unnecessary, and something more needs to be done to prevent these practices. Like I've written, there are plenty of great professors here, and I've had the good fortune of taking classes with most of them. But there are more than 1 or 2 professors whose reputations precede them not as being "hard" or "tough," but for "not caring." In other words, there are enough bad apples here to spoil the whole lot, and it's more than the "few" bad ones the traditional aphorism asserts can so spoil it. All in all, though, the quality of class experience, writing education, career services, library services, and administrative services have been nothing short of excellent. Please feel free to contact me. Matt Chiricosta  Class of (May) 2012

This education has taught me to think much more critically, which I highly value. However, as a financial matter, choosing to enter the legal field at this time was probably a poor decision. That is not a criticism of the school, but simply a fact about job availability.

13
Will NEVER donate to this law school until Professor [deleted] is no longer associated with this institution. He creates a terrible atmosphere for any student and in fact I am not sure if this man has seen the inside of a court room. 1L's should never be subjected to this individual. Makes the school look terrible as this man cannot teach. What a disappointment and shame on CM Law for employing someone who is such a disservice to this law school.

I've been very satisfied with my experience at Cleveland Marshall. The only recommendations I can make thus far is that the law school look at various options/availability of courses for the evening students. Certain concentrations should not be marketed to these students if the requisite coursework will not be made available between 6pm - 9pm.

2
Over the previous four years I have noticed a significant decline in the respect shown to students by faculty. Some Professors are late to nearly every class and compensate by holding it over or adding classes. Also, the late grades situation has been completely out of control for years. I often find myself with the feeling that as long as my tuition is paid there is no need to give me any mind. Half way through my law school experience I would have happily recommend CM to anyone who asked. As I exit the school I would refrain from making a recommendation either for or against the school.

This is a good law school with bad professors. This is how I summarize my experience here: "If you can't make judge or partner, become a law school professor." Going to class is a complete waste of time. I learned the hard way that you have to teach yourself - buy the commercial outlines. Exams do not mimic the bar exam. Always some young hot shot practitioner who decides to be a law professor but can't teach or is terribly disorganized (or both) and thinks that trick questions make for a good professor. It's like they teach only because they want everyone to know that they know so much more than everyone else. Too many egos teaching. This is the mantra that all professors need to adopt regarding students: "When you are successful, I am successful." Bad grades reflect poorly on professors. Professors are ridiculously inconsiderate - no syllabus, constantly changing syllabus, syllabus that doesn't indicate what/how many pages to read each class, reading assignment overload, reading assignments that have no relevance to the class exam/bar exam/potential law practice, not enough notice of assignments, too many last minute assignments, expect us to drop everything to accommodate their lack of organization and lack of professional courtesy, treat students like second class citizens who must bow down to them, often professors themselves are not prepared for class or do not even know the law or misapply the law to the facts, etc. etc.

Cleveland Marshall is overly focused on its ranking when it has serious real problems to contend with. Professors have been known to leave the state without notice. Professors that are openly disrespectful of the students and who fail to show up for class are not only retained but granted full professor status. While, prestigious professors with expert knowledge of their subject matter are terminated because of their age.

Courses, that students have already signed up for, are cancelled. At least one course each semester. Some courses are cancelled mere days before the start of the term. Every semester courses are cancelled after they have been placed on the schedule for the coming term. These are usually major courses like estates and trusts or corporations, not merely special interest courses like Ancient Athenian Law.
MEMORANDUM

TO: Faculty and Staff
FROM: Self-Study Committee
RE: Law School Survey of Student Engagement
     Law School Report 2012
DATE: 23 August 2012

Last spring our students participated in the Law School Survey of Student Engagement, a nationwide survey of law students about their experiences in law school. Below is a summary of our results from the 2012 LSSSE.

Participation

81 law schools participated nationally. More than 25,000 students responded. The national student response rate was 44%. A further breakdown of the respondent characteristics nationally is:

- Full-time: 88%, Part-time: 12%
- Day: 89%, Evening 12%
- 1Ls: 45%, 2Ls: 44%, 3Ls: 43%, 4Ls: 44%.

C|M|LAW’s overall student response rate was 50%. A further breakdown of our respondent characteristics is:

- Full-time: 78%, Part-time: 22%
- Day: 79%, Evening 21%
- 1Ls: 54%, 2Ls: 52%, 3Ls: 46%, 4Ls: 45%.

Areas of Inquiry

- Academic and intellectual experiences inside and outside the classroom.
- Exams.
- Mental activities (memorization, analysis, synthesizing ideas, making judgments, and applying theories) emphasized through a student’s coursework.
- Writing.
- Enriching educational activities (e.g., pro bono, co-curricular, clinical/externship).
- Student satisfaction (e.g. academic advising, career counseling, library assistance).
• Ways students use their time (e.g., course preparation, extracurricular activities, work for pay, caring for dependents, volunteer work).
• Law school environment (e.g., academic support, encouraging ethical practice, encouraging contact among students from different backgrounds, use of computers in academic work).
• Quality of relationships with other students, faculty members, and administrative staff.
• Educational and personal growth as a result of their law school experience.
• Overall satisfaction.
• Demographics.
• Expected debt upon graduation.

Highlights of the Responses from C|M|LAW Students

Students’ responses are generally in line with students from other participating law schools. For example, nationally 82% of respondents rated their law school experience as being good (50%) or excellent (33%), while the C|M|LAW response was 83% for these two categories (good 53%, excellent 30%). Also, nationally, most students (79%) were likely to choose the same law school again (43% would probably chose the same school, 37% definitely would). At C|M|LAW, 85% would likely chose us again (41% probably, 44% definitely).

In some areas our results were statistically different enough that they represent a “real’ difference in the quality of the student experience.” Interpreting the Means Comparison Report, LSSSE Law School Report 2012. In some areas they indicate better results than other schools and in other areas we had a less favorable result, suggesting that we lag behind other schools. The latter suggest matters that we may want to address.

We were provided comparisons to all law schools that participated as well as public law school participants, law schools with 500-900 students, and peer schools that we selected (the Ohio schools that participated in the LSSSE this year—Case, Capital, OSU, Cincinnati, ONU and Toledo). Comparisons for 4Ls are not included in the report because fewer than 20 4Ls answered the survey.

More Engaged

Areas where our students are significantly more engaged, do more or feel more positively than students at other schools:

Question 1f. Work with other students on projects during class (1Ls compared to selected peers).
Question 3a. Memorizing facts, ideas, or methods from your courses and readings so you can repeat them pretty much in the same form (2Ls compared to all categories).

Question 6b. Satisfaction with career counseling (3Ls compared to all categories).

Question 6d. Satisfaction with job search help (3Ls compared to all categories).

Question 6f. Satisfaction with library assistance (2 and 3Ls compared to all categories).

Question 7e. Working for pay in a law related job (2 and 3Ls compared to all categories).

Question 7f. Working for pay in a nonlegal job (1Ls compared to peers and public schools)

Question 7k. Commuting to class (1 and 2Ls compared to peers).

Question 8g. Providing support you need to thrive socially (3Ls compared to peers).

Question 10c. Writing clearly and effectively (3Ls compared to all categories).

Question 10l. Solving complex real world problems. (3Ls compared to peers).

Question 12. Would attend the same law school again (3Ls compared to peers).

Question 25. Level of debt (1 and 2Ls have less compared to 500-900 schools; 3Ls less compared to peers, and all less debt compared to all LSSSE schools).

Less Engaged

Areas where our students are significantly less engaged, do less (which is not always a problem, see 4a below), or feel less positively about the topic than students at other schools:

Question 3b. Analyze basic elements of an idea, experience or theory (2Ls compared to all categories).

Question 4a. Number of written papers of 20 pages or more (1Ls compared to all categories).

Question 5g. Study abroad (all classes compared to all categories).

Question 6g. Student Satisfaction with Computer Technology (all classes (especially 1Ls) compared to all categories).

Question 7d. Engage in law-related pro bono not required for course work. (1Ls compared to all but peers, 2Ls compared to all categories).

1 This probably reflects the conscious decision made by our legal writing professors to have students write shorter documents.

2 This reflects problems last year with wireless and out-of-date computers in the computer lab. Both of these issues were fixed over the summer.
Individual Comments

Responding students could submit comments on any topic. C|M|LAW students submitted 47 individual comments. The areas that received the most comments were academic support, career planning and the quality of teaching.
In Fall 2005, we engaged in strategic planning in connection with the University’s strategic planning process. As a result of that process, we articulated six ways in which the College of Law wanted to improve in order to fulfill our institutional vision. Later that same year, as part of the self-study process, we confirmed the strategic goals that we had set during the University strategic planning process.

Although that process was valuable, the strategic plan we produced last year was lacking in two important respects. First, we did not prioritize our goals. Second, we did not articulate specific tactics we should implement in order to accomplish those strategic goals.

During this past academic year, we have engaged in a collaborative process that addressed these two deficiencies. That process began with a session to review and, if appropriate, revise our strategic goals. During that session, we also ranked those goals in order of their institutional priority. Thereafter, we had a series of planning sessions devoted to each of the strategic goals. The purpose of those sessions was to identify the specific tactics we needed to implement in order to attain the strategic goal. The process was completed in March 2007 with a session to review all of the goals and tactics that had been discussed during the individual sessions.

This strategic and tactical plan is designed to guide the direction and administration of the law school for the next five years. Accordingly, we have selected strategic goals that are capable of being achieved within that time frame. We set six goals, so that we can focus our efforts and resources on the most important objectives.
We developed these goals and tactics with the understanding and expectation that the financial resources available to the law school will remain stable. In that regard, before developing our specific tactics, we reviewed the law school’s budget, so that all members of the law school faculty could have a better understanding of our financial limitations.

I. MISSION

The mission of the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law is to foster a more just society through legal education, service, and scholarship. The Law School provides the opportunity for a rigorous legal education, enabling a diverse population of students to become accomplished, ethical citizen-lawyers who will make significant contributions to the region, the nation, and the world.

II. VISION

The Cleveland-Marshall College of Law will continue to be a major foundation of the legal community in the region, having educated outstanding lawyers, judges, public servants, and business people. For more than a century, the Law School has provided an opportunity to qualified students to improve their own lives by serving others. Towards that end, the Law School will enhance its tradition as an institution committed to excellence in teaching, service, and scholarship and other intellectual inquiry. The Law School will be recognized for the capacity of its graduates to counsel and represent their clients effectively, and for the ability of its students, graduates, and faculty to think critically about our society’s strengths and weaknesses and to have the theoretical, doctrinal, and practical legal expertise to promote social justice, individual freedom, and economic growth. The Law School will be distinguished as an accomplished and highly regarded public law school, renowned for being creative, accessible, and compassionate.

III. STRATEGIC GOALS AND TACTICS

Goal #1: Substantially improve our graduates’ first-time bar passage rate on the Ohio State Bar Exam.

Tactics:

A. Continue the implementation of the Bar Passage Plan approved by the faculty on November 20, 2003, approved the President and Provost on December 9, 2003, and presented to the Cleveland State University Board of Trustees on February 25, 2004. Pursuant to that plan, we will:

(i) reduce our entering class size by at least 10 students per year, with an ultimate target of 200 entering students in 2009;
(ii) continue to increase the number of full-tuition scholarships for entering students;

(iii) continue to apply the full spectrum of grades fairly and rigorously; and

(iv) retain our commitment to diversity, the LCOP program, and the part-time program.

B. Pursuant to the Plan, we will comprehensively review the plan’s effectiveness in achieving bar plan goals during the next academic year.

C. Continue the new mandatory advising program pursuant to which each second-year law student is provided with (i) an individualized assessment of the student’s likelihood of passing the Ohio bar exam on the first attempt, and (ii) guidance to increase the student’s likelihood of passing the Ohio bar exam on the first attempt.

D. Provide financial assistance to students and recent graduates in order to enable them to prepare for the Ohio bar exam (e.g., subsidize the cost of PMBR).

Goal #2: Enhance the quality and diversity of the student body, and expand the professional opportunities available to them.

Tactics:

A. Improve our efforts to recruit an academically stronger and more diverse student body by:

   (i) expanding and enhancing our use of web-based communications;

   (ii) continuing to improve the quality of our written promotional materials;

   (iii) increasing the participation of alumni and other practitioners in our student recruitment efforts;

   (iv) developing strong relationships with pre-law advisors at certain undergraduate institutions;

   (v) emphasizing distinctive features of our law school, such as our close connection with one of the most sophisticated legal markets in the country, our dynamic faculty, and our large and engaged alumni network;

   (vi) identifying and cultivating relationships with employers who subsidize post-graduate education; and

   (vii) identifying employment sectors for which a formal legal education will lead to professional advancement.
B. Increase scholarships, continue to evaluate the academic standards pursuant to which students obtain and retain scholarships, and explore the viability of an honors program or law firm sponsorship of specific scholarship-related programs.

C. Develop national recruiting and employment initiatives for our students by:
   (i) increasing alumni participation in creating placement opportunities for our graduates;
   (ii) marketing our law school to national private law firms and non-profit, public interest organizations; and
   (iii) encouraging our students to seek jobs outside of Northeast Ohio.

D. Expand our externship program by identifying new placements and better promoting the educational and employment benefits of externships.

E. Increase the number of students who obtain judicial clerkships by enhancing our reputation among judges and better promoting the value of judicial clerkships.

F. Increase clinical opportunities and professional skills education for our students.

G. Expand the breadth of our pro bono programs to involve more and different students.

H. Increase funding for our Loan Repayment Assistance Program to enable more students to pursue public interest employment after graduation.

I. Enhance the capacities of the professional staff in the admissions office, in order to strengthen our applicant pool and yield of admitted students, and enhance the capacities of the professional staff in the Office of Career Planning, in order to provide more individualized counseling and greater national outreach.

Goal #3: Improve the scholarly reputation and productivity of our faculty.

Tactics:

A. On an annual basis, conduct a faculty retreat or workshop on improving scholarly productivity.

B. Provide appropriate recognition for faculty scholarship.

C. Improve the training of research assistants who help faculty members with their research.
D. Purchase technology that will support faculty productivity, and provide faculty training to use such technology.

E. Enhance the ability of faculty to engage in scholarship by:

(i) developing a written policy to guide the Dean’s discretion for providing course releases in recognition of exceptional faculty productivity; and

(ii) developing a fair method for faculty to “bank” teaching hours.

F. Increase the number of, and evaluate the terms and benefits of, named professorships.

G. Improve our graduates’ appreciation of and support for scholarly activities by encouraging faculty members to contribute articles to Law Notes.

H. Enhance secretarial support for productive faculty.

Goal #4: Develop signature programs or centers of excellence at the law school.

Tactics:

A. Solicit proposals from the faculty for proposed signature programs or centers of excellence.

B. Develop a process by which the administration and the faculty can decide which proposals should be implemented.

C. Provide appropriate support for the development of the selected programs or centers.

D. Develop a means by which the effectiveness and impact of the selected programs or centers can be assessed.

Goal #5: Strengthen our curriculum and expand our teaching strategies to maximize the educational experience for our students in order to prepare them to practice law in the 21st century.

Tactics:

A. Develop programmatic information for students that connect courses of study to specific practice areas by:
(i) identifying course sequences that relate to practice areas, such as family law, criminal prosecution and defense, tax, and business;

(ii) creating a two-year course schedule;

(iii) continuing small group advising sessions for first-year students and individual sessions for second-year students; and

(iv) promoting the value of the joint-degree programs.

B. Support new ways of using technology to educate our students by:

(i) exploring the feasibility and efficacy of distance-learning courses;

(ii) increasing the availability of technology in the classroom (e.g., smart podiums, clicker technology, and Blackboard); and

(iii) increasing the availability of technology to communicate with students outside of the classroom (e.g., Blackboard).

C. Ensure that our curriculum requires the necessary foundational courses, provides an appropriate variety of electives, and uses pedagogical methodologies appropriate to different stages of law school education by:

(i) continuing to consider whether we require the proper upper-level courses;

(ii) examining our upper-level elective course offerings; and

(iii) deciding whether, and if so how, to create small sections in the first-year course schedule, in addition to legal writing.

D. On an annual basis, conduct a faculty retreat or workshop on teaching.

Goal #6: Expand our long-standing commitment to public service.

Tactics:

A. Establish on-going relationships with law firms and appropriate non-profit agencies whereby faculty members would regularly make presentations to lawyers and others at those firms or agencies.

B. Develop an annual speaker series devoted to public service, leadership, and professionalism.

C. Expand faculty involvement in bar associations and the public service activities in which those associations engage.
D. Establish a mechanism to compile on a regular basis the public service activities engaged in by our faculty, students, and staff.

E. Enhance awareness of the public service activities engaged in by our faculty, students, and staff by:

(i) creating a brochure that can be used to promote the law school to prospective students, prospective donors, civic and community leaders, and other law school faculty and administrators;

(ii) developing a dedicated “page” on our website; and

(iii) developing a mechanism for regular internal communication.

F. Identify a faculty member as an externship coordinator, similar to our pro bono coordinator.

IV. CONCLUSION

At a meeting held on April 26, 2007, the faculty voted unanimously to approve this plan. On an annual basis, I will report to the faculty on the status of our implementation of the tactics contained in this plan and on our progress toward achieving the strategic goals.
MEMORANDUM

TO: Geoffrey S. Mearns, Provost & Sr. Vice President for Academic Affairs
C|M|LAW Faculty
C|M|LAW Staff

FROM: Phyllis L. Crocker, Interim Dean
College of Law

DATE: November 18, 2010

SUBJECT: Update on 2007 Strategic Plan for C|M|LAW

In the spring of 2007, C|M|LAW adopted a strategic plan for the next five years (Fall 2007 – Spring 2012). I am pleased to report that, at year three, we are making significant progress on virtually every Goal and Tactic. Attached are two documents: one, the April 2007 memo from Dean Mearns setting forth the strategic planning process and the strategic plan; and two, a Progress Report on the strategic plan as of Fall 2010. As you will see in the Progress Report, many tactics are marked as both underway and ongoing. This underscores the continuing relevance and vitality of the plan.
Goal 1: Substantially improve our graduates’ first-time bar passage rate on the Ohio State Bar Exam

Tactics:

1. Continue the implementation of the Bar Passage Plan [hereinafter (Plan)] approved by the faculty on November 20, 2003, approved the President and Provost on December 9, 2003, and presented to the Cleveland State University Board of Trustees on February 25, 2004. Pursuant to that plan, we will:
   - reduce our entering class size by at least 10 students per year, with an ultimate target of 200 entering students in 2009;
   - Since 2004 when the entering class was 248, we have reduced the class size each year to 236 in 2005, 227 in 2006, 215 in 2007, 211 in 2008, 203 in 2009, and 195 in 2010.

2. continue to increase the number of full-tuition scholarships for entering students;
   - Since 2004, we have increased the number of full-tuition scholarship offers, but the acceptance rate has declined due to challenges we face from other school offers: higher scholarship offers, added stipends, reduced GPA requirements to retain, and more competition for fewer students. However, our FTE Scholarship averages have increased from $1,200 to over $2,600 per student since the implementation of the Plan.

3. continue to apply the full spectrum of grades fairly and rigorously; and
   - On an annual basis, the Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement collects and analyzes data regarding attrition and reports those results to the faculty.
   - Each semester the Associate Dean for Academic Affairs reviews all grades given in every class and discusses distributions when necessary.

retain our commitment to diversity, the LCOP program, and the part-time program.

- The Admissions Office is strongly committed to our level of diversity, the LCOP program and the part-time program. Since the Plan was implemented in 2004, the admissions numbers in diversity and LCOP have continued to be strong although our part-time numbers are not consistently as strong.
- In 2010, we won the LSAC’s first annual Diversity Matters award in recognition of our commitment to diversifying the legal profession.

B. Pursuant to the Plan, we will comprehensively review the Plan’s effectiveness in achieving bar plan goals during the next academic year.

- In the spring of 2008, Susan Becker, chair of the Bar Committee, wrote a comprehensive review of the Bar Passage Improvement Plan’s effectiveness. This was updated in the summers of 2009 and 2010. In addition, the Director of Bar Preparation has begun to coordinate the gathering and analysis of data concerning students who failed the bar on their first attempt.

C. Continue the new mandatory advising program pursuant to which each second-year law student is provided with (i) an individualized assessment of the student’s likelihood of passing the Ohio bar exam on the first attempt, and (ii) guidance to increase the student’s likelihood of passing the Ohio bar exam on the first attempt.

- Every fall since 2006, the Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement has organized individual counseling sessions for each second-year student, which provide (1) an individualized assessment of the student's risk factors for bar passage and (2) guidance for success on the bar exam.

- The Dean, Associate Dean for Academic Affairs, Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement, Director of Bar Exam Preparation, Manager of the Academic Excellence Program, Manager of Student Affairs, Director of the Pro Bono Program and Chair of the Bar Committee engage in these counseling sessions. We begin discussing bar preparation in the first year of law school: orientation discussion by Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement, followed by presentations in all 1L classes prior to Spring registration.
D. Provide financial assistance to students and recent graduates in order to enable them to prepare for the Ohio bar exam (e.g., subsidize the cost of PMBR).
   - We evaluate our arrangement each year with PMBR, and have renewed each year. We also have provided loans to graduates studying for the bar.

increasing the participation of alumni and other practitioners in our student recruitment efforts;

- Alumni and practicing attorneys are integral to our success and regularly participate in our admission events, such as Admitted Student Days, open houses, our new Multicultural Perspectives Day, as well as communicating directly with students who have specific questions.

developing strong relationships with pre-law advisors at certain undergraduate institutions;

- We now have established relationships with prelaw advisors at over 50 colleges and universities across the country. Many of the advisors now ask us to visit the school to make presentations. We attend the National Association of PreLaw Advisors national meetings. We send updates on C|M|LAW accomplishments every semester. We send prelaw advisors notices of graduates that enroll at C|M|LAW. We are reaching out to the HBCU prelaw advisors.

emphasizing distinctive features of our law school, such as our close connection with one of the most sophisticated legal markets in the country, our dynamic faculty, and our large and engaged alumni network;

- Our message focuses on providing a distinctive, relevant, and flexible education, including our close connection to the Cleveland legal market, our interaction of theory and practice, such as clinic and pro bono programs, and flexibility of study programs.

identifying and cultivating relationships with employers who subsidize post-graduate education; and

- We are engaged in a concerted effort to further identify employers who provide education assistance to employees and have a segment of employees interested in part-time study; at this time we are working closely with the Cleveland Clinic.
7. Identifying employment sectors for which a formal legal education will lead to professional advancement.

- While we are attempting to identify such employment fields where a legal education is beneficial, we continue to emphasize to all students that a legal education is an investment that will pay off in any employment field.

B. Increase scholarships, continue to evaluate the academic standards pursuant to which students obtain and retain scholarships, and explore the viability of an honors program or law firm sponsorship of specific scholarship-related programs.

- We reevaluate each year whether to maintain the high standards we expect from our scholarship students. Each time we have decided to retain the GPA requirements.

- We engaged in a year long investigation with the assistance of an outside consulting firm, regarding the viability and desirability of an honors program. We consulted faculty, staff, and a number of external groups including our Visiting Committee, National Advisory Committee, and leaders of the legal and business community. We decided not to pursue an honors program.

C. Develop national recruiting and employment initiatives for our students by:

1. Increasing alumni participation in creating placement opportunities for our graduates;

2. Marketing our law school to national private law firms and non-profit, public interest organizations; and encouraging our students to seek jobs outside of Northeast Ohio.

- See the Office of Career Planning Strategic Plan, attached. Our ongoing career planning initiatives involve ensuring our current students build their network among professionals and build their resumes with practical experience while they are in law school. These efforts have included the expansion of our externship program into the General Counsel offices of corporations in Northeast Ohio, beginning our fall recruiting program prior to the start of the academic year in response to employer and student feedback, and expanding the timeframe of our spring recruiting program in order to allow employers to recruit throughout the duration of the spring term. In order to expand the geographic scope of opportunities for our graduates, we have begun to visit cities outside of Ohio, in conjunction with our alumni networks, and proactively reach out to out-of-state employers in order to educate them about our students. We also continue to leverage our relationships with the local firms with offices throughout the region and country in order to identify opportunities with those firms in other cities. We continually seek to enhance the awareness and education of our students about the array of opportunities available upon graduation, including judicial clerkships.

D. Expand our externship program by identifying new placements and better promoting the educational and employment benefits of externships

- Since Fall 2006 we have more than tripled our externship placements: with new Judges and new courts, and in government, public interest, and general counsel offices (business and university).

- Beginning March 2008, we have held a yearly Lawyering Skills Fair for students to learn about clinics and externship programs.

- We have tripled the number of students who we place throughout the calendar year.
E. Increase the number of students who obtain judicial clerkships by enhancing our reputation among judges and better promoting the value of judicial clerkships.

- See the Office of Career Planning Strategic Plan. In the Spring of 2010 the faculty created a Judicial Clerkship Committee to reach out to and work with individual students. Our recently created faculty judicial clerkship committee targets 1Ls and 2Ls to provide counseling and programming on the judicial clerkship process and experience, and has an outreach plan involving contacting judges on benches of the 6th Circuit and Northern District of Ohio in order to discuss hiring processes and gain insight from the chambers in order to more effectively counsel students.

F. Increase clinical opportunities and professional skills education for our students.

- In Spring 2008, the Employment Law and Urban Development Law Clinics moved into new clinical offices.

- In Spring 2009 we instituted a new clinic, the Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic, directed by Clinical Professor Daiker-Middaugh.

- We added Arbitration to our yearly course offerings and created new externships (see D above).

- Beginning with the entering class of 2008, all students are required to take a professional skills course.

G. Expand the breadth of our pro bono programs to involve more and different students.

   - The Pro Bono Program offers additional educational stipends to support students who are committed to public interest, including the following: Dean's Community Service Awards; Cleveland-Marshall Pro Bono Summer Fellows (increased from 10 to 16 in 2010); William A. Blair Memorial Pro Bono Student of the Year;

I. Enhance the capacities of the professional staff in the admissions office, in order to strengthen our applicant pool and yield of admitted students, and enhance the capacities of the professional staff in the Office of Career Planning, in order to provide more individualized counseling and greater national outreach.

- We created the position of Coordinator Law Admissions and Multicultural Recruitment and in the spring of 2008 hired Sandra English to fill that position.

- In July 2009 a new director of the Office of Career Planning, Jen Blaga began reorganizing OCP. One of her first projects was to develop a new Strategic Plan for the office. It is attached. In July 2010 she upgraded the secretarial position to that of Coordinator and hired Jessica Mathewson for that position.

Goal 3: Improve the scholarly reputation and productivity of our faculty.

Tactics:

A. On an annual basis, conduct a faculty retreat or workshop on improving scholarly productivity.

- The Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement organized faculty retreats on Research and Scholarship in 2009 and 2010.

- The Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement organizes a faculty lunch series where faculty members from Cleveland-Marshall or other universities present their scholarly work.

- The Associate Dean organizes Junior Faculty Exchanges with other law schools including Capital University Law School and Indiana University School of Law.

- We reinstituted the Northeast Ohio Colloquium Series with the University of Akron School of Law and Case Western Reserve University School of Law.

- We have created faculty scholarship support groups comprising 3-6 faculty members, who meet periodically to support each other's research and writing efforts by, for example, discussing topics, reviewing drafts, and setting interim deadlines.
B. Provide appropriate recognition for faculty scholarship.

- In 2008, we published a faculty brochure, The Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Faculty: Intellect and Inspiration, highlighting (mainly) the scholarly accomplishments of faculty members. In 2010 we published a brochure on our new faculty and named professorships.

- On a monthly basis, the Associate Dean of Faculty Development and Student Achievement distributes an electronic newsletter, Faculty Focus, highlighting, among other things, the scholarly accomplishments of faculty members.

- We post papers and articles on SSRN's Legal Scholarship Network and distribute the Cleveland-Marshall Legal Research Studies Papers on SSRN.

- In 2008, the law school held a ceremony celebrating the appointment of faculty members to the law school's four named professorships; we will do so again in the spring of 2011.

- In the spring of 2009, Dena Davis received the Cleveland State University Distinguished Faculty Award for Research.

- In 2010 the Interim Dean appointed an Ad Hoc Committee on Scholarship giving it a charge to make proposals to the faculty for increasing and improving our scholarly productivity (both quality and quantity) and recognition.

- The Law Library developed and maintains a Faculty Publications Database with unique citation analysis tools.

- The Law Library is developing an Institutional Repository that will electronically archive and provide access to faculty scholarship as well as other Law School materials of historic interest.

Goal 5: Strengthen our curriculum and expand our teaching strategies to maximize the educational experience for our students in order to prepare them to practice law in the 21st century.

- In Fall 2009 Dean Mearns appointed the Ad Hoc Curriculum Review Committee and charged it as follows: "Over the next two years, this Committee should conduct a comprehensive evaluation of our entire law school curriculum and academic program. During this two-year period, this Committee should also propose appropriate, necessary, and progressive changes to our curriculum and our academic program in order to prepare our graduates to practice law and pursue other professional opportunities in the 21st century."

- The Committee has conducted extensive research on programs at other schools, consulted with our National Advisory Council, Visiting Committee, other groups of law and business leaders in Ohio, created, in coordination with the Dean, a Curriculum Reform Advisory Group, talked with every faculty member, held faculty discussions, conducted a faculty survey, and identified core values and skills students should have when they graduate. We anticipate the committee will introduce proposals to the faculty in spring 2011.

Tactics

A. Develop programmatic information for students that connect courses of study to specific practice areas by:

1. identifying course sequences that relate to practice areas, such as family law, criminal prosecution and defense, tax, international law, and business;

   - In the Student Handbook and on the web we identify foundational and specialized courses in the areas of business law, civil litigation and dispute resolution, criminal law, employment and labor law; environmental law; family law; health law; international and comparative law; intellectual property, law and public policy.
2. creating a two-year course schedule;

- Associate Dean for Academic Affairs Crocker concluded, after working with the creation of the course schedule for three years, that it was not feasible to create a two-year course schedule due to too many unforeseen changes in the schedule each semester.

3. continuing small group advising sessions for first-year students and individual sessions for second-year students; and

- Beginning in the spring of 2007, the Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs and the Associate Deans conduct section by section advising sessions for first-year students. Individual counseling sessions for second-year students regarding the bar exam are discussed in Goal 1A, Section C.

4. promoting the value of the joint-degree programs.

- Professor Alan Weinstein promotes our dual degree programs with the Levin College (JD/MPA, JD/MUPDD, JD/MAES) and College of Science (JS/MSES) through emails and informational sessions with potential students early in the Spring semester. Associate Dean Robertson assists along with faculty/staff of the Levin College. Professor Sagers promotes the JD/MBA dual degree program in the Fall semester. In addition, our web-based and print materials promoting the dual degree programs have been updated.

B. Support new ways of using technology to educate our students by:

1. exploring the feasibility and efficacy of distance-learning courses;

- In May 2008 the faculty approved courses taught on line or by other means of distance learning as appropriate for law school credit, including courses taught outside of the College of Law. Brian Glassman has taught Art Law through distance learning.

Goal 6: Expand our long-standing commitment to public service.

B. Develop an annual speaker series devoted to public service, leadership, and professionalism

C. Expand faculty involvement in bar associations and the public service activities in which those associations engage.

Goal 1: Substantially improve our graduates’ first-time bar passage rate on the Ohio State Bar Exam

Notwithstanding our implementation of virtually all of the Tactics described below, over the course of the Strategic Plan our first-time passage rate for the July bar has declined rather than improved in terms of both absolute percentage and as compared with other Ohio law schools. We continue to evaluate how we can make progress on this very critical goal.

Tactics:

A. Continue the implementation of the Bar Passage Plan [hereinafter (Plan)] approved by the faculty on November 20, 2003, approved the President and Provost on December 9, 2003, and presented to the Cleveland State University Board of Trustees on February 25, 2004. Pursuant to that plan, we will:

1. reduce our entering class size by at least 10 students per year, with an ultimate target of 200 entering students in 2009;

   - Since 2004 when the entering class was 248, we have reduced the class size each year to 236 in 2005, 227 in 2006, 215 in 2007, 211 in 2008, 203 in 2009, 195 in 2010.

   - A nationwide decline in law school applications (and the resulting deterioration in applicant credentials) led to an entering class of only 168 students in 2011. Anticipating that this trend would continue, the law school sought and received the President’s approval of the 140 Plan, which reduced the entering class size to 140 students for the foreseeable future.
2. continue to increase the number of full-tuition scholarships for entering students;

- Since 2004, we have increased the number of full-tuition scholarship offers, but the acceptance rate has declined due to challenges we face from other school offers: higher scholarship offers, added stipends, reduced GPA requirements to retain, and more competition for fewer students. However, through 2010 our FTE Scholarship averages increased from $1,200 to over $2,600 per student since the implementation of the Plan.

- For strategic reasons, the law school stopped offering full-tuition scholarships in 2010, so that resources could be concentrated on bringing in students closer to our median LSAT score, rather than on high-scoring outliers.

3. continue to apply the full spectrum of grades fairly and rigorously; and

- On an annual basis, the Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement collects and analyzes data regarding attrition and reports those results to the faculty.

- Each semester the Associate Dean for Academic Affairs reviews all grades given in every class and discusses distributions when necessary.

4. retain our commitment to diversity, the LCOP program, and the part-time program.

- The Admissions Office is strongly committed to our level of diversity, the LCOP program and the part-time program. Since the Plan was implemented in 2004, the admissions numbers in diversity and LCOP have continued to be strong although our part-time numbers are not consistently as strong.

- In 2010, we won the LSAC’s first annual Diversity Matters award in recognition of our commitment to diversifying the legal profession.

- Although the size of the 2011 entering class fell to 168 students (from 195 students the previous year), the minority enrollment of the class actually increased—to 21%.
B. Pursuant to the Plan, we will comprehensively review the Plan’s effectiveness in achieving bar plan goals during the next academic year.

- In the spring of 2008, Susan Becker, chair of the Bar Committee, wrote a comprehensive review of the Bar Passage Improvement Plan’s effectiveness. This was updated in the summers of 2009 and 2010. (The Bar Passage Improvement Plan did not require a report in 2011.) In addition, the Director of Bar Preparation has coordinated the gathering and analysis of comprehensive data concerning students who failed the bar on their first attempt.

C. Continue the new mandatory advising program pursuant to which each second-year law student is provided with (i) an individualized assessment of the student’s likelihood of passing the Ohio bar exam on the first attempt, and (ii) guidance to increase the student’s likelihood of passing the Ohio bar exam on the first attempt.

- Every fall since 2006, the Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement has organized individual counseling sessions for each second-year student, which provide (1) an individualized assessment of the student's risk factors for bar passage and (2) guidance for success on the bar exam.

- The Dean, Associate Dean for Academic Affairs, Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement, Director of Bar Exam Preparation, Manager of the Academic Excellence Program, Manager of Student Affairs, Director of the Pro Bono Program and Chair of the Bar Committee engage in these counseling sessions. We begin discussing bar preparation in the first year of law school: orientation discussion by Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement, followed by presentations in all 1L classes prior to Spring registration.

D. Provide financial assistance to students and recent graduates in order to enable them to prepare for the Ohio bar exam (e.g., subsidize the cost of PMBR).

- We evaluate our arrangement each year with PMBR, and have renewed each year. We also have provided loans to graduates studying for the bar.

- In Spring 2012, as part of the 140 Plan, we created a new program that will provide every entering student (beginning in Fall 2012) with the BARBRI bar preparation course at no cost. In addition, every current 2L and 3L will receive the course at a deeply discounted rate.

Goal 2: Enhance the quality and diversity of the student body, and expand the professional opportunities available to them.

Quality of the student body has largely remained flat. As measured by LSAT scores, it was the same in 2011 as it was in 2007 (154 median), although the median rose to 155 from 2008 to 2010. Median GPA rose from 3.34 in 2007, to 3.45 in 2010 before dropping in 2011 to 3.28.

Minority enrollment has generally trended upward, from a low of 14.5% in 2006 to a high of 18.4% in 2012. Continuing to increase minority enrollment remains a high priority.

Our full-time JD-required placement percentage fell from 73% for the 2007 class to 50% for the 2011 class, largely because of a major contraction in national legal employment. Our 2011 percentage, however, exceeded that of 10 schools ranked in the U.S. News top 50 and tied 3 schools ranked in the top 25. We also now rank 44th among all U.S. law schools in percentage of graduates employed in firms having 100 or more lawyers.
Tactics:

A. Improve our efforts to recruit an academically stronger and more diverse student body by:

1. expanding and enhancing our use of web-based communications;
   - We have expanded our use of LSAC’s Candidate Referral Service to correspond electronically with prospective students, created an Admitted Student page on the website, increased the number of emails sent to admitted students, created online registration for admission events, and constantly update our website with new information. We are using Facebook and blogs somewhat and are considering how to expand our web presence.
   - In Spring 2012, we reorganized the Admissions department and created an Admissions Communications Specialist position dedicated to providing social media and online communications with prospective students.

2. continuing to improve the quality of our written promotional materials;
   - In 2009 we developed a new mark (C|M|LAW) and logo (Learn Law. Live Justice.). We published a new Admissions booklet that incorporates our new look and message. Our Profile information sheet and information sheets for clinics, dual degree programs, concentrations, invitations for Admitted Student events, and flyers for admission events all incorporate our new mark and motto.
   - In Spring 2012, we created a new Communications Specialist position to assist our Communications Coordinator in producing high-quality, high-impact written, photographic and video communications materials.

3. increasing the participation of alumni and other practitioners in our student recruitment efforts;
   - Alumni and practicing attorneys are integral to our success and regularly participate in our admission events, such as Admitted Student Days, open houses, our new Multicultural Perspectives Day, as well as communicating directly with students who have specific questions.

B. Increase scholarships, continue to evaluate the academic standards pursuant to which students obtain and retain scholarships, and explore the viability of an honors program or law firm sponsorship of specific scholarship-related programs.

- We reevaluate each year whether to maintain the high standards we expect from our scholarship students. Each time we have decided to retain the GPA requirements.

- We engaged in a year-long investigation with the assistance of an outside consulting firm, regarding the viability and desirability of an honors program. We consulted faculty, staff, and a number of external groups including our Visiting Committee, National Advisory Committee, and leaders of the legal and business community. We decided not to pursue an honors program.

- Per-student scholarship support for entering students has increased over the last five years by more than 57% - from $2,484 in 2007, to $3,916 in 2011.

C. Develop national recruiting and employment initiatives for our students by:

1. increasing alumni participation in creating placement opportunities for our graduates;

   - See the Office of Career Planning Strategic Plan, attached. Our ongoing career planning initiatives involve ensuring our current students build their network among professionals and build their resumes with practical experience while they are in law school. These efforts have included the expansion of our externship program into the General Counsel offices of corporations in Northeast Ohio, beginning our fall recruiting program prior to the start of the academic year in response to employer and student feedback, and expanding the timeframe of our spring recruiting program in order to allow employers to recruit throughout the duration of the spring term. In order to expand the geographic scope of opportunities for our graduates, we have begun to visit cities outside of Ohio, in conjunction with our alumni networks, and pro actively reach out to out-of-state employers in order to educate them about our students. We also continue to leverage our relationships with the local firms with offices throughout the region and country in order to identify opportunities with those firms in other cities. We continually seek to enhance the awareness and education of our students about the array of opportunities available upon graduation, including judicial clerkships.

D. Expand our externship program by identifying new placements and better promoting the educational and employment benefits of externships

- Since Fall 2006 we have more than tripled our externship placements: with new Judges and new courts, and in government, public interest, and general counsel offices (business and university).

- Beginning March 2008, we have held a yearly Lawyering Skills Fair for students to learn about clinics and externship programs.

- We have tripled the number of students whom we place throughout the calendar year.

- In summer 2011, Dean Boise led the clinical faculty in a major reorganization of the program that included shifting externship oversight to the clinical faculty.

E. Increase the number of students who obtain judicial clerkships by enhancing our reputation among judges and better promoting the value of judicial clerkships.

- We have seen overall growth in this area with 2 clerkships in 2007, 9 in 2008, 2 in 2009, 7 in 2010, and 2 in 2011.

- See the Office of Career Planning Strategic Plan. In the Spring of 2010 the faculty created a Judicial Clerkship Committee to reach out to and work with individual students. Our recently created faculty judicial clerkship committee targets 1Ls and 2Ls to provide counseling and programming on the judicial clerkship process and experience, and has an outreach plan involving contacting judges on benches of the 6th Circuit and Northern District of Ohio in order to discuss hiring processes and gain insight from the chambers in order to more effectively counsel students.

- The Pro Bono Program offers additional educational stipends to support students who are committed to public interest, including the following: Dean’s Community Service Awards; Cleveland-Marshall Pro Bono Summer Fellows (increased from 10 to 16 in 2010); William A. Blair Memorial Pro Bono Student of the Year;

- In 2011, Dean Boise created a grant of up to $2,000 to provide support for a public interest project for the student recipient of the Dean’s annual “Learn Law. Live Justice.” Award.

- We created the position of Coordinator Law Admissions and Multicultural Recruitment and in the spring of 2008 hired Sandra English to fill that position.

- In July 2009 a new director of the Office of Career Planning, Jen Blaga began reorganizing OCP. One of her first projects was to develop a new Strategic Plan for the office. It is attached. In July 2010 she upgraded the secretarial position to that of Coordinator and hired Jessica Mathewson for that position.

- In 2011, we eliminated our two Coordinator, Law Admissions positions and replaced them with an Assistant Director of Admissions and an Admissions Communications Specialist.
Goal 3: Improve the scholarly reputation and productivity of our faculty.

Tactics:

A. On an annual basis, conduct a faculty retreat or workshop on improving scholarly productivity.

- The Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement organized faculty retreats on Research and Scholarship in 2009 and 2010.
- The Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment organizes a faculty lunch series where faculty members from Cleveland-Marshall or other universities present their scholarly work.
- The Associate Dean organizes Junior Faculty Exchanges with other law schools including Capital University Law School and Indiana University School of Law.
- We reinstituted the Northeast Ohio Colloquium Series with the University of Akron School of Law and Case Western Reserve University School of Law.
- We have created faculty scholarship support groups comprising 3-6 faculty members, who meet periodically to support each other’s research and writing efforts by, for example, discussing topics, reviewing drafts, and setting interim deadlines. About half of the tenure and tenure-track faculty participate in these groups.

B. Provide appropriate recognition for faculty scholarship.

- In 2008, we published a faculty brochure, The Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Faculty: Intellect and Inspiration, highlighting (mainly) the scholarly accomplishments of faculty members. In 2010 we published a brochure on our new faculty and named professorships.
- On a regular basis, the Associate Dean of Academic Enrichment updates a blog, Faculty News, highlighting, among other things, the scholarly accomplishments of faculty members.
• We post papers and articles on SSRN’s Legal Scholarship Network and distribute the Cleveland-Marshall Legal Research Studies Papers on SSRN.

• In 2008, the law school held a ceremony celebrating the appointment of faculty members to the law school’s four named professorships; we will do so again in the spring of 2011.

• In the spring of 2009, Dena Davis received the Cleveland State University Distinguished Faculty Award for Research.

• In 2010 the Interim Dean appointed an Ad Hoc Committee on Scholarship giving it a charge to make proposals to the faculty for increasing and improving our scholarly productivity (both quality and quantity) and recognition.

• The Law Library developed and maintains a Faculty Publications Database with unique citation analysis tools.

• The Law Library has created an Institutional Repository that will electronically archive and provide access to faculty scholarship as well as other Law School materials of historic interest.

• Dean Boise has begun a tradition of opening faculty meetings with a report on faculty scholarship, accomplishments, and speaking engagements over the previous month.

C. Improve the training of research assistants who help faculty members with their research.

• The Library provides orientation and specialized research instruction sessions for Law faculty research assistants. The Library continues to advertise these services to faculty and research assistants through faculty information sessions, blog postings and individual meetings. The Library has hired and trained several RAs who work on faculty projects under the supervision of a law librarian.
D. Purchase technology that will support faculty productivity, and provide faculty training to use such technology.

- The Library (Jan Novak) has compiled a document comparing a variety of bibliographic citation software resources. [This document has been given to the Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement.] Training for the faculty as a group on one of these resources occurred in Spring 2009. The Library also created a webpage on instructional support materials and a teaching materials archive. Training on citation software and other resource management strategies and web tools can be scheduled at any time through a faculty mini-session.

E. Enhance the ability of faculty to engage in scholarship by:

1. developing a written policy to guide the Dean’s discretion for providing course releases in recognition of exceptional faculty productivity; and
   - The faculty approved a written policy in May 2008.

2. developing a fair method for faculty to “bank” teaching hours.
   - In Spring 2008 the Faculty Affairs Committee decided not to recommend a banking system.

F. Increase the number of, and evaluate the terms and benefits of, named professorships.

- In October 2007 we established a fourth professorship: the Joseph C. Hostetler-Baker & Hostetler Chair in Law.

- The terms and benefits of all of the professorships, as well as criteria for eligibility have been discussed by the faculty and the Dean.

- Dean Boise enhanced the benefits of the named professorships by giving the holders both a stipend and an automatic course release rather than having them choose between the two.

| Goal 5: | Strengthen our curriculum and expand our teaching strategies to maximize the educational experience for our students in order to prepare them to practice law in the 21st century.

- In Fall 2009 Dean Mearns appointed the Ad Hoc Curriculum Review Committee and charged it as follows: "Over the next two years, this Committee should conduct a comprehensive evaluation of our entire law school curriculum and academic program. During this two-year period, this Committee should also propose appropriate, necessary, and progressive changes to our curriculum and our academic program in order to prepare our graduates to practice law and pursue other professional opportunities in the 21st century."

- The Committee has conducted extensive research on programs at other schools, consulted with our National Advisory Council, Visiting Committee, other groups of law and business leaders in Ohio, created, in coordination with the Dean, a Curriculum Reform Advisory Group, talked with every faculty member, held faculty discussions, conducted a faculty survey, and identified core values and skills students should have when they graduate. We anticipate the committee will introduce proposals to the faculty in spring 2011.

- In spring of 2011, the faculty approved substantial reform of the curriculum to be implemented beginning in fall 2012, including the semesterization of the core first-year courses; the adoption of a Legislation/Regulation course to introduce first-year students to the legislative process and develop statutory interpretation skills; the imposition of an experiential skills requirement that will require every student to have taken a course prior to graduation that develops practical skills; the introduction of a Professionalism Problem of the Semester; and new emphasis on pro bono and public service work. | Ad Hoc Curriculum Review Committee |

Tactics
A. Develop programmatic information for students that connect courses of study to specific practice areas by:

1. identifying course sequences that relate to practice areas, such as family law, criminal prosecution and defense, tax, international law, and business;
   - In the Student Handbook and on the web we identify foundational and specialized courses in the areas of business law, civil litigation and dispute resolution, criminal law, employment and labor law; environmental law; family law; health law; international and comparative law; intellectual property, law and public policy.

2. creating a two-year course schedule;
   - Associate Dean for Academic Affairs Crocker concluded, after working with the creation of the course schedule for three years, that it was not feasible to create a two-year course schedule due to too many unforeseen changes in the schedule each semester.
   - Associate Dean for Academic Affairs Mark Sundahl is working to again create two-year scheduling as a result of a University initiative to do so campus-wide.

3. continuing small group advising sessions for first-year students and individual sessions for second-year students; and promoting the value of the joint-degree programs.
   - Beginning in the spring of 2007, the Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs and the Associate Deans conduct section by section advising sessions for first-year students. Individual counseling sessions for second-year students regarding the bar exam are discussed in Goal 1A, Section C.

- Professor Alan Weinstein promotes our dual degree programs with the Levin College (JD/MPA, JD/MUPDD, JD/MAES) and College of Science (JS/MSES) through emails and informational sessions with potential students early in the Spring semester. Associate Dean Robertson assists along with faculty/staff of the Levin College. Professor Sagers promotes the JD/MBA dual degree program in the Fall semester. In addition, our web-based and print materials promoting the dual degree programs have been updated.

B. Support new ways of using technology to educate our students by:

1. exploring the feasibility and efficacy of distance-learning courses;
   - In May 2008 the faculty approved courses taught on line or by other means of distance learning as appropriate for law school credit, including courses taught outside of the College of Law. Brian Glassman has taught Art Law through distance learning.

2. increasing the availability of technology in the classroom (e.g., smart podiums, clicker technology, and Blackboard); and
   - The Law School is building a Trial Courtroom to provide students with a hands-on opportunity to practice litigation skills using some of the most current courtroom technology.
   - Technology fee money continues to be spent to improve classroom technology, including the recent approval to purchase a mobile MediSite recording system. As of Summer 2010 all classroom and seminar rooms are equipped with presentation technology. The library staff has provided, and will continue to provide, faculty information sessions about available technologies and how they might be used in teaching. Students and faculty regularly use available classroom technology for presentations and instruction. The technology department provides training and support for the use of this equipment.
• In spring 2011, Dean Boise initiated a program that will provide every entering student beginning in Fall 2012 with an iPad. Faculty will be encouraged to use the iPads in the classroom.

C Ensure that our curriculum requires the necessary foundational courses, provides an appropriate variety of electives, and uses pedagogical methodologies appropriate to different stages of law school education by:

1 continuing to consider whether we require the proper upper-level courses;

• The Curriculum Committee, pursuant to the Dean's 2006-07 charge, discussed this question and concluded that we should not alter our required courses. In May 2008 the faculty voted to add a professional skills course as a requirement.

• See Report under Goal 5 above.

2 examining our upper-level elective course offerings; and

• See Report under Goal 5 above.

3 deciding whether, and if so how, to create small sections in the first-year course schedule, in addition to legal writing.

Re: The 140 Plan: Towards a Smaller and Stronger Law School

I. Executive Summary

Demand for legal education across the country has dropped dramatically in the last few years. Structural factors in both the legal job market and legal education suggest that this dampened demand for legal education will continue for the foreseeable future. These factors include the high cost of legal education, changes in the way legal education is financed, a significant drop in starting legal salaries, the rise of the technology-driven legal services outsourcing industry, and the fact that law schools graduate roughly twice as many new lawyers as there are legal jobs. As a result, applications for the Fall 2012 entering class at C|M|LAW are down by nearly 30 percent.

As the pool of law school applicants has shrunk, competition for new students has increased. Law schools in the top tier of the U.S. News rankings are accepting students with weaker credentials (LSAT scores and undergraduate GPAs) to fill their entering classes. As a result, the pool of applicants available to lower-ranked law schools like C|M|LAW is not only smaller, but also has such weak entering credentials that many applicants would be unlikely to pass the bar exam if they were admitted to the law school. Even if they were to pass the bar exam, these weaker students would face difficulty finding employment in a highly competitive environment. Lower bar passage rates and job placement percentages would damage C|M|LAW’s reputation and rankings, deter future applications to the law school, and create a downward spiral from which we might not recover.

To address these serious challenges, we believe it is critical that C|M|LAW reduce its target entering class size to 140 students beginning with the Fall 2012 semester. This will permit the law school to be selective in filling each entering class from the weaker applicant pools of the next several years, and help us at least maintain current relative bar passage and job placement levels. It will also permit us to be more agile and responsive in meeting the educational needs of students who will graduate into a starkly different legal practice world.
II. The Current Crisis in Legal Education

Law schools are faced with the confluence of three factors that pose the most serious threat in decades to the viability of the current model of legal education. These factors are a shrinking job market, widespread criticisms of the traditional legal education model, and a bubble in law school student loans.

A. A Shrinking Legal Job Market

According to the National Association for Legal Placement, 45,000 legal jobs have been lost in the U.S. over the last four years. Much of this job loss has been precipitated by the financial crisis of 2008. However, even before the crisis, a decade of growth in legal hiring had begun to taper off as clients became more cost-conscious and began to force law firms to function more efficiently; the number of law firm jobs actually peaked in 2004. Thus, even as some job growth has begun to return across the economy in the wake of the financial crisis, the legal profession continues to contract—losing another roughly 3,000 jobs in 2011, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. Previous levels of legal employment are not likely to return, if at all, for a number of years. It will take several years for the job market to absorb the lawyers who lost their jobs in the wake of the financial crisis. More important, however, is the role of simple economics and technology in the transformation of the legal services sector.

Traditionally, law firms provided what was viewed as a highly customized service. The law firm business model was a pyramid, with large numbers of associates at the bottom and a small number of partners at the top. Associates were trained on the job, their time was billed to clients at high hourly rates, and partners collected the profits. In the late 1990s, this model began to come under pressure as clients refused to pay for associate training. Law firms were forced to find ways to cut costs and a number of entrepreneurial companies emerged to assist them. Legal process outsourcing companies employed contract lawyers—sometimes offshore—to provide routine document review, discovery, and research and drafting services to firms at lower cost. Much of this work is now being done with the aid of highly sophisticated software that greatly reduces the need for lawyers. Additionally, there are a number of online services that provide legal forms and ready-made research solutions at a fraction of the price charged by law firms. The legal jobs lost as a result of these sorts of technology-driven efficiency gains will not return.

The diminished demand for lawyers has not been met with a corresponding reduction in supply. Each year, U.S. law schools graduate some 45,000 new lawyers into a market that Bureau of Labor is projected to create only 25,000 jobs each year from now through 2018. In Ohio, law schools produce roughly twice as many lawyers as there are legal job openings each year. There have been repeated calls for the closing of one or more of Ohio’s public law schools, most recently in a Columbus Dispatch article reprinted in the Cleveland Plain Dealer on Monday, March 26th, entitled “Law grads: lots of debt, few jobs.” See Appendix A.
As a result of the over-supply of lawyers, aggregate starting legal salaries have declined by 20 percent nationwide. The median national starting salary for the class of 2010 fell 13 percent—to $63,000 from $72,000. See Appendix A. An increasing number of law school graduates who do find employment work in low-paying, temporary contract or staff attorney positions. Many law school graduates work as paralegals. C|M|LAW is fortunate to have led all Ohio public law schools in the percentage of 2010 graduates who were employed in full-time legal jobs nine months after graduation. See Appendix B. However, roughly a third of our 2010 graduates still have not found jobs that require their law degrees, and this year’s numbers are worse; nine months after graduation, only 51.5 percent of our 2011 graduates had found full-time jobs that required their JD.

B. Criticisms of the Current Legal Education Model

A second factor in the crisis facing law schools is widespread criticism of the current legal education model. Three recent New York Times articles highlight these emerging complaints. The first, titled “What they Don’t Teach Law Students: Lawyering,” repeats the often-heard claim that law schools don’t train students in the practical skills necessary to function as effective lawyers after graduation. This claim is not new. The 2007 Carnegie Foundation report “Educating Lawyers: Preparation for the Profession of Law” concluded that law schools do a good job of teaching critical thinking and legal analysis but fail to adequately teach students “how to use legal thinking in the complexity of actual law practice.”

Although virtually all law schools now offer students various forms of practical training, such training was not an historical focus of most law schools for two reasons. First, law firms traditionally provided practical training under the pyramid model described above. Second, law school faculty members generally are not well suited to supply such training, as many tenured or tenure-track law professors have not actually practiced law in years, if ever. Nonetheless, this criticism has led to calls for radical changes in legal education, including elimination of the third year of law school, the addition of a fourth year, conversion of the law degree to an undergraduate degree (as in the U.K, for example), and requiring legal apprenticeships. Law schools are wrestling with the extent to which these and other proposed reforms should be part of the future of legal education.

Many such proposed reforms will only exacerbate another frequent complaint about law schools addressed in two other recent New York Times articles—the high cost of legal education. “Law School Economics: Ka-Ching!” and “For Law Schools, a Price to Play the ABA’s Way” note that law school tuition has risen four times faster than college costs. It is clear is that the cost structure for legal education is not sustainable. In 2010, the average debt load of 85 percent of law graduates was $98,500. At twenty-nine schools, the average student debt load exceeded $120,000. In a period of declining legal jobs and declining legal salaries, such debt loads will saddle law students with a heavy financial obligation for decades.
C. Law School Financing

The third factor creating the current crisis for legal education is related to the increasing cost of legal education. This increase in tuition costs has been subsidized (and exacerbated) by a virtually unlimited supply of private student loan dollars guaranteed by the federal government. Beginning in 2008, the federal government began to purchase the loans it had guaranteed, and under the Student Aid and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 2010, ceased guaranteeing loans altogether. Instead, the Act provides that the U.S. government, through the Education Department, now makes student loans directly. The Act also ended the federal subsidy for interest on student loans accrued while a student is in school, thus significantly increasing the cost of financing a legal education.

As legal salaries cease to provide sufficient income to retire heavy law school debt loads, the federal government no doubt will re-examine the wisdom of making tens of billions of dollars in loans to law students each year. Student loan servicing experts fully expect that Congress will impose some type of cap on law school loans in the very near future. The gap between law school tuition and capped federal law school loans may be filled by private lenders, but at higher interest rates that could put the cost of law school out of reach for many students.

III. Consequences: A Diminished Applicant Pool and Bar Passage Risk

Each of the factors discussed above has contributed to the largest decline in law school applications in decades. The most recent report from the Law School Admissions Council shows that applications are in decline for 87 percent of ABA-accredited law schools, with the overall number of applicants for the entering class of 2012 down 16.7 percent. The news is particularly bad at C|M|LAW, where applications currently are down by nearly 30 percent. This section describes how the shrinking applicant pool and the declining quality of the entering credentials of the students in that pool presents a serious bar passage issue for the law school.

A critical objective for C|M|LAW is to ensure that our graduates are able to successfully navigate the bar examination, passage of which is required in order to practice law in the State of Ohio. Graduates who fail the bar exam have dim employment prospects and are faced with the challenge of repaying their law school indebtedness on a salary lower than that earned by practicing lawyers. From 1997 to 2003, C|M|LAW’s bar passage rate ranged from 66 percent to 75 percent, which routinely placed it in the bottom half of all Ohio law schools. The CSU Board of Trustees became concerned about the continuing low bar passage rate of C|M|LAW graduates and, in 2003, passed a resolution requiring C|M|LAW to achieve a bar passage rate that would place it in the top one-third of Ohio’s law schools within five years. The Board’s resolution is attached as Appendix C. In response, C|M|LAW developed its Action Plan for Improving CSU Bar Passage Rates (the “2003 Plan”).

The 2003 Plan noted that C|M|LAW’s low bar-passage rate was attributable in part to declining law school applications in the mid- to late-1990s that prevented us from being more selective in the quality of student admitted and particularly affected the bottom quarter of the entering class. In addition, the 2003 Plan observed that two of our closest competitors, the University of Akron and the University of Toledo, substantially improved the composition of their entering classes, through a combination of scholarships, reduction in size, or bar passage programs and thereby enhanced their bar-passage scores to C|M|LAW’s relative disadvantage. The 2003 Plan concluded that a much more structured, permanent bar-passage program with adequate funding and personnel was required to move the law school towards the Trustees’ ambitious bar-passage goal. Accordingly, among other matters, the 2003 Plan called for a reduction in entering class size of at least 10 students per year over five years, with a target of 200 entering students in 2009.

Under the leadership of former Dean Geoffrey Mearns, the decrease in entering class size mandated by the 2003 Plan resulted in a significant improvement in Law School Admissions Test (LSAT) scores among our applicants. This, in turn, drove dramatic improvements in bar passage rates. The July bar passage rate of our students rose from 75 percent in 2004 to a high-water mark of 90 percent (2nd highest among the nine Ohio law schools) in 2007. That year’s performance placed C|M|LAW in the top one-third of Ohio law schools within the five year timeframe mandated by the 2003 Board Resolution.

More recently, however, as reflected in the 2010 Annual Report on Improving Cleveland-Marshall’s Bar Passage Rates, the bar passage rate has fallen, with Cleveland-Marshall ranking 4th in July 2008 among Ohio law schools, 5th in July 2009, and 6th in 2010. Our slide continued last year, as C|M|LAW fell to 7th on the July 2011 bar exam. More importantly, among Ohio public law schools, C|M|LAW has been dead last since 2009. A chart of the law school’s relative bar passage performance is attached as Appendix D. The law school’s annual bar report for 2010 observed that the “trend toward growth in the top LSAT score ranges and reductions in the lower LSAT ranges” would not continue for the entering class of 2010 for reasons that were not clear at the time. As it turned out, 2010 marked the beginning of what has become the most dramatic drop in law school applications in decades.

Nationally, law school applications for the entering class of 2011 dropped 11.5 percent from the prior year to the lowest level in a decade. At C|M|LAW, applications dropped 13.5 percent. Just as in the early 1990s, this decline resulted in both a much smaller overall pool of applicants and a decline in the quality of that pool as measured by LSAT scores, particularly within the 25th percentile of the class. To prevent a substantial drop in the median LSAT score of the entering class of 2011, we admitted a class of 167 students, rather than the 200-students targeted in the 2003 Plan. Notwithstanding a reduction of 33 students, the median LSAT for the entering class of 2011 dropped from 155 to 154, a significant decline given the compression in LSAT scores among the nation’s law schools.

Entering class LSAT scores are important because they are the strongest predictor of success on the bar exam. Based on analysis of entering LSAT scores of students taking the bar exam in prior years, CSU Institutional Research & Analysis director Tom Geaghan has concluded that students with LSAT scores at or below 152 are at significant risk of failing the bar exam. Had we admitted 200 students in Fall 2011, more than a quarter of the class would have had an LSAT of 149 or below and been at substantial risk of bar failure. Unfortunately, the law school application pool for 2012 is worse than that for 2011. Law school applications presently are down by nearly 30 percent from last year. See Appendix E. If these figures hold through the admissions season, admitting an entering class of even 168 students, as we did last fall, would produce another drop in our median LSAT score and likely unravel all the progress we’ve made in bar passage rates since the 2003 Plan was implemented.

IV. Toward a Smaller, Stronger Law School

Notwithstanding the bleak outlook for legal employment and legal education over the next few years, C|M|LAW is well positioned not only to survive, but also to thrive in this environment, if we adopt a strategy that again substantially reduces the size of the law school entering class. To borrow from the language of the 2003 Plan, we need to be “a smaller and stronger law school.”

A. The Goal: 140 Students

We propose that beginning in the fall of 2012, the target entering class size at C|M|LAW be 140 students. We recognize that the law school downsized significantly from 2004 through 2009. As noted above, the entering class size was reduced over those five years from 250 to 200. However, our law school competitors were smaller than we were in 2004 and have continued to downsize over the intervening years. Even with 200 entering students, we are larger than all other Ohio public law schools except Ohio State, and are third-largest among the nine Ohio public law schools. A target entering class size of 140 would make us the sixth-largest among the nine Ohio law schools and third-largest among Ohio public law schools based on current enrollments. See Appendix F.

We considered a stepped decrease to achieve the 140 target but rejected that approach because the decline in application volume is concentrated among prospective students with the best LSAT scores and UGPAs. This means that enrolling a class any larger than 140 for this fall would cause an immediate significant drop in our entering class credentials and pose a serious threat to our bar-passage rates. By immediately reducing our target class size to 140 students—rather than simply playing catch-up again—we will be able to take advantage of the benefits of a smaller class described in the following section, and also make progress in overtaking our peer schools in critical performance metrics.

B. The Benefits of a Smaller Class

There are a host of benefits that will result from admitting a class of 140 students. These include improvement in the quality of our entering class as measured by LSAT and undergraduate GPA scores, improved bar-passage rates, larger student scholarship awards, better job-placement statistics, enhanced experiential learning opportunities for our students, and likely improvement in our U.S. News and World Report ranking.

Entering Class Quality. The most important benefit of reducing the target entering class size to 140 students will be the maintenance of the quality of the class as measured by both LSAT scores and undergraduate GPA. As noted above, notwithstanding a reduction of 32 students in the 2011 entering class size (from 200 to 167), the median LSAT score for the 2011 entering class fell from 155 to 154. Adding even one additional student to the 2011 entering class would have caused a further one-point drop in median LSAT, and filling a class of 200 would have meant that 25 percent of the class would have had an LSAT of 149 or below. This reflects the extremely low LSAT scores in the overall applicant pool and the need to reduce class size further in order to maintain or see improvement in our entering LSAT scores.

Had our entering class for 2011 been 140 students, rather than 168, our median LSAT would have increased by at least one point—to 156. Our 25th and 75th percentile scores would also have increased by one point each—to 153 and 158, respectively. See Appendix G. Our median undergraduate GPA also would have been higher. This would have likely had a significant positive impact on each of the following areas, which comprise a significant portion of the U.S. News and World Report rankings factors.

Improved Bar Passage Rates. According to Institutional Research and Analysis director Tom Geaghan, each one-point gain in LSAT translates to roughly a 15 percent increase in our bar passage rate, or an increase of 1.53 percentage points. Improving the entering credentials of our students will have a positive effect on our bar passage rate, which, as noted above has fallen to the point that we now place 7th among the nine Ohio law schools and last among Ohio public law schools. If our entering median LSAT were 157 rather than 155 (for the 2008 class taking the July bar exam), we could reasonably expect a bar passage rate of close to 90 percent, rather than 85%.

Larger Scholarship Budget. With an entering class of 140 students and a 9.5 percent increase in our hard-dollar scholarship budget resulting from a tuition increase of that percentage, we will finally be competitive with our peer regional schools in the scholarship dollars per student that we will be able to offer. Currently, 36.7 percent of our full-time students receive scholarship assistance, the lowest percentage among Ohio law schools. See Appendix H. The school with the next lowest percentage is Toledo, with 53.8 percent—significantly higher than C|M|LAW. At $8,238, our average scholarship award is also the lowest among Ohio law schools, with the exception of Cincinnati, which because of its top-50 U.S. News ranking does not need to offer as much scholarship support to attract students. See Appendix I.

Reducing the entering class size to 140 students not only will increase our scholarship budget, it also will permit us to spread those scholarship dollars over a smaller number of students. Thus, we will have the strategic flexibility to either increase our average scholarship award from $8,238 to as much as $13,688 per student to compete for students with the highest entering credentials, or make somewhat smaller scholarship awards to a larger percentage of students. See Appendices I and J.
Better Job Placement Percentages. Closely related to improved bar passage rates will be an increase in the percentage of our students who find employment in jobs. We did well in placing the graduating class of 2010 in full-time jobs that required a law degree within nine months of graduation; we led all Ohio public law schools with just over 67 percent. However, for the graduating class of 2011, our placement numbers fell dramatically—to just over 51 percent. This drop in placement percentage reflects, in part, the fact that roughly 20 percent of the graduating class of 2011 had not passed the bar exam nine months after graduation.

Reducing entering class size and the attendant improvement in our bar passage rates will have a positive impact on our job placement percentages. It is important to note that in the current legal employment environment both bar passage and job placement statistics are critical considerations for prospective students choosing among law school options.

Experiential Learning for All Students. C|M|LAW strives to be a model of experiential education by offering a broad array of “Engagement Experiences” that provide real-world learning opportunities to the law school’s students. These Engagement Experiences consist of clinics, in which students represent clients under the supervision of clinical faculty, and externships, which allow students to gain legal experience by working off-campus with judges, in government offices, and in various non-profit and for-profit organizations. The practical skills acquired in these Engagement Experiences make C|M|LAW students attractive to employers and are therefore a critical part of the law school’s plan to raise its job placement rate.

Unfortunately, only a small number of students currently are able to participate in an Engagement Experience because the number of students that the clinical faculty is able to supervise is limited, as is the number of externship placements. Although the law school is moving aggressively to expand the number of Engagement Experiences, it still will not be possible to offer an Engagement Experience to every student with current enrollment numbers. However, a reduction in the size of the student body to 140 students coupled with an expansion in the number of Engagement Experiences will enable the law school to reach its goal of having every student participate in a clinic or externship prior to graduation.

Improvement in U.S. News and World Report Rankings. There are a multitude of flaws in the U.S. News Rankings. However, we ignore the rankings at our peril because many students rely heavily upon them in selecting a law school. Improved entering class quality, bar passage rates and job placement are important independent goals, but they also are significant components of the rankings, and as we improve in each of these categories our overall U.S. News ranking should rise as well. Implementation of the 140 Plan will also positively affect other critical components of the U.S. News rankings, including direct and indirect expenditures per student, faculty-student ratio, and acceptance rate (selectivity).

How well a law school performs in the U.S. News rankings depends on whether it improves relative to other law schools. To date, only two of the nine Ohio law schools have indicated that they will reduce class size in response to declining applications. The six Ohio law schools and five Ohio public law schools other than C|M|LAW have stated that they do not intend to change their entering class sizes in 2012. Thus, by adopting the 140 Plan, C|M|LAW has an opportunity to make significant gains in the U.S. News rankings relative to our peer schools. This upward movement in rankings will bring with it an increase in future applications from students with better entering credentials, which in turn improves each of these components in an upward cycle.

V. Financing a Smaller Class: Increasing Tuition

Reducing class size obviously decreases tuition revenue and will require an increase in tuition. However, C|M|LAW is fortunate relative to other law schools facing application decline challenges because our tuition currently is the lowest in the state of Ohio. This will permit us to raise our tuition and still provide a legal education for our students that will be among the two least expensive among Ohio law schools in 2013. See Appendix K. (This assumes that other schools will not raise tuition. Several schools have indicated that they will raise tuition for FY13, as well. See Appendix L.) At the same time, we have the opportunity to eliminate the inevitable negative perception associated with being the “cheapest” law school in the state of Ohio and will likely see a higher yield from the prospective students we admit.

We don’t believe we should take increasing our students’ tuition lightly. In setting the appropriate upper limit on tuition, we calculated the total discounted cost of attendance (including tuition and fees, room, board and transportation) over three years at various tuition levels, estimated the percentage of that cost financed by our students through school loans to determine total indebtedness at graduation, and determined the resulting monthly payments on that debt. These calculations are set forth in Appendix M. We then capped our proposed tuition increase at a percentage that would keep total student law school indebtedness under $100,000.

Graphing the distribution of starting law salaries produces a bimodal curve, as illustrated in Appendix N. This means that although a small percentage of law graduates earn starting salaries that cluster around $160,000 per year, a much larger percentage of starting salaries range from $40,000 to $65,000. If we keep law school indebtedness below $100,000, students will be able to retire their debt whether they obtain employment in either salary range. We believe this gives us a competitive advantage relative to private law schools in Ohio that have higher tuition structures and rely more heavily on placing their students in the diminishing number of jobs available in large law firms.

To keep average student indebtedness under $100,000, we can increase current tuition by no more than 9.5 percent in each of the next three years. This will raise tuition from the current level of $18,350 to $24,092. The University’s budgeting process assumes an annual law school tuition increase of 3.5 percent. We believe that this ongoing expectation is high, given the general state of the legal education market over the next 3 to 5 years, and we would encourage the administration to reconsider this target. However, assuming that the 3.5 percent baseline increase remains in place, we will be able to count only a 5.5 percent tuition increase as additional revenue in attempting to close the budget gap that will result from an entering class of 140 students. Appendix O contains a calculation of the tuition revenue that the law school will generate from FY13 through FY16 assuming a 9.5 percent tuition increase in each of FY13, FY14, and FY15.

VI. Financing a Smaller Class: Budget Reductions

In addition to increasing tuition, reducing target entering class size to 140 students will require significant budget cuts. Based on the assumption of an entering class size of 140 students and a tuition increase of 9.5 percent in each of FY13, FY14 and FY15, the Provost has asked the law school to propose budget cuts at three alternative levels: $500,000, $900,000, and $1.3 million. To develop these budget cut models, I formed a Budget Advisory Committee to evaluate the current budget and identify potential cost savings. The members of the Committee are Associate Professor Brian Ray, Director of the Office of Career Planning Jen Blaga, Office Manager Laverne Carter, Law Library Director and Professor Kristina Niedringhaus, Associate Dean of Administration Mark Sundahl, Associate Dean of Academic Enrichment Heidi Gorovitz Robertson, Budget Director Jeane White and Director of the Legal Writing Program and Legal Writing Professor Carolyn Broering-Jacobs.

Our goals in developing these alternatives included enhancing experiential learning, improving our graduates’ bar passage rates; efficiently expanding our public relations, communications and admissions functions; increasing our development capacity to raise greater resources from alumni and friends of the Law School; and improving the quality of services to students, particularly in the areas of financial aid counseling and career placement. Not everyone on the Committee agreed on the order of these goals, but we agreed on their importance.

[The following reflects actual budget cuts required by the Provost and implemented in connection with the 140 Plan.]

On May 9, 2012, Provost Geoffrey S. Mearns sent a memo to Dean Craig M. Boise regarding the proposed 140 Plan. He stated that after consulting with President Berkman he had decided to approve our request. In order to offset the decline in tuition revenue, he required us to make the following adjustments to the law school’s annual operating budget.

1. The Provost will propose to the Board of Trustees that the law school tuition be increased by approximately 9.5% in each of the next three academic years (i.e., FY 13, FY 14, and FY 15). The Board approved this tuition increase.

2. The law school’s operating budget will be decreased in FY13 by $800,559. This was achieved by:

   Non-renewal of Visiting Legal Writing Professor position $75,174

This would leave a legal writing faculty of six professors, including the Director of Legal Writing. Five professors would teach the Legal Research, Writing and Advocacy course to a reduced class of 140 students. The Director of Legal writing would teach in the upper-level writing courses and develop a uniform curriculum for the use of adjuncts teaching those upper-level courses.

Elimination of Government Information Librarian $88,941
This will require the Law Library to withdraw from the Federal Depository Library Program as well as end our cooperative service to Michael Schwartz Library in support of their government documents program. The position also performs reference and instructional support service as one of a team of six. Eliminating the position would require a nearly 20 percent reduction in those services, assuming the library is permitted to fill two current pending vacancies.

Non-replacement of Professor Veronica Dougherty Position Savings $140,775

Non-replacement of Professor Tom Buckley Position Savings $178,598

Conversion of Professor Heidi Robertson to 9-month Contract $40,539
Professor Robertson currently is Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment on a 12-month contract. She would be switched to a 9-month contract, paid an administrative stipend, and be eligible for summer research grants. This would shift a significant portion of her compensation from hard dollars to soft dollars.

Conversion of Professor Alan Weinstein to 9-month Contract $29,685
Professor Weinstein currently is Director of Dual Degree Programs and the Law and Public Policy Program, and is on a 12-month contract. He would be switched to a 9-month contract, paid an administrative stipend and be eligible for summer research grants. This would permit us to shift a significant portion of his compensation from hard dollars to soft dollars.

Other position savings from New Hires $76,585

Instructional Maintenance Reductions $5,000

Dean’s Supplies Reductions $4,000

Savings from Reorganization of Academic Excellence/ Bar Passage, Admissions, and Student Life Functions $25,843
These savings result from a broad reorganization of several functions within the law school that include the elimination of the Manager of Academic Support position held by Daniel Dropko; the addition of a stipend paid to legal writing professor and new Director of Academic Excellence, Kelly Curtis; the elimination of two Admissions Manager positions and the creation of new Assistant Director of Admissions and Admissions Specialist positions; the elimination of the Manager of Student Affairs position and creation of a new Director of Student Life and Financial Aid position; and the creation of a new Communications Specialist position.

Elimination of a Secretary for Legal Writing Professors $53,242
Terri Collier retired from this position and her duties will be assigned to another member of the secretarial staff.

Reductions in Operations Budget $70,382
Savings from Replacement of IT Director

$11,795

If the current IT Director position is filled, these savings would result from hiring a replacement at a lower starting salary.

3. Over the following three years (FY 14, FY15 and FY16), the law school will also be required to reduce the tenure track salary expenses by $750,000. These savings will be achieved through attrition (i.e., retirement or resignation). The cumulative total is the sum of salary and fringe benefits.

VII. Conclusion

At this critical juncture in the evolution of legal education, C|M|LAW faces serious challenges. Reducing our entering class size to 140 will help us survive these challenges by maintaining the critical admissions selectivity that will ensure that our admitted students are capable of passing the bar examination and becoming practicing lawyers. More importantly, coupled with some of the curricular and programmatic changes outlined above, a smaller class size will enable us to thrive as we continue to anticipate the direction that the evolving legal services industry will take and respond in ways that will best prepare our students to build meaningful and fulfilling careers in the law.
The number of people taking the law-school admission test spiked after the Great Recession hit in 2007. But it has dropped more than 16 percent this year, the largest decline in more than a decade.

Many think the drop is an indication that prospective students have realized that the job market for law-school graduates hasn’t been this bad since the mid-1990s. Others think law schools should be taking steps to stop churning out more graduates than the market can bear while at the same time saddling them with huge debt.

"Things have really collapsed in the last two to three years," said Peter Koltak, 24, of Upper Arlington, who is a second-year law student at Ohio State University. "Paid summer positions for law-school students have gone from 20 to 30 openings to just two or three in some cases.

"And the number of jobs available for new graduates has dropped exponentially."

This school year, nearly 130,000 people took the LSAT, compared with about 155,000 a year ago and more than 171,000 in the peak year of 2009-10, according to the Law School Admission Council.

Ohio has five public law schools, more than any other state except California, which also has five.

"It doesn’t make any sense. California’s population is more than three times as large as Ohio’s," said Jason Dolin, an adjunct professor at Capital University Law School who is concerned about the overabundance of law-school graduates.

In 2009, Ohio had 1,194 people pass the bar exam, compared with an estimated 686 job openings — resulting in a surplus of 508 lawyers, the Ohio Board of Regents said.

"We have too many lawyers," regents Chancellor Jim Petro said.

Petro would like to shift some of the state funding that is currently earmarked to help subsidize the cost of teaching law students to Ohio’s medical schools to help fill a national shortage of doctors. The Association of Americas Medical Colleges estimates that the U.S. is short 13,700 doctors in all specialties. That number is predicted to hit 63,000 by 2015 and more than double by 2025.

Lawmakers rejected Petro’s recommendation during the last state budget process, but he is considering introducing a similar measure in the future. The state needs to help the medical schools increase their enrollments to bolster Ohio’s prosperity, he said.

The overall employment rate for new law-school graduates across the country was 87.6 percent in 2010, the lowest it has been since 1996, according to the National Association for Law Placement. And only 68 percent of the graduates obtained jobs requiring a law degree: 27 percent of the jobs were temporary, and 11 percent were part time, said James Leipold, the association’s executive director.

“There is likely more bad news to come,” Leipold said, although he disagrees that the U.S. has too many lawyers.

Despite perceptions that lawyers all make six-figure salaries, the national median starting salary for the class of 2010 was $65,000, down almost 13 percent from the previous class. The median salary in Ohio is just below that.

Most new graduates also are still paying off their law-school education, often into middle age, advocates for fewer lawyers said. In the 2009-10 school year, public law-school students averaged $68,827 of debt, and private law-school students $106,249, according to the American Bar Association.

“Many students are gambling the equivalent of a home mortgage on their legal educations,” Dolin said.

Ohio would be better served by having one or two fewer public law schools, he said. “If law schools were at all sensitive to market forces, they would be shutting their doors or at least reducing their head count.”

He said law schools often give students misleading information about employment and starting-salary prospects to entice more students to apply and increase the schools’ rankings.

“They categorize employment as any post-law-school job — from a U.S.
Supreme Court clerkship to flipping burgers at a fast-food restaurant — in the same manner, saying a job is a job, when it clearly is not,” Dolin said.

But Alan C. Michaels, dean of OSU’s Moritz College of Law, said the school provides prospective students with straightforward facts about their job prospects.

The legal profession is just one of many fields hit hard by the recession, he said. “Law-school applications go up and down all the time. They are down right now as part of a market response.”

To better prepare students to work, Ohio State has added several courses in which students simulate trials, negotiations, settlements and other legal procedures to bring what they’ve learned in theory to life, Michaels said.

The university has also increased fieldwork placements and added a law and leadership program, several practical problem-solving courses for third-year students and a new one-year fellowship that matches new graduates with the general-counsel offices of several leading national corporations.

“Right now, Ohio State has the most strongly credentialed student body in the history of the law school, and they are graduating and going out there and making a difference,” he said.

Sara Smith, 23, of Athens, who is a second-year law student at Ohio State, expects to graduate next year with $100,000 in undergraduate and law-school loans. But she still wouldn’t choose another career, even though she knows she will be on the lower end of the pay range when she finds a job.
"Public-defense work is my passion," she said.

Nonetheless, Smith can't imagine why anyone who isn't absolutely sure they want to become a lawyer would go to law school in this incredibly tight job market.

"That would be crazy," she said.

The Board of Trustees’ Resolution Regarding Law School Bar Passage

At its June 25, 2003 meeting, Cleveland State University’s Board of Trustees approved the following resolution:

RESOLUTION 2003-36
STANDARDS FOR ADMISSION TO THE COLLEGE OF LAW AND CURRICULUM REVIEW

BE IT RESOLVED, that the Provost and the President, with all reasonable speed, be directed to work with the faculty to establish admissions standards for the College of Law to include undergraduate academic performance, LSAT scores, and other appropriate criteria designed to achieve a passage rate of the Ohio State Bar Examination, which would place the College of Law in the top one-third of such colleges with regard to the bar passage rate annually; and that they inform the Board of Trustees of said standards, and that the Provost and/or the President report to the Board of Trustees on an annual basis the results of said standards with the goal of achieving the top one-third standard within five years.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that the Provost and the President are instructed to meet with the Dean of the College of Law and appropriate members of the law faculty to review curriculum and other support mechanisms for achieving the goal of reaching the top one-third standards.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Craig Boise, Dean
FROM: Christopher Lucak, Assistant Dean for Admission and Financial Aid
DATE: April 4, 2012
REGARDING: Scholarships and the 140 Plan

Based on the assumptions of the 140 plan that include increased hard-dollar scholarship at 9.5% and that we continue to award scholarships to generally 40% of the incoming class, I project that the average scholarship award will increase to $13,688 per student. Though this dollar amount will not provide greater depth in the scholarship pool, it will make our offers increasingly competitive for the most desirable students.

Distribution of Reported Full-Time Salaries

Note: The graph above is based on 18,398 salaries. A few salaries above $200,000 are excluded for clarity. The left-hand peaks of the graph reflect salaries of $40,000 to $65,000, which collectively accounted for about 48% of reported salaries. The right-hand peak shows that salaries of $160,000 accounted for about 18% of reported salaries. However, more complete salary coverage for jobs at large law firms heightens this peak and diminishes the left-hand peaks — and shows that the unadjusted mean overstates the average starting salary by about 9%. Nonetheless, as both the arithmetic mean and the adjusted mean show, relatively few salaries are close to either mean figure. For purposes of this graph, all reported salaries were rounded to the nearest $5,000.

APPENDIX O - Budget Cal. 140 Plan A-L.xlsx, 4/13/12 Curriculum Reform Initiative

C|M|LAW has adopted a curriculum reform initiative that we believe will better prepare our students for the current demands of an evolving legal profession. This curricular reform was a result of a multi-year process in which the faculty studied the current nature of the profession, the needs of the legal market, and the realities of legal practice in the 21st century. We consulted with practitioners and other members of the C|M|LAW community to determine how our curriculum should develop to best serve our students. The components of these changes are summarized here:

First, to correct an academic overload problem in the spring of the current 1L curriculum, and to provide space for a Legislation and Regulation course, the 1L curriculum will be "semesterized." This means that Torts, Contracts, Property and Civil Procedure will become 4 credit-hour semester-long courses. Legal Writing will continue to be a year-long course and Criminal Law will remain unchanged.

Second, a new course, Legislation and Regulation, will be added to the first semester of the 1L curriculum. This course will introduce our students to the institutions and procedures used by the modern administrative state to make law. The faculty voted to add this course to the 1L curriculum in light of the expanding role played by regulatory agencies in many aspects of society.

Third, C|M|LAW will infuse greater skills training into the curriculum by allowing students to satisfy the existing "skills course" requirement only by taking courses that offer students a truly experiential approach to skills development. The law school will also embark on a new effort to expand our experiential learning opportunities by increasing the number and variety of externships and clinics.

Fourth, a Professionalism Problem of the Semester will be released every semester to infuse professionalism into the curriculum. This aspect of the new curriculum is already in effect. As part of this increased emphasis on ethics and professionalism, we are encouraging students to participate in the C|M|LAW Pro Bono Program so that they are introduced to the pro bono ethic that distinguishes the legal profession.

Reorganization of Academic Support

C|M|LAW is restructing our Academic Support function, which provides academic assistance to at-risk students. Currently, academic support is assigned to a Manager of Academic Excellence, who is supervised by our Director of Bar Preparation and Academic Support. Based on careful analysis of the academic problems faced by our at-risk, incoming students as they move from admissions, through law school, and ultimately to the bar exam, we believe it is desirable to move academic support from a staff managed position to a faculty supervised function. Under the new model, the Manager of the Academic Excellence Program position will be eliminated, and one of our Legal Writing professors will assume the counseling and individual academic support functions previously handled by the Manager of the Academic Excellence Program. The Legal Writing professor will assume the title, Director of Academic Support, and will report directly to the Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment, rather than to the Director of Bar Preparation.

The new Director of Academic Support will devise and carry out various academic support initiatives, including development and teaching of a special section of Legal Writing to which our most at-risk students will be assigned upon admission to the law school based on an index comprised of LSAT scores and undergraduate GPAs. The section will be smaller than our standard legal writing sections, allowing the Director of Academic Support time to work intensively and individually with these students. The Director also will select a few outstanding second-year students, known as AEP Fellows, and deploy them in assisting at-risk students.

By moving the academic support function to the faculty, from the staff, C|M|LAW believes it can better prepare our most at-risk students for success in law school, and ultimately, on the Ohio Bar Examination. In addition, because the associated functions will become faculty functions, they will be subject to more direct oversight by the Dean of the College of Law through the Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment. This will free up our Director of Bar Preparation to focus more closely on the many facets of bar preparation.

Bar Preparation Project

A critical part of the educational mission of C|M|LAW is preparing students to be licensed to practice law in the State of Ohio. For the last several years, we have collected information from C|M|LAW graduates who took the Ohio Bar Exam to help us identify factors and circumstances that place students at risk of failing the bar exam. The risk factors for bar failure we have identified to date include:

- low LSAT score
- low 1st year GPA
- failure to take a commercial bar preparation course
- failure to participate in the MPT workshops
- failure to take the first exam following graduation
- working during the bar preparation period.

The selectivity risk factors here--low LSAT and low 1L GPA will continue to be addressed through creative admissions strategies, the efficient use of scholarships, and by a renewed focus on raising scholarship funds as part of a revamped development effort at C|M|LAW.

Apart from the selectivity measures, each of the risk factors above relates to students’ failure adequately to prepare for the bar. Our strategy for addressing preparation-related risk factors is to insure that no student takes the bar exam without having first taken a bar preparation course. Accordingly, we are in final negotiations with the leading bar preparation company, BAR/BRI, to provide a bar preparation course for all of our graduating students. C|M|LAW will pay for this through a portion of a general tuition increase, so that students will not have to struggle to obtain tuition for the bar preparation course as they approach graduation. In addition, BAR/BRI will teach the Ohio Bar Exam Strategies and Tactics course periodically; offer specialized workshops for all graduating students on bar essays, performance tests, and other related topics; and provide data on which students are completing the bar preparation course requirements, and which are not, so that we can follow up with the students and encourage full course participation. BAR/BRI will provide bar training for students who take the bar exam in Ohio, as well as those who choose to go to other states.

Reorganization of Admissions Office and Student Services

With continued declines in law fair attendance, the number of students visiting the law school, and in national application volumes, it is important to strategically direct our staff resources to better attract and enroll talented and diverse students. While our traditional model of extensive recruitment travel and hosting various open house events has been generally successful, prospective students are increasingly technology savvy and are approaching their law school search aided by emerging technologies and social media. The recent Law School Admission Council’s Electronic Services Conference made evident the advances our competitors are making in their electronic presence through blogs, chats, electronic newsletters, Facebook, Twitter, You Tube, flickr, Scribd, and slideshare. Technology is transforming the recruitment process and setting the expectations of our prospective students.

Accordingly, the admissions function at C|M|LAW will be reorganized by eliminating one Admissions Coordinator and creating a salaried Assistant Director position responsible for recruitment and counseling services; and replacing the other Admissions Coordinator with an Admissions Specialist having technology and social media expertise who will be responsible for all electronic communication, social media presence, and the identification and implementation of emerging technology and media trends. Each of these staff positions will have responsibilities in file review, yield activities, and other duties as assigned.

To fulfill some of the duties of the Manager of Student Affairs position that was vacated last fall, we will create a new Director of Student Life position and fill the position internally. The Director will assume a variety of student-related responsibilities including oversight of SBA funding and administration, which will be shifted to the Law School from the University; liaison with student organizations; financial aid counseling; management of our Loan Repayment Assistance Program (LSAP); various diversity and inclusion initiatives; and general oversight of student experiences at C|M|LAW.

Reorganization of Advancement Function

The advancement function at C|M|LAW in 2010 was comprised of an Assistant Dean of External Affairs and a Development Officer, both funded by the law school budget, and a Director of Development and a Development Associate both funded by the University. The Director of Development position was vacated in June of 2010 and never filled, and both the Assistant Dean and Development Officer positions were vacated in December of 2011. The University defunded the Development Associate position and the law school assumed budgetary responsibility for that position in January of 2012. A new Director of Advancement position was created and filled in September of 2011. As a result of these changes, the law school’s advancement function was effectively reduced from four positions to two. We will add a new, entry-level Development Operations Coordinator position as part of the reorganization of the advancement function, thus achieving both significant cost-savings and what we expect to be much more effective advancement efforts.

Reorganization of Communications Function

Over the last year, it has become clear that the role of communications, marketing and public relations is of increasing importance in the extremely competitive recruitment environment in which the law school must operate. We have had a single Communications Coordinator position to meet the growing demand for online and social media content; graphic art for flyers, posters, and three major annual alumni publications; graphics support for professional presentations; photography; website design; admissions office publication support; publications and online support for development; and other needs.

To meet the challenges for a better communications function, the law school is in the process of creating a Director of Marketing and Communications position to be staffed by our current Communications Coordinator and supported by a Marketing and Communications Specialist position to be filled by shifting an administrative support person with considerable online skills from the Admissions Office and replacing him with a temporary hire. This will better align key personnel with the emerging workload associated with marketing and communications for the 21\textsuperscript{st} century.

Revenue-Generating Programs

In order to meet the financial challenges in the current environment, C|M|LAW has been developing new revenue-generating programs that promise to not only attract new streams of revenue, but simultaneously strengthen the curriculum at the law school. Three new programs are being launched this summer and next fall: (1) a Master of Legal Studies program, (2) a Health Care Compliance Certificate program, and (3) the Great Lakes Sports and Entertainment Law Academy.

The Master of Legal Studies (MLS) program will be a degree designed for individuals who seek a better understanding of the law in order to advance their career, but who are not interested in obtaining a J.D. The MLS program will require students to complete the equivalent of one year of full-time study, consisting of 30 semester credit hours. The type of student who will likely pursue the MLS will be an individual who works regularly with lawyers or works in a highly regulated field (e.g., health care professionals, government employees, corporate managers, accountants, auditors, real estate agents, educators, court employees, law enforcement personnel, human resource professionals). In the early stages of the program we intend to target our marketing of the program to professionals in the health, law enforcement, and education fields.

The Health Care Compliance Certificate program was designed to enable law students, practicing lawyers, and non-lawyers to gain expertise in the field of health law compliance, which is one of the fastest-growing areas of employment. In addition to our current J.D. students, the program will attract practicing attorneys as well as other professionals such as doctors, social workers, MBA students, nurses and health care administrators. Upon accreditation of this program by the Compliance Certification Board, holders of the certificate will be eligible to sit for the CHC (Certified in Healthcare Compliance) exam and the CCEP
(Certified Compliance and Ethics Professional) exam. The certifications received upon passing these exams will make our certificate holders highly attractive in a competitive job market. Upon accreditation, C|M|LAW would be one of only five law schools in the country to offer this type of certificate program – and will be the only such program in Ohio.¹

The Great Lakes Sports & Entertainment Law Academy is an intensive three-week summer program in the field of sports and entertainment law that is open to law students from across the country. The program is a joint venture between C|M|LAW and Case Western Reserve University College of Law, although the program will be housed at C|M|LAW. The co-directors of the program are C|M|LAW professor Peter Carfagna, and CWRU professor Craig Nard. They will be joined by high-profile adjunct professionals in the fields of music and entertainment law. Select participants in the program can also earn the opportunity to take part in nine-week externships with local sports and entertainment organizations, such as the Cleveland Browns, to further develop their knowledge of these areas of law. In this inaugural year of the program approximately 70 students have enrolled (at a tuition of $2500 per student) – a number that exceeded our expectations and suggests that the program will be a successful revenue engine for years to come.

RE:      Committee Charges for 2012-13 Academic Year

DATE:    September 10, 2012

Below are the charges that I have provided to each law school committee. In order to maintain an accurate record of the work of each committee, chairs of Fall semester committees must provide me with a written report of the disposition of committee charges by December 21, 2012. Chairs of Spring semester and full-year committees must provide their reports by May 10, 2013. Thank you for your service to C|M|LAW!

Full Academic Year Committees

Academic Standards Committee  Michael Davis

In addition to reviewing student petitions, continuing its ongoing review of the academic regulations, and bringing to the attention of the administration grading practices that need to be examined, the Academic Standards Committee should

1. Prepare an annual report to the faculty describing its work on student petitions.

2. At the request of, and in consultation with, the Graduate Studies, International Programs & Dual-Degree Programs Committee, consider a recommendation to the faculty that LL.M students be exempt from the advisory grading guidelines.

3. Consider drafting a new Academic Regulation providing for the administrative withdrawal of a student who is consistently disruptive in class or exhibits threatening behavior to faculty or other students. This new regulation would be similar to Academic Regulation 1, which allows for the involuntary withdrawal of a student for excessive absences.

4. Consider (at the request of the Bar Exam Committee) raising the required minimum GPA at C|M|LAW from 2.0 to 2.25.
Bar Exam Committee

Susan Becker

The Committee should

1. Develop more comprehensive data analysis tools for identifying our students’ strengths and weaknesses related to the bar exam.
2. Gather and analyze data relevant to strengthening the bar pass program.
3. Prepare a summary report on bar exam outcomes for the benefit of the faculty.

Building Committee (not populated for 2011-12)

Curriculum Committee

Jonathan Witmer-Rich

The Curriculum Committee should

1. By October 31st, 2012, determine which courses currently offered will satisfy the experiential skills standards approved by the faculty in Spring 2012, and identify ways to expand our offerings, if necessary, to ensure that students are able to satisfy this requirement.
2. Solicit and evaluate proposals for new courses and proposals to make experimental courses permanent.
3. Consider the revision of our policy on externships to permit a student to engage in an externship with a non-faculty lawyer (whether in private practice, in-house, or in public service) with the approval of the Director of Engaged Learning and under the supervision of a member of the clinical faculty.
4. Clarify for every concentration the lowest grade a student may obtain in the concentration’s foundational courses (see 2010-2011 Student Handbook at 19 – Graduation Requirements and Course Selection Information, VIII.D. Concentrations).
5. Evaluate and, if appropriate, propose clarification whether the paper requirement for seminars (set forth in the Criteria for Designation of a Course as a seminar (see id. at 21)) satisfies the upper level writing requirement.
6. Evaluate and propose modifications if appropriate to the number and type of externships in which a student may enroll (see Academic Regulation 4.8 and 4.3).

Faculty Appointments Committee (not populated for 2011-12)

Updated 11/29/12.
Faculty Scholarship Committee
Christopher Sagers

The Faculty Scholarship Committee should

1. Using the Law Library's existing database as much as possible, conduct an evaluation of the scholarly productivity of faculty at C|M|LAW compared to peer schools. This evaluation should be specific and benchmark the influence of our faculty through books, book chapters, law review articles, essays, book reviews, citations, national media quotes, blogs, etc.

Graduate Studies, International Programs & Dual-Degree Programs Committee
Milena Sterio

The Graduate Studies, International Programs & Dual-Degree Programs Committee should

1. Evaluate each of the international programs and initiatives that C|M|LAW has been engaged in over the last 10 years (including Westminster, Brunell University, St. Petersburg, and our new status with the Bar Council of India); determine the one(s) from which we can derive the most benefit in terms of (a) faculty interest and professional development, (b) faculty and student research and scholarship collaboration; (c) student interest (for both our students traveling abroad and LL.M students coming here); (d) employment opportunities; (e) entrepreneurial programs; (f) faculty and University contacts and networks, and similar factors; recommend to the faculty what program(s) should continue, given the current and anticipated budget conditions and the need to concentrate our resources; and outline a strategy for that proposed program(s).

2. Identify, explore and develop with specificity all possible concentrations that might be part of our Master of Legal Studies program and develop an aggressive marketing strategy to grow enrollment in the program, making sure that any administrative or programmatic approval hurdles are identified and accounted for;

3. Serve as the admissions committee for the LL.M. Program, provide oversight for the Program, and implement efforts to increase enrollment;
The Health Law and Policy Center Committee should

1. Obtain accreditation for the health care compliance certificate program by the Compliance Certification Board (CCB).
2. Devise a marketing strategy for the health care compliance certificate program.
3. Increase the number of attorneys in our health law mentorship program, so each student enrolled in the program will have a mentor.
4. Develop additional experiential learning opportunities for the students enrolled in the program.
5. In conjunction with the Health Law Advisory Council, draft a budget for the Center, and a plan for making the Center self-funding.
6. Submit the necessary request or proposal to host the health law professors conference within the next five years.
7. Confirm details and dates and secure speakers for HLPC programming for 2013-14.

The Honor Council should

1. Adjudicate alleged violations of the Honor Code
2. Continually review the process to assure that students accused of honor code violations receive prompt hearings and decisions
3. Consider drafting new Honor Code provisions addressing the dismissal of, or other disciplinary action to be taken with respect to, a student who has been convicted of a crime during the pendency of the student’s application to, or while a student at, C|M|LAW. The committee should consider whether such dismissal or disciplinary action should only apply for a certain category of crimes, such as crimes involving moral turpitude. The committee also should confer with the University general counsel regarding the legal issues associated with such a regulation.
4. Review and revise, if necessary, the definition of “plagiarism” in the Honor Code in light of recent technological developments.
5. As required by faculty resolution, prepare a year-end report for the faculty describing the activities of the committee, including penalties imposed for honor code violations.
Self-Study Ad Hoc Committee  Phyllis Crocker

The ABA Self-Study Committee should

1. In consultation with the faculty, the Budget Task Force, and appropriate staff, prepare the College of Law’s self-study report as required by the ABA.
2. In preparing the self-study report, focus particularly on the steps necessary for, and the factors relevant to, reducing the enrollment of the College of Law in order to maintain the quality of the incoming class in the face of a potential long-term decline in law school applications. Particular attention should be given to faculty size, course coverage, curricular and programmatic modifications, and scholarship resources necessary for an entering law school class of 140 students.

Fall 2012 Committees

Awards Committee  Patricia Falk

The Awards and Competitions Committee should

1. Make decisions on student awards.
2. Work to assure that the awards program properly recognizes the academic and public service accomplishments of our students.
3. Work with the administration to assure good attendance at the ceremony.

Clerkship/Fellowship Committee  John Plecnik

The Committee should

1. Work with the Office of Career Planning to identify post-graduation clerkship and fellowship opportunities for our students and develop programs to encourage and facilitate students applying for clerkships and fellowships.
Spring 2013 Committees

Admissions Committee

The Admissions Committee should

1. Provide oversight for the admissions program.
2. Provide full-file review of applications for the LCOP Program.
3. Work with the Assistant Dean for Admissions to devise an admissions strategy that focuses on effectively marshalling our resources to attract the best and brightest students from local and regional undergraduate institutions.
4. Work with the Assistant Dean for Admissions and the administration to expand faculty, student, and alumni involvement in the admissions process, especially in activities designed to increase the number of highly qualified and diverse admits, including non-residents, who enroll.
5. Determine whether the revised policy approved by the committee last year for transferring LL.M. course credits (either from our own institution or from another institution, including foreign institutions) to our J.D. program from the Graduate Studies, International Programs & Joint-Degree Committee requires a change to Academic Regulations and faculty action.

Cleveland-Marshall Fund/Baker & Hostetler

Scholars Committee

This Committee should

1. Select Visiting Scholars for the Cleveland-Marshall Visiting Scholars Program for the 2013-14 academic year as well as plan and implement the visiting scholar events in the current year.
2. Select lecturers for the Joseph C. Hostetler-Baker & Hostetler Lecture for the 2013-14 academic year as well as plan and implement the Joseph C. Hostetler-Baker & Hostetler lecture events in the current year.
3. Develop a proposed budget for the Cleveland-Marshall Fund for submission to the faculty at the January 10, 2013 meeting, with particular focus on student support through increased scholarship spending or underwriting of student activities.
Cleveland-Marshall Summer Research Grants Committee
Patricia Falk

The Committee should review summer research grant applications and make recommendations to the Dean as to which applicants should be funded.

Criminal Law Faculty Group
Phyllis Crocker

Confirm dates of, and secure speakers for, Gilbert and Friedman Lecturers for 2013-14.

Employment Law Faculty Group
Matthew Green

Confirm dates of, and secure speakers for employment-related programming for 2013-14.

Teaching Committee
Kevin O’Neill

The Teaching Committee should

1. Evaluate the semesterization of first-year courses, and make appropriate recommendations for better implementation and outcomes.

2. Create a new form for student evaluation of faculty teaching performance that encompasses best practices in eliminating biases that might affect the evaluation. The committee should consider the use of electronic survey tools, such as Survey Monkey, to better collect and evaluate data.

3. Provide oversight and encouragement for the system of collegial review of teaching.

4. Review applications for summer teaching grants and make recommendations to the Dean for the award of such grants.

5. Consider how to assist faculty to introduce more practical, simulation-based, or experiential learning opportunities into the curriculum—particularly the first-year curriculum.
Elected Committees

Faculty Senate Committee

The Faculty Senate Committee should meet periodically with the Dean and with the law school representative on the University Faculty Affairs Committee to review issues that are coming before the Faculty Senate. This Committee should also review proposals for professional leave.

Faculty Affairs Committee

Pursuant to a resolution of the faculty, the Faculty Affairs Committee is responsible for

- Representing College interests to the University Administration in the event that the faculty believes that special representation of those interests is required.
- Considering and making recommendations to the faculty or to the Dean regarding all College-related concerns brought to it by any member of the faculty or the Dean.
- Initiating recommendations on College-related concerns to the faculty or to the Dean.

In addition, the Faculty Affairs Committee should consult with the Dean on such matters as law school-university relations, the law school budget, and accreditation issues. For 2012-13, the Committee should

1. Draft recommendations to the Dean regarding what constitutes low enrollment in a course, and the action to be taken when a course receives low enrollment. The committee should consider whether the course should be canceled and what the faculty member’s obligations should be in the event of cancellation.

2. Draft recommendations to the Dean regarding actions that should be taken when faculty members consistently receive poor teaching evaluations.

3. Draft recommendations to the Dean regarding actions that should be taken when faculty members are consistently late in submitting grades.

4. Consider what the impact of faculty absence from the law school has on the student learning experience and consider recommending to the Dean a policy requiring faculty members to be at the law school a specified number of days each week.

5. Draft a proposal to the faculty regarding the rights of faculty members from other colleges who hold a joint appointment at the law school.
Strategic Priorities Committee

This committee will consist of six faculty members, elected by the faculty. There will be at least one Full Professor, one Associate Professor, one Assistant Professor, one Clinical Professor and one Legal Writing Professor on the committee. Faculty members who presently serve in an administrative role are not eligible to serve on this committee. The Chair of the Curriculum Committees will serve ex-officio on this committee.

According to a proposal voted on and approved by the faculty on November 9, 2012, the mandate for the Strategic Priorities Committee will be

1. The committee will examine the effects of the 140-plan on student enrollment, the size and structure of the faculty and the Law School’s budget. The committee will examine whether possible future application declines warrant seeking faculty approval for a further reduction in the entering class, the effect of any such reduction on the Law School’s budget and potential cost savings in that budget and other possible revenue sources to offset revenue losses. The committee should consult with the Budget Task Force Committee in this process. Any recommendation to reduce next year’s entering class size should be made to the Dean and the Faculty no later than April 1, 2013.

2. The committee will examine whether the Law School should consider other measures, in addition to the 140-plan, to address the issues that Dean Boise raised in his recent State-of-the-Law-School presentation, including the overall decline in Law School applications, the effects of tuition on student debt burden and applications to Cleveland-Marshall, and the bar-passage and job placement prospects of our graduates. The committee will work with the Curriculum Committee and the Bar Passage Committee to consider recommendations to the Dean and the Faculty for addressing these issues.

3. The committee will work with the Faculty Affairs Committee to examine past Law School initiatives that recommended major changes in Law School policies and the role of shared governance in those initiatives, including the Bar Passage Plan, the recent curriculum changes and the 140-plan.
Using this Handbook

The information provided here, including but not limited to graduation and degree requirements, academic regulations, and honor code provisions, is subject to change and applies to all students after the effective date of the change.

The Contents page reflects the structure of this Handbook. Course descriptions outline the aims and content of courses offered. They are arranged alphabetically and provide the course number for reference. Graduation requirements and other information intended to assist students in making elective course choices are also provided.

Specific information is provided for the following programs: the Law and Public Policy Program, the Health Law Certificate Program, the law school’s dual degree programs, and LL.M. The Academic Regulations and Honor Code of Cleveland-Marshall College of Law are also reproduced here. All students are expected to review these materials and be familiar with them. Questions concerning the application of any Regulation or Honor Code provision should be addressed to an appropriate dean or faculty member.

Information about a variety of student services is available directly from the offices providing the services. In particular, students are directed to the following offices:

Note: LB designates Law Building; LL designates Law Library

Note: Current and updated information for students, including the law school calendar, book and first class assignments, current news and anonymous posting of course grade distributions, may be found on the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law website – https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents and https://www.law.csuohio.edu/academics.
Law School Services

Student Services Center

The Student Services Center is located off the law school atrium, near the elevator to the right of the passageway into the Cleveland-Marshall Law Library. The offices for Admissions, Career Planning, Financial Aid, Student Life, Student Records, and Academic Affairs are all here, making it convenient for students to find the assistance they need in these areas of law school life.

At the entrance to the Student Services Center is the law school Information Desk, where students can pick up course handouts, purchase photocopied course materials, view exams during specified exam review periods, and pick up scheduling, registration, and other information, such as student insurance applications, graduation applications, transcript request forms, and address and name change forms. The Receptionist is Israel Payton, 216/687-2344.

The Center is open from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., Mondays and Tuesdays, 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., Wednesdays and Thursdays, and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Friday. Extended hours are scheduled during periods of peak student demand and by appointment. Please check individual offices for their hours of operation.

Academic Affairs

The Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs is Jean Lifter; she may be reached at (216) 687-4557 or via email at jean.lifter@law.csuohio.edu. The Office of the Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs is located in LB 143 in the Student Services Center. The office is a source of information regarding:

- Registration, including adding/dropping courses
- Academic advice and counseling
- Accommodations for disabilities
- Transfer and transient credit evaluations
- Academic Standards Committee petitions
- LL.M. program

Academic Support

Legal Writing Professor Kelly Curtis is the Director of Academic Support. She can be reached at (216) 687-2359 or via email at kelly.curtis@law.csuohio.edu. Her office is located in LB 54 in the Legal Writing Suite. The goal of academic support is to provide students with the skills and resources necessary to achieve academic success in law school. Specifically, the academic support program is designed to (1) assist students in the transition from college to law school and (2) help student strengthen their analytical reasoning, critical thinking, study, and exam-taking skills. Our academic support programs include:

- The Academic Excellence Program - An academic support program conducted by upper level students (known as Fellows) under the supervision of the Director of Academic Support. The Fellows conduct large group workshops on subjects such as reading and briefing cases, classroom preparation and note taking, outlining, exam preparation, and exam performance. In addition, the Fellows meet with specified students in small group sessions once a week. The purpose of the Academic Excellence Program is to help students strengthen analytical reasoning, critical thinking, and exam-taking skills. The Fellows also hold regular office hours to give one-on-one assistance to the small group members or others seeking help.
- One-on-one Assistance – Professor Curtis is available to provide one-on-one assistance in essay writing whether or not the students are participants in the Academic Excellence Program.
- Legal Career Opportunity Program (LCOP) – Professor Curtis will assist the LCOP class make the transition from undergraduate school to law school. Participants are given a head start in the development of legal and analytical skills.

Bar Exam Preparation

Mary Jane McGinty is the Director, Bar Exam Preparation. She may be reached at (216) 687-2297 or via email at maryjane.mcginty@law.csuohio.edu. Her office is located in LB 147 in the Student Services Center.

- Ohio Bar Strategies & Tactics (OBEST) – This three credit hour class meets once a week and concentrates on helping the participants hone their essay writing, analytical and exam-taking skills. Over the course of the term, participants will answer and analyze Multistate Bar Exam (MBE) questions; write essay answers to bar exam questions and receive individual critiques on their essays; and, write and receive individual feedback on practice MPT problems. The course will focus on heavily tested areas on the MBE and Ohio essay portions of the bar exam.
- Bar Preparation Workshops – Prior to each administration of the bar exam, Mary Jane McGinty presents workshops... covering topics such as the applications required to take the Ohio Bar Exam, the MBE Boot Camp, and the Multistate Performance Test (MPT) Workshops. In addition, faculty presentations on subject areas tested on the bar exam are scheduled for the weeks before each exam.

- Individual Counseling—Mary Jane McGinty is available for individual meetings with students. She provides counseling and assistance to students during the bar application and examination process.

Financial Aid
The Director of Student Life is prepared to address financial aid questions and provide guidance to all law students and will call upon the expertise of the University Financial Aid Office and will assist students in navigating financial aid procedures to find solutions to any financial aid matters.

The main source of financial aid assistance for all Cleveland State University students—including law students—is Campus411. Cleveland State University has centralized all financial aid functions and services in a convenient, one-stop center, Campus411, located in room 116 of the Main Classroom Building. Campus411 is prepared to assist you with:

- General information about financial aid
- Requesting a FAFSA pin and Filing the FAFSA
- Completing verification
- Printing and signing of your award letter
- Completing the loan entrance/exit counseling and the master promissory note
- Determining eligibility and disbursement of all financial aid

When calling Campus411, dial 216-687-5411, or simply 5411 from a campus phone. To speak with a financial aid specialist, press 0, then 2. Remember to:

1. Identify yourself as a law student. Financial Aid rules and procedures may not be the same for every student at the University.
2. Make sure you know your CSU ID and social security number; prepare your questions before the call so you get a quicker resolution of your financial aid issues.
3. Ask for the name of the specialist with whom you are dealing. If you are pleased with the service you receive, ask for that person again and work with that specialist exclusively. If you do not receive excellent customer service, please bring that information to the Director of Student Life to resolve your issue.

Financial Aid policies and procedures for new and continuing law students, links to required forms, and announcements about scholarships for which you can apply are available online. From the law school’s homepage, click on “Current Students” and then follow the link to “Financing Your Education.”

Office of Career Planning
The Director of the Office of Career Planning is Jennifer Blaga; she can be reached at (216) 687-2540 or via email at jennifer.blaga@law.csuohio.edu. The Assistant Director position is shared by Francie Fields and Kristen Rutter. Francie can be reached at (216) 687-2260 or via email francie.fields@law.csuohio.edu. Kristen can be reached at (216) 687-2264 or via email at kristen.rutter@law.csuohio.edu. Our coordinator, Jessica Mathewson, can be reached at (216) 687-6871 or via email at jessica.mathewson@law.csuohio.edu. The Office of Career Planning (OCP) is located in LB 137 in the Student Services Center.

- Planning Services, Resources, and Programs: The OCP staff will provide you with assistance and resources in order to facilitate your job search. We will be helping you build your resume all through your law school career. Some of the strong building blocks that you should seriously consider include externships, clinic courses, course concentrations, creative employment opportunities for summers, and networking every chance you can. The OCP has various handbooks to help you with your job search (e.g., interviewing tips, resume/cover letter writing) and many online resources that are available on the OCP website—http://www.law.csuohio.edu/careerplanning/. Take advantage of the career-boosting programs that the OCP provides for you. Typical programs include topics such as informational programs on our recruiting programs, volunteer opportunities, solo practice, judicial clerkships, and preparation for law clerk positions, as well as interactive programs such as our mock interviews and networking programs.
• SympliCity Web Site (https://law-csuohio-csm.symplicity.com/students): SympliCity is a web-based service which manages our resume approval process, job postings, and interview programs. You will be emailed passwords for the service along with directions for use. All of the job postings we receive are placed in this database.

• Out-of-State Job Searches: No matter where in the country your job search takes you, the OCP is here to assist you, be it through networking opportunities, alumni connections, or other job search resources. The OCP has reciprocity with the career planning offices in other law schools around the country. The OCP also receives electronic newsletters and job postings from other schools for positions out of state which are linked to our website and made available in hard copy for your perusal in our office.

* The National Association for Law Placement (NALP) employment guidelines prohibits first-year full-time students from speaking with the career planning staff about specific legal employment prior to Nov. 1, and prohibits first-year students from having contact with employers prior to Dec. 1. Part-time students, however, may seek assistance with job searches during the school term. First year students are urged, along with other C|M|LAW students, to attend our many programs highlighting career planning, the different settings in which lawyers work, and the organization and responsibilities of the legal profession.

Student Life

The Director of Student Life is the first point of contact for students at C|M|LAW, providing advice about academic and extracurricular opportunities in law school, financial counseling, and oversight and operational guidance to all student organizations, serving as advisor to the Student Bar Association, overseeing programs to enhance and support student diversity, and maintaining a vibrant, supportive, and highly communicative environment for students.

Student Records Office

The law school Records Officer is Marcie Rechner; she may be reached at (216) 687-2289 or via email at marcie.rechner@law.csuohio.edu or at student.records@law.csuohio.edu. The Student Records Office is located in LB 142 in the Student Services Center. This office is your source for:

• Graduation Applications
• Out-of-state Bar Certifications
• Exam numbers, grades, including Change of Grading Status (law school pass/fail) and Class Ranks
• Verification of registration for loan deferments and insurance coverage
• Applications for Legal Intern status from the Ohio Supreme Court
• Enrollment Verification/Good Standing Letters
• Unofficial Transcripts

Official transcripts may be ordered online at http://www.csuohio.edu/enrollmentservices/registrar/transcripts/index.html. You should submit any forms requiring a dean’s certification/signature to this office.

Cleveland-Marshall Law Alumni Association (C|M|LAW Alumni Association)

The Executive Director of the C|M|LAW Alumni Association is Mary McKenna. She can be reached at (216) 687-2368 or via email at mary.mckenna@law.csuohio.edu. The Law Alumni office is located in LB 121.

The Cleveland-Marshall Law Alumni Association serves the entire law school community. Long before you are a C|M|LAW alumnus or alumna, the Association will be an important part of your life. Among the most valuable services the Association offers students is its Mentor Program, through which students are matched with an accomplished attorney who serves as a mentor and provides assurance and counsel throughout law school. In order to help students think seriously about career options, the Association annually presents its Pathways to Practice program. In this program veteran attorneys with expertise in a variety of practice areas conduct sessions regarding their legal specialties. The Association also awards scholarships to deserving students who have completed their first year of law school. Law Notes, the alumni publication, is published annually. Students are invited to attend the Association’s Saturday morning Continuing Legal Education Programs throughout the year. Stop by the Alumni Office to learn how to take advantage of all the C|M|LAW Alumni Association has to offer the students of the College of Law. Additional information is available at http://www.cmlaa.org/.
Computers, Internet and Miscellaneous Information

Academic Calendar

The law school academic calendar is accessible on the web at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/academics/calendar/. The current calendar contains information regarding registration, deadlines for fees, and dropping and adding courses. There is also a law school events calendar at http://www.law.csuohio.edu/newsevents/calendar/. This calendar includes information about lectures and conferences, financial aid, career planning and other important dates relevant to students.

Booklists & Class Assignments

Each term assignments for the first classes and additional information on course materials will be posted on the law school’s website at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/resources. Links to this site and other information of interest to students can be found at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents or https://www.law.csuohio.edu/academics. Information on books and other materials required or recommended for courses is also available on the CSU Bookstore’s site at http://www.csuohiobookstore.com/. You can purchase books from the CSU Bookstore on line via the “Order Textbooks” link on the CampusNet homepage, https://campusnet.csuohio.edu/logout.jsp.

Law School News

Students should check the Information Desk in the Student Services Center for administrative announcements and other law school news. Students should also check the College of Law web site at http://www.law.csuohio.edu/ and the law school events calendar at http://www.law.csuohio.edu/newsevents/calendar/ for important information. Finally, as detailed below, many administrative offices, faculty and student groups use law school email as the primary method of contacting students, both individually and with generally applicable information. Students should expect to receive important communications in this way and should access their law school email on a regular and frequent basis.

Student organizations have their own bulletin boards. These boards are used to post information regarding meetings, events, writing contests, items for sale, as well as many other kinds of information. Students should check these boards regularly for items of interest. Students must abide by the posting regulations set by the Student Bar Association (SBA).

Internet

Students will have access to electronic mail, the WorldWideWeb, and more through the law library. You may access your student internet accounts from school computers or a remote computer that has a modem and communications package. You should register for your account in the law library with your student ID. The administration and faculty use email to advise students of matters regarding the law school and specific courses. Students should set up and use the internet accounts available through the law library, and should access both email and the law school’s website for online information on a regular basis.

Faculty and staff email addresses are in the following format: firstname.lastname@law.csuohio.edu

Library Computers

Computers are available in the law school library for student use. They run computer legal research programs such as Westlaw and Lexis, word processing programs, E-mail, and are connected to the Internet. Westlaw and Lexis provide free software programs on CD-ROM that students can take home to do computer research from their own computers.

Lockers

The SBA provides lockers in the lower level for students at a cost of $40.00 per year. Lockers may be purchased at any time of the year at the SBA office in LB 62. Locker rentals terminate at the end of summer session, but may be renewed for the following year prior to that time.

Smoking Policy

Cleveland State University is a smoke-free institution. Students may smoke outside the buildings but must be a minimum of 20 feet from the nearest doorway entrance.

Vending Machines and Food Service

Vending machines are located in the student lounge as are a refrigerator and microwave for student use. The Link, a coffee cart serving coffee and light food selections including soup, yogurt, salads, sandwiches, and pastry, is located in... the InnerLink between the law building and the Arts & Communication Building. Hours are currently 8:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., Monday through Thursday, and 8:30 a.m. to 2:00 p.m., Friday. Additional information on dining services on campus is available online at http://www.dineoncampus.com/csul.

Wireless Network

Cleveland State University has installed a wireless network in the College of Law. This network will allow you to access the Internet in any area of the law building as well as from many of the surrounding green spaces. Cleveland State University Information Services & Technology has created a special website with information on the wireless network which can be found at http://www.csuohio.edu/offices/ist/getconnected/internet_access_on_campus.html. The law school automation staff, located in the Law Library, can assist you – stop in or contact through https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/technology.
Athletic Facilities
A multitude of athletic facilities are available for student use in the Recreation Center, located at 2420 Chester Avenue. Law students enrolled for a minimum of 1 credit hour will be entitled to free use of all facilities. The facilities offer squash and racquetball courts, weight and fitness equipment, basketball courts, swimming pool in the adjacent Bushey Natatorium, and an indoor track. A variety of classes are offered each term. The Recreation Center is connected to the rest of the campus by the InnerLink walkway and limited parking is available beneath the building and a new 400-car garage next door. Hours of the Recreation Center will be Monday through Thursday, 5:45 a.m.-11 p.m.; Friday, 5:45 a.m.-9 p.m.; Saturday & Sunday, 9 a.m.-6 p.m. The pool closes one hour before the building closes. Guests of students may use the facilities for a fee of $9, payable at the Recreation Center. Information about the Recreation Center, including summer hours, is available online at http://www.csuohio.edu/services/recreationcenter/.

Cashier’s Office
Located in Main Classroom (MC) 115, all fees such as tuition, transcripts, etc., may be paid here. The Cashier’s Office will also cash personal checks of up to $10.00 for students with a valid ID card. Inquiries about tuition refunds or financial aid checks should be directed to this office. Additional information is available at http://www.csuohio.edu/offices/treasuryservices/.

Conference Services
Located in Room 140 of the CSU Student Center (2121 Euclid Avenue), this office is responsible for scheduling and setting up the numerous meetings and conferences held on campus. In addition, if a law student is interested in reserving a room in the Law Building, a schedule book is maintained by Sandra Natran in LB 145.

Counseling and Testing Center
Currently located in Rhodes Tower 1235 but moving to 1836 Euclid Avenue in mid-October 2012, the Counseling Center offers, free of charge, self-help groups and personal and career counseling to all students, faculty, and staff at CSU. Licensed staff counselors, psychologists and social workers are always available for “drop-in” or crisis counseling. For more information call 687-2277 or get information online at http://www.csuohio.edu/offices/counselingcenter/. Visits are confidential.

The Testing Center offers computer-scored tests of all kinds, including the Miller’s Analogies, and intelligence tests. In addition, the Center makes available applications and literature for a wide variety of entrance examinations, including the SAT, LSAT, and GRE. For more information, call 687-2272 or get information online at http://www.csuohio.edu/offices/testingcenter/.

A student may sometimes encounter difficulties from chemical or alcohol dependency that affects her/his law school performance. We encourage any student in that situation to seek professional assistance. Two resources are: the C.S.U. counseling service (see contact information above) and the Ohio Lawyers’ Assistance Program, a program specifically designed to help lawyers and those preparing to become lawyers (1-800-348-4343 or 1-800-618-8606).

Health and Wellness Services
Cleveland State University Health and Wellness Services are available to all actively registered students, faculty, and staff. The Health and Wellness Services Center is nationally accredited and staffed by nurse practitioners and physicians. The center offers a wide variety of services including primary and same day care, women’s health care, counseling, limited in-house pharmacy and laboratory services, allergy shots and immunizations, free anonymous HIV testing, health educational programming and more. The Center also provides screening tests for things like cholesterol, and wellness, diet and weight reduction education. Visits are by APPOINTMENT ONLY (there are no walk-in facilities) and can be scheduled by calling (216) 687-3649. There are a limited number of “same day” appointments available for acute illnesses that can be made by calling at 8:10 a.m. on that morning. These appointments go quickly so it is important to call early. CSU Health and Wellness Services is currently located in the Science & Research Building room 153 at 2351 Euclid Avenue. The office will be moving to 1836 Euclid Avenue, 2nd floor, in mid-October 2012. During the academic year, hours are 8 a.m. until 5:30 p.m. on Monday and Tuesday, and 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. Summer hours are 8 a.m. – 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. A nurse help line, 1-877-643-5130, is available 24 hours per day. The Center sees patients regardless of whether or not they have any form of insurance as long as they are actively registered students at Cleveland State University or faculty/staff. They will see you over the summer if you were registered for Spring and will be coming back in the Fall Semester. Visit the Health and Wellness Services Center website at http://www.csuohio.edu/offices/health/.

The Center bills outside health insurance carriers but there are NO office visit co-pay charges. If you have no insurance or the student health insurance, there is no charge for the visit itself, but a small charge for medications and/or laboratory tests.

Cleveland State University provides students with an affordable health insurance plan and students are encouraged to consider enrolling in the Student Health Insurance Plan if they do not have other insurance or if their current health insurance plan is with an HMO or restricted PPO out of the Cleveland area. Additionally, this plan covers students studying abroad. The Plan complements the services available through the Health & Wellness Center. For students with the student health insurance, all services performed in the Center are covered at 100% with a very low co-pay for prescription medications carried in the Center. The policy is subject to an annual deductible and co-pays. Students can review the complete list of benefits by going to the Health & Wellness Services webpage at www.csuohio.edu/offices/health and clicking on the insurance link or through the insurance company website at https://www.uhcsr.com/SelfServiceSupport/Students/CollegeStudents.aspx. Students may sign up for health insurance through CampusNet, the University’s online information system.

NOTE: In the event of a major medical emergency, immediately dial 911, or 8911 from a campus phone. From a cell phone, call 911 and ask to be connected to the CSU police.

Housing

Information regarding on campus housing is available online at http://www.csuohio.edu/services/reslife/options and information regarding off campus housing is available at http://www.csuohio.edu/services/commuterstudent/. Additional information on off campus housing is available at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/prospectivestudents/housing.

Parking and Transportation Services

Parking & Transportation Services manages and operates the campus parking areas with the purpose of providing accessible parking with flexible options for students, faculty, staff and visitors on campus. The Office of Parking & Transportation Services is located on the first floor of Euclid Commons (EC 160), on the southeast corner of E. 24th and Euclid Avenue. Office hours are 8 AM to 5 PM Monday through Friday with extended hours available at the start of each semester. Parking Services can be reached by email at parking@csuohio.edu or by phone at (216) 687-2023.

Vehicles parked on university property are required to be registered with Parking Services and display a valid prepaid Green or White parking hangtag from the rearview mirror. Registration does not guarantee the holder a specific parking space or lot, but rather provides the holder the opportunity to park within an area designated for a specific type of hangtag. A valid hangtag and/or proof of payment are always required when parking on campus.

Prepaid Green or White hangtags ($225.78 or $190.88 per each Fall or Spring term, depending on which area of campus you choose to park) allow daily parking in Prepaid Green or White garages/ lots (overnight not included. Another option, Prepaid Green or White Daily Usage Scratch-off hangtags, will cost $8 (Green) or $6 (White) per day. Parking in Visitor lots is $10 per day.

Active CSU students must register for parking through their CampusNet account. Purchases may be charged to your Student Account or payment by Visa, MasterCard, Discover, or a bank debit card can be used. Purchased hangtags are mailed to the tag holders home address unless otherwise stated in the CampusNet purchase confirmation. For updated operating hours, parking rules and regulations, campus map, and additional information please visit the Parking Services website at http://www.csuohio.edu/parking/.

Registration

Registration for Spring Semester normally takes place in early November. First year students must register for the continuation of Legal Writing and for the core courses scheduled for their division (full-time or part-time day and part-time evening). Registration for Summer Term and Fall Semester normally takes place in during Spring Semester.

Once the original registration for a term has taken place, students may register late or adjust their schedules through add/drop. This schedule adjustment period lasts through the first week of each term. No adjustments in the first year schedule can be made without the approval of a dean.

Schedule information and registration instructions will be posted on the law school website and will be available in the Student Services Center and other locations in the law school.

Security
Cleveland State University Security Department provides comprehensive police services to the community on a 24-hour basis. The police officers patrol on foot, bicycle and in marked patrol cars and respond to calls for service in addition to those of a criminal nature. In case of emergency inside a University building, call 8911 on any campus phone or 911 on a cell phone and ask for the CSU police department. For information or general business, call 216/687-2020 or dial ext. 2020 on a campus phone. Additional information is available online http://www.csuohio.edu/offices/police/ and at http://www.csuohio.edu/offices/police/crimestats.

In the event that an emergency arises while someone is at home and needs to contact a student in class, the person calling must provide the name of the student, the building name, and the class room number in order for that student to be reached.

A network of Blue Light Emergency Phones dot the exterior of the campus. The emergency phones have no dials; when the receiver is picked up, a contact is immediately established with the police dispatcher.

Important - Community Service Officers are specially trained students who provide escort services to members of the campus community to and from any point on or near campus. These officers wear bright orange jackets, vests, or shirts with ESCORT printed on them, and carry two-way radios to summon help if necessary. To call for an escort, dial 216-687-2020, or 2020 on any campus phone. It is highly recommended that you utilize this service whenever leaving the building alone, late at night, or have to walk some distance to your vehicle.

Transcripts
All students have the right to review their college transcripts and to request an investigation if they think any material contained therein is incorrect. Students may view their transcripts on the Cleveland State University CampusNet. You will need to know your CSU ID and Web Access Password to access your record on the web. With proper identification, students may review their transcripts with the Records Officer in LB 142.

A student may request an official copy of his or her transcript using a form available at Campus411, MC 116, 216-687-5411. Forms are also available at the law school Information Desk in the Student Services Center. A fee of $4.00 is assessed for each transcript requested. Normally, transcripts are available three to five working days after the request is made. Official transcripts may be ordered over the web at http://www.csuohio.edu/enrollmentservices/registrar/transcripts/index.html.

U-Pass
Law students registered for 1 or more credit hours may obtain a U-Pass that allows them to ride free of charge on all Greater Cleveland Regional Transit Authority buses and rapid trains during the Fall or Spring Semesters; a new pass is needed for each term. The fee for the pass is included in University fees. Information on getting the U-Pass from the University Cashier’s Office, MC 115, is available at http://www.csuohio.edu/services/u-pass/.

VikingCard (ID) Center
All students, faculty, and staff must have a valid CSU ID card (VikingCard) to cash checks, use athletics facilities, or check out materials from the libraries. The ID Center is located in MC 112 and hours vary depending on the time of the year. Students should check prior to visiting. To obtain an ID, a student must present a valid schedule for the current semester. If the ID is lost or stolen, a fee is assessed for replacement. Students must be registered in the semester that they apply for the card. For more information call 216-875-9888 or visit their web site at http://www.csuohio.edu/services/vcard/.

   g. Constitutional Law, L516
   h. Legislation & the Regulatory State, L515 (for students beginning 2012 and after)

2. Other Course Requirements

   a. Evidence, L661
   b. Code of Professional Responsibility Course

   This requirement may be satisfied by the course Legal Profession, L643.

   Note: Applicants for admission to the Ohio bar and those of most other states must pass the Multistate Professional Responsibility Exam (MPRE). You may sit for the Ohio bar exam without having passed the MPRE, but cannot be admitted to practice until you have passed both exams. The MPRE is administered three times per year. Students frequently take Legal Profession, L643, before taking the MPRE. The Legal Profession course is not, however, designed to fully prepare students for the MPRE exam. Additional information about the MPRE, including a Study Guide and a practice exam, is available at http://www.ncbex.org/multistate-tests/mpre/. Some of the bar review courses offer free (online) MPRE preparation classes as well.

p. Workers’ Compensation, L651, beginning Fall 2008
q. Additional courses as designated on the course schedule

Third Semester of Legal Writing -- Each student is required to take at least one legal writing course in addition to the core Legal Research, Writing and Advocacy Course, L504. Students may choose from a group of courses to be designated by the faculty. Such courses will be designated with the number (12) on the course schedules and in the course descriptions. Normally, the third semester course in Legal Writing will be taken during the Fall or Spring of the second year for full-time students or the Spring of the second year or the Fall or Spring of the third year for part-time students.

Skills Course Requirement – Each student who entered law school as a beginning student in Summer 2008 through 2011 is required to take at least one course designated as a Skills Course. Beginning Summer 2009, such courses have been designated with the number (16) on the course schedules and in the course descriptions. Students admitted through Fall 2011 may satisfy both the skills course and third semester of legal writing requirements with a course designated with both a (12) and a (16) on the schedule. As of August 2012, the following courses have been approved as satisfying the skills course requirement:
   a. Advanced Brief Writing, L615
   b. Alternate Dispute Resolution, L696
   c. Arbitration, L633
   d. Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic, L824
   e. Employment Law Clinic, L802
   f. Environmental Law & Policy Clinic, L808
   g. Externships – including
      i. Judicial, L815
      ii. US Attorney, L882

   k. Law Practice Management, L674
   l. Legal Drafting: General, L778
   m. Legal Drafting: Special Topics, L798
   n. Legal Drafting: Employment, L788
   o. Legal Writing & Litigation, L792
   p. Mediation, L673
   q. Moot Court I & II, L806 & L809
   r. Transactional Law Clinic (formerly Urban Development Law Clinic), L826
   s. Trial Advocacy, L663
   t. Trial Advocacy Competition, L863
   u. Trial Advocacy Competition: Advanced, L864
   v. Additional courses as designated on the course schedule

Experiential Skills Course Requirement – Students entering law school in Summer 2012 and after will be required to fulfill to take a course designated as fulfilling the Experiential Skills Requirement. The initial list of courses that will satisfy this requirement will be provided Spring 2013. In no event may a student satisfy both the 3rd semester legal writing requirement and the experiential skills requirement with a single course, even if the course could satisfy either of those requirements individually.

Upper Level Writing Requirement -- The purpose of the Upper Level Writing requirement is to have each student undertake at least one extensive research and writing experience (in addition to Legal Writing, Research and Advocacy) prior to graduation. The goal of the requirement is for each student to demonstrate his or her writing, research, analytical, and organizational skills by producing one substantial written product under the direction of a faculty supervisor.

The Upper Level Writing requirement may be met by satisfactory completion of a seminar or specified upper level course for which a substantial paper is required or satisfactory completion of an appropriate two or three semester-hour Independent Legal Research, L860, project.

Satisfactory completion of courses denoted with the number (5) on the course schedule or by completion of the optional research paper in courses denoted with the number (5a) on the schedule will meet the Upper Level Writing Requirement. Some courses may be offered with a paper option in one term and not in another or not when offered by a different instructor. Do not assume that a particular course has a paper option merely because the course was offered with a paper option in the past. If the denotation (5) or (5a) does not appear on the schedule, and, for some reason you think the course might satisfy the requirement, check with Assistant Dean Jean Lifter.

A two or three semester hour Independent Legal Research, L860, project may also satisfy the requirement. A full-time faculty member must supervise every Independent Legal Research project. An Associate Dean must approve any project to be supervised by an adjunct faculty member. The faculty member must sign a form, available in the Student Services Center, indicating that he or she is willing to supervise the project and specifying how many hours of credit are involved. The completed form must be returned to law school Records Officer or Dean Lifter, who will approve registration for the Independent Legal Research credit.

A maximum of three semester hours of Independent Legal Research credit may be elected to count toward the J.D. degree.

Students who are invited, either on the basis of grades or on the basis of the Summer Writing Competition, to join the staff of the Cleveland State Law Review, the Journal of Law and Health, or the Global Business Law Review are required to complete a student note as staff members. This is often done in conjunction with an Independent Legal Research project - the paper is ultimately turned in to both the law review (or journal) editors and to the faculty member supervising the project. Students may sign up for this credit during the Fall or Spring semester that they are serving on the review or journal staff.

Normally, students produce a paper of a minimum of 24 pages, excluding footnotes, for two hours and a minimum of 36 pages, excluding footnotes, for three hours for Independent Legal Research credit.

Note: Supervising faculty may exercise discretion in awarding credit but withholding upper level writing certification for a project whether completed for Independent Legal Research or in a course or seminar in which a paper is required or is an option.

II. SUBJECTS TESTED ON THE OHIO BAR EXAMINATION
See Bar Exam Resources at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/bar.

Following graduation specialized bar examination review courses are available to prepare a student to take the bar examination. Students should plan ahead to take one – saving money for the tuition and arranging for adequate study time. Law school courses are designed to prepare one for the lifetime practice of law and are usually not specifically directed to topics that may be tested on the bar exam.

For the most accurate and up-to-date information on the Ohio Bar Examination, see the Ohio Supreme Court website at http://www.supremecourt.ohio.gov/AttySvcs/admissions/default.asp. NOTE: The Ohio Bar Examination currently includes the Multistate Bar Examination, 12 essay questions, and the Multistate Performance Examination.

Multistate Bar Examination Subjects: Contracts, Constitutional Law (including First Amendment Rights), Criminal Law, Criminal Procedure, Evidence, Property, and Torts.

Note: Other states may test other subject areas and may require applicants for the bar to have taken specific law school courses. If you are planning to take the bar examination in another state, check the requirements for that state as soon as possible.

Note: Applicants for admission to the Ohio bar and those of most other states must take and receive a satisfactory score on the Multistate Professional Responsibility Exam (MPRE), which may be taken while you are in law school. The exam is administered three times per year and you may want to register to take it following completion of Legal Profession, L643. Information about the exam and online registration is available at http://www.ncbex.org/multistate-tests/mpre/.

III. INTERDISCIPLINARY COURSES

Law students are permitted to take up to 2 graduate level courses for up to a total of 8 semester hours of credit in other parts of Cleveland State University.
These courses should be in subject areas related to your legal interests. You must obtain permission in advance of registering for such courses from an assistant dean. To receive credit for interdisciplinary courses, a law student must earn at least a “C”, in which case the credit hours will count toward the J.D. degree but the grade will not be included in computation of the student’s grade point average.

Students enrolled in the joint JD./M.B.A., J.D./M.P.A., J.D./M.A.E.S., J.D./M.S.E.S., or J.D./M.U.P.D.D. programs must comply with the requirements of the particular program.

A course taught online or by other means of distance education may be approved if the course is otherwise appropriate for credit at the College of Law. Distance education courses, including such course taught outside the College of Law, may not exceed the limits of American Bar Association Law School Standard 306, restricting such courses to four credit hours a semester and twelve credit hours total.

IV. COURSE PREREQUISITES

A number of upper-level courses have prerequisites in addition to the Required Core Curriculum. This information is included in the course description appearing in this Handbook. Occasionally, extremely important prerequisites are noted on the course schedules. However, the course schedules do not indicate all prerequisites and students should consult the Course Description section of this Handbook for complete information concerning prerequisites.

V. UPPER LEVEL ELECTIVES

Courses are listed below by practice area for two reasons. One, students may be curious about what kinds of courses are relevant to a certain area of practice. For example, if a student is interested in international law or corporate law, these lists will identify the courses related to those practice areas. Two, students may find a particular course sounds interesting and want to know what other courses are related to that course and what area of practice is relevant to that course. For example, a student may be fascinated by the topic of White Collar Crime; these lists will show the student that a course on that topic is relevant both to a business practice as well as one in criminal law. See Course Descriptions for substantive descriptions of every course. We offer concentrations in some practice areas, as noted. See Concentrations for more information.

VI. SPECIAL CURRICULAR PROGRAMS

A. Dual Degree Programs
The College of Law offers five dual degree programs that allow students to earn both a Juris Doctor and a Masters degree in just four years of full-time study. Students may earn a J.D. along with an M.B.A. (Master of Business Administration) from the John J. Nance College of Business Administration; one of three degrees offered in conjunction with the Maxine Goodman Levin College of Urban Affairs - an M.A.E.S. (Master of Arts in Environmental Studies), an M.P.A. (Master of Public Administration) or an M.U.P.D.D. (Master of Urban Planning, Design & Development); or an M.S.E.S. (Master of Science in Environmental Science) with the College of Science.

The law faculty has approved a change to the dual degree programs that would allow a law student who has completed all J.D. degree requirements including a minimum of 82 semester credits in law courses to receive the J.D. prior to completion of the requirements of the joint degree. The change requires University approval as well.

1. J.D./M.B.A.
Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and the College of Business Administration offer students the opportunity to earn the J.D. and M.B.A. degrees in four years of full-time study. A part-time student has eight years to complete both programs. Because each school will grant credit for courses taken in the other, both degrees may be completed in less time than would otherwise be required. Students in the dual degree program are required to fulfill all specific course requirements for the J.D. A maximum of 10 semester hours of credit from the College of Business Administration may be included in the 90 semester hours required for the J.D. degree. Interested students should contact Professor Christopher Sagers, (216) 687-2319, for further information.

Law students interested in being admitted to the J.D./M.B.A. program should follow the procedures for admission to the College of Business Administration, including submission of an application, available online at http://www.csuohio.edu/gradcollege/admissions/apply.html, to the College of Graduate Studies.

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and the Maxine Goodman Levin College of Urban Affairs offer students the opportunity to earn the J.D. and M.P.A. (Master of Public Administration) or M.U.P.D.D. (Master of Urban Planning, Design and Development) degrees in four years of full-time study. Part-time students should contact Alan Weinstein, Director of the J.D./M.P.A. and J.D./M.U.P.D.D. Programs, for further information.

Because each school will grant credit for courses taken in the other, both degrees may be completed in less time than is otherwise required. Students in the dual degree program must fulfill all specific course requirements for the J.D.; however, 10 semester hours from the College of Urban Affairs will be applied towards the 90 semester hours required for the J.D. degree.

Applicants who are not currently enrolled in either degree program may apply for admission to both programs independently. Students who enroll in this manner will spend their first year exclusively in the J.D. program, their second year primarily in the M.P.A. or M.U.P.D.D. program, and their third and fourth years taking courses in both programs. Students already enrolled in one of the degree programs should contact Alan Weinstein, Director of the J.D./M.P.A. and J.D./M.U.P.D.D. Programs, LB 230, 216/687-3758. Law students interested in either program will have to submit an application, available online at http://www.csuohio.edu/gradcollege/admissions/apply.html, to the College of Graduate Studies.

3. J.D./M.A.E.S.

The Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and the Levin College of Urban Affairs jointly offer students the opportunity to pursue both a J.D. and a M.A.E.S. (Master of Arts in Environmental Studies) in four years of full-time study. Because each college will grant credit for courses taken in the other college, students may complete the two degrees concurrently in less time than would be required to do the degrees sequentially. Students in this dual degree program must fulfill all specific course requirements for the J.D.; however, 10 semester hours from the College of Urban Affairs will be applied towards the 90 semester hours required for the J.D. degree.

Applicants who are not currently enrolled in either individual degree program must apply for admission to both programs independently. Students who enroll in this manner will spend their first year taking courses exclusively in the College of Law and their second year primarily in the College of Urban Affairs. Students already enrolled in either individual degree program should contact Associate Dean Heidi Gorovitz Robertson, LB 130, 216/687-9264, to discuss a course of study. Law students seeking admission to the dual degree program should call the Graduate Studies Academic Advisor at the College of Urban Affairs at (216) 687-7522 for information about the program and admissions procedures and will need to submit an application, available online at http://www.csuohio.edu/gradcollege/admissions/apply.html, to the College of Graduate Studies.

4. J.D./M.S.E.S.

The Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and the College of Graduate Studies jointly offer students the opportunity to pursue both a J.D. and a M.S.E.S. (Master of Science in Environmental Science) in four years of full-time study. Because each college will grant credit for courses taken in the other college, students may complete the two degrees concurrently in less time than would be required to do the degrees sequentially. Students in this dual degree program must fulfill all specific course requirements for the J.D.; however, 10 semester hours from the College of Graduate Studies will be applied towards the 90 semester hours required for the J.D. degree.

Applicants who are not currently enrolled in either individual degree program must apply for admission to both programs independently. Students who enroll in this manner will spend their first year taking courses exclusively in the College of Law and their second year primarily in the College of Science, Department of Biological, Geological & Environmental Sciences. Students already enrolled in either individual degree program should contact Associate Dean Heidi Gorovitz Robertson, LB 130, 216/687-9264, to discuss a course of study. Law students seeking admission to the dual degree program should call the Department of Biological, Geological, and Environmental Sciences at (216) 687-2440 for information about the program and admissions procedures and will need to submit an application, available online at http://www.csuohio.edu/gradcollege/admissions/apply.html, to the College of Graduate Studies.

B. Pro Bono Program

The law school’s Pro Bono Program is designed to (1) engage students in the delivery of legal assistance in cooperation with local attorneys and community agencies serving the poor and certain other groups; (2) introduce students to the difficulties of the under-represented and the rewards of public service; and (3) encourage students after graduation from law school to discharge the lawyer’s professional responsibility to render public interest service.

The Pro Bono Program also offers monthly community service opportunities such as building homes with Habitat for Humanity, serving lunch at a local soup kitchen, and planting a garden in the inner city of Cleveland.
Volunteer activity is not a graduation requirement and students do not receive academic credit for participating in the program. However, students who volunteer a minimum of 40 hours (in the course of one or more placements) will be recognized by the College of Law by inclusion in the annual awards ceremony at the College of Law.

Information about the Pro Bono Program and current Placements is available from Pamela Daiker-Middaugh, LB 59c, 216/687-6878.

C. St. Petersburg Summer Law Institute
Cleveland-Marshall, in cooperation with the University of Arkansas School of Law, the University of the Pacific McGeorge School of Law, and the Law Faculties of the Novgorod State University and St. Petersburg State University, conducts a Summer Law Institute at St. Petersburg State University in St. Petersburg, Russia. Housing and dining facilities are provided on site. Courses, generally those with a comparative or international law perspective, are taught in English by Cleveland State law faculty as well as experts from other law schools and international agencies. Students from St. Petersburg State University and Novgorod State University attend classes with their American counterparts, making this a unique experience for students interested in gaining an international perspective on the law. Interested students should contact Associate Dean Mark Sundahl, LB 111, 216/687-2335.

D. Concentrations
Cleveland-Marshall offers students the opportunity to pursue an academic concentration several areas of legal practice: Business Law, Civil Litigation and Dispute Resolution, Criminal Law, Employment and Labor Law, and International & Comparative Law. The information sheets following the Graduation Requirements Worksheet detail the requirements for each of the concentrations.

Each concentration has required foundational courses, advanced and specialized courses, and a project requirement. In addition, students must attain a minimum cumulative GPA of 3.0 in concentration courses and may not earn below a C+ in more than one non-foundational course. Moreover, a student who transfers to Cleveland-Marshall after his or her first year at another law school (or second year in the case of a part-time student), may apply up to two courses taken at the other law school toward the fulfillment of requirements for a Concentration here, provided that: (a) the course is a foundational course for the relevant concentration here and (b) the faculty teaching in the concentration approve the course as equivalent to the relevant foundational course taught here. The student shall bear the burden of persuading the concentration faculty that the course taken at the other school is equivalent to the relevant foundational course and shall provide those faculty with (a) a catalogue description of the course taken, (b) a syllabus for the course, where available, and (c) such other information as the concentration faculty shall request. The grade obtained in the course at the other school shall be computed as part of the student’s GPA in the concentration for purposes of determining if the student has attained the requisite 3.0 GPA in the concentration. The course shall be allowed toward fulfillment of concentration requirements only if credit for the course would otherwise transfer to Cleveland-Marshall (i.e., the student has achieved a grade of 2.0 or the equivalent or better).

A student who matriculates at Cleveland-Marshall and who is a degree candidate here, who takes for credit at another law school a course that he or she wishes to apply toward fulfillment of concentration requirements here, may apply no more than one such course toward the concentration, provided that (a) the same or an equivalent course is not offered here and (b) the faculty teaching in the relevant concentration approve the course for purposes of meeting the concentration course requirements. The grade obtained in the course at the other school shall be computed as part of the student’s GPA in the concentration for purposes of determining if the student has attained the requisite 3.0 GPA in the concentration. The course shall be allowed toward fulfillment of concentration requirements only if credit for the course would otherwise transfer to Cleveland-Marshall (i.e., the student has achieved a grade of 2.0 or the equivalent or better). E. Center for Health Law & Policy

Health Law Certificate
Cleveland-Marshall College of Law’s Center for Health Law & Policy offers J.D. students the opportunity to earn a general Health Law Certificate. In order to earn the certificate, students must complete the following required courses: Biomedical Ethics, Health Care Law and Law and Medicine. Students must also complete three health law electives and an experiential learning experience. Students have the option to focus on courses in a particular area or take a variety of classes across three groups: Health Law Regulation, Health Law Policy and Ethics and Health Law Business and Litigation. In order to satisfy the experiential learning requirement, students may enroll in the Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic (CHALC) or complete one of the following externships: Medicare Hearings and Appeals, MetroHealth General Counsel’s Office, Cleveland Clinic General Counsel’s Office, University Hospital General Counsel’s Office and Medical Mutual General Counsel’s Office.

In order to enroll in the Health Law Certificate Program, students must schedule an entrance interview with Professor Browne Lewis, the Director of the Center by contacting Diane Adams at (216) 687-6884 or diane.adams@law.csuohio.edu. For additional information, please see the Center’s webpage at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/academics/chlp.

Health Care Compliance Certificate
A Health Care Compliance Certificate Program has been approved beginning Fall Semester 2012. The program is open to JD candidates at Cleveland-Marshall and to individuals who have earned an undergraduate degree with a cumulative grade point average of 3.0 or better. Individuals with an undergraduate GPA of less than 3.0 may still be considered and admitted based on other admission criteria, including professional experience and graduate coursework. To earn the certificate, students must complete all of the following courses: Health Care Compliance, L617; Health Care Law, L686; Health Care Fraud & Abuse, L682; HIPAA and Privacy, L690; Health Care Finance, L627; Health Law & Ethics, HCA 640; and an anticipated skills course entitled Health Care Compliance Skills: Auditing, Investigating & Reporting (to be offered through the college of law).

For additional information, please see the Center’s webpage at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/academics/chlp.

VII. GRADING GUIDELINES

The grading guidelines at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law are advisory. However, the guidelines serve as prima facie evidence of what constitutes a reasonable distribution of grades in Required Core Curriculum courses (other than Legal Writing and Constitutional Law) and other law courses. Following are the guidelines currently in effect.

Course Descriptions

The course descriptions included here answer many of the questions you may have about course content and expectations. New courses are added from time to time and descriptions are distributed to students with registration materials and on the College of Law website. Students are encouraged to speak with faculty teaching specific courses. In some cases it is noted that a course is “offered infrequently.” This means that there has been insufficient student or faculty interest to warrant offering the course on a regular basis but that the course may be scheduled if an appropriate opportunity is presented. Course information in red was added after the start of the 2012-2013 academic year.

*Required Core Curriculum

The Required Core Curriculum (RCC) is comprised of seven courses normally taken at the beginning of a student’s law school career – Contracts, Torts, Legal Writing, Criminal Law, Civil Procedure, Property, and Constitutional Law. The RCC must be substantially completed before students undertake electives. Students should take particular care in choosing electives prior to completing the core courses. Note: The preceding statement should be considered when electing courses for which the RCC is listed as a prerequisite. Students should consult an academic dean or faculty member with questions concerning specific courses and prerequisites.

Seminars

Note that the faculty has adopted the following criteria for designation of a course as a seminar. Courses listed as seminars on the final schedule for the term will meet these requirements.

Criteria for Designation of a Course as a Seminar (passed by faculty, Oct. 21, 2004)
1. A seminar is a small class, enrollment in which should normally not exceed fifteen students, that is designed to examine intensively a single topic or a limited range of topics within a general area of law. A seminar is not designed to offer a comprehensive survey of a field of law.
2. A seminar is designed to foster maximum interchange in discussion between students and instructor and among students.
3. A seminar shall require a substantial paper or equivalent written product.
4. A grade in a seminar may be based entirely on the paper, or on some combination of a paper, class participation, final examination, or other relevant factors.
5. A seminar may be given for two or three credits.

Although a seminar must require a “substantial paper or equivalent written product,” it may not satisfy the upper level writing requirement if the paper requirement is not a substantial research project as anticipated by the latter requirement. The designation {5} or {5a} in the notes column identifies those seminars that will require or provide an option to complete a paper that will satisfy the upper level writing requirement. Courses other than seminars may also satisfy the upper level writing requirement, and the designation {5} or {5a} on the schedule again indicates that a course will require or offer an option to complete a paper that will satisfy that requirement.

Administrative Law
LAW 623
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will focus on the function, procedure, and powers of administrative agencies; constitutional and statutory limitations; judicial review and relief from orders and decisions; the administrative process and its role in the development of public policy. Satisfies the administrative law requirement.

Advanced Brief Writing
LAW 615
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. A course designed to sharpen the student’s ability to research complex legal issues, to prepare appellate briefs and to engage in oral argument. Required of students who wish to try out for interscholastic Moot Court Competition. Satisfies third semester of legal writing requirement and skills course requirement.
Advanced Business Immigration Law
Law 737
(1 Credit Hour)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Immigration & Nationality Law, LAW 734. This course will focus on specific immigration issues that arise in the business context.

Advanced Legal Research
LAW 677
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC. This course is designed to build upon basic knowledge of legal resources and provide the foundation needed for advanced legal research. Sources emphasized will include legislative and statutory law, administrative law, judicial authority, and secondary sources. In addition, the course will examine research strategies, cost-effective research techniques, practitioner materials, and interdisciplinary research associated with business, scientific, and technical information. The goal of the course is not only to familiarize the student with particular legal research resources but to also instill in the student how to think about conducting research and to critically analyze research sources. Students will complete a variety of exercises, a mid-term, and a final research project.

Agency, Partnership, and Limited Liability Associations
LAW 691
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course provides an introduction to business associations. Employers and business entities, whether sole proprietorships, partnerships, or large corporations, utilize agents—especially employees—to effectuate their business objectives. Agency relationships can be formed intentionally or inadvertently, but regardless how they originate, the law imposes strict duties of conduct on both agents and their principals, and exacts severe penalties for their breach. The course examines the law of agency closely, including vicarious liability for wrongs of another and authority to bind another by assent or representation. Second, the course focuses on the law governing partnerships and addresses the complex intersection of agency and partnership law (i.e., the legal consequences of partners simultaneously being agents for the partnership as well as principals). Because the Uniform Partnership Acts impose numerous legal and economic risks for partners and partnerships, many business entities have reorganized to limit their liability consistent with the structures newly created by state statute, e.g., as a limited liability partnership or limited liability company. These diverse new statutory options for business organization constitute the final focus of the course.

Aging and the Health Care System
LAW 786
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This 2-credit seminar will focus upon the legal issues the elderly face when interacting with the health care system, including dying with dignity decisions, nursing home abuse and paying for health and long-term care. There are no upper level prerequisites for the course. The grade in the course will be determined by a paper and class presentation.

Alternate Dispute Resolution
LAW 696
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Judicial, court-centered processes are neither the only nor, necessarily, the best methods of resolving disputes. This course surveys the range of dispute resolution processes that are alternatives to litigation and adjudication. These include detailed study of the primary dispute resolution processes -negotiation, mediation, and arbitration - as well as some of their hybrid variants. The course also examines noteworthy applications of these litigation alternatives, the context for which ranges from the personal to the global. The ethical issues surrounding effective client advocacy in non-litigation situations will be explored in depth. When coverage includes international dispute resolution systems will count as an elective in the International and Comparative Law concentration. Satisfies skills course requirement.

American Legal History
LAW 550
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Lectures and discussions exploring various topics in American legal history from colonial times to the twentieth century. Topics may include legal control of “deviants” (criminals, juvenile delinquents, paupers, political dissidents), the growth of legal institutions and the legal profession, developments in substantive private law, law and the economy, the problem of freedom of speech and press, the law of slavery, and the changing status of women and children. Other topics may be substituted or added from time to time. Satisfies perspective elective requirement.

Ancient Athenian Law
LAW 570
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The ancient Athenians have been widely celebrated for their contributions to literature, philosophy and political thought. However, the genius of the Athenian people was also reflected in their legal innovations – which include the concepts of trial-by jury and judicial review. This course will provide students with a basic understanding of the structure and procedures of the Athenian legal system. Topics covered in the course include the Athenian constitution, the Athenian jury system, the resolution of commercial disputes, adultery, the torture of witnesses, and the sentencing of criminals. From their readings, students will gain an understanding of a legal system that struggled with many of the same issues that face modern society and which often provided thoughtful and creative solutions. In lieu of a final exam, students will write a 10-page research paper regarding an aspect of Athenian law. Students may choose to fulfill their Upper Level Writing Requirement with this course by writing a 20-page research paper. The course will satisfy the perspective elective requirement.

Animal Law
LAW 715
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Animal Law focuses on the legal, social and biological nature of nonhuman animals, including companion animals, wildlife, and animals raised for food and research. The course will consider such topics as:

1. Areas of national concern and statutory interpretation such as the Americans with Disabilities Act, the Endangered Species Act, federal cruelty laws, the Animal Welfare Act, the Marine Mammal Protection Act and the Humane Slaughter Act;
2. State and federal constitutional issues, e.g., exemptions from laws involving the use of animals, "hunter harassment" laws, federal constitutional standing issues involving animal interests, and state constitutional provisions regarding the protection of natural resources; and
3. Local and state law concerns, including common law property as applied to animals, state cruelty laws, agricultural treatment of animals and protection of livestock, municipal regulations of pets, and the changing status of animals in society.

Students will write a paper in the course and make a presentation to the class. Satisfies upper level writing requirement.

Arbitration
LAW 633
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The nature, law and practice of arbitration of disputes and claims of various types with an emphasis on labor arbitration. Satisfies skills course requirement.

Art Law
LAW 659
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course reviews both policy issues and practical applications of selected areas of the law that relate to the creation, display, reproduction, sale, resale and taxation of works of fine art. The areas we will explore are: limitations on the freedom of visual expression, in the form of both government regulation and private causes of action; copyright and trademark law and the fair use doctrine as they apply to visual images and distinctive artistic style; artists' right to protect their artistic reputation by preserving the integrity and attribution of their works of recognized stature (i.e., droit moral); commercial law issues relating to auctions, consignment sales, and secondary market resales of works of art; limitation of actions against bona fide purchasers of stolen art; and tax considerations relevant to artists, dealers and art collectors.

Asylum Law
LAW 744
(1 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Immigration & Nationality Law, LAW 734. The course will examine Asylum Law, including an examination of overseas refugees; the meaning of persecution; issues relating to race, religion, nationality, political opinion, social group, sexual orientation, gender; non state actors; standards of proof; exceptions to eligibility; and the convention against terror.

Students will be evaluated through a written project, requiring them to analyze a fact pattern according to the principles studied during the semester. The course will not satisfy the upper level writing requirement.

Antitrust Law
LAW 646
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course provides an overview of legal and economic problems in the public control of corporate market power, focusing on the legal (and occasionally economic) significance of price fixing, boycotts, monopolization, franchising restrictions, and mergers. Students will examine how courts evaluate business practices and/or corporate structure.

Banking Regulation
LAW 641
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will explore all aspects of federal banking regulation, from standards for obtaining a bank charter and federal deposit insurance to restrictions on bank activities and bank failure. It will not canvass the commercial law governing bank transfers or payments already covered by Commercial Law, L601. Satisfies the administrative law requirement.

Bankruptcy
LAW 624
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. A survey of the fundamentals of bankruptcy law, including the “Automatic stay” of creditor collection activity, the creation of the debtor’s bankruptcy “estate,” the treatment of “executory contracts,” the trustee’s “avoiding” powers, the nature of “claims” against the debtor’s estate, the individual debtor’s right to a “discharge,” “exemptions,” the powers and jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, and the processes of “liquidation,” “adjustment” of debts of an individual debtor, and “reorganization” of a business.

Biomedical Ethics and the Law
LAW 602
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will cover legal and ethical values and doctrines in the context of current issues in health science decision-making including, e.g., a) death and dying; b) informed consent and other aspects of the doctor patient relationship; c) artificial reproduction (e.g., artificial insemination, surrogate motherhood, in vitro fertilization, embryonic transfer); d) organ transplants; e) research and experimentation on human subjects. Beginning Fall 2008, satisfies perspective requirement.

Business Bankruptcy
LAW 637
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC and Bankruptcy (LAW 624); Secured Transactions (LAW 603) is recommended but is not a prerequisite. A survey of bankruptcy and other laws that affect the business decisions to put a business into a Chapter 11 Reorganization and the decisions necessary after the company has filed its Chapter 11 proceedings, including the decisions to file bankruptcy, the DIP financing, jurisdiction and venue, obtaining credit, treatment of executory contracts, review of operating issues, management decisions ethics, claims issues, sale of assets, drafting the disclosure statement, confirmation of the reorganization plan, and post confirmation issues.

Capital Punishment and the Law
LAW 679
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course examines the theory, jurisprudence, and practice of the modern death penalty system in the United States. It focuses on constitutional and statutory issues surrounding death sentences, including: limitations on imposing the death penalty based on factors such as the type of crime, and the role and age of the defendant; pretrial and trial issues such as prosecutorial discretion in charging, jury selection, psychiatric experts, aggravating and mitigating circumstances; right to counsel at trial and on post-conviction review; processes available for judicial and executive review of death sentences; and, limits on carrying out the death penalty such as a defendant’s competency to be executed.

Children, Parents and the State
LAW 771
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Family Law, LAW 618. This course builds on students’ understanding of the issues covered in the basic Family Law course (marriage, divorce, distribution of property upon divorce, and child custody issues) and asks students to think about how the law allocates power and responsibility for children in our society and how it should do so. In addition, the course addresses the extent to which the law should recognize the autonomy of older children - i.e., to what extent the law should give older children the power to decide for themselves. Finally, the course addresses the appropriate role of the government vis a vis children and their families.

Civil Litigation Clinic
LAW 803
(3 or 4 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC. The Civil Litigation Clinic is designed to provide students with real-client experience across a wide variety of cases. It provides students with the opportunity to apply the skills they acquired in their law school classes to actual cases or controversies. Supervised by clinical professors, the students may represent clients in administrative hearings, trial courts, appellate procedures and more. Students may appear before state and federal tribunals. They may engage in issues relating to consumer protection, landlord-tenant, employment law, and asylum. They may represent directly parties to the dispute, or file Amicus briefs to assist courts on principled matters.

In addition to the case work, the Clinic includes a weekly seminar component, providing instruction in trial and representation skills, and requiring the students to present their cases to their peers and to give and receive constructive criticism - much like in real life.

Permission of the instructor(s) is required.
Civil Procedure
LAW 505
(6 Credit Hours; 2 Semesters)
In Civil Procedure we study the process by which legal disputes of a civil nature are decided in an adversarial system of justice. This includes how a civil lawsuit begins, which courts may hear the dispute, where the lawsuit may be filed, who may be a party, how parties gather facts to support their claims and defenses, what law applies to cases filed in federal court, how cases are resolved, procedural remedies, and the binding effect of a final judgment. Specifically we study pleadings, joinder of claims and parties, subject matter jurisdiction, personal jurisdiction, venue, choice of law, discovery, resolution without trial (including summary judgment, default judgments, dismissals), trials, and issue and claim preclusion. The course involves close examination of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure as well as statutes and constitutional provisions that govern civil litigation. A grade is entered on the student’s transcript for each semester of the course. Required for graduation. Offered through 2011-12 academic year.

Civil Procedure
LAW 513
(4 Credit Hours)
In Civil Procedure we study the process by which legal disputes of a civil nature are decided in an adversarial system of justice. This includes how a civil lawsuit begins, which courts may hear the dispute, where the lawsuit may be filed, who may be a party, how parties gather facts to support their claims and defenses, what law governs a case that is filed in federal court, how such a case is resolved, procedural remedies, and the binding effect of a final judgment. Specifically, topics covered may include pleadings, joinder of claims and parties, subject matter jurisdiction, personal jurisdiction, venue, choice of law, discovery, resolution without trial (including summary judgment, default judgment, and dismissal), trials, and issue and claim preclusion. The course involves close examination of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure as well as statutes and constitutional provisions that govern civil litigation. A grade is entered on the student’s transcript for each semester of the course. Required for graduation. Offered beginning Fall 2012.

Class Actions
LAW 635
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Whether sued in federal or state court, whether considered rightly or wrongly initiated, class-action lawsuits are more popular today than ever. Indeed, Congress’ highest-profile litigation reform effort of late—its recently-enacted Class Action Fairness Act—goes directly to this sensation’s heart. Given class actions’ prevalence, well-rounded lawyers need to understand class actions’ substantive, procedural, political, societal, economic, and constitutional nuances and effects. This course will examine multiple substantive class-action areas, such as consumer fraud and deceptive-business practices; price-fixing and market-allocation schemes; and securities and commodities fraud. While considering these various substantive areas, we’ll analyze Federal Rule 23 and its state-court counterparts. We’ll study class-certification procedure in federal and state courts; the requirements necessary for class certification; and the defenses and tactics typically (and not so typically) asserted to defeat it. We’ll also consider competing class certifications’ Due Process, Commerce, and Full Faith and Credit Clause implications; class-action coordination among various competing or complimentary federal and state class-action cases; and class-action settlement issues, such as proper notice, damages allocation, opt-out procedures, and objections.

Commercial Law
LAW 601
(4 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. A survey of the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC), except for Articles 8 and 9, with emphasis on Articles 2, 3, and 4 dealing with sales, negotiable instruments and bank collections. In addition, some consumer laws and federal regulations on sales and bank collections are addressed. Lesser emphasis is given to UCC Articles 2A, 4A, 5 and 7 on leases, wire transfers, letters of credit and documents of title; UCC Article 6 on bulk transfers is also covered briefly.

Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic
LAW 824
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC; approval of clinical faculty. The Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic offers students the opportunity to provide representation to real clients who are patients at one of four MetroHealth outpatient hospitals. Students, under the supervision of clinical faculty, will work with doctors, nurses, social workers and Legal Aid lawyers to address the legal issues of people seeking medical treatment. Patient/clients will be low-income, and often one of the following: children, first generation Americans, people recently released from incarceration, Spanish speaking, or the elderly. Any area of law could be handled by students, but the following are the most common: special education law, housing law, public benefits law, employment law, juvenile law, and family law.

Students will meet once a week in a group for a seminar class and once a week for an individual meeting with the clinical faculty. Each student will be assigned to an outpatient hospital and serve as a member of that hospital’s Legal Team that decides which patients to interview and ultimately take as clients. Students will also conduct intake, perform research and represent the clients in the community. The two goals of the Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic are to improve the legal skills of students and to address the unmet legal issues of the poor.

Students interested in the clinic will be interviewed by the clinic faculty and selected on the basis of a number of factors, including public interest background and future legal career objectives. Satisfies skills course requirement.

Comparative Constitutional Law

LAW 567

(2 or 3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. This course examines and compares constitutional law and structure of governance of different countries of the world. Questions explored include: Why have constitutions? How do the structures of constitutional courts and the practice of judicial review differ in different countries? How do different constitutions deal with separation of powers, legislative process, regime changes, federalism, individual rights and social welfare? The course aims at helping students think systematically about different structures for organizing a government, and different approaches to establishing just, effective and stable forms of governments. Satisfies perspective requirement.

Comparative Law: Canon Law

LAW 581

(2 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. This course examines the legal system of the Latin Catholic Church. In addition to an historical overview of the science of canon law, lectures address specific canons of the 1983 Code of Canon Law and selected canonical issues. Subjects to be considered include: structures of governance, general norms of canon law, ecclesiastical rights, ecclesiastical sanctions (criminal law), trial procedures, marriage law, and temporal goods (i.e., property law, contracts, wills, and monetary issues). Satisfies perspective requirement.

Computers and the Law: Criminal

LAW 665

(2 or 3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC* The course will cover the growing area of computer crimes. Students will learn about the different types of criminal offenses, which include but are not limited to economic, gambling, child exploitation, and fraud offenses. Further, the student will study the different investigative techniques utilized by the government in curbing such offenses as well as methods of defense explored on behalf of the accused. The student will also be exposed to the various Constitutional provisions contemplated during the processing of a computer crime and/or investigation.

Conflicts of Laws

LAW 632

(3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. The law relating to actions having elements in more than one jurisdiction; choice of law; enforcement of foreign judgments; jurisdiction of courts in such cases; constitutional questions involved; application to contracts, torts, marriage and divorce, family relations, property, and procedure. Offered infrequently.

Constitutional Law

LAW 516

(5 Credit Hours; 1 or 2 Semesters)

General principles of the law of the United States Constitution; judicial function in constitutional matters; federal authority, separation of powers and the powers of the states; particular attention to the commerce clause, due process, and equal protection. A grade is entered on the student’s transcript for each term of the course. Required for graduation.

Constitutional Law Seminar

LAW 707

(2 or 3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. Discussion of selected current constitutional issues (with consideration given to areas of particular student interest). Information regarding the focus of a particular section of the course will be provided with course schedules. May include preparation of appropriate student research papers, which will satisfy the upper level writing requirement. Interested students should consult the New and Revised Courses information for the term in which the course is offered for information on the focus of the course in that term.

Consumer Law
LAW 644
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC. Consumer Law will examine debtor-creditor rights under the Ohio Consumer Sales Practices Act, the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, and case law dealing with consumer issues. The course will offer students the opportunity to study and discuss debtor-creditor rights under Ohio and federal law from the filing of the lawsuit to executing upon the judgment. The course will include observing consumer cases in court and role playing the cases in class. The students will also draft consumer pleadings. The course will examine legal theories and apply them to the practice of law from the creditor's and debtor's perspective. The skills exercises occupy 10 to 20% of the class time. Grading will be based on class participation and a final exam.

Contracts
LAW 501
(6 Credit Hours through 2004-2005; 2 Semesters)
(5 Credit Hours beginning Fall 2005; 2 Semesters)
Formation, offer, acceptance, and consideration; performance and excuse for nonperformance; breach and damages; third party beneficiaries; assignment of rights and delegation of duties; statute of frauds; contract integration rule; illegal contracts and public policy; unconscionability; discharge. A grade is entered on the student’s transcript for each semester of the course. Required for graduation. Offered through 2011-12 academic year.

Contracts
LAW 511
(4 Credit Hours)
The Contracts course covers the basic components of contract law: contract formation (offer, acceptance, and consideration/promissory estoppel), contract interpretation and performance, defenses to enforcement, and remedies. A grade is entered on the student’s transcript for each semester of the course. Required for graduation. Offered beginning Fall 2012.

Contracts Seminar
LAW 741
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Examination of the contract as the legal method for allocation of risk by self-legislation between the parties; contracts jurisprudence from the vantage point of an upper level law student; typical and atypical contract problems. Satisfies upper level writing requirement.

Copyright, Patent and Trademark Law
LAW 658
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course is designed for the general practitioner as well as for those who intend to specialize in the practice of intellectual property law. It is directed to the study of the patent, trademark and copyright laws, to the procedures undertaken before the various federal and state administrative agencies for obtaining patents, trademarks and copyrights, and to the protection and enforcement afforded such intellectual property by the federal and state laws and the courts.

Corporate Law and Governance Seminar
Law 772
(2 or 3 Credits Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Corporations, LAW 692, or permission of the instructor. This research seminar will allow you to explore a topic in corporate law in more depth than is possible in the basic Corporations course. The course will provide an opportunity to step back and consider the theoretical and policy aspects of basic business law doctrine. Though the readings and preliminary discussions will focus on governance issues, the range of potential topics for your research and writing is very broad. Grades will be based on class participation (including a class presentation) and a final paper. The paper can be used to satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement and/or the project requirement for the Business Law concentration.

Corporations
LAW 692
(4 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The course concentrates on the following aspects of the modern business corporation: formation; financing; state and federal regulations respecting the issuance of securities and insider trading; governance of the corporation; powers and duties of directors and officers; rights and remedies of shareholders and creditors; dividends and other distributions; and corporate law suits and derivative actions. It also assesses the public policy and social responsibility implications of large scale business enterprises.

Criminal Felony Sentencing
LAW 626
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will explore the evolution of sentencing systems in the United States since 1787, culminating in the determinate systems adopted in recent years by the State of Ohio and the U.S. Congress and Federal Sentencing Commission. These will be contrasted with the indeterminate systems that were previously employed. The uncertainty created by the Supreme Court’s recent decision in Blakely v Washington will be a significant topic of discussion. Particular attention will be devoted to the allocation of power and discretion, the role of plea bargaining, the role of appellate review, the impact of mandatory minimum sentences, and issues of race. Satisfies Upper Level Writing requirement. Offered infrequently.

Criminal Law
LAW 506
(3 Credit Hours; 1 Semester)
General concepts of the criminal law; the purposes of punishment; general principles of criminal responsibility; other topics may include attempts; parties; conspiracy; specific crimes against the person, against the habitation, and against property; and, defenses available to the accused. Required for graduation.

Criminal Law: Advanced Topics
LAW 706
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. An in-depth study of one or more selected topics in substantive criminal law. Interested students should consult the New and Revised Courses information for the term in which the course is offered for information on the focus of the course in that term. Offered infrequently.

Criminal Procedure I
LAW 621
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course focuses for the most part on police investigation techniques, such as searches, interrogations, undercover activities, electronic eavesdropping, and lineups. Closely studied will be constitutional limitations on these practices, flowing from the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 14th Amendments. Other topics covered may include the right to counsel, the entrapment defense, bail, and/or plea bargaining.

Criminal Procedure II
LAW 678
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Criminal Procedure I, LAW 621, is recommended but not required. This course focuses on the criminal trial process from the charging decision through trial and sentencing including: case theory and role of counsel; grand jury proceedings; pretrial release and detention; discovery and other pretrial motions; plea bargaining and guilty pleas; jury selection and deliberation, sentencing procedures and guidelines.

Particular emphasis is given to the protections provided by the U.S. Constitution in criminal proceedings. State and federal rules of criminal procedure may be studied.

Cyber Law
LAW 735
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This seminar considers the interaction between information technology (i.e., computer hardware, software, networks and electronic or digital content), particularly as manifest in the Internet, and the law. We will examine substantive areas of the law which bear directly on information technology (particularly, e.g., intellectual property, contract), as well as ways in which information technology is itself shaping and transforming the law (regarding, e.g., privacy, jurisdiction), economics and culture. Classes will encourage open discussion of readings (from text and select online sources) and students should expect one or more written exercises and class presentations in addition to a substantial project (e.g., research and writing) due at the end of the term. Students are encouraged to have some background training or experience (undergraduate studies, employment, other law school courses, etc.) that reflects basic knowledge of/interest in information technology and/or issues arising from its contemporary applications. Satisfies Upper Level Writing requirement.

Disability Law
LAW 676
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC. Disability Law examines laws prohibiting discrimination on the basis of disability with particular emphasis on Titles I, II, and III of the Americans with Disabilities Act, the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, The Fair Housing Act Amendments of 1988 and Amendments to the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act. Substantive areas that will be covered include efforts to combat discrimination on the basis of disability in employment, housing, and education, as well as efforts to curb disability-based discrimination in the provision of health care services, in accessing places of public accommodation and by public entities. Students will explore the ways in which the law has attempted to protect individuals against disability discrimination as well as examine continued challenges individuals with disabilities encounter despite existing legal protections. The course will be an elective course in the Health Law Certificate program.
Election Law
LAW 727
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course explores regulation of the political process and voting rights, at both the federal and state levels. We consider constitutional and statutory law constraining who is qualified to vote; election administrative procedures (including specified voting technologies and days for voting, voter IDs and registration requirements); reapportionment and redistricting of legislative districts under the Equal Protection Clause (one person, one vote and political gerrymandering in particular); political parties' legal roles in the electoral system; campaign finance regulation; and the Voting Rights Act. We will devote significant attention to Ohio's election law and election administrative difficulties that resulted in a successful constitutional challenge to Ohio's election system. We will also consider remedies for "defective" elections with Bush v. Gore a prime focus. Course requirements include an experiential learning component of a wide range of possibilities. Satisfies the Administrative Law Requirement.

Employee Pension and Benefits (ERISA) Law
LAW 685
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Pension and benefit funds are currently the largest single source of capital in the nation (over $3 trillion). Their collection, administration, distribution, and other key aspects are regulated in private sector employers by the federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA). ERISA provides complex tax and other incentives to businesses to create and administer pension and benefit funds. The course focuses primarily on ERISA and its impact on a host of employment and business-related problems, including collective bargaining, tax planning, multi-employer bargaining arrangements, mergers, acquisitions, leveraged buyouts, plant closings, layoff, bankruptcies, divorce and probate, preemption of state law, fiduciary relations, and fiscal policy.

Employment Discrimination Law
LAW 639
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course affords students an opportunity to delve deeply into the problems and legal solutions to employment discrimination, one of the most publicly contested areas of the law. While its primary focus is Title VII, which forbids discrimination on the basis of race, sex, religion, and national origin, the course also examines the more recently enacted remedial statutes, particularly those proscribing age and disability discrimination. The course also explores sexual orientation discrimination, constitutional protections, 42 USC sections 1981 and 1983, and the Equal Pay Act. Students will master the substantive law of discrimination, the special procedural requirements for administrative claims, and the array of remedies available to aggrieved parties, including affirmative action. This course is a foundation requirement for the Employment and Labor Law Concentration. It is recommended that students planning to take the Employment Law Clinic take either this course or Employment Law, LAW 684, prior to or in conjunction with the Clinic. Beginning Fall 2010, the course no longer satisfies the administrative law requirement.

Employment Law
LAW 684(AR)
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course functions as an introduction to Employment and Labor law. It primarily focuses on the law governing the non-unionized workforce. Three broad areas of inquiry constitute its subject matter. First, we study the newly developing law often referred to as common law wrongful discharge, by which an employee can assert claims of unlawful termination of employment because the employer violated fundamental public policy, contractual provisions, duties imposed by tort law (which can result in defamation, intentional infliction, invasion of privacy, and fraud cases) or the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. Second, we examine the duties the law imposes on employees that run to the benefit of the employer, including non-competition and the duty of loyalty. Third, we study the law of compensation and benefits, focusing on two pivotal federal states that govern the workplace – the Fair Labor Standards Act (which includes minimum wage regulation) and the Family and Medical Leave Act – as well as the federal pension and benefits law (ERISA) and the law of unemployment insurance. Finally, we will study issues surrounding workplace safety and workers’ compensation. Discrimination law is generally not covered in this course, as it is the sole subject of Employment Discrimination Law, LAW 639. It is recommended that students planning to take the Employment Law Clinic take either this course or Employment Discrimination Law, LAW 639, prior to or in conjunction with the Clinic. Satisfies the administrative law requirement.

Employment Law Clinic
LAW 802
(2-5 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; approval of the Clinic faculty; Employment Discrimination Law (LAW 639) or Employment Law (LAW 684) recommended (may be taken concurrently). Students, supervised by Clinic faculty, provide representation to real clients with employment cases in federal and state courts and administrative agencies. Students participate at all stages of representation from client interviewing through settlement, trial, and appeal. A weekly seminar is devoted to in-depth discussion of the cases (including case evaluation, strategy, legal, factual and ethical issues); and instruction in litigation and lawyering skills, using assigned readings, written assignments and simulations. Through both casework and the seminars, students learn such representation skills as: interviewing clients and witnesses, investigating facts, counseling, drafting pleadings, planning and conducting discovery, negotiation, motion practice, brief writing and oral argument. Normally, students enroll over the course of two semesters, registering for 3-5 credit hours each semester. With permission of Clinic faculty, may be taken for a third semester for additional credit hours. Satisfies the project and/or advanced course requirement of Employment and Labor Law Concentration. Satisfies skills course requirement.

Employment Law Seminar
LAW 750
(2 or 3 Credits)
Prerequisites: RCC; additional pre- or co-requisites may be listed depending on the course focus. The Employment Law Seminar provides an opportunity to study a critical area of employment law in great depth. The specific topic may vary with the instructor and students should consult the New and Revised Courses information for the term in which the course is offered for information on the focus of the course in that term. Students will be required to submit a substantial research paper for the course. Satisfies the upper level writing requirement.

Entertainment Law
LAW 636
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Entertainment Law surveys the issues affecting performers, practitioners, and producers in the music, motion picture, television, theatre, print, and multimedia industries. Special attention will be given to those areas most predominant in the Cleveland metropolitan area. Issues such as copyright, licensing, contract, compensation, and impact of unions on the industry will be addressed.

Environmental Law and Regulation
LAW 671
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will address both the substantive and procedural aspects of environmental law and regulation. It will include discussion of the common law grounding of environmental law, as well as analysis of several federal environmental laws, and their state counterparts. It will address the interactions of federal, state, and local law and regulation as they pertain to environmental compliance and enforcement, and will attempt to apply those laws in a practical way to case studies. Coverage may include aspects of the National Environmental Policy Act, the Clean Air Act, the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, the Resources Conservation and Recovery Act, Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act, and other pertinent federal, state, and local laws. Satisfies administrative law requirement.

Environmental Law and Policy Clinic
LAW 808
(2-4 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Environmental Law (LAW 671); permission of the instructor. The Clinic provides students with the opportunity to learn environmental law through practical experience including litigation support as well as participating in drafting legislation and reports on environmental needs and solutions in the greater Cleveland area and the midwest. Students provide legal support on environmental issues to citizens, environmental organizations, legislators and government officials. This includes investigation, counseling, research, drafting of legal documents, reviewing and drafting legislation, and negotiating. The Clinic is normally elected for four (4) credit hours but may, with permission of the instructor, be taken for 2 or 3 credits. Satisfies skills course requirement.

Environmental Law Seminar
LAW 711
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Environmental Law (LAW 671). The Environmental Law Seminar presents an opportunity to study current issues in environmental law in a directed manner. The seminar topic will vary according to current events. In a given semester, for example, it may cover “toxic torts,” “climate change” or “international environmental law.” Interested students should consult the New and Revised Courses information for the semester in which the course is offered for information on the focus of the course in that semester. Offered infrequently.

Estate Planning
LAW 689
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Tax I (LAW 607); Estates and Trusts (LAW 609); Wealth Transfer Tax (LAW 606).
An analysis, primarily from a tax perspective, of basic devices used in estate planning, including maximum marital deduction formula clauses, revocable and irrevocable trusts, charitable trusts, insurance trusts, grantor and beneficiary trustees, freezing estate values and valuation, inter-vivos gift giving and generation skipping transfers.

Estates and Trusts
LAW 609
(4 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will include analysis and discussion of the law of wills, testamentary capacity; the execution, revocation, and republication of wills; construction of wills, lapsed legacies, ademption and satisfaction of bequests; incorporation by reference and independent legal significance. Other topics include planning and creation of a trust; obligations of trustee to beneficiaries and third persons; rights and remedies of beneficiaries; resulting and constructive trusts; termination and modification of trusts; and problems in the administration of trusts, charitable trusts and cy pres.

Evidence
LAW 661
(4 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course introduces students to the rules that determine what information can be introduced by lawyers in trials. It is based on the Federal Rules of Evidence. The course covers basic evidentiary issues including relevance and prejudice, hearsay and hearsay exceptions, character evidence, and privileges. Other matters covered may include inferences, burden of proof, judicial notice, and expert testimony. Required for graduation.

Externships

Please note that more complete information about the externship program and specific externship placements can be found at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/externships.

For the most current information concerning our externship offerings, please visit our Current Semester course and Exam Schedules webpage.

Judicial, LAW 815 (Fall or Spring: 4 or 6 Credit Hours; Summer: 3 or 5 Credit Hours)

United States Attorney, LAW 882 (Fall or Spring: 4 Credit Hours; Summer: 5 Credit Hours)

General Counsel, LAW 827 (Fall or Spring: 4 or 6 Credit Hours; Summer: 3 or 5 Credit Hours)

Public Interest/Government, LAW 817. (Fall or Spring: 4 or 6 Credit Hours; Summer: 3 or 5 Credit Hours)

Independent, LAW 805 (Fall or Spring: 4 or 6 Credit Hours; Summer: 3 or 5 Credit Hours)

Externships provide students the opportunity to learn the law outside of the classroom by participating in and observing the legal system in action while earning course credits. Students work in settings where, under close supervision of an attorney or judge, they contribute to the ongoing work of the office. Students have the chance to learn the law by being active participants in the legal process. Externs also get to observe legal proceedings—e.g., depositions, settlement conferences, trials—so that they receive broad exposure to the legal system. A key aspect of every externship is close supervision by an attorney or judge who will review and comment on the student’s work throughout the term so that the student hones professional skills and expands one’s understanding of professional responsibilities.

Externships are with judicial and governmental offices, other organizations that serve the public interest and general counsel offices of corporations and other entities including public interest, governmental, nonprofit or for-profit organizations. Student work depends on the office. When working in a judge’s chambers, a student may research and write bench memos in preparation for hearings on cases or draft orders and opinions. In other offices they may conduct client or witness interviews, engage in discovery and document review, or other types of fact investigation. Brief descriptions are provided below. For more information see https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/externships/generalinformation.

Prerequisites: For any externship, a student must have substantially completed the RCC*, completed 29 credits and have a cumulative G.P.A. of 2.5 or better. Some externships have additional requirements, as noted. Please also note that some externships require background clearances that may take six weeks or longer. Placements that currently require this kind of clearance are the U.S. Attorney’s Office, the Immigration and Customs Enforcement Chief Counsel Office, the U.S. Department of Justice Immigration Court, the Cuyahoga County Prosecutor’s Office and the Cleveland Metropolitan School District Law Department. For these you need to apply well in advance of the term in which you wish to extern because you cannot begin your externship until you are cleared. The site supervisor makes the final decision approving students for the placement.

Credits: For every externship, a student must commit to work a certain number of hours and participate in the Externship Seminar. The number of credits you may receive depends on the semester and the externship placement. In the fall or spring 14-week term a student must commit to work 16 hours/week to receive 4 credits and 24 hours/week to receive 6 credits. In the 7-week summer term a student must commit 24 hours/week to receive 3 credits and 40 hours/week to receive 5 credits.

Please see the specific terms and number of credits available under the listing for each externship below. Students may not receive compensation for their work as an Extern.

The Externship Seminar is taught by a full-time faculty member at the law school. Students submit weekly written journals and make a presentation about their externship experience. The course is graded Pass/Fail. This grade is based on four factors: completion of the required number of hours and assignments given by the site supervisor, the site supervisor’s written evaluation of the extern’s work, timely and thoughtful journal entries, and attendance and participation in the externship seminar including a presentation on the extern’s experience.

Third-year full-time and fourth-year part-time students may be eligible to represent clients in court. See Ohio Internship Rule (for state court eligibility) and Federal Internship Rule (for federal court eligibility).

For more information about externships, contact Jessica Mathewson at (216) 687-6871 or jessica.mathewson@law.csuohio.edu.

Judicial Externship
LAW 815
(Fall or Spring: 6 Credit Hours (24 hours/week); Summer: 3 Credit Hours (24 hours/week) or 5 Credit Hours (40 hours/week))

Students may work for a federal district court judge or magistrate, a federal appellate court judge, or a state appellate court judge. Students may only participate in one judicial externship experience during their law school career. Externs are integrated into the work of the chambers: writing bench memos, drafting opinions, researching issues during trials, observing settlement conferences and mediations. Students also have the opportunity to observe proceedings in the courthouse which may include trials, sentencing hearings or oral arguments. We also have externships with specialized courts, including The U.S Department of Justice Immigration Court and The Office of Medicare Hearings and Appeals.

For more information about a judicial externship, contact Jessica Mathewson at (216) 687-6871 or jessica.mathewson@law.csuohio.edu.

U. S. Attorney’s Office Externship
LAW 882
(Criminal Division—Fall; Civil Division—Spring)
(Fall or Spring: 4 Credit Hours (16/hours/week); Summer: 5 credit hours (40 hours/week))

This placement is in the Cleveland office of United States Attorney. Students work in the Civil Division during spring semester and the Criminal Division during fall semester. Students will be introduced to the range of activities and types of cases, including appeals, handled by the division in which they are placed. For more information about this externship and the prerequisites, see https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/externships/placements.

Government/ Public Interest Externship
LAW 817
(Fall or Spring: 4 Credit Hours (16 hours/week) or 6 Credit Hours (24 hours/week) or 5 Credit Hours (40 hours/week))

The Government/Public Interest externships are placements with public interest, governmental, nonprofit or for-profit entity (but not a law firm engaged in the private practice of law). These externships are in numerous subject areas: civil, criminal, education, health, immigration, labor/employment, and tax. They are also in wide variety of types of legal practices: litigation, in-house counsel, court. During an externship a student may have the opportunity to delve into substantive areas of law, investigate claims, research and write motions or briefs, draft contracts, and participate in hearings, observe trials, settlement conferences, and negotiations. For more information about our current externship placements, students should refer to the externship placement website: https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/externships/placements.
For more information about a government or public interest externship, contact Jessica Mathewson at (216) 687-6871 or jessica.mathewson@law.csuohio.edu.

General Counsel Externship
LAW 827
(Fall or Spring: 4 Credit Hours (16 hours/week) or 6 Credit Hours (24 hours/week); Summer: 3 Credit Hours (24 hours/week) or 5 Credit Hours (40 hours/week))

General Counsel externships are placements in the general counsel offices of corporations and other entities including public interest, governmental, nonprofit or for-profit organizations. General Counsel offices advise their organizations on legal issues that arise. Externs experiences will vary depending on the particular organization or entity. Their duties generally will include researching legal issues, participating in strategy meetings, and assessing alternative approaches to the legal problems presented.

For more information about a general counsel externship, contact Jessica Mathewson (216) 687-6871 or jessica.mathewson@law.csuohio.edu.

Students interested in an externship placement not listed above should see the following section on Independent Externships (LAW 805).

Independent Externship
LAW 805
(Fall or Spring: 4 Credit Hours (16 hours/week) or 6 Credit Hours (24 hours/week); Summer: 3 Credit Hours (24 hours/week) or 5 Credit Hours (40 hours/week))

The Independent Externship allows a student to propose externing in an office where we previously have not had an externship. The student is responsible for the following: (1) finding a placement in a government, public interest, nonprofit or for-profit legal environment (but not a law firm engaged in the private practice of law). Generally, students are not permitted to arrange an externship with a judge with whom we do not have an existing relationship. There have been some exceptions made for this rule, for instance where a student wants to extern with a judge outside the greater Northeastern Ohio area; (2) arranging for an attorney at the site to supervise directly his or her work; and (3) submitting a written proposal for the externship to the Associate Dean for Academic Affairs.

The decision as to whether a proposed placement meets the goals, objectives and requirements of a Cleveland-Marshall externship shall be within the discretion of the Associate Dean for Academic Affairs. Procedures for obtaining approval of an Independent Externship are outlined in section II.B. of the Externship Policies and Procedures, online at: https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/externship/policiesandprocedures

Fair Housing Clinic
LAW 886
(4 to 8 Credit Hours; 1 or 2 Semesters)
Prerequisites: RCC*, Evidence LAW 661 (may be taken concurrently); completion of 45 semester credit hours; permission of the instructor. The Housing Advocates, Inc., operates a Fair Housing Law Clinic in cooperation with Cleveland-Marshall College of Law. Students in the clinic will work on fair housing cases referred from a number of fair housing organizations in Cuyahoga, Summit, Lake, Portage, Stark and Columbiana counties. The cases will be in both state and federal courts. Under Ohio Supreme Court Rule II students who have earned 60 semester credit hours will be eligible to participate in state court proceedings as Legal Interns. Under U.S. District Court Local Rule 83.6, students who have completed 45 semester credit hours will be eligible to participate in federal court proceedings as Legal Interns with permission of the Judge. Satisfies skills course requirement.

Fair Labor Standards Act Seminar
LAW 739
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will provide students with a thorough understanding of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (“FLSA”), the Ohio Minimum Fair Wage Standards Act (“OMFWSA”) (the FLSA’s Ohio Counterpart), and the practical and tactical use of these laws in litigation. While the course will focus on the historical and substantive components of the laws, the course will not be a series of lectures about the law. Instead, the thrust of the course will be the application of the law in prosecuting or defending FLSA/OMFWSA litigation. The course will also necessarily cover some aspects of civil procedure due to the complex nature of this type of litigation. As a result, students will gain a basic understanding of class action and collective action procedure.

Grades will be based on class participation, short quizzes, and a final paper to be submitted at the conclusion of the semester. This course will satisfy the administrative law and upper level writing requirements.

Family Law
LAW 618
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. History and development of the law of marriage and divorce; rights and duties arising out of the relations of husband and wife, parent and child, guardian and ward; the role of the state in defining and enforcing such rights and duties; law of alien and insane persons.

Federal Courts and the Federal System
LAW 625
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. During the past ten years, many of the U.S. Supreme Court's most controversial decisions have fallen within the doctrinal areas encompassed by this course. By mandate in both constitutional and statutory law, the federal courts are courts of "limited," not general, jurisdiction and are subject to numerous restrictions on the exercise of their power. Purposes asserted for these restrictions include protecting the constitutional allocation of power between the National and State governments -- federalism -- and the allocation of power between the coordinate branches of the National government -- separation of powers. These two foundational, organizing principles repeatedly surface as justifications for judicial outcomes. In particular, we examine closely the jurisdictional prerequisites of maintaining a case in federal court, including the doctrines requiring proper standing and forbidding the presentation of an unripe or moot suit. We inquire into the complicated interrelationship of federal and state law, including: federal common law, the obligation of state courts to apply and obey governing federal law, the weight of state courts' decisions on federal law questions, and the appellate power of the U.S. Supreme Court over State courts. We delve into the various legal strategies that can be employed to oust an otherwise properly filed case from federal court, including abstention and the Eleventh Amendment, and examine the Eleventh's intersection with the Tenth Amendment and the Supremacy Clause. And we explore procedural aspects of suing the governments – States (under s. 1983) and the Federal Government via a Bivens action. The course is strongly recommended for those seeking a litigation career, and for those desirous of serving as federal judicial law clerks.

Financial System Integrity Seminar
LAW 743
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC; Secured Transactions (LAW 603) and Tax I (LAW 607) are recommended but not required. This seminar will consider a broad range of financial sector integrity issues but will focus on the prevention of money laundering and the financing of terrorism. International standards, US law, and examples from various countries will be considered. The grade for the seminar will be based on class participation and a final paper. Satisfies the upper level writing requirement.

First Amendment Rights and Responsibilities
LAW 680
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. A study of the content of the First Amendment. Subjects to be studied include the regulation and prohibition of verbal and nonverbal expression, political speech, obscenity, sedition, expressions in public places and government-owned for a, use of “fighting words,” selected aspects of the law of libel, “hate” speech, and commercial speech. Also to be examined is the development of the law relating to the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause, as well as freedom of association.

Global Business Law Review
LAW 818
(1 Credit Hour; may be elected twice)

Global Business Law Review: Editor-in-Chief
LAW 821
(1 Credit Hour)

Health Care Compliance
LAW 617
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Health Care Law, LAW 686, highly recommended but not required. Compliance professionals, most of whom are lawyers, are among the most sought-after professionals in the country, with more positions available than persons with the training and expertise to fill those positions. This course will provide an introduction to compliance with statutes, regulations and internal requirements generally with an emphasis on compliance in the health care industry. This course will cover the following topics: defining and understanding compliance, the essential elements of an effective compliance program, organizational steps necessary to achieve compliance and understanding where compliance fits into the various aspects of the health care industry. The course will also touch on the major substantive areas that require intense compliance activity, although the students will be presumed to have a basic working understanding of those statutes and regulations from a previous health care law course. Students will learn how to ensure that clients comply with the appropriate laws and regulations including: the CMS Regulations, the False Claims Act, the Patient Protection and Affordable Act, HIPAA, the Stark Law, and the federal sentencing guidelines. Grades will be based on (1) a final exam and (2) class participation.

Health Care Finance
LAW 627
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Health Care Law, LAW 686 (may be taken concurrently). The law of health care finance is fast advancing as a field of legal study because of the urgency of health care attorneys to understand how health care providers are paid; what their clients must know, do and go through to get paid; the regulatory challenges their clients face; and their financial and budgetary realities. The purpose of this three (3) credit hour course is to empower students to become and be practical health care lawyers, taking into account the aforementioned matters of health care finance. This course employs a client-centric approach for students to learn and then contemporaneously apply their knowledge of the definition of "health care finance"; the moral, political and economic considerations that drive health care finance policy; U.S. health care insurance reform; health law finance regulation and oversight; and the realities of business facing health care providers.

Health Care Fraud and Abuse
LAW 682
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. In this course students will explore the large body of law governing the financial arrangements between health care providers and payors. Students will participate in a detailed examination of (i) The Federal False Claims Act; (ii) The Federal Anti-Kickback Statute; (iii) The "Stark" laws; (iv) the Civil Monetary Penalty Statutes; (v) the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA); (vi) the impact of health care reform legislation on these statutes; (vii) current trends in enforcement; and (viii) cases recently decided as examples of the application of these laws, their prosecution and defense.

Health Care Law
LAW 686
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will address the legal and business issues facing health care institutions and health care providers, including the business structure of institutions; payment issues, including Medicare, Medicaid and third party reimbursement; state and federal regulations as applied to health care institutions and providers; not-for-profit tax issues arising in the health care context; and business relationships between health care institutions and providers. Satisfies administrative law requirement.

Health Law Seminar
LAW 790
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This seminar will provide an opportunity for students to examine in detail special, topical issues in health law. Topics covered may include issues related to malpractice liability, reproductive issues, delivery of health services, regulation of health care institutions, modern bioethical questions, and legal regulation of pharmaceutical companies. Because course content may vary from term to term, students should contact the professor regarding the focus of the course for any particular offering of the course. This is a writing seminar in which students will complete and defend a major paper. Satisfies the upper level writing requirement.

HIPAA and Privacy
LAW 690
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The course will focus on the laws pertaining to confidentiality and disclosure relative to patient medical documents and information. Most of the course will be based on the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) but Ohio laws that govern medical information privacy will also be examined as will relevant administrative regulations and processes. Satisfies Administrative Law requirement.

Immigration and Nationality Law
LAW 734
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Origin, social background, and constitutional foundations of the immigration and naturalization laws; the concept and nature of citizenship and limits to the state’s right to discriminate between citizens and aliens; rights and liabilities of aliens; variations of alien status; criteria for entry, exclusion, deportation, naturalization; adjustment of status and other discretionary relief; administrative procedure, judicial review, and other recurring problems in the representation of aliens. Satisfies administrative law requirement.

Independent Legal Research

LAW 860

(1, 2 or 3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*; approval of Academic Dean. Independent study in a specialized area of the law, under the supervision of a faculty member; may be taken for 1, 2 or 3 credit hours, depending upon the nature of the research study involved, but in no event will more than three credit hours be applied toward the J.D. or LL.M. degree. Approval to register given upon a showing that a legitimate independent research study project has been approved by a faculty member, that the faculty member believes the amount of study time and effort likely to be involved in the project is commensurate with the number of contemplated credit hours, and that the faculty member will provide adequate supervision during the course of the project to justify the award of academic credit. It is the responsibility of any student seeking to enroll in Independent Legal Research to submit a written statement, signed by the supervising faculty member, indicating compliance with the criteria set forth above. Completion of an appropriate 2 or 3 credit hour project will satisfy the Upper Level Writing requirement. Faculty may exercise the discretion to award credit but to withhold upper level writing certification for a project.

Independent Moot Court Competition

LAW 804

(1 Credit Hour)

Prerequisites: RCC*; Advanced Brief Writing (LAW 615); permission of the Dean and the Faculty Advisor to Moot Court. Credit for participation in interscholastic moot court competition outside of the College's Moot Court Program. May be elected a maximum of two times. Graded Pass/Fail.

Information Technology and The Law

LAW 797

(3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*; Copyright, Patent & Trademark Law, L658, or permission of the instructor. This class will examine proprietary rights in information technology (i.e., computer hardware and software, databases, multimedia, networks, the Internet, etc.) and related content. An introductory course in intellectual property is encouraged, absent which students should demonstrate other appropriate background in the subject area (e.g., meaningful IT-related educational or vocational experience).

Substantive topics to be covered will include treatment of proprietary rights in Information Technology and related content through various forms of intellectual property law (trade secret, patent, copyright, trademark and trade dress) and newly-evolving issues presented by Information Technology (e.g., linking, framing, cybersquatting); growth of e-commerce and other Internet activities and the evolution of governing legal regimes; and liability, jurisdiction and sovereignty in cyberspace.

Students will be expected to do substantial reading and some independent research in order to contribute to class discussion and complete assignments. At the Instructor’s discretion, there may be an option to complete a research and writing project in lieu of a final exam. Offered infrequently.

Inheritance Rights of Children Seminar

LAW 759

(2 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*; Estates & Trusts (LAW 609). This seminar will provide students with a basic understanding of the treatment of different classes of children under the modern inheritance system. For various reasons, a substantial number of persons in the United States die without executing wills. Thus, a significant portion of the seminar will be dedicated to exploring the right of children to inherit under the current intestacy regime in place in the different states. The seminar will be of particular interest to those persons considering careers in family law, estate planning, or child advocacy.

The seminar will focus upon the manner in which the development of the intestacy system has been influenced by public policy and societal values. For example, we will explore the correlation between society’s acceptance of non-marital children and their ability to inherit property under the intestacy system. Instead of just understanding the current intestacy system, the students will be encouraged to critically analyze the effectiveness of the system in light of the changing structure of the American family. For instance, we will explore questions like “Should stepchildren be considered the heirs of their stepparents who die intestate?”

The final grade in the seminar will be assigned based upon the preparation of substantial research paper and an in-class presentation. This course satisfies the Upper Level Writing requirement.

Insurance Law

LAW 613

(3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. A study of the principles of insurable interest, indemnity, subrogation; interests of third parties, beneficiaries, and assignees; the insuring agreement, exclusions, and conditions; warranties, representations, and concealment; making and terminating the insurance contract; waiver, estoppel, and election by the insurer; agents and brokers; the adjustment of claims; practical exercises in reading and interpreting policy language.

Intellectual Property: Advanced Topics

LAW 758

(2 or 3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*; Copyright, Patent, and Trademark Law (LAW 658). This course explores emerging issues in the area of intellectual property that result from, as well as in, social and political changes. Selected topics, including the economic basis for selected areas of IP, the role of Congress, the courts and private parties in the evolution of IP, federal preemption of state laws, constitutional limits, and the role of international law, will help illustrate changes driven by, and sometimes resulting in, new technology and globalization. Students will be called upon to consider solutions to problems that have arisen as a result of new technologies and to discuss various policy initiatives being pursued by Congress, the international community, and trade associations to address such problems. Students will be required to complete and defend a modest paper on a subject selected from the topics to be covered by the class. Grading will be based equal upon the quality of each student’s paper, its presentation, and class discussion and criticism of others’ papers. The course will generally not satisfy the upper level writing requirement but the professor may approve it as such on a case by case basis.

International Aspects of Intellectual Property Law

LAW 650

(3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*; Copyright, Patent & Trademark Law (LAW 658). This course is an advanced study of so-called “intellectual property,” at the international level. It starts with a survey of issues that are quite important at the international level but which are not always addressed in introductory or survey-level so-called IP courses. The course then reviews the basic theories and problems of so-called intellectual property, such as the continuing debate between utilitarian and natural law justifications for these regimes. From there, the course proceeds to the various international agreements which address these issues and which, consequentially, derive explicitly or implicitly from the justificatory theories. These agreements include the Paris Convention, the Berne Convention, the EEC Treaty, the Universal Copyright Convention, the Patent Cooperation Treaty, the EC Harmonization Directive, NAFTA, TRIPS, the Madrid (Trademark) Protocol, and the Trademark Registration Treaty. The rest of the course is devoted to examining the most significant portions of those international agreements as well as a study of their economic bases and consequences. Finally, the course will examine how these arrangements affect the present and future distribution of resources between the developed and undeveloped countries in light of the justificatory theories.

International Business Transactions

LAW 688

(3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC* This course provides students with a broad overview of the various legal issues that arise in the context of international business transactions. The course begins with an introduction to the basic nature of international law. Classes are then dedicated to international arbitration, the extraterritorial application of U.S. laws and regulations, anti-bribery laws, export controls, payment methods, and issues in commercial law. The class then turns its focus to specific types of transactions, including direct sales, sales agents, distributorships, licensing of intellectual property, joint ventures, and mergers and acquisitions of existing foreign firms. Finally, the course examines some basic issues in international trade in the context of the WTO and NAFTA.

International Law

LAW 553

(3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. This course focuses on the force of international law today, particularly as applied by international tribunals and the courts of the United States and other nations; law of the sea, jurisdiction recognition, breach of U.S. antitrust laws, international agreements, expropriation and compensation. Satisfies the perspective elective requirement.

International War Crimes Tribunal Seminar

LAW 717

(3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. In this course students will study and work on issues that international courts are confronting in creating and operating war crimes tribunals. Students will research and write legal memoranda for officers in tribunals such as the Special Court for Sierra Leone, the International Criminal Court, the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia, and the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda. Satisfies upper level writing requirement.
Journal of Law and Health
LAW 813
(1 Credit Hour; may be elected twice)
Prerequisites: RCC*; approval of Journal of Law and Health Editorial Board. Course credit for participation as a member of the Board of Editors of the Journal of Law and Health. Students may not work on or receive academic credit for participation on the Journal and the Law Review during the same semester. Graded on a pass-fail basis. May be elected twice.

Journal of Law and Health Editor-in-Chief
LAW 814
(1 Credit Hour)
Prerequisites: RCC*; approval of the Journal of Law and Health Editorial Board. Service as editor-in-chief of the Journal of Law and Health for two semesters entitles a student to one Pass/Fail credit in addition to that earned in LAW 813. Journal of Law and Health students may not work on or receive academic credit for participation on the Journal and the Law Review during the same semester.

Judaic Law
LAW 561
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. No background in Jewish Studies or Hebrew Language is required for this course. The Torah (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy), as interpreted and codified by Jewish scholars over the centuries, provides the foundation for laws and a legal system that permits this ancient source to present viable solutions to twenty-first century issues including abortion, homosexuality, cloning and end-of-life decisions as well as selected core curriculum subjects. This course compares Judaic law to modern American law with a focus on both differences and how Judaic law solutions parallel or preceded American law. In lieu of a written examination, each student submits a paper on a topic selected by the student with the approval of the professor. Satisfactory completion of the course will satisfy the upper level writing and perspective elective requirements.

Jurisprudence
LAW 554
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. A survey of historical and modern Western attempts to define the essence of law. Course topics may include both the secular and non-secular natural law traditions, including representative writings from the ancient, classical and modern eras, and the various theses of legal positivism, including English utilitarianism, analytical jurisprudence, legal science, sociological jurisprudence and American Legal Realism, post-Realism, critical legal studies, and modern rights theory. The course does not presuppose a background in philosophy. Satisfies perspective elective requirement.

Juvenile Law
LAW 736
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Inquiry into the theory and practice of the juvenile justice system, including its historical development and current proposals for reform. Topics include the rationale of a separate system for children, the different bases of the juvenile court’s jurisdiction (delinquency, neglect, and abuse, status offenses), procedural issues in juvenile hearings, medical and reproductive rights of children (including abortion bypass, treatment of children, confidential relationships with professionals, sex change operations at birth, special needs). The complex interrelationship between the rights of children, parents, and the state is explored. Emphasis on constitutional issues.

Labor Law
LAW 629
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The basic course on private-sector collective bargaining under the National Labor Relations Act. Topics include issues arising in union organizing campaigns, NLRB election procedure, the duty to bargain, and strikers and replacements. Satisfies administrative law requirement.

Labor Law Seminar
LAW 709
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Selected problems in labor law, with a focus on new and emerging issues. Topics may include union organizing in the “new economy” (e.g., doctors and nurses’ attempts to organize, recent rulings allowing graduate teaching assistants and medical interns and residents to unionize, use of email in organizing campaigns, and employer attempts to ban all non-business use of email), the epidemic of labor disputes in the airline industry and presidential intervention in those disputes, and the application of labor law to professional sports. Interested students should consult the New and Revised Courses information for the term in which the course is offered for information on the focus of the course in that term. Satisfies administrative law and upper level writing requirements. Offered infrequently.

Land Use Control
LAW 608
(3 Credit Hours; 4 Credit Hours for JD/MUPDD)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Topics include the nature and purpose of planning and zoning; comparison with other systems of land use control; constitutional bases and limitations; zoning legislation and regulations; urban redevelopment; eminent domain and takings. The course provides an option to satisfy the upper level writing requirement.

Law and the American Political Economy
LAW 755
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The seminar will explore the uneasy relationships between republicanism, private power, and the “rule of law.” Students will read passages from a political philosopher/economist, a case/treaty provision/statute/or regulation, and a current example of the underlying issue, all of which will form the basis for a discussion of the issues raised in context and will explore how the works of some of the most influential moral and political philosophers (ranging from Aristotle and Marx to Ayn Rand) reveal the basic policies and competing ideologies that influence our legal institutions. By seeing the issues—fought over for thousands of years—replay themselves in the common law, constitutional law, trade treaties, labor law, corporate law, tax law, and spending allocations, the students would have a more integrated, informed view of the political economy. Students will complete a substantial research paper for the course. Satisfies the upper level writing requirement.

Law and Economics
LAW 555
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. An introduction to microeconomic analysis and its applicability to issues of public policy. The purpose of the course is to develop an understanding of the interplay between economic reasoning and legal analysis. Overall, the course provides a basis for understanding economic issues in other courses, as well as insight into policy arguments based on efficiency and equity, risk bearing and competitive markets. No prior work in economics is presumed. Beginning Spring 2009, satisfies perspective elective requirement. Offered infrequently.

Law, Literature & Film
LAW 569
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The class covers a variety of topics in legal literature and film. We will look at examples of law in both literature and film in order to consider a number of questions about the relationship between law and justice, the creation of rule regimes, and the role of courts and trials in a social system. Other issues which may arise in the course of these discussions are race/class/gender and the law, legal ethics, legal education, the adversarial system, the relationship between law and popular culture. Satisfies the perspective elective requirement.

Law and Medicine
LAW 605
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Subjects examined include medical education; medical licensing; establishing and terminating the doctor-patient relationship; medical records (access and confidentiality); health care as a regulated industry; legal obligations of hospitals; the legal bases of public health policies (e.g., quarantine, vaccination); liability of health care professionals to patients (contract, intentional torts, negligence, lack of informed consent); defenses; damages; insurance; expert witnesses; special problems of medical proof; psychiatric malpractice; special problems in medical treatment of minors; drugs and the law (e.g., malpractice in prescribing, dispensing, product liability); special problems raised by modern medical technology (e.g., in birth, death and dying, transplants, human experimentation).

Law and Public Policy Clinic
LAW 825
(3-5 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; approval of Law and Public Policy Program Director. The Law and Public Policy Clinic offers students the opportunity to work on real-world legal and public policy issues. Clients, including state and local governments, citizens’ groups, and not-for-profit agencies, seek analysis of, and proposed solutions for, a variety of critical governmental and social issues. Projects have included a study of "ethics in government" legislation in other states and recommendations for changes in Ohio law for the Ohio Ethics Commission; a study of policy alternatives for abatement of lead paint in residential housing for the Cleveland Health Department; and an analysis and an evaluation of foreclosure prevention programs for the Cuyahoga County Board of Commissioners. Satisfies the skills course requirement. Offered infrequently.

Law Practice Management
LAW 674
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This is a course in the substantive, procedural, professionally responsible, and practical aspects of operating a small to medium size law office. The course is designed to present students with the knowledge and skills to operate a small law practice properly and responsibly. Some of the topics to be covered include lawyer associations (partnership law, professional corporations, limited liability companies), retainers and other service contracts, fees, marketing and advertising, trust accounts, financial management, law office technology, and some basics on renting, staffing, and equipping an office. Satisfies skills course requirement.

Law Review
LAW 810
(1 Credit Hour; may be elected twice)
Prerequisites: RCC*; approval of Law Review Editorial Board. Writing and editing for publication in the Cleveland State Law Review. Course credit for participation as a member of the Law Review Board of Editors for two semesters. Graded on a Pass/Fail basis.

Law Review Editor-in-Chief
LAW 811
(1 Credit Hour)
Prerequisites: RCC*; approval of Law Review Editorial Board. Service as editor-in-chief of the Cleveland State Law Review entitles a student to one credit in addition to the credit earned in Law Review (LAW 810).

Legal Developments in Housing
LAW 725
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will provide an introduction to legal developments in housing and community development. Selected contemporary policies, programs and issues at the federal, state and local levels will be examined. These topics include: landlord-tenant relations, homelessness, the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) program, public housing, displacement (public and private), regulation of condominium conversions, municipal exaction of housing from commercial developers, housing courts and code enforcement, discrimination, and exclusionary zoning. The role of lawyers and courts in formulating and implementing housing policy will be analyzed. This course is cross-listed as UST 554 by the College of Urban Affairs.

Legal Drafting: General
LAW 778
(2 Credit Hours; 1 semester)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course is designed to serve as a transition from law school to law practice. The course focuses on drafting of numerous non-analytic documents used in law practice such as wills, contracts, and pleadings. The course provides the student with process for drafting, and the requisite skill to master the process. Concurrently, the course considers the audience and goals of each specific document. The course brings the student back to and reinforces the principles of good writing. Lastly, the course will help develop the lawyer skill of fact-gathering, which is a prerequisite to effective legal drafting of any type of document. The course is intrinsically designed to serve as excellent preparation for the Bar Exam section on performance, which focuses on document drafting—the Multistate Performance Exam-MPT. Satisfactory completion of the course will satisfy the third semester of legal writing requirement and the skills course requirement.

Legal Drafting: Special Topics
LAW 798
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Sections of this course will focus on a variety of areas including, but not limited to, the arts, business transactions, family law, and intellectual property. Writing assignments will be varied. Students should consult the New and Revised Courses information for the term in which the course is offered for information on the focus of the course for that term. Satisfactory completion of this course will satisfy the third semester of legal writing requirement and the skills course requirement.

Legal and Policy Issues in Education
LAW 721
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will focus on a variety of legal issues that arise in the context of education and may include sections on historical perspectives; the structure of educational systems in the U.S.; employment issues with respect to administrators, teachers, non-teaching staff and unions and collective bargaining; issues affecting students, including desegregation, Title IX, compulsory attendance, discipline, curriculum and textbooks, measuring success, special education, religion and the schools, search and seizure in schools, freedom of expression, and student privacy; and school funding. Satisfies the upper level writing requirement.

Legal Process
LAW 556
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
The course examines the making of law through the development of the common law and legislative and administrative processes.

Legal Profession
LAW 643
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course focuses on issues of legal ethics and professionalism that arise in the practice of law. Instructors use either the American Bar Association’s Model Rules of Professional Conduct or the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct as a starting point for discussing these issues. Specific topics covered vary by professor but generally include competency, confidentiality and attorney-client privilege, conflicts of interest, fees, advertising and solicitation of clients, communicating with clients, ethical constraints in civil and criminal litigation, the attorney disciplinary system, and potential civil and criminal liability. Professionalism issues cover conduct that may not be required or prohibited by the Rules of Professional Conduct but are directly related to the values and traditions of a learned profession. Required for graduation.

Note: Students frequently take Legal Profession before taking the MPRE. The course is not, however, designed to fully prepare students for the MPRE exam. Additional information about the MPRE, including Study Guides and a practice exam, is available on the National Conference of Bar Examiners’ website, http://www.ncbex.org/multistate-tests/mpre/.

Legal Responses to Terrorism
LAW 622
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will examine legal and policy perspectives on how to deter, prevent and respond to acts of terrorism both domestically and abroad. Students will study and explore both black letter law (e.g., the Patriot Act and the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act) as well as policy debates (e.g., balancing national security against personal liberties) connected with the problem of terrorism. Topics will include: (1) defining terrorism and identifying who commits acts of terrorism; (2) the Patriot Act and other American legal responses to September 11; (3) the efficacy of international laws and treaties on the “war on terror”; (4) interrogation and torture techniques; (5) detainees, tribunals and the problem of where to hold and try terrorists; (6) wiretapping, surveillance and prevention measures and privacy interests; (7) challenges related to criminal prosecution of terrorists in the United States courts; and (8) compensation to victims of terrorism.

Legal Writing and Litigation
LAW 792
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The primary emphasis of this course is advanced legal writing and research within the litigation context. The course structure and substantive material will parallel the litigation process from the receipt of a complaint in a factually and legally complex civil case through the motion for summary judgment. Students will gain a refined understanding of the organizational, analytical, creative and critical research and writing experience beginning with the initial exposure to the legal causes of action and culminating with the dispositive motion and response thereto. Course may be offered with a particular substantive focus (e.g., Family Law). Course requirements are fulfilled by research and writing assignments and class participation. There will be no final examination. Satisfies third semester of legal writing and skills course requirements.

Legal Writing, Research and Advocacy
LAW 504
(5 Credit Hours through 2004-2005; 2 Semesters)
(6 Credit Hours beginning 2005-2006; 2 Semesters)
A two-semester course with instructional components directed at writing, research and advocacy skills. Students will concentrate on writing and case analysis and will be introduced to basic bibliographic materials and research techniques. Legal research and writing exercises are designed to introduce basic legal writing forms. Beginning Fall 2009, a grade is entered on the student’s transcript for each semester of the course. Required for graduation.

Legislation and the Regulatory State
LAW 515
(4 Credit Hours)
Most of what we today term "law" is made, not in common law courts, but by legislatures (e.g., Congress) enacting legislation, and regulatory agencies (e.g., the Environmental Protection Agency) adopting regulations and standards to implement that legislation. Legislation and the Regulatory State introduces students to the institutions and procedures used by the modern administrative state to make law. It examines how Congress and agencies work together to make law, and then examines how the agencies and the courts work together to apply them. The course also examines the justifications for modern regulation, the structure of the modern administrative state, the incentives that influence the behavior of the various actors, and the legal rules that help to structure the relationships among Congress, the agencies, and the courts, including the role of courts in interpreting statutes and reviewing administrative actions when they are challenged by parties affected by those regulations. Required for graduation.
Local Government Law
LAW 645
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The course examines the sub-federal system, including the taxonomy of local government units and their relationships inter sese and to the state and federal governments; internal organization and structure; legislative and administrative process; powers, nature, and construction; the police power; liability in contract and quasi-contract; municipal finance; and property rights of municipal corporations; and municipal liability for injuries to persons and property. Offered infrequently.

Master of Laws (LL.M.) Thesis
LAW 890
(1 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: Admission to the LL.M. program and completion of 20 credit hours of course work (or commencement of student’s seventh semester in the program, whichever occurs first). Three credits elected upon commencement of work on the LL.M. thesis; and one additional credit elected each fall or spring until thesis is completed. Must be elected the fall or spring semester immediately following completion of 20 credit hours of course work in the LL.M. program or during the student’s seventh semester in the LL.M. program, whichever occurs first. With approval of the student’s graduate adviser, a student may enroll earlier, concurrently with completion of the required course work. Graded on a Pass / Fail basis upon completion of the thesis and its acceptance or rejection by the Graduate Studies Committee. Grading note: A grade of “T” shall be entered each semester for LAW 890 while work on the LL.M. thesis is in progress. Upon acceptance or rejection of the thesis by the Graduate Studies Committee, a grade of “P” or “F” shall be entered for those credits, but such grades shall not be included in the computation of the candidate’s final G.P.A.

Mediation
LAW 673
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Mediation is a process in which an impartial third party—a mediator—facilitates the resolution of a dispute by promoting voluntary agreement by the parties. This course focuses on mediation advocacy, including the role of the advocate, as well as the skills needed by an advocate to achieve a satisfactory mediation outcome. Students will practice the skills needed by the mediation advocate—negotiating, persuading, framing alternatives on behalf of a client in neutral language, navigating perceived deadlocks, and drafting competent mediation agreements. Throughout the course, issues of confidentiality and ethics will be explored through a variety of legal settings, such as family law, labor law, commercial law, environmental law and community disputes. Satisfies the skills course requirement.

Medical Malpractice
LAW 664
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Evidence (LAW 661) and Trial Advocacy (LAW 663) recommended but not required for the 3-credit version of the course. Focusing specifically on medical malpractice, this course offers students the opportunity to delve deeply into the substantive law, litigation practices, and policy implications of medical negligence and related litigation. Malpractice cases involve unique pleading requirements, pretrial procedures, standard of care issues, causation challenges, expert witness burdens, jury selection considerations, discovery practices and investigational techniques. The course also examines Ohio and federal statutes relating to medical liability, immunity from suit, privacy rights, testimonial privileges, limitations on actions, damage caps and tort reform. When offered as a 3-credit course, approximately one-half of the course will consist of practical litigation skill exercise, including motion practice, witness examinations, opening statements, and summations specific to medical malpractice. The 3-credit version of the course will satisfy the Skills requirement.

Mergers and Acquisitions
LAW 693
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Corporations (Law 692). This course will discuss the major legal issues and strategic considerations raised by corporate mergers, takeovers and acquisitions. Topics will include securities law compliance, state corporate law issues, antitrust implications, tax incentives and accounting treatment.

Moot Court I and II
LAW 806 and 809
(3 Credit Hours for each)
Prerequisites: RCC*; open only to students selected to participate in interscholastic moot court competitions following first year or upper level tryout. Students will register for Moot Court I in their first year of interscholastic competition and Moot Court II in their second year of competition. With the exception of interscholastic competitions whose rules mandate that participants be members of specific student organizations, absent permission of the Dean and the Faculty Advisor to Moot Court, no student may participate in interscholastic moot court competitions unless the student is registered in this course or is invited to do so by the Moot Court Board of Governors as a result of achievement in an intramural competition. Satisfies upper level writing requirement and the skills course requirement.

Negotiating Strategies in Sports Management
LAW 754
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will provide students the opportunity to negotiate and draft agreements that a lawyer advising a sports team would encounter. Students will learn about the various components of complex deal documents and have the opportunity to then draft these documents. Students will also explore and experiment with negotiating strategies. Overall, the goal of the course is to have students master skills related to negotiating, drafting, and analyzing the various “moving parts” of complicated agreements. The class will begin with a unit on stadium lease agreements. From there, we will discuss naming rights agreements and proceed to discuss some more specific agreements: presenting sponsorship agreements, media rights agreements, food and beverage agreements, agreements with a provider of hospital and medical services, a provider of financial services, a state-operated entity, and, finally, purchase and sale agreements for sports teams. Previously called Negotiating & Drafting Sports Marketing and Venue Agreements.

Non-Profit Corporation Law
LAW 722
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Corporations (LAW 692) or permission of instructor. This course considers the legal problems and current issues involved in the structuring and operation of non-profit organizations and includes practical exercises in drafting legal memoranda and corporate documents. Satisfies the upper level writing requirement.

Ohio Civil Procedure
LAW 667
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course consists of an in-depth study of the Ohio Rules of Civil Procedure. A comparison of Ohio and Federal Rules with particular emphasis on Ohio rules relating to venue and process, summons, methods of service, local and out-of-state service, discovery, pleadings, motions.

Ohio Local Government Seminar
LAW 784
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will focus on the home-rule powers of Ohio municipalities. The first several weeks of the course will be given over to a discussion of photocopied materials consisting of Ohio cases. The last few weeks will be used for the presentation of student papers. Grading will be based primarily upon the quality of each student’s paper on some topic of Ohio municipal law. The course satisfies the upper level writing requirement.

Oil and Gas Law
LAW 662
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC. Oil and Gas Law provides students with a survey of the law governing interests in oil and gas, including classification of property interests; conservation and administrative regulation of drilling and production; an examination of the oil and gas lease; conveyance; and pooling and utilization. The rights and responsibilities of the parties to the transaction and other affected persons during the various stages of the development process will also be examined. In the course of the semester, students will be exposed to documents and instruments that are integral to oil and gas transactions with attention given to their practical application. Grading will be based on class participation and a final examination.
Patent Law and Practice
LAW 642
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Copyright, Patent & Trademark (LAW 658) (recommended but not required). This course explores the U.S. patent system, including the regulatory framework that governs the procurement and maintenance of patents. The course will also consider various aspects of the burgeoning practice of patent law before federal courts and administrative agencies, such as enforcing patents and seeking available remedies from infringers. The course will also cover some of the distinctions that exist among patent, trademark, copyright, and trade secrets protection. There are no upper level prerequisites for this course and a technical undergraduate degree is not required.

Pretrial Practice
LAW 668
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Evidence (LAW 661). This course will cover the role of an attorney in representing clients from initial interview up to the time of trial. Topics covered will include interviewing clients and witnesses, fact development, scene investigation, obtaining tangible evidence, interrogatories, depositions and negotiations. Ethical concerns will be discussed in the context of pretrial practice as they confront the students in the preparation of their cases.

Property
LAW 508
(6 Credit Hours through 2004-2006; 2 Semesters)
(5 Credit Hours beginning 2005-2006; 2 Semesters)
This course covers the definition and classification of property problems concerning acquisition of title; history of land law; estates; introduction to future interests; rule against perpetuities; statute of frauds; concurrent ownership; methods of conveyance; mortgage; recording; and landlord and tenant relationship. A grade is entered on the student’s transcript for each semester of the course. Required for graduation. Offered through 2011-12 academic year.

Property
LAW 514
(4 Credit Hours)
Property Law involves the study of the creation and allocation of rights to resources in varied forms. These resources include real property (land and things permanently attached to land such as houses or other structures). Property law also addresses rights to tangible personal property (such as books or furniture) and intangible personal property (such as author or investor’s rights to control use of his creation, or shares in a company.) The major goal of the course is to familiarize students with the foundations and norms of both historic Property Law formulations and contemporary Property Law concepts. Required for graduation. Offered beginning Spring 2013.

Psychiatry and Law
LAW 558
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course examines the relationship between law and psychiatry, including commitment procedures, the attorney’s role in commitment hearings, delivery of legal services to patients confined to mental institutions and the substantive rights of such patients. Satisfies perspective elective requirement. A paper option may be made available in this course.

Psychology of the Courtroom
LAW 694
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The objective of this course is to examine social science research about the legal system and to identify ways in which lawyers can benefit from social science insights about the adjudicatory system. The five major topics of classroom focus will be: (1) a general discussion of strategies and techniques for achieving the goals of adjudication; (2) an exploration of the ways we go about selecting and preparing fact finders (most particularly the jury); (3) the ways the legal system attempts to inform fact finders (and whether these are a success or failure—with a particular focus on eyewitness testimony, attorney behavior and expert testimony); (4) the methods our system uses to control fact finders (the effectiveness of rules controlling judicial conduct, the admissibility of evidence, and legal instructions); and (5) the nature of jury deliberation and decision making.

Public Sector Labor and Employment Law
LAW 675
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The law governing the public employment relationship (i.e., state, local and federal employees) in both non-union and union settings. Covers constitutional issues in the workplace (e.g., employee free speech and privacy rights and procedural due process); Section 1983 and various immunities from suit (e.g., Eleventh Amendment and sovereign immunity); and public sector collective bargaining under the Ohio statute administered by “SERB” (State Employee Relations Board). Satisfies administrative law requirement. Offered approximately every other year.
Race, Racism and the Law
LAW 565
(2 or 3 credit hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Through a focus on standard legal materials (cases, statutes and so on), selected archival materials and scholarly writings, this seminar seeks to examine the ways in which the law has both (a) reflected societal attitudes about race and (b) generated racial identities for society. In examining these two mutually constitutive poles, we will attempt to arrive at an understanding of the relationship between law and identity. The course will emphasize the historical construction of racialized identities—those of European-Americans, African-Americans, Asian-Americans, native Americans and others—by and within the law in such diverse contexts as slavery, immigration, the settlement of the United States and civil rights. Satisfies perspective elective requirement.

Real Estate Law
LAW 648
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course covers both practice and procedure, emphasizing actual current practices in purchase, sale, tax treatment and financing of commercial, residential and government-owned real estate. We will study the relationships among and between the buyer, seller, financing institutions, title companies, brokers, and public authorities. We will focus on issues that impact the greater Cleveland real estate market including foreclosures, urban renewal, and government financial assistance.

Regulatory Law
LAW 638
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. A vast body of contemporary law seeks to reduce or manage risks, including those that arise from pollution, food and drug products, the Internet, imported toys, and other endeavors. This course develops the legal knowledge and analytic skills needed by lawyers who represent business entities or public interests before administrative agencies and legislative bodies, including in efforts to revise regulatory structures and standards, or to deregulate for greater market control. Using case studies of particular regulatory programs designed to protect public health and safety, consumer welfare, market competition and other objectives, the course critically assesses particular agencies’ record and capacity for redressing their assigned problematic. Cutting-edge regulatory issues for class discussion include, for instance, cell phone radiation, Internet access and cost, polluted drinking water, drivers’ texting, climate change, and cyber-terrorism. The course considers the forces and analyses that underpin legislative decisions to regulate or deregulate an industry or product/service; the array of regulatory tools that legislation can authorize (including price controls, product output, credentials for licensure, qualitative or scientific standards); and the types of critiques that can facilitate regulatory law revision. Thus, the course provides an advanced, integrated analysis of regulatory systems and the legal rules they authorize. Satisfies the Administrative Law requirement.

Requirements: A class presentation (either solo or in pairs) on a student-selected regulatory problem; and a final exam or paper option (that may suffice for upper division writing credit). The paper may be written on the same topic as the class presentation. Students electing the paper option may satisfy the Upper Level Writing requirement.

Remedies
LAW 619
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Students will study monetary damages, restitution and equitable relief in the context of contract, property and torts with an examination of the goals behind remedial rules and whether our system is accomplishing these goals. The course provides insight into the integrated nature of our legal system across the different subject areas by focusing on the impact of the merger of law and equity and the many public policy implications underlying statutory and common law efforts to provide appropriate redress to an injured party.

Representing the Musical Artist
LAW 752
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The subject matter of the course will be the practical legal issues that arise when counseling the musical artist. The class will follow the artist from the early days as a "baby band" to when the artist becomes "classic" or "heritage." The course will focus on practical aspects of counseling the burgeoning artist including song/sound recording creation, sample clearances, band partnership agreements, the producer agreement, band management, shopping for a label, negotiation the label agreement, getting an agent, applying for copyrights and trademarks, and going on tour. In addition, the course will focus on the "classic" or "heritage" artist, which involves termination of transfer, the artist as a brand, film scoring opportunities, synch licensing and master use licensing, other licensing opportunities, a documentary film about the artist's career and selling the publishing catalog.
Representing the Professional Athlete
LAW 753
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will begin with an overview of the sports marketing industry and then proceed to discuss some of the more important legal doctrines relating to that industry, involving intellectual property law, labor law and contract law. In that context, the course will explore the skills necessary to conduct a series of “hypothetical” sports-related contract negotiations. The students will then participate in group-based contract-drafting exercises with an emphasis on client representation. Contracts to be drafted include a “product endorsement agreement,” and a “name, image and likeness” lithograph poster agreement. Simulated depositions and “oral arguments” will also be conducted. Next, in the context of a mock litigation, students will assume a “contract breach” of the agreements they have drafted. In turn, they will draft document requests, deposition questions and legal briefs in support of the contractual positions taken during the contract drafting exercise. Class participation and successful completion of weekly assignments will count for a significant portion of the student’s final grade.

Scholarly Writing
LAW 791
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course is intended to help students make the transition from instrumental to critical writing. The seminar will guide students through the drafting of some common legal documents as well as a long scholarly paper. Students will build on the first year foundation of legal research skills by exploring many other research sources. The course is designed to provide specific guidance, strategies and techniques for each stage of the writing process, from citation to inspiration. The seminar will deal with editing, proofreading, and, ultimately, advice on achieving publication of the scholarly work. Satisfies third semester of legal writing requirement.

Scientific Evidence
LAW 660
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC* and Evidence (LAW 661) (may be taken concurrently). This course concentrates on issues dealing with the introduction of expert testimony with particular focus on testimony involving scientific and technical matters. These are among the most interesting and complex evidentiary issues confronting courts today. Experts testify in a wide variety of criminal and civil cases. Their testimony is crucial to determinations of malpractice, competence, identification, valuation of goods and property, causation and to psychological evaluations. During the semester, a number of experts in various fields will address the class, commenting on their area of expertise and discussing cases in which they have given testimony.

Secured Transactions
LAW 603
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The course surveys Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) dealing with the use of personal property as collateral security. In addition, the parts of the bankruptcy code which affect the enforcement of security agreements in bankruptcy are addressed, as are the sections in UCC Article 8 which deal with security interests in investment securities, and UCC Article 2 dealing with consignments. Problem solving and legal analysis and reasoning are involved.

Securities Regulation
LAW 655
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Strongly recommended: Corporations (LAW 692). This course offers a consideration of the state and federal regulation of securities and transactions involving securities, with emphasis upon the creation of a “security,” distributions of securities in the formation of capital, trading in securities, and rights associated with being the holder of a security. Careful attention is also given to specialized liabilities associated with transactions involving securities as a matter of both state and federal law. Satisfies administrative law requirement.

Sexual Orientation and the Law
LAW 563
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. Persons with nontraditional sexual orientations face a variety of challenges that their heterosexual friends and family members do not. These include different legal standards being applied to them in employment, marriage, custody, adoption, property rights, health benefits, tax issues, and other situations. This course will explore the historic roots of sexual orientation discrimination and examine the success and failure of legislative and judicial efforts to overcome this discrimination. The role of the social sciences (including anthropology, sociology and psychology) and of popular culture (books, plays, movies, television, etc.) in both creating and breaking down barriers based on sexual orientation will also be explored. Students will be required to research and write a 10-15 page paper and may be required to take a final exam. This paper will NOT satisfy the upper level writing requirement. requirement. Satisfies perspective elective requirement.

Social Science and the Law

LAW 585

(3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. Lawyers, judges, and legislators increasingly draw upon social science data purporting to reveal information about human behavior. The course considers some social science data and seeks to help the law student understand, employ, and challenge the data of this "science." Satisfies perspective elective requirement.

Space Law

LAW 787

(3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. This seminar will provide a survey of the international and domestic laws that govern outer space activity. Students will be introduced to the existing space law treaties that address the use of force in space, liability for damage caused by space objects, jurisdiction, the rescue and return of astronauts, remote sensing, property rights, and other matters. Attention will also be given to national space laws, as well as to the regulatory aspects of space activity, such as the allotment of orbital slots and export controls on space technology. The class will also explore the evolution of private industry in space and the effect that the shift from public to private activity has had on the law of outer space. The course is a seminar and students will be required to write an original research paper. Students may also choose to satisfy the Upper Level Writing requirement by engaging in a lengthier research project. Note: the course meets for 2 class hours per week; students will enroll for 3 credits hours to reflect the work on the required paper.

Sports & Entertainment Law Academy Externship

LAW 819

(3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: Participation in the Sports & Entertainment Law Summer Academy and permission of the Academy faculty. Externship placement in a sports or entertainment industry setting arranged through the Sports & Entertainment Law Summer Academy.

Sports & Law: Evolution of Major League Sports

LAW 656

(3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. The course will explore the legal evolution of America’s three major sports leagues (Major League Baseball, the National Football League, and the National Basketball Association). The course will devote approximately equal time to each of these three major leagues, and compare/contrast the similarities and differences among them from an historical legal perspective. Specifically, the course will evaluate the evolution of the three leagues, and examine how Supreme court and other courts’ landmark decisions have affected the path of their progress.

Sports Law

LAW 683

(2 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. Sports Law is the study and application of legal issues and problems relating to the sports management industry. This course focuses on issues and tensions surrounding the industry through an examination of various legal doctrines, such as intellectual property law, labor law, and contract law. Emphasis will be placed on negotiation tactics and drafting through the use of in-class exercises. Specific topics to be addressed during the semester will include client representation agreements, athlete agreements (appearance, endorsement and license), and rights of publicity, among other topics.

Tax Policy Seminar

LAW 748

(2 or 3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*; Tax I (LAW 607). This course examines principles and criteria of taxation and the economies of public finance, the various tax bases, the taxable unit, tax rates, tax incentives, the tax expenditure budget and proposals for tax reform and relief. Satisfies the upper level writing requirement.

Tax Procedures, Penalties and Crimes

LAW 647

(3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*; Tax I (LAW 607). This course will provide a survey of tax procedure, including the rules for practice before the IRS under Circular 230 and various tax litigation issues. The course will also provide a survey of the tax penalties and tax crimes that transactional and controversy tax practitioners must regularly consider and manage in representing private and government clients. Transactional tax advisors need to consider penalties and crimes when structuring deals and preparing opinion letters to support those deals. Without an understanding of opinion letters and the penalty or crime risks to a client’s proposed deal structure, a transactional tax attorney fails to represent his client’s interests adequately. Indeed, this lawyer and the relevant law firm may themselves be at risk. Likewise, tax controversy attorneys must have a comprehensive understanding of penalties and crimes to represent clients effectively, whether in settlement negotiations, court or administrative proceedings.
These attorneys must be able to identify the range of applicable penalties and crimes, address proof convincingly and understand relevant defenses.

Students in this class will examine relevant statutes, regulations and case law. The course will cover both the substantive law and procedural issues. Penalties addressed will include tax shelter, return preparer, responsible person, accuracy-related, delinquency and civil fraud. Methods of proof and defenses to these penalties and crimes are, of course critical to client representation and will, therefore, be covered. Satisfies the Administrative Law requirement.

Taxation I
LAW 607
(4 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course provides an introduction to Federal income taxation of the individual, including the concepts of income, deductions, capital transactions, income splitting and tax accounting; use of the Internal Revenue Code and Treasury Regulations; and principles of statutory interpretation, including use of legislative histories, court decisions and administrative rulings.

Taxation II: Taxation of Business Enterprises
LAW 697
(4 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Tax I (LAW 607), or permission of instructor if concurrently registered for LAW 607. This course examines the basic rules in Subchapters C, S, and K of the Internal Revenue Code, regarding the Federal income taxation of business enterprises, whether the enterprise is organized as a corporation, partnership, or limited liability company. It includes discussion of the formation of corporations and partnerships, distributions of profits from the entity, termination of the enterprise, choice-of-entity concerns, and other related topics. It is recommended for anyone who will engage heavily in either a tax or business practice.

Tax: Advanced Corporate Tax
LAW 698
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Tax I (LAW 607); Tax II (LAW 697). This course focuses primarily on the Federal income tax consequences of corporate ownership reorganizations. It explores corporate combinations, including taxable and tax-free mergers and acquisitions, corporate divisions (spin-offs, split-offs, and split-ups), as well as rearrangements of the capital structure of a single corporation, such as through recapitalizations and stock dividends. It also explores the carryover of tax attributes after corporate combinations.

Tax: Federal Taxation of International Transactions
LAW 628
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Tax I (LAW 607). This course examines the U.S. Federal Income Taxation of both inbound transactions (the U.S. income tax consequences of business and investment activities in the U.S. by foreigners) and outbound transactions (the U.S. income tax consequences of foreign business and investment activities by U.S. taxpayers). It will examine, in particular, (1) the jurisdictional rules regarding the right to tax income in the international context, (2) the “source” rules (domestic or foreign) for income and deductions, (3) the foreign tax credit, (4) problem of “deferral” of foreign income earned by subsidiaries of U.S. parents, and (5) the U.S. tax consequences of using foreign currency.

Taxation: Tax Exempt Organizations
LAW 604
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Tax I (LAW 607). Topics covered include organizational structure of tax exempt and charitable organizations; policy and practice of preferred tax treatment for selected organizations and gifts to them; statutes, regulations, and IRS practice; legislative origins, judicial interpretations, and policy consideration; tests of qualification, disqualification, and limited tax preference; mechanics of securing and retaining exemption; qualified exemption; unrelated business income; private inurement; political activity; denial or loss of exemption; return and reporting requirements; private foundation treatment; comparative tax treatment of nonexempt and nonprofit organizations. Offered infrequently.

Taxation: Wealth Transfer Tax
LAW 606
(3 or 4 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Tax I (LAW 607) or Estates & Trusts (LAW 609). Federal gift, estate and generation skipping taxation of wealth transfers will be analyzed primarily through the concepts of completed gifts and gross estate inclusions with some study of deductions and the tax itself. Federal income taxation of estates, simple trusts and complex trusts, including distributions to beneficiaries, with some study of grantor trust rules and income in respect of a decedent will also be covered. Income taxation of trusts will be covered when the course is offered for 4 credit hours.
Theories of the Business Firm in Critical Perspective
LAW 762
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will explore the following idea and why it might be important for law: just exactly what is a "firm" (or any other "organization" for that matter), how does the law conceive of "firms," and what difference does it make? An underlying theme of the course, not surprisingly, is that answers to these questions might make a very big difference, and the course will ask what the law could learn from them from economics and from a specialized area of social science literature, improbably neglected among legal academics, that goes by the name “the theory of organization.” This body of thought has special value in understanding business entities and, indeed, in understanding law generally. The course will begin with generally adopted ideas about what constitutes the "firm" at use in the legal literature and those in economics. It will consider the mainstream evolution of the concept in transaction cost economics and the “nexus of contracts” theory currently predominant among legal economists. The course would then consider critiques of the traditional concept and its economic evolution, including the Legal Realist perspective, the Critical Legal Studies (CLS) perspective, and other viewpoints. Finally, in a sense as its capstone, the course would delve into general, non-normative consideration of the theory of organization, to show how organization theorists have cast doubt on the ability of traditional models and traditional critiques to explain real-world organizations. Those organizations, it turns out, are often complex and ambiguous places where traditional models of human motivation are not up to the task of explanation. At its core, the course would seek to highlight the practical and political significance of the particular theory of organizations chosen by a legal system. The course will be well suited for students with a social science background, and may also be of interest to students interested in business organizations, management, and counseling business clients.

The grade will be based mainly on one seminar paper of sufficient length and content to justify 3 hours of credit. In addition, some portion of the grade will be based on a few short assignments in which each student identifies the “main idea” of papers that are read in the course. The course satisfies the upper level writing requirement and the perspective elective requirement. Permission of the instructor is required. Offered infrequently.

Theories of Justice
LAW 559
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. The course will focus on the notion of justice as seen in writings of significant philosophers. Ideas of writers such as Plato, Aristotle, St. Thomas Aquinas, Bentham, Hobbes, Locke, Mill, Nozick, and Rawls, among others, will be studied. Contemporary applications of the various theories of justice will be explored. The course is designed for students without a significant background in philosophy. Satisfies perspective elective requirement.

Torts
LAW 502
(6 Credit Hours through 2004-2005; 2 Semesters)
(5 Credit Hours beginning 2005-2006; 2 Semesters)
The course considers injuries to and interference with persons or property, including intentional wrongs such as assault, battery and false imprisonment, and unintentional wrongs grounded in negligence or strict liability. The course also treats such concepts as causation, duty, contributory and comparative negligence, and assumption of risk. Other wrongs, such as products liability, defamation and nuisance may be covered. The course may also include the following: workings of the legal process; immunities; insurance; damages; the social, economic and political implications of decisional and statutory law; and topics of current interest. A grade is entered on the student’s transcript for each semester of the course. Required for graduation. Offered through 2011-12 academic year.

Torts
LAW 512
(4 Credit Hours)
Torts considers injuries to persons and property, both intentional and unintentional, and may include physical, dignitary, and economic harms. The course examines the three basic theories of civil liability—intentional torts, negligence, and strict liability—and considers issues of duty, causation, and defenses to liability. The course may also consider the overall goals of the torts system, the allocation of responsibility between judge and jury, and the interplay of statutes and the common law process. Required for graduation. Offered beginning Fall 2012.

Trademark Law
LAW 653
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC; Copyright, Patent & Trademark Law, LAW 658, recommended but not required. This course will cover the constitutional, statutory, and common law attributes of trademark law; the rights and remedies that trademark law provides for producers; the protection that trademark law provides for competitors and consumers; and the intersection of American trademark law with other forms of intellectual property protection, with the First Amendment, and with international law. Students are expected to master the substantive law of trademark, but the major goal of the course is to teach students how to use the law to advance their clients’ interests in commercial symbols by requiring students to use their professional judgment in a counseling context. Grading will be based on three short open research memos.

Transactional Law Clinic
LAW 826
(2 to 5 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; approval of clinical faculty. The Urban Development Law Clinic offers students the opportunity to practice law under the supervision of a staff attorney. The Clinic’s clients are neighborhood and community-based nonprofit corporations producing and managing affordable housing, initiating economic development and enhancing the quality of life in urban neighborhoods. The Clinic operates as a small firm or practice group providing a variety of legal services to clients. The work students undertake in the Clinic is primarily transactional, consisting of: legal research to address specific issues and problems raised by clients; drafting leases, contracts, and other documents and forms; designing and conducting training programs for clients; and general counseling and advising of clients regarding legal, corporate and business matters. The goal of the Clinic is two-fold: to serve the real needs of the urban community while enabling students to acquire legal skills and experience under supervision of experienced staff attorneys and the clinic’s director. Satisfies the skills course requirement. Previously called Urban Development Law Clinic.

Transition to Practice
LAW 634
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC. Transition to Practice will focus on teaching students the fundamental skills that all lawyers need to be successful: problem-solving, interviewing, counseling and negotiating. The course uses a combination of inter-related classroom work, simulations, and research, as well as reading and writing assignments to build these critical skills. The grade will be based on observed simulations, written assignments/work products, class participation, assessments and evaluations, and a capstone assignment.

Permission of the instructor(s) is required. The course is designed to prepare students for participation in a clinic or externship so preference will be given to second year students.

Transnational Litigation
LAW 620
(3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*. This course will consider how one goes about litigating transnational cases. Such litigation may involve a transnational claim structure and may involve public or private litigation. Some aspects of U.S. substantive law having extraterritorial effect will be considered (for example, the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act). Procedural subjects to be studied include jurisdiction, effectuation of service on parties overseas, problems of conducting pre-trial discovery outside the United States and enforcement of foreign judgments. Offered infrequently.

Trial Advocacy
LAW 663
(2 or 3 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Evidence (LAW 661) recommended. The course will analyze the trial process from selection of the jury through final argument and jury instructions. Students will participate in frequent exercises involving portions of the trial process and will meet in both large and small group classes. Satisfies the skills course requirement.

Trial Advocacy Competition
LAW 863
(2 Credit Hours)
Prerequisites: RCC*; Evidence (LAW 661) recommended. The course is designed to promote professionalism in the litigation arena in both the preparation and trying of cases. The course consists of preparing for and participating in mock trial competitions. The preparation consists of approximately sixteen supervised weekend classes per semester. The trial competitions consist of a one-day cross-town competition in the Fall and a three-day regional competition in the Spring. During these competitions, each class member will argue their case against students from law schools throughout the country. The course is open to all second, third, and fourth year law students. Up to eight students are selected for the competition team each year.

A try-out competition is held each Fall to select a team that will be together for the entire year. In order to be selected, students must give an opening statement or closing argument based on a hypothetical case in front of a panel of attorneys and former trial team members.
The team meets throughout the Fall and Spring semesters, although credit will not be allocated until the Spring semester.

The American Association for Justice organizes the Spring trial competition. Each year the AAJ drafts a fictional legal case, complete with witness depositions, exhibits, and jury instructions. Using the Federal Rules of Evidence and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, teams develop arguments and create their own case theory based on the assigned case. In competition, students from one member school represent one side and compete against students from another school who represent the opposing side. Teams represent both plaintiff and defendant in successive rounds. Scoring is based on how well the students articulate their arguments and develop their case theory. The competitions are judged by actual sitting judges as well as lawyers from the community.

The team is supervised and taught by attorneys from the Reminger law firm. The course is graded pass/fail. Each student’s final grade is determined based upon their individual performance during practices and at the trial competition. Each student’s effort, preparation, and completion of class assignments contribute toward their final grade. The course requires a greater time commitment than the usual two credit course but the students will gain considerable competencies as trial advocates. Satisfies the skills course requirement.

Trial Advocacy Competition: Advanced

LAW 864

(2 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*, Trial Advocacy Competition (LAW 863), and Evidence (LAW 661). The course is designed to promote professionalism in the litigation arena in both the preparation and trying of cases. The structure of the course is the same as Trial Advocacy Competition (LAW 863): students must try out for membership on the team in the fall, and then prepare for and participate in mock trial competitions. The substance of the course is different: in this advanced trial advocacy course students will build on the prior year’s experiences and gain a deeper understanding of trial variety of legal issues. First, the spring competition alternates year to year between criminal and civil matters and involves different claims, defenses and evidentiary matters. Second, in addition to the fully preparing for the competitions, students in this advanced course will prepare for examining experts, prepare for and present a mock voir dire, and serve as mentors for new students in the Trial Advocacy Competition course.

The team is supervised and taught by attorneys from the Reminger law firm. The course is graded pass/fail. Each student’s final grade is determined based upon their individual performance during practices and at the trial competition. Each student’s effort, preparation, and completion of class assignments contributes toward their final grade. The course requires a greater time commitment than the usual two credit course but the students will gain considerable competencies as trial advocates. Satisfies the skills course requirement.

White Collar Crime

LAW 652

(2 or 3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. The course on white collar crime is divided into three major sections. First, it considers overarching principles of corporate criminal liability, personal liability in an organizational setting, appropriate sanctions for white collar crimes, and the grand jury process. Second, it examines a number of “generic” offenses, that cut across substantive areas, including conspiracy, mail fraud, wire fraud, false statements, perjury, and obstruction of justice. Finally, the course explores more particularized types of white collar offenses such as bribery of public officials, RICO, tax fraud, computer crime, and criminal antitrust violations. The course typically features three or four guest speakers from the local community who either prosecute or defend white collar crime cases.

Women and Law

LAW 631

(2 or 3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. The materials insistently question the role of law in the creation and destruction of social and economic conditions that disadvantage women. "Feminist jurisprudence" or "feminist theory" is presented more as an array of alternative approaches to doctrinal issues than as a separate body of thought. Topics covered include "Women and Work," "Women and the Family," and "Women and Their Bodies." Satisfies perspective elective requirement.

Workers' Compensation

LAW 651

(2 or 3 Credit Hours)

Prerequisites: RCC*. When injuries to employees occur at the workplace, often tort suits against the employer are excluded from the range of available remedial options. Instead, the worker is confined to the statutorily prescribed administrative remedy of workers' compensation. This course explores the injured employee’s remedies at common law and under the Federal Employers’ Liability Act (FELA) and provides and in-depth study of substantive and procedural problems arising under Workers’ Compensation statutes with particular emphasis on Ohio’s distinctive law. Beginning Fall 2008, satisfies Administrative Law requirement.
The Master of Laws Degree

Application Requirements

Applicants to the LL.M. program must have earned a first degree in law from an accredited United States law school or an equivalent law degree from a foreign university or college. Applicants who have earned a law degree from a country that does not use the common law system and where English is not the primary language, will be admitted as candidates for the LL.M. degree only upon submission of evidence of knowledge of the English language and the common law system sufficient to permit the candidate to conduct advanced studies. Such students may be required to take one or two core common law courses (Contracts, Property, and/or Torts), which may be included in the credits required for the LL.M. degree. Please note that foreign students studying on a student visa must take a minimum of 8 credit hours per semester.

Note: The faculty Committee charged with supervision of the LL.M. program has adopted the following statement on the suitability of the LL.M. for graduates of foreign law schools:

It is important that graduates of foreign law schools who enroll in the LL.M. program understand that earning an LL.M. does not guarantee eligibility for the Ohio, or any other state’s, bar exam. The Ohio Supreme Court determines whether a graduate of a foreign law school is eligible to take the Ohio bar examination by evaluating the applicant’s foreign education and requiring that the applicant complete a course of study in prescribed law subjects totaling 30 semester hours. More information on the eligibility requirements can be found on the Ohio Supreme Court website at http://www.supremecourt.ohio.gov/AttySvcs/admissions/foreignApGuidelines.pdf.

Finally, it is our strong recommendation that foreign-law graduates who intend to practice law in the United States should seek admission to the J.D. program rather than the LL.M.

To be admitted into the LL.M. program, an applicant must have a proven record of scholastic accomplishment in legal studies, a coherent plan of study, normally including a specialized concentration in an area of the law, and a commitment to the study of law as an intellectual discipline. Applicants are admitted by the Dean based on the recommendation of the Committee on Graduate Studies. The Committee considers the applicant's past experience, evidence of maturity and motivation, personal recommendations, and such other indices of competence as writings and publications.

Applicants are admitted by the Dean upon the recommendation of the Committee on Graduate Studies. The Committee considers the applicant's past experience, evidence of maturity and motivation, personal recommendations, and such other indices of competence as writings and publications. An interview may be requested by the Committee.

Application forms and additional information are available from the Assistant Dean for Admissions. To complete an application, you must return the completed application form, the application fee of $35 payable to Cleveland State University and the following:

1) If English is not your native language, results from the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL) are required. You may receive information about the test online at http://www.ets.org/toefl/ or by writing TOEFL Services, Educational Testing Service, BOX 6151, PRINCETON NJ 08541-6151 or . Note that a score of 600 or above on the paper-based test, 250 or above on the Computer Based test, or 100 or above on the Internet Based Test is normally required for admission to the LL.M. program.

2) A letter stating your reasons for applying to our LL.M. program and how our course offerings can fulfill your expectations.

3) Three personal reference letters confirming the likelihood of your success in graduate study. It is recommended that at least one letter come from a law teacher in the school awarding your first law degree. In the event you have been employed in any law related capacity, one letter should also come from your immediate supervisor.

4) Official transcripts from all colleges awarding degrees.

Completed applications for the Fall semester must be received by the previous March 1; completed applications for the Spring semester must be received by the previous October 1. Financial aid (loans) is available to eligible LL.M. candidates who are enrolled for a minimum of six credit hours per semester. Interested applicants should contact the Office of Admissions and Financial Aid Office at 216-687-2304 or by email at admissions@law.csuohio.edu.
Curricular Requirements

The Master of Laws (LL.M.) degree is awarded upon the satisfactory completion of a program of study approved by the Committee on Graduate Studies. Graduates of American law schools must complete a minimum of 20 semester hours of course work and a thesis reflecting a substantial degree of scholarship and original research. The LL.M. program for graduates of foreign law schools does not include a thesis requirement. Such students, instead, are required to complete a minimum of 24 semester hours of course credit, including at least one course for upper-level writing credit.

The Committee on Graduate Studies will appoint a faculty member to serve as a graduate adviser for each LL.M. candidate. The graduate adviser has primary responsibility for reviewing and approving the specific course program being pursued by the candidate.

A candidate must maintain continuous registration in the LL.M. program by registering for at least one course in each Fall and Spring semester, commencing with the semester in which the candidate enters the program, until the candidate shall have completed the required semester hours of credit. A candidate who fails to maintain continuous registration in the program from the semester of entry will be dismissed from the program. Exceptions to the continuous registration requirement may be granted by the committee in its discretion upon a showing of good cause in a timely petition.

LL.M. students who are graduates of American law schools, or law schools in countries which follow the common law and in which English is the primary spoken language, are required to attain a final cumulative G.P.A. of 3.0 or higher. LL.M. students who are graduates of foreign law schools in countries which either do not follow the common law or in which English is not the primary spoken language, are required to attain a final cumulative G.P.A. of 2.5 or higher. "Final cumulative G.P.A." shall be calculated at the end of the semester in which the candidate accumulates 20 or 24 semester hours of course work, as appropriate, and shall include all semester hours earned toward the LL.M. degree up to that point.

The LL.M. thesis required of graduates of American law schools must be prepared under the supervision of a thesis advisor and be approved by a thesis committee and the Committee on Graduate Studies. The Committee on Graduate Studies will appoint the thesis advisor and will also appoint a thesis committee to review the completed thesis. The thesis committee is comprised of the candidate’s thesis advisor and two other members of the faculty selected by the Committee on Graduate Studies for their interest and competence in the area of the candidate's thesis research. A majority of the thesis committee must approve the candidate's thesis before it is considered for approval by the Committee on Graduate Studies.

All requirements for the LL.M. degree including submission of the thesis must be completed no later than four years from the date of entrance into the program. A candidate's date of entrance is the start of the Fall or Spring semester following the candidate's acceptance into the program.

Not more than six semester hours (nine quarter hours) of credit received from another law school or as a special student at this law school may be applied toward the LL.M. degree requirements, and the acceptance of any such credit shall be at the discretion of the Committee. No credit earned by a candidate prior to receiving the first degree in law may be applied toward the LL.M. degree requirements, except that, where a candidate has earned credit in excess of the first degree requirements before receiving that degree, the Committee may, in its discretion, accept up to six semester hours of such credit toward fulfillment of the LL.M. requirements. Such excess credit may not be applied toward the LL.M. degree requirements if earned for courses taken earlier than the semester in which the candidate completes the requirements for the first degree. Not more than a total of six hours of credit earned in any of the ways specified in this paragraph may be applied toward the LL.M. degree requirements.

For those candidates required to write a thesis as a prerequisite to obtaining the LL.M. degree, the candidate must register for three credits of Master of Laws (LL.M.) Thesis, LAW 890, during the semester in which the candidate commences work on the LL.M. thesis. A candidate must register for LAW 890 in the Fall or Spring semester immediately following that in which the candidate attains 20 credit hours, or in the candidate’s seventh semester in the program, whichever is earlier. With the approval of the candidate’s graduate advisor, a candidate may elect to register for LAW 890 earlier, concurrently with the completion of required course work. A candidate who has completed LAW 890, but who has not yet completed the thesis, shall register for one credit of LAW 890 in each succeeding Fall and Spring semester until the thesis is submitted. A grade of "T" shall be entered each semester for LAW 890 while work on the thesis is in progress. Upon acceptance or rejection of the thesis by the Graduate Studies Committee, a grade of "P" or "F" will be entered for those credits, but such grades will not be computed in the candidate's final G.P.A.

Supplemental Policies

1) It is expected that an LL.M. candidate will take at least 10 (12 for graduates of foreign law schools) semester hours of course work in an area of concentration. The area of concentration will be designated in consultation with the candidate's graduate advisor.

2) When required, the master's thesis must be 60 typed pages or longer, not including footnotes.

3) Completion of all degree requirements normally takes two academic years or longer.

4) Credit hours for the core common law course(s) required of graduates from law schools in non-common law countries may be included in the 24 credit hours required for the degree as long as the grade(s) received is a “C” or better, in which case the grade will be included in the calculation of the student’s cumulative grade point average.

5) A candidate may take up to three semester hours of independent legal research under the direction of a member of the faculty, with the approval of the candidate's graduate advisor. If the candidate writes an independent study or seminar paper, the candidate's LL.M. thesis, when required, must be on a topic that is either completely different from or a very significant expansion of that paper. The LL.M. thesis is regarded as a requirement in addition to any work done toward the 20 semester hours of course credit required for the degree.

6) When a thesis is required, at or near the completion of course work, and in no case later than one year prior to the four-year termination date of the candidate's program, the candidate shall locate a faculty member knowledgeable in his or her field to serve as thesis advisor. Normally, the thesis advisor will be a different person than the candidate's graduate advisor. The candidate shall inform the Committee on Graduate Studies of the name of the thesis advisor and, upon approval of the selection, the committee shall inform the faculty member in writing that he or she has been designated as the candidate's thesis advisor. The candidate shall secure the thesis advisor's approval for the proposed thesis topic at this time.

7) No later than nine months prior to the four-year termination date of the candidate's program, the candidate shall present to the thesis advisor written evidence of extensive research and analysis of the subject of the thesis. Drafts of sections of the thesis should then be submitted to the advisor for criticism and advice, at the advisor's discretion. A draft of the complete thesis should be submitted to the advisor no later than three months prior to the four-year termination date of the candidate's program.

8) Students studying on a student visa must take a minimum of 8 credit hours per semester.

10. Notice and Amendment of Academic Regulations
    10.1 Notice
    10.2 Amendment
The following academic regulations are applicable to all students enrolled in the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law as candidates for any degree, unless otherwise indicated:

1. Attendance
Students are required to attend classes with substantial regularity. Unsatisfactory attendance in any course, unless otherwise defined by the course faculty member with reasonable notice to students enrolled, shall be absence from more than two weeks of classes in a single semester (or, in the case of Summer term, absence from more than one week of classes) and shall be cause for lowering the final grade entered, involuntarily withdrawing a student from the course or entering the grade of "F," in the sole discretion of the course faculty member.

Note: C.S.U. Poll Worker Excused Absence Policy
In order to foster student engagement and participation in the civic sphere, Cleveland State University has encouraged students to serve as poll workers and in polling support positions for the last several national and statewide elections. In Spring 2008 the Faculty Senate of Cleveland State University adopted a policy pertaining to student absences arising because of such service in these elections.

I. CSU faculty members are required to:
   a) excuse all students from class attendance and from any assignments, quizzes, and other coursework otherwise due during the period beginning at 6:00 p.m. on the evening before any statewide election and ending at 12:00 midnight on election day who:
      i) serve in any of the official poll worker and polling support positions, including the Center for Election Integrity official observer or monitor positions (which can include, for example, polling place translators and technical support workers with respect to the voting machines); and,
      ii) satisfy their notification obligations described in paragraph II, below; and,
   b) allow such students to make up any assignments, quizzes, and other coursework otherwise due during this period, as described in paragraph II, below.

II. Any CSU student who desires to exercise the excused poll worker service option must:
   a) have officially applied and been selected to serve;
   b) be scheduled for training that will be completed at least two days prior to the election;
   c) inform the faculty members whose classes are affected in writing (electronically or in whatever manner the particular faculty member requests) no later than the second Friday before the election;
   d) arrange with each affected faculty member to make up any coursework or quizzes that were missed due to the absence; and
   e) provide official documentation to each affected faculty member at a later appropriate point that confirms the student’s service as a poll worker or in a polling support position.

At all times, the responsibility for making up coursework rests with the student.

This policy applies to students who work as B.O.E. poll workers and to those who volunteer as election observers or monitors for a bona fide organization such as the Democratic or Republican Party, or the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under the Law.

2. Grades and Grading Practices

2.1 Grade Points.
For the purpose of evaluating transcripts and/or computing grade point average, the following system of grading and grade points shall be observed:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Grade</th>

2.2 No Grade Points.
The following grades carry no grade points and are not involved in the calculation of grade point averages:

- P Passing. Given in select courses approved by the faculty for Pass/Fail credit or courses elected on a Pass/C-/D+/D/F basis. See Academic Regulation 4.6. Except in the case of a grade of "P" awarded by the Academic Standards Committee under Academic Regulation 2.4, a student’s work must be the equivalent of a “C” or better to merit the grade of “P.”

- I Incomplete. A temporary grade designation, given when the work in a course has been generally passing, but when some specific course requirement has not been completed through no fault of the student and the faculty member has approved the completion of such requirement after the normal date for the conclusion of the course. The course work must be completed and submitted to the appropriate faculty... member not later than the last day of classes of the next term (including Summer term) following that in which the course was offered; otherwise, a final grade of "F" will be recorded. For good cause shown, the Academic Standards Committee may further extend the time permitted to complete and submit the required work.

Temporary. A grade designation given in multiple-term, single grade courses at the end of term(s) before the one in which the course concludes. This grade is not applicable to courses in which a final grade is awarded for each term of the course.

Authorized Withdrawal. Given in the case of official withdrawal from a course voluntarily, as provided in Academic Regulation 3.1, or involuntarily, as provided in Academic Regulation 1. Courses from which a student voluntarily withdraws within the time limits set out in Academic Regulation 3.1 will not appear on the student's transcript.

2.3 Computation of Grade Point Average
Grade points are determined by multiplying the point value of the grade awarded by the number of credit hours earned in each course. A student's grade point average is determined by dividing the total grade points earned in all courses by the total number of credit hours attempted in all courses for which final letter grades (grades "A" through "F") have been awarded.

2.4 Grade Dispute Procedures, Grade Appeals and Changes of Grades
(a) Time Permitted
A student who believes he or she has received an improper final grade in a course taught by a member of the law faculty must make a good faith effort to discuss a change of grade with the faculty member. The effort must be made within six weeks after the date of the last examination day of the Fall, Spring or Summer term in which the grade was earned or within one week after the last date that the examination was regularly available for review, whichever date is later.

(b) Basis for Change of Grades
1. Deviation from the Grading Guidelines is not a basis for any change of grade petition.
2. Once a final letter grade (grades "A" through "F") has been submitted to the College of Law Records Office and been approved by the Dean’s Office, a change of grade can be sought by the faculty member or student only as set forth below.

(c) Change by Faculty Member
A faculty member can enter a change of grade only with the approval of the Academic Standards Committee. Approval shall be granted only when the faculty member has satisfied the Academic Standards Committee that:
   1. there has been a computational or clerical error; or
   2. the grade awarded was not in accord with the grading standards applied to the other members of the class; or
   3. the student's timely request to take the examination or submit a required paper at another time was improperly denied.

The Academic Standards Committee must either approve the change of grade submitted or deny the request so that the original grade remains in effect.

(d) Student Petitions for a Change of Grade: Petitions to the Academic Standards Committee
1. If, despite good faith efforts, the student has been unable to arrange a meeting with the faculty member or, if after ten days the faculty member has not acted upon the student’s request or declines to change the grade, the student may submit a petition to the Academic Standards Committee for relief as provided below. A written petition must be filed within ten days after the faculty member has failed to act or has communicated, either orally or in writing, a refusal to change the student’s grade.
2. Upon request to the College of Law Records Officer, any student who has filed an appeal of a grade may review the grade sheets submitted by the faculty member for the course involved. This review is to include the grades entered before and after the student names were provided to the faculty member. The College of Law Records Officer shall delete all names and examination numbers, except those of the student petitioner, from the grade sheets prior to their review by the student petitioner.
3. A student may petition the Academic Standards Committee for a change of grade to the grade earned upon a showing of clear and convincing evidence that there has been a computational or clerical error.
4. A student may petition the Academic Standards Committee for a change of grade to the grade of "P" or "W." Such a change of grade shall be awarded only in cases in which the student has satisfied the Academic Standards Committee that:
   a. The grade awarded was arbitrary or capricious, but in no event shall the Committee re-grade or otherwise evaluate the petitioning student’s examinations or other course work, or that of other students in the course.

Examples of what shall not constitute proof of arbitrary or capricious grading within the meaning of the above Regulation include, but shall not be limited to the following:
- disagreement with the professor’s evaluation of the merits or quality of the student’s work;
- criticism of the merits of a professor’s examination or the professor’s grading methodology;
- a student’s claim that his or her work did not accurately reflect his or her knowledge of the material.

b. The student's timely request to take the examination or submit a required paper at another time was improperly denied.

The Academic Standards Committee must either find that entry of a “P” or “W” in lieu of the entered grade is appropriate or deny the request so that the grade originally submitted by the faculty member remains in effect.

5. A student may petition the Academic Standards Committee for a change of grade to a grade of “W” (Authorized Withdrawal) where a final grade of “F” has been entered for failure to complete a course within the time allowed after entry of a grade of Incomplete as set forth in Academic Regulation 2.2 or for failure to appear for an examination as set forth in Academic Regulation 3.6. Such a change of grade shall be awarded only where the student provides clear and convincing evidence that the failure was a direct consequence of extraordinary and unforeseeable circumstances. The provisions set forth in Academic Regulation 5.3(e) and (f) are applicable to change of grade petitions brought pursuant to this Regulation.

(e) The student and faculty member may appear in person before the Academic Standards Committee to present their respective views on the petition.

(f) 1. If all or a substantial part of a student’s final examination has been lost or misplaced after receipt by the faculty member or proctor, but before the examination grade has been submitted to the College of Law Records Officer, the student may elect to take a grade of “P” (Pass) for the course or take a make-up examination. Where a substantial part of a student’s final examination has been lost or misplaced, the student’s election to take a make-up examination shall apply to a partial make-up examination equivalent in weight to the same portion of the original examination, as determined by the faculty member. A substantial part of the examination answer shall be such part that, if excluded from the student’s answer, it would adversely effect the student’s letter grade for the course, as determined by the faculty member.

2. The student must petition the Academic Standards Committee for such relief within ten days of the posting of either a grade of “F” as specified in Academic Regulation 3.5 or another grade that is inconsistent with a graded examination, such as a grade of “I,” “P,” or “W.” If a grade of “P” is entered, this grade will not limit the student’s right to exercise the Pass/C-/D+/D/F Option set forth in Academic Regulation 4.6.

(g) Appeals to the Faculty
See Academic Regulation 9.

(h) Law students enrolled in courses offered by other colleges within this University (see Academic Regulation 4.7) shall follow the grade dispute procedure available pursuant to the regulations of such college.

3. Examination, Withdrawal and Change of Section Procedures

3.1 Time of Withdrawal
Voluntary withdrawal from classes offered at the law school shall be permitted as follows:
(a) One-semester courses
At anytime prior to the beginning of the fifth week of classes;

(b) Two-semester courses
At anytime prior to the beginning of the seventh week of classes of the first semester of such course(s); and

(c) Summer term courses
Each week of the Summer term shall be equivalent to two weeks during Fall or Spring semester. Therefore, for courses with the duration of only the Summer term, withdrawal must be accomplished prior to the beginning of the third week of class; for courses which begin in the Summer and conclude in the Fall, withdrawal must be accomplished prior to the beginning of the fourth week of such course(s).

(d) Notwithstanding the above, a student enrolled in Independent Legal Research, LAW 860, may, with the approval of the faculty member supervising the research project, withdraw at any time during the term in which he or she enrolled for the course or, if a grade of "I" was given at the conclusion of such term, at any time during the next succeeding term.

(e) Except as a result of a decision made in accord with Academic Regulation 2.4 (Grade Dispute Procedures, Grade Appeals and Changes of Grade) a student may not withdraw from a course once a final letter grade for that course has been posted or the student has otherwise been informed of the final letter grade.

3.2 Exception
(a) The Academic Standards Committee may grant an exception to the requirements of Academic Regulation 3.1(a)-(d) but may do so only in cases of exceptional circumstances.

Note: Students seeking to withdraw from a course after the deadline should complete a petition and submit it to the Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs for consideration by the Academic Standards Committee.

(b) Full time students who change to a part time program are required to enroll for the appropriate part time courses but may elect to complete a sequential course in lieu of enrolling for a new course.

3.3 Withdrawal from Multiple-Term or Two Semester Core Courses
(a) Any student who withdraws from a multiple-term continuing course before its conclusion shall be deemed to have withdrawn from the entire course, even though the grade designation "T" may have been recorded for one or more terms completed in the course. The student must repeat the entire course in order to receive any credit for it. This provision does not apply to courses in which a final grade is awarded for each term of the course.

(b) A student may not withdraw from Legal Research, Writing and Advocacy, L504, without the advance approval of the Academic Standards Committee.

(c) Failure to register for the second term of a multiple-term continuing course without having withdrawn from the course pursuant to Academic Regulation 3.1(b) or without obtaining approval from the Academic Standards Committee pursuant to Academic Regulation 3.2 shall cause the grade of "F" to be entered in place of the grade designation "T" for the number of credit hours represented by the "T." This provision does not apply to courses in which a final grade is awarded for each term of the course.

(d) Students enrolled in two semester core curriculum courses may not withdraw from the second semester of any such course except upon a showing of substantial hardship caused by extraordinary and unforeseeable circumstances and with the approval of the Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs. Extraordinary and unforeseeable circumstances do not include a belief that the grade earned in the first semester was too low or an objection to the teaching methods of the professor. Upon referral by the Assistant Dean, the matter shall be decided by the Committee.

(e) This provision applies specifically to “semesterized” courses – i.e., core courses that have been transformed from two semesters to one. Any student who fails or withdraws from the second semester of a two-semester course that is subsequently “semesterized” from two semesters to one must enroll in and complete the new one-semester version of that course. The student shall not lose any credit hours previously awarded for successful completion of the first semester of a subsequently “semesterized” two-semester course.

3.4 Change of Section – Core Courses
A student may not change his or her section of a two semester core curriculum course after completion of one semester unless permitted by the Academic Standards Committee. The Committee will allow such change only upon a showing of:
(a) substantial hardship caused by extraordinary and unforeseeable circumstances, and
(b) a determination that the course coverage in the new section will substantially parallel that of the former section.

For purposes of this Academic Regulation, extraordinary and unforeseeable circumstances do not include a belief that the grade earned in the first semester was too low or an objection to the teaching methods of the professor.

3.5 Withdrawal from All Classes
A student who voluntarily withdraws from all classes or who fails to register for classes during the next semester for which he or she is eligible (excluding the summer term), and later wishes to reenroll as a matriculating student, must comply with the procedures in this section.

(a) A student in good standing who has received credit for two or more law school classes as a matriculating student must submit to the Office of Law Admissions a letter of intent to return to the law school and a copy of his or her transcript at least forty-five days before the first day of the semester or summer term for which the student intends to re-enroll.

(b) A student re-enrolling pursuant to this Regulation, who seeks to earn a J.D. degree, must comply with the requirements set forth in Academic Regulation 4.4, based upon the date he or she first enrolled in law school.

(c) A student who withdraws before completing and receiving credit for the fall semester of the first year of law school must reapply through the usual admissions
3.6 Examinations and Examination Scheduling

(a) Failure to Appear for a Scheduled In-School Final Examination

Unless the student obtains advance permission from the Dean to take a scheduled in-school final examination at another time, any student who fails to appear for such examination shall receive a grade of “F” for that examination or, if the examination is graded numerically, a zero for that examination. Permission to take an in-school final examination at a different time will be granted only upon a showing of good cause. Unless the student obtains advance permission from the Dean to take a rescheduled in-school final examination at another time, any student who fails to appear for such rescheduled examination shall receive a grade of “F” for that examination or, if the examination is graded numerically, a zero for that examination.

A professor shall also have discretion to stipulate that failure to take the final examination in the course shall constitute a failure to complete the requirements of the course and shall result in a final grade of “F” being awarded for the course.

(b) Failure to Submit a Take-Home Final Examination by the Deadline Established by the Faculty Member

Unless the student obtains advance permission from the Dean to submit a take-home final examination at a different time, any student who does not submit such examination by the deadline established by the faculty member shall receive a grade of “F” for that examination or, if the examination is graded numerically, a zero for that examination. Permission to submit a take-home final examination at a different time will be granted only upon a showing of good cause. Unless the student obtains advance permission from the Dean to submit a rescheduled take-home final examination at a different time, any student who fails to submit such examination by the rescheduled deadline shall receive a grade of “F” for that examination or, if the examination is graded numerically, a zero for that examination.

A professor shall also have discretion to stipulate that failure to submit a take-home final examination by the established or rescheduled deadline shall constitute a

(c) Exceptions to Academic Regulations 3.6(a) and 3.6(b) for Unforeseeable Emergencies

Exceptions to the requirements of Academic Regulations 3.6(a) and 3.6(b) may be granted by the Dean only in cases of extraordinary unforeseeable emergencies, and provided that the student notifies the Dean as soon as practicable of the circumstances of the emergency.

(d) Multiple Examinations

Students who are scheduled for two final examinations that have start times that are 23 hours or less apart may notify the Dean of their examination schedule and request a schedule change. This notice must be provided at least two weeks prior to commencement of the examination period. The Dean will then reschedule one of the examinations to a reschedule date and time as described in part (c), below. Students who reschedule examinations may, at the sole discretion of the instructor, be given the same exam as or a different exam than that given to other students.

(e) Reschedule Date and Priority

1. The date and time for any rescheduled examination shall be set by the Dean for the first available scheduled make-up day subsequent to the originally scheduled examination.

2. If the conflicting examinations include a required course and another course, only the non-required course may be rescheduled.

Note: The Dean shall, in his or her discretion, set two or more make-up dates throughout the examination period.

(f) Pre-Examination Conduct

Any student authorized to take a rescheduled examination is prohibited from discussing the examination or any aspect of the subject course with any person who has taken the examination or is otherwise familiar with the content of the examination. This prohibition does not apply to law school administrators in regard to examination rescheduling nor to the course faculty member.

3.7 Provisions for Persons with Disabilities

Students who because of a disability are unable to complete an examination in the given time or the given room are entitled to special consideration regarding additional time and/or communication aids. Such students, whether temporarily or permanently disabled, must request accommodations and document their disability and need for accommodations in advance of the scheduled examination, unless the disability arises at such time as to excuse full compliance. If necessary, the student and the faculty member through the Office of the Dean may secure the assistance of the University Coordinator of Disability Services for evaluation of the student's disability and in making suitable arrangements for the taking of the examination. To the extent possible, such an examination is to commence at the same time as the scheduled examination. Under these conditions the time limitation need not apply, provided, however, that the examination must be completed in a single session.

Note: Normally documentation of a disability and requests for accommodations must be received by the Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs a minimum of four (4) weeks prior to the date for which the accommodation is requested.

3.8 Uniformity of Examination Conditions
All students in the J.D. program, including those whose primary language is a language other than English, are to take all examinations under the same conditions.

3.9 Anonymous Examinations
(a) Examination numbers shall be employed for all examinations that count for 10% or more of the final grade. Different numbers shall be used for any such examination when the professor has received the names corresponding to the examination number for the earlier examination(s).

Note: Students obtain examination numbers online at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/technology/examcomputer.

(b) No student shall disclose his or her examination number to any other person. Examination papers shall be graded anonymously and examination grades submitted to the College of Law Records Officer. Faculty members will be advised of the identity of students before submitting final grades in order that factors other than the final examination scores may, at the faculty member’s discretion, be included in the final grade determinations.

(c) Parts (a) and (b) of this Regulation are not applicable to papers or other work for courses where research or writing require review and comment by the professor. Faculty members, however, retain the discretion to grade anonymously in any such course.

3.10 Retention and Availability of Examination Papers
For a period of four weeks after grades have been officially posted, examination papers for all courses shall be retained by the Office of the Dean or by the course faculty member. Thereafter, all final examination papers shall be retained by the Office of the Dean for a period of at least two years. Students shall be permitted to see and examine their own graded papers at any time within this two-year period. After the four-week period, special circumstances must be shown and the viewing made with the consent of the Dean.

4. Graduation and Honors Requirements

4.1 Dean's List
In recognition of excellence in academic achievement, any student who attains a 3.30 or higher grade point average in any academic term shall be designated on the Dean’s List for such term. No student shall be designated on the Dean’s List for any term in which he or she did not complete courses totaling at least eight credit hours (six hours of credit for a first-year first-semester part-time student) or did not receive final grades for all courses scheduled to be completed during such term.

4.2 Graduation Honors
(a) College of Law graduation honors shall be awarded as follows: Summa Cum Laude, 3.70 grade point average and above; Magna Cum Laude, 3.50 to 3.69 grade point average; and Cum Laude, 3.30 to 3.49 grade point average. Graduation honors designations are based on the student’s final cumulative grade point average and will be reflected on the student’s permanent record. Any designation in the College of Law Commencement Program is advisory only as it may not include all grades earned for the degree.

(b) Graduation honors shall be based solely on grades earned for courses taken at this College of Law.

4.3 Course and Credit Hour Requirements
(a) Number of hours required:
The Juris Doctor degree will be awarded upon satisfactory completion of a minimum of 90 semester credit hours (or the equivalent.)

(b) Course Requirements:
Of the 90 required semester hours, 34 (35, for students entering prior to 2012) must be earned in the nine (eight for student entering prior to 2012) Required Core Curriculum courses: Civil Procedure, Constitutional Law, Contracts, Criminal Law, Legislation & the Regulatory State (for students entering 2012 and after).
Property, Torts and Legal Writing. In addition, students must complete satisfactorily Evidence; a third semester course in legal writing; one upper-level writing course; one professional responsibility course; a course designated by the faculty as having a component of administrative law (eliminated for students entering in 2012 and thereafter); a course designated by the faculty as satisfying the perspective elective requirement; and, for students entering in 2008 through 2011, a course designated by the faculty as satisfying the skills course requirement, and for those entering 2012 and thereafter, a course designated by the faculty as satisfying the experiential skills requirement. A professional responsibility course is one that includes at least ten (10) hours of instruction in the Code of Professional Responsibility. Of the 90 hours required for graduation, at least 73 must be in courses other than clinical or externships and at least 68 must be in non-800 level courses in the College of Law, or, in the case of a student receiving credit for studies at another law school (see Academic Regulations 6.1 and 6.4), at the law school at which the credit was earned. Courses not satisfying the 68 credit hour requirement include all clinical and externship courses, independent legal research, credits earned for participation in Moot Court and Trial Team, credit earned for Law Review, the Journal of Law and Health, or Global Business Law Review and interdisciplinary courses whether taken as part of a joint degree program or taken as part of the student’s law school program under Academic Regulation 4.7. No student may retake courses for credit that the student has previously passed.

(c) Grade Point Average
In order to receive the Juris Doctor degree, the student must attain a grade point average of at least 2.0 on a 4.0 scale.

4.4 Residence Requirement, Course Loads and Employment
(a) The weeks in residence at the College of Law required for graduation are met by completion of the credit hours required for graduation.

(b) The course of study for the J.D. degree may be completed no sooner than 24 months and not longer than 72 months after a student has commenced law study at the College of Law or, if a transfer student, at the law school from which transfer credit has been granted, provided, however, that for compelling reasons shown, the Academic Standards Committee may allow a student up to a maximum of 84 months from the time the student commenced law study.

(c) Credit earned for Law Review, Journal, or Moot Court participation, for courses in independent legal research and writing, or for courses offered in an officially approved clinical legal education program may be included as satisfying the residence and class hour requirements of this regulation even though they may involved studies or activities away from the law school or in a format that does not involve attendance at regularly scheduled class sessions. The hours so earned may not exceed the maximum allowed by Academic Regulation 4.3(b).

(d) For full-time students, the maximum course load is 18 hours per semester and the minimum course load is 10 hours per semester. For part-time students, the maximum course load is 12 hours per semester and the minimum course load is eight hours per semester. For first-year students, the prescribed curriculum provides the maximum and minimum loads.

1. No student may enroll for more than 18 hours in the Fall or Spring Semester. Courses taken outside the regular Fall or Spring Semesters such as the “short courses” given during intersession periods shall not count toward the maximum allowed even though credit for such courses is awarded during the following Semester.

2. Absent permission of the Dean, students who work more than 20 hours per week may not register for more than 12 credits hours per week in any week during which classes are scheduled and must so certify to the College of Law.

3. To the extent necessary for required reporting purposes, scholarships, employer tuition benefits or other cases in which a full time/part time student designation is required, students enrolled for fewer than 12 credit hours will be considered part-time students.

Note: Students taking more than 12 credit hours during a Fall or Spring Semester are strongly advised to refrain from all employment. Students taking more than 12 credit hours who are employed may not be employed for more than 20 hours per week.

(e) During the Summer Term students may enroll for a maximum of nine credit hours.

4.5 Failure of Required or Elective Courses
(a) Any student who fails a course required for graduation must re-register for the course at the next available time and complete all the requirements therefore. Any student who fails an elective course may re-register for the course and complete all the requirements therefore. A student who fails the first term of a continuing two-term course in which a final grade is awarded after the first term must withdraw. from the second term of the course and repeat the entire course the next time it is offered. A student who fails the second term of a continuing two-term course in which a final grade is entered after the first term must repeat the second term of the course the next time it is offered with comparable content. The Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs will designate the section of the course the student is to take when repeating a course under these circumstances.

(b) In each of the above cases, completing the course requirements includes attendance in class according to the generally imposed policy of the course faculty member consistent with Academic Regulation 1.

(c) In each of the above cases, the student's permanent record shall reflect both the original failing grade and the grade subsequently earned.

4.6 Pass/C-/D+/D/F Option
Upper level students (i.e., a student who has completed the first year and is eligible to take elective courses at the law school) may choose to take up to 2 elective courses (for a maximum of up to 8 semester credit hours) on a Pass/C-/D+/D/F (P/C-/D+/D/F) basis. This does not include courses offered only on a pass/fail basis - e.g., externships, Law Review, Journal, short course Trial Advocacy.

(a) A student may only take one course on a P/C-/D+/D/F basis at a time. This does not, however, preclude a student from taking an externship or other course only offered on a pass/fail basis and a P/C-/D+/D/F elective at the same time. No course required for graduation can be taken on a P/C-/D+/D/F basis.

(b) Consequently, the core curriculum (including Constitutional Law), Evidence and Legal Profession cannot be taken on this basis. A student may not exercise this option the first time the student takes a course that satisfies a specific graduation requirement. If a student subsequently takes another course that satisfies the same requirement, that second elective can be taken on the P/C-/D+/D/F basis. A student who takes two courses satisfying the same graduation requirement in the same term (e.g., Administrative Law and Environmental Law, both of which satisfy the administrative law requirement), may elect (if in accord with all parts of this Regulation) which course, if either, the student wishes to take on the P/C-/D+/D/F basis.

(c) Students may not take clinics on a P/C-/D+/D/F basis.

(d) Within two weeks after the College of Law posts a notice that all grades for the term have been received by the College of Law Records Officer, as to courses for which the P/C-/D+/D/F Option is available, a student may elect to either:

1. retain the grade earned, in which case the student need take no action, or

2. exercise the P/C-/D+/D/F Option, as limited by Academic Regulation 4.6(a)-(d) above, by providing written notice of the election to the College of Law Records Officer on a form downloaded from the College of Law’s website at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/resources/forms.

(e) Faculty members will not know who is taking the class on the P/C-/D+/D/F basis. All students shall be required to satisfy all course requirements; faculty members shall submit letter grades for all students in the class. The College of Law Records Officer will submit the appropriate grade based on the letter grade submitted by the faculty member. Upon timely election by the student, a “P” grade will be substituted for the posted letter grade. However, a student must earn a "C" or better in the course to receive a "P." A student earning a "P" in a course will receive credit toward graduation for the course, but the grade of "P" will not be calculated into the student's gpa. A student who receives a C-, D+, D, or F in the course will have that letter grade on their transcript and the grade will be calculated into the gpa.

(f) A student may petition the Academic Standards Committee to allow for the exercise or revocation of the P/C-/D+/D/F Option after the deadline in Academic Regulation 4.6(d) has passed only if the student satisfies the criteria set forth in 4.6(f)(1), (2), or (3) below.

1. The student establishes by clear and convincing evidence that there has been a computational or clerical error that directly affected his or her final course grade for the course for which the student seeks to exercise or revoke the P/C-/D+/D/F Option, and the student petitions for relief within two weeks of the student being notified of the computational or clerical error; or

2. The student establishes by clear and convincing evidence that he or she did not receive a final course grade for the course for which the student wishes to exercise or revoke the P/C-/D+/D/F Option until one or more days after the College of Law’s posting of the notice referenced in 4.6(d), above, and the student petitions for relief within two weeks of the student being notified of his or her final course grade;
3. The student petitions to exercise or revoke the P/C-/D+/D/F Option for a course for which the grade of “Incomplete” was initially awarded, and the student petitions for relief within two weeks of the student being notified of his or her final letter grade in the course.

(g) A student may petition to exercise or revoke the P/C-/D+/D/F Option retroactively for a course because of a grade outcome in a different course if the student can demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that there has been a computational or clerical error that directly affected his or her final course grade in that different course, and the student petitions for relief within two weeks of the student being notified of the computational or clerical error.

4.7 Interdisciplinary Courses
Any student who is eligible to register for elective courses may be authorized to elect for credit, in fulfillment of the Juris Doctor degree requirements, up to two courses for not more than a total of eight semester credit hours of graduate level courses of the University. Such prior authorization shall be granted by the Dean whenever it is demonstrated that a course outside the College of Law will add to a student’s legal education or aid in his or her future practice, provided that, if there is a question as to the application of the above standards in a particular case, the petition may be referred to an appropriate faculty committee for recommendation. The law student must be officially graded in such course on a graded basis and only courses completed with a grade of C or better will count toward the degree. The grade earned in such course will not be included in calculation of the student’s grade point average. Notwithstanding the above, students enrolled in a joint degree program with the Cleveland State University College of Business Administration or with the Maxine Goodman Levin College of Urban Affairs are subject to the course and credit allowances established for the applicable program.

Note: A course taught online or by other means of distance education may be approved if the course is otherwise appropriate for credit at the College of Law. Distance education courses, including such courses taught outside the College of Law, may not exceed the limits of ABA Law School Standard 306, restricting such courses to four credit hours a semester and twelve credit hours total.

4.8 Clinical and Externship Courses
Any student may earn credit in clinical legal education courses without limitation as to the number of separate clinic or externship courses completed, except that no student may be enrolled in more than one such course in any term. Whenever applications for any clinical legal education course exceed the number of places available for such course, students who have never enrolled for a clinical course shall be given enrollment priority over students who have already completed one or more such course. Likewise, whenever applications for any externship course exceed the number of places available for such course, students who have never enrolled for an externship course shall be given enrollment priority over students who have already completed one or more such course. (See Academic Regulation 4.3 as to the total number of clinical and externship hours permitted)

4.9 Bar Preparation Course
As permitted by the American Bar Association, a student may receive credit toward juris doctor degree requirements for a course offered by the College of Law designed as preparation for a bar examination but no such course may be required for graduation.

5. Dismissal, Post-Dismissal Petitions, and Readmission: Juris Doctor Degree Candidates who began law school in Summer 2002 and thereafter
This Academic Regulation applies to students who enrolled at the law school in Summer 2002 and thereafter. Copies of the former regulations addressing dismissal, probation and readmission for students who began law school prior to Summer 2002, Academic Regulations 5 and 6, can be obtained from the Office of the Dean.

5.1 Dismissal
Any student achieving a cumulative Grade Point Average below 2.00 upon completion of two full semesters, not including Summer semesters, shall be dismissed. Any student who falls below a cumulative Grade Point Average of 2.00 in any semester thereafter, including Summer semesters, shall be dismissed.

5.2 Readmission
(a) A student who has been dismissed for academic reasons may apply for readmission through the usual admissions process under the jurisdiction of the Admissions Committee. No application for such readmission shall be considered until at least two years has elapsed since the end of the term at which the student was dismissed.

(b) If the student is readmitted, the student's previous law school record shall be attached to his or her transcript, but shall be given no other effect.
Note: A student who is dismissed pursuant to Academic Regulation 5.1 will be deregistered from courses in which he or she enrolled in a subsequent term and tuition will be refunded at 100%. Students assume the risk of dismissal and deregistration pursuant to these regulations. If, in such a case, the student has received loan funds for the subsequent term, the student may be liable for the immediate repayment of any loan refund received for living expenses for the term. In addition, a student becomes ineligible for work-study employment as of the effective date of a student’s academic dismissal from the College of Law. Students with questions should contact the College of Law Financial Aid office or the Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs.

5.3 Petitions to the Academic Standards Committee — Readmission and Probation
(a) The Academic Standards Committee shall have jurisdiction to hear petitions as to:
1. Reducing the two-year waiting period for application for readmission set forth in Academic Regulation 5.2 to a period of no less than one year. Any reduction approved under this Academic Regulation has no other effect upon the application for readmission.
2. Allowing students who are academically dismissed in accord with Academic Regulation 5.1 to seek a one-semester Probationary period provided that the student’s cumulative grade point average is 1.80 or higher (1.75 for students who began law school prior to Summer 2004).

(b) Except for the right to seek a probationary period under Academic Regulation 5.3, the dismissal of any student for failure to achieve the requisite cumulative grade point average is not subject to petition to the Academic Standards Committee.

(c) Petitions seeking relief pursuant to Academic Regulation 5.3(a)(2) shall be granted only upon a showing that
1. the student experienced substantial hardship caused by extraordinary and unforeseeable circumstances,
2. the factors that contributed to the student’s insufficient academic performance no longer exist, and
3. there is a reasonable likelihood that the student will attain a cumulative grade point average of 2.0 at the end of the Probationary period.

(d) Petitions seeking relief pursuant to Academic Regulation 5.3(a)(1) will be granted only upon a showing that the factors specified in Academic Regulations 5.3(c)(1) and (2) have been met.

(e) A rebuttable presumption shall exist to the effect that the rules in Academic Regulation 5 apply in all particulars to the petitioning student. The burden is on the petitioning student to show by clear and convincing evidence that the faculty could not have reasonably intended these rules to apply to the petitioning student's circumstances.

(f) Because of the relief available to the student to withdraw from courses under Academic Regulation 3, issues of health, family situation, or employment demands upon the student shall not normally be considered as substantial hardship.

(g) The Academic Standards Committee may not extend relief beyond granting a one semester probationary period to commence with either the Fall or Spring semester.

(h) A student who receives notice of academic dismissal during any term, including a Summer term, in which the student is enrolled for any courses, will be deregistered from those courses in accord with the procedures set forth in the Note to Academic Regulation 5.2 (b). If qualified, the student may petition for a one semester probationary period to commence the following semester, excluding any Summer, pursuant to Academic Regulation 5.3(a)(2).

(i) The right to petition for a probationary semester set forth in Academic Regulation 5.3(a) may be exercised only once. If a student fails to attain a cumulative grade point average of at least 2.0 by the end of the Probationary semester or if the student’s cumulative grade point average falls below 2.0 in any subsequent semester, the student shall be dismissed. That dismissal is not subject to petition to the Academic Standards Committee.

5.4 Right of Appeal to the Faculty
Nothing in Academic Regulation 5-5.3 limits the right of a student to appeal to the faculty pursuant to Academic Regulation 9. Pending the outcome of any appeal, the student's dismissal remains in effect.

6. Credit for Work Completed at Other Approved Law Schools
6.1 Transfer Students: Advanced Standing
(a) A candidate for admission as a transfer student with advanced standing must have received a Bachelor of Arts degree from an approved college before entering the law school from which he or she seeks to transfer. Such law school must usually be a member of the Association of American Law Schools (AALS).
However, in some cases transfer students may be accepted from law schools that, while not members of the AALS, are approved by the American Bar Association.

(b) 1. A candidate for admission as a transfer student with advanced standing may be considered for admission only if the candidate is presently eligible to return to the law school in which he or she is enrolled as a student in good standing.

2. Students who have been dismissed from other law schools shall not be admitted as transfer students. In rare and exceptional cases, such students may be considered for admission pursuant to Academic Regulation 6.2.

(c) Any student who has previously attended another law school, whether or not seeking advanced standing, must: (1) obtain certification from the Dean of the former law school that he or she is in good standing and eligible for further instruction except as specified in Academic Regulation 6.1(b); (2) submit an official transcript of all work completed at the previous law school; (3) submit a timely Application for Admission with application fee; and (4) submit a complete transcript of his or her undergraduate and prior graduate academic record and LSAT score report through the Law School Data Assembly Service.

(d) Transfer students are eligible for admission to the College of Law normally in the fall term of their second year. Students who decline to attend after being admitted in one year must reapply if they wish to be considered for admission in subsequent years. A candidate for admission as a transfer student need not have completed a full academic year at another institution, but must have received final grades in some courses. Transfer students will receive no credit for incomplete courses or completion of any portion of a continuing course at the school in which they originally enrolled, and may not enroll for any continuing course in the College of Law which course began in any term prior to the student's registration here.

(e) A transfer student must complete at least 60 semester hours in residence at this College of Law to be eligible for the J.D. degree.

(f) Transfer students shall be admitted with advanced standing to the extent that all previous law school credit earned in completed courses with grades of 2.0 grade point and above (or the equivalent) on the College's Grading Scale will be counted in satisfaction of this College's credit hour requirements. However, such credit will not be included in calculating the student's cumulative grade point average at this College. Decisions will be made by the Dean on an individual basis, subject to student appeal or decanal referral to the Academic Standards Committee, as to the extent to which the completion of particular courses at other law schools with grades of 2.0 or the equivalent or better will be counted in fulfillment of particular course or hour requirements at this College. Previous law school credit earned with grades lower than 2.0 (or its equivalent) will not be counted in satisfaction of either this College's total credit hour requirements or any of its particular course requirements.

(g) Any transfer student who arrives at Cleveland-Marshall having completed only one semester of a two-semester course that is here taught as a one-semester course (i.e., Torts, Contracts, Civil Procedure and Property) must enroll in and complete Cleveland-Marshall's one-semester version of that course. The student shall not lose any credit hours previously awarded for successful completion of the first semester of a two-semester course that is taught here as a one-semester course.

6.2 Admission of Students After Dismissal from Other Law Schools

(a) Only in rare and exceptional cases and for compelling reasons may a student who has been dismissed from another law school for academic reasons be considered for admission to this College, and then only with the status of a beginning first-year student. No application for such admission shall be considered until at least two years has elapsed since notice of dismissal from the prior law school.

(b) The applicant must show that the failure to achieve good academic standing at the prior law school was not due to lack of ability and that such difficulties as appear to have been the cause of the unsatisfactory performance have been removed. Supporting documents must include a letter from the Dean of the prior law school, setting forth all pertinent information, his or her opinion as to whether the applicant should be admitted, and under what conditions the applicant could be readmitted to the prior law school.

(c) If admitted, the student's previous law school record shall be attached to his or her transcript, but shall be given no other effect.

6.3 Transient Students

(a) Degree candidates from other approved law schools may be admitted as transient students at the commencement of any term, but will not be permitted to enroll for more than two terms, including a summer term, except under compelling circumstances and with the prior approval of the Admissions Committee and the Dean of the student's own school. All such applicants must be in good academic standing at their own law school and must submit an authorization, in writing, from the Dean of such law school specifying: (1) that the student is in good academic standing; (2) that the courses are approved for study; and (3) that the applicant will receive credit for all courses successfully completed. In addition, such applicants must complete an application for admission and may be asked to provide transcripts and law school admission test scores.

(b) Transient students are admitted on a space available basis and upon evidence of satisfactory completion of course prerequisites or other evidence of ability to handle course requirements. Admission as a transient student is limited to the particular course(s) and term(s) for which the admission is expressly granted.

(c) A transient student will not be accepted as a Juris Doctor degree candidate except under the most compelling reasons and unless, as of the time the student enrolled here as a transient student, he or she has met all criteria for admission as a transfer student and has completed all courses at this College with a grade of "C" or better.

6.4 Credit for Courses Taken Elsewhere by Currently Enrolled Students

(a) Any student who is eligible to register for elective courses may submit a written request to the Dean seeking permission to elect for credit, in fulfillment of the Juris Doctor degree requirements, not more than 30 credit hours of courses at approved law schools other than the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law. The request must be submitted and considered in advance upon a showing of good cause.

Examples of good cause include: (1) the student or the student's spouse is transferring to another city for employment purposes; (2) the student wants to take a course or courses that are not available at this law school; or (3) the student resides in a community beyond commuting distance from Cleveland during the summer and wants to take a summer term course at a law school in that community.

(b) Credit in satisfaction of the College's credit hour requirements will be given for each such course completed with a grade of 2.0 (on a 4.0 scale) or the equivalent or better. Such credit will not be included in calculating the student's cumulative grade point average at this college of law.

7. Procedures of the Academic Standards Committee

7.1 Procedures to be Observed

The procedures to be substantially observed by the Academic Standards Committee of the College of Law (or any other Committee thereof which in specific instances may be appointed by the Dean to perform the functions customarily performed by the Academic Standards Committee) shall be as hereinafter are set forth. Minor deviations from these procedures shall not invalidate the actions and decisions of the Committee so long as they do not result in substantial prejudice to any person affected by any such action or decision. The rule of harmless error applies to the Committee's hearings, deliberations and decisions. The Faculty of the College of Law shall determine whether such error has occurred and whether substantial justice has been done.

7.2 Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of the Academic Standards Committee shall include all matters assigned to the Committee by the Academic Regulations, matters within the authority of the Dean and referred to the Committee by the Dean for adjudication or advice, and all other matters specially referred to the Committee by the faculty.

7.3 Finality of Decision

(a) Except as elsewhere specifically provided by regulations duly adopted by the Faculty and except for the right of persons who deem themselves improperly prejudiced by a ruling to appeal to the full faculty, any determination or adjudication of the Academic Standards Committee shall be final.

(b) A student petitioner who has been advised of a decision of the Academic Standards Committee regarding his or her petition has no right to reconsideration of that decision. Petitions for reconsideration will be heard, in the discretion of the Committee, only where the student petitioner provides relevant new and potentially dispositive information to the Committee that was not available to the student when the original petition was heard.

7.4 Authority to Call Meetings

Meetings of the Academic Standards Committee may be called by the Dean, the Chair of the Committee, or any three other members of the Committee. At least forty-eight hours advance notice of such meeting shall be given to each member and to any person with respect to whom or to whose conduct the Committee shall be competent to adjudicate. Any faculty member affected by a student petition shall be provided with a copy of such petition at least forty-eight hours prior to any meeting in which such petition shall be heard. Any person with respect to whose conduct the Committee is required to make a decision, ruling or adjudication may waive the requirement of notice herein provided.

7.5 Quorum
A quorum of the members of the Committee from time to time appointed by the Dean to serve thereon shall consist of a majority thereof. A lesser number shall have power, by majority vote of those present, to adjourn meetings of the Committee consistent with Academic Regulation 7.13, or, with the consent of any person whose conduct or complaint has been referred to the Committee, to proceed to hear and adjudicate the matter before it.

7.6 Majority Decision Required
Except as provided in Rule 7.5 above all final rulings, decisions and adjudications of the Committee shall be by a majority of the members present.

7.7 Power to Amend or Revoke Rules of Procedure
The Committee by a majority vote of all members present may from time to time make, amend and abolish rules of procedure for its hearings, deliberations and actions which are not inconsistent with these Academic Regulations.

7.8 Chair
The Chair of the Committee shall preside at all meetings thereof; when for any reason the Chair is absent from a meeting, the faculty member thereof senior in rank and length of tenure at this law school who is present at such meeting shall preside.

7.9 In Camera Proceedings and Exceptions
(a) Meetings of the Committee shall be in camera except that there may be present at such meetings: (1) witnesses to any matter or event which the Committee is charged to hear; (2) counsel for any person whose conduct is being heard or adjudicated by the Committee; (3) other persons when requested by any person whose conduct is being heard or adjudicated by the Committee.

(b) All deliberations of the Committee after it has concluded its investigation shall be in camera.

7.10 Testimony Safeguards
Testimony before the Committee may be required to be under oath or upon the professional honor of the person giving evidence as the Committee shall determine in each case.

7.11 Right to Record Testimony
The Committee or any person whose conduct or complaint is being heard by the committee may cause such testimony to be recorded by mechanical means or by a qualified stenotypist or shorthand reporter. Such person shall be considered within the exceptions set forth in Rule 7.9(a). The transcript of such testimony shall not be made public except upon order of the Dean or the person whose conduct or complaint was the matter being heard by the Committee, or upon the order of a Court. The cost of such taking of testimony and its transcription when required by the person whose complaint or conduct is being heard by the Committee shall be borne by such person or persons.

7.12 Recusal, Peremptory Challenge, and Challenge for Cause
(a) No member of the Committee directly concerned in the matter under consideration by the Committee shall participate in the deliberation or vote except with the consent of the person whose consideration or complaint is the matter under investigation.

(b) Any person(s) whose conduct or complaint is a matter before the Committee may challenge one member of the Committee peremptorily and any member(s) for cause. The Committee (except for the member(s) challenged for cause) shall vote upon such challenge(s) and shall by majority vote allow or disallow said challenge(s). Only one challenge for cause may be considered at any one time. In the event of disqualification of a member for any reason, the hearing may continue if a quorum remains. If a quorum is lacking, the Chair shall report the matter to the Dean for appointment of a replacement or replacements unless a quorum is waived as set forth in Academic Regulation 7.5.

(c) In the event that the conduct of two or more persons shall be the subject of simultaneous consideration by the Committee, each shall be entitled to one peremptory challenge and any number of challenges for cause.

7.13 Adjournment
The Committee by a majority vote of those members present at any meeting may adjourn its hearings or deliberations from time to time and to the extent practicable shall give notice thereof to all persons concerned with the matter before the Committee. No formal notice other than the fact of such adjournment shall be required with respect to any person who was present in the Committee's meeting when such adjournment was announced.
7.14 Notice of Decision
(a) Results of the Committee's rulings, deliberations or decisions shall be disclosed by its Chair to the Dean for promulgation or other appropriate action and shall not be disclosed to any person other than the Dean until after the Dean has received and acted upon the ruling, decision, or adjudication of the Committee, except that the Chair or a Committee member appointed by the Chair may immediately notify the person or persons involved and shall, within a reasonable period of time, notify the student in writing.

(b) Notwithstanding sub-paragraph (a) of this Academic Regulation, the Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs is authorized to forward copies of the Minutes reflecting Committee decisions to the Petitioner and
   1. Appropriate members of the College of Law and University as necessary to effectuate the decision set forth in those Minutes,
   2. Any faculty member whose decision was challenged by the Petition or who opposed or supported the Petition, and
   3. The Chairperson of the Academic Standards Committee.

8. Waiver of Academic Regulations

8.1 Prohibition
Individual members of the faculty may not waive any of these regulations.

8.2 Exception
Except for regulations with respect to the timeliness of the filing of a petition for relief and regulations specifically permitted by their terms to be waived, the Academic Standards Committee shall not waive any of these regulations.

9. Appeals to the Faculty

9.1 General Provisions
(a) Appeals from decisions of a faculty committee will be considered by the faculty only upon affirmative vote by a two-thirds majority of the faculty voting on whether to hear any such appeal.

(b) Appeals to the Faculty from decisions of a faculty committee, in cases subject to such appeal, shall not involve de novo consideration of the petition in question, but shall be limited to the question of whether there was reasonable basis for the Committee decision being appealed. Such appeals will be considered by the faculty primarily on the basis of a written appeal coupled with the report and recommendation of the Committee.

(c) In matters involving dismissal, readmission, or grade disputes, the student petitioner may be permitted, in the discretion of the faculty as determined by a majority vote of those present and voting, to appear in person and with or without counsel before the full faculty to present his or her case as to either the finding, decision or penalty involved. In all other cases the petitioner may be permitted to appear in person to make a brief oral statement and answer questions. If the student petitioner appears before the faculty, members of the faculty have the right to examine him or her on the subject matter of the appeal.

(d) All such appeals to the faculty shall be instituted by the filing of a written notice of appeal addressed to the faculty. Such written petition shall be filed with the Dean. Such notice must be filed within thirty (30) days of the mailing of the decision of the Committee or such other communication of the decision as is appropriate.

9.2 Grade Disputes
The decision of the full faculty shall be limited to the following:
(a) To affirm the decision of the Academic Standards Committee; or

(b) If the full faculty decides that the recommendation of the Academic Standards Committee was unreasonable, to let the disputed grade stand, or replace it with a "P" or "W" grade.

10. Notice and Amendment of Academic Regulations

10.1 Notice
All students are required and assumed to know the contents of all notices and bulletins posted by the College of Law. All students are required and assumed to know the contents of the current Academic Regulations applicable to them based on the date they enrolled in the College of Law, the current Academic Regulations, and the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Student Handbook.

10.2 Amendment
The foregoing academic regulations are subject to change at any time upon the posting of notice thereof or upon the subsequent revision and reissue of the Academic Regulations and the Handbook. The foregoing are the Academic Regulations of the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law in force and effect at the beginning of the 2012-2013 academic year. These regulations are presumed to apply to all students enrolled in the College of Law, but any student who first enrolled before Summer 2012 and can show that substantial hardship is imposed by an application of these regulations may petition the Academic Standards Committee for relief as provided for in the Academic Regulations in effect at the time they commenced their law studies or anytime thereafter. All students are required and assumed to know the contents of the current Academic Regulations and College of Law Student Handbook.
The Cleveland-Marshall Law School Honor Code

Preface
The Cleveland-Marshall Law School Honor Code is intended to serve three purposes. First, as the Ohio Code of Professional Responsibility requires attorneys to maintain the integrity and competence of the legal profession, the Honor Code similarly requires law students to maintain the integrity and competence of those who seek to become attorneys. Second, the Honor Code establishes rules and guidelines to define what conduct is proper and what is outside the bounds of propriety in the Law School community. All students are obligated to make themselves familiar with the provisions of the Code and to seek help from the appropriate instructor or administrator if they have questions about the Code. Ignorance of the provisions of the Code will not be a defense to a claimed violation. Third, the Honor Code demonstrates the commitment of the faculty and staff of the Law School to assuring high standards of ethical and professional conduct. Claims of violations of the Code will be taken seriously and handled expeditiously. Students who report possible violations will be treated with respect. Students who are charged with violating the Code will be afforded fair procedures for contesting the charges.

The procedures and penalties in this Code apply to cases involving alleged violations of the Honor Code Rules. The Code does not preempt other bodies established by the University or the College of Law from dealing with matters other than those set forth in the Honor Code Rules. Misconduct not subject to this code is subject to disciplinary action by the Dean's office or other bodies within the Law School or by the University. In particular, this Code does not preempt the authority of the Academic Standards Committee to make determinations in cases involving grade disputes and academic standing.

All members of the Law School community are obliged to report cases of suspected violations of the Honor Code to the Honor Council. Members of the Law School community are also obligated upon request of the Honor Code Committee to appear at hearings conducted by the Honor Council.

Upon obtaining information that gives an instructor reasonable grounds for believing that a violation of the Honor Code has occurred, the instructor shall report the matter to the Honor Council. The instructor is not authorized to resolve the matter by imposing a penalty on the student.

To interpret and apply the Honor Code effectively, faculty cooperation is essential. Faculty shall attempt to minimize misunderstanding in all assignments. Examination regulations shall be clearly explained on the examination document. Faculty shall endeavor to avoid ambiguity by stating clearly their policies and procedures concerning grading, daily assignments, class attendance, acceptable and prohibited materials, and acceptable levels of collaboration.

These rules assume that, in the absence of instructions to the contrary, students are invited to meet in groups to discuss class reading assignments and to study for written examinations. Unless instructed otherwise, students are expected to prepare written work individually using published research materials such as cases, law review articles, and other treatises on the law.

Definitions
Presiding Officer – The Chairperson, Vice-Chairperson of the Honor Council or the person that has been designated by the Dean to act in the place of the Chairperson, Vice-Chairperson.
Probable Cause - Whether there is a reasonable basis for proceeding with the investigation.

Rules
These rules describe conduct covered by the Cleveland-Marshall Law School Honor Code. Under many of the rules are specific examples of conduct covered by the rule. The specific examples are not intended to be exhaustive statements of the limits of the rule; they are meant to be descriptive of the purpose and intent of the rule.

I. Examinations
A student shall not cheat or take unfair advantage of other students while taking an examination.
Cheating includes giving assistance to or receiving assistance from another person while taking an examination.
Cheating includes using any documents, materials or electronic devices for assistance while taking an examination other than those that are authorized by the instructor.
Copying or retaining any examination questions except as authorized by the instructor is a violation of this rule. Copying of examination questions placed on library reserve is permitted.
Commencing an examination before the stipulated starting time or working on an examination after the ending time specified by the instructor or proctor is a violation of this rule.

Violating any other reasonable regulation established by the instructor for the taking of the examination is a violation of this rule.

II. Plagiarism

A student is prohibited from plagiarizing. Plagiarism is defined broadly as copying and representing as one's own the works of another in whole or in part regardless of whether such work is copyrighted; using the ideas of another without proper attribution; or any other effort to pass off the works of another, in whole or in part, as the work of the student.

Plagiarism includes using information, ideas, quotations or opinions that are not the student's without identifying the source. Students must use quotations when using the words of another and give credit to the source from which the words are drawn. Students must give credit for the material, ideas, or opinions drawn from others when restated in the students' own words. Paraphrasing, defined as presenting as one's own the words of another with minor modifications, is a violation of this rule.

Submitting a written paper as the sole work of the student when others have shared in preparation of the written work is a violation of this rule. Any written work that is the joint effort of more than one author shall bear the names or identification numbers of all persons who shared in the preparation of the work.

Authorization by an instructor for students to discuss an assignment with others shall not by itself be deemed to be authorization to prepare the written work jointly.

III. Unauthorized Assistance

Knowingly providing unauthorized assistance to a student who is preparing written work, taking an examination, or doing a class assignment is prohibited.

IV. Misuse of Prior Work

A student shall not submit work for credit in a course when that work has been or will be used for credit in another course unless the student has obtained express permission to do so from the instructor.

V. Compromising Anonymous Grading

A student who is submitting work that will be graded anonymously shall not take any action for the purpose of revealing or suggesting the identity of the student as the author of the work.

VI. Misuse of Law Library and Other Law School Books, Materials and Equipment

A student shall not steal, deface, destroy, or otherwise misuse law library and other law school books, materials or equipment.

It is a violation of this rule for a student to hide or otherwise make law school materials unavailable to other students in order to put others at a disadvantage in performing a law school assignment.

It is a violation of this rule for a student to use a law school computer or a research terminal for work undertaken in the course of outside employment or for other non-law school purposes.

VII. Falsifying Documents

A student or applicant for admission or readmission shall not knowingly alter or falsify any documents or materials relating to the Law School including application and financial aid papers, transcripts, bar admission papers, resumes, or job application forms.

VIII. Unauthorized Recording

No student shall install or use any device for listening to, observing, recording, photographing, transmitting, or broadcasting any meetings or conversations among members of the Law School community not open to the public without express consent of all persons involved. This provision does not apply to classes, which remain subject to the individual rules of each instructor.

IX. Interference with the Educational Process

The orderly pursuit of legal knowledge is the primary mission of the Law College. Accordingly,

A. No student shall make any threat of physical harm or engage in intimidating conduct with the intent to prevent or materially to hinder: (1) a student from pursuing an education in the College of Law; (2) a faculty member from teaching, engaging in research, or performing institutional duties; or (3) a staff member from performing institutional duties.

B. No student shall steal, deface, hide, or otherwise sabotage another student's books, notes, outlines, papers, or other work products or material.

C. No student shall intentionally:

(1) give information that is materially false or misleading or contains a material omission to; or

(2) otherwise materially deceive a faculty member, a member of the law school administration, or a law school committee.

Honor Council Procedures

I. Selection of Council Members

The Honor Council shall consist of eight members: four faculty, three students, and one administrator.

The Dean shall appoint the faculty members and designate one member to serve as the chair and another to serve as vice chair. During the initial selection, two faculty members shall be appointed for two-year terms, and two shall be appointed for a one-year term. Thereafter, appointments shall be for two-year terms.

The Dean shall select student members upon recommendation of the Student Bar Association (SBA). The SBA shall recommend at least five upper level students from whom the Dean shall select three to serve. The other students shall be available to serve as interim members should one of the students have a conflict of interest or otherwise be unable to serve in an individual case. Students shall be appointed for one-year terms. If the SBA fails to recommend students to serve on the Council, the Dean is authorized to appoint the student members at the Dean’s discretion.

The administrative member shall be appointed by the Dean.

If a member of the Council has a conflict in any case, either because the member is a witness, party, or complainant, or the member is otherwise unable to render a disinterested decision, the member shall recuse himself or herself and an interim member shall be appointed for that case. The Dean shall appoint a faculty member to replace a faculty member, a member of the administration to replace the administrator and a student, from the list of students previously recommended by the SBA, to replace a student member when necessary. If no student on the list is eligible to serve, the Dean shall select an upper level student to serve on the committee.

II. Prehearing Procedures

Whenever the Dean, or designated administrative officer is informed that a suspected violation of the Honor Code has occurred, that person shall first make a determination as to whether a probable cause investigation is warranted by conducting a preliminary interview with the complainant and/or accused.

Any complaint of a suspected violation which is brought to the attention of the Dean or designated administrative officer after the spring or fall semester following the semester in which the suspected violation is discovered shall be deemed untimely and shall not be investigated. When meeting with the accused, the student shall be fully informed of his or her rights including the right to retain counsel if there is a full investigation.

Any person having direct knowledge or information concerning a suspected violation of the Honor Code shall report the matter to the designated administrative officer within a reasonable time, after the alleged violation has been discovered.

Within fifteen (15) business days of the report of a suspected violation, the person to whom the report is made shall make a preliminary determination on the facts alleged by the reporting party, whether to proceed with a probable cause investigation.

When an alleged violation of the Honor Code is reported to the Council, a file shall be opened and all documents, records and statements regarding the alleged violation shall be maintained in the file. The administrative member of the Council shall be responsible for maintaining the case files. The files shall be confidential. Prior to a decision by the Honor Council access shall be limited to members of the Council during the time that they are investigating or considering a particular case. If an accused is found to have violated the Honor Code and an appeal is taken, the file may be viewed by any person who is authorized to participate in a determination of the appeal. After an alleged violation has been finally determined, access to the file shall be limited to administrators of the Law School who need information in the file for necessary administrative purposes such as determining the status of the student or deciding whether to recommend the student for admission to the bar.

If there is a determination that a probable cause investigation should be conducted, the administrative member of the Council shall notify the student that an investigation is taking place. The notice of a pending prosecution may include a brief statement of the nature of the charge, if known by the investigators.

The Honor Council Chair shall assign a team of investigators to the case no later than 10 business days, after the decision to investigate has been made. The team shall consist of one faculty member and one student member from the list of students previously recommended by the SBA to serve along with the administrator as investigators of the alleged violation. The rest of the members of the Honor Council shall serve as the Hearing Board for that case. When the chair serves as an investigator, the vice chair shall serve as the chair in all subsequent proceedings related to that case.

The investigators shall gather information about the alleged violation, obtain statements when appropriate, determine if there is sufficient information in support of the alleged violation to justify pursuing the matter and present evidence to the Hearing Board if the case proceeds to a hearing.

If a majority of the investigators determines that there is insufficient information in support of an alleged violation to justify pursuing the matter, the investigators shall inform the chair and the case shall be closed. The matter may be reopened if additional or related charges are reported to the Honor Council, or if additional information is presented to the investigators. The student will be so informed.

When the investigating team concludes its probable cause inquiry, the designated administrative officer shall meet with the student and informally present the findings of the probable cause investigation.

A. If the accused admits the charges during this interview:

(1) The administrative officer will consult with the chair of the Honor Council about the range of sanctions, and the proposed sanction(s) in the case.

(2) If the Honor Council and the accused agree the sanction(s) shall be imposed.

(3) If the accused admits the violation(s), but does not agree with the sanction(s) the matter shall proceed to a hearing before the Honor Council, for the sole purpose of determining the appropriate penalty.

B. If the accused denies or does not respond to the charge(s) a hearing will be held by the Honor Council. Upon receipt of notice of a pending prosecution the Chair of the Honor Council shall set a date and time for the hearing on the charges, which shall be no later than 45 days after the decision to prosecute has been made. The accused shall be given at least ten days notice of the hearing.

The presiding officer may conduct a pre-hearing conference with parties to determine issues including the number of witnesses and/or to accept stipulations.

Unless instructed otherwise by the Hearing Board, or presiding officer, investigators shall give a witness list and copies of any statements or exhibits to the accused. This information may be withheld and replaced with a summary if the presiding officer determines that there is reason to believe that the witnesses are likely to be harassed or that the information in the statements is not relevant to the charges. All exculpatory evidence shall be given to the accused.

The prehearing conference and any subsequent hearings in a case shall be recorded on tape. The tape shall be kept with the case file and shall be retained at least until all hearings and appeals of the case have been completed.

III. Hearing Procedures

When a hearing is scheduled, either the accused or the investigators may request the Hearing Board to send a letter asking any person believed to have relevant information about the alleged charge to attend the hearing as a witness. The Hearing Board shall send such letter unless it determines that the witness does not have any relevant information about the matter or that the request is intended for purposes of harassment or delay rather than a fair adjudication of the charges.

Except for statutory privileges, hearings shall not be conducted according to strict rules of courtroom procedure and strict rules of evidence. The Chair of the Hearing Board shall serve as judge and shall rule on any objections to questions or procedures. The Chair shall take care to assure that all parties have a fair chance to present their case, and that all witnesses are treated with respect. The Vice-Chair shall assume the duties of the Chair when the Chair is not present. The hearing may not be set during any period when classes are not in session without the written permission of the accused.

The accused shall have the right to the assistance of any person including a faculty volunteer or retained counsel.

The presiding officer shall have the right to exclude testimony irrelevant to the charges being prosecuted. Where the substance of the proffered testimony is not in dispute, written summaries may be accepted instead of oral testimony.

An investigator may make a brief opening statement setting forth the alleged violations and the essential facts intended to be established at the hearing. The accused may make a brief responsive statement.

Generally, the investigators shall call witnesses, introduce exhibits and present written statements first and the accused shall present any defense in response. The Hearing Board may modify the timing of the presentation of the case or calling of witnesses to promote efficiency so long as the accused shall not suffer an unfair disadvantage. The Hearing Board may call witnesses in addition to those called by the investigators and the accused when additional information is needed.

The Hearing Board may conduct the initial questioning of each witness while permitting an investigator and the accused to ask additional questions. Alternatively, the Hearing Board may permit the parties to conduct the initial questioning, and reserve the right to ask questions after the parties complete the examination of each witness. The Chair may disallow questioning that is repetitive, irrelevant, cumulative, or harassing.

Upon completion of the presentation of evidence, an investigator and then the accused may make a brief closing statement.

Upon conclusion of the hearing, the members of the Hearing Board shall meet in closed session. The Hearing Board shall determine whether a violation has been established by clear and convincing evidence and, if so, what penalty should be assessed. Decisions shall be made by majority vote of the members present. The Hearing Board shall prepare a written statement setting forth the reasons for the decision and shall mail a copy to the accused and to the accused's attorney or advisor within ten days of the decision. The Honor Council may establish additional procedures that are consistent with the procedures set forth in these rules.
If an Honor Code investigation or proceeding is pending and the accused is scheduled to graduate, the student’s degree may be withheld until completion of the investigation and/or hearing. The Honor Council shall make every effort in such cases to complete the matter before graduation.

IV. Penalties

Upon a finding of a violation of this Code by the Hearing Board, the Board shall determine the penalty to be imposed. The Board shall impose only those penalties provided for in this Code. In determining the appropriate penalty, the Board shall consider the nature and seriousness of the offense, the intent or knowledge of the student committing the violation, the truthfulness of the student charged during the course of the disciplinary proceedings and hearings, any prior record of violations by the student and any factors in mitigation presented by or on behalf of the student.

The penalties that may be imposed for violations of the Code are as follows:

A. Permanent expulsion from the College of Law;
B. Suspension from the College of Law for a determinate period of time, not to exceed four years, subject to such terms and conditions as the Board deems appropriate. The Board may require that application for readmission be approved by the Admissions Committee of the College of Law;
C. Partial or total revocation or suspension of scholarships;
D. Restriction of access to Law School;
E. For violations related to course work, penalties may include:
   1. Assignment of a failing grade;
   2. Change of grade in a course;
   3. Withdrawal of Academic Credit or
   4. Receiving no credit for the work product, with or without the opportunity to repeat the assignment;
   5. Assignment of additional course work or reexamination if the instructor involved agrees;
F. Imposition of an order of restitution or community service equivalent to such restitution;
G. Probation for a specified period of time, under terms and conditions determined by the Board, including loss of privileges such as the privilege to run for or serve as an officer or member in any student organization;
H. Written reprimand.

Except for permanent expulsion and reprimand, the above penalties are not mutually exclusive.

At the close of each academic year the Honor Council may post and/or otherwise publish a summary of its actions for that year which provides, in anonymous fashion, a statement as to each charge brought to the Honor Council, the findings as to that charge, and the penalty for each violation.

Absent extraordinary circumstances, the penalty for cheating on any examination shall be no less than suspension from the College of Law for one semester. Absent extraordinary circumstances, a subsequent violation of the Code shall result in permanent expulsion from the College of Law.

When the Hearing Board determines that a student has violated the Honor Code and has imposed a penalty, the Board shall distribute its decision as follows:
A. In all cases the Board shall place a copy of the decision in the Honor Council case file and shall send a copy of the decision to the student and the student's attorney or advisor;
B. In all cases except those in which the penalty is a written reprimand, the Board shall submit a copy of the decision to the Dean of the College of Law and shall submit a copy of the decision to the records officer with instructions to include the decision in the student's file. Where the penalty imposed is permanent expulsion or suspension, the Hearing Board shall also instruct the records officer to include a notation of the action on the student's permanent record card (transcript). Where the penalty is less than permanent expulsion or suspension, the Hearing Board may order that a notation be placed on the student’s permanent record card;
C. The Hearing Board may also transmit a copy of the written statement to other appropriate persons including an instructor if the misconduct involved a course, the librarian if the misconduct involved misuse of library materials, or another student if the misconduct involved violation of the rights of the student;

Where the penalty imposed is a written reprimand the Hearing Board may limit the notice of the decision to that provided in subsection A above, or the Board may notify the persons designated to receive notices pursuant to subsections B and C above.

V. Appeals

The student may appeal a decision of the Honor Council to the faculty as of right. The faculty may take such action as it deems appropriate including affirming the decision of the Honor Council, reversing the decision, or modifying the penalty assessed.

The faculty shall consider an appeal of a decision of the Honor Council in executive session. The appeal shall not be heard de novo, but shall be a review of the decision below based upon information presented to the faculty by the student or by the Honor Council or by information contained in the case file.

The student and the student's advisor or attorney shall have the right to appear at the faculty meeting, to make a brief statement, not to exceed ten minutes in length, in support of the appeal and to answer any questions raised by members of the faculty.

All faculty members, other than the members of the Honor Council, shall have the right to vote on the appeal. Members of the Honor Council may participate in the deliberations of the faculty prior to voting. Decisions of the faculty shall be by majority.

The standard for determining whether to vote to affirm, reverse, or modify a decision of the Honor Council should be whether the decision was clearly erroneous. The vote of the faculty on appeal from a decision of the Honor Council shall be final.

If the faculty reverses or modifies a decision of the Honor Council, any information contained on the student’s permanent record card or the student file shall be corrected.

VI. Time Limits

Time limits stated herein that extend beyond the last day of classes during the Fall semester shall begin again with the first day of classes of the following Spring semester. Time limits stated herein that extend beyond the last day of classes during the Spring shall begin again with the first day of classes of the following Fall semester. Alleged violations that occur during the Summer Session will be referred to the Honor Council in the following Fall semester.

Any time limit within this code may be altered for good cause by the chair or vice-chair of the committee.

VII. Emergency Suspensions

In an extreme, dangerous or unusual circumstance the Dean or Dean’s designate may suspend any law student pending an investigation. An emergency suspension may be granted when there is probable cause that the student has engaged and/or will continue to engage in intentional conduct that will:

A. disrupt or interfere with the operation of a class or the law school;
B. endanger the physical safety of students, faculty or employees of the law school;
C. inflict emotional distress on faculty, students or employees of the law school.

Before such suspension takes place the Dean or Dean’s designate shall make reasonable efforts to interview the accused. At that interview the student will be told that he/she has the right to retain counsel and/or seek advice from his or her representative for the pending hearing.

The suspension may be imposed without a hearing. A written notice of the suspension and the reasons shall be given within 2 business days after the suspension is imposed. An opportunity for an informal hearing shall be given the student as soon as practicable but no later than four business days after the suspension is imposed. At the informal hearing:

A. The Chair or Vice Chair will be the hearing officer.
B. The hearing will be recorded.
C. The student shall have the right of the assistance of any person, including retained counsel.
D. The hearing officer may question witnesses who may appear.

Within 24 hours the hearing officer shall make a determination in writing as to whether the suspension should continue. If the hearing officer finds that a return to school would seriously disrupt or interfere with the operation of the law school or a class, or that reinstatement before a full honor code hearing would threaten the safety or well being of students, faculty or employees, the suspension shall continue until complaint proceedings are concluded.

A student suspended under this section shall have the right to an expedited hearing before the Honor Council to be held no later than 10 days after the written findings of the hearing officer.

During the period of suspension the student shall not enter the University campus, except to meet with officials in pre-arranged conference(s) concerning pending procedures.

Should the suspended student be vindicated and as a result of the suspension, classes missed cannot be made up to the satisfaction of the faculty or the absences would violate law school, AALS or ABA rules concerning attendance, such student shall be entitled to a refund for those classes.

VIII. Finality

Once a final decision has been made by the Honor Council, the matter is concluded and can not be reopened by this committee except for compelling circumstances, a referral from the full faculty, or unless there is new evidence, not reasonably discoverable at the time of the proceedings.
C|M|LAW Policy on Student Complaints Implicating ABA Compliance

A. Reporting a Complaint
Cleveland-Marshall College of Law wishes to hear any student concerns about significant problems that directly implicate the law school’s program of legal education and its compliance with the Accreditation Standards of the American Bar Association (ABA). The ABA Accreditation Standards can be accessed here (http://www.americanbar.org/groups/legal_education/resources/standards.html). Any student having such a concern should submit a complaint in writing to the Ombudsman of the Student Bar Association (SBA). The complaint should state the facts that form the basis for the complaint and how the matter implicates the law school’s program of legal education and its compliance with the ABA standards. The SBA shall submit the complaint to the Associate Dean of Administration no later than 10 business days after its date of submission by the complainant and shall notify the complainant of the submission. If the complainant has not received notification after 10 business days following submission of the complaint, the complainant may submit the complaint directly to the Associate Dean for Administration. Please see the SBA Complaint Policy which appears below or can be accessed here (https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/complaints).

B. Resolving the Complaint
When a written complaint has been submitted to the Associate Dean of Administration in accordance with Section A, the Associate Dean for Administration shall investigate as soon as possible, but in no event later than 20 business days after the submission of the written complaint to the Associate Dean for Administration. The Associate Dean for Administration shall attempt to resolve the complaint, if possible, within the 20 business day period. If resolution is not possible, the Associate Dean for Administration may refer the matter to the appropriate administrator, administrative body, or an administrative official designated by the Dean (the “Dean’s designate”). If referral of the complaint is made as referenced above, the administrator, administrative body or Dean’s designate shall attempt to resolve the complaint as soon as possible, but in no event later than 20 business days after referral by the Associate Dean for Administration. Upon completing the investigation of the complaint, the law school shall communicate its findings and, if appropriate, its intended actions to the complainant and the SBA.

C. Appeal Process
If the complainant is dissatisfied with the outcome or resolution, the complainant has the right to appeal the decision to the Dean of the law school. The complainant should submit his/her appeal in writing in a timely manner to the Dean of the law school, but in no case more than 10 business days after communication to the complainant of the findings of the investigation. The Dean’s decision shall be communicated to the complainant and the SBA within 20 business days of the submission of the appeal and the Dean’s decision shall be final.

D. Maintaining a Written Record of the Complaint
The law school shall maintain a complete written record of each complaint submitted to the Association Dean for Administration which shall contain a statement of the facts and an explanation of how the complaint was investigated and resolved. This record shall be maintained by the law school in a confidential manner for five years from the date of final resolution of the complaint.

E. Protection against Retaliation
The law school prohibits retaliation by a faculty member, administrator, staff employee, or student against any student who makes a complaint under this Policy.
A. Reporting a Complaint
As the representative body for students of Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, the Student Bar Association (SBA) wishes to know of all complaints students may have that directly implicate the law school’s program of legal education and its compliance with the Accreditation Standards of the American Bar Association (ABA). The ABA Accreditation Standards can be accessed here (http://www.americanbar.org/groups/legal_education/resources/standards.html). Any student having such a concern should submit a complaint in writing to the Ombudsman of the Student Bar Association. The complaint should state the facts that form the basis for the complaint and how the matter implicates the law school’s program of legal education and its compliance with the ABA standards.

The Ombudsman shall report the student complaint to the SBA Executive Board at the first meeting of the Executive Board after receipt of the student complaint. Regardless of the timing of the Ombudsman’s report to the Executive Board, the Ombudsman shall submit the complaint to the Associate Dean of Administration no later than 10 business days after its date of submission by the complainant and shall notify the complainant of the submission. If the complainant has not received notification after 10 business days following submission of the complaint, the complainant may submit the complaint directly to the Associate Dean for Administration.

B. Investigation of the Complaint
When a written complaint has been submitted to the Associate Dean of Administration in accordance with Section A, the SBA Senate may investigate as soon as possible, but in no event later than 20 business days after the submission of the written complaint to the Associate Dean for Administration.

C. SBA Advocacy for Complainant
The SBA Senate may advocate on behalf of the complainant. If SBA Senate chooses to advocate on behalf of the student, SBA Senate shall have access necessary for effective advocacy to the Associate Dean for Administration, or the appropriate administrator, administrative body, the Dean, or an administrative official designated by the Dean (the “Dean’s designate”) to whom the matter be referred. SBA Senate may continue its advocacy on behalf of the complainant during any appeal the complainant may make.
CSU Graduation and Bar Exam Application Requirements

Graduation Application
You must submit a graduation application to the Records Office, LB 142, prior to the term you plan to graduate. Applications are available online at http://csunew.csuohio.edu/enrollmentservices/registrar/forms/graduationapplaw.pdf and in the rack outside the Records Office. This application initiates a review of your record to assure that you have completed all requirements. You will not be certified for graduation or a bar examination until this application is on file. You must complete and return the form with the $25 application fee, by check payable to Cleveland State University, to the law school Records Office by:
- December grads – July 1st
- May grads – November 1st
- July grads - January 15th

For additional graduation information, please see https://www.law.csuohio.edu/sites/default/files/currentstudents/GraduationBasicsandReminders.doc.

Registration with the Supreme Court of Ohio
Please see the Supreme Court’s website – http://www.supremecourt.ohio.gov/AttySvcs/admissions/default.asp - for the latest information.

Any law student who intends to seek admission to practice in Ohio must register with the Supreme Court of Ohio. The following is an outline of the registration procedure, which is set out in full in Rule 1 of the Supreme Court Rules for the Government of the Bar, Admission to the Bar, Section 2. The fees listed are those effective on October 1, 2007, and in effect as of the date of this Student Handbook but are subject to change.

1. Applicants must file an Application to Register as a Candidate for Admission to the Practice of Law by November 15 in the applicant's SECOND YEAR of law school. The registration fee is $275.00 ($75.00 filing fee to the Supreme Court of Ohio and $200.00 to the National Conference of Bar Examiners for a character investigation and report).

2. An applicant who files an Application to Register after the filing deadline referred to above must pay an additional NON-REFUNDABLE late fee of $200.00 to the Supreme Court of Ohio and an additional NON-REFUNDABLE late fee of $75.00 to the National Conference of Bar Examiners. Thus, the fees for late applicants are $275.00 to the Supreme Court of Ohio and $275.00 to the Conference of Bar Examiners for a total of $550.00.

3. An applicant may not APPLY TO take a February bar examination unless s/he has filed an Application to Register by the 15th day of August immediately preceding the February exam. An applicant may not APPLY TO take the July Ohio Bar examination unless s/he has filed a complete Application to Register by the 15th day of January immediately preceding the July examination.

   Even if an applicant files the Application to Register by the specified date, s/he will not be permitted to take the bar examination unless the Ohio Supreme Court Bar Admissions Committee has reviewed and approved the application as to character at least three weeks before the examination.

4. The fee for foreign education evaluation is $150.00. Note: This fee is in addition to the $225.00 or $500.00 (late) fee to register.

   The applicant is under a continuing duty to update the information contained in the application to Register as a Candidate for Admission, including the character questionnaire, and to report promptly to the Admissions Office all changes or addition to information in the application.

   Note: All fees and deadlines are subject to change by the Ohio Supreme Court.

   The deadlines imposed by this rule will be strictly enforced by the Supreme Court.

   Note: Students interested in certain clinical programs, including the Housing Law Clinic, or in work positions with certain public sector employers may be required to apply for Legal Internship status from the Ohio Supreme Court, allowing them to practice in the Ohio courts while a law student. The requirements for this status are set out in Rule II of the Supreme Court Rules for the Government of the Bar, Limited Practice of Law by Legal Interns, and interested students should read the rule in its entirety.

   To qualify for this status a student must have completed at least two thirds of the credits required for graduation (i.e., 60 semester credit hours) and must complete a Legal Intern Application and submit it to the Supreme Court with a fee of $25.00.

Application for the Bar Examination
Please see the Supreme Court’s website – http://www.supremecourt.ohio.gov/AttySvcs/admissions/default.asp - for the latest information. In addition, see the Bar Exam Resources on the law school’s website at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/bar.

Students who wish to sit for the Ohio Bar Examination must file an application with the Supreme Court. Following is an outline of the procedure, the complete text of which is found in Rule I of the...
Supreme Court Rules for the Government of the Bar, Admission to the Practice of Law, Section 3. The application to take the bar examination must be submitted with a non-refundable bar examination fee of $330.00, by certified check or money order made payable to the Supreme Court of Ohio; in addition, a certified check or money order in the amount of $24.00 must be submitted to cover the cost of the Multistate Performance Test materials. The fee for a late bar examination application is $430.00, plus $24.00.

1. Applicants for the February bar examination must file the Application for the Bar Examination by the proceeding November 1; those wishing to take the July bar examination must file the Application for the Bar Examination by the proceeding April 1.

2. Cleveland-Marshall College of Law will be required to (l) certify that the Dean or Associate Dean does not have any knowledge of any information that would cause her/him to doubt the applicant's character, fitness, and moral qualifications to practice law, and (2) certify the applicant's knowledge and ability, completion of a "legal ethics" course, completion of at least one hour of instruction on substance abuse, including causes, prevention, detection and treatment alternatives, and graduation from law school. This certification must be filed no less than 30 days before the bar examination. Students must have completed all course work and examinations, with final grades submitted, before the law school can complete the certification.

3. As mentioned above, the law school will be required to certify that the applicant has received one hour of instruction on substance and drug abuse. Students may satisfy this requirement by participation in a one-hour, non-credit seminar session to be presented from time to time at the law school. Participation in the seminar will be noted in the student's permanent academic record so that certification of participation can be made at the time that the student applies to take the Ohio Bar Examination. If a student chooses to satisfy this requirement through a program other than the one presented by the College of Law, the group sponsoring the program must certify completion of the requirement.

The applicant is under a continuing duty to update the information contained in the application to take the bar examination including the supplemental character questionnaire, and to report promptly to the Admissions Office all changes or additions to information in the application that occur prior to the applicant's admission to practice.

The deadlines imposed by this rule will be strictly enforced by the Supreme Court.

Character Investigation by Admissions Committees
Section 11 of Rule I of the Supreme Court Rules for the Government of the Bar, Admission to Practice, provides standards of review for admissions committees to follow in investigating the character and fitness of bar applicants and providing recommendations to the Supreme Court. Specifically, the rule provides: "An applicant may be approved for admission if the applicant's record of conduct justifies the trust of clients, adversaries, courts and others with respect to the professional duties owed to them and demonstrates that the applicant satisfies the essential eligibility requirements for the practice of law as defined by the Board. A record manifesting a significant deficiency in the honesty, trustworthiness, diligence, or reliability of an applicant may constitute a basis for disapproval of the applicant."

Factors to be considered carefully by the admissions committee before making a recommendation about an applicant's character, fitness, and moral qualifications shall include, but are not limited to, the following:

(a) commission or conviction of a crime, subject to Division (D)(5) of this Section;
(b) evidence of an existing and untreated chemical (drug or alcohol) dependency;
(c) commission of an act constituting the unauthorized practice of law;
(d) violation of the honor code of the applicant's law school or any other academic misconduct;
(e) evidence of mental or psychological disorder that in any way affects or, if untreated, could affect the applicant's ability to practice law in a competent and professional manner;
(f) a pattern of disregard of the laws of this state, another state, or the United States;
(g) failure to provide complete and accurate information concerning the applicant's past;
(h) false statements, including omissions;
(i) acts involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation;
(j) abuse of legal process;
(k) neglect of financial responsibilities;
(l) neglect of professional obligations;
(m) violation of an order of a court;
(n) denial of admission to the bar in another jurisdiction on character and fitness grounds; and
(o) disciplinary action by a lawyer disciplinary agency or other professional disciplinary agency of any jurisdiction.

2. An admissions committee recommendation other than an unqualified approval shall be deemed a recommendation that the applicant not be admitted to the practice of law, in which case the written report shall enumerate the specific reasons for such recommendation.

Students are urged to review Rule I of the Supreme Court Rules for the Government of the Bar, Admission to the Practice of Law, in its entirety. See http://www.supremecourt.ohio.gov/AttySvcs/admissions/Bar_Exam/default.asp (scroll down and click on the link to Supreme Court Rules for Government of the Bar of Ohio – Rule I. Admission to the Practice of Law). Questions concerning any portion of the Rule should be addressed to the Clerk of the Supreme Court of Ohio at (614) 466-1541.

Applications to Register with the Supreme Court and Applications for the Bar Examination are available online at http://www.supremecourt.ohio.gov/AttySvcs/admissions/default.asp. Students are responsible for submitting their Applications to Register with the Supreme Court directly to the Supreme Court. Students are also responsible for submitting their Bar Exam Applications directly to the Supreme Court. All forms requiring certification by a law school official should be submitted to Records Officer in LB 142 by the deadlines that are posted on the official law school bulletin boards. Questions concerning applications may also be directed to the Records Officer.

Multistate Professional Responsibility Exam

Applications for the MPRE exam are available online at http://www.ncbex.org/multistate-tests/mpre. An applicant may take the MPRE at any time before or after taking the Ohio bar exam. A scaled score of at least 85 points is required to pass the MPRE (OHIO).

Substance Abuse Education Seminar

This is a requirement for the Ohio Bar Exam and is usually given by Cleveland-Marshall twice a year in November and April. Notices regarding these seminars will be posted by the Records Officer at the law school. You must sign up in advance to attend one of the sessions.

Other State Bar Exams

Check on the requirements and filing deadlines NOW! Some states have pre-registration applications and the fees escalate according to enrollment status. Some jurisdictions (NY) have specific deadlines for ordering or filing applications. Information and, most importantly, contact information is posted on a Bulletin Board outside the law school Records Office and online at http://barbri.com.
CSU Student Rights and Responsibilities

I. Affirmative Action

Cleveland State University is committed to the principle of equal opportunity in employment and education. No person at the university will be denied opportunity for employment or education or be subject to discrimination in any project, program, or activity because of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, age, sexual orientation, handicap or disability, disabled veteran, Vietnam-era veteran or other protected veteran status. See

http://www.csuohio.edu/offices/affirmativeaction

Inquiries concerning implementation of this policy and compliance with relevant statutory requirements, including, inter alia, Title VII and Title IX of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (as amended), Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, may be made to the Affirmative Action Office, Parker Hannifin Administration Center, Room 236, 2300 Euclid Avenue, (216) 687-2223.

Students who wish to seek accommodations under Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and/or the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 must request such accommodations and should contact the Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs for information or to request accommodations. See also the Disability Services section of this Handbook.

Complaints of discrimination may be addressed through the Student Grievance Procedure outlined in the Cleveland State University Student Handbook, copies of which are available through the Cleveland State Department of Student Life, Main Classroom Building, Room 106, (216) 687-2048 and at the College of Law.

II. Sexual Harassment

Sexual harassment is a form of sex discrimination that is legally prohibited by The Ohio Revised Code, Section 4112, and Title VII of The Civil Rights Act of 1964 (as amended). Sexual harassment is contrary to the most fundamental canons of the academic community and violates the special bond of intellectual dependence and trust between students and faculty. It exploits unfairly the power inherent in the relationship between supervisor and subordinate or teacher and student, and it can also occur between persons of the same university status.

It is the policy of Cleveland State University and Cleveland-Marshall College of Law that no member of the law school community shall engage in sexual harassment. Students, faculty and staff members who believe that they have been sexually harassed should seek resolution of the problem through the University’s informal and formal grievance procedures. Students are directed to the Student Grievance Procedure outlined in the Cleveland State University Student Handbook, copies of which will be distributed to law students and are available online at http://www.csuohio.edu/studentlife/conduct/index.html (click on the link to the Code of Student Conduct on the menu to the right of the page) and through the Cleveland State University Department of Student Life, Main Classroom Building, Room 106, (216) 687-2048.

Sexual harassment includes, but is not limited to, unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature when:

(1) submission to such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of instruction, employment, or participation in any University activity;

(2) submission to or rejection of such conduct by an individual is used as a basis for evaluation in making decisions affecting instruction, employment, or other University activity; or

(3) such conduct has the purpose or effect of unreasonably interfering with an individual's academic or work performance or creates an intimidating, hostile or offensive University environment.

III. Veterans Services

Information regarding Veteran benefit application, eligibility, and monthly payment rates is available online at http://www.gibill.va.gov/. Directions for submitting applications for veteran benefits can be found online at http://www.csuohio.edu/enrollmentservices/registrar/va.html

Campus 411certifies the enrollment of veterans to the Veterans’ Administration for those students who have completed the Application for VA Education Benefits. The Veterans’ Administration approves or denies the application. All enrollments are subject to audit by the Veterans’ Administration. Any overpayment in veterans’ benefits as a result of an audit will result in the veteran assuming liability for repayment.

Direct questions regarding veterans’ benefits to Campus 411, Main Classroom Building, Room 116, at 216-687-5411. Additional services for veterans are available through the University’s Veteran Student Success Program. See http://www.csuohio.edu/studentlife/vikingvets/resources.html for more information.

IV. Student Rights Regarding Education Records
In accordance with the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974, commonly called FERPA, students at Cleveland State University have specific rights regarding their education records. These rights include, but are not limited to, the following:

1. The right to inspect and review their education records;
2. The right to request amendment of their education records to ensure that such records are not inaccurate, misleading, or otherwise in violation of the student's privacy or other rights;
3. The right to nondisclosure of personally identifiable information contained in their education records, except when the student gives prior consent or when the Buckley Amendment and its regulations allow disclosure without the student's consent;
4. The right to file with the U.S. Department of Education complaints regarding alleged violations of the FERPA by the University;
5. The right to obtain a copy of the University's Policy on Student Rights and Protections under FERPA. A copy of Cleveland State University's institutional policies on access to student records may be obtained by request from the Office of the University Registrar at Keith Building 1409 or viewed on the web site at http://www.csuohio.edu/enrollmentservices/registrar/privacy/ferpa.html. These policies set forth the procedures for inspection and amendment of educational records.

V. Student Rights Regarding the Release of Directory Information
In accordance with federal law, the University classifies the following information on students as public information and may make it available to the public:

1. Student Name
2. Home and mailing addresses
3. E-mail address
4. Telephone listing
5. Major field of study
6. Participation in officially recognized activities and sports
7. Height and weight of members of athletic teams
8. Dates of attendance
9. Degrees and awards (honors) earned
10. Most recent previous educational institution attended by the student

Students who wish to restrict the release of the foregoing information can do so by submitting the Directory Information Restriction Request Form to Campus411 in MC 116. Your request must be received at least ten (10) business days prior to the first day of instruction of the semester for which the request is to become effective. This restriction will remain in effect until you request in writing that it be removed. However, even if you file such a request, the University will release information as necessary if it is determined that disclosure is permitted by FERPA without prior consent (e.g., response to a subpoena, health or safety emergency, etc.). Please be aware that if a student requests that the foregoing information be withheld, it will be withheld from a variety of sources, including friends, relatives, prospective employers, insurance agencies, honor societies, and the news media. Students should carefully consider the consequences of withholding such information before they do so.

VI. Student Conduct Code
Students at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law of Cleveland State University are subject to the Student Conduct Code of Cleveland State University. Copies of the Student Conduct Code will be distributed to all members of the law school community and is available online at http://www.csuohio.edu/studentlife/StudentCodeOfConduct.pdf and from the Cleveland State University Department of Student Life, Main Classroom Building, Room 106, (216) 687-2048.
Student Organizations

Students who are interested in learning more about joining a student organization or starting a new organization should contact Amy L. Miller, Director of Student Life, at amy.miller@law.csuohio.edu.

American Constitution Society for Law and Policy (ACS)

The American Constitution Society for Law and Policy (ACS) is one of the nation's leading progressive legal organizations. Founded in 2001, ACS is a rapidly growing network of lawyers, law students, scholars, judges, policymakers and other concerned individuals. Our mission is to ensure that fundamental principles of human dignity, individual rights and liberties, genuine equality, and access to justice enjoy their rightful, central place in American law. C|M|LAW’s ACS Student Chapter furthers dialogue on constitutional philosophy and collaborates with the Northeast Ohio Lawyers Chapter, which recently won the ACS Chapter of the Year Award.

Asian Pacific Islander Law Students Association (APILSA)

APILSA was formed to address the concerns of Asian students and to provide support to its members. APILSA welcomes and encourages all students to participate in the many events sponsored by APILSA through the year. Many of these events explore the many issues facing Asian Americans. APILSA also offers a forum for its members to meet Asian American lawyers working in the Cleveland area through its guest speaker series and through its ties with the Asian American Bar Association of Ohio.

Black Law Students Association (BLSA)

BLSA is a national organization with chapters at law schools across the country. The C|M|LAW chapter of BLSA sponsors and co-sponsors various educational and social events throughout the year. Our biggest event is the BLSA Scholarship Banquet. Although BLSA’s primary purpose is to provide assistance in preparation and retention of African-American law students, BLSA membership is open to all students.

Business Law Association

The Business Law Association is dedicated to providing students with an understanding of the intimate relationship between business practices and legal application. For students intending to practice corporate law or join a corporate institution, or for students who possess an entrepreneurial spirit, the Business Law Association is devoted to exposing students to this interdisciplinary relationship. Please join us as we seek to prepare students to be future leaders in the business and legal communities.

Canadian Law Students Association (CLSA)

CLSA represents the interests of prospective and current students at the law school. Canadians applying for admission to the law school are encouraged to contact the CLSA for answers to various questions they are encountering. CLSA seeks to be an information source for Canadian students and to provide assistance with respect to course selection, housing, visa issues, health insurance, employment, and getting licensed to practice law in the United States and various Canadian provinces. Additionally, CLSA serves as a liaison between the law school and Canadian students. During the school year, CLSA hopes to organize information forums and to invited speakers to talk about important aspects of US-Canada law practice.

Catholic Lawyers Guild

The Catholic Lawyers Guild fosters spiritual growth and fellowship within the legal community, encourages observance of high ethical standards, and calls attention to legal and societal issues that affect morality, justice and faith. The Guild is affiliated with the Lawyer's Guild of the Catholic Diocese of Cleveland and sponsors speaker events as well as social and volunteer opportunities.

Christian Legal Society (CLS)

The purpose of the CLS is to provide support to law students as they face the pressures of law school and their future careers. The group meets regularly to discuss issues related to legal practice and Christian faith. The Cleveland-Marshall chapter helps with pro bono services and community outreach and brings speakers to campus.

Cleveland-Marshall Allies

C|M|LAW Allies is a social and political student organization dedicated to serving the lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (LGBT) community at C|M|LAW. Allies sponsors speakers, events, and panel discussions on legal issues that affect the LGBT communities. Allies provides a forum for social and professional interaction by hosting social events for C|M|LAW students. In addition, the Allies mission is to provide a welcoming environment for LGBT law students and faculty, and a voice for issues that are specific to the LGBT community both within the law school and the greater legal community. We welcome all LGBT students and straight allies to join our email list, and to become a part of Allies.

Cleveland-Marshall Republicans

The goal of the CM|LAW Republicans is to provide an environment that supports and encourages its members’ understanding of conservative political, social and economic values and ideals. Active members can expect to contribute by participating in debates, written commentary, and the local and national political community. “Let us ask ourselves; ‘What kind of people do we think we are?’” – Ronald Reagan

Cleveland Metropolitan Bar Association, Young Lawyers Section & Women in Law Section

Immersing yourself in a leading professional organization will make for a smoother transition upon graduation. Join as a law student and utilize the CMBA as you grow in your career. As the local bar association for Greater Cleveland, the CMBA is the one organization that supports and brings together the entire legal profession. Our membership includes business leaders, judges, attorneys, paralegals, law students and other professionals. Through networking, education, volunteer opportunities and more, the CMBA provides the tools you need to prepare for, transition into, and succeed in practice – and law students can join for free. There is also free membership in the Young Lawyers Section and Women in Law Section.

Cleveland State Law Review

The Cleveland State Law Review is a journal with a proud tradition. Four times each year, the Law Review publishes articles of both local and national significance. Students may be invited to join the Law Review as an Associate member at the end of their first year by either class ranking in the top ten percent or by successfully competing in a writing contest during the summer following their first year. Students in the evening division may choose to wait until the summer following their second year to enter the writing competition.

During the first year of Law Review participation, Associate members take part in the editorial work of the Law Review and produce a comprehensive Note on a topic of their choice. A select number of Notes are published in the Law Review the following year. Successful completion of the Note may also satisfy the upper level writing requirement.

Criminal Law Society

The purpose of the Criminal Law Society shall be to facilitate student interaction with practicing criminal defense lawyers, prosecutors, and other facets of the criminal justice system. Last year the Criminal Law Society hosted speakers and organized a police ride-along program. This year the Society plans to again engage in the police ride-along program and host guest speakers or panel discussions; the Society also may be involved in a program aiding those with criminal records obtain jobs.

Delta Theta Phi

The Delta Theta Phi Law Fraternity is an international professional law fraternity with over 100,000 members. Delta Theta Phi bridges the gap between law school and the successful practice of law. Through networking at fraternity functions, mutual benefits are derived for both students and alumni. Many attorneys that utilize law clerks look to the Fraternity first when hiring. In general, the Fraternity provides a framework for its student members to substantially further their range of personal contacts and professional opportunities.

Democratic Law Organization (DLO)

The Democratic Law Organization pursues the ideas of liberty, justice, and freedom for all regardless of race, religion, or sex. We will pursue these ideas through support of the Democratic Party and its ideas, ideals, and candidates.

Dual Degree Law Students Association (DDSA)

DDSA is an organization for those students who are enrolled in a dual degree program (JD/MPA, JD/MBA, JD/MAES, JD/MSES, and JD/MUPDD) or are interested in doing so. The purpose of DDSA is to advocate for the interests of dual degree students and assist with knowledge and information regarding the dual degree programs.

Employment & Labor Law Association (ELLA)

ELLA was formed to meet the strong interest in employment and labor issues at Cleveland-Marshall. Founded in 2004, this group is vital to the ongoing success of the faculty’s Employment and Labor Law Group, which hosts a stimulating lecture series each year. ELLA sponsors employment and labor law themed “movie nights,” when a movie or documentary is viewed followed by a discussion of the issues presented. ELLA annually contributes to a number of charities supporting research into degenerative diseases that give rise to ADA-related claims. ELLA also offers specialized networking opportunities through its participation with the labor and employment section of the Cleveland Metropolitan Bar Association. ELLA is a non-partisan organization and respects both the labor and management perspectives.

Entertainment & Sports Law Association (ESLA)
The Entertainment & Sports Law Association’s goal is to promote interest in sports and entertainment law through guest-speaker lectures, fundraising events, community service, volunteer opportunities, and the institution of sports & entertainment internships and networking opportunities.

Environmental Law Association
The Environmental Law Association at CM|LAW is a center of information and education for students, faculty, alumni and the community. Members are dedicated to being fully informed of the issues surrounding a school in an urban environment and the challenges not only of co-existing with nature but of improving the world in which they live.

The Federalist Society
The Federalist Society for Law and Public Policy Studies is a group of conservatives and libertarians interested in the current state of the legal order. It is founded on the principles that the state exists to preserve freedom, that the separation of governmental powers is central to our Constitution, and that it is emphatically the province and duty of the judiciary to say what the law is, not what it should be. The Society seeks both to promote an awareness of these principles and to further their application through its activities.

The Gavel
The Gavel is the student newspaper of the College of Law. Its purpose is to inform, entertain, and comment on the law school, the legal community, and related topics of interest. Students become staff members after having two articles or equivalent contributions printed in the publications. Staff members participate in editorial elections at the end of the year.

Global Business Law Review
The Global Business Law Review provides an innovative platform for scholars and practitioners to explore novel and transformational issues in the field of international business law. At the end of their first year, students may be invited to join the GBLR by either ranking in the top five percent of their class or by successfully competing in the annual Summer Writing Competition. The GBLR publishes volumes in the Fall and the Spring, and each year, the GBLR sponsors a Symposium that addresses the most significant legal issues in international business.

Health Law Society (HLS)
The Health Law Society seeks to expose students to different legal career options within the health care industry and to provide a community service and social outlet for its membership. HLS is affiliated with the American Health Lawyers’ Association (AHLA). Annually, HLS recognizes a local attorney with the Pioneer of Excellence in Health Care Law Award.

Hispanic Law Students Association (HLSA)
The Hispanic Law Student Association is dedicated to the advancement of Hispanics within the legal profession. The organization provides a support network for all Hispanic law students. It seeks to establish and maintain mutual cooperation with the larger Hispanic legal community.

International Law Students Association (ILSA)
The members of the International Law Society promote programs related to international law and practice. The group also organizes the law school’s participation in the Jessup International Moot Court Competition.

Jewish Law Students Association (JLSA)
JLSA is dedicated to furthering the religious, social, and educational needs of law students who identify with any branch of Judaism. It is affiliated with the Cleveland Hillel Foundation, the Jewish Joint Graduate Student Board and many other organizations. It also is committed to promoting equality, diversity, and religious tolerance for all members of the law school community. It sponsors speakers, social events, and religious functions. JLSA also helps students to become connected to the Cleveland Jewish Community and beyond through alumni events, coordination with the Young Leadership Division of Cleveland Federation and distribution of information from local synagogues and Jewish newspapers. All law students are invited to attend.

Journal of Law and Health
The Journal is a law review devoted to publishing timely and informative articles in the area of health and the law. Students are not eligible to become members of the Journal until they complete their first year. Students ranking in the top twenty percent of their class in terms of grade point averages are automatically extended invitations to join the Journal as Associate Members. Students not scoring in the top twenty percent are invited to join the staff upon successfully competing in the annual Summer Writing Competition.

Students who satisfactorily complete their Associate year attain the rank of Editor, assuming supervisory duties over the Associates and becoming more involved in both the editorial and policy-making functions.

Justinian Forum
The Justinian Forum is a bar association representing 250 attorneys and 14 judges of Italian American descent in Cuyahoga County. The organization here at C|M|LAW was developed in conjunction with the bar association to promote and foster understanding of the roles of Italian Americans in the legal system and to encourage advocacy of Italian Americans in matters involving social justice issues. As an auxiliary chapter to the bar association we are invited to attend and be involved in all functions of the bar association. The auxiliary chapter works to elevate and maintain the standards of integrity and honor among the student body of the law school, while promoting legal, cultural and social activities.

Moot Court
The Cleveland-Marshall Moot Court program is an organization designed to provide students the opportunity to develop, refine, and showcase brief-writing and appellate advocacy skills. All students are eligible to compete for a position on the team at the end of their first year by submitting their final Legal Writing course paper. Submissions are reviewed anonymously by the Moot Court Board of Governors, and selected students then participate in an intramural competition. Second year students also have an opportunity to compete in an intramural competition to join the team after completion of the Advanced Brief Writing course. Once a member of the team, students compete in interscholastic competitions against other teams from across the nation. The award-winning C|M|LAW Moot Court team provides students the unique opportunity to obtain and develop real-world advocacy skills, both written and oral, while still in law school. Team members benefit from the advice and guidance of experienced alumni, faculty, and practitioners. For additional information, visit: www.cmlawmootcourt.org.

Ohio State Bar Association Law School Student Association Membership
OSBA law school student membership is open to any C|M|LAW student. Law students may join the OSBA for free. Membership benefits for students include the weekly OSBA Report online, Ohio Lawyer and Law Student News publications; access to Casemaker—OSBA's online legal research tool; an online legal career center; and much more. Law students may choose to join a section that focuses on a specific area of the law. Sections require a payment of only $9 for each section, which covers the cost the whole time you are in school. Committee membership is free.

Student Bar Association (SBA)
The SBA is the student governing body of the college. Four officers are elected each spring and each class of students has its own senators. First year elections for both day and evening students will be held soon after classes start. The SBA’s primary responsibilities are to be the voice of the student body, oversee student organizations, and maintain programs and opportunities.

Student Intellectual Property Law Association (SIPLA)
The Student Intellectual Property Law Association (SIPLA) is an organization dedicated to representing the interests of students wishing to practice Intellectual Property law. Intellectual Property is the product of the mind manifested as ideas, inventions, work of art, collection of words, and trade secrets. One of the many benefits of practicing intellectual property law is its ubiquitous nature. It encompasses the obvious fields such as the hard sciences but also fine arts, literature, and even baseball stats! Nearly every field in which you may have an interest probably has a need for intellectual property protection. Due to its wide-spread demand, Intellectual Property law is one of the fastest growing, highest paid segments of law. Even if you are just thinking about intellectual property as possible field, join us for our meetings. You will hear from the area's leading practitioners about the protection of products from Kleenex to the cure for cancer.

Student Public Interest Law Organization (SPILO)
SPILO is an organization of students, faculty, and staff that recognizes the inequities that exist in our legal system and is dedicated to developing a more just society. SPILO serves as a resource center for students seeking employment or volunteer opportunities that focus on public service. The groups sponsors summer interns in public interest law, guest speakers, fundraisers, workshops, and social functions.

Women Law Students Association (WLSA)
The Women Law Students Association provides a forum for discussion and debate to promote an awareness of women’s and societal issues. WLSA sponsors an annual Silent Auction in the fall. It is a member of the National Association of Women Law Students and is open to all students.
Disability Services

The law school invites voluntary self-identification by students with disabilities for purposes of verifying the disability and identifying the reasonable accommodations that can be provided. Students seeking to establish a disability and arrange for reasonable appropriate accommodations should contact Assistant Dean Jean Lifter, LB 143, 216-687-4557, or via email at jean.lifter@law.csuohio.edu, or the University’s Office of Disability Services, described below. Once the student has established a disability as outlined below, Dean Lifter will coordinate the provision of accommodations at the law school. Normally, a student requesting accommodations must submit the required documentation at least four weeks prior to the date for which the accommodations are requested.

The University’s Office of Disability Services is located in MC 147 and can be reached at 216-687-2015; Assistant Director Linda Casalina can be reached via email at l.casalina@csuohio.edu; Counseling Specialist Jerry Gillinov can be reached via email at g.gillinov@csuohio.edu. In addition to evaluating documentation of disabilities and recommending accommodations, the Office of Disability Services provides a referral service for students who may benefit from the services of other agencies. It assists students with parking, access to buildings, alternates to regular text (such as audio or Braille), and provides guided orientation to the campus, as necessary. Accommodations are individualized and are arranged on a case-by-case basis.

The Cleveland State University Handbook for Students with Disabilities, available online at http://www.csuohio.edu/offices/disability/students/handbook/index.html/, outlines the procedure for documenting a disability and requesting accommodations. Additional information on Disability Services is available at http://www.csuohio.edu/offices/disability/.

BUSINESS - The Monte Ahuja College of Business Administration is located on 18th Street between Euclid and Chester Avenues, directly across from the law school. The parking facility on 17th Street can be reached from the business school via a walkway over 18th Street from the law school.

CAMPUS SAFETY – The new home of the Campus Police, the Campus Safety Building is located at E. 19th and Chester.

CHESTER BUILDING - The Chester Building recently completed renovation that in part will bring the building up to ADA standards. The Chester Building houses several classrooms. The building is accessible via powered doors on the East and South sides with handicap parking on Chester site at 2300 Chester Ave. Chester is part of the Internal Circulation Network with connections to Stilwell and the Plaza. There is currently limited elevator and restroom access.

CHESTER BUILDING ANNEX – Located at 2300 Chester Avenue.

EUCLID COMMONS – Euclid Commons is the newest residence community on campus, opening Fall Semester 2010. Located on Euclid Avenue, just east of the Parker Hannifin Administration Center, Euclid Commons houses the new undergraduate admissions center and Parking Services.

FENN TOWER - The original Fenn College is also an historic structure that has recently been renovated for student housing. The main entry to the building is located at 1983 E.24th St. via a power door.

HEALTH SCIENCES – Located between Julka Hall and the Physical Education building, Health Sciences is home to undergraduate programs in Health Sciences and Speech & Hearing and graduate programs in Health Sciences, Occupational and Physical Therapy, and Speech Pathology and Audiology.

JULKA HALL – The building, located at 2485 Euclid Avenue, on the eastern edge of the campus, was completed in Spring 2010. It houses the College of Education and Human Services and the School of Nursing.

KEITH BUILDING – The Keith Building is located at 1621 Euclid Avenue. The University leases office space on several floors of the building.

LAW – Bert L. Wolstein Hall, which houses Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, is located on the northeast corner of E. 18 and Euclid. The Law school can be accessed off E.18 via a powered door. The building is part of the internal circulation net with connectors to the Law library and eastern campus as well as the Business building, the Urban building, and the E.17 Parking Garage. Accessible restrooms are available on the ground and first floors, but wheelchair users may need some assistance.

MAIN CLASSROOM - The Main Classroom building is CSU’s largest instructional complex. It is located on the Northwest corner of Euclid Ave. and E. 22 St. The building has easy access from its underground parking garage via elevators, from the Plaza, from the Internal Circulation Network via a bridge to Science Research. Accessible restrooms are located on the second and fourth floors. Many student services including Campus411, VikingCard, International Services and Programs, and the Cashier are located on the first floor.

MATHER MANSION - The Mansion is an historic building whose character and construction has been carefully maintained. The building is nevertheless accessible via a ramped rear entry and a powered door. Elevator access to all floors is available, though some disabled people might need assistance. Accessible restrooms are located in the basement. Handicap parking is available in lot B entered off of Euclid Ave. at 2605 Euclid.

MUSIC & COMMUNICATIONS - Music and Communications Building is located on the northwest corner of E. 21 and Euclid and houses the Music department, its rehearsal rooms, two performance auditoriums, the Communications department, the media labs, several classrooms, and departmental faculty offices. Music is on the internal circulation net with connectors to the Student Center and the Law building and law library. Handicap parking is available immediately south of the ground floor entrance or at the plaza level off the University Parking Facility which is accessed off E. 21 St. Accessible restrooms serve all floors. Wheelchair users can be accommodated in Waetjen Auditorium with assistance. Automated entry doors are at the ground floor, plaza, and on the connectors.

PARKER HANNIFIN ADMINISTRATION CENTER – The building, located at 2300 Euclid Avenue, opposite the Science Building, houses University administrative offices.

PARKER HANNIFIN HALL - The building, located at 2258 Euclid Avenue, next to the Parker Hannifin Administration Center, houses the College of Graduate Studies.

RECREATION CENTER – The Recreation Center is located at 2420 Chester Avenue. Accessible to the rest of campus through the Innerlink, the building is open from 5:45 a.m. – 11 p.m. during the school year and offers a variety of classes and open recreation times for cardio, weights, and aquatics.

RHODES TOWER - Rhodes Tower is the tallest structure on campus located at 1860 E. 22 St. near the Southwest corner of E. 22 and Chester Ave. Easy access is available through the underground garage, the University Parking facility on E. 21 St., and the Plaza via powered doors. Rhodes houses the University Library, the Rhodes Tower Classrooms, and a variety of academic and administrative offices. Accessible restrooms are available on the first floor of the library, the second and third floors of the classroom wing, and every other floor of the office tower. Access to the classroom wing is limited and mobility impaired or wheelchair users will need to procure a pass key from DSC to access the elevators.

RHODES WEST – Rhodes West houses numerous University classrooms.

SCIENCE - The Science Building is on the northwest corner of E.24th and Euclid. It houses the offices for the Physics and Biology Departments as well as many labs and seminar rooms. The Science building also contains an accessible computer lab on the first floor. Access to the building is via a freight elevator from the underground parking garage lot F, connections with the Stilwell and Science Research Buildings and the Internal Circulation Network. Restrooms are partially accessible and available on all floors. Some wheelchair users might need assistance with opening the doors.

SCIENCE RESEARCH - Centrally located on the Internal Circulation Network the Science Research Building has easy access from the street at 2351 Euclid Ave. via a power door. There is elevator access to upper floors and wheelchair friendly restrooms in the lobby. Geology and Chemistry have offices here. Science Research is connected to the Science Building and the Main Classroom Building via enclosed walkways.

STILWELL HALL - A renovation of Stilwell has made the home of the College of Engineering completely accessible. One automated entry is located at 1960 E.24th St; a second is located off of the parking lot C at 2300 Chester Ave. The building also has two connections with the wheelchair accessible Internal Circulation Network, one to the Chester Building and one to the Science Building. Accessible restrooms are located on each floor.

STUDENT CENTER – The building, located at 2121 Euclid Avenue, in the heart of the Cleveland State University campus. It houses dining locations as well as space for student groups and activities.

URBAN - The Urban building is located on the northwest corner of E. 17th and Euclid. It houses the Maxine Goodman Levin College of Urban Affairs, several research centers, and the Urban Studies department, along with their respective offices and classrooms.

WOLSTEIN CENTER – Located at 2000 Prospect Avenue, the Wolstein Center is the venue for Cleveland State basketball and numerous outside events throughout the year.

Note: Mediation and Trial Advocacy will be graded on a P/F basis; there will be no option to enroll on a graded basis but the courses will not count as one of the two courses that may be elected on a P/C-/D+/D/F basis.

Note: Mediation and Trial Advocacy will be graded on a P/F basis; there will be no option to enroll on a graded basis but the courses will not count as one of the two courses that may be elected on a P/C-/D+/D/F basis.

Note: you can register for Trial Ad or Med Mal under either Summer 2012 or Fall 2012.

If you register under Summer 2012, the credit hours will count toward the minimum credit hours needed for financial aid; if you register under Fall 2012, the credit hours will be included with your other Fall courses and may be included within the tuition band, depending on the other credits you are taking for the term.

A waiting list will be maintained in the Student Resources Area of the Student Services Center; students who place their names on the list by 5 p.m., Friday, April 20, will be given priority based on hours earned through Fall 2011.

Names added to the waiting list after that date will be given priority based on the date they were added to the list.

MEMORANDUM

To: CM Faculty

From: Ad Hoc Committee to Review the Curriculum and Academic Programs - Susan Becker, Carolyn Broering-Jacobs, Heidi Gorovitz Robertson, Ken Kowalski, Steve Lazarus, and Kris Niedringhaus

Date: April 21, 2011

Re: Proposed Curricular Changes for Faculty Discussion and Vote at April 28th Faculty Meeting (2 p.m., LB 60)

Introduction

This memo proposes significant changes to the CM curriculum. The proposals are situated in four categories to facilitate orderly consideration and discussion: (1) the first-year curriculum; (2) upper-level requirements; (3) ethics and professionalism; and (4) implementation and monitoring of changes. Every proposed change is part of an integrated approach to enhancing our curriculum to make sure that every CM graduate is well equipped to meet the challenges that inevitably accompany the transition from studying law to practicing it.

These proposals are informed by a variety of sources. The committee again urges faculty members to visit the resource webpage we created for your use at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/facultystaff/curricularmaterials. This site contains links to many of the articles and other sources we considered. It also makes accessible materials the committee generated such as summaries of comments received from faculty during our individual interviews and our brown bag discussions.

Impetus for Curricular Change

This faculty unanimously adopted Strategic Goals and Tactics for the law school in April 2007. One of our primary goals is that “the Law School will be recognized for the capacity of its graduates to counsel and represent their clients effectively, and for the ability of its students, graduates, and faculty to think critically about our society’s strengths and weaknesses and to have the theoretical, doctrinal, and practical legal expertise to promote social justice, individual freedom, and economic growth.” The faculty pledged in Goal # 5 of that strategic plan to “strengthen our curriculum and expand our teaching strategies to maximize the educational experience for our students in order to prepare them to practice law in the 21st century.”

In the fall of 2009, then Dean Geoffrey Mearns animated the faculty’s commitment by appointing a Special Committee to Review the Curriculum and Academic Programs (“Curriculum Review Committee”). In recognition of the breadth of the assignment, the committee was given two academic years to conduct “a comprehensive evaluation of our entire law school curriculum and academic program.” The committee’s task was to propose curricular changes that effectuate “appropriate, necessary, and progressive changes to our curriculum and our academic program in order to prepare our graduates to practice law and pursue other professional opportunities in the 21st century.” Then-Dean and now Provost Mearns offered no specific suggestions at the time the committee was formed or subsequently as to the type of changes the committee should consider.

This curriculum review also fulfills our ABA Accreditation Standard 302 duty to “engage in periodic review of its curriculum to ensure that it prepares the school’s graduates to participate effectively and responsibly in the legal profession.” CM will conduct its Accreditation Self-Study during the coming academic year (2011-2012) and undergo its comprehensive ABA review in 2012-2013. The law school will cite the efforts of the Curriculum Review Committee and the faculty’s response as evidence of its compliance with this ABA standard.

Curriculum Review Process

Faculty Dialogues

Every member of a law school faculty possesses both the right and the responsibility to participate in decisions regarding the curriculum. The committee viewed its role in this faculty governance process to include (1) educating the faculty on current curricular issues at CM and in the academy, (2) engaging the faculty in discussions of possible models of curricular change (for example, semesterization of first-year classes), (3) soliciting faculty feedback on specific possibilities for altering the CM curriculum, and (4) presenting a set of well-considered curricular proposals for faculty vote. Committee members completed each of these tasks.

Specifically, the committee held a series of meetings with faculty intended to provide background information related to the myriad issues involved in contemporary curriculum planning and to obtain faculty input. During the initial brownbag on October 13, 2009, for example, we solicited faculty opinions on the skills and values our graduates should possess. At the January 2010 faculty meeting the committee provided a PowerPoint presentation about the curricular reforms occurring at other law schools and related information.

In subsequent brown bags we provided more information to faculty and facilitated faculty dialogue about our first year curriculum and the possibility of “semesterizing” first-year courses (on October 27, 2010), and about a wide range of possible changes to our upper-level curricular requirements (on February 16 and 24, 2011). A meeting held during a regular faculty meeting time slot (4 p.m. on March 10, 2011) allowed committee members and faculty to discuss possible changes to the curriculum that the committee provided for discussion purposes only. Committee members provided faculty with a comprehensive memo prior to the March 10th meeting.

1 The 2010 Update to our Strategic Goals and Tactics cites the appointment and ongoing work of the Curriculum Review Committee as proof of progress toward the realization of the Vision and Goals we articulated in our 2007 plan.
2 ABA Accreditation Standard 302, Interpretation 301-8.
3 The committee regularly updated the faculty on its progress by making a report at virtually every faculty meeting since the committee’s initial appointment.
recapping the work done to date and containing extensive textual discussion for each of the seventeen curricular matters addressed in the memo.

Individual Faculty Interviews

In the fall of 2010 we solicited faculty members' comments and concerns about curriculum review by conducting individual interviews with all but two members of the faculty. In April 2011 committee members again met with faculty who teach the two-semester substantive courses offered in our current first-year curriculum (Torts, Property, Contracts and Civil Procedure) and discussed issues related to the semesterization of these courses.

Curriculum Mapping Survey

The committee created a curriculum mapping survey to identify the range and degree of competencies covered in required courses. We provided a memo about curriculum mapping to the faculty on August 31, 2010 and discussed the concept in detail at the September 2010 faculty meeting. We distributed the survey to faculty on October 7th (again with an explanatory memo). The survey was completed by 84% percent of full-time and adjunct faculty who teach a required course and any course that otherwise fulfills a graduation requirement, such as the administrative law or third semester of legal writing requirements.

The survey asked respondents to consider whether the required course(s) that they teach address certain enumerated and defined competencies including case law analysis, fact gathering, legal research, document drafting and other tasks which lawyers routinely perform. In particular, it asked them to consider the extent to which their course(s) introduced a competency (provided no generalized or individualized feedback), explored that competency (provided minimal general or individualized feedback, e.g. via one assignment, quiz, or other related exercise), refined that competency (provided individualized feedback, such as two or three assignments, quiz, or other related exercises), or encouraged mastery of the competency (where, for example, the competency is a primary objective of the course and students).

Survey results showed that although many of our students are being introduced or exposed to the enumerated competencies, we are not, in our required courses, providing opportunity for students to refine or master them. For example, although our required courses provide a high level (80% refined or mastery) of experience in case analysis, they provide a very low level of experience (7% refined or mastery) in competencies such as client interaction (7%), negotiation (9%), and document drafting (21%).

4 The two faculty members who were not interviewed told us that their schedules would not accommodate such an interview.

5 The list of competencies was compiled from our interviews and discussions with CM faculty, alumni, judges and practitioners, and our review of the literature addressing the skills law school graduates need to successfully transition to competent and ethical practitioners.
Discussions with Alumni and Practitioners

The committee identified potential intersections of modern law practice and curricular reform by working closely with a group of local practitioners that we called the Curriculum Review Advisory Group ("CRAG"). This diverse group included approximately 30 lawyers from large firms, small firms, solo practices, government, and the judiciary. In a series of small focus-group sessions and in discussions with all CRAG attorneys, we explored the changing world of law practice, the strengths and weaknesses of recent law school graduates, and the competencies and values students should be developing during the law school phase of their legal education. Committee members also met with some CRAG members individually.

The committee gleaned additional insights on the changing world of law practice from members of the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Visiting Committee, the National Advisory Council, the C|M|LAW Alumni Association, and a group of prominent practitioners in Columbus. These interactions helped us understand the strengths and weaknesses of recent law school graduates and offered insights on the respective roles of law schools and law firms (and other employers of our graduates) in helping students transition from studying law to practicing it.

Consultation with Students

We held a town hall meeting to obtain ideas and opinions about our curriculum and also reviewed students’ comments and responses relating to many aspects of their law school experiences captured by the Law School Survey of Student Engagement (LSSSE).

The LSSSE collects information about current law students’ perceptions regarding their law school experience. CM last participated in the survey in 2007. These data revealed that 63.5% of our third-year students reported participating in a clinic or externship, and 51.4% of third year students had engaged in volunteer or pro bono work.

The LSSSE also provides student assessment of CM’s contribution to their development in certain areas that overlap with the competencies and values that the committee identified as critical to contemporary law practice. The chart below identifies the percentage of third-year students who indicated that their experience at CM contributed “very much” or “quite a bit” to their knowledge, skills, and personal development in the areas identified. The chart also compares CM students’ responses to students at peer schools (Akron, Georgia State, Northern Kentucky, Ohio State, and Wayne State).

6 CRAG was assembled with the help of then-Dean (and current Provost) Geoffrey Mearns, then-Associate Dean (and now Interim Dean) Phyllis Crocker, Associate Dean Heidi Gorovitz Robertson, and input from committee members.

7 For example, two committee members met with attorney Frank Osborne of Tucker Ellis. Mr. Osborne taught for many years as an adjunct at CM and is the director of his law firm’s extensive associate training program.

8 Our students will participate in the LSSSE again in 2011-2012 as part of our self-study process which precedes our accreditation review scheduled for 2012-2013.

Literature Review

The Curriculum Review Committee investigated curricular initiatives at a number of other law schools. We reviewed and discussed the theories and findings presented in the vast literature that drives much of the current law school curricular reform such as the ABA REPORT OF THE TASK FORCE ON LAW SCHOOLS AND THE PROFESSION: NARROWING THE GAP (1992) (the “MACCRATE REPORT”), the Clinical Legal Education Association’s BEST PRACTICES FOR LEGAL EDUCATION (2007), and the Carnegie Foundation’s EDUCATING LAWYERS: PREPARATION FOR THE PROFESSION OF LAW (2007). The committee has continued reading and discussing additional materials throughout this academic year.

Conferences on Curriculum

Committee members attended conferences that addressed the challenges and opportunities in structuring contemporary law school curriculum including YES We CANNege at John Marshall Law School (June 2009), Legal Education at the Crossroads: A Conference on Assessment in Denver (September 2009), Assessment and Student Outcomes Conference - Implications of the Proposed ABA Standard on Student Learning Outcomes in Charlotte (May 2010), Answering the Call for Reform: Using Outcomes Assessment, Critical Theory and Strategic Thinking to Implement Change in in Baltimore (May 2010), and the Student to Lawyer seminar sponsored by the Supreme Court of Ohio’s Commission on Professionalism (December 2010).

Consideration of ABA Standards and Potential Revisions

Committee members reviewed Chapter 3 of the ABA’s law school accreditation standards. This chapter provides the rules and official interpretations for every school’s “Program of Legal Education.” Chapter 3 establishes criteria for program objectives (Standard 301), curriculum (Standard 302), academic standards and achievement (Standard 303), externships and other types of “study outside the classroom” (Standard 305), and related matters.
The ABA section on Legal Education and Admissions to the Bar is currently conducting a comprehensive review of all ABA Standards. The committee has been tracking the changes to Chapter 3 proposed by the section’s Student Learning Outcomes Subcommittee. As currently drafted, new Standard 302 requires every law school to “identify, define, and disseminate each of the learning outcomes it seeks for its graduating students and for its program of legal education.” These outcomes assessments must include “competency as an entry-level practitioner” in specific areas including “knowledge and understanding of substantive law, legal theory and procedure” and “a depth and breadth of other professional skills sufficient for effective, responsible, self-reflective and ethical participation in the legal profession.” It is not yet clear whether these changes will be adopted.

Clarifying our Goals and Objectives

The committee’s ultimate goal is to provide the faculty with proposals for curricular revisions that, as promised in our strategic plan, will “maximize the educational experience for our students in order to prepare them to practice law in the 21st century.” It is impossible to achieve this ambitious goal without articulating more concrete objectives. As we gathered information and feedback from the faculty and the other resources identified above, the following list of objectives came into focus:

1. Continue to ensure that students obtain a strong foundation in substantive and procedural law so they learn to think like lawyers.9
2. Reduce the burden imposed on students by a six-course FT schedule and four-course PT schedule in the second semester of their first year of law school.10
3. Introduce professionalism earlier in our students’ law school careers and continue to emphasize professionalism throughout law school.
4. Broaden our students’ exposure to legislative and regulatory law in recognition of the powerful positions these sources of law occupy in the contemporary legal landscape.
5. Provide students with expanded opportunities to engage in transactional lawyering. Many of our students will not become litigators and even those who do would benefit from more exposure to transactional experiences.
6. Increase opportunities for students to develop the lawyering skills necessary to embark successfully on the practice of law.
7. Enhance students’ exposure to and understanding of the business of practicing law (client development, law practice management, work-life balance, and similar competencies).11

9 The Carnegie Report and other studies of law school curriculum are generally very positive about this aspect of current law school education. As Carnegie concludes: “Within months of their arrival in law school, students demonstrate new capacities for understanding legal process, for seeing both sides of legal arguments, for sifting through facts and precedents in search of the more plausible account, for using precise language, and for understanding the applications and conflicts of legal rules. Despite a wide variety of social backgrounds and undergraduate experiences, they were learning, in the parlance of legal education, to ‘think like lawyers.’” William M. Sullivan, et al., Educating Lawyers: Preparation for the Profession of Law 186 (2007).
10 In our current system Torts, Property and Contracts classes are shortened from 3 credit hours in the fall to 2 credit hours in the spring semester. Many faculty members teaching those courses report that they still cover about the same amount of material in the 2-credit semester that they covered when they had 3 credits. Criminal Law is also added in the spring, injecting a sixth class into the students’ schedules.
11 Strategies for meeting this goal are not fully addressed by the proposals in this memo and clearly deserve further consideration. A number of programs designed to help students contemplate issues such as work-life balance and Confronting the Challenges of Curricular Reform

There is no doubt that curricular reform is one of the most challenging tasks that any faculty tackles. Curriculum review requires us to carefully reexamine what we do and why we do it. A curricular review process also animates the specter that faculty will have to significantly alter course content and/or teaching methodology. The committee’s task in leading the faculty through the process was made all the more complicated by the law school’s contemporaneous search for a new dean and pending budget cuts. But for the reasons set forth below, the committee believes that this is the appropriate time to start fulfilling the commitment we made in our 2007 strategic plan to make our curriculum more relevant to contemporary law practice.

First, we strive not only to teach doctrine and skills at CM but also to inspire our students to become exceptional lawyers who will “learn law” and “live justice” throughout their careers. Curriculum review provides an opportunity to build on our existing foundation of committed and strong teaching and to emerge as an even stronger educational institution.

Second, legal education is changing. Law schools as drastically diverse as Harvard and Detroit-Mercy, and law schools at every tier of the U.S. News & World Report rankings, have made or are contemplating significant curricular changes. These reforms center on ensuring that students develop basic lawyering skills and a heightened understanding of and commitment to ethics and professionalism.

Third, our prospective students, their potential employers and our accrediting agency are all expecting us to produce graduates who have a better integration of doctrinal knowledge and practical application of that knowledge. Our ability to attract high caliber law students and to help them find employment upon graduation is seriously compromised by failure to act.

Fourth, enriching our skills curriculum will not relegate CM or any other law school to “trade school” status. CM is, and will remain, a professional school with high academic standards. But like schools charged with producing doctors, engineers, and architects, the educational experience we provide must extend beyond teaching our students to “think like” members of the profession they will join upon receiving their degrees. They must possess basic skills that empower them to apply that knowledge to further their clients’ objectives.

Fifth, teaching of doctrine is enriched by encouraging faculty to integrate skills components into doctrinal courses, and skill-intensive courses reinforce students’ comprehension of the substantive and/or procedural law at issue. The teaching of doctrine and skills has a positive synergetic effect in educating future lawyers. Individually and institutionally, we should resist efforts to characterize the relationship between doctrine and skills as inherently antagonistic.

Other practice-related matters are sponsored each year by Career Planning Director Jennifer Blaga, Bar Program Director Mary Jane McGinty, Manager of Student Services Valissa Turner, the CM Alumni Association and others, and a course in Law Practice Management is taught by adjunct faculty. The Office of Career Planning has also recently launched the CM Law Solo/Small Firm Task Force. The Task Force’s goals for 2011-12 include generating interest and conversations among students who are interested in this career path, creating online networking resources for students to connect with solo and small firm practitioners, and developing a speakers series to educate students on the facets of solo/small firm practice.
Finally, no one expects recent law school graduates to be fully competent practitioners, and it would be foolhardy to articulate that as a goal. But while enhanced skills training cannot fully bridge the gap between law school and practice, it can give our graduates a studier platform from which to make that leap.

Current CM Curriculum

CM students must complete 90 credit hours of instruction for graduation. Required courses account for between 49 and 57 credit hours.\(^{12}\) The total number of “required” hours are a bit deceiving, however, because students choose from a wide range of courses to satisfy their third semester legal writing, perspective elective, administrative law, skills component, and upper-level writing requirements. In other words, there is a significant “elective” aspect in our upper-level “required” curriculum.

Summary of Proposed Curricular Changes

As previously noted, the proposed changes can generally be divided into four categories, but every proposal plays an important role in enhancing our curriculum. Specific motions to effectuate these changes are provided for your consideration in the final section of this memo.

First-Year Changes (pp. 11 – 18)
1. Semesterize first year substantive courses
   a. Full semesterization
   b. Proposed fully "semesterized" first year schedule
   c. Partial semesterization alternative
   d. Proposed partially semesterized first year schedule
2. Add a Legislation and Regulation ("Leg/Reg") course in the first year

Upper-Level Changes (pp. 18 – 24)
1. Eliminate Administrative Law component requirement
2. Enhance our existing skills requirement
   a. Redefine our existing skills requirement as an experiential skills requirement
   b. Revoke the policy that allows students to automatically satisfy skills requirement by taking a required 3rd semester LW class
3. Expand experiential skills course offerings
4. Increase support for faculty who desire to incorporate skills components to their classes

Ethics and Professionalism (pp. 24 – 26)
1. Offer Legal Profession (ethics) only as 3 credit hour course
2. Add a Professionalism Problem of the Semester to infuse professionalism into the curriculum
3. Encourage universal student participation in the Pro Bono Program

Implementation and Monitoring of Curricular Changes (pp. 26 – 27)
1. Conduct future evaluations of the effectiveness of the curricular changes to determine whether further adjustments are necessary
2. Implementation timetable

Details of and Rationale for Each Proposal

First-year Curricular Changes

1. Semesterize first-year substantive courses

After considering all of the information gathered from our faculty and myriad other resources throughout our two-year review process, the committee concluded that our current first-year curriculum provides students with both too much and too little.

In the “too much” category, the schedule is intensively litigation/case law focused, leaving students with a limited and somewhat inaccurate perception of the law. And due to curricular changes this faculty approved effective in the fall of 2005, Torts, Property and Contracts courses are officially reduced from 3 credit hours in the fall to 2 credit hours in the spring semester. However, almost all faculty members who taught those courses prior to 2005 report that they still cover about the same amount of material in the 2-credit semester that they covered when they had 3 credits. The addition of the 3-credit hour Criminal Law course in the spring of the first year further increases the students’ burden. As a result, FT students take six courses in the spring for 15 hours credit, but the work required more realistically reflects 18 credit hours. PT first year students take four spring courses that reflect 12 hours of course work (equivalent to the standard FT load) rather than the 10 credits they receive.

In the “too little” category, students are given minimal exposure to legislative and regulatory law. They also get at best isolated and fortuitous instruction on the type and degree of professional and ethical conduct required of practicing attorneys.

The committee’s investigation of what other law schools have done to provide a more balanced first-year experience revealed that a number of schools teach the first-year substantive courses in a single semester. The ABA’s 2004 Survey of Law School Curricula was especially helpful in tracking such changes in law school curricula from 1992 to 2002. To place those changes in a larger context, the report first describes the “typical” first year law school curriculum of 1975 as featuring two-semester, 6-credit-hour courses in Contracts, Civil Procedure, Property, and Torts.

15 A review of CM’s student handbooks and catalogues from the 1940’s to present provided interesting historic information. One consistency noted from at least 1959 to the present is that Property, Torts, Contracts, and Civil Procedure have been offered as either 5 or 6 credit hours over two-semesters (or the equivalent number of credits over two quarters). Criminal Law has also remained a one-semester, 3 credit hour course during the past half-century.

16 The survey was completed by 152 ABA-accredited law schools representing 48 of the 51 jurisdictions in which such law schools existed; six of the nine Ohio schools responded including CM. See A Study of Law School Curricula (ABA 2004) at 10. Respondents included 64 public and 88 private schools; 78 single division and 74 dual division; 133 university affiliated law schools and 19 independent; 111 secular and 41 religious; and 3 historically Black law schools. Id. at 11. The Study also utilized data from reports law schools file annually with the ABA.

17 A Study of Law School Curricula (ABA 2004) at 27. A three-hour Criminal Law course, two-hour Legal Research and Writing, and a three-credit Constitutional Law course were also common features of the 1976 model.
By 2002, a significant number of U.S. law schools had reduced these four foundational courses to one-semester offerings. About 35% had reduced Contracts to a one-semester, usually four-credit model, while about 48% had done the same to Civil Procedure. Almost 50% of U.S. law schools had reduced Torts to a four-credit hour, one-semester course and about 43% had converted Property to that format.\textsuperscript{18}

The ABA is updating its comprehensive analysis of law school curricula, but that data will not be available until winter 2012. Recent conversations with survey director Catherine Carpenter, however, suggest that both full and partial semesterization of first year courses has gained momentum since 2002.\textsuperscript{19} Although this committee did not conduct an exhaustive empirical analysis of all U.S. law schools, its review of the curriculum at more than sixty law schools confirmed Professor Carpenter's observations.\textsuperscript{20} At the same time, variations among the nine law schools in Ohio illustrate how U.S. law schools have rejected a "one-size-fits-all" first-year curricular model.

Case Western semesterizes Torts, Contracts, Property and Civil Procedure. Ohio State semesterizes all but Contracts which it offers for three credits in the fall and two in the spring. Cincinnati semesterizes three of these four courses, offering Civil Procedure as a six-credit, two semester course. Ohio Northern maintains the two-semester, six-credit model for all four courses. Akron's schedule is the same as CM for these four courses. Toledo covers Torts in a single semester four-hour course, Contracts and Property in three hours both semesters, and Civil Procedure I (the rules) in the fall of the first year and Civil Procedure II (jurisdiction) as an upper-level requirement. Capital embraces the two semester model with six credits for Contracts, five for Property and Torts, and six total credit of Civil Procedure, but only three of the Civil Procedure hours being required in the first year.

Based on the foregoing, we offer the faculty two options for revising our current first year curriculum: (1) full semesterization of substantive first year courses or (2) partial semesterization. The committee does not advocate one model over the other, as each plan offers distinct benefits that counsel in favor of its adoption. But the committee very strong advocates \textsuperscript{18} Id. at 27-28. Criminal Law has also remained a first year staple, usually as a three-credit one-semester course, although some schools teach it as a four-credit course. Constitutional Law – or at least Con Law I – is also a course commonly offered in the first year. First year curriculum space previously devoted to Con Law had evolved to include not only Con Law but also courses like Criminal Procedure, a Lawyering Skills Course, or an elective. Id.

\textsuperscript{19} Catherine Carpenter is a professor at Southwestern Law School. She was the principal author of the ABA's 2002 report, chaired the ABA Accreditation Committee in 2009-2010, and is now chairing the ABA committee conducting the updated curricular study. Committee member Susan Becker spoke with her at length about recent changes in law school curriculum. Professor Carpenter's belief that semesterization has increased is based on her personal observations rather than preliminary analysis of survey data.

\textsuperscript{20} Schools reviewed include Alabama, Albany, Akron, American, Boston College, California Western, Capital, Case Western, Charlotte, Chicago-Kent, Cincinnati, Columbia, Cornell, Cumberland, Dayton, Detroit-Mercy, DePaul, Drexel, Duke, Elon, Emory, Florida State, Franklin Pierce, University of Georgia, Georgetown, George Mason, George Washington University, Gonzaga, Harvard, Indiana University (Bloomington), Iowa, Maryland, University of Michigan, Minnesota, University of Missouri (Kansas City), New York Law School, Northeastern, Northern Kentucky, Northwestern, Notre Dame, NYU, Ohio Northern, Ohio State, Pace, Penn State, St. Louis, Seattle, Southwestern, University of Texas, Toledo, Touro, Tulane, UC Berkley, UC Irvine, UNC-Chapel Hill, USC, Vanderbilt, Vermont, Wake Forest, Washburn, Washington University, Washington & Lee, William & Mary, William-Mitchell, University of Wisconsin, and Yale. for adoption of one of these semesterized models as a means to provide our students with a stronger foundation for their upper-level studies.

A. Full Semesterization

Reducing the year-long first-year courses to single semester courses offers several advantages. First, it reduces the total number of courses students take at one time, thereby allowing students to focus more intensely on each subject. Instead of the current schedule that requires FT students to take five courses in the fall semester and six courses in the spring semester, full semesterization results in FT students taking four courses both semesters. Similarly, PT students would take three courses each semester instead adding a fourth course in the spring.

Second, semesterization allows both FT and PT students to complete a Legislation and Regulation class in their first year (see proposal 2 below), thereby broadening students’ horizons as to the sources and interactions of contemporary legal authorities.

Third, the changes in overall credits hours due to semesterization impose no disadvantage on students. FT first-year students will still be able to complete the 29 credit hours necessary to participate in an externship as early as the summer term between their first and second year of law school. PT students would earn 21 credits during their first year instead of the 19 they currently receive.

At first blush, adding two credit hours to the PT students’ schedules appears to increase their workload. Keep in mind, however, that the 19 hours of credit that PT students now earn upon successful completion of their first-year courses may be somewhat misleading. This is because the reduction of spring-semester Torts and Contracts to 2 credit hours in 2005 does not necessarily reflect the actual workload in those classes. Many professors who taught these courses for 6 credit hours told us that they still cover about as much material in the second semester (for which students now earn 2 credits) as they did prior to 2005 when students were awarded 3 credit hours for the second semester. In other words, it is highly probable that the 19 credit hours PT students currently earn in their first year more accurately reflects 21 credit hours worth of work. Accordingly, increasing the credits does not necessarily increase the work load. And, as noted above, PT students will also reduce the number of courses taken from four to three in the spring semester under the full semesterization plan.

Fourth, teaching one-semester courses increases faculty flexibility in terms of courses taught, scheduling professional leaves, and requesting course release time. The 20 or so faculty members currently constrained by a full-year commitment to a first-year course would be freed up to teach upper-level courses in their disciplines. This would facilitate travel for research, Fulbright leaves and other reasons and lessen the administrative burden currently experienced by the law school and sometimes other faculty members when those absences occur. Students would be able to complete the entire course with a single professor, rather than switching mid-course when a professor goes on leave.

21 CM’s course release policy is available on the Faculty Resource page of the CM website, https://www.law.csuchico.edu/sites/default/files/facultystaff/manuals/CourseReleasePolicy.pdf.
In terms of the actual structure of the semesterized classes, a four-credit, one-semester course requires 200 minutes of class time each week. The 200 minutes could be divided into two classes of an hour and 40 minutes each week, or allotted among three classes of approximately 70 minutes each.

Undoubtedly, the switch to one-semester, 4-credit hour courses will reduce the amount of material that can be covered in each course. This trade-off warrants careful consideration. This evaluation should carefully weigh not just what is being reduced, but also what is being gained. In addition to the advantages noted above, faculty who desire to do so could use the material deleted from their first-year course to help structure an upper-level elective.

Potential effect of reduced coverage on bar passage rates would also need to be carefully monitored. The committee’s extensive review of curricular reform literature and our communications with administrators and faculty at other schools identified no adverse relationship between semesterized courses and bar passage. The authors of the 2004 ABA report also concluded that “[t]ested subject matter of bar examinations does not appear to play a prominent role in a law school’s determination of which courses to require for graduation,” further noting that “there is no statistical evidence to suggest that the ‘bar factor’ drives law school curricular decision-making on graduation requirements.”

B. Proposed Fully “Semesterized” First Year Schedule

Law schools that semesterize Torts, Civil Procedure, Property and Contracts often schedule the courses in the general order presented below. As noted previously, there are a number of variations on this theme, and no literature or empirical studies purport to identify the “perfect” first-year curriculum.

In the schedule presented below, students’ first semester of law school focuses intensively on four courses: Contracts, Torts, Legislation and Regulation, and Legal Writing. This combination sets the stage for the wide variety of courses they will take in subsequent semesters.

For example, Contracts requires students to parse both common law and some statutory (UCC) law that governs business transactions and helps resolve disputes that arise from those dealings. Torts provides the foundation of the civil justice system for punishing wrongdoers and remedying the injuries tortfeasors cause to person and property. The Legislation and Regulation course helps bridge the gap between the sources of law used in both Contracts and Torts and significantly increases students understanding of the creation, interpretation and overall scope of the sources of law other than the cases relied on heavily in Torts and Contracts. Legal Writing starts the students’ life-long journey to develop the writing, research and advocacy skills in a manner that makes them effective advocates for their clients or employers.

In the spring of the first year, students study the redress of injuries to person and property provided through the Criminal Law justice system, with focus on both case law and the Model Penal Code. Property further broadens students’ perspective on the scope and effectiveness of the law by focusing on real and personal property ownership. Civil Procedure reinforces and expands students’ understanding of engaging the civil litigation process as a way to remediate disputes occurring in any substantive areas of law. The students continue their quest for proficiently in research and writing in the second semester of Legal Writing.

C. Partial Semesterization Alternative

Partial semesterization achieves some of the benefits of semesterization. Although this five-course-per-semester model does not reduce the number of class preparations or exams in the fall semester in the manner achieved by full semesterization, it does avoid burdening students with a sixth course in the spring. Partial semesterization also accommodates the goal of broadening students’ horizons by adding a Legislation and Regulation course in the first year.

Schools that partially semesterized their foundational first-year courses commonly retain Contracts and Civil Procedure as two-semester courses. That is the alternative model we propose should CM faculty choose the partial semesterization option. Neither our literature review nor our conversations with faculty and administrators at other law schools revealed the rationale for not semesterizing these two courses, but conversations with CM faculty and students about these two courses have yielded some colorable reasons.

Civil Procedure is in some ways two distinct but related courses – one part covering the rules of procedure and the other covering the constitutional and statutory basis for jurisdiction. Members of the CM faculty who teach Civil Procedure have also found this course especially conducive to integrating skill-building exercises, which is in turn time consuming.

Contracts have evolved over the years to place more emphasis on statutory law (especially the UCC) that supplements the extensive case law for this course which provides the foundation for most upper-level business courses. Students often identify Contracts as their most challenging course in the first year of law school, perhaps justifying the two-semester approach.

The semesterization model presented below reduces Torts, Property and Civil Procedure by one credit hour each. It maintains Contracts as a 5-hour, two-semester class, but evens the credit hours out to 2.5 each semester. Compared to the fully semesterized model which featured a 4-credit-hour Legislation and Regulation course, this model offers it as a 3-credit-hour course. Exposure of first-year students to Legislation and Regulation is the most pressing concern, however, not whether it is taught for 3 or 4 credit hours.

Other RCC courses at student’s election (Con Law, Evidence, Legal Profession)
2. Add a Legislation and Regulation ("Leg/Reg") course in the first year

Contemporary law practice is heavily grounded in administrative and statutory law. CM students currently get limited exposure to these critical areas in their traditional first-year courses. The addition of a course focusing intensively on legislative and regulatory law would give students a much better foundation for future courses that implicate regulatory and legislative schemes. Perhaps more importantly, this course encourages students to think more about the structure of government, the processes used to create law, and how both structure and process affect the creation, interpretation and application of the law.

Harvard’s first-year Legislation and Regulation course “includes materials on most or all of the following topics: the separation of powers; the legislative process; statutory interpretation; delegation and administrative agency practice; and regulatory tools and strategies.” Emory’s course covers similar topics and serves as “a primary building block for Constitutional Law, Administrative Law, Legislation, and numerous specialized upper-level courses such as Employment Law, Environmental Law, Intellectual Property, International Trade Law, and Securities Law.” The University of Colorado offers this course description:

Introduces lawmaking in the modern administrative state. Examines the way Congress and administrative agencies adopt binding rules of law (statutes and regulations, respectively) and the way that implementing institutions — courts and administrative agencies — interpret and apply these laws. Considers the structure of the modern administrative state, the incentives that influence the behavior of the various actors, and the legal rules that help to structure the relationships among Congress, the agencies, and the courts.

For these reasons the committee proposes the inclusion of a Legislation and Regulation course in the first semester of the first year for both full-time and part-time students.

Upper-Level Changes

1. Eliminate the Administrative Law component requirement

Students currently satisfy our administrative law component requirement by selecting from a variety of courses, some of which focus heavily on administrative law and others which do not. There is no requirement that students take a course focusing intensively on legislation. To establish some degree of uniformity in these key pillars of contemporary law, and to highlight the important role of regulatory and statutory law in the work of lawyers, we propose replacing the general administrative law requirement with the legislation/regulatory course discussed above. Of course, the classes that currently satisfy the ad law component requirement would be retained as electives and students would continue to enroll in them according to the students’ interests.

2. Enhance our existing skills requirement

   a. Redefine our existing skills requirement as experientially based

In May of 2008, CM faculty adopted a skills requirement. This was not the result of curricular review but rather an effort to comply with ABA Standard 302 requiring “that each student receive substantial instruction in ... professional skills generally regarded as necessary for effective and responsible participation in the legal profession.”

The ABA interprets this standard as directing law schools “to be creative in developing programs of instruction in professional skills related to the various responsibilities which lawyers are called upon to meet, using the strengths and resources available to the school,” further counseling that courses involving “trial and appellate advocacy, alternative methods of dispute resolution, counseling, interviewing, negotiating, problem solving, factual investigation, organization and management of legal work, and drafting” will satisfy the standard, and clarifying that “to be ‘substantial,’ instruction in professional skills must engage each student in skills performances that are assessed by the instructor.”

The curricular requirement that CM promulgated to satisfy the ABA’s skills requirement incorporates both the text and interpretation of ABA Standard 302 as follows:

   * * * *

   CRITERIA FOR SATISFYING
   THE SKILLS COURSE REQUIREMENT

   In order to graduate every student must complete one skills course “providing substantial instruction in professional skills generally regarded as necessary for effective and responsible participation in the legal profession. A professional skills course must engage each student in skills performances that are assessed by the instructor.”

This new requirement was prompted by the A.B.A. adding the professional skills requirement to those skills that we are already required to, and do, provide substantial instruction: substantive law, legal analysis and reasoning, legal research, problem solving and oral communication, writing in a legal context, and the professional ethics. See ABA Standard 302(a)(4). Examples of the types of professional skills contemplated by this new requirement are: “[T]rial and appellate advocacy, alternative methods of dispute resolution, consulting, interviewing, negotiating, problem solving, fact investigation, organization and management of legal work, 24 ABA Standard 302(a)(4) Curriculum.

26 Id.

To satisfy the skills requirement a new course proposal must include the following description:
1. The skills taught,
2. The skills performances each student will engage in,
3. The class time devoted to those skills, and
4. How the professor will assess each student’s skills performance.

[end of current CM criteria]

* * * * *

Courses now approved as satisfying the skills requirement articulated above include Alternate Dispute Resolution, Arbitration, Clinics (Community Health Advocacy, Employment, Environmental, Fair Housing, Urban Development), Externships, Law Practice Management, Mediation, Moot Court I & II, Trial Advocacy, Trial Advocacy Competition (basic and advanced), and all sections of the required 3rd semester of Legal Writing except Scholarly Writing.

The committee proposes that our skills requirement be strengthened in two ways. First, we propose redefining the criteria so that only courses offering students an experiential approach to skills development satisfy this requirement. Second, we propose that students not be allowed to “double dip” requirements by automatically satisfying their skills requirement by taking any required 3rd semester Legal Writing course (except Scholarly Writing, which does not qualify as a skills requirement).29

To be clear, the committee is not suggesting that the majority of classes that have been designated as skills courses under the existing standard are fundamentally defective in terms of skill development, or that Curriculum Committee members have not adequately screened skills courses presented to them for approval.30 Indeed, many of the courses that currently satisfy our skills requirement will likely qualify under more rigorous experiential skills criteria. But some of the current skills courses – such as Law Practice Management – are capable of being taught in a lecture format, a methodology that increases students’ knowledge about law practice but does not enhance the skills they need to engage in it. This undermines our goal of providing enhanced skills education at CM. While the 3rd semester of Legal Writing might qualify as experiential

29 While expansion of our skills offerings is a key component of these proposals, our current offerings would likely be sufficient to meet demand if we enhanced the skills requirement and discontinued the 3rd semester of Legal Writing as automatically satisfying that requirement. This is based on the number of students who enrolled in clinics, externships, Mediation, Trial Advocacy, Arbitration, ADR, and Law Practice Management over the past two years, and the assumption that most of the existing skills courses would satisfy more rigorous experiential skills criteria. For example, in 2009-2010 we served approximately 362 students (not accounting for students who may have taken more than one) in skills courses other than the 3rd semester of Legal Writing and our capacity exceeded 415 students. In 2010-2011 we served 294 students, and our capacity was greater than 350 students.

30 As previously noted, current courses that satisfy the skills requirement include Alternate Dispute Resolution, Arbitration, Clinics (Community Health Advocacy, Employment, Environmental, Fair Housing, Urban Development), Externships, and Law Practice Management, Mediation, Moot Court I & II, Trial Advocacy, Trial Advocacy Competition, Trial Advocacy Competition (basic and advanced), and all sections of the required 3rd semester of Legal Writing except Scholarly Writing. skills course even under an enhanced definition, disallowing the double dipping provides a mechanism to ensure that students get a separate and distinct skills experience.

The model for this two-stage review could be borrowed from faculty's re-evaluation of Perspective Elective requirement several years ago. In the first stage, faculty revised our criteria for courses that satisfied that requirement. In the second stage, professors whose courses had or would be offered as Perspectives submitted their course descriptions to the standing Curriculum Committee for review and approval.

This criteria-enhancing and review process is important not only to make sure our existing courses fulfill the goal of providing experiential skills, but also because we hope to expand experiential offerings. It is important to have clearer criteria to help structure and evaluate proposed courses.

Because the task of developing criteria for required courses is within the jurisdiction of the standing Curriculum Committee, this committee is not proposing specific criteria for the enhanced, experiential skills requirement at this time. Based on our preliminary consideration of the matter, however, we believe that an experiential skills course should, at a minimum, challenge students to apply their substantive and/or procedural knowledge in settings such as live client clinics, externships, oral advocacy competitions, and simulation courses in which students are given multiple opportunities to exercise various lawyering skills and receive individualized feedback on their assigned tasks. Another important characteristic of experiential courses is that every student has to interact personally and immediately with others to work towards resolution of a legal matter. Stated more precisely:

In undertaking experiential education, the student takes on particular tasks or responsibilities. These may include judging, mediating, counseling, representing individuals or groups in adversarial proceedings, representing individuals or groups in non-adversarial contexts, representing individuals or groups in various kinds of transactions, or educating groups about law and the legal process. In representing individuals or groups, the student may be either a primary or a subsidiary attorney. The student may also serve in the role of a mediator, a judicial clerk, a teacher, a trainer, or an observer.\(^\text{31}\)

b. Revoke the policy that allows students to automatically satisfy skills requirement by taking a required 3rd semester LW class

For the reason stated below, the committee proposes that we retain the 3rd semester LW requirement but not allow students to use it to satisfy the experiential skills requirement.

In our recent conversations with CM faculty, our graduates, and other area practitioners, the ability to clearly communicate in writing was repeatedly cited as one of the most critical skills for the successful practice of law. This fact is well recognized throughout the legal academy, as the ABA curriculum survey data revealed that Legal Research and Writing has “grown in stature” in the recent past, with law schools devoting more credit hours to the first-year course and offering third and fourth semesters of legal writing. The need for law courses that provide structured development of writing skills has increased as the quality and quantity of our students’ pre-law-school writing experiences seems to continue to decline.

CM’s current 3rd semester course helps students develop critical writing, research, and analytic skills while also pursuing their own interests. While subject matter varies based on the course a student chooses, the hallmark of a 3rd semester Legal Writing course is writing instruction with multiple opportunities for feedback and revision. Third semester courses afford students opportunities to hone their research, analytic, and writing skills in the context of drafting contracts and other transactional documents, lease agreements, wills, complaints, answers, discovery, pretrial briefs, trial briefs, appellate briefs, patent applications, client alerts and bulletins, and short scholarly articles. The 3rd semester course also satisfies the ABA requirement that all students complete “at least one additional rigorous writing experience after the first year.”

Based on faculty input obtained during individual interviews and several brownbag discussions, it is clear that faculty members remain committed to providing our students with significant opportunities to develop their writing skills (and of course the research and analytical skills that serve as a precursor to providing a written explanation of a legal matter). The 3rd semester of Legal Writing serves that interest. For the reasons set forth in the preceding section, however, an independent experiential skills course requirement serves the distinct yet complementary purpose of enhancing students’ development of the panoply of other skills they need to be effective lawyers. The de-linking of our upper-level skills and writing requirements is also consistent with the ABA’s intent, evidenced by its adoption of a discrete skills requirement separate from its requirement of an “additional rigorous writing experience after the first year.”

In sum, the committee posits that the skills-enrichment objective would be more effectively furthered by disengaging the skills requirement from the 3rd semester Legal Writing.

32 Solid writing skills are also highly correlated to success on the essay portion and multi-state practice section of the Ohio bar exam.
33 A Study of Law School Curricula (ABA 2004) at 7. The authors note that the expansion of legal writing programs led to a precipitous decline in the small-section model for first year courses. Id.
34 Our current 3rd semester of Legal Writing offerings include both litigation and transactional courses: Advanced Brief Writing (6 sections per year), Legal Writing and Litigation (2-4 sections per year), General Drafting (2-4 sections per year), Transactional Drafting (2 sections per year), Patent Drafting (1 section every other year), and Scholarly Writing (3 sections per year). Other contemplated third semester offerings include Transactional Drafting for Health Lawyers, Negotiating and Drafting Sports Marketing and Venue Agreements, and Family Law Drafting.
35 ABA Accreditation Standard 302(a)(3). The ABA requires this “rigorous writing experience” in addition to the “skills” requirement discussed previously. While the ABA skills requirement may be satisfied by a course that has a “drafting” component, it is primarily intended to address skills such as trial and appellate advocacy, client counseling, interviewing, negotiating, problem solving, factual investigation, organization and management of legal work. See Interpretation 302-2 to A.B.A. Standard 302(a) (4). requirement. We specifically propose that faculty no longer allow students to fulfill both their 3rd semester of Legal Writing and Skills requirement in a single course.36

3. Expand Experiential Skills Offerings

As law faculty here and at other law schools have noted, strengthening a skills curriculum is a challenging endeavor in an era of declining resources. From studying models implemented elsewhere and building on our many existing strengths at CM, the committee is optimistic that this is an area where faculty creativity could result in an enriched skills curriculum at a relatively low cost. For example, we could offer more 1- and 2-credit-hour skills courses in time blocks other than the traditional semester-long courses. Such short courses would engage students intensely in specific skill-building exercises like litigating a preliminary injunction, drafting proposed legislation or preparing the closing documents for a commercial transaction. Skills such as client interviewing, counseling, and fact finding could also be developed through such courses.

Full-time faculty might decide to develop such a course and either teach it individually or by partnering with a practicing lawyer. Adjuncts would also provide a rich resource for these courses, provided that sufficient oversight is provided as to adjuncts' course objectives and content to assure compliance with our newly defined skills requirement.

4. Enhance support for faculty who desire to incorporate skills components to their classes

Some schools have enhanced their skills offerings by embracing a “skills-across-the-curriculum” model. Details vary from school to school, but in general this model includes encouraging, if not requiring, one or more skills component in virtually all courses. The committee does not suggest that CM adopt a mandatory version of this model for several reasons.

First, CM faculty members embrace a broad array of teaching styles and methodologies. It is important that students continue to be exposed to various ways of “thinking like a lawyer” and that faculty be free to teach according to their own strengths. Second, individual professors are in the best position to decide whether adding one or more skills components to a course furthers or detracts from their course objectives. Third, our interviews with individual faculty members made it clear that a number of us are already experimenting with skills exercises and other feedback mechanisms in our doctrinal courses, and we would not want to interfere with those initiatives.

While recognizing that each professor should decide whether to add skill enhancements to their courses, the committee believes that each professor should be encouraged to consider the possibility of doing so. As the Carnegie Report and other studies confirm, this is a pedagogically 36 Due to the comprehensive nature of the curricular proposals set forth in this memo, students who might have previously chosen to “double dip” the 3rd semester of Legal Writing and skills requirements would not see a net loss in the number of electives available to them, provided that the faculty approves replacing the current upper-level administrative law requirement with the first-year Legislation and Regulation course, thus effectively reducing upper-level requirements by one course.

sound approach to teaching not only lawyering competencies, but also doctrine. Many, and perhaps most, law students will be better able to grasp complex legal concepts if required to apply them while performing lawyering tasks. Based on our extensive review of the materials identified previously in this memo and the suggestion of attorneys in practice, the committee believes that students would benefit from multiple opportunities to develop lawyering skills in various doctrinal contexts while in law school.

One possibility for full-time faculty who wish to add skills components to existing classes is working with area practitioners. Associate Dean Mark Sundahl recruited a handful of faculty this spring to participate in a practitioner in the classroom initiative – a joint initiative of the law school and our alumni association – to bring graduates back into the classroom to participate in teaching some aspect of a course. Other law schools have successfully used this model. For example, an area practitioner could address a Legal Profession class on discrete issues such as the practical and ethical considerations of drafting a client fee agreement, help the professor create a client fee agreement drafting exercise for students, and then provide feedback on each student’s draft of the agreement.

Team teaching with an area practitioner is another model that individual faculty might choose to explore. For example, Director of Legal Writing Carolyn Broering-Jacobs has twice taught Transactional Drafting with in-house counsel at different local companies, and Associate Dean and Professor Heidi Gorovitz Robertson will be teaching a course this fall with a partner from Baker Hostetler on the legal issues surrounding the BP Gulf Coast oil spill. The administration should continue to support such faculty efforts.

Ethics and Professionalism Enhancements

As the Carnegie Report observes, law students “need opportunities to learn about, reflect upon, and practice the responsibilities of legal professionals.” Completion of a basic ethics course is insufficient to help students fully grasp “the social and cultural contexts of the legal institutions and the varied forms of legal practice” and to “engage the moral imagination of students as they move toward professional practice.”

To provide CM students with more contexts for recognizing and resolving the ethical dilemmas they will undoubtedly face in practice, the committee offers three proposals.

1. Require that Legal Profession (ethics) be taught consistently as a 3-credit-hour course

Legal Profession exposes students to the many ethical quandaries they will likely face in practice and provides guidance on how to resolve those quandaries in a manner consistent with the applicable Rules of Professional Conduct, other legal authorities, and general standards of professionalism.

The vast majority of CM students satisfy CM’s legal profession requirement by enrolling in the 3-credit hour course offered during the school year. The requirement may also be satisfied, however, by taking the 2-hour version of the course offered sporadically, usually during the summer. Carnegie and other reports emphasize the importance of law schools giving greater attention to instruction in professionalism, and ABA Standard 302(a)(5) requires law schools to ensure that every student receive “substantial instruction in ... the history, goals, structure, values, rules and responsibilities of the legal profession and its members.”

Due to the importance of students developing a firm grounding in ethics and professionalism while in law school, we recommend that all CM students be required to complete a 3-credit ethics course.

2. Add a Professionalism Problem of the Semester to infuse professionalism into the curriculum

As previously mentioned, increasing students’ understanding and incorporation of professionalism standards into their lives post-graduation is a common goal of curricular reform. The development of a “Professionalism Problem” for each semester is one way of furthering that goal.

The Professionalism Problem would be distributed at the beginning of each semester along with supporting materials (relevant ethics rules, court opinions and the like) and ideas for how it might be used in the context of various classes. Professors would have the opportunity to incorporate the ethical dilemma the problem poses into their courses, in some form, at any point during the semester. Professors could choose to delve deeply into it, address it very briefly, or not at all. They could hold a short class discussion, assign a writing project, stage a debate, or whatever seems appropriate given the nature of the problem and its relevance to course content and the professor’s objectives for the course.

Towards the end of the semester, the law school would host a speaker, panel, or other event in which the Professionalism Problem would be discussed. Students and faculty should be familiarized with it by this time, and the event would present a culmination of our work on that problem.

The advantages of this approach are somewhat obvious. The plan provides flexibility for the professor to use the problem (or not) in any way he or she chooses. It involves little additional work for the professor because the problem and supporting materials will be provided to all professors each semester. Students are introduced to a variety of perspectives on the problem, and the overall experience reinforces professionalism as a key value in the law school.

39 This course also provides the foundation for students’ preparation for the MPRE, a test which students must pass as a prerequisite to admission in Ohio and most other states. Professional Responsibility is also tested on the Ohio bar exam.
3. Encourage universal student participation in the Pro Bono Program

Developing the habit of giving back to the communities in which we live and work is a cornerstone of attorney professionalism. It also forms the foundation of our commitment to “Live Justice.”

CM’s Pro Bono Program helps students make public service a habit by engaging them in the delivery of legal assistance in cooperation with local attorneys and community agencies serving the poor and other disenfranchised individuals. It exposes them to real-life struggles of the under-represented and the rewards of public service. Many of these pro bono projects allow students to develop important skills, especially when interacting with live clients with real-world legal problems.

A significant number of CM students participate in the Pro Bono Program each year. During the 2009-2010 academic year, for example, 217 law students contributed over 11,500 volunteer hours working with Legal Aid of Cleveland, the Homeless Legal Assistance Project, the Driver’s License Reinstatement Project, the Cleveland Metropolitan Bar Associations 3Rs Project, the City Mock Trial Program, the Cleveland Food Bank, the Voter Registration Project, and other worthy causes.\textsuperscript{40}

Some law schools have a pro bono requirement, but the committee is not proposing that CM adopt a mandatory requirement at this time. But we do think CM faculty and administrators should find additional ways to encourage all students to engage in this work, as it forms an important part of both the “learn law” and “live justice” part of our mission.

For example, CM could explore the possibility of recording the number of hours students devote to public service work on their transcripts or issuing a pro bono certification of hours when they graduate. In addition to recognizing student participants at the annual Honors Award Ceremony, the students could be recognized at graduation.

Implementation and Monitoring of Curricular Changes

1. Conduct future evaluations of the effectiveness of the curricular changes to determine whether further adjustments are necessary

The Action Plan for Improving CSU Bar Passage Rates approved by the law faculty in 2003 called for changes in virtually every aspect of the law school operation including drastically reducing the size of the entering class, creating a new academic success program, increasing the standards for admissions, engaging in aggressive fundraising, and encouraging faculty to provide more feedback to students. We readily acknowledged that the multi-faceted nature of the Action Plan would make it difficult to perform post-implementation analysis as to which components were effective, which components were not, and what additional components should be added.

\textsuperscript{40} Twenty-one CM faculty and staff members and 19 CM alumni also participated in various group projects.
To deal with this challenge, the Plan required the completion of annual assessment reports. Accordingly, annual reports have been prepared and distributed since 2004.\textsuperscript{41} The Action Plan also called for, and the law school produced, a comprehensive analysis in 2008 to more closely scrutinize each element of the Action Plan. The goal of the 2008 review, which has since been realized, was to make necessary adjustments to the Action Plan to ensure continued success.

The curricular proposals in this memo represent significant changes. Their effect should be monitored to make sure that we increase student participation in skills-enhanced learning, that faculty who seek it receive appropriate support for their efforts to integrate skills components into their classes, and that unforeseen negative consequences have not arisen. Potential impact on our graduates’ bar passage rates should be monitored very closely.\textsuperscript{42} The annual curricular review would also provide the opportunity to assess whether existing components should be expanded, dropped, or modified, and whether additional elements should be considered.

Like the bar pass Action Plan, a comprehensive review could be required five years after the curricular changes are first implemented. Conducting the annual and five-year look back reports could be delegated by the Dean to an administrator, the standing Curriculum Committee or another faculty body constituted for that purpose. Monitoring for signs of impact on the bar program also requires close coordination with the Director of Bar Exam Preparation and Academic Support.

2. Timing

To allow faculty and administrators to make the adjustments necessary to implement the changes outlined in this proposal, we suggest that (1) any changes to the first-year curriculum, (2) the revised skills requirement, (3) the elimination of the upper-level administrative law component requirement, and (4) the abolition of double dipping of skills requirement and 3rd semester of Legal Writing be implemented with the class that starts in the fall of 2012.

Requiring that all students complete a 3-credit-hour legal ethics course would commence in the class entering CM this fall (2011).

The project to revise the skills requirement criteria could begin in the fall of 2011, with a proposal to the faculty due at the November 2011 meeting. Assuming approval of the revised criteria by the end of 2011 or early 2012, a faculty committee could then start reviewing existing and proposed courses in the spring of 2012.

Development of additional skills courses, enhanced support for faculty who desire to integrate skills components and encouraging universal student involvement in pro bono could start immediately.

\textsuperscript{41} The Chair of the Bar Committee and the Associate Dean overseeing the bar program draft the reports, with significant input from the Bar Director. Reports are sent to law faculty, Provost, President, and Board of Trustees.

\textsuperscript{42} As noted previously, the Committee did not discover any link between semestrierization of first year courses and drop in bar pass rates. The 2004 ABA curricular concluded that “[t]ested subject matter of bar examinations does not appear to play a prominent role in a law school’s determination of which courses to require graduation.” A Study of Law School Curricula (ABA 2004) at 6.
Proposed Motions to Effectuate Curricular Changes

Unless otherwise noted, changes would be effective with the fall 2012 entering class.

First-year curriculum

1. “Semesterize” substantive courses in the first-year curriculum based on the model provided at page 15 of this memo.

or

2. Partially “semesterize” first-year curriculum by reducing Torts and Property to one-semester, 4-hour courses, reducing Civil Procedure from 6 to 5 hours, and utilizing the model provided at page 17 of this memo.

Upper-level curriculum

1. Eliminate the Administrative Law component requirement due to the addition of the Legislative/Regulatory course in the first year.

2. Revoke the policy that allows students to automatically satisfy the skills requirement by completing the required 3rd semester of Legal Writing.

3. Enhance the experiential nature of our existing skills requirement by (a) clarifying the criteria and (b) reviewing existing and proposed skills courses under the revised criteria.

   Delegate these tasks to the standing Curriculum Committee or other appropriate faculty committee. Goal for the completion of the revised standards is the end of 2011 with review of existing and proposed courses commencing in the spring of 2012.

4. Expand our experiential skills courses.

5. Encourage and support faculty who desire to integrate skills components in their classes.

Ethics and Professionalism

1. Effective with classes entering this fall (2011), require completion of a 3-credit-hour legal ethics course prior to graduation.

2. Add a Professionalism Problem of the Semester to infuse professionalism into the curriculum, retaining the right of every professor to choose whether or not to participate. The first would be introduced in the spring 2012 semester.
3. Encourage universal student participation in the Pro Bono Program (beginning immediately).

Implementation and Monitoring

1. Adopt a system to evaluate and monitor the effects of the plan.

Re: Proposal for the Creation of the Center for Health Law & Policy

INTRODUCTION

After much discussion, the committee has reached a consensus that the College of Law should move forward with the creation a Center for Health Law & Policy ("Center"). We have chosen the use of the title "Center" as opposed to "Institute" or other moniker in order to maintain consistency within the University among these types of focal points of specialized activity. Indeed, the University has a definition for a "Center" that fits well with our vision of our Center for Health Law & Policy.¹

There are several reasons why the time is right to create the Center. First, Cleveland State University ("the University") has made a commitment to introduce health initiatives across the academic curriculum. The Center will be the Law School’s contribution to that endeavor. Second, the Law School’s location in Cleveland, a city with a vibrant health care industry, makes us unique suited to train future health care attorneys. Third, given the increasing interest in health care law and policy among students, creation of the Center will assist us in recruiting high quality students.² Fourth, several of our current students have expressed an interest in pursuing careers in health law.³ Lastly, a memorandum prepared by Professor Sheldon Gelman indicates that we have several faculty members who teach, research and/or write in the health law area. Professor Gelman’s memorandum also states that health law is the only academic specialty for which the Law School has received a national rank in the U.S. News & World Report specialty rankings.

¹ The University defines "Center" as "an organization unit within the University that is formed to: (1) promote research, (2) take advantage of funding initiatives and opportunities, (3) target audiences external to the University, (4) foster interdisciplinary studies, projects, or initiatives, or (5) engage in public service or community outreach."
² For example, in the 2008-09 testing cycle, 2.5% of LSAT takers expressed an interest in health law compared to 1.5% in tax law. (In the 2008-09 cycle there were 180,838 test takers. 4,676 expressed an interest in health law, 11,230 expressed an interest in intellectual property, and 2,786 expressed an interest in tax law.) (This information was provided by Chris Lucak from LSAC data).

PHASES

The Center will be established in two phases. Those steps are enumerated below.

Phase One (the first 3 years)

Step One

The first step is to obtain approval from the University to create the Center. The University has specific guidelines that must be followed to create a Center. The University recognizes four types of Centers. Since the larger Centers required greater institutional investment, they are subject to the most thorough review for establishment and maintenance. The smaller Centers do not require detailed review, but are subject to some coordination and review before they can be established.

A Type One Center is located in a single academic college or administrative unit and requires no internal resources. In order to be classified as a Type One Center, creation of the Center must not require the University to commit any resources beyond the current salary for faculty. Thus, no particular administrative or formal governance structures are required beyond the naming of a Director and review and approval by the appropriate Chairs and Deans. Approval to use a particular name is required to avoid duplication of names that would lead to confusion internally and externally. Approval by the Chair/Director and the academic college Dean is required.

A Type Two Center is located in a single academic college or administrative unit and requires a minimal level of resources. In order to be classified as a Type Two Center, creation of the Center must only require the University to commit minimal internal resources. Minimal internal resources may include, but is not limited to, the following: a course release for a Director, office supplies, and office space. Policies for naming the Director and governance structures are required. Approval to use a particular name is required to avoid duplication of names that would lead to confusion internally and externally. Approval by the Chair/Director and the academic college Dean is required.

A Type Three Center is located across one or more academic colleges or administrative units requiring minimal resources. In order to be classified as a Type Three Center, the Center must require coordination of the efforts of a group of faculty representing a particular field and crossing boundaries of colleges or administrative units. Moreover, institutional resources necessary to support the Center must be small. For example, the University’s commitment could include a course release for a Director or funding typically less than $50,000/year, which might be for things such as seminars and administrative support. Administration might consist of a Director and a faculty advisory group. The governance structure and process for naming a Director must be approved by the appropriate Chairs/Directors, Deans and the Provost.
A Type Four Center is a Center that, regards of location, needs institutional support. In order to be classified as a Type Four Center, the Center must require significant institutional support. A Type Four Center would have space assigned to it, and a formalized administrative mechanism (including a Director with administrative responsibility appointed or confirmed by the Provost).

All Centers will be reviewed every three years. At the end of each review period, a Center will be closed unless a continuation is approved. The Center Director must submit a report listing the Center’s activities, achievements, challenges, and financial arrangements over the three-year review period and future plans. The report must be submitted to the Director’s immediate supervisor. If a decision is made to not continue a Center, the Center Director may appeal the decision (to the Dean if the decision to close the Center is made by a department Chair/School Director, to the Provost if the decision to close the Center is made by a Dean).

Based upon the above information, we will be seeking approval to create either a Type One or a Type Two Center. Under the University’s guidelines, in order to create a Type One or a Type Two Center, a document must be prepared that describes the purpose and goals of the Center. The document should include information on faculty biographies, funding sources and requests for resources as appropriate, selection processes for internships, and involvement by undergraduate and graduate students. The Dean makes the approval decision with regards to the creation of Type One or Type Two Centers.

Step Two

The second step is to hire a new tenured/tenure-track faculty member with health law expertise. Our goal is to hire someone who is willing and able to teach the basic Health Care Law course as well as teach in the Health Law Regulation area as these are the courses of which we are in most dire need. With regards to staffing, we need to appoint a Director/Administrator to coordinate the Center’s activities. The Director/Administrator might be a new hire or someone appointed from our current ranks. The Director/Administrator would be responsible for developing the Center’s course offerings and developing relationships with other University colleges, the Health Law bar, the Health Care industry and the local community.

Step Three

The third step is to obtain approval to issue a “certificate” in health law to students who successfully complete all of the required health law courses. One of the primary functions of the Center will be to promote a health law certificate program. We believe that offering a certificate will do two things: first it will draw additional students to the program; and second, it will better enable students to get jobs in the health law field by assuring employers that those students have competency in the area. The Committee will take the steps necessary to get the University Curriculum Committee’s approval to award the health law certificate.
Step Four

The fourth step is to create an external advisory board. The fourth step is to create an external advisory board. The board will consist primarily of attorneys who practice health law in private law firms, public agencies, or as in-house counsel at hospitals or other health care facilities. The board may also include other health care professionals, including physicians and nurses.

The principal purposes for creating an advisory board are: (1) to obtain strategic advice on trends in health law from practitioners and other professionals who are actively engaged in the field; (2) to identify practitioners and other professionals who may be capable of enhancing our curriculum by serving as adjunct professors or by agreeing to supervise an extern; (3) to provide a core group of practitioners and other professionals who can provide career counseling to our students who are interested in finding a job in health law; (4) to create a group of practitioners and other professionals who are actively engaged in the health law programs at our law school so that they will be informed, effective advocates for our law school and the Center; and (5) to engage a group of practitioners and other professionals who may be willing to provide financial support for the Center or help us identify and solicit other sources of external funding.

Step Five

The fifth step is to expand our curricular offerings in health law. To that end, Phyllis Crocker supplied us with information on the number of health law related courses taught over the last few years. In order to increase the number of courses available to our students, we surveyed the relevant courses offered in the graduate school and the school of urban affairs. There are courses available in those colleges that we can cross list. In addition, we plan to encourage current faculty who have an interest in teaching health law related courses to teach some of the core courses, or ones that we have not offered in a long time, or create new courses. Finally, we plan to rely on the local health law bar to identify adjuncts to teach some of the health law related courses. As part of expanding our curricular offerings, we plan to increase the number of health law externships.

Step Six

The final step in Phase One is to engage and coordinate the activities of the Health Law Journal with those of the Center. We also plan to implement other activities to keep students involved in development and growth of the Center. Those activities include assisting in the creation of a student chapter of the Association of Health Law Attorneys (AHLA) in the Fall of 2009, and in the establishment of a Health Law Moot Court Team.
Phase Two (year 4 and beyond)

The steps of this phase focus upon ways to improve the quality of the Center. Therefore, we plan to hire more health law faculty and to continue to encourage current faculty to retrain to teach health law related courses. In addition, we plan to expand the curriculum and to establish a speaker series. We will also explore the possibility of getting someone to fund the Center in exchange for getting to name it. We plan to explore reestablishing the Medical Institute for Law Faculty Program. Other possible additions to the health law curriculum include an upper level health law-related writing course and a stimulated health-law related transaction course.

PROPOSED CURRICULUM

The Center will issue a general health law certificate. The practice of health law encompasses many different disciplines. In order to guide students in course selection, the courses will be grouped to reflect the different areas. Students may take a particular group of courses or take courses across groups.

Groupings

Health Law Regulation

Students who take courses from this group will be trained to work in the private bar or at government agencies. Students will be equipped to represent hospitals, physician groups, health maintenance organizations (HMOs), or individual doctors to insure that they are complying with government regulations. In addition, students will be equipped to lobby on behalf of their clients. Students who choose to work for the government will be equipped to investigate fraud, to deal with Medicare/Medicaid/Stark Law policy and compliance, and to oversee the development of public health regulations.

Health Law Policy & Ethics

Students who take courses from this group will be trained to work in the public, government or academic settings. Students will be equipped to represent universities and other research academic centers, and to oversee clinical trials at universities and health care facilities. In addition, students will be equipped to work for the government to reform and create health care policy. Students who choose to work in the private sector will be equipped to impact health care policy through lobbying and other activities. Students will also be equipped to work at think tanks and other organizations that focus upon biomedical and research ethics issues.

Health Law Business & Litigation

Students who take courses from this group will be trained to engage in the business of health care in the public and the private sector. Students will be equipped to handle mergers and acquisitions, tax law, employee benefits, and risk management issues for hospitals, HMOs, long term care facilities, and insurance companies. In response to the impact of technology on health care, students will also be equipped to guide their clients through intellectual property, biomedicine, and telemedicine issues. Students will also be equipped to handle medical malpractice cases and to engage in other types of health care-related litigation.

Re: Proposal for the Creation of a Health Care Compliance Program

INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this memorandum is to seek the faculty’s support for the creation of a Health Care Compliance Certificate Program. On May 14, 2009, the faculty approved the creation of the Center for Health Law & Policy (“Center”). Currently, the Center issues a general certificate in health law. The first certificate was awarded to Marilyn Robinson in May of 2011. As a part of the Program, Marilyn served as an intern at the Cleveland Clinic and was mentored by a local health law attorney. After passing the Texas bar in November of 2011, Marilyn accepted a job in the Health Law Department of an Austin law firm. Presently, twelve students are enrolled in the Program. Due to the positive press received by the Center, several practicing attorneys and medical professionals have inquired about enrolling in the Program. Unfortunately, only currently enrolled JD students are eligible to enroll in our Health Law Certificate Program.

There is a high demand for the health compliance certificate. To illustrate, in 2004, Seton Hall College of Law created a four-day Health Care Compliance Certificate Program in pharmaceutical and medical devices. Although the Program costs $2400, at least 100 people have attended the program annually. Moreover, the Health Care Compliance Association (HCCA) sells out seven compliance academies a year. In order to accommodate non-JDs and to benefit our JD students, the Center would like to create a Certificate in Health Care Compliance. Our target audience consists of lawyers, doctors, social workers, MBA students, nurses and health care administrators.

It is the right time to create a Health Care Compliance Certificate Program. As a result of the changes in health care law, the demand for health care compliance employees has grown. Currently, only 60% of the compliance officers are attorneys. In light of the complexity of health care law, hospitals and other health care facilities are seeking to fill compliance positions.
with attorneys. Thus, compliance is one of the fastest growing areas in health law. Consequently, our Health Care Advisory Board has recommended that we give our students an opportunity to become certified in health care compliance. That additional credential will allow our students to be competitive in the health care compliance area. In order to become certified in health care compliance, our students could take the Health Care Compliance Examination.

Presently, only four law schools in the country, Hamline University, Quinnipac University, Seton Hall and Wildener, are accredited by the Compliance Certification Board (CCB) to issue a certificate in health care compliance. There are several benefits from being accredited to issue the certificate. Certification by the CCB will enable students to sit for the CHC (Certified in Healthcare Compliance) exam and/or the CCEP (Certified Compliance and Ethics Professional) exam at the end of their studies in a certified program. The work experience requirement as outlined in the CHC/CCEP Candidate Handbook will be waived. Students also have the opportunity to join the Health Care Compliance Association and/or the Society of Corporate Compliance and Ethics at a discounted rate of $150 which provides education and also a chance for networking with other individuals in the compliance field. The CCB will work with accredited universities across the country to certify university-based compliance certificate programs and offer the graduates of those programs an opportunity to become certified in Healthcare Compliance (CHC) and/or a Certified Compliance and Ethics professional (CCEP). Once our certificate is approved by Cleveland State University, we will apply to the CCB to become the only law school in Ohio to be accredited to issue a Certificate in Health Care Compliance.

APPROVALS NEEDED

We would like to implement the Health Care Compliance Certificate Program in the Fall of 2012. In order to accomplish that task, the law school has to notify the Office of the University Registrar of the approval of the certificate by the final approval body by the last day of Spring 2012 classes. To create the Program, we must get approval from the following entities: (1) the law school faculty, (2) the law school’s Curriculum Committee, (3) the law school Dean’s Office, and (4) the Graduate Council (GC).

ADMISSIONS AND GRADUATION REQUIREMENTS

In order to be admitted to the Health Care Compliance Certificate Program, the applicant must currently be enrolled as a student at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law or have earned an undergraduate degree from an accredited institution of higher education, with a cumulative grade point average (GPA) of 3.0 or higher. Applicants with an undergraduate GPA of less than 3.0 may still be considered and admitted based on other admission criteria, including professional experience in the health care industry, graduate coursework, and a personal interview conducted by the Program Director.

RE: Health Law Course Approvals

By this memorandum, I confirm for the Graduate Council that the following courses were approved by the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Curriculum Committee on January 11, 2012 in accordance with the procedures of the College of Law:

Health Care Finance Law

Introduction to Health Care Compliance

Please let me know if the Council has any concerns or requires further information.
In order to receive the Health Care Compliance Certificate, the student must complete the required curriculum with a cumulative GPA of 3.0 or higher. In order for a course to be counted towards graduation, the student must receive at least a C+ in the course. Students who enroll in the Health Care Compliance Certificate Program after graduating from Cleveland-Marshall College of Law may receive credit for the relevant health law courses they have already completed as long as they complete the courses no longer than three years prior to enrolling in the Health Care Compliance Program.

PROPOSED CURRICULUM (all credits required)

Law 617

Introduction to Health Care Compliance (2 credits) This course is designed to introduce the students to the seven basic principles of health care compliance. Students will gain a practical understanding of the laws and regulations compliance professionals regularly encounter. The purpose of the course is to teach students how to apply a range of statutory, regulatory and common law principles to a variety of compliance situations.

Law 686

Health Law (3 credits) This course will address the legal and business issues facing health care institutions and health care providers, including the business structure of institutions; payment issues, including Medicare, Medicaid and third party reimbursement; state and federal regulations as applied to health care institutions and providers; not-for-profit tax issues arising in the health care context; and business relationships between health care institutions and providers.

Law 683

Health Care Fraud & Abuse (3 credits) In this course students will explore the large body of law governing the financial arrangements between health care providers and payors. Students will participate in a detailed examination of (i) The Federal False Claims Act; (ii) The Federal Anti-Kickback Statute; (iii) The "Stark" laws; (iv) the Civil Monetary Penalty Statutes; (v) the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA); (vi) the impact of health care reform legislation on these statutes; (vii) current trends in enforcement; and (viii) cases recently decided as examples of the application of these laws, their prosecution and defense.

Law 609

HIPAA & Privacy (2 credits) The course will focus on the laws pertaining to confidentiality and disclosure relative to patient medical documents and information. Most of the course will be based on the Health insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) but Ohio laws that govern medical information privacy will also be examined as well relevant administrative regulations and processes.

Law 637

Health Care Finance Law (3 credits) In this course students will learn how health care providers are paid; what their clients must know, do and go through to get paid; the regulatory challenges their clients face; and their financial and budgetary realities. The course will employ a client-centric approach for students to learn and then contemporaneously apply their knowledge of the definition of "health care finance"; the moral, political and economic considerations that drive health care finance policy; U.S. health insurance reform; health law finance regulation and oversight; and the realities of business facing health care providers.

FROM: Craig M. Boise, Dean
College of Law
DATE: February 1, 2012
SUBJECT: Proposal for the Creation of a Health Care Compliance Program

In May 2009, the faculty approved the creation of the Center for Health Law & Policy at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law. The Center issued its first certificate in May of 2011. At this time the certificate program is only available to currently enrolled JD students.

In response to the positive press the Center has received, several practicing attorneys and medical personnel have expressed an interest in obtaining a certificate in health law. Additionally, due to recent changes in health care law, there is a high demand for health care compliance employees.

With this in mind, our Health Law Advisory Board recommended to the Health Law Committee that they look into offering a certificate in health care compliance, which would be available to both non-JD and JD students. The Health Law Committee created such a proposal and brought it before the law school’s Curriculum Committee.

On January 11, 2012, the Curriculum Committee unanimously approved the proposal for the Creation of a Health Care Compliance Program. On January 12, 2012, the law school faculty also unanimously approved the proposal with minor changes.

I concur with both the Curriculum Committee and the faculty’s approval of the attached proposal. I believe that the creation of a health care compliance certificate will give our students (both JD and non-JD) a competitive edge in today’s employment market and is consistent with the University’s efforts to establish health-related disciplines and programs.

DESCRIPTION OF C|M|LAW CLINICS

Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic

The Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic offers students the opportunity to provide representation to clients who are patients at one of four MetroHealth outpatient locations. The Clinic is offered in conjunction with the Legal Aid Society of Cleveland’s Community Advocacy Program. The Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic was first offered in Fall 2008.

Students, under the supervision of Clinical Professor Pamela Daiker-Middaugh, work with doctors, nurses, social workers and Legal Aid lawyers to address the legal issues of people seeking medical treatment. Patient/clients are low-income, and often one of the following: children, first generation Americans, people recently released from incarceration, Spanish speaking, or the elderly. Client issues may occur in any area of law but the following are the most common: special education law, housing law, public benefits law, employment law, juvenile law, and family law. Representative matters include expungements, guardianships, special education law issues as well as housing issues.

Employment Law Clinic

Students may enroll in the Employment Law Clinic for three to five credit hours per semester for two semesters. In the Fall of 2012, the course is being taught and students are supervised by Clinical Professor Kenneth Kowalski. Prior to that, the course was taught by Professor Kowalski and Professor Gordon Beggs until his retirement in 2010; and from January of 2010 to this fall, by Professor Kowalski and a visiting clinical professor.

The Employment Law Clinic provides students with the opportunity to represent clients in federal and state courts and agencies in matters such as unemployment compensation, wrongful termination, discrimination and other statutory claims. Students participate in all aspects of representation from interviewing through trial and appeal. Typically, the caseload of the Clinic is somewhere between 20 and 30 cases.

The ELC cooperates closely with the Legal Aid Society of Cleveland, taking many referrals from that office, exchanging briefs and decisions, and discussing legal and procedural issues. In the past year, the ELC’s assistance has been sought by the National Employment Law Project, a national advocacy organization for employment rights of lower-wage workers, on a couple of unemployment cases, including a case argued by Professor Kowalski in the Ohio Supreme Court. That was the second UC case in two years to be argued in the Ohio Supreme Court by the Clinic. Students have also argued UC cases in the Ohio Court of Appeals.

In addition to client representation, all students participate in weekly seminars. These seminars focus on the handling of specific cases and instruction in litigation skills.
The Environmental Law Clinic

The Environmental Law Clinic is offered for four credit hours once each academic year (it was last offered in Fall of 2011) and is instructed by Associate Dean and Professor Heidi Gorovitz Robertson. Enrollment is limited to six students and offers them the opportunity to do practical environmental legal work for local environmental non-profit corporations and government agencies. As in the other clinics, students engage in client interviews, factual investigation, specialized research, and occasional litigation support, although without litigation participation. Students meet regularly with the professor to address the legal, planning, and counseling skills necessary to meet client needs and maintain regular professional communications with their clients. In many projects, students interview and work with representatives of various administrative agencies. Each student, or team of students, prepares a comprehensive written research report, a copy of which is provided to the client. On several occasions, these reports were compiled into a published text. Students also engage in drafting legislation and ordinances, and in the preparation of reports regarding regional, national, and international environmental issues.

The Fair Housing Clinic

The Fair Housing Law Clinic is offered each semester for two, three or four credit hours. This Clinic works with Housing Advocates, Inc., a non-profit advocacy organization to provide representation of victims of housing discrimination in both state and federal judicial proceedings.

Adjunct Ed Kramer and attorneys employed by Housing Advocates are responsible for daily supervision of students. The students are provided with space at the offices of Housing Advocates, Inc., a few blocks from the College of Law. Professor Stephen Lazarus, who participates in the Clinic’s seminars, but does not participate in casework, supervises the Clinic.

The seminars encompass a review of pending matters, case evaluation and approaches, negotiation tactics, simulations of required litigation skills including examination and cross-examination of witnesses, substantive and procedural legal issues, and related issues of professionalism. One element of the student's evaluation for this clinic is based on participation in the seminars.

The General Civil Litigation Clinic

Clinical Professors Ken Kowalski and Doron Kalir will offer this new clinical course in Spring 2013 on an experimental basis. The course is designed to offer a broader litigation experience than that offered by the Employment Law Clinic; it will offer students an opportunity to engage in client representation across a wide variety of fields and on multiple levels. The Clinic will represent clients in short-term matters such as evictions, the collection of credit card debt and unemployment compensation in addition to cases that are longer and more complex such as asylum cases and public impact litigation. The course is one semester in length and offered for 3 or 4 credit hours.

Law and Public Policy Clinic

The College of Law offers the Law and Public Policy Clinic when an appropriate project is presented. At these times, the Clinic is offered for three to five credit hours in a single semester to students in the College of Law and is supervised by Professor Alan Weinstein.

The Transactional Law Clinic

The Transactional Law Clinic (formerly known as the Urban Development Law Clinic and the Community Advocacy Clinic), was first offered in 1993. The Clinic, traditionally, served neighborhood and community-based nonprofit corporations in Cleveland with corporate and business counsel. Most of the clinic’s clients are engaged in community and economic development, and the Clinic has developed a special expertise in that subject matter. Recently, the Clinic has also begun to represent small start-up businesses that cannot afford to engage legal counsel.

In size and complexity, the Clinic’s matters range from a legal memorandum on the application of a corporate governance issue to complex real estate development projects. Most of the legal services are provided pro bono; however, some services were provided under fee for service agreements at very modest rates prior to the 2011-12 academic year. Clinical Professor Carole Heyward teaches the Clinic.

The Clinic is usually engaged by its clients for specific projects or purposes. At any given time during a year, there are between 20 and 30 open client matters; most are from long term clients. While in the past students were usually required to take two semesters of the clinic, the clinic is moving to a one-semester model.

Before students may be enrolled in the clinic, potential students are interviewed and the time commitment of the clinic is discussed. Students need to have completed one-half of their law school curriculum before beginning clinical practice.

The Clinic’s educational method is experience-based learning in a real practice with real clients. The Clinic’s Manual states the Clinic’s requirements and operating procedures. Weekly seminars provide general guidance, while weekly individual supervision meetings provide specific personal direction and evaluation. Most students finish their clinical experience with valuable practical experience as lawyers.

Memorandum

To: C|M Law Faculty

From: Curriculum Committee

Date: April 23, 2012

Re: Proposed new standard for Experiential Skills Requirement

In the spring of 2011, the C|M Law faculty adopted several curriculum reforms. Those reforms included a revision to the current Skills Course Requirement. In the Memorandum from the Ad Hoc Curriculum Review Committee, that committee stated the following:

The committee proposes that our skills requirement be strengthened in two ways. First, we propose redefining the criteria so that only courses offering students an experiential approach to skills development satisfy this requirement. Second, we propose that students not be allowed to “double dip” requirements by automatically satisfying their skills requirement by taking any required 3rd semester Legal Writing course (except Scholarly Writing, which does not qualify as a skills requirement). (Memo, p. 20.)

The faculty adopted this proposal and referred the matter to the Curriculum Committee to formulate a revised standard. The Ad Hoc Committee did not suggest a specific standard, but did state the following:

Based on our preliminary consideration of the matter, however, we believe that an experiential skills course should, at a minimum, challenge students to apply their substantive and/or procedural knowledge in settings such as live client clinics, externships, oral advocacy competitions, and simulation courses in which students are given multiple opportunities to exercise various lawyering skills and receive individualized feedback on their assigned tasks. Another important characteristic of experiential courses is that every student has to interact personally and immediately with others to work towards resolution of a legal matter. (Memo, p. 21.)

The Curriculum Committee, working from the Ad Hoc Committee’s memorandum as a starting point, has formulated a revised Experiential Skills Course Requirement. Appearing below are: first, the existing (old) C|M Law skills course requirement (for purposes of reference); and second, the new, revised Experiential Skills Course Requirement proposed by the Curriculum Committee.
Current C/MIT Law Standard:

CRITERIA FOR SATISFYING
THE SKILLS COURSE REQUIREMENT

In order to graduate every student must complete one skills course “providing substantial instruction in professional skills generally regarded as necessary for effective and responsible participation in the legal profession. A professional skills course must engage each student in skills performances that are assessed by the instructor.”

This new requirement was prompted by the A.B.A. adding the professional skills requirement to those skills that we are already required to, and do, provide substantial instruction: substantive law, legal analysis and reasoning, legal research, problem solving and oral communication, writing in a legal context, and the professional ethics. See ABA Standard 302(a) (4). Examples of the types of professional skills contemplated by this new requirement are: “[t]rial and appellate advocacy, alternative methods of dispute resolution, consulting, interviewing, negotiating, problem solving, fact investigation, organization and management of legal work, and drafting.”
Interpretation 302-2 to A.B.A. Standard 302(a) (4), A.B.A. Standards for Approval of Law Schools (2007).

To satisfy the skills requirement a new course proposal must include the following description:

1. The skills taught,
2. The skills performances each student will engage in,
3. The class time devoted to those skills, and
4. How the professor will assess each student’s skills performance.

[End of Current Standard]

Proposed Revised Standard:

CRITERIA FOR SATISFYING
THE EXPERIENTIAL SKILLS COURSE REQUIREMENT

In order to graduate every student must complete one experiential skills course, as described below.

The C/MIT law faculty first adopted a skills course requirement in May 2008, prompted by the
A.B.A. adding a professional skills requirement. See ABA Standard 302(a)(4). Examples of the types of professional skills contemplated by the new requirement are: “[t]rial and appellate advocacy, alternative methods of dispute resolution, counseling\(^1\), interviewing, negotiating, problem solving, fact investigation, organization and management of legal work, and drafting.” Interpretation 302-2 to A.B.A. Standard 302(a) (4), A.B.A. Standards for Approval of Law Schools (2007).

In 2011, as part of a C|M law curriculum reform, the faculty decided to strengthen the existing skills requirement in two ways: (1) by redefining the criteria to require a more rigorous, experiential approach to skills development; and (2) by prohibiting students from using a single course to satisfy both the 3rd Semester Legal Writing requirement and skills requirement.

To satisfy the experiential skills course requirement, a course must meet the following criteria:

1. A substantial (at least 50% of class time) and regular part of the course consists of providing each student with multiple opportunities to engage in Experiential Learning.
2. Experiential Learning is defined as:
   a. exercising lawyering skills in real-world or simulated real-world settings,
   b. interacting personally and immediately with others to work toward resolution of a legal matter, and
   c. receiving substantial individualized feedback on the assigned lawyering skill tasks.
3. Examples of lawyering skills include:
   a. Trial advocacy
   b. Appellate advocacy
   c. Alternative dispute resolution
   d. Counseling
   e. Interviewing
   f. Negotiation
   g. Investigating and organizing facts
   h. Organization and management of legal work
   i. Drafting

The experiential skills requirement cannot be satisfied by the same course used to satisfy the 3rd Semester Legal Writing requirement.

\[\text{[End of Proposed Revised Standard]}\]

Near the end of the Curriculum Committee’s work on this revision, another question was raised with regard to “double dipping.” The proposed standard provides (following the faculty’s direction) that students may not “double dip” by using the same course to satisfy the 3rd Semester Legal Writing Requirement and the Experiential Skills Requirement. Once students are prohibited from doing this, there remains the possibility that students will "double dip" in a different way, namely by using the same course to satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement and the new Experiential Skills Course Requirement. (For example, a student in Moot Court would likely satisfy both.)

\(^{1}\) The existing standard quotes the word “consulting” here rather than “counseling.” That appears to be a transcription error, as Interpretation 302-2 to A.B.A. Standard 302(a)(4) uses the term “counseling” rather than “consulting.”

The Curriculum Committee did not incorporate any prohibition on this form of "double dipping" in the new standard, but the issue is highlighted here to make the faculty aware of it, and to allow for discussion of the matter.
C|M|LAW Externship Sites

Judicial

Students may work for a federal district court judge or magistrate, a federal appellate court judge, or a state appellate court judge. Externs are integrated into the work of the chambers: writing bench memos, drafting opinions, researching issues during trials, observing settlement conferences and mediations. Students also have the opportunity to observe proceedings in the courthouse which may include trials, sentencing hearings or oral arguments. We also have externships with specialized courts: the U.S. Department of Justice Immigration Court and The Office of Medicare Hearings and Appeals.

Government/Public Interest

These externships are placements with public interest, governmental, nonprofit or for-profit (but not a law firm engaged in the private practice of law) entities. They are in numerous subject areas: civil, criminal, education, health immigration, labor/employment, and tax and types of legal practices: litigation, in-house counsel, court. During an externship a student may have the opportunity to delve into substantive areas of law, investigate claims, research and write motions or briefs, draft contracts, and participate in hearings, observe trials, hearings, settlement conferences and negotiations. A. Introduction

The externship program provides our law students the opportunity to obtain practical legal experience while earning course credit. We place our students in settings where, under close supervision of an attorney or judge, they contribute to the on-going work of the office. This gives students the chance to learn the law by being active participants in the legal process. We also seek to ensure that externs are afforded the opportunity to observe legal proceedings in which the office is engaged so that they receive broad exposure to the legal system. In some externships, particularly those that involve providing legal assistance to financially need clients or representing the state, students who obtain a Legal Intern Certificate may have the opportunity to appear and represent clients in court.

Our externship placements are with government organizations such as the EEOC, FTC, and the U.S. Attorney’s Office; judicial offices; non-profit/public interest organizations such as Legal Aid; and corporate legal offices with companies such as Forest City Enterprises and Parker Hannifin. Additional information and a full list of our externship placement sites can be found on the law school website https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/externships.

The Office of Career Planning coordinates the externship program, and uses Symplicity (https://law-csuohio-csm.symplicity.com/students/) to provide information and collect applications for externships.

B. Externship Program Rules and Requirements

1. Eligibility

A student must be currently enrolled at C|M|LAW.

For all externships the student must have completed 29 semester hours, substantially all of our Required Core Curriculum,\(^1\) have a GPA of 2.5 or better, and obtain approval of the site supervisor. Completion of the 29 semester hours allows full-time first year students to participate in externships the summer after their first year. Some externships have additional requirements such as background investigations, additional required courses or a different minimum GPA.

Students must complete an application and release of information form. Students should list at least three preferences. If students do not list preferences, the Office of Career Planning will suggest an appropriate externship placement sites based on the student’s stated career goals.

Students must have an in-person visit with an advisor in the Office of Career Planning before submitting a completed externship application.

\(^1\) Our Required Core Curriculum consists of the first year courses (Civil Procedure, Contracts, Criminal Law, Property, Torts, and Legal Research Writing and Advocacy) as well as Constitutional Law.
2. Guidelines

In compliance with ABA Standard 305 no student participating in the externship program shall request or accept compensation from the placement site. Under certain circumstances students may be reimbursed for any out of pocket expenses they incur in carrying out their duties at the placement sites.

Students may not participate in an externship and a clinic during the same semester. See Academic Regulation 4.8.

Students may not enroll in the same externship more than once, including Judicial Externships.

Students may not enroll in more than one externship per semester.

Placements at private law firms are not permitted.

Students may enroll in a total of 17 credits in externships and clinics throughout their law school career. See Academic Regulation 4.3.

Students may not apply for externships that will result in a conflict of interest including, but not limited to:
   a. Simultaneous work for a public defender’s or prosecutor’s office and a judicial externship in the same court system;
   b. A judicial Externship in a court where the student is involved in a case pending before the court;
   c. Such other simultaneous enrollments as the Office of Career Planning or the Associate Dean may determine constitutes a conflict.

Students that do not adhere to the rules and requirements of the externship program may be prohibited from participating in future externships.

3. Credits

Students must complete the required number of hours and participate in the Externship Seminar before credit is awarded.

In the fall or spring 14-week term, students must work 16 hours/week (224 hours total) to receive 4 credits or 24 hours/week (336 hours total) to receive 6 credits.

In the 7-week summer term, students must work 24 hours/week (168 hours total) to receive 3 credits or 40 hours/week (280 hours total) to receive 5 credits.

The number of credits students may earn may also depend on the externship placement.
4. Externship Seminar

The Externship Seminar is taught by a full-time faculty member at the law school. Students must submit weekly written journals and make a presentation on the externship experience.

5. Grading

The externship seminar is graded Pass/Fail. The grade is based on several course requirements:

a. Satisfactory completion of the requisite number of working hours for credit hours;

b. Satisfactory completion of journals discussing work;

c. Oral presentation on work experience at a Seminar meeting;

d. Receipt of site supervisor’s evaluation of your work (which must be satisfactory); and

e. Receipt of your evaluation of the externship and the course.

6. Withdrawal

The Office of Career Planning will allow students to withdraw applications until the application has been forwarded to the placement site. After applications have been forwarded to placement sites the student must contact the placement site to personally withdraw their own application. Students must also notify Jessica Mathewson in the Office of Career Planning of their withdrawal from the placement site. Externship employers rely on commitments made by students. Withdrawal after applications are forwarded should be made only under extraordinary circumstances.

C. Externship Placement Types

1. Judicial Externships

During Judicial Externships, externs are integrated into the work of the Judge’s chambers: writing bench memos, drafting opinions, researching issues during trials, observing settlement conferences and mediations. Students also have the opportunity to observe proceedings in the courthouse which may include trials, sentencing hearings or oral arguments. Students may receive credit for a Judicial Externship with the following courts:

Federal district court judge or magistrate judge (Northern District of Ohio)

Federal appellate court judge (6th Circuit)

We have externships with certain other judges in other courts (e.g., Judge Cooney and Judge Blackmon of the 8th Circuit and Chief Justice O’Connor of the Ohio Supreme Court). A list of judges participating as Judicial Externship Placement Sites is maintained in the Office of Career Planning.
2. Government/Public Interest/General Counsel

These externships are placements with public interest, governmental, nonprofit or for-profit entities (but not a law firm engaged in the private practice of law). There are numerous subject areas (civil, criminal, education, health, immigration, labor/employment, and tax) and types of legal practices (litigation, in-house counsel). During an externship a student may have the opportunity to delve into substantive areas of law, investigate claims, research and write motions or briefs, draft contracts, and participate in hearings, observe trials, hearings, settlement conferences, and negotiations.

A list of approved Government/Public Interest/General Counsel Placement Sites is maintained on the Externship webpage and in the Office of Career Planning.

3. Independent

C|M|LAW encourages students to pursue externships that relate closely to their personal career goals. Frequently, this can be achieved through placement in an existing externship. From time to time, however, students seek a more particularized experience. C|M|LAW supports students in their exploration of alternative placements through its Independent Externship program. The goals of the Independent Externship are to provide flexibility regarding the placement opportunities available for students while simultaneously maintaining C|M|LAW’s high standards for externships. We expect students to engage in work and receive supervision comparable to that of students in other externships. If interested, please talk with OCP first to make sure it would be an appropriate externship.

D. Application Procedures

1. Government/Public Interest/General Counsel/Judicial Externships
   a. Application Process

Students are expected to review externship descriptions on Symplicity and upload documents to Symplicity before the announced deadline date, but no more than one semester prior to the desired externship semester.

In addition, law students interested in applying for an externship must have an in-person visit with an advisor in the Office of Career Planning to (1) discuss externship options, (2) deliver a hard copy of the Externship Application and Release of Information Form, and (3) review their application documents before uploading to Symplicity. Students should contact Jessica Mathewson in the Office of Career Planning to arrange for this meeting. Externship applications will not be forwarded to placement sites unless the student has met with an advisor.

Finally, law students interested in applying for an externship are required to participate in the Office of Career Planning Mock Interview, and Interviewing Skills and Etiquette programs.
Directions for accessing Externships on Symplicity:

1. Login into Symplicity  https://law-csuohio-csm.symplicity.com/students/
2. Click on the “Jobs” tab at the top of the page
3. Click on the “Position Type” drop down menu in the search area (under “Keywords” drop down menu)
4. Click “Externships”
5. Review externship options and click on an externship that interests you
6. Review the attached description
7. When ready to apply click “APPLY” and upload required application documents
8. Click “Submit”

If you have questions about or are having trouble with Symplicity please contact Jessica Mathewson in the Office of Career Planning.

b. After receipt of applications

Upon receipt of a completed Externship Application, the Office of Career Planning will evaluate the application materials to determine whether the student has met of the requirements for the externship.

All completed externship applications will be forwarded to the appropriate placement site in accordance with their application deadlines. Note: The deadline dates for Externships may vary by site.

Some externship sites will make offers based on application materials alone, and others will interview students first. In most cases, the externship placement sites will contact students directly to arrange interviews. In few cases, the externship placement sites will ask the Office of Career Planning to arrange interviews. Calls/Emails from the externship placement site or the Office of Career Planning to set up an interview should be promptly returned by students within 48 hours.

Students must accept or decline offers in a professional manner within three business days.

After the student has accepted the placement site offer and discussed hours/credits with the placement site, the placement site and law student must contact the Office of Career Planning to confirm acceptance and hours/credits requested.

2. Independent Externships

Cleveland-Marshall encourages students to pursue externships that relate closely to their personal career goals. Frequently, this can be achieved through placement in an existing externship. From time to time, however, students seek a more particularized experience. Cleveland-Marshall supports students in their exploration of alternative placements through its Independent Externship program. The goals of the Independent Externship are to provide flexibility regarding the placement opportunities available for students while simultaneously maintaining Cleveland-Marshall’s high standards for externships. If you are interested in pursuing an independent externship, please contact OCP prior to contacting the potential placement site in order to discuss the opportunity and review the process and procedure for independent externships.

Version 12/15/2011
Summary of Independent Externship Policies and Procedures:

a. Student must identify an organization that addresses one’s desired area of interest
b. Student must contact the organization to determine whether an attorney is available to assign and mentor the student’s work and to coordinate with the Faculty Advisor
c. Student must submit two documents to the Associate Dean for Administration at least 30 days before the first day of registration for the term (1) a written proposal detailing the externship and (2) a Statement of Understanding signed by the Supervising Attorney.
d. Upon approval of an Independent Externship, the Faculty Advisor will meet with the Supervising Attorney to further discuss the goals and objectives of the externship program.

See Appendix D for a memorandum that fully explains independent externship policies and procedures.

E. Registering for an Externship

Students may not register for the Externship Seminar class until the Office of Career Planning has received confirmation from the student and the placement site regarding acceptance and hours/credits requested. Once confirmation is received the student will be sent an email with a link for registration in the Externship Seminar.

F. Ohio Legal Intern Certificate

Students who have completed 60 credit hours may be eligible to obtain certification from the Ohio Supreme Court to represent, with certain restrictions and limitations, individuals in civil or criminal cases (including felony cases). The student must be “employed by or associated with a law school clinic, legal aid bureau, public defender's office, or other legal services organization that provides legal assistance primarily to financially needy individuals, or is responsible for handling civil cases or prosecuting criminal misdemeanor cases for the state of Ohio or a municipal corporation.” Rule II of the Ohio Supreme Court Rules for the Government of the Bar of Ohio, Limited Practice of Law by a Legal Intern. This rule specifies the eligibility requirements, application process, scope of representation, and other related matters:

Rule II : The Office of Bar Admissions may issue a legal intern certificate to an applicant who is eligible under the rule and files a completed application. The Legal Intern has limited scope of authority and may not request or accept compensation for him/her.

Organizations that may participate in this program include, but are not limited to, the Students who are doing an externship with a State agency or public interest organization (e.g., Cuyahoga County Prosecutor’s Office, Cuyahoga County Public Defender, Lorain County Prosecutor’s Office, and The Legal Aid Society) may wish to apply early in their third year for the Legal Intern Certificate.

For more information please review the full text of Rule II, which can be found at http://www.supremecourt.ohio.gov/AttySvcs/admissions/interns/default.asp
G. Evaluations

1. Student Performance Evaluations

The externship placement site supervisory attorney will complete a final student performance evaluation. Students are responsible for ensuring that the student performance evaluation is completed and returned to the Faculty Advisor by the Supervising Attorney. Students will not be awarded a grade until the student performance evaluation is completed and returned to the Faculty Advisor.

2. Student Site Evaluations

Student externs must complete an externship site placement evaluation.

3. Seminar/Faculty Advisor Evaluations

Student externs must complete an evaluation of the Seminar/Faculty Advisor.

H. Faculty Advisor Guidelines

Each academic year the Faculty Advisor will visit in person each placement site where a student is externing. For sites that have externs in successive semesters, the Faculty Advisor need not visit in person every term, but may contact the externship placement supervisor by telephone. For externships that are outside of the State of Ohio (e.g., Independent Externships), the Faculty Advisor may contact the externship supervisor by telephone or ask a faculty member from another law school to visit the site.

The Faculty Advisor is responsible for the administration of the Externship Seminar class.

The Faculty Advisor will award a pass/fail grade for each student based on the following course requirements:

a. Satisfactory completion of the requisite number of working hours for credit hours;
b. Satisfactory completion of journals discussing work;
c. Oral presentation on work experience at a Seminar meeting;
d. Receipt of site supervisor’s evaluation of your work (which must be satisfactory); and
e. Receipt of your evaluation of the externship and the course.

The Faculty Advisor will not issue a grade unless all course requirements are met.

If the Faculty Advisor (following consultation with all parties) believes that the externship is not operating satisfactorily (and the situation cannot be remedied), the Faculty Advisor, in consultation with the Office of Career Planning and the Associate Dean may terminate the externship.

I. Externship Placement Site Expectations

The externship program provides our law students the opportunity to obtain practical legal experience while earning course credit. We place our students in settings where, under close supervision of an attorney or judge, they contribute to the on-going work of the office. This gives students the chance to learn the law by being active participants in the legal process. We also seek to ensure that externs are afforded the opportunity to observe legal proceedings in which the office is engaged so that they receive broad exposure to the legal system.

The type of work in which a student engages varies depending on the placement. Most often students conduct legal research and draft motions, memoranda of law, or appellate briefs. When working in a judge’s chamber, they may write bench memos in preparation for hearings on cases or draft orders and opinions. In some placements they may conduct client or witness interviews, engage in document review or other types of fact investigation, or draft contracts.

The Supervising Attorney must screen any work product released to the Faculty Advisor so that disclosure does not jeopardize the attorney-client privilege or create any other potential conflicts of interest or ethical concerns.

Upon completion of the externship, the Supervising Attorney will evaluate the student’s performance on a form provided by C|M| LAW.

Independent Externship Memorandum

Policies and Procedures for Independent Externships

I. Policy Statement

C|M|LAW has a long tradition of providing externship programs for its law students. For more than a decade, students have been placed with the U.S. Attorney’s Office, the Federal Public Defender’s Office, state appellate court judges and federal district and appellate court judges. These placements provide students with a unique opportunity to improve their writing, research and oral communication skills, to appreciate the significant ethical issues facing the profession, and to integrate what they learn in the classroom with the actual practice of law. For the externs to fully achieve these goals, and in order for the program to meet ABA/AALS accreditation standards, significant supervision is required by an attorney at the placement site (referred to as the “Supervising Attorney”) and the Faculty Advisor responsible for the externship program during the relevant term. Externships are further distinguished from other employment situations in that compensation cannot be paid for the student’s services.

C|M|LAW encourages students to pursue externships that relate closely to their personal career goals. Frequently, this can be achieved through placement in an existing externship. From time to time, however, students seek a more particularized experience. C|M|LAW supports students in their exploration of alternative placements through its Independent Externship program. Students have secured Independent Externships at various sites, including the Cleveland NAACP, Fair Housing Council of Northeast Ohio, HUD, IMG, Lincoln Electric, the Alaska Public Defender’s Office, the Ohio American Civil Liberties Union, and in many other governmental and nonprofit settings across the country.²

The goals of the Independent Externship are to provide flexibility regarding the placement opportunities available for students while simultaneously maintaining C|M|LAW’s historically high standards for externships. We expect students to engage in work and receive supervision comparable to that of students in other externships. Most often, students conduct legal research and draft motions, memoranda of law, or appellate briefs. When working in a judge’s chambers³, they may write bench memos in preparation for hearings on cases or draft orders and opinions. In some placements, they may conduct client or witness interviews, or engage in discovery and document review or other types of fact investigation. A key aspect of every externship is close supervision by a designated attorney at the placement. We expect that the supervisor will keep track of the quantity and quality of the student’s assignments throughout the semester. As is true in any law setting, we expect the student will discuss her findings with the person who made the assignment, if different from the supervisor. In addition, the supervisor will review and comment on the student’s work throughout the term so that the student hones her/his professional skills, be they written or oral, and expands her/his understanding of professional responsibilities. We also encourage supervisors to involve externs in the work of the office outside of the particular assignments, e.g., observing depositions, trials, sentencing hearings, or other appropriate proceedings.

³ Students need to talk to OCP first before arranging an externship with a judge with whom we do not have an existing relationship in order to ensure the externship fits within C|M|LAW’s criteria for judicial externships.

With those objectives in mind, we have adopted the procedures stated below to govern the approval and implementation of Independent Externships.

II. Procedures

A. Prerequisites:

1. Completion of 29 semester hours.
2. Completion of substantially all of our Required Core Curriculum.
3. Have a cumulative GPA of 2.50 or above.
4. Obtain approval from site supervisor.
5. Obtain approval from the Associate Dean for Administration.

B. Procedures for obtaining approval of an Independent Externship:

1. A student who has identified a particular area of law in which he or she would like to gain experience—for example, poverty law or civil liberties—should identify an organization that addresses that area of law. Placements at private law firms are not permitted.

2. The student should contact the organization to determine whether an attorney is available who is willing and able to assign and mentor the student’s work and to coordinate supervisory efforts with the Faculty Advisor for externships.

3. The student must submit two documents to the Associate Dean for Administration at least 30 days before the first day of registration for the term in which the proposed externship, if approved, will commence: (a) a written proposal detailing the externship and (b) a Statement of Understanding signed by the Supervising Attorney.

The written proposal shall include the following:

a) a description of the organization;

b) a description of the legal work the extern will do (e.g., client interviews, legal research, drafting documents or memos, court appearances, etc.).

---

4 Students may only accompany an attorney to observe unless the student has obtained a Legal Intern Certificate.

Version 12/15/2011
c) the tentative work schedule the extern has negotiated with the organization, including the days of the week and the hours on those days;\(^5\)

d) an explanation of the educational benefits that the extern believes will result from the placement;

e) the Supervising Attorney’s name, position within the organization, address, e-mail address, and phone number;

f) a statement that the student and Supervising Attorney have considered and discussed any anticipated conflicts of interest, impact on the attorney-client privilege between the organization and its clients, and other ethical concerns that the placement might raise; and

g) any other information the student deems relevant to the proposal or specifically requested by the externship committee or member thereof.

h) A copy of the Statement of Understanding that the Supervising Attorney must sign is attached.

4. Upon receipt of the written proposal, the Associate Dean for Administration will review the proposal and either approve it, deny it, or return it to the student with a request to provide additional information.

5. The Associate Dean’s denial of a proposal is final and is not appealable to the Dean of the law school, the faculty, or any committee thereof.

C. Procedures following approval of an externship:

1. Upon approval of an Independent Externship, the Faculty Advisor for the externship program during the relevant term will meet with the Supervising Attorney to further discuss the goals and objectives of the externship program. The externship Faculty Advisor will also be available throughout the course of the semester to answer questions and receive feedback from the Supervising Attorney.

2. The extern is required to attend the Externship Seminar conducted by the Faculty Advisor for the externship program. The Faculty Advisor, at the commencement of each term, determines the specific dates and times of the seminars. For externships outside of the Cleveland area, the student must meet with the Faculty Advisor prior to leaving Cleveland and make alternative arrangements.

\(^5\) Students may participate in the externship program during the fall, during or summer terms. During the fourteen-week fall or spring terms, a student must work 16 hours per week (for 4 credits) or 24 hours per week (for 6 credits). In the seven-week summer term students work 24 hours per week (for 3 credits) or 40 hours per week (for 5 credits).
3. Each extern will be required to maintain a journal that chronicles and reflects on work assignments at the placement. The journal must be submitted to the Faculty Advisor on a weekly basis. The Faculty Advisor, at the commencement of the externship, will announce specifics as to the form and content of the journal.

4. Final drafts of the student’s work product will be submitted to the Faculty Advisor for review. The extern and Supervising Attorney must screen any work product released to the Faculty Advisor so that disclosure does not jeopardize the attorney-client privilege or create any other potential conflicts of interest or ethical concerns.

5. The Supervising Attorney shall closely monitor the student’s work, making sure that the tasks assigned are consistent with the goals and objectives of Cleveland-Marshall’s externship program, and providing meaningful feedback to the student. Upon completion of the externship, the Supervising Attorney will evaluate the student’s performance on a form provided by Cleveland-Marshall.

6. The Faculty Advisor will conduct an onsite visit, if feasible (depending on the location of the externship), during the course of the externship. Otherwise, the Faculty Advisor will speak with the supervisor via telephone.

7. Grading is pass/fail based upon the student’s compliance with the externship requirements as outlined herein and the evaluation provided by the Supervising Attorney.

CM Professionalism Problem of the Semester

Bill Fisher graduated from Cleveland-Marshall five years ago. Having greatly enjoyed his experience in the school's Fair Housing Law Clinic Fisher hoped to continue the representation of indigent clients. Shortly after passing the bar, Fisher was hired as an associate by the private law firm of Carter and Carmel. Senior partner Stuart Carter told Fisher that associates are allowed to do pro bono work under the auspices of the firm as long as that work did not interfere with the other work assigned to the associates or in any way embarrass the firm. Carter reminded Fisher of the firm’s commitment to the highest ethical standards and said that the firm’s standard applied equally to paying and pro bono clients. Fisher has honored that commitment and over the years Carter has become a mentor to him.

Fisher is just concluding his pro bono representation of Mary Snider, a tenant who claimed that her Landlord, as a matter of course, had been willing to accept monthly rent as late as ten days after the due date from almost all tenants, but not from Snider. Snider is the only tenant of her race in the building. She claimed that Landlord was guilty of discrimination by bringing an eviction action against her when she was five days late in tendering her rent. Fisher defended Snider in the eviction action, claiming that Landlord had implicitly agreed to accept late rent payments from all tenants. Fisher also filed a counterclaim on Snider’s behalf alleging race discrimination under the state and federal fair housing statutes.

Prior to trial Fisher negotiated a settlement with landlord in which Landlord agreed to pay Snider $500 for her "inconvenience" but refusing to admit discrimination. The settlement allowed Snider to remain in her apartment, rent free, for six months after signing the settlement, at which point Snider must voluntarily vacate the premises.

After Snider thanked Fisher and they shook hands, Snider informed Fisher that she still believes she was the victim of discrimination. As a way of "getting even" with Landlord, Snider has decided to remain in the apartment after the six-month period. Snider now understands - on the basis of what Fisher had explained to her about landlord-tenant law and practice - that it will take Landlord several months after the six-month period expires to evict her for non-payment. Fisher counsels Snider not to violate the settlement agreement, and warns Snider that Landlord could be awarded monetary damages if Snider does not honor the settlement. Snider tells Fisher that she does not fear a money judgment resulting from the future non-payment case because she intends to move to another city and does not think Landlord will be able to find her.

What should Fisher do?

Authorities for Professionalism Problem of the Semester Fall 2012

Excerpts from the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct

PREAMBLE: A LAWYER’S RESPONSIBILITIES

[1] As an officer of the court, a lawyer not only represents clients but has a special responsibility for the quality of justice. ***

[4] In all professional functions a lawyer should be competent, prompt, diligent, and loyal. A lawyer should maintain communication with a client concerning the representation. A lawyer should keep in confidence information relating to representation of a client except so far as disclosure is required or permitted by the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct or other law. ***

[9] The Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct often prescribe rules for a lawyer’s conduct. Within the framework of these rules, however, many difficult issues of professional discretion can arise. These issues must be resolved through the exercise of sensitive professional and moral judgment guided by the basic principles underlying the rules.

RULE 1.2: SCOPE OF REPRESENTATION AND ALLOCATION OF AUTHORITY BETWEEN CLIENT AND LAWYER

(a) Subject to divisions (c), (d), and (e) of this rule, a lawyer shall abide by a client’s decisions concerning the objectives of representation and ... shall consult with the client as to the means by which they are to be pursued. ***

(d) A lawyer shall not counsel a client to engage, or assist a client, in conduct that the lawyer knows is illegal or fraudulent. A lawyer may discuss the legal consequences of any proposed course of conduct with a client and may counsel or assist a client in making a good faith effort to determine the validity, scope, meaning, or application of the law.

1 Rule 1.0(g) defines “Knowingly,” “known,” or “knows” as denoting “actual knowledge of the fact in question” which “may be inferred from circumstances.”
2 Rule 1.0(e) defines “Illegal” as denoting “criminal conduct or a violation of an applicable statute or administrative regulation.”
3 Rule 1.0(d) defines “Fraud” or “fraudulent” as denoting “conduct that has an intent to deceive and is either of the following:
   (1) an actual or implied misrepresentation of a material fact that is made either with knowledge of its falsity or with such utter disregard and recklessness about its falsity that knowledge may be inferred;
   (2) a knowing concealment of a material fact where there is a duty to disclose the material fact.”
Rule 1.2 Selected Comments

[9] Division (d) prohibits a lawyer from knowingly counseling or assisting a client to commit an illegal act or fraud. This prohibition, however, does not preclude the lawyer from giving an honest opinion about the actual consequences that appear likely to result from a client’s conduct. Nor does the fact that a client uses advice in a course of action that is illegal or fraudulent of itself make a lawyer a party to the course of action. There is a critical distinction between presenting an analysis of legal aspects of questionable conduct and recommending the means by which an illegal act or fraud might be committed with impunity.

[10] When the client’s course of action has already begun and is continuing, the lawyer’s responsibility is especially delicate. The lawyer is required to avoid assisting the client, for example, by drafting or delivering documents that the lawyer knows are fraudulent or by suggesting how the wrongdoing might be concealed. A lawyer may not continue assisting a client in conduct that the lawyer originally supposed was legally permissible but then discovers is improper.

RULE 1.6: CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION

(a) A lawyer shall not reveal information relating to the representation of a client, including information protected by the attorney-client privilege under applicable law, unless the client gives informed consent, the disclosure is impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation, or the disclosure is permitted by division (b) or required by division (c) of this rule.

(b) A lawyer may reveal information relating to the representation of a client, including information protected by the attorney-client privilege under applicable law, to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary for any of the following purposes:

1. to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm;
2. to prevent the commission of a crime by the client or other person;
3. to mitigate substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another that has resulted from the client’s commission of an illegal or fraudulent act, in furtherance of which the client has used the lawyer’s services;
4. to secure legal advice about the lawyer’s compliance with these rules;

[b and (6) omitted]

(c) A lawyer shall reveal information relating to the representation of a client, including information protected by the attorney-client privilege under applicable law, to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to comply with Rule ... 4.1.
Rule 1.6 Selected Comments

[6] Permitting lawyers to reveal information relating to the representation of clients may create a chilling effect on the client-lawyer relationship, and discourage clients from revealing confidential information to their lawyers at a time when the clients should be making a full disclosure. Although the public interest is usually best served by a strict rule requiring lawyers to preserve the confidentiality of information relating to the representation of their clients, the confidentiality rule is subject to limited exceptions. ... ***

[8] Division (b)(3) addresses the situation in which the lawyer does not learn of the illegal or fraudulent act of a client until after the client has used the lawyer’s services to further it. Although the client no longer has the option of preventing disclosure by refraining from the wrongful conduct [see Rule 4.1], there will be situations in which the loss suffered by the affected person can be mitigated. In such situations, the lawyer may disclose information relating to the representation to the extent necessary to enable the affected persons to mitigate or recoup their losses. ... ***

RULE 4.1: TRUTHFULNESS IN STATEMENTS TO OTHERS

In the course of representing a client a lawyer shall not knowingly do either of the following:

(a) make a false statement of material fact or law to a third person;

(b) fail to disclose a material fact when disclosure is necessary to avoid assisting an illegal or fraudulent act by a client.

Rule 4.1 Selected Comments

[3] Under Rule 1.2(d), a lawyer is prohibited from counseling or assisting a client in conduct that the lawyer knows is illegal or fraudulent. Rule 4.1(b) requires a lawyer to disclose a material fact, including one that may be protected by the attorney-client privilege, when the disclosure is necessary to avoid the lawyer’s assistance in the client’s illegal or fraudulent act. See also Rule 8.4(c). The client can, of course, prevent such disclosure by refraining from the wrongful conduct. If the client persists, the lawyer usually can avoid assisting the client’s illegal or fraudulent act by withdrawing from the representation. If withdrawal is not sufficient to avoid such assistance, division (b) of the rule requires disclosure of material facts necessary to prevent the assistance of the client’s illegal or fraudulent act. Such disclosure may include disaffirming an opinion, document, affirmation, or the like, or may require further disclosure to avoid being deemed to have assisted the client’s illegal or fraudulent act. Disclosure is not required unless the lawyer is unable to withdraw or the client is using the lawyer’s work product to assist the client’s illegal or fraudulent act.

[4] Division (b) of this rule addresses only ongoing or future illegal or fraudulent acts of a client.
RULE 8.4: MISCONDUCT

It is professional misconduct for a lawyer to do any of the following:

(a) violate or attempt to violate the Ohio Rules of Professional Conduct, \textit{knowingly} assist or induce another to do so, or do so through the acts of another; ...

(c) engage in conduct involving dishonesty, \textit{fraud}, deceit, or misrepresentation;

(d) engage in conduct that is prejudicial to the administration of justice; ...
NEW COURSE PROPOSALS

MEMORANDUM

TO: Persons Interested in Proposing a New Course at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

FROM: Phyllis L. Crocker, Professor of Law and Associate Dean for Academic Affairs

RE: New Course Proposals

DATE: 11 November 2008

Individuals interested in teaching a new course at Cleveland–Marshall must present a proposal to the Curriculum Committee for its approval. Proposals must be submitted no later than the end of the second week of classes in the semester prior to the one in which you wish to teach the course. If the Committee approves the course, the Dean’s office will determine, in consultation with the individual, if and when the course may be offered.

The proposal must contain the following: a complete description of the proposed course, including the subject matter and goals of the course, the number of credits sought, the basis for assigning a grade in the course. It is advisable to include the proposed textbook, a tentative syllabus, and list of readings.

In deciding the number of credit hours, consider the scope of the course as well as the class meeting times. In the fall and spring semesters, two credit hour courses typically meet once a week for one hour forty minutes; three credit hour courses typically meet twice a week for one hour fifteen minutes per session, a three credit hour course could also meet once a week, on a Saturday for example, for two and one-half hours. A seminar or other upper level course that requires preparation of a ULWR paper (see attachment D) may meet for the hours required for a two credit course while offering the course for three credits.

In the summer term, a two-credit course meets twice a week for one hour forty minutes; a three-credit course meets three times a week for one hour forty minutes, or twice a week for two and one-half hours. The summer term is only seven weeks long, hence the longer class times.

1 This memo is based on an April 19, 2004 memo from Peter Garlock, Chair of the Curriculum Committee to the faculty, and has been supplemented as policies have changed.

2 A professor may also permit students to take a seminar or upper level course for two credits if a student does not write a paper satisfying the ULWR and for three credits if a student writes a paper satisfying the requirement.
Depending on the type of course, you may also want to consider whether it satisfies our criteria for designation as an administrative law course (see Attachment A), as a perspective course (see Attachment B), as a seminar (see Attachment C) or a skills course (see Attachment E). If so, your description must include a statement of how the course will satisfy that requirement. [Note: The administrative law designation has been deleted in accordance with curricular reforms adopted in 2012.]

In deciding the basis for assigning a grade in the course you have a number of options to consider: a final examination (in-class or take-home), a final paper, a series of small papers or quizzes, group or individual presentations, or a combination. In addition you might want to count class participation as part of the final grade, or if students will participate in group exercises, you will want to decide how to grade those. You must identify your basis for assigning grades in the course.

If you decide that you want students to submit a paper, you may consider whether you want the paper to count toward satisfying the Upper Level Writing Requirement (see Attachment D). Each student must complete the ULWR in order to graduate. Typically, students satisfy the ULWR through independent study with a faculty member or a seminar. If you want the course paper to satisfy the ULWR you must explain how you will accomplish that.

If the Committee votes to approve the course, the course shall be approved on an experimental basis. The Spring or Fall semester after teaching the course the instructor shall inform the Committee whether the course should be adopted permanently. In the absence of a request for permanent approval, the course shall be dropped from the curriculum. An instructor seeking permanent approval shall provide the Committee with a statement indicating why the course is successful enough to be continued, a syllabus for the course, a list of readings if possible, whether and how the course has changed from its original conception, and anything else relevant to the committee’s decision. At that point the Committee shall decide whether the course shall be adopted on a permanent basis or discontinued. The Committee shall report that decision to the faculty. Unless there is faculty objection, the course shall become a permanent part of our law school course offerings and shall be added to the Student Handbook.

For good cause an instructor may seek approval of the Committee to teach the course a second time as an experimental course before requesting approval as a permanent course.
ATTACHMENT A

DESCRIPTION OF, AND CRITERIA FOR, THE PERSPECTIVE COURSE

The basic goal of a perspective course is to provide students with a viewpoint on the nature and function of law that is different from traditional doctrinal analysis of American law, whether that analysis involves cases, statutes, codes, constitutions, or other traditional sources of law. A perspective course should help students understand how law shapes and is shaped by forces outside the legal system, including such forces as economics, politics, culture, ideas, society, and religion. Many students come to law school with deficient training in the humanities and social sciences, and a perspective course may help them understand how other disciplines illuminate the study of law. Students can also gain understanding of how our legal system works by studying another legal system or body of law, or by studying the theory or history of law.

It is important to note what a perspective course is not. The course is not intended to be a study of a traditional law subject that incidentally draws on the methodology of another discipline. It is not intended merely to investigate a specialized area of law or the law as it applies to a particular group of people. The course is not designed merely to provide an introduction to the institutions of American government, including courts, or to methods of legal analysis. Such courses, while important and useful, do not provide the kind of broadening experience that forces students to reflect critically on the nature of law or legal institutions.

Criteria

A perspective course should meet one of the following criteria:

1. A study of the theory of law, including courses that examine theory from a critical perspective.

2. A study of the history of law and legal institutions.

3. A study of law with the primary focus on the methodology of another intellectual discipline, such as economics or social science.

4. A study of the law of another legal system, for example, national, regional, international, or religious. Such courses should, where possible, have a focus that enables students to compare American law and legal institutions with those of other arenas.

CRITERIA FOR DESIGNATION OF A COURSE AS A SEMINAR

1. A seminar is a small class, enrollment in which should normally not exceed fifteen students, that is designed to examine intensively a single topic or a limited range of topics within a general area of law. A seminar is not designed to offer a comprehensive survey of a field of law.

2. A seminar is designed to foster maximum interchange in discussion between students and instructor and among students.

3. A seminar shall require a substantial paper or equivalent written product.

4. A grade in a seminar may be based entirely on the paper, or on some combination of a paper, class participation, final examination, or other relevant factors.

5. A seminar may be given for two or three credits.

UPPER LEVEL WRITING REQUIREMENT

The purpose of the Upper Level Writing Requirement is to have each student undertake at least one rigorous writing experience prior to graduation, in addition to Legal Writing, Research and Advocacy (L504) and the third semester of legal writing. Although the focus of this requirement is writing skills, effective legal writing requires application of the broad spectrum of skills essential to effective lawyering generally. Thus, research, analysis, and organization are important components in the preparation of any quality product of legal writing. For this reason, the goal of the Upper Level Writing Requirement is to require each student to demonstrate his or her ability to apply each of these skills in producing one substantial, cohesive piece of legal writing prior to graduating from law school.

1. Students may satisfy this requirement by completion of any one of the following:

   a. A seminar for which a paper is required;
   b. A specially designated upper level course for which a paper is required or offered for writing credit; or
   c. An appropriate two or three semester-hour Independent Legal Research (L860) project.

2. The Upper Level Writing Requirement is satisfied by the completion of a paper, brief, casenote, or other piece of legal writing that combines writing, research, analytical and organizational skills into one substantial written product under the direction of a faculty supervisor. As a general rule, “faculty supervisor” means full-time tenured or tenure-track faculty member, full-time legal writing professor, or full-time clinical professor.

3. What constitutes a “substantial” written product is left to the discretion of the instructor, subject to review by the Curriculum Committee at the time the course is submitted for approval.

4. To complete the Upper Level Writing Requirement, it is assumed that the student will undertake exhaustive library or other approved investigation under the supervision of a faculty supervisor.

---

5 The Upper Level Writing Requirements were approved by the faculty in November 1997 and amended in May 1999.

6 Please note the following as a point of comparison for courses other than Independent Research in which a student may satisfy the ULWR:

   The text page minimum for Independent Legal Research (L860) projects completed to satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement should ordinarily be 12 to 15 double-spaced pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, per credit hour, but in no case less than 10 pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, per credit hour. Faculty may, in their discretion, define a “page” in terms of font size, margins, approximate number of words, etc.

faculty member. In order to insure a meaningful one-on-one consultation and critique between the student and instructor, it is strongly urged that the instructor:

a. Require the student to meet regularly with the faculty sponsor during the course of the project;
b. Require the student doing an Independent Legal Research (L860) project to obtain the faculty sponsor’s written approval of a proposal prior to signing up for credit;
c. Require the student to submit and discuss an outline of the writing project prior to commencing the first draft;
d. Provide written comments concerning submitted drafts and discuss those comments in a meeting with the student;
e. Require the student to submit a detailed research path of one or two pages with the rough draft, indicating the full extent of the student’s research and sources used and showing unproductive investigation as well as that which produces materials bearing on the problem;
f. Require the student to familiarize himself or herself with the concept of plagiarism;
g. Make clear to the student that the Upper Level Writing Requirement is unrelated to, and independent of, any non-curricular requirements, such as those needed for acceptance of the paper by a student journal.

5. Any instructor wishing to designate a course as satisfying the Upper Level Writing Requirement must first obtain authorization from the Curriculum Committee.

6. Faculty have discretion, while awarding a passing grade to a student enrolled in a course to determine that nonetheless the student has not satisfied the Upper Level Writing Requirement. Students should be advised of this faculty option.

7. Copies of papers submitted in satisfaction of the Upper Level Writing Requirement shall be retained by the administration in the same manner as final examinations.
ATTACHMENT D

CRITERIA FOR SATISFYING
THE SKILLS COURSE REQUIREMENT

In order to graduate every student must complete one skills course “providing substantial instruction in professional skills generally regarded as necessary for effective and responsible participation in the legal profession. A professional skills course must engage each student in skills performances that are assessed by the instructor.”

This new requirement was prompted by the A.B.A. adding the professional skills requirement to those skills that we are already required to, and do, provide substantial instruction: substantive law, legal analysis and reasoning, legal research, problem solving and oral communication, writing in a legal context, and the professional ethics. See ABA Standard 302(a) (4). Examples of the types of professional skills contemplated by this new requirement are: “[t]rial and appellate advocacy, alternative methods of dispute resolution, consulting, interviewing, negotiating, problem solving, fact investigation, organization and management of legal work, and drafting.” Interpretation 302-2 to A.B.A. Standard 302(a) (4), A.B.A. Standards for Approval of Law Schools (2007).

To satisfy the experiential skills course requirement, a course must meet the following criteria:

1. A substantial (at least 50% of class time) and regular part of the course consists of providing each student with multiple opportunities to engage in Experiential Learning.

2. Experiential Learning is defined as:

   a. exercising lawyering skills in real-world or simulated real-world settings,
   b. interacting personally and immediately with others to work toward resolution of a legal matter, and
   c. receiving substantial individualized feedback on the assigned lawyering skill tasks.

3. Examples of lawyering skills include:

   a. Trial advocacy
   b. Advocacy before appellate courts, administrative agencies, or legislative bodies
   c. Alternative dispute resolution
   d. Counseling
   e. Interviewing
   f. Negotiation

Adopted by the faculty as a new graduation requirement on May 8, 2008. This requirement applies to students admitted to the College of Law beginning in the 2008-09 academic year.

Adopted by the faculty on April 26, 2012.
g. Investigating and organizing facts
h. Organization and management of legal work
i. Drafting

A proposal to create a course that satisfies the skills requirement must include the following description:

1. The skills taught,
2. The skills performances each student will engage in,
3. The class time devoted to those skills, and
4. How the professor will assess each student’s skills performance.
COMMITTEE REPORT

To: The Faculty

From: The Special Committee to Evaluate the LCOP Program

(Professor April Cherry; Daniel Dropko, Academic Excellence Program Manager; Professor Kathleen Engel; Sandra English, Coordinator of Law Admissions and Multicultural Recruitment; Professor and Associate Dean for Faculty Development and Student Achievement Patti Falk (chair); Professor Steve Gard; Inga Laurent, Manager of Student Affairs; Gary Williams, Director of Bar Preparation and Academic Support, and Aja Brooks, student member)

Date: April 24, 2009

Background

In the fall of 2008, Dean Geoff Mearns appointed the Special Committee to Evaluate the LCOP Program, and charged the committee as follows: “This Committee should, in consultation with the Admissions Committee, evaluate and propose appropriate modifications to the current LCOP summer program.” The Special Committee consisted of three faculty members with an interest in the LCOP program (Kathleen Engel, the chair of Admissions Committee, April Cherry and Steve Gard, long-time members of the Admissions Committee), two former LCOP students (Sandra English and Inga Laurent), two staff members who had taught part of the LCOP program (Gary Williams and Daniel Dropko), and a current LCOP student, Aja Brooks. The Committee considered a number of proposals regarding LCOP: (1) whether we should adopt a conditional admission LCOP program, (2) whether we should expand the “LCOP” class to include some regular admission students, (3) whether we should change LCOP by altering the credit hours of instruction and/or the content of the course, and (4) whether we should offer a one-credit LCOP course in the fall. This report summarizes the Committee’s work during the 2008-2009 academic year.

1. Should We Adopt a Conditional Admission LCOP Program?

The Committee first considered a proposal to change Cleveland-Marshall’s LCOP program from a regular admission to a conditional admission program. A conditional admission model is one whereby a larger number of students are admitted in the summer and then that number is reduced so that a smaller number of students are permitted to enroll in the fall semester. In other words, admission into law school proper is conditioned upon some benchmark of performance during the summer. We researched what other schools were doing in terms of conditional admission programs and discussed this idea over two meetings.

The Committee perceived two possible benefits of such a program. The strongest benefit is the recognition that the LCOP admissions process is difficult because LCOP students, by definition, do not display the traditional indicia for law school success. A conditional admission program would provide additional data (i.e., grades for one law school class taken during the summer) which might be useful in making more accurate predictions about which students are likely to succeed in law school. Second, a conditional admission program would allow Cleveland-Marshall to give a larger number of students a chance to go to law school. Thus, we could conditionally admit 40 (rather than 20) students in the summer, providing 20 more students with at least an opportunity to attend law school.

The Committee identified several negative aspects of a conditional admission program. First, such a program would require the weeding out of a significant number of students after a relatively short period of time (i.e., seven weeks during the summer). Some committee members believed that the result was an inadequate amount of time to assess students' potential for success. This “hunch” was supported by the data (see part 3 below) that students’ first-year GPA, but not their first-semester GPA, is highly correlated with their final law school GPA. Second, a conditional admission program might impose a relative hardship on students by requiring them to quit jobs, move to Cleveland, or make other life arrangements without knowing whether they would be admitted to law school. Third, the conditional admission approach might have a negative effect on the learning environment in the class because of the competition among students for places in the fall entering class, and this increased competitiveness might be at odds with the supportive, nurturing model that LCOP has aspired to achieve.

The Committee concluded that we should not adopt a conditional admission LCOP program. However, we felt strongly that the law school should encourage the professor teaching the LCOP course to apply the first-year grading guidelines and to use the full range of grades.

2. Should We Expand the “LCOP” Program to Include Some Percentage of Regular Admission Students?

A second proposal that the Committee considered is whether the “LCOP” program should be confined to only LCOP students or should be expanded to include some percentage of students at the bottom of the regular admission class. This proposal was animated by two concerns. First, the LCOP program may be a stigma for the affected students, requiring them to take a class that no other students are required to take. Expanding the program to include a cohort of non-LCOP students would alleviate that problem to some extent. Second, it is likely that some students who have not been admitted through the LCOP program are also in need of additional assistance before starting law school. Expansion of the “LCOP” program from 20 to 40 students would mean that an additional 20 incoming students would have the benefit of this assistance. One possible negative is the additional workload for the professor teaching the summer LCOP class. In a course that should require extensive feedback, it will become more difficult to provide that type of feedback as the class size increases. This problem may be exacerbated by the shortness of the summer term.
Unfortunately, after consultation with our admissions personnel and the law school administration, the Committee concluded that this proposal could not be implemented for the incoming 2009 class. If this proposal were eventually adopted, Cleveland-Marshall would have to change our admissions materials to put applicants on notice that if they are at the lower end of the admission criteria, they might be required to attend a special summer program.

The Committee concluded that we should continue to explore the idea of expanding the “LCOP” program to include some percentage of the regular admission students in future classes.

3. Should We Change the Summer LCOP Class?

Third, the Committee considered whether we should change the summer LCOP course, either by changing the credit hours of the class and/or the content/subject matter of the course. Over the last several years, the LCOP course was taught by Legal Writing Professor Deborah Klein with the assistance of either Gary Williams or Daniel Dropko. The class met for four instructional hours (Mondays through Thursdays from 6:00 to 7:40 p.m.), but students received only three hours of graded academic credit.

As a preliminary step to our analysis, the Committee gathered information from a number of sources. Kathleen Engel and her husband, Jim Rebitzer, analyzed data from traditional and LCOP students over the last decade. Sandra English and Inga Laurent surveyed the 17 students who comprised the 2008 LCOP class, after they had completed one semester of law school and had a longer-term perspective on the class. One committee member read the teaching evaluations for the class for the last three years. The Committee also drew upon the experiences of our three members who had been through the program and our two members who had taught in the class. We consulted with Professor Michael Schwartz, a nationally known expert on teaching and academic assistance programs. Finally, Patti Falk spoke with several faculty members who expressed interest in teaching the LCOP course about their ideas for the class, and the Committee invited a faculty member to present his ideas at one of our meetings. Our goal was to identify both the strengths of the existing program and the opportunities for improvement or refinement.

An Analysis of Performance Data and Student Profiles

Kathleen Engel and Jim Rebitzer did a statistical analysis of the admissions and performance data for students (traditional and LCOP) admitted between 1997 and 2008. The results are as follows:

Determinants of first semester, first year, and final GPA (all students)

Determining the effect of the different possible indicators of success on GPAs is complicated because some variables are 0/1 (yes/no), e.g. whether a student is full-time or whether a student is Hispanic. Other variables are expressed as a range of numbers. This is true, for example, of UGPA and LSAT. To present the results in ways that could be meaningful, we divided the variables into two groups. The first group is variables that are expressed as numbers (LSAT, UGPA, index, first semester GPA, and first year GPA). The second group contains the 0/1 variables. For the latter variables, the coefficients in the regressions (chart below) are listed. For example, going full-time increases the first semester GPA by .10.

For the variables that are not 0/1, we came up with a different method of expressing the results. We determined the effect of moving from the 25th to the 75th percentile on outcomes. For example (chart below), the impact of moving from the 25th to the 75th percentile in terms of UGPA is a .12 increase in first semester GPA, a .25 increase in first year GPA, and no effect on final GPA. We only reported statistically significant results.  means the results had no independent effect. For example, index did not have any independent effect beyond GPA and LSAT, which is what you would expect because the LMS takes into account GPA and LSAT.

Giving Meaning to These Results

The most important results are as follows:

1. UGPA and LSAT do influence first year grades, but they are not determinants of final GPA. These results suggest that ultimate success is due to factors that are not picked up by UGPA and LSAT. In other words, factors that are unobserved swamp LSAT and UGPA. This could be things like undergraduate major, learning style or any number of features of students that we cannot observe through the admissions process. In short, we are not picking up the important factors that determine success in the admissions process.

2. The one factor that has a huge influence on final GPA is how students do in their first year of law school. Moving from the 25th percentile to the 75th percentile in first year GPA leads to a whopping 1.4 increase in final GPA. In results we did not spell out, we found that only 32% of the variation in final GPA was based on factors that were observable at the time of admission. When we added first year GPA to the regression, we were able to explain 84% of the final GPA.

In summary, these results suggest that the sorting that happens in the first year is critical. An admissions policy that admits many students coupled with grading policies that result in dismissal of low performers after the first year makes sense in light of these results.

Results of the Survey of 2008 LCOP Students

Two major themes emerged from our survey of former LCOP students. The first was that the current LCOP class was not sufficiently similar to what students experience when law school begins in the fall semester. A corollary finding was that the course should be more rigorous. Some sample comments from current LCOP students illustrated these concerns:

- "LCOP did not assist with classes"
• “Did not help prepare for the first semester”
• “We only read 4 cases, I would have liked something that was more like a real law school class”
• “I would like more substantive work, more cases to see how they build on each other, and how to learn how to outline”
• “Get it closer to what an actual class is like”
• Do “mini courses, introduction to property, contracts, torts, etc. have a real professor come in…”
• “More meat to the course—lack of depth”
• “I would like an exam at least 1x a week”

The second theme that emerged was the importance of various skills related to success in law school. Some sample comments included:

• “enjoyed learning how to brief—effective”
• “Focus on how to write a brief, brief cases—focus on basic skills”
• “Study skills were good but we needed more and more application to something”
• “Writing, studying, class should have been more formal, more synthesizing, how to synthesize”
• “do more writing”
• “Writing, writing, writing, case briefing”
• “There needs to be more emphasis on exam taking”
• “LCOP helped to get prepared/aware of exams”
• “We need more exam writing, like our TAs do now”
• “More on time management”

a. The Number of Credit Hours

The Committee first considered a proposal to expand the LCOP program from a single three-credit course to two classes totaling five credit hours (i.e., a three-credit substantive course and a two-credit skills course). The primary rationale for making this change would be to afford LCOP students more assistance in the summer months as they prepared to enter law school. Second, this scheme would ensure that students would be exposed to an adequate amount of substantive content as well as a strong skills component instead of trying to fit both components into three credit hours.

The Committee perceived some strong negative consequences for this proposed change. First, the LCOP classes would require to a huge amount of work in the summer months, which would be difficult for students who are part-time and would be working during the day. Second, five credit hours would have a significant effect on LCOP students’ first-year GPA. Some committee members raised concerns about so many credits being given for courses that spanned only a short period of time in the summer. Finally, LCOP students would be required to pay for the two additional credit hours. This might be especially difficult because the threshold for eligibility for government-sponsored financial aid is six credit hours, making LCOP students ineligible for these monies.

After considerable discussion and debate spanning several meetings, the Committee concluded that we should retain the current three credit hours for LCOP, but follow our long-standing tradition of providing students with four hours of instruction.

b. The Content of the LCOP Course

The second issue that the Committee examined concerned the content of the LCOP course. Based upon our investigation, we have concluded that the LCOP course should be modified by increasing the substantive content of the course and making it more closely resemble a traditional law school course offering. In addition, we believe that students in the LCOP course should be given regular feedback on their progress in the substantive portion of the class, by having quizzes or other types of feedback mechanisms. Third, the Committee recommends that the substantive portion of the course be supplemented with a strong skills component, revolving around skills necessary to succeed in law school. In particular, we believe that LCOP students should finish the course with a basic competency in the following skills: case briefing, outlining, exam writing, and memo writing. This portion of the course should also involve a significant feedback component. Finally, to increase the efficacy of both components of the class, we recommend a strong coordination and integration between the substantive aspects and the skills component of the course. In this regard, we are pleased to report that Steve Lazarus and Daniel Dropko have agreed to team-teach the 2009 summer LCOP course.

In summary, the Committee concluded that we should modify the summer LCOP class to include more substantive content and a strong skills component. Students should receive regular feedback on their progress in the class.

4. Should We Offer a One-Credit LCOP Course in the Fall Semester?

The Committee has also considered a proposal for instituting a new one-credit-hour class in the fall semester for LCOP students. The rationale for such a course would be to provide further support for these students as they make the transition to law school. Although this notion had some initial appeal, the Committee felt that requiring such a course might impose an additional burden upon students who are struggling with the demands of their other courses. In addition, some Committee members believed that such a course might further stigmatize LCOP students as a group.

The Committee concluded that we should not offer a one-credit LCOP course in the fall semester. We felt that a good alternative would be to strongly encourage LCOP students to participate in the Academic Excellence Program run by Daniel Dropko, which has been our current practice.

I. INTRODUCTION

This manual provides information to assist you in your professional endeavors at Cleveland-Marshall. Please review this material carefully. Feel free to ask Dean's Office personnel or other persons mentioned in the manual for more information on any item. If you have questions about matters we do not cover, please ask. If you need additional copies, please ask Rosa DelVecchio (2300). Every Fall we provide a copy of the STUDENT HANDBOOK to every student, and it is available at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/resources/studenthandbook. If you need a hard copy, please ask Layla Davis (2396).

II. A BRIEF HISTORY OF CLEVELAND-MARSHALL

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, founded in 1897 as the Cleveland Law School, was the first law school in Ohio to admit women and one of the first to admit minorities. In 1946 the Cleveland Law School merged with the John Marshall School of Law, founded in 1916, to become the Cleveland-Marshall Law School. In 1969, the Law School joined Cleveland’s new public university as its sixth college and was renamed the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law of Cleveland State University.

Because egalitarianism was a motivating principle of the law school’s founders, the early school’s student population was remarkable for its diversity. Many of the men and women who studied in the new law college were immigrants or the sons and daughters of immigrants; many were older students and minorities, and most worked throughout the day while studying law at night.

A number of the law school’s earliest alums had notable careers, including the Honorable Genevieve Cline ’21, the first woman in America appointed to a federal court; the Honorable Mary Grossman ’12, the first woman in America elected to a municipal court bench; Cleveland Mayor, the Honorable Carl B. Stokes ’56, the first African American mayor of a major American city; the Honorable Louis Stokes ’53, Ohio’s first African American Congressman; and Cleveland Mayor, five-time Ohio Governor and two-term U.S. Senator, the Honorable Frank Lausche ’21, son of Slovenian immigrants. Other graduates left their imprint in large and small ways in the local history books as influential attorneys, judges, public servants and leaders in commerce and industry. Cleveland-Marshall graduates laid the foundation of the legal profession in Northeast Ohio and shaped the future of our region as surely as the early explorers who mapped the outlines of the Western Reserve. Today’s alums remain the foundation of the legal profession in Northeast Ohio, serving the judiciary at every level, heading law firms, chairing corporations and contributing to the region’s and nation’s economic and social wellbeing.

Accredited by the American Bar Association in 1957 and accepted into the Association of American Law Schools in 1969, Cleveland-Marshall College of Law (C|M|LAW) offers the J.D. and the LL.M. degrees and five dual degrees—J.D./M.B.A. (Master of Business Administration), J.D./M.P.A. (Master of Public Administration), J.D./M.U.P.D.D. (Master of Urban Planning, Design and Development), J.D./M.A.E.S.(Master of Arts in Environmental Studies), and J.D./M.S.E.S. (Master of Science in Environmental Science). Under the supervision of the clinical faculty, students receive experiential training in six legal clinics: the Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic, the Employment Law Clinic, the Housing Law Clinic, the Urban Development Law Clinic, and the Environmental Law Clinic, and the Law and Public Policy Clinic. Students receive onsite legal training in externships in a multitude of settings including federal district and appellate and state appellate courts, the federal immigration and Medicare appeals courts, the U.S. Attorney’s Office, county prosecutor and public defender offices, general counsels’ offices (Cleveland State University, John Carroll University, and the Cleveland Metropolitan School Board), and the N.L.R.B.; they edit two journals, the Cleveland State Law Review and the Journal of Law and Health, and participate successfully in moot court competitions throughout the country. Students may choose a subject-specific curriculum through the law school’s concentrations in Employment and Labor Law, Business Law, Criminal Law, Civil Litigation and Dispute Resolution, International and Comparative Law, and Tax Law (suspended for new students as of 2007-08). Moreover, through countless volunteer opportunities in the law school’s Pro Bono Program, students learn the lawyer’s responsibility to the community. Finally, C|M|LAW students, graduates, and members of the bench and bar study and research in one of the country’s finest law libraries, which houses the state’s second largest legal collection and all major online resources.
III. WEBSITE

The C|M|LAW website address is https://www.law.csuohio.edu/. This site contains useful information such as course descriptions, schedules, first class assignments, course book assignments, and faculty profiles. For full texts of the law school’s Academic Regulations and Honor Code, and also CSU’s statement of Student Rights and Responsibilities, please see https://www.law.csuohio.edu/academics/regulations. The website also contains a calendar of events and other important law school dates, as well as information about admissions, career planning, financial aid, and the law alumni association. This calendar is updated regularly and contains information such as lectures, conferences, important student dates, holidays, and faculty meetings. See https://www.law.csuohio.edu/newsevents/calendar.

Many documents helpful to faculty are also available on the Faculty Resources page at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/facultystaff/resources. Although the content of the Faculty Resources page is always changing, currently posted documents and forms include: Beginning of the Semester Memo, Course Preferences Form, Course Release Policy, Class Rosters and Photos, Document Templates, Evening and Afternoon Events, Exam Grade Report Form, Faculty Focus, Faculty Manual, First Assignments Posting, Grade Distribution Form, Grade Due Dates, Guide to Email Lists, Lunchtime Speaker Series, Materials at the Reception Desk, Travel Request Form, Post-Trip Form, Take Home Exams Policy, and ULWR Seminars.

IV. ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICES

A. OFFICE OF THE DEAN
(Law Building, Room 106)

Dean Craig M. Boise (LB 108; 687-2300) is the chief academic and administrative officer of the law school. His duties include oversight of the hiring of full-time and adjunct faculty, fundraising and development, appointment of committees and special task forces, and alumni and community relations.

- Administrative Secretary Holli Goodman (LB 107; 687-2300).
• Assistant Dean for Admissions and Financial Aid Christopher Lucak (LB 137A; 687-4692)
• Career Planning Director Jennifer Blaga (LB 137B; 687-2540)

Associate Dean for Administration Mark J. Sundahl (LB 111; 687-2300) is responsible for the administration of many functions of the law school including course scheduling, curriculum planning, recruiting and working with adjunct and visiting faculty, student advising, clinics, and oversight of the Student Services Center offices of Academic Affairs, Student Life, and Student Records.

• Administrative Secretary Rosa M. DelVecchio (LB 106; 687-2300) schedules appointments for Associate Dean Sundahl. She handles submission of CLE forms for teaching credit to the Ohio Supreme Court.
• Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs Jean Lifter (LB 143; 687-4557)
• Director of Student Life
• Student Records Officer Marcie Rechner (LB 142; 687-2289)

Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment Heidi Gorovitz Robertson (LB 130; 687-9264) is responsible for cultivating faculty intellectual enrichment and student achievement in the law school. Her duties include coordinating workshops and other faculty-focused teaching and scholarship presentations, advising on internal and external communication strategies that promote faculty development, providing guidance to junior faculty in helping them develop their scholarly agendas, and working with faculty committees to enhance the quality of teaching and scholarship. Associate Dean Robertson also has administrative responsibility for academic excellence programs for students, as well as the implementation of our plan to improve our bar passage rate.

• Administrative Secretary Rosa M. DelVecchio (LB 106; 687-2300) schedules appointments for Associate Dean Robertson.
• Director of Academic Support Kelly Curtis (LB 54; 687-2359)
• Director of Bar Examination Preparation Mary Jane McGinty (LB 147; 687-2297)

Law Library Director Kristina Niedringhaus (LL 110; 687-3547) is in charge of the library and is responsible for the oversight, development, and coordination of technology.
Director of Budget and Administration Jeane H. White (LB 112; 687-2306) is in charge of law school financial matters and is assisted by Donna Helfrich. (See section on Faculty and Administrative Services.) She is the law school liaison for telecommunications, physical plant and equipment needs, and is responsible for general oversight of the areas managed by Sandra Natran (see below) and Laverne Carter (see section on Faculty and Administrative Services).

- Administrative Secretary Donna Helfrich handles travel arrangements and reimbursements and assists Ms. White with other financial matters.
- Administrative Coordinator Sandra Natran (LB 145; 687-2354) coordinates and facilitates special events. She schedules law building rooms for meetings, conferences and lectures, and serves as the law school’s liaison to Conference Services, Food Services, Instructional Media Services, Physical Plant and campus police. All research assistants must see Yolanda Salviejo (LB 120; 523-7234) to complete the necessary student employment forms. Ms. Natran prepares and submits Supreme Court of Ohio CLE applications for upcoming lectures and conferences.

Director of Advancement Jennifer N. Nye (LB 113; 687-2491) is in charge of fundraising.

- Administrative Secretary Rita Pawlik (LB 115; 687-4617)

B. CLERICAL SERVICES

Manager Laverne Carter (LB 118; 687-2349) oversees the Word Processing Unit, the Student Services Information Center, and Photocopying. To request word processing support or other secretarial assistance, including the typing of exams, see Ms. Carter. Ms. Carter's staff consists of:

- Word Processing Specialists Diane Adams (LB 115; 687-6884) and Yolanda Salviejo (LB 120; 523-7234), as well as Administrative Secretaries Donna Helfrich (LB 115; 687-4594) and Rita Pawlik (LB 115; 687-4617), provide support to faculty and administrative staff.
• Word Processing Specialist Mary McGee (LB 55; 687-2307) provides support to the Legal Writing faculty and to the offices of Law Review, Journal of Law and Health, and Moot Court.

• Word Processing Specialist Harold Jackson (LB 116; 687-4888) expedites your photocopying requests. Check with him for proper procedures, deadlines, and costs, especially in regard to reproduction of class materials and exams. Also see him for answers to questions about receiving or sending certified or express mail, and for supplies such as paper, pens, staples, exam blue books, and the like.

• Clerical Specialist Israel Payton (LB 138; 687-2344) manages the Student Services Center Information desk. (See Student Services Center section.)

C. EXTERNAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

The Development Committee meets twice a month with the Dean to review fundraising initiatives and create new strategies for increasing law school resources. The committee members are:

• Executive Director of Law Alumni Association Mary McKenna (LB121; 687-2368)
• Director of Advancement Jennifer N. Nye (LB 113; 687-2491)
• Development Associate Megan McFadden (LB 122; 687-2476)
• Communications Coordinator Elaine Terman (LB 123; 687-6886)

D. LAW ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Executive Director Mary McKenna (LB 121; 687-2368) is in charge of alumni activities and special events. If you are trying to locate any of our alumni, Ms. McKenna can assist you.

• Assistant Director Jill McDonnell (LB 120; 523-7357)
V. STUDENT SERVICES CENTER (SSC)
(Law Building, Room 138)

A. HOURS

When classes are in session in the fall and spring semesters, the SSC hours are M & T 8:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.; W & TH 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m.; and F 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Summer hours are M & T 8:00 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.; W & TH 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m.; and Friday 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. For hours at other times, contact the receptionist. For the hours of a specific office within the SSC, contact that office.

B. RECEPTION

Israel Payton (687-2344) is the SSC’s first point of contact. As the law school’s receptionist, he is responsible for incoming mail, faxes, phone calls, walk-in traffic, and sales of student materials.

C. ACADEMIC AFFAIRS

Assistant Dean Jean Lifter (LB 143; 687-4557) is responsible for course scheduling and room assignments, student advising, student course registration, academic affairs, and supervising ADA accommodations for classes and exams.

- Secretary Layla Davis (2396) finalizes teaching contracts for adjuncts. She is the person to notify of any room changes and class cancellations. Call Ms. Davis if you need to cancel a class, whether or not the cancellation has been previously announced in class—preferably at least several hours before class time—and she will make sure that the appropriate notices are posted. She can provide you with classroom seating charts and class rosters. Textbook orders are now placed directly through the CSU Bookstore. Ms. Davis will notify you when orders must be placed, which is generally two months before the semester begins.
D. ACADEMIC SUPPORT

Mary Jane McGinty (LB 147; 687-2297) is Director of the Bar Examination Preparation Program. She teaches our Bar Preparation course, coordinates programs related to the bar exam, and oversees our Academic Excellence Program.

Kelly Curtis (LB 54; 687-2359) is the Director of Academic Support Program that provides academic support for our students.

- Secretary Layla Davis (LB 144; 687-2396)

E. ADMISSIONS AND FINANCIAL AID

Assistant Dean Christopher Lucak (LB 137A; 687-4692) directs the student admissions process and oversees financial aid.

F. CAREER PLANNING

Director Jennifer A. Blaga (LB 137B; 687-2540) coordinates on campus interviewing and develops programs to assist students in planning their careers during and after law school. Ms. Blaga's staff consists of:

- Assistant Director Francie Fields (LB 137C; 687-2260)
- Assistant Director Kristen Rutter (LB 137C; 687-2260)
- Coordinator Jessica Mathewson (LB 137A; 687-6871)

G. STUDENT LIFE

The Director of Student Life maintains a vibrant, supportive, and healthy environment for students at C|M|LAW and serves as the students’ point of first contact for the law school administration. She provides academic and financial aid counseling to students and oversees programs to enhance the student experience at C|M|LAW. She oversees our Peer Advisor program, is our student organizations liaison, and oversees the law school’s initiatives to promote diversity.
H. Student Records

Student Records Officer Marcie Rechner (LB 142; 687-2289) maintains student records, including those relating to grades and graduation requirements. See her if you need grade report forms or other information relevant to the law school's processing of grades. She also collects and maintains faculty evaluations.

- Student Assistant Jessica Hodge (LB 142; 687-2289)

I. Leaving Materials for Students

Faculty may leave materials for student pick up at the Student Services Reception Desk under the following conditions:

Please identify the course and professor on the materials and envelope containing the materials. If you want a student to receive the material in an individual envelope, please provide the material to the receptionist in that form with the student identification marked on the outside. You may want your secretary to prepare the envelopes or you may ask Laverne Carter for assistance.

Also, please tell the receptionist:

a. whether students will identify themselves by name or exam number;

b. how long the material will be available for students (e.g., a specific length of time or the entire semester), and

c. the terms or conditions under which students may review the material. For example, you should specify whether students can take the material with them or if students should only view the material in the Student Services Center.

A Quiz/Paper/Exam Viewing Form is attached as Appendix 19. You should provide this form to the receptionist when delivering materials for student review. This form allows you to provide instructions for the receptionist. If you are simply dropping off an envelope for a student to pick up, it is not necessary to complete the form.
At the beginning of each semester, any material that students did not pick up during the prior semester will be returned to the professor.

VI. LAW SCHOOL COMPUTING

A. Workstations. Each faculty office is equipped with a Microsoft Windows-based workstation and printer. All faculty workstations have the following supported software packages: Microsoft Office (Word, PowerPoint, Excel, and Access), Corel WordPerfect, Mozilla Firefox and Thunderbird, Westlaw, and Lexis.

The law school uses Mozilla Thunderbird as its email program. Microsoft Outlook is currently not supported. If you wish to have other programs installed on your office workstation, or have a question about your existing hardware and software, please contact Rick Zhang (LL 115; 687-4574.)

You may obtain discounted software packages, such as Microsoft Office, at the CSU Bookstore in the Student Center.

The CSU Center for Teaching Excellence provides equipment loans to faculty, including digital cameras, projectors, and iPods. They also offer many training sessions and workshops related to instructional technology. Please visit http://www.csuohio.edu/offices/teachingexcellence for more information. The eLearning Office of the Center for Instructional Technology and Distance Learning provides instructional design support, media development services, program coordination, and student services development for elearning at Cleveland State University. They also offer Blackboard training and assistance. Their website can be found here: http://www.csuohio.edu/elearning/.

B. Classroom Technology. All of the classrooms in the law school feature projectors, document cameras, workstations, DVD/VCR units, as well as inputs for external USB drives and laptops. All classroom presentation workstations have standard Office software, including PowerPoint. If you would like an overview of the classroom technology control systems, please contact a member of the Information Technology staff for assistance.
The seminar rooms (LB 64, 65, and 66 - located across the hallway from the law clinics) are equipped with monitors and wall ports for the connection of a laptop. If you would like to use the technology in these rooms, but do not own a laptop, please contact the Information Technology department for assistance.

C. Information Technology Support.
When IT support is needed, users are encouraged to use one of the following three methods:

Open a Ticket
For your convenience, filling out the Technology Help Request Form located here will open a new ticket: https://www.law.csuohio.edu/techhelp. Once the ticket is successfully created, you will hear back from a tech within 30 minutes during business hours.

Send an E-mail
Users that prefer E-mail can send a request to newticket@law.csuohio.edu. Please remember to include your name, a descriptive subject, problem details, your phone number/office extension, and your office room number/location. A support ticket will automatically be created and you will hear back from a tech within 30 minutes during business hours. Please understand that incomplete requests may be delayed.

Call the 7555 “Tech Help” Line
If you have an emergency or need immediate assistance, please call the 7555 Tech Help line. While we strive to have this line covered at all times, leaving a message may be necessary. Any messages left will be returned as soon as possible. Alternatively, if you have an emergency and there is no answer, please visit the reference/circulation desk at the law library and ask for a tech.

If you need assistance with any of these methods, or have any other questions, please feel free to contact an Information Technology staff member:

- Assistant Director, Technology Operations Dan Thomas (LL 120A; 523-7372) is responsible for the College’s IT functions, including faculty, staff and student computing, the College's web site, and training and support for classroom technology. He also supervises the work and services provided by the C|M|LAW IT Staff.

- Systems/Data Manager Eric Domanski (LL 112, 523-7391) provides workstation support for faculty and law school staff. He has specific responsibility for supporting student PCs, the workstation lab, and related technology needs.

- Systems/Web Manager Rick Zhang (LL 115; 687-4574) provides primary support for web site development. He installs and upgrades hardware and software on law school workstations.

- Desktop/Server Specialist Greg Golembiski (LL 120; 523-7235) assists faculty and staff with desktop computing issues. Greg also provides assistance with classroom technology.

VII. LAW LIBRARY

For a comprehensive index of Law Library services to faculty, see https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/faculty/.

A. PERSONNEL

Associate Professor Kristina L. Niedringhaus (LL 110; 687-3547) is Director of the Law Library. Her staff includes:

Administrative Assistant Sylvia Dunham (LL 214A; 523-7392) provides administrative support for the Law Library Director and staff. Sylvia also schedules use of the Law Library’s conference room and instruction room LL A059.

Assistant Director, Technology Operations Dan Thomas (LL 120A; 523-7372) is responsible for the College’s IT functions, including faculty, staff and student computing, the College's web site, and training and support for classroom technology. He also supervises the work and services provided by the C|M|LAW IT Staff Rick Zhang (LL 115; 687-4574), and Eric Domanski (LL 112; 523-7391) and Desktop/Server Specialist Greg Golembiski (LL 120; 523-7325)
Associate Director Jan Babbit (LL 122; 687-6913) is responsible for the Law Library’s budget, and supervises the work and services provided by the Collection Development, Technical Services, Access and/Faculty Services, and Research Services staff, including the personnel listed below.

- Collection Development /Acquisitions Librarian Rebecca Mattson (LL117; 523-7388) selects library materials and databases and manages the faculty allowance program, in addition to her research, reference, and instructional services.

- Head, Access and Faculty Services Amy Burchfield (LL 113; 687-6885) In addition to her role as a research and reference librarian with a specialty in international resources, Amy manages the library’s faculty services and circulation functions, supervising the work of Circulation Supervisor Jon Elias (LL109; 687-2483), Evening/Weekend Supervisor Tom Hurray (LL 119B; 523-7396), Library Media Technical Assistant Meredith Hale (LL109; 687-2250) and Library Assistant Andres Garcia (LL109; 687-2250). This staff will facilitate your document delivery, circulation, OhioLink and ILL requests. Amy also supervises the Law Library’s Research Assistants.

- Electronic Services Librarian Karen Schneiderman (LL 114; 523-7364) coordinates the development of library webpage and blog content, manages electronic resources, and assists in the development of faculty course pages, in addition to her research, reference and instructional services.

- Instructional Services Librarian Laura Ray (LL118; 687-6880) coordinates Law Library instructional services to students and faculty and manages the Law Library’s participation in the Federal Depository Library Program. Please contact her if you would like to arrange research training for yourself, your research assistant or your class.

- Digital Content Services and Reference Services Librarian Sue Altmeyer (LL116; 687-4894) Sue is responsible for developing, managing, and organizing Law Library digital content as well as providing research, reference and instructional services.
• Technical Services Librarian Beth Farrell (LL214C; 523-7395) manages the Library’s purchasing, receipt, cataloging and materials processing functions. Beth supervises Library Associate Cassandra Baker (LL214; 523-7397), Library Media Technical Assistant Sean Kennedy (LL 214; 523-7306) and Acquisition/Purchasing Agent Karen Zima (LL214D; 523-7394).

B. CURRENT AWARENESS SERVICES

1. CM Law Library Blog. The CM Law Library Blog seeks to inform the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law community about key legal education, research, practice, and law library news, with a particular focus on Cuyahoga County and Ohio as well as faculty research interests. (CONTACT: Karen Schneiderman ext 7364).

2. SmartCILP SmartCILP is a customized email service for Current Index to Legal Periodicals, with direct links to articles in LexisNexis and Westlaw. Customizing your SmartCILP email allows you to focus on only those areas of law that are of interest to you for your research and teaching. To sign up for SmartCILP, you will need an institution authorization code. (CONTACT: Amy Burchfield ext. 6885).

3. Publications Routing. The Law Library provides a publications routing service to meet the current awareness needs of law faculty. Online newsletters such as Tax Notes Today or BNA’s Daily Labor Report are available to law faculty through the PCs in their offices or through library staff. (CONTACT: Beth Farrell ext. 7395 or Sean Kennedy ext. 7306).

4. Other Current Awareness services the Law Library can assist you with include:
   • RSS Feeds - Obtain current content from the blogs (such as Law Professor Blogs), news articles and journals in a one stop organized RSS Reader such as Google Reader.
   • Bloomberg Law, Westlaw, LexisNexis and Google Alerts - Have new search results emailed to you. CCH current awareness services on many topics are purchased by the library for use by students and faculty.
• BNA current awareness services on many topics are purchased by the library for student and faculty use, including U.S. Law Week and Supreme Court Today. The library can also sign up your entire class to receive emails from a particular BNA current awareness newsletter. Sign up for BNA Current Awareness Services

• SSRN Author Alerts

C. Scholarship Support and Research Services

1. Book Purchase Requests / Faculty Allowance Stipend. Law faculty may request that an item not currently owned by the Law Library be added to the collection. Each full-time law faculty member has an annual library stipend for the academic year beginning on July 1 and ending June 30. Materials purchased from the stipend are kept in faculty members' offices but remain the property of the Law Library, and must be returned to the Library when the faculty member leaves. Titles can include print, electronic texts or other non-print media. (CONTACT: Rebecca Mattson ext. 7388).

2. EngagedScholarship@CSU, Selected Works Pages and Faculty Publications Collection. The College of Law’s institutional repository, created and maintained by the law library, is part of the University's institutional repository, EngagedScholarship@CSU. The College of Law’s repository is accessible at http://engagedscholarship.csuohio.edu/law/. The repository collects all of C|M|LAW's scholarship in one place, including non-text items such as video, audio and empirical data sets. Because the materials are open access, with optimized discoverability on the Internet, the site heightens the visibility of law faculty work product and of C|M|LAW. Additionally, we are able to generate statistics on the number of downloads, and authors can automatically receive monthly download reports for their papers. (Contact: Sue Altmeyer ext 4894 or Amy Burchfield ext 6885)

We can help faculty members create and edit their own Selected Works author pages within EngagedScholarship@CSU. Here is an example: http://works.bepress.com/deborah_geier. The author page can contain a curriculum vitae and an RSS feed for people to track new articles posted by the author. If you have created your own Selected Works page already, we can easily incorporate it into the law school's site. (Contact: Sue Altmeyer ext 4894)
The Law Library strives to acquire print copies of all publications by Cleveland-Marshall College of Law faculty. We encourage donations. Recent faculty publications are added to the Engaged Scholarship@CSU, displayed in the Law Library and also used in the University Library annual publications display. Publications not cataloged in the regular collection are maintained in a Faculty Publications file in the Library’s Special Collections room. (CONTACT: Rebecca Mattson ext. 7388 or Amy Burchfield ext. 6885).

3. Faculty Liaison Services: Upon request, we can designate a member of our Research/Instructional Team to assist you as your Law Library contact. This Faculty Liaison will provide current awareness services customized to your subject-specific areas of interest, serve as a referral contact for your students, assist you in developing research resources, work with your Research Assistant, and otherwise help you to take maximum advantage of our services. (CONTACT: Jan Babbit ext. 6913)

4. Conference and Program Support: The Research Librarians work with faculty to provide research and bibliographic services supporting programs and conferences. Our services include compiling information on speakers, assisting to identify and/or locate articles for continuing education materials packets, as well as preparing displays to promote and complement the events and highlight additional resources. (CONTACT: Jan Babbit ext. 6913)

Additionally, we can help you create a conference website within our institutional repository, EngagedScholarship@CSU to market, manage and preserve conference programming and materials. (Contact: Sue Altmeyer ext 4894)

5. Bloomberg Law, LexisNexis & Westlaw: Research Librarians can assist you with Bloomberg Law, LexisNexis or Westlaw searches, arrange training and refresher courses, and help resolve equipment problems. LexisNexis and Westlaw printers for Cleveland-Marshall faculty are located behind the Law Library Information Services Desk. If you choose the stand-alone printer option on Westlaw, or the Law Library faculty printer on LexisNexis, your print requests will be sent to these printers. Law Library Information Services staff will then deliver your prints to your Cleveland-Marshall faculty mailbox. (Regarding Bloomberg Law, LexisNexis and Westlaw services, CONTACT: Karen Schneiderman, ext. 7364; regarding delivery of prints by Access Services personnel, CONTACT: Jon Elias ext. 2483)
6. Research Assistance. Research Librarians with advanced degrees in law and other disciplines are always available to help faculty with short or long term research and reference projects, whether working directly with the faculty member or assisting your research assistant with developing strategies and identifying resources. In addition, the Law Library employs Research Assistants who may be able to help you with shorter term projects. The library RAs are second and third year law students who work under the supervision of librarians. (CONTACT:  Amy Burchfield ext. 6885)

7. Scholarship Support. The Library is happy to offer faculty assistance with such scholarship support needs as proofreading, copy editing, footnotes, and formatting, and services. To discuss your project needs, contact Amy Burchfield, ext. 6885.

D. INSTRUCTIONAL SUPPORT SERVICES

1. Course Materials Web Pages. Library staff will assist you in setting up, maintaining, and adding items to Course Materials web pages for any classes you teach. Course Materials webpages are password-protected resource pages for individual classes which remain available throughout the semester in which the course is taught. Any items a faculty member places on Course Reserve, whether print or electronic, will be placed on a Course Reserve page. Electronic Course Reserve items will be linked from the page; print Course Reserve items will be represented by a link to their Scholar records. You can also add items such as syllabi, assignments, readings, relevant web links, CALI lessons, PowerPoint presentations, podcasts, videos, and more to your Course Materials page. (CONTACT: Sue Altmeyer ext. 4894 or Amy Burchfield ext. 6885).

2. Course Reserves. You may place course related items on reserve in the Library. Print items will be held on reserve for students at the Library’s Information Services Desk. Electronic items will be linked from your Course Materials webpage. The Law Library complies with the Copyright Law. Jon Elias will contact each law professor before the semester begins to get a list of items to be put on course reserve. Print course reserve materials are taken off reserve at the end of the semester and returned to the library shelves and/or to the law faculty member’s mailbox. (CONTACT: Jon Elias ext. 2483)

3. Research Lectures, Guides and Exercises. Our Research Librarians can present research lectures for your class. We discuss general and subject-specific legal research strategies and resources, highlighting both print and electronic resources, effective and efficient use of Bloomberg Law, LexisNexis, Westlaw, and OhioLINK research databases, and searching the Web. We can tailor a course specific research guide for you to use on your own course page or as a handout for your class. We can also work with you to develop research assignments. CONTACT: Jan Babbit ext. 6913. To arrange a lecture by a LexisNexis or Westlaw rep, contact the rep directly or contact Karen Schnedierman ext. 7364.

4. Educational Technology: Reference Librarians can help you with PowerPoint, Prezi, Web 2.0 and other educational technologies. We also provide student group instructional sessions in the use of PowerPoint, Refworks, Zotero and other educational software. (CONTACT: Laura Ray ext. 6880 or Karen Schneiderman ext. 7364)

5. Past Exams: The College of Law's Administrative Office sends law exams to the Law Library at the end of each semester. With the faculty member’s permission, we place these exams online, accessible only to Cleveland-Marshall College of Law faculty, staff, and students. We also bind the exams and put them on reserve for 10 years for law student review. Older exams are shelved in the library's stacks. If you do not wish to have your exams placed on reserve you must let the College of Law's Administrative Office know. (CONTACT: Amy Burchfield ext. 6885)

6. Course Evaluations: The College of Law's Administrative Office sends course evaluations to the Law Library at the end of each semester. We bind these evaluations and keep them on reserve for 5 years for law student review. Older evaluations are shelved in the library's stacks. (CONTACT: Amy Burchfield ext. 6885)

7. Recording Lectures: We can offer assistance with in-house and CSU Instructional Media Services recording of course materials, as well as posting of media files to course pages. Options include podcast, screencast, vodcast (video), and MediaSite.(CONTACT: Greg Golembiski ext. 7235)

8. Training Labs: Adjacent to the main Library PC Lab, we have 2 Training Labs to facilitate your class electronic instructional needs. Each Lab is equipped with 15 workstations and a data projector. Please note that Training Labs cannot be reserved during Reading and Exam Weeks. (CONTACT: Laura Ray ext. 6880)

9. Other instructional support services include:
• CALI:
  Obtain a CALI password. Offers (1) Interactive electronic lessons. Professors set up a Lessonlink to see students' results, (2) Lawdibles - 10 minute audio recordings, explaining difficult concepts, (3) Classcaster - podcasting and blogging platform, (4) ELangdell and Legal Education Commons - sites for sharing teaching materials, and more.

• CSU Center for Teaching Excellence:
  Promotes and encourages "a culture of excellence in teaching and learning at Cleveland State University" by providing workshops, consultation services, classroom equipment, and specialized software and equipment (e.g., for scanning and digitizing). Also provides links to CSU's Center for eLearning, teaching tips, and copyright resources.

E. CIRCULATION AND DOCUMENT DELIVERY SERVICES

1. Circulation Policies: Cleveland-Marshall Law faculty may check out circulating materials for one academic semester (15 weeks). Non-circulating materials may be checked out for 7 days. You may renew materials as long as another patron has not placed a hold on an item. All library materials in circulation are subject to recall. (CONTACT: Amy Burchfield ext. 6885)

2. Document Delivery Services: The Information Services staff handles Law faculty requests for both Law Library books and photocopies. Staff will retrieve the requested material and check it out to the Law faculty member, or photocopy the requested article, case or chapter of a larger item. The Law Library complies with copyright law when photocopying items. Items will be delivered to the Law faculty mailboxes located in the College of Law's Support Services Department. The Law Library strives for a 24 hour turnaround on all requests for items in the Law Library (with the exception of weekends and holidays). You may request materials by sending an email message to: faculty.services@law.csuohio.edu or by calling the Information Services Desk at ext. 2250.

If the Law Library does not own an item but the University Library does, we will retrieve the material for you and deliver it to your faculty mailbox.

If an item is not available at the Law Library or the University Library, we will make an OhioLINK request in your name. OhioLINK materials may take up to five business days to arrive. If an item is not available via OhioLINK, then the Law Library's Interlibrary Loan Department will handle your request. Items may take two weeks or more to be received. We will send a status report to you if the request is to be filled via Interlibrary Loan. (CONTACT: Amy Burchfield ext. 6885)

3. AV Viewing Room: The Law Library's AV viewing room may be used by your students to view class related materials. Groups or individuals are welcome to use the room depending on availability. The room is equipped with DVD players and VCRs. (CONTACT: Amy Burchfield ext. 6885)

VIII. FACULTY STATEMENT ON PROFESSIONAL ETHICS AND ACADEMIC RESPONSIBILITIES

The faculty has responsibilities to our students, scholarship, colleagues, the University and the larger community. A statement of these responsibilities and our professional ethics, that the faculty adopted on January 17, 2008, is attached as Appendix 1.

IX. FACULTY DEVELOPMENT: SCHOLARSHIP AND TEACHING

We support faculty scholarship and teaching through a variety of programs, some more formal than others. Please take advantage of these programs. If you have questions about any of them, please contact Associate Dean Robertson (9264).

A. Coffee. We will be continuing the practice of providing coffee and pastries for faculty in the faculty lounge from 9:00 to noon on alternating Tuesdays and Wednesdays during the academic year.

B. Faculty Lunch Series. Throughout the fall and spring semesters, we have lunches where our own faculty and professors from other schools present talks on research in progress. Please consider presenting your work here and plan to join us for the lunches where others present their work. We send out a schedule of lunches at the beginning of each term. The schedule is also available online on the Faculty Resources page.
C. Northeast Ohio Law Schools’ Colloquia Series. Akron, Case, and Cleveland-Marshall have an ongoing exchange where a professor from one school gives a talk on a current project at another school. This is a terrific opportunity to hear about and discuss faculty scholarship. Consider presenting your work here to a broader audience than our own faculty.

D. Faculty Exchanges: Faculty exchanges help get our faculty out and visible at other schools and give our colleagues the opportunity to vet their writing projects and presentations before outside audiences and gather additional feedback on their work. We have recently sent faculty to speak at (or have hosted speakers from) Wayne State, Duquesne, DePaul, Toledo, and Capital.

E. Faculty Blog. The C|M|LAW Faculty Blog is a new way of raising internal and external awareness of faculty news. Please send information on publications, article acceptances, speaking engagements, and media contacts to Associate Dean Robertson. Also, please subscribe to the C|M Faculty Blog at cmlaw.faculty.wordpress.com.

F. Business Cards and Memo Pads. If you need new business cards or would like to have personalized memo pads, please see Ms. Salviejo (523-7324).

G. ExpressO. We have an institutional account with ExpressO for the electronic submission of articles. Please see Associate Dean Robertson for details.

H. Graduate Faculty. CSU has a separate College of Graduate Studies, which is composed of faculty members throughout the University who have been granted Graduate Faculty status. Each college, including C|M|LAW, has an established set of criteria for admission into the College of Graduate Studies. Ours are attached as Appendix 3. You do not have to be a tenured professor to apply for graduate faculty status. One of the benefits of being on the Graduate College faculty is that you can apply for grants for research and travel as they are announced by the Graduate College. In addition, for those who teach in the Master's degree programs, it helps CSU's accreditation to have faculty with graduate faculty status as instructors. Finally, this may be a good way to break down some of the barriers that exist between the law school and the rest of the university.
Application guidelines are available at www.csuohio.edu/gradcollege/faculty/membership/application.guidelines.pdf. Please send your request and supporting materials to College of Graduate Studies, Parker Hannifin Hall, Room 205 (phone ext. 9364). For assistance, please see Associate Dean Robertson.

I. Library Faculty Services. The Law Library’s Faculty Services offers a wide range of services to support the College’s teaching and research needs. See Section VIII for more information or visit https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/faculty.

J. Library Stipend. Each faculty member has a stipend for library materials (to keep in your office) per academic year. See Section VII.B.6 for more information.

K. Reprints. Please order extra reprints of articles and distribute them broadly. With prior approval, the law school will pay for extra reprints. You must fill out a Reprint Request Form, obtained from Donna Helfrich, for approval by Associate Dean Robertson. The Reprint Request Form is also available at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/facultystaff/resources. We can also have a card printed for you to insert with your reprints. Please see Associate Dean Robertson for details.

L. Russia Summer Program. We cosponsor, with the University of Arkansas School of Law and the University of the Pacific McGeorge School of Law, a four-week summer school program at the St. Petersburg Summer Law Institute. This provides students from law schools throughout the United States with the opportunity to participate in a five-credit program in international and comparative law in Novgorod and St. Petersburg, Russia. One of our faculty teaches in this program every year. Please talk to Associate Dean Sundahl if you are interested.

M. SSRN/Legal Scholarship Network. C|M|LAW participates in the online SSRN/Legal Scholarship Network, where professors post working, accepted, and published papers. We post when we have at least three papers ready. Please let Associate Dean Robertson know if you would like to post a working paper or an accepted paper on the SSRN/LSN.

N. Summer Research and Teaching Grants. Cleveland-Marshall grants provide financial support for full-time faculty members who want to spend the summer conducting research and writing or developing new teaching methods and/or curriculum materials. During the Fall, the Cleveland-Marshall Summer Research Grants Committee and the Teaching Committee will advise faculty of the deadline for applications and provide you with the information that each committee requires. Funding decisions are announced during Spring term. Sample memos inviting research and teaching grant applications are attached as Appendices 10 and 11.

O. Research Assistants. All full-time faculty are entitled to 320 hours of research assistance per fiscal year (July 1 through June 30). This number may be exceeded, but an explanatory memo must be sent to Associate Dean Robertson requesting the additional hours. You may distribute your 320 hours among more than one research assistant, if you so desire. If you are interested in having a Teaching Assistant for your classes, please contact Associate Dean Robertson. Legal Writing Professors are allotted 480 hours total for the year for their research assistants and tutors.

If your Research Assistant or tutor must be a law student, you need to post the opening with our Office of Career Planning, x6871. If you do not require a law student, you must post the position on the university website for 3-5 days. Please see the OCP Administrative Secretary for details. Once you’ve selected a research assistant or tutor, send the student to Ms. Salviejo, LB 120, or Ms. Natran, LB 145, to take care of the appropriate paperwork. It is imperative that your research assistant completes all necessary paperwork before beginning employment with you.

RAs and tutors must record their time on the University myTime program. You are responsible for training them and approving their time.

Notify the law library of your research assistants so that they can obtain special borrowing privileges and be given a code for copying materials.

P. Teaching Schedules, Variances and Course Releases. In recognition of the importance of scholarly productivity, the faculty, in May 2008, adopted a set of policies that permit a faculty member to apply for a course release, or a variance to the standard teaching schedule. The policy is attached as Appendix 2.

Q. Travel Funds. The Cleveland-Marshall fund supports faculty travel for research purposes and attendance at seminars and conferences relevant to your teaching or scholarly interests. With budget constraints and the rising cost of travel, we must be more selective about these expenditures so that we have sufficient funds for the entire year. Please contact Associate Dean Robertson for information regarding the current travel policy.

You must receive approval from Associate Dean Robertson and Dean Boise well in advance of your planned trip. Please submit your request no less than three weeks in advance of your planned travel. Please submit your request no less than 3 weeks in advance of your planned travel. Please fill out a blue travel request form, which you can obtain from and return to Donna Helfrich. The form requires you to provide an estimate of expenses and information about the reason for the travel. Please consult the CSU Travel Policy and other related documents (e.g., per diem charts) at www.csuohio.edu/offices/controllers (under Policies-Travel). A copy of the CSU Travel Policy is attached as Appendix 9. Ms. Helfrich will contact you once Associate Dean Robertson and Dean Boise have approved your request. Upon return from your travels, you will need to complete a green reimbursement form and submit it to Ms. Helfrich with your receipts and boarding passes if you traveled by plane.

R. Sabbaticals. After seven years of service at CSU or after seven years from completing a prior Professional Leave at CSU, Tenured faculty may apply for a one- or two-semester sabbatical to pursue an individual program of professional development. Each fall the Provost notifies the faculty of the criteria process and timeline for sabbatical applications. The relevant portion of the CSU Faculty Handbook and a copy of the Fall 2008 memo from the Provost is attached as Appendix 12. The Dean consults with the Deans Advisory Committee regarding which applications to approve.

S. Bar Association Memberships. The law school has an ABA group membership that covers basic dues for all faculty. If you want to join a particular section or committee, you are responsible for those membership fees. The law school will also pay for one additional bar association membership for each faculty member—e.g., Cleveland Metropolitan Bar Association or Ohio State Bar Association. In the alternative, we will pay for a comparable professional law-related association individual membership. Please see Jeane White (x2306).
X. TEACHING AND COURSE RELATED MATTERS

A. PRELIMINARY MATTERS

1. Your Teaching Schedule. We begin planning for the courses offered each academic year one year in advance. Specific course offerings for each summer, fall, and spring term must be finalized three or four months prior to the beginning of each term.

In late fall, Associate Dean Sundahl solicits faculty teaching preferences for the following summer and academic year. Please complete the online form that he emails to faculty. Requests for course releases or variances must be submitted in writing at the same time as the teaching preferences form. See Appendix 2, Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Policies on Standard Teaching Schedules, Variances, and Course Releases § 7. After reviewing your form, Associate Dean Sundahl will meet with each of you. Tentative course schedules are circulated during the spring semester. Review carefully any tentative course schedules you receive and contact Associate Dean Sundahl or Assistant Dean Lifter with your comments and concerns. When you submit your preferences, you should also indicate if you need, or prefer, a technology room for your classes.

The law school administration works to accommodate faculty preferences regarding requests to teach particular classes, limitations on class size, times and days that courses are offered, and other matters. However, please keep in mind that your course is one of over 100 courses scheduled each semester, and specific curricular needs will control what and when you teach.

Once you have tenure, you may want to consider teaching in the Summer. Our Summer term is short (7 weeks), so each course meets twice as often as Fall or Spring. Please talk to Associate Dean Sundahl if you are interested.

2. Seminars and Upper Level Courses that Satisfy the ULWR. In a seminar or upper level course (other than L860: Independent Legal Research, in which students write a paper to satisfy the ULWR), faculty have the option of holding class meetings for the hours required for a two-credit-hour course while offering the course for three credit hours. This recognizes the substantial amount of time and effort students and faculty are expected to spend on papers that satisfy the upper level writing requirement, as stated in the guidelines for supervising ULWR papers. See Appendix 6. A faculty member may offer the option to students of taking the seminar or upper level course for either two credit hours if a student elects not to write a paper to satisfy the ULWR or three credit hours if a student elects to write a paper to satisfy the ULWR.

3. Proposing New Courses. Faculty can propose new courses to teach by submitting a proposal to the Curriculum Committee. The proposal should include a course description, specify the credit hours sought, and explain other relevant matters. See Appendix 4, New Course Proposals. In deciding the parameters of the course, you may want to consider whether the course fits our criteria for perspective, skills, or seminar courses. Attachments A, D, and B to Appendix 4 explain those criteria. If you will require students to research and write a paper, you should also consider whether the paper will satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement. See Appendix 4, Attachment C.

4. New Concentrations. We have five concentrations that enable students to focus their upper level studies in particular areas: Business Law, Civil Litigation and Dispute Resolution, Criminal Law, Employment and Labor Law, and International and Comparative Law. (We suspended the Tax concentration in 2007-08 for incoming students.)

Faculty may create new concentrations by submitting a proposal to the Curriculum Committee for approval by it and the faculty. The requirements for Concentrations are set forth in Appendix 7.

B. COURSE PLANNING AND PREPARATION

1. Selecting and Ordering Course Materials. You are responsible for selecting your own course materials. Upon request, legal publishers will furnish you with complementary copies of the casebooks and related materials they publish on the subject you are teaching. You may also want to consult with other faculty members who teach the same course regarding the materials available. The phone numbers and Cleveland-Marshall's account representatives for the major legal publishers are:
Faculty place their own orders electronically with the CSU Bookstore. You may also choose to use materials you have compiled as a supplement to (or even in lieu of) a commercially available casebook or other course materials. If you use your own materials, please notify the CSU Bookstore.
on the book ordering webpage. See the section below on photocopying for more information on this option.

2. Preparation of Course Syllabi. The University requires that you provide students with a written syllabus at the beginning of your course, outlining the topics you will cover and the assignments related to each. The written syllabus must also contain information regarding your expectations of the class, the factors you will take into consideration in determining final course grades, attendance policies, and your availability to students outside of the classroom—including office hours, office room number, telephone number and e-mail address. Two examples of course syllabi are attached to this manual for your convenience (Appendices 5A and 5B). You are required to provide a copy of your syllabus for each course to Associate Dean Sundahl by the end of the first week of the semester. Course syllabi from previous years are on reserve at the library circulation desk.

3. Course Materials Webpages. Library staff will assist you in setting up, maintaining, and adding items to Course Materials webpages for any classes you teach. Course Materials webpages are password-protected resource pages for individual classes, and are accessible throughout the semester in which the course is taught. Any items a faculty member places on Course Reserve, whether print or electronic, will be placed on a Course Reserve page. Electronic Course Reserve items will be linked from the page; print Course Reserve items will be represented by a link to their Scholar records.
All Course Reserve items that appear on Course Materials webpages will be listed under the heading “Library Materials.” (CONTACT: ext. 2250).
Course Materials webpages can be used for much more than just gathering your Course Reserve materials into one place. Course Materials webpages can be used as a complete online resource for your class. You can add items such as syllabi, assignments, readings, relevant web links, CALI lessons, PowerPoint presentations, podcasts, videos, and more to your Course Materials page. For more ideas on creating a customized online resource page for your class, see Course Webpage Options on the library webpage under Faculty Services. (CONTACT: Sue Altmeyer ext. 4894).

4. Posting of First Class Assignments. Post your first class assignments on the law school website:

    http://www.law.csuohio.edu/first_assignments/create_firstassignment.php3
First class student assignments can be read at:

http://www.law.csuohio.edu/first_assignments/view_firstassignment.php3

5. Photocopying. Harold Jackson (687-4888; LB 116) is in charge of photocopying. Please submit your course syllabus and any other materials you want duplicated for your classes as far in advance as possible to avoid being caught in the last minute rush. (You can find out the approximate number of students in your class by going to your CampusNet account under Instructor/Class Roster. See Class Roster infra at XI.C.1.) The logistics of the system are greatly simplified by having a set of handouts prepared prior to the first class, but it is not always possible to anticipate all the materials you will use throughout a course.

For smaller photocopying jobs that you might want to do on your own, photocopiers are available for your use in the Office of the Dean, LB 114, and behind the Student Services Center reception desk.

Each class is allowed fifty (50) pages of free photocopies per semester to ensure students are provided with a syllabus and initial handouts. After the fifty-page limit, students will be charged .05 cents per page.

If you anticipate having a substantial amount of material reproduced as class handouts, talk to Harold Jackson about having the materials copied as a set and packaged for sale to students by the copy center. These materials are sold at .05 cents per page to students, plus the cost of covers and binding.

6. Posting of Office Hours. University regulations require that all full-time faculty post office hours indicating the times you will be available each week to meet with students. You must also note your office hours on your syllabus. Please make every effort to meet with all students who want to see you during office hours even if that means setting up additional meeting times.

7. Placing Course Materials on Reserve. If there are resources such as specific treatises or articles that will provide helpful optional reading for your students, contact (687-2250) to arrange to have the materials put on reserve in the law library for easy access by your students.

8. Student Pictures. Shortly after the start of the term, the Automation Department distributes picture rosters of students enrolled in each class.
You may also see photos of students in your class on Campus Net. See Class Roster, infra at XI.C.1. To view photos of all currently enrolled students, see https://intra.law.csuohio.edu/roster/roster.php. If you have questions, contact Automation at automation@law.csuohio.edu or 523-7555.

9. Technology in Classroom. All of the classrooms in the law school are equipped with presentation technology. These classrooms feature lcd projectors, document cameras, computers, DVD/VCR units, as well as inputs for external USB drives and laptop computers. All classroom presentation computers have standard office software, including PowerPoint, and are connected to the Internet. The classrooms in the main law school building make use of a standardized control system. If you would like an overview of the technology control systems, please contact a member of the automation staff for assistance. Smart Podium Instructions are also available online on the Faculty Resources page.

The seminar rooms (LB 64, 65, and 66 - located across the hallway from the law clinics) are equipped with lcd monitors and wall ports for the connection of laptop computers. If you would like to use the technology in these rooms, but do not own a laptop, please contact the automation department for assistance.

C. Course Procedural Matters

1. Class Roster. You can download your class roster on Campus Net. (See Campus Net, infra at XII.F for how to access this site). It will be under the Instructor tab. You may access contact information for every student in your class: Once you have the class roster on the screen, click on the word “details” next to the student’s name. You may also download the pictures of students in your class by clicking on Roster with Pictures, which is on the left hand side directly above the light brown bar that identifies the semester and course number of your class.

2. E-mail Class Lists. You can communicate with students via individual e-mail or class ListServs. To obtain a class ListServ, contact the Network Administrator at automation@law.csuohio.edu or 523-7555.

3. Student Mail. Student mailboxes no longer exist. If you need to give a document to an individual student, please do so through Mr. Payton and notify the student to pick it up at the Student Services Center reception desk.
4. Monitoring Class Attendance. ABA Standard 304(d) states, "A law school shall require regular and punctual class attendance." C|M|LAW Academic Regulation 1 states, "Students are required to attend classes with substantial regularity. Unsatisfactory attendance in any course, unless otherwise defined by the course faculty member with reasonable notice to students enrolled, shall be absence from more than two weeks of classes in a single semester (or, in the case of Summer term, absence from more than one week of classes) and shall be cause for lowering the final grade entered, involuntarily withdrawing a student from the course or entering the grade of ‘F,’ in the sole discretion of the course faculty member." See Student Handbook 2010-11, Academic Regulation 1. Some professors meet this requirement by taking attendance at the beginning of each class or by circulating a copy of the class roster during each class so that students can document their attendance by initialing the roster next to their names. You should state the class attendance requirement in your course syllabus. Students may be administratively withdrawn from a course due to excessive absenteeism. See Assistant Dean Lifter for details on this process.

5. Excused Absences for Election Work. In order to foster student engagement and participation in the civic sphere, Cleveland State University has encouraged students to serve as poll workers and in polling support positions for the last several national and statewide elections. In Spring 2008 the Faculty Senate of Cleveland State University adopted a policy pertaining to student absences arising because of such service in these elections. See Appendix 8, C.S.U. Poll Worker Excused Absence Policy.

6. Class Time. Our hour is 50 minutes. We are expected to teach that length of time for each hour whether we teach a 2-, 3-, or 4-credit-hour course. If we give a break in a class, we must make up that time. For example, if you teach a 4-credit-hour course in two 100-minute sessions with a 10-minute break, you need to make up that 10 minutes.

7. Class Cancellations. Class cancellations should be avoided, and missed classes must be made up before reading week begins. If you have to cancel a class for any reason, even if you have given your students prior notice, please inform Assistant Dean Lifter at 687-4557 or her secretary, Ms. Layla Davis, at x2396. If neither answers, then call Mr. Payton (687-2344). They will post a notice of the cancellation and e-mail your class (with copy to Associate Dean Sundahl). Please provide as much advance notice as possible. For evening classes, please call by 4:00 p.m. If you are cancelling a class, please make sure you speak with a live person. Do not rely on voice mail or e-mail unless receipt of the message is confirmed.

8. Makeup Classes. ABA Standard 304 requires that classes meet for a specific total number of minutes per academic credit hour during the semester, and our courses are scheduled to meet those requirements. Accordingly, makeup classes must be scheduled if you cancel a class. Depending on your students’ schedules, you may also be able to make up lost time by starting classes earlier or extending classes. Check with Ms. Natran and Ms. Layla Davis to determine classroom availability if you are planning extended or makeup sessions.

Other options for making up classes include bringing in a guest speaker (in lieu of cancelling class), having an online discussion if you use TWEN (or some other comparable website for your class), or videotaping a lecture. To videotape a class lecture, contact Automation at automation@law.csuohio.edu or 523-7555 at least one week in advance of the date you intend students to watch the video.

Makeup classes cannot be scheduled during the designated reading period (nor during the exam period) because that time is reserved for students to prepare for exams.

9. Student Evaluations. Student evaluations are required for all courses. Near the end of the semester, you will receive a packet of student evaluations. Most professors set aside 10-15 minutes of class time to have students complete the evaluations. You must not be in the room while students complete the evaluations. Please ask a student to collect the completed forms and return them to the Records Officer. Evaluation forms for evening students can be returned to the Legal Writing mail slot. You will not receive copies of your evaluations until you have submitted final grades for the course. The evaluations for all courses are bound by year and available to students at the Reserve Desk in the law library. A set is also kept in the Records Office for use by faculty and staff.

D. INDEPENDENT LEGAL RESEARCH AND UPPER LEVEL WRITING REQUIREMENT

Students must complete the upper level writing requirement in order to graduate. The purpose of the writing requirement is “to have each student undertake at least one rigorous writing experience” other than those provided in the first-year legal writing course or the third semester of legal writing. Appendix 6 contains the complete policy regarding Upper Level Writing Requirement and Independent Legal Research Standards. A significant number of students do this as independent study, especially those writing notes for Law Review or the Journal of Law and Health. Students ask faculty members to supervise their projects. If you agree to do so, our standards urge regular contact with the student and significant review and discussion of drafts. See id. You may agree to supervise any project you choose; it does not have to be in your area of scholarly expertise. Every faculty member is requested to supervise three notes for L860. You may not, however, supervise more than six students per year without approval from the Dean or his designate. Id.

In addition, pursuant to guidelines adopted by the faculty in November 2006, faculty supervising notes for L860 credit are asked to coordinate submission dates with the appropriate law review and/or journal. See id. at C.

Papers completed for Independent Legal Research and/or Upper Level Writing Requirement must be retained for two years: You can keep them yourself, or you can give them to Ms. Carter or Mr. Payton for storage with the exams.

E. EXAMINATIONS AND GRADING

1. Introduction. This section provides information regarding midterm and final exams. Over the past few years, we have changed many of our procedures regarding exams: Most exams are now taken on computer, we have new grading guidelines and proctoring procedures, and we require advanced notice for both take home exams and midterms. If you have a question about exams or grading that is not answered here, or the information here is not clear, please ask Associate Dean Sundahl, Assistant Dean Lifter, or Records Officer Rechner.

2. Midterm Exams. Midterm Exams are an increasingly popular option used in many classes, both first year and upper level.

a. Scheduling. Students may take midterm exams on computer, as they do final in class exams. You must give Automation two weeks advance notice so that the exam software can be made available to your class. You must also give Assistant Dean Lifter two weeks advance notice. See Proctoring infra.

b. Anonymity. If you give a midterm that is worth 10% or more of the final grade in the course, students must obtain exam numbers so that your grading is anonymous. See Academic Regulation 3.9.

c. Proctoring. If your midterm is worth 10% or more of the final grade in the course, you cannot proctor your own midterm. This is consistent with our new proctoring policy for final in-class exams. Please contact Assistant Dean Lifter two weeks before your midterm so that she can arrange for a staff member to proctor your exam. As with the final exam protocol, you need to fill out the Exam Instruction sheet so that the proctor knows the procedural details for administering the exam. See Appendix 15.

If your midterm is not worth 10% or more of the final grade, you can proctor your own exam.

d. Materials for your Exam. If you proctor your exam, you are responsible for bringing bluebooks, scantron sheets, and pencils to the exam. Bluebooks and scantron sheets are available from Mr. Jackson in the Copy Room. Pencils are available from Ms. Rechner in the Records Office.

e. Provisions for Students with Disabilities. If a student has received accommodations for taking exams pursuant to Academic Regulation 3.7, they will take the midterm exam under those same conditions. Assistant Dean Lifter will notify you of any such students in your class.

f. Rescheduling an Individual Student’s Exam. If a student is unable to take the midterm at the scheduled time, s/he must make arrangements with Assistant Dean Lifter to reschedule the exam. No student may take the exam prior to the scheduled time; All rescheduled times will be after the regular exam time. This is consistent with our policy regarding final exams. See Academic Regulation 3.6.

g. Word Counts on In-Class Exams. Please see Word Counts under Final Examinations, infra.
h. Take-Home Exams. Please see Take-Home Exams under Final Examinations, infra. Unlike in the case of a Final Exam, no notice need be provided to Dean Lifter.

3. Final Exams.

a. Reading Period. Students are afforded a relatively short reading period between the last day of classes and first day of final exams. Therefore, this period cannot be used to makeup classes or to give in-class or take-home exams. The reading period for each term is indicated on the master Course Schedule available in the Student Services Center and on our website at www.law.csuohio.edu/current_students/academic_calendar.html.

b. Scheduling of Final Exams. Assistant Dean Lifter circulates a tentative schedule of Fall term exams along with the tentative course schedules in the Spring of the prior year. She circulates a tentative schedule for the Spring term exams during the Fall semester. Please review these immediately and let her know if you identify any problems or conflicts with the exam schedules.

If you plan to give a take-home exam, you must notify Assistant Dean Lifter by the ninth week of the term with the information identified under Take-Home Exams, infra.

c. Preparation of Final Exams. If you need help typing your exam, please allow at least five working days for typing and duplication, which will be taken care of by the word processing department through Laverne Carter, Office Manager. On the first page of the exam, please indicate the course name, number, section, instructor name, and semester; leave a blank for the student exam number—all of this will facilitate collecting exams at the end of the exam. Please number the pages of your exam so as to ensure each student has all pages of the exam.

You must complete the Exam Instruction Form for each exam you administer. See Appendix 16. Please make sure your instructions are complete because the proctor will rely on this document when proctoring your exam. If your exam is broken down into parts, please explain exactly how the exam is to be administered. If your exam has multiple choice questions, you must specify whether students must use the blue (up to 5 choices for the answers) or green (up to 10 choices) scantron sheet. Also, please indicate whether copies of your exam should be given to the library (after the exam period) for inclusion in the online Past Exams (see infra at XI.E.6). If there are any questions about your instructions, someone will contact you before your exam.

So that we can be sure that we have all exams and complete instructions for the proctor before the start of the exam, we will need to have copies of your exam with instructions for the proctor at least 24 hours before the scheduled beginning time of the exam. This means that you cannot bring the exam in with you on the day of the exam. You must have the exam and instruction form copied in time for it to be delivered to Assistant Dean Lifter at least 24 hours before the scheduled start time. For example, if your exam is scheduled for Monday at 9 a.m., Jean Lifter must have the exam by Friday at 9 a.m. (As you can tell, we are not counting weekends in the timeframe.) You will need to give the exam to Ms. Carter sufficiently prior to that for her to have the exam copied. The exams are copied and secured so that no students have access to them prior to the exam.

d. Exams Taken on Computer. So many students prefer to take exams on computer that we will now assume that you will allow this option, unless we hear otherwise from you. Each semester the IT staff sends out an email explaining this policy and asking those who do not want to allow students to take exams on computer to inform the IT staff.

As a faculty member, preparing for a computerized exam is exactly the same as preparing for one written by hand. Both groups will receive printed copies of your exam questions. After the exam is completed, the computerized exams are printed by the law school’s technology department and are then delivered to Assistant Dean Lifter for distribution. If you want exams printed in large font or printed every other line, please inform the Automation Department prior to your exam date.

Students who can provide their own laptop computers are strongly encouraged to do so. However, students who do not have their own laptop computers may request the use of one of the law school owned laptops, subject to availability. If demand exceeds supply, the available laptops will be assigned via a lottery. This lottery will be held before the examination period so that students who wish to use a law school owned laptop will know whether or not one will be available to them. Thus far, we have had enough computers for student use and have not had to use the lottery system.

e. Word Counts on In-Class Exams. Now that most of us allow students to take in-class exams on computer, many have thought about how to convert blue books pages to word counts on the computer. In the 2008-09 academic year, the Teaching Committee researched this issue and made the following recommendation:

Among other approaches that might be taken, faculty at Cleveland-Marshall and other law schools have found success with simple page-to-words ratios for converting blue-book page limits to word limits for PC test takers. Based on our study, a fair estimate for the conversion would be to assume that each side of a single-spaced bluebook page contains between 250 and 300 words.

f. Proctoring In-Class Final Exams. Please see the Exam Procedures Memo attached as Appendix 15, which explains the specifics of our proctoring system. Proctors will be assigned to proctor your exam by Laverne Carter. During the proctoring of your exam, you must be available to answer any questions that may arise during or immediately after your exam is administered. You must either be in your office or provide Assistant Dean Lifter with a telephone number so that she is able to contact you immediately during you exam, if necessary.

You will be notified once your exams are ready for pickup from Assistant Dean Lifter. See the Section D of the Exam Procedures Memo (Appendix 15) for further information regarding picking up your exams.

g. Rescheduling Exams. The exam schedule is available to students before they register for classes each term and can be obtained online at www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/course_and_examschedule/current_year_schedule. Students with two exams in close proximity may be able to reschedule one of the exams to a later date. See Academic Regulation 3.6(b). In such cases, Assistant Dean Lifter will request copies of exams to administer. Full instructions as to timing, permitted resources, etc. must accompany all such exams. Occasionally students experience exceptional situations (personal illness, death in the family, and the like) preventing them from taking the exam at the scheduled time. If this occurs, Assistant Dean Lifter should be informed immediately; thereafter, the student will work directly with her to schedule a makeup date. In addition, a few of your students may take the exam separately from the rest of the class due to accommodations we make for students with documented disabilities. Students seeking special arrangements must formally submit documentation to Assistant Dean Lifter at least one month before the last day of classes to schedule their exams. She will notify you if we need exams for rescheduling purposes.

h. Take-Home Exams. Professors may utilize take-home exams to measure the students' comprehension of the course materials. Certain caveats accompany this type of exam. You must tell Assistant Dean Lifter by week nine of the semester (1) that you will give a take-home exam and (2) who will distribute and collect the exams. You must give students very specific directions as to when the exams will be available, what resources they can consult in preparing their answers, and the date (including a specific time) their answers are due. Take-home exams may not be distributed or administered during the reading period. The reading period is set aside for students to study; giving exams during this time defeats this purpose. Take-home exams may be given only during the exam period. Mr. Payton may distribute and collect take-home exams. You must contact him well in advance to make appropriate arrangements and must provide him with any exam materials and a completed Take-Home Exam Form (provided in Appendix 18 and available online on the Faculty Resources page). The library will not assist in the administration of take-home exams.

4. Grades

a. Grading Guidelines. You will receive memoranda each term covering the grading procedures at Cleveland-Marshall. We have an anonymous grading system and an academic policy that states all courses "shall be graded in a responsible and professional manner.” Faculty meeting minutes, April 28, 1988. The policy also states:
[I]t is expected that all first-year core courses, all Perspective courses with twenty or more students, and all upper-class courses which are either required for graduation or recommended for the bar examination, shall be graded on the basis of a reasonable distribution of grades across the various grade categories. The advisory guidelines currently in effect shall serve as prima facie evidence of what constitutes a reasonable distribution, respectively, in the first year and at the upper levels; the upper-level advisory guidelines shall apply to Perspective courses. As heretofore, the Dean will have discretion to disallow any course grades which do not reflect a responsible and professional system of grading.

The grading guidelines (new in Summer 2008) are as follows:

<table>

The Advisory Grade Distribution guidelines set forth the range—in terms of percentages—of As, B+s, Bs, etc. for each course. Grades fitting within the ranges are prima facie evidence of the reasonable grade distribution required by our academic grading policy. See Id. The ranges provide a certain amount of flexibility to the professor while also establishing uniform standards that prevent one professor from routinely awarding no grade lower than a B and another professor teaching the same course from refusing to give any grade.
higher than a C+. The Grade Distribution Form is available online on the Faculty Resources page.

After you have completed your grading, you must fill out and turn in to Marcie Rechner, our Records Officer, for every course, the Advisory Grade Distribution form on which you calculate the number and percentage of grades in each grade category. A copy of the Advisory Grade Distribution Form is attached as Appendix 18. (This form is provided to you with the grading memo at the end of each term.) The completed form must be reviewed and approved by Associate Dean Sundahl before the grades can be accepted by the school. Please indicate the high “A” in each class when you submit your grades as many honors and awards are based on these designations.

b. Anonymity. Student exams are graded anonymously. All precautions should be taken to protect anonymity. Students should be warned not to place their names or any other identifying marks on their exams. The anonymity of the grading process is facilitated through the use of exam numbers. Students fill out exam number cards at Student Records in the Student Services Center and deposit them in a box. The cards are compiled into a list matching students with exam numbers. Students use the same number for each exam they take at the end of a particular term. Students must, however, use a different number for midterm and final exams.

c. Upper Level Writing Requirement and Courses Requiring Papers. Obviously, no anonymity exists in courses where students write a paper rather than take an exam, since you work closely with individual students as they select their topics, prepare outlines, and submit various drafts to you for approval throughout the course. Cleveland-Marshall has specific criteria for student papers which satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement. See Appendix 6.

d. Other Factors Affecting Final Grades. Many professors base course grades solely on student performance on the midterm and/or final exam. Although an accepted practice, this should not be viewed as a limitation on the methods used to assess a student's performance in a class. For example, you can give more frequent exams or quizzes, require formal class presentations on particular subjects, assign writing and research projects, or base part of the grade on general class participation. Three caveats are warranted. First, as previously noted, ABA accreditation standards require class attendance, so a student’s grade should not be adjusted upward for merely showing up for class. The grade can be adjusted downward for poor attendance, and you have the right to withdraw a student administratively from class if absenteeism becomes extreme. Second, you must state in your written syllabus provided to students at the start of the course the factors that will affect their final grades. Finally, you are highly encouraged to provide written feedback to students on their exams and other assignments explaining the reason for the grade you assign.

e. Turning in Grades. Your grades are due approximately 21 days from the Friday of the week your exam is given. We will notify you well in advance as to the exact date.

It is imperative that you turn your grades in on time. Late grades have a number of serious consequences apart from student anxiety about their grades. We cannot determine who keeps or loses their scholarships; we cannot determine who will be academically dismissed; we cannot determine who has satisfied their graduation requirements; we cannot provide the Ohio Supreme Court with the final law school certification of completion required for students to take the Bar; we cannot determine Dean’s List or class rankings, the latter of which affects the Law Review and Journal—knowing who has qualified for membership and who may participate in the write-on competition.

After you have graded your exams, give the list of exam numbers and corresponding grades to the Records Officer; she will return the list to you with the students’ names matched with their exam numbers. You can then make adjustments in the final grade for each student based on other criteria that you made known to your class in your syllabus, such as class participation and attendance. You then return the list of exam numbers, names and final course grades to the Records Officer for processing. Our Records Officer, Marcie Rechner, enters grades for each course into CampusNet. Due to security concerns, the Records Officer is able to post grades only at certain limited times. This means the grades you submitted might not be posted for several days.
f. Grade Changes. After you have finalized your grades, you may not change a student's grade unless you have made a computational error in the test score or final grade. In accordance with the Academic Regulations, you must submit a request to change a grade to the Academic Standards Committee, and you must provide an explanation of the computational error. See Academic Regulation 2.4(c). A student may also petition the Academic Standards Committee for a grade change. See Id at 2.4(d). Assistant Dean Lifter supervises the petitioning process and will provide additional information to students or professors upon request.

Once grades are posted, students may elect to change up to two certain elective course grades to a Pass, if they received a grade higher than a C-. See Academic Regulation 4.6.

g. Incompletes. A faculty member may give a student a grade of Incomplete if the student’s work has been satisfactory but the student, through no fault of her own, has not been able to complete the course work. See Academic Regulation 2.2. The course work must be completed, and a final grade submitted, no later than the last day of classes of the subsequent semester. This includes the summer term; so, if you give an I in the Spring term, you must submit a letter grade by the last day of classes in the Summer term. Id. If the course work is not completed, a grade of F will be recorded. Id. A student may seek an extension by petitioning the Academic Standards Committee.

h. The Honor Code. C|M|LAW has an Honor Code governing student conduct during examinations, while researching and writing papers, and in performing other school-related assignments. The Honor Code and the procedures for adjudicating possible violations are provided in the Student Handbook. It is advisable to direct your students’ attention to parts of the Code that are relevant to any assignment or exam you give. It is also important that you become familiar with the procedures for handling potential violations of the Code. The current version of the Student Handbook can be found at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/resources/studenthandbook.

5. Maintaining and Reviewing Student Exams and Papers. Ms. Carter manages the law school system that provides students an opportunity to review their exams in the Student Services Center during specific dates and times each semester.

After your grades are finalized, please submit your exams and papers to Mr. Payton at the Student Services Center reception desk. If you prefer students contact you directly to review their exam, please tell Mr. Payton so that he can inform inquiring students from your class. Obviously, exam reviews are much more valuable to students if you have provided comments on the exams as to strengths and weaknesses.

If you wish to review an exam personally with a student, please provide your course name and the student’s exam number to Mr. Payton or Ms. Carter, and they will provide the student’s exam to you. Please return the exam to Mr. Payton or Ms. Carter promptly.

Ms. Carter oversees the long-term storage of exams and papers. We retain exams and papers for two years. If you elect to retain your own exams for exam review purposes, you must retain the exams for two years or give them to Ms. Carter for storage.

6. Past Exams Online. The library maintains a secure webpage for posting past exams. See https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/instruct#exams. Please consider placing your past exams online. When you submit your exam for copying, Ms. Carter will ask if you want your exam given to the library for this purpose. In addition, please consider putting the top A answer, or answer grid, online.

XI. FACULTY PERSONNEL POLICIES

The "Green Book" is CSU’s official source of faculty personnel policies and bylaws. It includes the standards for promotion and tenure, leaves of absence (including Family Medical Leave Act), and sabbaticals. Although the law school faculty is not part of the bargaining unit, Green Book standards still apply to us. The most up-to-date version of the Green Book is at http://www.csuohio.edu/organizations/facultysenate (on right side of webpage, click on 8.0: Personnel Policies and Bylaws). In addition to the Green Book, the law school has its own policies and procedures regarding promotion and tenure. A copy of these may be obtained from the Personnel Action Committee Chair or at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/facultystaff/pac (click on Cleveland-Marshall Procedures and Criteria for Promotion and Tenure). Also at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/facultystaff/pac, you may click on Criteria, Standards, and Procedures for the Appointment of Non-tenure-track Clinical and Legal Writing Professors. If you have questions about the terms and conditions of your employment, please consult Budget Director Jeane H. White or Dean Boise.

XII. OPERATIONS AND OTHER MATTERS

A. Bylaws. In May 2009, the law faculty adopted Bylaws that govern membership and voting rights, faculty meetings, committees, and other related matters. A copy is attached as Appendix 13.

B. Committees. Committees are an integral part of faculty governance, and the tasks they perform are critical to the law school operation. As part of the annual review, the Dean will solicit faculty committee preferences. Three standing committees are the Dean’s Faculty Advisory Committee, Faculty Affairs Committee (elected), and Personnel Action Committee. Other current committees are:

- Academic Standards
- Admissions
- Awards and Competitions
- Bar Exam
- Building
- Cleveland-Marshall Fund/Baker-Hostetler Chair
- Cleveland-Marshall Summer Research Grants
- Curriculum
- Faculty Appointments
- Graduate Studies, International Programs and Joint Degree Programs
- Honor Council
- Summer Teaching Grants
- Teaching
- Special Committee on Health Law Programming

Each fall the Dean provides each committee with a charge setting forth certain work that the committee should engage in. Faculty committees are free to set their own agendas and pursue activities that the committee believes are within their purview. Each committee is expected to provide the Dean with a written progress report in December and May.

C. Consulting and Other Extramural Employment. In October 2008, the CSU Board of Trustees adopted a new policy that requires written preapproval by the Dean for certain kinds of work outside of the law school. A copy of the policy is attached as Appendix 14.

D. Counseling Center. The University Counseling Center assists faculty, staff and students who want to seek psychological counseling. It is advisable to schedule appointments in advance by calling extension 2277. Interviews are confidential. The Center is located in Rhodes Tower 1235.

E. E-Mail. Most law school communication is conducted by e-mail. All e-mail addresses at the law school (students, faculty, and staff) are in this format: firstname.lastname@law.csuohio.edu. You are responsible for checking e-mail on a regular basis for announcements and other communications. We have created internal listservs for convenience:

For the most recent version of our email lists, please see https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/technology/emaillists.

F. Campus Net. Campus Net is the CSU online site on which you can access information about yourself and your students. The site is easily accessible from bottom of the law school home page by clicking on Campus Net. Follow the instructions on Campus Net for how to log on. For information about students in your class, look under the Instructor tab. See Class Roster supra at XI.C.1. for details.

Campus Net also contains your personal contact information (address, phone numbers, emergency contact numbers) that CSU uses to send you information. You can change that information online once you have accessed your Campus Net account.

G. Fax. The fax machine (216-687-6881) is located behind the Student Services Center reception workstation. Incoming faxes will be placed in your mailbox. Cover sheets for outgoing faxes are available next to the fax machine. Please see Mr. Payton if you need assistance.

H. Faculty Meetings. Regular faculty meetings are scheduled once a month, usually on Thursday at 4:00 p.m. in the Faculty Presentation Room, LB 60. Additional meetings are called as needed. Faculty attendance is expected, so you must inform Holli Goodman (x2300) if you are unable to attend. We welcome attendance and participation by adjunct faculty. With the exception of executive sessions, faculty meetings are open to the public.

I. Health Services. The Health and Wellness Services Department is located in the Science & Research Building, Room 153. To make an appointment, please call 687-3649. See http://www.csuohio.edu/offices/health/.

Hours of operation are: Monday & Tuesday 8:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. and Wednesday through Friday 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. The clinic is staffed by nurse practitioners and a physician who are qualified to discuss your health history, perform physical examinations, and provide for your care. There is no charge for most visits. A minimal charge may be assessed for medications, laboratory tests, and physical exams.

If a patient’s injury or illness cannot be treated on campus, the patient may be taken to St. Vincent Hospital by University Police officers if available at the time. Serious cases are attended and transported by Cleveland Medical Emergency Service. The Emergency Service is available to the University Police Department through radio contact. The University Police extension is 2020.

J. Identification Cards. CSU Faculty ID cards can be obtained at the CSU Vikingcard Office, located in Room 112 of Main Classroom. You do not need an appointment to get your card issued, but you should take another piece of photo identification and a copy of your teaching contract. The CSU Faculty ID card entitles you to discount tickets to athletic events and other benefits such as free use of CSU’s recreational facilities, and allows you to check books out of the law and university libraries. For more information, call extension 9888.

K. myTime/myPay. The University uses an online program for recording and reporting compensation and sick and vacation days (myTime). Faculty are expected to record sick days on their myTime tables. See http://mycsu.csuohio.edu and click on Employee Self Service on the right margin to access myTime.

L. Parking. The 17th-18th Garage (Lot WG) is located between Chester and Euclid with the entrance on East 17th Street; it directly connects to the law school via an elevated, enclosed walkway through the business school. There is a slightly closer garage south of Chester (Lot PF) with entrances on East 19th and East 21st Streets. Appropriate parking passes are required to park in certain garages on campus. If you have not already received a packet of information from Parking Operations, please contact them at extension 2023.

M. Receiving Mail at the Law School. Mail can be sent to you at the university's mailing address: Cleveland State University, 2121 Euclid Avenue, LB 138, Cleveland, Ohio 44115-2214. Mail addressed to faculty as well as memos and other items distributed by C|M|LAW personnel will be placed in a mailbox assigned to you in the Student Services Center behind the reception desk. NOTE: In order to receive overnight or other express mail, you must use the actual street address of the law school: 1801 Euclid Avenue, LB 138, Cleveland OH 44115.

N. Secretarial Services. Full-time faculty are assigned a specific staff member to provide secretarial support. The Word Processing Unit is located in the first floor support area near the copying center (LB 115).

O. Security. Due to our urban setting, you should be alert to possible security problems. Always keep your valuable belongings out of sight in your office, and do not leave your office door open or unlocked when you are not in your office. Be careful walking around campus in the evenings. You can request an escort to walk you to your car by calling extension 2020 on a campus phone. Please note that your phone is equipped with a quick-dial “911” button.

P. Supplies. You may obtain office supplies from Mr. Jackson in Support Services, LB 116.

Q. Building and Physical Plant Issues. When a problem occurs in the building and requires attention, you can call the Physical Plant Dispatch telephone number, X2500, to report the problem. Their hours are 7:45 am to 5:00 pm each day. After 5 pm, you must contact the CSU Police Department, X2020, and they will contact the proper department on campus.
to address your problem. There is someone on duty in each department during the evening hours and the Police department will contact them for you. You can also call Sandra Natran with your building problems during normal working hours, who will contact Physical Plant for you or initiate a Service request form if your request requires specific attention by a certain department; such as painting an office, carpentry work, or moving items.
Appendix 1

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law
Statement on Professional Ethics and Academic Responsibility

The basic functions of the University are the advancement and dissemination of knowledge, the development of critical intelligence in the young, and the education of citizens and professional workers for the society of which the University is a part.

The indispensable condition for the successful discharge of these functions is an atmosphere of intellectual freedom. Unless he or she is free to pursue the quest for knowledge and understanding, wherever it may lead, and to report and discuss the findings, whatever they may be, the University faculty member cannot properly perform his or her work. It is imperative, therefore, that the University maintain an atmosphere of intellectual freedom and that faculty members uphold that freedom by their own actions. To make that freedom operational, it is equally imperative that the University establish democratic mechanisms for meaningful faculty participation in the governance of the institution.

Freedom entails responsibilities. It is incumbent upon the faculty member to accept the responsibilities which are concomitant with the freedom he or she needs and, for the most part, enjoys. Those responsibilities are: (1) to students, (2) to scholarship, (3) to colleagues, (4) to the University, and (5) to the larger community which the University serves.

A) Responsibilities to Students

As teachers, faculty members have the responsibility for creating in the classroom or laboratory and in relations with students a climate that stimulates and encourages the students’ endeavors to learn. To the best of their ability, exemplify high scholarly standards, and respect and foster the students’ freedom to choose and pursue their own goals.

Regardless of rank or position, the instructor of record is required to file with the department and to provide each student with a course syllabus specifying at a minimum:

a) the instructor’s office and phone number

b) the instructor’s office hours

c) the basis for determining the student’s grade Adequate supporting documentation regarding student performance should be continually maintained. Any changes to items a) through c) should be provided to the student in writing. Documentation shall be maintained for one semester.

Adopted by the faculty on January 17, 2008. This Statement is derived primarily from Cleveland State University’s Greenbook § 8.1.14 (Attachment C to 8.1).

Refusal to fulfill this responsibility after reasonable warnings and an opportunity to rectify the condition is cause for the Dean to recommend that the Chief Academic Officer initiate the procedure for sanctions.

1) The faculty member has the obligation to make clear the objectives of the course or program, to establish requirements, to set standards of achievement, and to evaluate the student's performance.

2) The faculty member has the responsibility to meet classes as scheduled and, when circumstances prevent this, to arrange equivalent alternate instruction.

3) The faculty member has the responsibility to teach courses in a manner that is consistent with the course description and credit published in the catalogue and with the announced objectives of the course.

4) The faculty member owes to the student and the University a fair and impartial evaluation of the student's work. Such evaluation should be consistent with recognized standards and must not be influenced by irrelevancies such as religion, race, sex, or political view, or be based on the student's agreement with the teacher's opinions pertaining to matters of controversy within the discipline.

5) Every student is entitled to the same intellectual freedom that the faculty member enjoys. The faculty member must respect that freedom. He or she may not impose restraints upon the student's search for or consideration of diverse or contrary opinion. More positively, the faculty member has an obligation to protect the student's freedom to learn, especially when that freedom is threatened by repressive or disruptive action.

6) The faculty member has obligations as intellectual guide and counselor to students. He or she has a responsibility to be available to students without undue delay. In advising students, he or she should make every reasonable effort to see that information given to them is as accurate as possible. The progress of students in achieving their academic goals should not be thwarted or unduly retarded because a faculty member has neglected obligations as advisor and counselor.

7) Faculty members should conduct themselves at all times so as to demonstrate respect for the student. They should always respect the confidences deriving from the faculty-student relationship.

8) The faculty member must avoid exploitation of students for personal advantage. For example, in writing and oral presentations, he or she makes due acknowledgement of their contributions to the work.
B) Responsibilities to Scholarship

The faculty member's responsibilities to scholarship derive from the University's commitment to truth and the advancement of knowledge. Furthermore, society has a vital state in maintaining the university as an institution where knowledge can be sought and communicated regardless of its popularity, its political implications, or even its immediate usefulness. The faculty member has an ethical responsibility both to make full appropriate use of that freedom in teaching and research and to guard it from abuse.

More specifically:

1) Faculty members are committed to a lifetime of study. Although no one can know everything, even about a limited subject, they must constantly strive to keep abreast of progress in their field, to develop and improve scholarly and teaching skills, and to devote part of their energies to the extension of knowledge in their area of competence.

2) The faculty member has the responsibility of being unfailingly honest in research and teaching, refraining from deliberate distortion or misrepresentation and taking regular precautions against the common causes of error.

3) In order to maintain or increase their effectiveness as a scholar, faculty members may find it advantageous to assume certain obligations outside the university, such as consulting for government or industry, or holding office in scholarly or professional societies. Such activities are appropriate in so far as they contribute to their development as a scholar in the field, or at the very least, do not interfere with that development. On the other hand, acceptance of such obligations primarily for financial gain, especially when such activities may be incompatible with the faculty member's primary dedication as a scholar cannot be condoned.

C) Responsibilities to Colleagues

As a colleague, the faculty member has obligations that derive from common membership in the community of scholars. He or she respects and defends the free inquiry of associates and avoids interference with their work. In the exchange of criticism and ideas he or she shows due respect for the rights of others to their opinions, refraining from personal vilification. He or she acknowledges contributions of others to the work. When asked to evaluate the professional performance of a colleague, the faculty member strives to be objective.

D) Responsibilities to the Institution

The faculty member's primary responsibility to his or her institution is to seek to realize maximum potential as an effective scholar and teacher. In addition, the faculty member has a responsibility to participate in the day-to-day operation of the University. Among the faculty member's general responsibilities to the University the following may be particularly noted:

1) When acting or speaking as a private person, the faculty member should make clear that the actions and utterances are entirely his or her own and not those of the University.

2) The faculty member must never attempt to exploit his standing within the University for private or personal gain. He or she may, on appropriate occasions, cite his connection with the University, but only for purposes of identification not permitting the impression to prevail that the University in any way sponsors any of his private activities.

3) University facilities, equipment, supplies, etc., must never be used for personal or private business.

4) A faculty member has the duty to ensure that the regulations of the University are designed to achieve the University's goals as well as being in accord with the principles of academic freedom. Recognizing the importance of order within the institution, the faculty member observes the regulations of the University, but in no way abdicates the right to attempt to reform those regulations by any appropriate orderly means.

5) Effective faculty participation in the governance of the University promotes academic freedom and the goals of the institution. Each faculty member should take part in the institution's decision-making processes to the best of his or her ability and should accept a fair share of the faculty's responsibilities for its day-to-day operation.

6) During periods of disturbance or high tension on campus, a faculty member should do everything possible to prevent acts of violence and to reduce tension.

7) A faculty member determines the amount and character of the work and other activities he pursues outside his responsibilities within the University and his primary loyalties to it.

E) Responsibilities to the Community

As a member of the community, the faculty member has the rights and obligations of any citizen. These include the right to organize and join political or other associations, convene and conduct public meetings, and publicize an opinion on political and social issues. However, in exercising these rights, the faculty member must make it clear that he or she does not speak for the University, but simply as an individual. The faculty member does not use the classroom to solicit support for his or her personal views and opinions.

Because academic freedom has traditionally included the faculty member's full freedom as a citizen, most faculty members face no insoluble conflicts between the claims of politics, social action, and conscience, on the one hand, and the claims and expectations of their students, colleagues, and institutions on the other. If such conflicts become acute, and the faculty member's attention to obligations as a citizen and moral agent precludes the fulfillment of substantial academic obligations, he or she cannot escape the responsibility of that choice, but should either request a leave of absence or resign the academic position.

F) Service to the Legal Profession

Faculty members are encouraged to work with the practicing bar and judiciary to improve the profession.

G) Service to the Public

Faculty members are encouraged to engage in pro bono and other public service activities.

H) Annual Evaluation Process

The law school will evaluate, on an annual basis, the extent to which faculty meet the criteria specified in (A)-(G) above through the annual reports that faculty members complete and submit to the Dean. The Dean will review these annual reports and discuss them at individual conferences with each faculty member. Pursuant to ABA Standard 404(a), faculty members need not meet these criteria uniformly.
APPENDIX 2

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, Cleveland State University Policies on Standard Teaching Schedules, Variances, and Course Releases

1. Standard Teaching Schedule. The standard teaching requirement for legal writing, tenured and tenure track faculty is two courses in the fall semester and two courses in the spring semester, typically totaling 11 to 13 credit hours.

The teaching load for a faculty member who teaches four courses totaling 14 or more credit hours in one academic year (exclusive of summer teaching for which additional compensation is received) may be set, at the discretion of the Dean, at three courses the following year, provided that the three courses total 10 or more credit hours.

Rationale: CSU Personnel Policies and Bylaws, also known as the Greenbook, do not set a standard teaching load for non-bargaining unit tenured or tenure-track or for legal writing professors. Cleveland-Marshall’s two course per semester, 11-13 credit hours standard is consistent with other schools. For example, Toledo, Capital, Ohio Northern and Cincinnati require four courses per year. Case and Ohio State each require three courses a year. Harvard requires 10 hours a year with “generous release time.” Other CSU faculty generally teach 16-24 credit hours per AY.

Cleveland-Marshall classes taught by tenured, tenure track and legal writing faculty generally range from 2 to 4 credit hours. In some instances (such as seminar courses) faculty can choose to teach a course for either 2 or 3 hours. In other courses the credit

2 Adopted by the faculty May 8, 2008. Except where otherwise noted, the proposed standards apply to legal writing and clinical professors as well as tenured and tenure track faculty. “Academic year” (AY) as used in these proposals excludes the summer term.

3 Article 13.1 of the CSU AAUP Collective Bargaining Agreement governs faculty workloads. It provides at §13.1D: “The teaching load for faculty shall range from 8 – 12 credit hours per term or 16 – 24 credit hours per academic year. Faculty reassigned to professional activities other than instructional activities may have their instructional load reduced below these levels. Faculty who are active in productive and assessable scholarship/research/creative activity, and/or University or professional service (including service to the community) shall normally be assigned responsibility for 8 credit hours per term. Faculty may be assigned a higher load if their teaching assignments involve less than full responsibility for a course (e.g., team-teaching assignments, laboratory monitoring, supervision of interns, etc.) or if they concentrate primarily on instructional activities rather than participating significantly in productive and assessable scholarship/research/creative activity, and/or University or professional service (including service to the community). . . . The maximum teaching load for a faculty member shall be 12 credit hours per term.” In general, CSU faculty members who publish regularly teach five courses an AY, but as the above language indicates, faculty may be assigned more or fewer than five courses based on other professional commitments. The average credit hours per course vary among colleges and departments. For example many Business Administration and Civil Engineering courses are 3 credit hours, while Psychology and Biology classes are usually 4 credit hours. Introductory, specialty courses and courses with laboratory components range from 1 to 7 credit hours. On average, however, other CSU colleges offer more 4-credit hour courses than we do.

4 Students participating in a clinic can register for 2 to 5 credit hours per semester; externs can register for 4 to 6 credit hours.
hours are set (for instance first year courses that are 3 credits in the fall and 2 in the spring).

Due to the wide range of credit hours per course, a professor’s usual four course schedule might exceed the typical credit hour standard of 11-13 credit hours on a regular basis. In other instances a professor may be asked to pick up an additional course due to the unavailability of the faculty member originally scheduled to teach that course. If either scenario results in a professor teaching 14 or more hours in a particular year, exclusive of any credit hours for which additional compensation is received, the dean and the faculty member teaching the overload may negotiate a downward adjustment from the standard four course schedule the following academic year. This adjustment does not require a formal application as provided in §6. The name of any faculty member who negotiates such an adjustment is not included in the list of faculty receiving a course release or variance published by the Dean pursuant to §7.

This standard is not applicable to Cleveland-Marshall clinical professors. Clinicians contract to teach a particular clinical course each year (e.g. Employment Law Clinic, Urban Development Law Clinic) which involves a seminar component and significant work with students, but the contract does not describe these professors’ obligations in terms of credit hours.

2. Variance to Standard Teaching Schedule. A faculty member may request a variance from the standard two-courses per semester teaching schedule. For example, Professor A could apply to teach three courses in the fall semester and one course in the spring semester. Professor B could apply to teach two courses in the fall, one in the spring and one in the summer term, provided that no additional compensation is received for teaching the summer course.

The request for a variance is subject to application process set forth in §7 below and to the limitations in §6 below.

Rationale: This type of schedule flexibility has been individually negotiated by certain faculty members but has never been identified as an option available to all faculty members. It is beneficial to individual professors and to the law school to allow flexibility in scheduling. In addition, this system might encourage more people to teach in the summer.

3. Course Release. A faculty member may apply for a one-semester, one-course release if other substantial professional commitments, such as chairing a major university or law school committee, working on a significant publication, assuming a

5 Legal Writing and Civil Procedure are 6 hour courses (divided into two, 3-hours courses taught by the same instructor). Property, Torts and Contracts are 5 hours (divided into a 3 hour fall course and 2 hour spring course taught by the same instructor). Evidence, Estates & Trusts, Corporations, Tax I, Tax II, and Land Use Control (for JD/MUPDD students) are 4 hour courses. Many classes are offered for 3 credit hours, although most third-semester writing classes are 2 credits, and professors often elect to teach seminar courses for two rather than three hours. Some courses including First Amendment and Legal Profession are offered for 3 credits during the AY and for 2 credits in the summer. [Note: The nature of first-year courses has changed upon semesterization of these courses pursuant to curricular reform implemented in 2012.]
particularly burdensome teaching load, or a combination of these or similar professional commitments place significant demands on the faculty member’s time and the Dean determines that a course release is in the law school’s best interests. See §7 below for application process.

_Rationale:_ Teaching releases have been awarded in the past for a variety of reasons on an ad hoc basis. There has been no formal application procedure and no clear criteria for such releases. While not limiting the discretion of law school administrators to grant or deny course releases in any particular case, this standard is intended to make all faculty aware that course releases are available and to identify some of the situations that have justified past releases. This negotiated process also appears consistent with that used in other CSU colleges governed by the CBA. See FN 2 for details.

In considering whether a “particularly burdensome teaching load” justifies a release, the Dean will generally consider a number of factors. These include the number of students in the professor’s classes, the nature and quantity of feedback mechanisms and assignments the professor incorporates into his or her courses, the level of preparation required for the courses and other relevant factors.

4. Tenure-Track Faculty. Untenured tenure-track faculty who commence their teaching careers at Cleveland-Marshall are usually allowed two course releases prior to the semester in which they are reviewed for tenure. Generally a new faculty member takes the first course release during the first two years and the second release in the year before being reviewed for promotion and tenure. This release time is negotiated by the faculty member and Dean and does not involve the formal application procedure set forth at §7 below. A faculty member should, however, include this request in the teaching preference form submitted by faculty each year.

Untenured lateral hires are not governed by this provision, but may negotiate pre-tenure course release(s) with the Dean.

_Rationale:_ This is a codification of current practice. The release time allows new faculty time to work on teaching and scholarship and generally become acclimated to academia. This standard does not apply to clinical or legal writing faculty. It does not automatically apply to tenure-track lateral hires who are untenured, but those individuals may negotiate with the Dean for one or more course releases as a condition of employment.

5. Professorships. Faculty members who hold a named professorship may apply for a one-course release each academic year in exchange for a reduced financial stipend. The faculty member should include this request in the teaching preference form submitted by faculty each year. The form must be submitted by the identified due date and is not subject to the application process set forth in §7 below. [Note: The Dean’s policy regarding course releases for named professors may have changed. Please check with the Dean.]

_Rationale:_ This is a codification of the professorships standards.
6. Relationship to CSU Professional Leave Policies. Absent extraordinary circumstances, a faculty member may not use any of the mechanisms described above, either alone or in combination, to obtain a complete teaching release for either a fall or spring semester. Such releases must be generally obtained pursuant to university policy and procedures for professional leaves (i.e. sabbaticals) set forth in §8.1.8.A.3 of CSU’s Personnel Policies and Bylaws (i.e. the “Greenbook”).

Rationale: Our obligations as Cleveland-Marshall law professors are not limited to teaching and scholarship. Service to and involvement in the law school and university communities are core components of our professional responsibility throughout the academic year. Faculty with no teaching responsibilities during either the fall or spring may be tempted to disassociate from the law school and university during that semester, thereby unilaterally transforming teaching release time into a professional leave. This transformation arguably usurps university professional leave policies governing “Leaves with Pay” (i.e. sabbaticals) under §8.1.8.A.3, which must be obtained through the application process set forth at §8.1.8 C.

An exception for “extraordinary circumstances” is included to allow reconsideration of the application of this general policy in a compelling case. For example, a professor who receives a Fulbright or similar grant or other unique opportunity for professional development that provides no significant financial remuneration may be able to obtain a release from teaching and perhaps all other law school responsibilities without meeting all the university requirements for a professional leave.

7. Application Process for Course Release or Variance. A faculty member seeking a variance from the usual two-course per semester schedule under §2 or a course release based on substantial professional commitments explained in §3 should submit a written application to the Dean and the Associate Dean in charge of course scheduling. The application is due when the Associate Dean solicits faculty teaching preferences for the upcoming academic year. The application should explain the reason for the request and not exceed two typed pages. If a course release is sought based on substantial professional commitments, the application should also identify and briefly explain all course releases and professional leaves the applicant has received during the proceeding five years.

At the completion of a semester in which a faculty member has received a course release due to substantial professional commitments, the recipient shall submit a brief report to the Dean reporting on the faculty member’s activities during that semester.

Rationale: In past years, some faculty members have submitted formal written applications for course releases while others have secured releases through informal discussions with the Associate Dean in charge of scheduling or the Dean. Some faculty

6 See Greenbook, §8.1.2.A.1.c

7 Under CSU by-laws that govern law school operations, all “Extended leaves [that] last more than five weeks … must be approved in accordance with Section 8.1.8(C)” of the Greenbook.
members submitted requests well in advance of the affected semester and some asked to be released long after the course schedule has been finalized. This proposed application process is modeled after that used for summer research and teaching grants. It is designed to impose a minimal burden on the applicant, while also providing timely notice to the Associate Dean and Dean of the faculty member’s request and sufficient information on which to evaluate the request.

The requirement that a faculty member who receives a teaching release because of other substantial professional commitments report on his/her activities at the end of the semester ensure accountability similar to that required when other law school benefits are received, such as an official professional leave or a summer teaching or writing grant.
This report is not required of a faculty member who holds a professorship or a faculty member who has obtained a teaching release by redeeming banked hours.

8. Decisions on Applications. The Dean shall make the final decision on all applications for course releases and adjustments to standard teaching schedules based on the recommendation of the Associate Dean in charge of course scheduling.
Decisions on course scheduling are not subject to faculty review.

The Dean shall publish a list at the beginning of each AY of faculty members who have been granted a teaching release or variance for that year. The Dean may exercise discretion to omit a faculty member from the list if the release was granted for personal rather than professional reasons.

Rationale: Creating a course schedule that satisfies students, faculty, and our accrediting agencies is a daunting task. The Dean and the Associate Dean in charge of scheduling are in the best position to evaluate the individual requests of faculty members in light of larger institutional concerns such as course coverage and equitable workload distribution.

Moreover, principles of faculty governance empower the faculty to establish and revise the curriculum and approve the content of specific courses. The task of assembling a comprehensive course schedule each academic year does not fall within faculty governance powers, but is relegated to law school administration.

The requirement that the Dean publish a list of faculty members whose applications were approved is intended to increase the transparency of the system. The Dean does not have to provide the rationale for the decision.
I. A faculty member of the College of Law applying for Graduate Faculty membership must have demonstrated scholarship through publication within the preceding five years of:

A. two works from the following categories:

   (1) an article or a substantial and substantive book review essay published in a law review, or
   (2) a law-related article published in a scholarly journal of other disciplines or as a chapter in a book, or
   (3) a Uniform Law, Model Statute, Restatement, or American Law Institute Reporter's Study or equivalent work of which the candidate was a principal;

or,

B. a substantive book or monograph, treatise, or textbook or casebook containing significant original substantive material.

II. A faculty member of the College of Law applying for a renewed term on the Graduate Faculty must have demonstrated scholarship as defined in Section I (above) accomplished since the beginning of the member's last term of membership on the Graduate Faculty.

The Graduate Faculty application Guidelines and our college Criteria can also be found on the university's web page at:

NEW COURSE PROPOSALS

MEMORANDUM

TO: Persons Interested in Proposing a New Course at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

FROM: Phyllis L. Crocker, Professor of Law and Associate Dean for Academic Affairs

RE: New Course Proposals

DATE: 11 November 2008

Individuals interested in teaching a new course at Cleveland–Marshall must present a proposal to the Curriculum Committee for its approval. Proposals must be submitted no later than the end of the second week of classes in the semester prior to the one in which you wish to teach the course. If the Committee approves the course, the Dean’s office will determine, in consultation with the individual, if and when the course may be offered.

The proposal must contain the following: a complete description of the proposed course, including the subject matter and goals of the course, the number of credits sought, the basis for assigning a grade in the course. It is advisable to include the proposed textbook, a tentative syllabus, and list of readings.

In deciding the number of credit hours, consider the scope of the course as well as the class meeting times. In the fall and spring semesters, two credit hour courses typically meet once a week for one hour forty minutes; three credit hour courses typically meet twice a week for one hour fifteen minutes per session, a three credit hour course could also meet once a week, on a Saturday for example, for two and one-half hours. A seminar or other upper level course that requires preparation of a ULWR paper (see attachment D) may meet for the hours required for a two credit course while offering the course for three credits.

9 This memo is based on an April 19, 2004 memo from Peter Garlock, Chair of the Curriculum Committee to the faculty, and has been supplemented as policies have changed.

10 A professor may also permit students to take a seminar or upper level course for two credits if a student does not write a paper satisfying the ULWR and for three credits if a student writes a paper satisfying the requirement.
In the summer term, a two-credit course meets twice a week for one hour forty minutes; a three-credit course meets three times a week for one hour forty minutes, or twice a week for two and one-half hours. The summer term is only seven weeks long, hence the longer class times.

Depending on the type of course, you may also want to consider whether it satisfies our criteria for designation as an administrative law course (see Attachment A) criteria, as a perspective course (see Attachment B), as a seminar (see Attachment C) or a skills course (see Attachment E). If so, your description must include a statement of how the course will satisfy that requirement. [Note: The administrative law designation has been deleted in accordance with curricular reforms adopted in 2012.]

In deciding the basis for assigning a grade in the course you have a number of options to consider: a final examination (in-class or take-home), a final paper, a series of small papers or quizzes, group or individual presentations, or a combination. In addition you might want to count class participation as part of the final grade, or if students will participate in group exercises, you will want to decide how to grade those. You must identify your basis for assigning grades in the course.

If you decide that you want students to submit a paper, you may consider whether you want the paper to count toward satisfying the Upper Level Writing Requirement (see Attachment D). Each student must complete the ULWR in order to graduate. Typically, students satisfy the ULWR through independent study with a faculty member or a seminar. If you want the course paper to satisfy the ULWR you must explain how you will accomplish that.

If the Committee votes to approve the course, the course shall be approved on an experimental basis. The Spring or Fall semester after teaching the course the instructor shall inform the Committee whether the course should be adopted permanently. In the absence of a request for permanent approval, the course shall be dropped from the curriculum. An instructor seeking permanent approval shall provide the Committee with a statement indicating why the course is successful enough to be continued, a syllabus for the course, a list of readings if possible, whether and how the course has changed from its original conception, and anything else relevant to the committee’s decision. At that point the Committee shall decide whether the course shall be adopted on a permanent basis or discontinued. The Committee shall report that decision to the faculty. Unless there is faculty objection, the course shall become a permanent part of our law school course offerings and shall be added to the Student Handbook.

For good cause an instructor may seek approval of the Committee to teach the course a second time as an experimental course before requesting approval as a permanent course.
ATTACHMENT A

DESCRIPTION OF, AND CRITERIA FOR, THE PERSPECTIVE COURSE

The basic goal of a perspective course is to provide students with a viewpoint on the nature and function of law that is different from traditional doctrinal analysis of American law, whether that analysis involves cases, statutes, codes, constitutions, or other traditional sources of law. A perspective course should help students understand how law shapes and is shaped by forces outside the legal system, including such forces as economics, politics, culture, ideas, society, and religion. Many students come to law school with deficient training in the humanities and social sciences, and a perspective course may help them understand how other disciplines illuminate the study of law. Students can also gain understanding of how our legal system works by studying another legal system or body of law, or by studying the theory or history of law.

It is important to note what a perspective course is not. The course is not intended to be a study of a traditional law subject that incidentally draws on the methodology of another discipline. It is not intended merely to investigate a specialized area of law or the law as it applies to a particular group of people. The course is not designed merely to provide an introduction to the institutions of American government, including courts, or to methods of legal analysis. Such courses, while important and useful, do not provide the kind of broadening experience that forces students to reflect critically on the nature of law or legal institutions.

Criteria

A perspective course should meet one of the following criteria:

1. A study of the theory of law, including courses that examine theory from a critical perspective.

2. A study of the history of law and legal institutions.

3. A study of law with the primary focus on the methodology of another intellectual discipline, such as economics or social science.

4. A study of the law of another legal system, for example, national, regional, international, or religious. Such courses should, where possible, have a focus that enables students to compare American law and legal institutions with those of other arenas.

Approved by the faculty on May 17, 2001.
ATTACHMENT B

CRITERIA FOR DESIGNATION OF A COURSE AS A SEMINAR\(^\text{12}\)

1. A seminar is a small class, enrollment in which should normally not exceed fifteen students, that is designed to examine intensively a single topic or a limited range of topics within a general area of law. A seminar is not designed to offer a comprehensive survey of a field of law.

2. A seminar is designed to foster maximum interchange in discussion between students and instructor and among students.

3. A seminar shall require a substantial paper or equivalent written product.

4. A grade in a seminar may be based entirely on the paper, or on some combination of a paper, class participation, final examination, or other relevant factors.

5. A seminar may be given for two or three credits.

\(^{12}\) Approved by the faculty on Oct. 21, 2004.
ATTACHMENT C

UPPER LEVEL WRITING REQUIREMENT

The purpose of the Upper Level Writing Requirement is to have each student undertake at least one rigorous writing experience prior to graduation, in addition to Legal Writing, Research and Advocacy (L504) and the third semester of legal writing. Although the focus of this requirement is writing skills, effective legal writing requires application of the broad spectrum of skills essential to effective lawyering generally. Thus, research, analysis, and organization are important components in the preparation of any quality product of legal writing. For this reason, the goal of the Upper Level Writing Requirement is to require each student to demonstrate his or her ability to apply each of these skills in producing one substantial, cohesive piece of legal writing prior to graduating from law school.

1. Students may satisfy this requirement by completion of any one of the following:

a. A seminar for which a paper is required;

b. A specially designated upper level course for which a paper is required or offered for writing credit; or

c. An appropriate two or three semester-hour Independent Legal Research (L860) project.

2. The Upper Level Writing Requirement is satisfied by the completion of a paper, brief, casenote, or other piece of legal writing that combines writing, research, analytical and organizational skills into one substantial written product under the direction of a faculty supervisor. As a general rule, “faculty supervisor” means full-time tenured or tenure-track faculty member, full-time legal writing professor, or full-time clinical professor.

3. What constitutes a “substantial” written product is left to the discretion of the instructor, subject to review by the Curriculum Committee at the time the course is submitted for approval.

13 The Upper Level Writing Requirements were approved by the faculty in November 1997 and amended in May 1999.

14 Please note the following as a point of comparison for courses other than Independent Research in which a student may satisfy the ULWR:

The text page minimum for Independent Legal Research (L860) projects completed to satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement should ordinarily be 12 to 15 double-spaced pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, per credit hour, but in no case less than 10 pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, per credit hour. Faculty may, in their discretion, define a “page” in terms of font size, margins, approximate number of words, etc.

4. To complete the Upper Level Writing Requirement, it is assumed that the student will undertake exhaustive library or other approved investigation under the supervision of a faculty member. In order to insure a meaningful one-on-one consultation and critique between the student and instructor, it is strongly urged that the instructor:

a. Require the student to meet regularly with the faculty sponsor during the course of the project;
b. Require the student doing an Independent Legal Research (L860) project to obtain the faculty sponsor’s written approval of a proposal prior to signing up for credit;
c. Require the student to submit and discuss an outline of the writing project prior to commencing the first draft;
d. Provide written comments concerning submitted drafts and discuss those comments in a meeting with the student;
e. Require the student to submit a detailed research path of one or two pages with the rough draft, indicating the full extent of the student’s research and sources used and showing unproductive investigation as well as that which produces materials bearing on the problem;
f. Require the student to familiarize himself or herself with the concept of plagiarism;
g. Make clear to the student that the Upper Level Writing Requirement is unrelated to, and independent of, any non-curricular requirements, such as those needed for acceptance of the paper by a student journal.

5. Any instructor wishing to designate a course as satisfying the Upper Level Writing Requirement must first obtain authorization from the Curriculum Committee.

6. Faculty have discretion, while awarding a passing grade to a student enrolled in a course to determine that nonetheless the student has not satisfied the Upper Level Writing Requirement. Students should be advised of this faculty option.

7. Copies of papers submitted in satisfaction of the Upper Level Writing Requirement shall be retained by the administration in the same manner as final examinations.
ATTACHMENT D

CRITERIA FOR SATISFYING
THE SKILLS COURSE REQUIREMENT

In order to graduate every student must complete one skills course “providing substantial instruction in professional skills generally regarded as necessary for effective and responsible participation in the legal profession. A professional skills course must engage each student in skills performances that are assessed by the instructor.” 15

This new requirement was prompted by the A.B.A. adding the professional skills requirement to those skills that we are already required to, and do, provide substantial instruction: substantive law, legal analysis and reasoning, legal research, problem solving and oral communication, writing in a legal context, and the professional ethics. See ABA Standard 302(a) (4). Examples of the types of professional skills contemplated by this new requirement are: “[t]rial and appellate advocacy, alternative methods of dispute resolution, consulting, interviewing, negotiating, problem solving, fact investigation, organization and management of legal work, and drafting.” Interpretation 302-2 to A.B.A. Standard 302(a) (4), A.B.A. Standards for Approval of Law Schools (2007).

To satisfy the experiential skills course requirement, a course must meet the following criteria: 16

1. A substantial (at least 50% of class time) and regular part of the course consists of providing each student with multiple opportunities to engage in Experiential Learning.

2. Experiential Learning is defined as:

   a. exercising lawyering skills in real-world or simulated real-world settings,
   b. interacting personally and immediately with others to work toward resolution of a legal matter, and
   c. receiving substantial individualized feedback on the assigned lawyering skill tasks.

3. Examples of lawyering skills include:

   a. Trial advocacy
   b. Advocacy before appellate courts, administrative agencies, or legislative bodies
   c. Alternative dispute resolution
   d. Counseling
   e. Interviewing
   f. Negotiation

15 Adopted by the faculty as a new graduation requirement on May 8, 2008. This requirement applies to students admitted to the College of Law beginning in the 2008-09 academic year.

16 Adopted by the faculty on April 26, 2012.
g. Investigating and organizing facts
h. Organization and management of legal work
i. Drafting

A proposal to create a course that satisfies the skills requirement must include the following description:

1. The skills taught,
2. The skills performances each student will engage in,
3. The class time devoted to those skills, and
4. How the professor will assess each student’s skills performance.

My availability

My office is located on the first floor: Room 153. My phone number is: 687-2528 and my e-mail is: brian.ray@law.csuohio.edu. My office hours are MW 4:15-5:15. These hours are not exclusive. You should feel free to make an appointment at any time or just stop in whenever my light is on.

Course Overview

Conflict of laws deals principally with three questions: Which state's courts have jurisdiction over a dispute? Which state's laws apply to a dispute? Can judgments by the courts of one state be enforced in another state? These questions can arise between states of the United States, between federal and state courts and between foreign states.

This course will focus on the development of choice-of-law rules in the United States and cover, to a lesser extent, other areas of conflict of laws, including jurisdiction and recognition/enforcement of judgments. We will deal with choice of law both in interstate and international settings and include some comparisons with European legal systems.

Class attendance and preparation

Attendance at and preparation for class are required. I understand that there are times when because of illness or personal matters you may be unable to attend class or you may not be prepared for class. To account for these times, each student can miss class or "pass" when called on four times over the course of each semester. If you miss class and/or "pass" more than four times, I reserve the right to lower your grade or withdraw you from the course. If you cannot prepare for class on a particular day, please e-mail me before class. I will not call on you, but that will count as one of the four absence/pass days.
Absences to observe religious holidays do not count as missed classes if you inform me in advance that you will be absent.

Grades

An 8-hour, open-book, take-home exam will constitute 80% of your final grade. Participation in class will make up the remaining 20% of your grade.

I may also distribute practice exercises at certain points in the semester. I will provide feedback on these exercises, but they will not be part of your grade.

Assignments

The assignments listed here are somewhat tentative and may change depending on how quickly we move through the material for each day. To account for that, I have only listed specific assignments through February 15. I will distribute the second installment of the syllabus later in the semester.

January 12-21: The Traditional Model
Jurisdiction Selecting Rules
CB: 1-39

February 2-4: The Traditional Model
Escape Devices — Characterization & Substance/Procedure
CB: 39-61

February 9-11: The Traditional Model
Escape Devices — Renvoi, Public Policy, Penal Laws & Tax
CB: 61-84

February 16: Modern Approaches
Statutory Solutions & Party Autonomy
CB: 891-118

February 18-23: Modern Approaches
Interest Analysis — Introduction & False Conflicts
CB: 118-67

February 25: Modern Approaches
Interest Analysis — Unprovided-For Case & True Conflicts
CB: 167-204

SYLLABUS
Spring 2009 Evidence — LB 207
David W. Neel, Esq., Lecturer
dwneel.lawgmail.com

Tuesdays & Thursdays 7:30 - 9:10 p.m.

Course Materials:

The required book for this course is:

Waltz, Park & Friedman's Evidence, Cases and Materials (Foundation, 11th ed., 2008) (“WP”)

The following book is recommended but not required:

Graham C. Lilly, Principles of Evidence - This book will give you sensible and fairly straightforward information about black letter rules of evidence and some useful information about the policies underlying those rules. (Other excellent hornbooks are available. Use the hornbook that suits you best.)

Office Hours:

Please call me directly at 216-522-0011 to schedule an appointment.

Course Goals:

When you complete this class, you should possess a fairly sophisticated understanding of the Rules of Evidence. More than any other course (in my humble opinion), the study of evidence law trains you to think more like a lawyer. If you study, participate, practice, interact with your peers and reflect throughout the term, then by the end of the course you will be thinking more like a lawyer. That, primarily, is the goal I set before you, in addition, of course, to learning the rules of evidence.

Class Attendance Policy:

Class attendance is mandatory; however, if you have another important commitment that a reasonable person would say should take precedence over this class, then you may miss a class. You do not have to advise me beforehand or tell me the reason. You are allowed four such absences. Passing when called upon counts as an absence. (See also following section.) If you miss more than four classes for any reason, I reserve the right to administratively withdraw you from the course or to impose lesser sanctions.
including, but not limited to, lowering your final grade in this class, in my sole discretion.

Class Participation:

I expect you to be prepared for each class. Unsatisfactory preparation, as determined in my sole discretion, counts as an absence. Each of you will be called upon at least once to present an assigned case to the class and to discuss assigned problems from the casebook.

- Your case presentations should be no more than 5 minutes in length. A guideline for your presentation is as follows:

  - Basic facts leading to litigation - E.g., In Old Chief v. United States, the defendant was arrested after a fight involving a gun. He had a prior conviction.

  - Proceedings below — E.g., The government charged Old Chief with, among other things, a violation of 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1), which makes it unlawful for anyone to . . . . Old Chief objected to admission of evidence that . . . . The government responded that . . . . On appeal, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held that the district court did not abuse its discretion by . . . . The U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari.

  - Specific issue(s) before the court ruling on the case — E.g., At issue was evidence pertaining to one element required to prove a violation of 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1)

  - The court's ruling on each issue — E.g., The S. Ct. reversed the court of appeals' decision.

  - The court's reasoning for its decision.

  - Doctrine, black letter law or analysis that the case establishes, stands for or approves.

Grading:

A total of 200 points is possible in this class based upon the following distribution:

- 80% (160 possible points) of your grade is based on the final exam.

- 20% (40 possible points) is based on your class participation.

Assignments:

For every assignment, read the applicable Federal Rule(s) of Evidence ("FRE") in Appendix A of WP and the corresponding Advisory Committee Note(s) in Appendix B.

APPENDIX 6

Upper Level Writing Requirement
and Independent Legal Research Standards

The Upper Level Writing Requirement and Independent Legal Research (L860) Standards, as approved by the faculty in November 1997 and amended in May 1999 and supplemented in November 2006 are as follows:

A. Upper Level Writing Requirement

The purpose of the Upper Level Writing Requirement is to have each student undertake at least one rigorous writing experience prior to graduation, in addition to Legal Writing, Research and Advocacy (L504) and the third semester of legal writing. Although the focus of this requirement is writing skills, effective legal writing requires application of the broad spectrum of skills essential to effective lawyering generally. Thus, research, analysis, and organization are important components in the preparation of any quality product of legal writing. For this reason, the goal of the Upper Level Writing Requirement is to require each student to demonstrate his or her ability to apply each of these skills in producing one substantial, cohesive piece of legal writing prior to graduating from law school.

1. Students may satisfy this requirement by completion of any one of the following:
   a. A seminar for which a paper is required;
   b. A specially designated upper level course for which a paper is required or offered for writing credit; or
   c. An appropriate two or three semester-hour Independent Legal Research (L860) project.

2. The Upper Level Writing Requirement is satisfied by the completion of a paper, brief, casenote, or other piece of legal writing that combines writing, research, analytical and organizational skills into one substantial written product under the direction of a faculty supervisor. As a general rule, “faculty supervisor” means full-time tenured or tenure-track faculty member, full-time legal writing professor, or full-time clinical professor.

3. If the written product consists of an Independent Legal Research (L860) project, it must satisfy the page requirements for L860, as listed in Section B below. What constitutes a “substantial” written product in other courses shall be left to the discretion of the instructor, subject to review by the Curriculum Committee at the time the course is submitted for approval, as stipulated in paragraph 5.

4. To complete the Upper Level Writing Requirement, it is assumed that the student will undertake exhaustive library or other approved investigation under the supervision of a faculty member. In order to insure a meaningful one-on-one consultation and critique between the student and instructor, it is strongly urged that the instructor:

a. Require the student to meet regularly with the faculty sponsor during the course of the project;
b. Require the student doing an Independent Legal Research (L860) project to obtain the faculty sponsor’s written approval of a proposal prior to signing up for credit;
c. Require the student to submit and discuss an outline of the writing project prior to commencing the first draft;
d. Provide written comments concerning submitted drafts and discuss those comments in a meeting with the student;
e. Require the student to submit a detailed research path of one or two pages with the rough draft, indicating the full extent of the student’s research and sources used and showing unproductive investigation as well as that which produces materials bearing on the problem;
f. Require the student to familiarize himself or herself with the concept of plagiarism;
g. Make clear to the student that the Upper Level Writing Requirement is unrelated to, and independent of, any non-curricular requirements, such as those needed for acceptance of the paper by a student journal.

5. Any instructor wishing to designate a course as satisfying the Upper Level Writing Requirement must first obtain authorization from the Curriculum Committee.

6. Faculty have discretion, while awarding a passing grade to a student enrolled in a course or in Independent Legal Research (L860), to determine that nonetheless the student has not satisfied the Upper Level Writing Requirement. Students should be advised of this faculty option.

7. Copies of papers submitted in satisfaction of the Upper Level Writing Requirement shall be retained by the administration in the same manner as final examinations.

B. Independent Legal Research (L860) Standards

1. The minimum number of credit hours of Independent Legal Research (L860) that will satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement is two credit hours.

2. The text page minimum for Independent Legal Research (L860) projects completed to satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement should ordinarily be 12 to 15 double-spaced pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, per credit hour, but in no case less than 10 pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, per credit hour. Faculty may, in their discretion, define a “page” in terms of font size, margins, approximate number of words, etc.
3. Independent Legal Research (L860) may also be taken for one hour of credit, usually requiring a minimum of 12 to 15 double-spaced pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, as described above, but such projects will not satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement.

4. A maximum of three semester hours of Independent Legal Research (L860) credit may be elected to count toward the J.D. or LL.M. degree.

5. No faculty member may sponsor more than six (6) students per academic year, exclusive of the summer term, in Independent Legal Research (L860) without the approval of the Dean or his or her designate.

C. Supplementary Guidelines Regarding Law Review and Journal Notes

In November 2006 the faculty adopted additional guidelines for faculty supervision of Law Review and Journal Notes:

1) supervisory faculty of notes for L860 credit should attempt to coordinate their schedule of topic, outline, bibliography and draft submissions with that of the journal for which the note is being written;

2) the law review and the journal should make available to every faculty member each fall a written schedule detailing the stages in which the writing of the note becomes due;

3) each faculty member is requested to be available to supervise up to three notes for L860 credit;

4) a summary of each faculty member’s research interests should be made available to the law review and journals staffs each year.

D. 3-Credit-Hour ULWR Seminars with Reduced Class Time

Faculty members may teach a seminar or upper level course (in which students write a paper to satisfy the ULWR) worth three credit hours but in the time block of a two-credit-hour course. This is allowed under the ABA Standards and Interpretations that permit “regularly scheduled class sessions” to include “in a seminar or other upper-level course other than an independent research course, the minutes allocated for preparation of a substantial paper or project if the time and effort required and anticipated educational benefit are commensurate with the credit awarded.” ABA Interpretation 304-3(d). In light of the ABA Standard and Interpretation, faculty have the option, in a seminar or upper level course other than L860 (Independent Legal Research) in which students write a paper to satisfy the ULWR, of holding class meetings for the hours required for a two-credit-hour course while offering the course for three credit hours. This recognizes the substantial amount of time and effort that students and faculty are expected to spend on papers that satisfy the upper level writing requirement. Faculty may also offer the option to students of taking the seminar or upper level course for two credit hours if a student... elects not to write a paper to satisfy the ULWR or for three credit hours if a student elects to write a paper to satisfy the ULWR. This policy is also available online on the Faculty Resources page.
APPENDIX 7

Guidelines and Requirements for Concentrations at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law

Faculty must present proposals for new concentrations to the Curriculum Committee for approval. The Curriculum Committee will then submit the proposal to the faculty for approval.

I. Guidelines

A. For a discipline to become a Concentration at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law:

1. There shall be at least eight courses available in the discipline, beyond foundational courses, at least four of which are offered at least annually. [Foundational courses include, for example, bar courses, courses required for graduation, and basic courses within the Concentration as determined by the faculty in that discipline.]

2. Faculty within a discipline seeking to create a Concentration shall, where appropriate, survey practitioners within the discipline to determine the needs of the practice. The purpose of this survey is to ensure that our Concentration requirements will create well-prepared graduates within the discipline.

B. For a student to satisfy the requirements of a Concentration:

1. The student shall take at least six courses in the area, no more than two of which are foundational courses.

2. The student shall complete a major project in the Concentration area. (This project might include a major writing project, such as an upper level writing requirement or its equivalent, an appropriate clinic experience, or an externship, as determined by the faculty within the discipline. This project shall be in addition to the six courses required in #1 above.)

A student who satisfies the requirements of a Concentration shall have that fact noted on his or her transcript and may indicate completion of the Concentration on a resume. In addition, the faculty may decide to provide a “Certificate of Concentration.”

17 Adopted by the faculty on February 22, 2001.
II. Requirements for all Concentrations

A. A student shall attain a minimum cumulative GPA of 3.0 in Concentration courses.\(^{18}\)

B. A student may not earn below a C+ in more than one non-foundational course.\(^{19}\)

C. A student may take no more than one course on a pass/fail basis toward completion of a Concentration, whether a substantive course for which a grade is normally given or an externship or other course that is mandatorily graded on a pass/fail basis.\(^{20}\)

---

\(^{18}\) Adopted by the faculty on May 11, 2001.

\(^{20}\) Adopted by the faculty on October 11, 2001.
APPENDIX 8

CSU Poll Worker Excused Absence Policy

In order to foster student engagement and participation in the civic sphere, Cleveland State University has encouraged students to serve as poll workers and in polling support positions for the last several national and statewide elections. In Spring 2008 the Faculty Senate of Cleveland State University adopted a policy pertaining to student absences arising because of such service in these elections.

I. CSU faculty members are required to
   a. excuse all students from class attendance and from any assignments, quizzes, and other coursework otherwise due during the period beginning at 6:00 p.m. on the evening before any statewide election and ending at 12:00 midnight on election day who (i) serve in any of the official poll worker and polling support positions, including the Center for Election Integrity official observer or monitor positions (which can include, for example, polling place translators and technical support workers with respect to the voting machines)\(^{21}\), and (ii) satisfy their notification obligations described in paragraph II, below; and
   b. allow such students to make up any assignments, quizzes, and other coursework otherwise due during this period, as described in paragraph II, below.

II. Any CSU student who desires to exercise the excused poll worker service option must
   a. have officially applied and been selected to serve;
   b. be scheduled for training that will be completed at least two days prior to the election;
   c. inform the faculty members whose classes are affected in writing (electronically or in whatever manner the particular faculty member requests) no later than the second Friday before the election;
   d. arrange with each affected faculty member to make up any coursework or quizzes that were missed due to the absence; and
   e. provide official documentation to each affected faculty member at a later appropriate point that confirms the student’s service as a poll worker or in a polling support position.

At all times, the responsibility for making up coursework rests with the student.

\(^{21}\) Dean Mearns decided, in Fall 2008, based on available C.S.U. policies and information received from the C.S.U. administration, that this policy applies to students who work as B.O.E. poll workers and to those who volunteer as election observers or monitors for a bona fide organization such as the Democratic or Republican Party, or the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under the Law.
I. PURPOSE

1.1 The purpose of the University Travel Policy is to facilitate travel of faculty, staff and students by the most expedient means and at the most reasonable cost.

II. BASIC POLICY

2.1 With prior approval, the University will pay all or a prearranged portion of reimbursable expenses for travel to attend an important meeting for one or more of the following purposes:

   a) to represent the University on official business;
   b) to present a professional paper;
   c) to chair a national or regional committee meeting; or
   d) to participate in professional development activities.

2.2 This policy applies to all University travel regardless of the source of funding.

2.3 Reimbursements for travel outside the USA will be made at the appropriate US currency rate of exchange.

III. AUTHORIZATION OF TRAVEL

3.1 To obtain authorization for travel for which reimbursement is expected, the top portion of the Travel Approval and Expense Report must be completed indicating the purpose, date, and duration of the trip, estimated total expense, portion to be paid by the University, and bear the appropriate supervisory approval signature.

IV. PREPAYMENT OF EXPENSES

4.1 To request prepayment of common carrier transportation, either:

   a) Contact one of the authorized travel agencies and make your travel arrangements. Instruct the travel agency to deliver your tickets to your department along with an invoice. Attach the original invoice to a Small Order Form or to a Purchase Requisition (if the amount of the invoice exceeds the maximum limit for a Small Order Form). Forward Small Order Forms to Accounts Payable; Purchase Requisitions should be sent to Purchasing Services. Use of a PCard is also permitted.

   b) Purchase your tickets directly (from the carrier, from a web site, or from a travel agent) and obtain a receipt showing proof of payment. Attach the receipt to a Small Order Form or to a Purchase Requisition (if the amount of the invoice exceeds the maximum limit for a Small Order Form). Forward Small Order Forms to Accounts Payable; Purchase Requisitions should be sent to Purchasing Services. Use of a PCard is also permitted.

4.2 To request prepayment of conference registration fees, the traveler shall submit a completed Small Order Form or a Purchase Requisition (if the amount of the registration fee exceeds the maximum limit for a Small Order Form), along with the original registration form and a copy of the registration form. Forward Small Order Forms to Accounts Payable; Purchase Requisitions should be sent to Purchasing Services.
Accounts Payable will submit the registration form along with a check. Use of a PCard is also permitted.

4.3 When airfare and lodging are purchased as a package from a travel-related web site, lodging may be reimbursed in advance of travel, provided that the traveler demonstrates that booking lodging in this manner has saved the University money.

4.4 All other travel expenses shall be paid for by the traveler and original receipts submitted for reimbursement on the Travel Approval and Expense Report.

4.5 Faculty and staff who are traveling out of the country for an extended period may, with the approval of the appropriate Vice President, receive a travel advance.

4.6 Lodging for students may be prepaid by submitting either a Purchase Requisition or a Small Order Form.

V. ALLOWABLE TRANSPORTATION

5.1 Common Carrier

a) Reimbursement for travel by air, rail, bus, or other common carrier shall not exceed the cost of coach fare or the economy rate in the chosen method of travel.

b) The traveler shall be personally liable for any charges assessed due to his/her failure to cancel reservations within the time limit specified by carriers, unless the failure is due to circumstances beyond his/her control.

c) Expenses claimed under this section must be supported by an original receipt.

5.2 Personal Automobile

a) A traveler may be reimbursed for the use of a privately owned automobile at the federal government rate then in effect. The current mileage rate can be found on the University’s web site.

b) Reimbursement for use of a privately owned automobile shall not exceed the round trip coach air fare of all persons traveling in the car or the mileage allowance, whichever is the lesser.

c) Mileage is payable to only one of two or more persons traveling on the same trip in the same vehicle. The names of all persons traveling on the same trip and in the same vehicle must be listed in the designated section of the Travel and Expense Report.

d) The mileage rate provided for in subparagraph (a) of this section is meant to cover all expenses incurred in using a privately owned vehicle for University business except those covered under subparagraph (a) of section 5.4.

e) When a traveler is away from CSU’s campus for the entire day, the total number of business miles driven that day may be reimbursed.

f) When a traveler is on CSU’s campus part of the day, reimbursement will be for the total number of business miles driven, less the traveler’s round-trip daily commute.

g) Mileage while commuting to and from work will not be reimbursed.
h) No traveler may be reimbursed for expenses on the mileage basis unless he/she carries motor vehicle liability insurance with coverage equal to or greater than that required by the Ohio Revised Code Section 4509.51.

5.3 Rented Automobile

a) With prior approval, the traveler may be reimbursed for the rental of an automobile used for official University business; and for gasoline purchased for the rented automobile. Original receipts must be submitted.

b) The traveler must read and comply with the rental agreement’s provisions covering driver eligibility, use of seat belts, and other restrictions.

c) Reimbursement for use of a rented automobile shall not exceed the round trip coach air fare for all persons traveling in the car.

d) Insurance requirements for rented vehicles vary based on vendor and location. Refer to the University’s Driving and Motor Vehicle Policy for more information.

e) The University has an exclusive agreement with Enterprise for rentals made in northeast Ohio. Under this agreement, Enterprise provides vehicles at discounted rates that include liability insurance. The traveler should visit the Department of Risk Management’s web site for more information.

5.4 Other Transportation Expenses

a) Reimbursement may be claimed for parking charges, ferry and taxi fares, and bridge, highway and tunnel tolls.

b) Each item of expense claimed under this section must be listed on the Travel Approval and Expense Report. An original receipt is required for each item of expense greater than five dollars ($5.00).

5.5 Frequent Flyer Credits

a) Frequent flyer credits earned by university employees for travel on university business cannot be used for personal travel. These credits must be applied towards future university travel.

VI. ALLOWABLE LODGING EXPENSE

6.1 The employee will be reimbursed for the actual reasonable expense for lodging in a hotel or motel. Reimbursement is for room and applicable taxes only. Reasonableness is determined by the appropriate supervisor. Use of a PCard is permitted.

6.2 Original itemized receipts are required to support the reimbursement claim for the expense of lodging.

6.3 Cost of lodging of members of the traveler’s family is not reimbursable.

6.4 Tips associated with lodging are incidental expenses as defined in Paragraph 7.7.

VII. MEALS AND INCIDENTAL EXPENSES

7.1 The traveler will be reimbursed for meals and incidental expenses according to the Federal Standard Meal Allowance (FSMA) then in effect. Receipts are not required. When one or more meals are provided, the FSMA reimbursement must be adjusted accordingly.
7.2 Allowable reimbursements vary by city. Rates for most major cities can be accessed from the University’s web site.

7.3 Generally, there will be no reimbursement for meals unless the traveler is away from home over night. However, with supervisory approval, when the traveler is away from home for more than 12 hours and lunch is not provided, the traveler may be reimbursed for the lunch portion of the applicable FSMA (indicate times of departure and return on the Travel Approval and Expense Report).

7.4 Reimbursement for the day of departure and the day of return is equal to 75% of the FSMA.

7.5 If the travel is to more than one location in one day, use the FSMA for the city where the traveler has overnight accommodations.

7.6 There will be no reimbursement for alcoholic beverages.

7.7 Tips and gratuities are included in the FSMA.

7.8 Actual and reasonable expenses for a qualified business meal may be claimed for the traveler and non-university guest(s). The traveler must submit an original itemized receipt along with an explanation of the business purpose of the expense. An overnight stay is not required.

VIII. MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSES

8.1 Expenses incurred for conference registration fees, stenographic fees, storage of baggage, fax or telephone calls for official University business, and rental of equipment or temporary meeting facilities necessary for the conduct of official University business may be reimbursed.

8.2 Miscellaneous expenses must be itemized separately on the Travel Approval and Expense Report. Original receipts must be submitted for all miscellaneous expenses.

IX. REPORTING AND DOCUMENTATION OF EXPENSES

9.1 All requests for reimbursement of travel should be made on the standard CSU Travel Approval and Expense Report. If additional space is required, a supplementary schedule may be attached.

9.2 The Travel Approval and Expense Report must be submitted after completion of travel unless prepayment of registration by CSU is the only expense incurred.

9.3 The Travel Approval and Expense Report should be completed and filed with the appropriate supervisor within two weeks of the travel completion date.

9.4 The Travel Approval and Expense Report must be signed by the traveler and the expenses approved in accordance with Section 3.1 of this policy. The approvals received prior to the trip were intended only to authorize the travel. The Travel Approval and Expense Report is then forwarded to Accounts Payable.

9.5 If the trip is cancelled and there has been any prepayment of fees by CSU, the department will be charged for these expenses. If Cleveland State University is due a refund, it is the responsibility of the department to follow-up with the vendor and ensure that credit is received.

9.6 If a receipt is lost, the traveler must provide a written statement indicating that it was lost. This statement must be signed by the traveler.
9.7 If the traveler received a travel advance, original receipts must be submitted and remaining funds returned to the University within two weeks of the travel completion date. If funds are not returned within a reasonable time, the full amount of the travel advance will be taxed to the traveler and included on his/her W-2. Subjecting the advance to taxation does not relieve the traveler from the responsibility of accounting for the advance and returning any unused funds.

X. AUDITS OF TRAVEL EXPENSES

10.1 The Department of Audits will periodically audit a sample of Travel Approval and Expense Reports. Violation of travel policies could lead to suspension of reimbursement for travel expenses by the University and to disciplinary action.

MEMORANDUM

January 2011

TO: Law Faculty

FROM: Summer Research Grants Committee
       Susan Becker
       Sheldon Gelman
       Alan Weinstein, Chair
       Heidi Gorovitz Robertson (ex officio)

RE: Summer 2011 Research Grant Requests

Tenured, pre-tenured, legal writing, and clinical professors, are invited to submit a funding request for a research grant proposal for the Summer of 2010. The number of available research grants to be awarded and the dollar amount of each grant will be determined by the Dean’s office based on budgetary constraints. The format for application and the criteria for selecting meritorious applications are described below. Applicants should submit four (4) paper copies of their proposal to Alan Weinstein by noon on Monday, February 21, 2011. Please do not e-mail your proposals.

FORMAT FOR APPLICATIONS

Each applicant should submit a brief description (no more than two pages) of the proposed project, the methodology to be used, and the place of the project in the particular scholarly field. In addition, the applicant must report the following information regarding the immediately preceding three projects for which summer grants have been awarded: the title(s) and date(s) of each of the three most recently funded research proposals, a brief description of the draft(s) or published writing(s) that resulted from each grant (even if the money was used to fund different research from that originally proposed in the grant request), and the following details regarding the resulting work product:

- If the applicant has published any articles or chapters, the applicant should include a reprint or copy with his/her application.

- If the applicant has published any books, the applicant should provide a copy of the inside title page and table of contents. If the book does not have a table of contents, then please indicate the number of pages.
If the applicant has produced any articles, chapters, etc., that have either been submitted or accepted for publication but not yet published, the applicant should identify the titles of the articles or chapters, their length, and the journal and volume/issue in which each is scheduled to be published. If the work has not yet been accepted for publication, the applicant should describe where the piece is in the submission process.

Finally, for any writing projects that are still in draft form, the applicant should identify the working title of the draft(s), the nature and anticipated length of the final product(s), the anticipated date(s) of completion, and provide a copy of the draft manuscript(s).

If you have submitted any of the above materials within the past two years, the Committee likely has it on file and there is no need for you to re-submit unless we make a request. Please note that the Committee has had to defer review of some applications in the past due to inaccurate or incomplete information about an applicant’s prior grant history, so responding promptly and completely to any request from the Committee will allow us to review your application in a timely manner.

Please note that a faculty member who applies for a summer research grant after the expiration of a professorship or similar position that included an automatic award of one or more summer grants is subject to the same productivity criteria as other grant recipients. For the first three summer grant applications submitted following the end of the faculty member’s named Professorship, the applicant shall identify the scope and status of all works-in-progress, publications and/or summer teaching projects that were supported by any automatic summer grants that would be included as part of the “three previous grants” reporting period required of all applicants.

CRITERIA FOR JUDGING THE MERIT OF PROPOSALS

In making recommendations to the Dean regarding whether summer research grant proposals are worthy of funding, the Summer Research Grant Committee judges the merit of grant applications by considering both the overall quality of the applicant’s proposed project and the applicant’s record of past productivity. Pre-tenured faculty members have a preference in the award of grants. Because the purpose of the summer research grant program is to provide a sufficient financial incentive to devote the majority of the summer to scholarship rather than to other paid employment, anyone who accepts paid summer employment for a duration of the equivalent of more than two weeks is not eligible for a summer research grant.

A faculty member on a nine or ten month contract who is teaching during the summer under the College’s flexibility in teaching load policy, and thus the summer teaching is part of the standard teaching load and not for additional compensation, is eligible to apply for a summer research or teaching grant. A faculty member who applies under these circumstances is not eligible for a summer research grant, however, if s/he accepts paid employment for a duration of the equivalent of more than two weeks during the semester when his/her teaching load has been reduced as a result of teaching in the summer.

The Committee will be guided by the following principles in its review of grant requests. The purpose of these guidelines is to provide greater transparency to faculty members regarding the decision process, not to bind the discretion of the Committee in extraordinary circumstances that are not foreseen in these guidelines.

Both articles and books (including textbooks and monographs) may be supported with summer research grant money. In general, a substantial article or book (whether on the originally described topic or a different topic) must be completed and submitted for publication before a second grant will be awarded. In the case of an article, however, a second grant may be awarded prior to completion of an article if it can be shown that substantial progress has been made on a substantial article. The faculty member shoulders the burden of proving that this standard has been satisfied. In no event will a third grant be awarded before completion and submission for publication of a substantial article. In the discretion of the Committee, two shorter works may be considered the equivalent of a single, substantial article.

In the case of a book, a second grant may be awarded prior to completion of the book if it can be shown that substantial progress has been made, and a third grant may be awarded prior to completion of the book if it can be shown that substantial additional progress has been made since the award of the second grant. Generally, a fourth grant will not be awarded before completion of a book. If, however, the faculty member publishes at least one substantial article while also working on the book, the Committee may take this productivity into account in determining whether to recommend the award of additional grants for the book.

Abandonment of a project does not change the principles described above; an alternative substantial article or book (as the case may be) must be completed and submitted for publication before subsequent grants will be awarded. Co-authored articles and books are subject to the same principles that apply to articles and books wholly authored by the faculty member.

Example 1: In Year 1, Faculty Member A is awarded a grant to write an article on Topic X. After several months of work, Faculty Member A abandons work on Topic X and begins work on a new article dealing with Topic Y. In Year 2, Faculty Member A submits a grant request to continue work on Topic Y and satisfies his burden of proving that “substantial progress” has been made on the article. The Committee should recommend funding the grant. In Year 3, Faculty Member A, having not yet completed the work on Topic Y (or a substantial article on another topic), submits a grant request to continue work on Topic Y (or to start a new project on Topic Z). The Committee should recommend denial of the grant request. No further grants should be awarded until Faculty Member A has completed and submitted for publication a substantial article to satisfy his outstanding obligation under the prior two grants.
Example 2: In Year 1, Faculty Member B is awarded a grant to write a book. In Year 2, Faculty Member B submits a grant request to continue work on the book and satisfies her burden of proving that “substantial progress” has been made. The Committee should recommend funding the grant. In Year 3, Faculty Member B submits a grant request to continue work on the book and satisfies her burden of proving that “substantial additional progress” has been made since submission of the prior grant request. The Committee should recommend funding the grant. During Year 3, however, Faculty Member B instead writes and submits for publication a substantial article. In Year 4, Faculty Member B submits a grant request to continue work on the book. While generally a fourth grant will not be awarded for the writing of a book, the Committee may take into consideration the publication of the substantial article in Year 3 in deciding whether to recommend funding the grant. Because Faculty Member B’s outstanding obligation under the Year-3 grant was satisfied by the completion of a substantial article, the Committee should recommend funding the grant for Year 4 (which would be the third and final grant allocable to the book, absent publication of a substantial article instead, as in the prior year).
Memorandum

January 26, 2009

TO: Full-Time Faculty, consisting of Permanent Tenured & Tenure-Track Faculty and Legal Research and Writing Faculty

FROM: The Teaching Committee (Janice Aitkin, Michael Borden, Patricia Falk, Brian Glassman, Michelle Lapp, Chris Sagers)

RE: Summer Teaching Enhancement Grants

Faculty members interested in submitting a Summer Teaching Enhancement grant proposal for the summer of 2009 should submit an application to Chris Sagers by 5 p.m. Monday, February 23rd, 2009, either in hard copy or by email. The amount of a Teaching Enhancement Grant will be the same as C-M Summer Research Grants.

The purpose of Summer Teaching Enhancement Grants is to encourage both excellence and innovation in teaching. These are related concepts yet not necessarily synonymous. Possible differences between grants that focus on “innovation” and those that further 22 Persons eligible to apply for grants are all full-time faculty members whose primary duties include teaching and who are not otherwise under contract with the law school during the summer. Legal research and writing professors are eligible. Persons who are not eligible include (1) administrators, librarians, and clinicians on 12 month contracts; (2) faculty under contract to teach one or more standard courses during the summer; (3) and faculty who have summer research grants. Should a member of the Committee apply for a grant, that member will be ineligible to consider approval of grant applications. The Dean may substitute another faculty member for the sole purpose of determining approvals of grant applications.

“excellence” in teaching are described below. Innovation means something we have not done before. Thus, it is difficult to determine in the abstract what types of innovations faculty might appropriately propose. As a general guideline, summer teaching grants will not be available for the work regularly expected of law professors. For example, grants are not available for standard preparation for a course new to the instructor.

An applicant awarded both a Summer Research Grant and a Teaching Grant will have one week to decide which grant to accept in order to permit the committee whose grant is not selected adequate time to decide whether to award a grant to another applicant. If the applicant does not select a grant within that time, the chairs of the Teaching Committee and the Summer Research Grant Committee shall meet and agree on which grant to withdraw.

Below follows detailed information regarding submission of a Summer Teaching Enhancement Grant proposal.

INSTRUCTIONS AND CRITERIA FOR TEACHING ENHANCEMENT GRANTS

Applications should propose projects that explicitly address the law school’s teaching and learning priorities, and/or the University’s teaching and learning priorities, including but not limited to one or more of the following:

- improvement to the practice and theory of teaching in general
- specific improvement to a particular course or courses
- development of a course not currently offered
- development of a new teaching methodology
- development of an interdisciplinary course
- improvements which make a positive impact on bar passage outcomes
- internationalization of an existing course
- increasing the availability of online resources in a course or courses
- incorporating newer or newly available technologies
- provide opportunities to involve practicing attorneys whose presence will enrich the students’ learning experience

Applications should address the following requirements:

- Applications will include a clear description of the proposed project and the outcomes in terms of one or more of the priorities above, or other priorities identified by the applicant.
- Proposed projects will be substantially completed within 12 months of notice of funding.
- Applicants will undertake to produce either a publishable article detailing the by-products of the research, or a demonstration project. A demonstration project may consist of, but is not limited to a webpage for open access through project home pages established on the law school’s website, a broadly disseminated annotated bibliography of materials relevant to the course improvements, or an electronic discussion forum of the project.
Whether applicants undertake to research and write an article or to prepare a demonstration project, applicants must make a faculty presentation describing the work. Applicants will indicate the proposed date (an approximation) for the faculty presentation in their proposals.

STANDARDS for judging the merit of proposals

The Teaching Committee judges the merits of the applications for summer teaching enhancement grants by considering both the overall quality of the applicant’s proposed project and the extent to which the applicant’s proposal meets the criteria stated above. The Teaching Committee may also consider other factors such as the number of students impacted by the project, whether the project will result in long-term improvements to teaching and the extent to which the project helps to promote collaboration between or among law school faculty teaching in the same or in different substantive areas.

APPLICATION FOR SUMMER TEACHING ENHANCEMENT GRANT

1. Name
2. Title of Project
3. Indicate type of project, referencing one or more of the law school’s teaching and learning priorities, and/or the University’s teaching and learning priorities, or priorities identified by the applicant.
4. How many students will be affected? At what level? Over what period of time?
5. Will your project promote collaboration between or among law school faculty?
6. How will you evaluate the success of this project? (Please check and briefly explain)
   - [ ] Student Evaluation
   - [ ] Student Questionnaire
   - [ ] Assessment Techniques
   - [ ] Other (explain)
7. Will your project result in long term improvements to your teaching? Briefly explain.
8. Proposed date for faculty presentation:
9. Detailed project description: Please attach no more than 2 double-spaced, typed pages. Be sure to (a) write for highly educated reviewers who are not necessarily experts in your teaching area; (b) address the requirements articulated in the section entitled “Instructions and Criteria for Teaching Enhancement Grants” on pages two and three.
APPENDIX 12

SABBATICAL APPLICATIONS

Excerpt from CSU Faculty Handbook (p. 29):

A full-time University faculty member with at least seven academic years of teaching service (may be cumulative, summer teaching does not count) and who has been granted tenure by the date of the leave may be granted professional leave (sabbatical) not to exceed one (1) year (100 percent pay for a one-semester leave, 66.7 percent pay for a two-semester leave; except in the College of Law, 11/12ths of pay for a one-semester leave, 66.7 percent for a two-semester leave). This leave may be for further education, research, or other professional program improvement benefits both the faculty member and the University (Bylaws 8.1.8(A3); Agreement 21.1-3).

Applications for professional leave are normally made in the fall term, prior to November 15th, and require a written plan that describes in detail the project’s purpose and expected outcomes, semester(s) included, any grant or fellowship connected with the leave, and a current curriculum vitae. Procedural and review steps that follow the submission of a professional leave proposal can be reviewed in the CSU-AAUP Contract (Agreement 21.4) and the Faculty Senate Bylaws (Bylaws 8.1.8(C)).
September 19, 2008

TO: Members of the Faculty

This is to notify all eligible University faculty of the opportunity to apply for Professional Leave for the academic year 2009-2010, according to conditions specified in Article 21 of the collective bargaining agreement and Section 8.1.8 C) of the CSU Faculty Personnel Policies. Eligibility criteria for Professional Leave are as follows:

1. Completion of six academic years of service at CSU at the time of the initiation of the leave; [Note: As of 2012, the Collective Bargaining Agreement permits a sabbatical after seven years’ service.]

2. Completion of six academic years of service at CSU following completion of a Professional Leave; [Note: As of 2012, the Collective Bargaining Agreement permits a sabbatical after seven years’ service following prior sabbatical.]

3. Tenure effective as of the date the Professional Leave becomes effective.

The Faculty Professional Leave Program is designed to provide faculty with an extended period of from one to two academic semesters to pursue an individual program of professional development. This will be the thirty-second year that CSU is inviting applications for this program, with continuing mutual benefits to our faculty colleagues and the University.

Faculty who apply for Professional Leave should be aware of the following:

1. Under the governing state legislation, this program must operate on a "no cost" basis. The college must indicate in writing that it is able to cover the responsibilities of the faculty member at no added cost.

2. The most crucial factor in granting Professional Leave is the merit of the proposal. In the faculty review of applications at the department and college levels, the quality of the proposal is the primary criterion. Proposals must follow the guidelines precisely and be realistic in terms of what can be accomplished.

3. As specified in Article 21.4 E of the collective bargaining agreement: "If the number of proposals exceeds the number that can be supported without additional cost or if all applicants cannot be accommodated because of bona fide instructional obligations, then the Dean may limit the number of proposals that may be recommended by the college." Section 8.1.8 C)4)e) of the CSU Faculty Personnel Policies has an identical stipulation for colleges without collective bargaining faculty.

4. Article 21.2E of the faculty collective bargaining agreement states that “…faculty members taking professional leave agree to return to Cleveland State University for at least two (2) semesters (excluding summer) after completing their professional leave or to refund the compensation paid by the University during the leave, unless this obligation is specifically waived or deferred by the University.” Section 8.1.8C) 2) e) of the Faculty Personnel Policies has an identical stipulation.

5. Professional Leave salaries are as follows:
one semester Professional Leave (100% of academic year salary);
two semester Professional Leave (66.67% of academic year salary).

In submitting proposals for Faculty Professional Leavess, the attached form should serve as the cover sheet, and a current curriculum vitae should accompany the proposal. Please include, immediately following the cover sheet, a one-paragraph abstract of the proposal.

The faculty collective bargaining agreement stipulates the due date for applications for Professional Leave: November 15, 2008. Therefore, I would like to request everyone’s cooperation in observing the following timetable:

You will find on reserve at the University Library Reserve Desk copies of several applications recommended as models. I also encourage those of you who will be eligible for the program next year, or in the near future, to investigate other sources of support for your period of leave. In this regard, the University Office of Sponsored Programs and Research would be pleased to be of assistance.

Sincerely,

Mary Jane Saunders,
Provost and Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs

PROPOSAL: A short summary/abstract of the proposal for professional leave, written for an educated layperson, must be attached to this form. The full proposal must not exceed five (5) typed pages, and should discuss, answer, or contain the following:

1. major objectives to be achieved during the leave period and their relationship to your ongoing responsibilities as a faculty member at CSU;
2. a specific outline of the project to be initiated or continued in fulfillment of these objectives;
3. expected outcomes from the completion of this project;
4. criteria for evaluating the relative success of the project upon its completion;
5. additional sources of support (e.g., research grants) that you are exploring or have explored relative to the requested period of professional leave.

Applications given a favorable review at the departmental level must be accompanied by a statement from the chairperson indicating how arrangements will be made to cover teaching and other responsibilities of the faculty member. Applications that are given a favorable review at the college level must be accompanied by a statement from the Dean assuring that all leaves in the College are recommended on a “break even” or “no cost” basis.

\textsuperscript{23} Academic Year = two semesters of full-time academic service in rank, excluding summer term. Leaves of absence should not be counted. Periods of less than full-time service may also be accumulated as partial credit towards eligibility.
ARTICLE I — NAME

The name of this organization is The Faculty of the College of Law (“the Law Faculty”).

ARTICLE II — MEMBERSHIP

SECTION 1. MEMBERSHIP GENERALLY

The membership of the Law Faculty is as follows: the President of the University, ex officio; the Vice President for Academic Affairs, ex officio; the Dean and Associate Deans of the College of Law; all persons assigned to the College of Law with the faculty rank of Professor, Associate Professor, Assistant Professor, Emeritus Professor, Clinical Professor, and Legal Writing Professor.

SECTION 2. VOTING RIGHTS

All members of the Law Faculty, except ex officio members and emeritus professors, are eligible to vote on all matters except as follows. Clinical Professors and Legal Writing Professors are not eligible to vote on matters related to hiring, tenure or promotion of tenured or tenure-track faculty, or the hiring or retention of the Dean.

ARTICLE III — OFFICERS

SECTION 1. THE DEAN

The Dean of the College of Law is the chief executive officer of the College of Law and is the chairperson of the Law Faculty. The Dean or the Dean’s designated representative shall preside at faculty meetings of the College of the Law.
SECTION 2. THE SECRETARY

The Dean of the College of Law will appoint a Secretary of the Law Faculty. The Secretary will notify each member of the Law Faculty of the time, place, and agenda of each faculty meeting, and will keep accurate minutes of all such meetings.

ARTICLE IV — MEETINGS

SECTION 1. REGULAR MEETINGS

The Law Faculty will meet at least twice during each of the Fall and Spring semesters. The Dean (or, in the Dean’s absence, his or her designated representative) will call meetings and may call additional meetings as the need arises.

SECTION 2. ADVANCE NOTICE OF ALL MEETINGS

All meetings must be called and the preliminary agenda announced by written or electronic notice to all members of the Law Faculty not less than 48 hours prior to the time set for the meeting.

SECTION 3. QUORUM FOR MEETINGS

Forty percent of the voting members of the Law Faculty who are not on professional or personal leave constitutes a quorum. Faculty excused from attending a specific meeting are not considered faculty 'on professional or personal leave' when calculating the number of faculty necessary to constitute a quorum.

SECTION 4. EXECUTIVE SESSION

A. The Law Faculty can convene an executive session for consideration of personnel matters and any other matter requiring confidentiality.

B. Forty-percent of the members of the Law Faculty eligible to vote on the issue who are not on personal or professional leave constitutes a quorum for an executive session.

ARTICLE V — COMMITTEES

The members of the Law Faculty have an important responsibility to participate actively in the governance of the College of Law. One of the principal means through which the members of the Law Faculty satisfy that responsibility is participation in committees in the College of Law.

SECTION 1. COMMITTEES

The following are the committees of the Law Faculty:
A. The Dean’s Faculty Advisory Committee. The elected Faculty Senators from the College of Law constitute this committee.

B. The Faculty Affairs Committee. The Faculty Affairs Committee must consist of at least six persons, including at least one full Professor, at least one Associate Professor, at least one Assistant Professor and at least one member of the legal writing or clinical faculty. Each member of the Committee is elected for a two-year term. Law Faculty with an administrative position in the Law College or University are ineligible to serve on the Faculty Affairs Committee.

C. The Personnel Action Committee (PAC). The PAC will consist of all tenured members of the Law Faculty. The members of the PAC will elect by majority vote a Chair and Vice-Chair of the PAC. The Chair and Vice-Chair must be full professors without an administrative position in the Law College or University at the time of election.

D. Other Committees. Appendix A lists all other currently constituted committees of the Law Faculty.

SECTION 2. CREATING AND DISBANDING COMMITTEES

Upon recommendation of the Faculty Affairs Committee or the Dean, the Law Faculty may, by majority vote at a regular faculty meeting, create additional standing committees. All other committees or subcommittees may be created: (a) by the Dean, or (b) by the Law Faculty, after consultation with the Dean, by majority vote at a faculty meeting. All committees and subcommittees, except the PAC, may be disbanded by majority vote at a faculty meeting.

ARTICLE VI — ROBERT’S RULES OF ORDER

The rules contained in the most recent version of ROBERT’S RULES OF ORDER will govern the Law Faculty in all regular and special faculty meetings, to the extent that they are not inconsistent with these bylaws or with the special rules of this faculty or the bylaws of the Faculty Senate.

ARTICLE VII — VOTING BY SECRET BALLOT

Voting for election to the Faculty Senate, election to the Faculty Affairs Committee, election of the Chair and Vice-Chair of the PAC, amendment of these bylaws and all personnel action decisions will be by secret ballot. Any faculty member can request a secret-ballot vote on any other issue. Voting will be by secret ballot on that issue if any other faculty member seconds the request.

ARTICLE VIII — AMENDMENT

Any member of the Law Faculty may propose amendments to these bylaws. A proposed amendment to these bylaws must be submitted in writing at a faculty meeting.
and referred to the Faculty Affairs Committee. At a subsequent faculty meeting, not sooner than thirty days after the submission of the proposed amendment, the Faculty Affairs Committee will report its recommendation regarding the proposed amendment. The Law Faculty will determine by majority vote whether to submit the amendment to a secret ballot. A vote of two-thirds of those casting secret ballots is required to amend. These procedures will not be required for amendment of the “Other Policies and Procedures” referenced in Article IX.

ARTICLE IX — OTHER POLICIES AND PROCEDURES

These bylaws incorporate by reference all other policies and procedures adopted by the Law Faculty or established by the Dean, the Provost, President or Board of Trustees of CSU, including, but not limited to, policies and procedures for hiring, promotion, tenure and professional leaves.

Approved by faculty vote May 14, 2009.

8.1.10 Consulting and Other Extramural Employment (Non-Bargaining Unit Members Only)24

1) Faculty members are frequently called upon to render professional counsel or service to public or private agencies for which compensation is direct and in excess of the terms of University contracts. Such services are encouraged if they fulfill a responsibility of the University to the community at large and provide invaluable professional experiences. It is understood, however, that such activities shall in no way limit the extent or quality of a faculty member’s obligation to the University or his or her profession. There are three levels of such activities:

A) Activities that have a minimal impact on the faculty member’s University or professional obligations, e.g., keynote speeches, paid reviews of research articles, books or creative works, and tenure reviews for other universities.

B) Activities that have a somewhat substantial one-time impact on the faculty member’s University or professional obligations, e.g., teaching short courses or workshops, consulting on projects for business, government or nonprofit organizations, expert testimony and self-employment.

C) Activities that have a substantial and continuing impact on the faculty member’s University or professional obligations, e.g., long-term consulting relationships with business, government or nonprofit organizations, expert testimony and self-employment.

The activities described in part A) above are exempt from the pre-approval requirements specified in the remainder of this article but shall be included in the annual spring semester report of extramural employment.

Before performing activities described in parts B) and C) above, the faculty member must obtain the written approval of his or her supervisor; such approval not to be unreasonably denied. In no event shall she or he accept a regular salary or annual retainer for counsel or services without the written consent of his or her supervisor.

24 Approved by the CSU Board of Trustees, October 23, 2008.
Faculty members shall not engage in any outside employment activity which competes directly with the University in its pursuit of grants, awards, projects and other sources of funding. In addition, outside employment will not be undertaken which violates Ohio’s ethics laws governing public employees.

The use of the name, symbol, or address of Cleveland State University in any extramural employment agreement is prohibited. University facilities, equipment, and materials may be used for such purposes only with the prior express consent of the Administration and according to explicit terms for reimbursement.

The faculty member’s supervisor shall at all times be kept informed in writing of the extramural employment of full-time faculty members. Faculty shall submit a report of such activities, indicating the number of hours and for whom the work was performed, to his or her supervisor in the spring semester of each academic year. Consulting activities should make a contribution to the enrichment of the teaching and/or research competence of the faculty member.

2) If the faculty member’s supervisor believes that a faculty member’s outside activities interfere with the extent or quality of the faculty member’s obligation to the University or his or her profession or compete directly with the University in its pursuit of grants, awards, projects and other sources of funding, or if the faculty member fails to abide by the procedures set forth in Section 8.1.10.1, the supervisor and the faculty member shall discuss the situation in an attempt to resolve any problems or misunderstandings. After such consultation, the supervisor may order suspension or termination of any outside employment. Such orders to suspend or terminate outside employment may be appealed to the Provost. During the grievance procedure, the order of the supervisor affecting outside employment normally shall not force suspension or termination of existing contractual obligations, but shall prohibit the faculty member from extending or renewing any existing contractual obligation, or accepting any new outside employment. Nevertheless, if the supervisor determines that continuing the outside employment impairs the faculty member’s obligation to the University or his or her profession, the faculty member shall suspend or terminate the outside employment even if the order is challenged through appeal.

3) Faculty members are expressly prohibited from teaching for other educational institutions, colleges or universities while under contract, unless such teaching is a part of an inter-institutional agreement entered into by Cleveland State University or the faculty member has the prior written consent of his or her supervisor.

EXAM PROCEDURES MEMORANDUM

TO: Faculty

FROM: Mark J. Sundahl, Associate Dean for Academic Affairs
Jean Lifter, Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs
Marcie Rechner, Records Officer

RE: Exam Procedures

DATE: April 20, 2011

ADMINISTRATION OF EXAMINATIONS

Each faculty member will proctor an in-class exam of a colleague at the same time as their in-class exam is being proctored by another faculty member. For this system to work smoothly, it is extremely important that exams be administered in accordance with the following procedures. Note: If you will not be in the building while your exam is being proctored you must be available by telephone in the event that any questions regarding your exam arise. In advance of your exam, please give Jean Lifter the telephone number at which you may be reached.

A. Submitting Exams and Exam Instructions

If you need help typing your exam, please allow at least five working days for typing and duplication, which will be taken care of by the word processing department through Laverne Carter, Office Manager.

On the first page of the exam, please put the course name, number, and section, instructor name and semester and leave a blank for the student exam number—all of this will facilitate collecting exams at the end of the exam (see Proctoring Responsibilities below). Please number the pages of your exam so that it will be certain each student has all of the pages of the exam.

You must complete the Exam Instruction Form for each of your exams. Please make sure that your instructions are complete. This is the document on which the proctor will rely when proctoring your exam. If your exam is administered in parts, please explain exactly how the exam is to be administered. If your exam has Multiple Choice Questions, you must specify whether students will use the Blue (up to 5 choices for the answers) or Green (up to 10 choices) scantron sheets. Also, please indicate whether copies of your exam should be given to the library (after the exam period) for inclusion in the Past Amended in accordance with memorandum presented to faculty in November 10, 2011 faculty meeting.

Exams online (explained in the Faculty Manual). If we have any questions about your instructions, we will contact you before your exam.

So that we can be sure that we have all exams and complete instructions for the proctor before the start of the exam, we will need to have copies of your exam with instructions for the proctor at least 24 hours before the scheduled beginning time of the exam. This means that you cannot bring the exam in with you on the day of the exam. You must have the exam and instruction form copied in time for it to be delivered to Jean Lifter 24 hours before the scheduled start time of the exam. So, for example, if your exam is scheduled for Monday at 9 a.m. Jean Lifter must have the exam by Friday at 9 a.m. (As you can tell, we are not counting weekends in the time frame.) You will need to give the exam to Laverne Carter sufficiently prior to that for her to have the exam copied. The exams are copied and secured so that no students have access to them prior to the exam.

B. Proctoring Schedule

Proctoring assignments and exam rooms are noted on the exam schedule. Please keep a copy of the exam schedule with you when you proctor in case you need to ask the professor whose exam you are proctoring a question about the exam. Every exam will be given in one room—those handwriting and those taking on computer will take the exam in the same room. We will not provide a separate room for hand writers—we have not needed one in the past. If it becomes apparent to you that a student needs a separate room to hand write the exam, please send the student to Jean Lifter’s office during the day and to the Student Services reception desk in the evening. We will have a space for students to take the exam.

C. Electronic Devices and Other Personal Effects

Students are not permitted to bring any electronic devices other than their personal computer to an exam (e.g., cell phones, Personal Digital Devices (PDAs), mp3 players, cameras, or digital or tape recorders). Students may not keep book bags, purses, or briefcases at their table during the exam. If a student brings a bag, purse or briefcase to the exam, they must be left at the front of the exam room and may not be accessed during the exam. If a student has an emergency that requires the student to make or receive a call during an exam, the student should inform Dean Lifter and arrange to have the call made or received from the Student Services Center. Neither the law school nor the proctor shall be responsible for items left in the front of the room.

D. Proctoring Responsibilities

1. On the day of the exam, please pick up the exams, exam instructions, and class roster from Jean Lifter’s office.

2. Please bring blue books/blank paper (and scantron sheets and pencils if required) to the exam. The blue books/blank paper will be for all students—blue books for students who are handwriting the exam and blank paper for outlining for computer exams. Bluebooks, blank paper, and scantron sheets are available in the Copy Room. Pencils may be obtained from the Records Office.

3. Please plan to stay in the exam room for the entire exam.

4. Remind the students that electronic devices (as described above in Section C) are not permitted in the exam room. Tell the students that if they have any bags, purses, or briefcases, they must place the items in their locker or place them in the front of the room before taking the exam.

5. Before the exam begins, please ask that students not sit next to each other, but at least one seat apart if possible. Also, please make sure that students have turned off their cell phones.

6. Please make sure that each student initials the class roster and indicates on it whether s/he is handwriting or taking the exam on computer. Please do this before the exam begins or when students are turning in their exams at the end, but not during the exam itself. Please assure the students that this form will not be submitted to the course instructor but is for administrative use only to make sure that all exams are properly submitted.

7. At the beginning of the exam session, once you have distributed the exam please:

   a. ask students to make sure that they have all the pages of the exam – if there is a problem with the copies, please immediately see Dean Lifter or the staff person at the Student Services Center reception desk;

   b. ask students to put their exam numbers on the front of the exam questions;

   c. ask any student writing the exam to write their exam number and the name of the class on their bluebooks;

   d. if scantron sheets are being used, ask the students (i) to write their exam number on the sheet and bubble in the appropriate numbers and (ii) to write the name of their professor in the NAME box on the sheet – they should not fill in the bubbles for the professor’s name.

   e. inform the students that during the last five minutes of class students must remain in their seats and may not leave even if they have finished the exam (although they are free to leave prior to the five-minute warning);

   f. instruct students to turn in their exam materials by (i) tucking all materials inside the exam materials “jacket” and (ii) placing the materials in a single pile as they leave;
g. inform the students that the exam will be timed according to the classroom clock; and

h. write the time that the exam will end on the blackboard or whiteboard.

8. If a student has a question about the exam that requires information from the course professor, you, and not the student, may find the professor and ask for clarification. The student may not leave the exam room for this purpose.

9. Students who leave the exam room to use the restroom must leave all exam materials and their cell phones in the exam room.

10. If a student has computer problems during the exam, please make note of any significant period during which s/he was unable to work on the exam and extend, for that student, the time allowed on the exam. After a maximum of 20 minutes, a student with computer problems should be advised to switch to answering in a blue book and will be allowed to continue working on the exam for no more than the time lost, up to 20 minutes, after the regular exam ends. Tech staff can be reached during exams by dialing 216/523-7555 or x7555 from a University phone line; if not assisting students in another exam room, they will be in the law library – LL 112 (Eric or Dan); LL 114 (Greg); or LL 115 (Rick).

11. Five minutes before the end of the exam, announce to the students that five minutes remain and that they are to stay in their seats until the end of the exam.

12. At the end of the exam, announce that time is up and instruct all students to stop working on the exam. Except as indicated in paragraph 9, above, do not extend the time for any student.

13. At the end of the exam, have the students turn in their exam materials one at a time. For large classes, call students to line up and hand in their materials row by row in order to ensure an orderly process. When the students hand you their exam materials, make sure that:

   a. each student turns in the exam questions (with their exam numbers on them);

   b. if students have filled out a scantron sheet, they put the name of their professor in the NAME boxes on the sheet (they should not fill in the bubbles on this section of the sheet);

   c. each student’s exam materials are tucked into his/her exam “jacket”; and

   d. this package of materials is placed on a single pile (which pile will then be delivered to Dean Lifter or the Student Services Center per paragraph 13 below).

14. For daytime exams, please return the exam materials to Dean Lifter’s office. For evening exams, please return the exam materials to the staff person at the Student Services Center reception desk. Please return the exams promptly after the end of the exam.

E. Picking Up Your Exams

Once any computer exams have been printed, the Records Office will confirm that all exams are accounted for by comparing the exam numbers for all students on your roster with the blue book and/or printed exams. The Records Office will take into account exams yet to be taken due to rescheduling or exams taken under accommodations. Thereafter you will be notified that your exams are ready for pick up and grading. We anticipate that your exams will be available the day after you give the exam—allowing time for the exams to be printed and cross-checked. (Rescheduled and/or accommodated exams may, of course, come thereafter.)

Subject: Grading System and Related

March 16, 2007

The Committee extends its thanks to Registrar Marcie Rechner and our ex officio member, Dean Jean Lifter, for their assistance. Without their support and cooperation the Committee could not have completed this Report.

I: INTRODUCTION:

The Dean's charge to the members of the Academic Standards Committee asked that we “consider whether to expand the range of available grades to include “minuses” as well as “pluses.” On January 11, 2007 the Committee forwarded, via e-mail, an initial summary report [dated December 14, 2006] to the faculty describing the letter grade systems utilized by 44 law schools including all Ohio law schools (almost every law school in Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia was surveyed as well as both Rutgers campuses in New Jersey). All except Ohio State University, the University of Detroit, Mercy and Cardozo School of Law (Yeshiva University) utilized some level of plus/minus grading ranging from a maximum 13 grades to a minimum of 7 grades. Cardozo indicates the tier within the letter grade by the use of plus or minus but this had no bearing on grade point calculation.

In Ohio all schools except Ohio State University utilize some level of plus/minus grading. One school utilizes a 13 letter system, three use varieties of a 12 letter system, one a 10 letter system, and one an 8 letter system identical to ours. See Memorandum of December 14, 2006

The survey also found that the vast majority of schools utilized some form of grading guideline or curve and that the overall grade point averages in these schools were higher than those of Cleveland-Marshall. In Ohio, Akron and Northern Ohio have no grade curve as such and Capital has guidelines similar to ours. The grade norms for the other five schools are higher than those of Cleveland-Marshall.

CWRU: Approximately 2.9 (this may be for first year only).
Cincinnati: Approximately 3.1 for first year with a median of B+ for upper division classes of 20 or more students.
Dayton: first year mean between 2.75 and 2.85, upper division mean between 2.95 and 3.05.
Ohio State: A 25%, B 45%, C 26% with a maximum of 4% for lower grades.
Toledo: first year multiple section mean: 2.5-3.0, upper division mean of 2.6 – 3.2.
Although we did not calculate the norms for schools outside Ohio, the data reveals that almost all have grading practices that yield higher grade point averages than those earned by our graduates.

The current predicted grade point averages for Cleveland-Marshall College of Law are:

First year courses: 2.620
Upper Division courses: 2.835

These figures are based on an assumed class of 100 students with the grades based on the standard percentages e.g. if the standard for an A is 16%, the calculation assumes 16 students received a grade of A. This procedure is followed for all grades, the quality points determined for each letter grade, the quality points are then totaled and the decimal point inserted. Due to the use of permitted ranges this system provides the most accurate predictor even though it is not fully accurate in terms of actual grading practices. The actual grade point averages at our school are somewhat higher than the curve predictor. [Information on actual grading practices is provided in part 2 (C) below.]

Available literature reviewed by the Committee leads to the following conclusions:

1. Adding a minus system does not increase average grade points for a class.
2. The more grade options available the greater potential there is for an increase in error rate as errors occur at the margins.
3. The more grade options available the less effect of error as the differential between grade points assigned is reduced.
4. A corollary of point 3 appears to be that the addition of available grades allows for a better correlation between a number value assigned to a given performance and the letter grade entered for that performance. This is true if one grades by assigning numerical values that are then changed to letter grades and then to quality points that form the basis for the grade point average.

Simply put: (1) Adding minus grades will not, of itself, lead to higher grade point averages and (2) though there may be an increase in the error rate, the effect of error will be reduced.

The Committee is recommending that Cleveland-Marshall College of Law adopt a plus/minus system. If the faculty adopts such a system we must also modify our grading guidelines, graduation honors standards and Dean's List standards.
II. RECOMMENDATIONS – MOTIONS OF THE ACADEMIC STANDARDS COMMITTEE:

1. Add grades of A-, B- and C- to the current letter grade system (Academic Regulation 2.1).

This motion adopts an eleven grade system that adds the grades of A-, B- and C-to our current system while rejecting the addition of an A+ or a D-. This also calls for a modification of the quality points awarded for existing plus grades. The Committee moves for adoption of the following grade system including quality points awarded for each grade:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Grade</th>
<th>Quality Points</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>A</td>
<td>4.0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A-</td>
<td>3.7</td>

<tr>
<td>D+</td>
<td>1.3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>D</td>
<td>1.0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>F</td>
<td>0.0</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

This system, in common with other schools, makes room for the inclusion of minus grades by reducing the value of plus grades from .5 to .3 e.g., B+ moves from a 3.5 to a 3.3.

If the faculty approves this motion, or any other variation of a plus/minus letter grade system, accommodations must be made in three other areas. The Committee, therefore, moves three additional motions (numbered 2 – 4). Note, however, that the recommendations set forth in items (3) Award of Honors and (4) Standard for Deaa’s List, can be considered without regard to the faculty’s action in regard to motions (1) letter grades and (2) grading guidelines.
2. Modify the voluntary grading guidelines for First Year and Upper Division Courses as set forth below.

Note: The proposed guidelines are in bold; the current guideline standards are in standard font (proposed are in the left hand columns).

Predicted g.p.a. 2.978
Rational and related data analysis:

A. First Year Guidelines:

The standards and ranges permitted for grades of D and F are unchanged. The standards for all other grades have been modified to accommodate the new grade system. The ranges permitted for all grades of C and above have been tightened to a range of +/- 2 percent. This provides greater consistency in grading and in maintenance of the overall grading system objectives.

In groups (based on the percentage standard):

A and A- = 20% compared to 12% for A grades in the current system.
B+, B and B- = 37% compared to 36% for B+ and B in the current system.
C+, C and C- = 30% compared to 37% for C+ and C in the current system.
Grades below C = 18% compared to 15% in the current system.
Grades of D+, D, and F = 13% compared to 15% in the current system.

The grade of C- carries 1.7 Quality Points, a grade lower than that needed for good academic standing. Thus, the percentage of grades that subject a student to academic dismissal (below a 2.0) have increased by 3%.

The maximum grades allowed by category:

A range = 24%; B range = 43%, C and C+ = 29%
Grades below 2.0 = 31%. (Current maximums: A = 14%, B & B+ = 40%, C & C+ = 44% and grades below 2.0 = 26%).

This system maintains the current predicted grade point average (to within 0.002 points), provides for a significant number of A- and B- grades while limiting the number of C- grades. It continues to provide discretion to professors in all grade categories although to a lesser extent than in regard to Upper Division classes. As all first year courses involve multiple sections, this slightly more limited discretion may promote greater consistency between sections. The standards and ranges permitted for grades below 2.0 will allow the faculty to maintain academic rigor while simultaneously permitting the award of more grades above C+ (one percent greater for grades of B and above and an additional 8-14% for grades of B-).

B. Upper Division Guidelines:

In a sense the most dramatic changes are not the addition of minus grades nor the higher predicted grade point average, but in the reduction of the standard norm for total grades below 2.0 which is reduced to 6% with the C- grade as compared to the prior 9% for grades of D+ and below including a 3% standard for grades of F (the proposed system has a zero standard for this grade). The changes in grades below 2.0 reflect two consistent objectives: first, to raise the overall upper division g.p.a. and second, to be more consistent with grading practices as applied by our faculty.

The standard and ranges for all grades have been modified to accommodate the new grading system. The range of grades for all grades above C have been tightened to a range of +/- 3 percent. This provides somewhat more flexibility than the permitted ranges for first year courses while retaining the potential for greater consistency between both multi-section course such as Constitutional Law and Evidence as well as among all electives courses.

In groups (based on the percentage standard):

A and A- = 26% compared to 16% for grades of A in the current system.
B+, B and B- = 48% compared to 43% for grades of B+ and B in the current system.
C+, C and C- = 22% compared to 32% for grades of C+ and C in the current system.
Grades below C = 6% compared to 9% in the current system.
Grades of D+, D and F = 4% compared to 9% in the current system.

The maximum grades allowed by category:

A range = 32%; B range = 57%, C and C+ = 26%
Grades below 2.0 = 25%, (Current maximums: A = 20%, B & B+ = 50%.
C and C+ = 40% and grades below 2.0 = 21%)

This system increases the predicted grade point average to 2.978 from its current 2.835 – an increase of 0.143. This places the grade point average for upper division courses closer to that of the vast majority of schools including Ohio schools. Utilizing the predicted grade point averages, the predicted graduation standard increases from 2.76 to 2.85. The maximum percentage of grades that subject a student to academic dismissal increase by 4% while grades of D+, D and F decrease by 2%.

The slightly more limited discretion in the grade ranges will, hopefully, yield greater grading consistency among multi-section courses as well as among all electives. This could encourage students to select electives based on substance rather than grading reputation of the professor. (One can dream – yes?). As shown below, actual grading practices yield significantly higher grades than those of the predicted grade point average.
C. COMPARISON TO ACTUAL GRADING PRACTICES

Actual grading practices reveal the extent to which the grade point averages in various classes are higher than the predicted grade point averages.

1. First Year Courses:

To the best of our ability the grade point averages for each section of first year courses, other than Legal Writing were:

Spring 2005:
   2.76, 2.75, 2.74 and 2.62.
Spring 2006 (using corrected data):
   2.79, 2.76, 2.74 and 2.67.

The only averages below 2.7 were in the evening sections.

The grade point average for all Legal Writing sections in Spring 2005 was 3.0 and in Spring 2006 was 2.96 (based on revised data). Legal Writing Professors follow the Upper Division Guidelines. These averages are consistent with other upper division course averages and considerably lower than in many such classes.

2. Upper Division Courses:

A somewhat random review of Upper Division grades awarded in Fall 2006 shows:

Constitutional Law: composite of three sections (minimal variance between sections): 2.97.
Evidence: 3.22 and 2.97 (as these variances were substantial a composite was not utilized).
Administrative Law: 3.14
Environmental Law: 3.37
International Law: 2.96

The proposed guidelines would permit the same grading approach and could yield identical averages. Please do not ask us to do the computations.

Looking at 28 upper division courses in Fall 2006 the total number of grades below C were: D+ = 9; D = 6; F = 2.

This compares to approximately 685 grades of A and B+

Assuming 750 total student grades, a conservative estimate, the percent of grades below C would have been: D+ = .012; D = .008; F = .002: Total = .022.
The proposed grading guidelines permit well in excess of this number but to a lesser degree than reflected in the current guidelines.

3. Change the method of awarding graduation honors (Academic Regulation 4.2) from a numerical to a percentage system.

A. HISTORY AND PROJECTIONS: CLEVELAND-MARSHALL

Academic Regulation 4.2 provides for the award of graduation honors based on the following grade point averages:

- Summa cum laude: 3.7
- Magna cum laude: 3.5 – 3.69
- Cum laude: 3.3 – 3.49

The Committee recommends that the award of graduation honors be based on specific percentages of the graduating class as follows:

- Summa cum laude: Top 5%
- Magna cum laude: Next 10%
- Cum laude: Next 18%

This limits honors to the top 1/3 of the graduating class which is largely consistent with the percentage of honors awards granted to the classes of 2005 and 2006 as well as current projections for the class of 2007. It is also consistent with the percentages in each category when compared to Spring 2005, but is lower in terms of Summa cum laude and Magna cum laude awards when compared to Spring 2006.

If we assume that graduation averages will increase by 0.1 (the increase in predicted graduation grade point average) the comparative picture for the grant of graduation honors based on grade point averages would be:

</table>

The data for actual graduates is based on the graduation honors as specified in the 2005 and 2006 Commencement programs. The potential percentages reflect the addition of an increase in grade point averages of .10. These numbers were based on the grade point averages for each class as of the close of the February semester. That data was based on ranges that did not exactly match the requirements for graduation honors. That same estimate model was used in the initial draft of this Report for Spring 2005 and 2006 graduates and in each instance the estimate was accurate to approximately <1% or in each category. The potential figures are, therefore, presented with a high level of confidence.

The data for Spring 2007 is based on records of the 162 students who have applied for graduation. This list is not yet complete as the grade ranking sheets for Fall semester 2006 show 169 full time 3L students and 51 4L students (total 220). Though not all 220 will graduate this Spring, we can anticipate that a significant portion of the 58 student disparity will graduate in Spring or Summer 2007. Based on prior commencement data, the total graduates should be in the range of 200.

The estimate potential for Spring 2007 is based on Fall 2006 grade point averages. The 40% total is predicted with substantial confidence. The breakdowns between honors levels are less reliable as the grade spreads on the ranking sheets were too broad for accurate predictions. In both cases some adjustments will be made after graduation so as to reflect actual final grade point averages.
B. COMPARISON TO OTHER OHIO LAW SCHOOLS

A review of Ohio law schools reveals no uniform pattern.

Three schools utilize percentages:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>School</th>
<th>Summa</th>
<th>Magna</th>
<th>Cum laude</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>

</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ohio State Univ.</td>
<td>Top 3%</td>
<td>----</td>
<td>Top 10% and &quot;with honors&quot; for Top 25%</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

One school, Ohio Northern, awards “high distinction” for 3.6 and above and “distinction” for 3.3 – 3.59.

Four schools utilize a system based on grade point averages:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>School</th>
<th>Summa</th>
<th>Magna</th>
<th>Cum Laude</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Univ. of Akron</td>
<td>3.6 &amp; up</td>
<td>3.4 – 3.59</td>
<td>3.2 – 3.39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Capital</td>
<td>3.6 &amp; up</td>
<td>3.4 – 3.59</td>
<td>3.2 – 3.39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Case Western R.U.</td>
<td>3.9 &amp; up</td>
<td>3.65 – 3.89</td>
<td>3.4 – 3.64</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Univ. of Toledo</td>
<td>3.9 &amp; up</td>
<td>3.6 – 3.89</td>
<td>3.3 – 3.59</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

[Reminder: Cleveland-Marshall numbers are 3.7, 3.5, 3.3]

It is not possible to ascertain the percentages of honors granted at Akron, Capital, Case and Toledo without additional information. In comparison to the schools utilizing grade point average as a basis for honors our cut-off points are within the norms although Case and Toledo are significantly more demanding in regard to Summa status and more demanding as to Magna status. Our standards are, however, higher than those of Akron and Capital. In terms of percentages as compared to the three schools utilizing a percentage system, we award the highest percentage of graduation honors. The difference is especially notable in comparison to Dayton and Ohio State.

C. REASONS FOR MOVING TO A PERCENTAGE SYSTEM

With the change in guidelines, and the projected enhancement of graduation grade point averages, it becomes difficult to predict the number of students that will attain given grade levels in future years. With any g.p.a. based system the percentage of students receiving honors varies from year to year. Review of the past two years and the projection for Spring 2007 reveals modest differences in the total percentages, but significant differences in the level of award.

Some key facts are clearer. The number of Summa graduates will reflect a substantial increase and the percentage of honors graduates will significantly exceed current levels. If we are to maintain the integrity of graduation honors we must impose a limit that is independent of grading practices. The only negative effect of this change would be a diminished ability of students to predict their needs to attain a specific honors level. This effect is of relatively little consequence in light of the fact that class rankings, by percentages, are posted each year and students can ascertain where they fall.

The current Academic Regulation yields a high percentage of honors graduates. This suggests that our grade point norms, though consistent with those of other schools (a range that awards Summa cum laude at a high of 3.9 and cum laude at a low of 3.2) are yielding excessive honors awards. This diminishes the value of the awards. Nevertheless, the Committee was reluctant to reduce the percentages to a point below that reflected in recent years. The proposed norms will yield a nominally higher percentage of honors graduates than in the past. The major effect of the change to the suggested percentage is that it will yield significantly less honors graduates than current g.p.a. based norms would permit if the grading guidelines are modified.

This proposal seeks to maintain the integrity of our honors awards in a uniform manner readily understood by our students and potential employers. This recommendation is necessary and proper regardless of the faculty’s decision in regard to letter grade and guideline changes.

4. Raise the Required Grade Point Average for Dean’s List (Academic Regulation 4.1) from 3.3 to 3.4.

As with the level of honors awards, the integrity of this award is diminished when excessive awards are granted. Of the 693 students enrolled this Fall semester (2006), 233 were on the Dean’s List (33.6%). Of those on the list only 29 (12.4%) had a g.p.a. of under 3.4. If the proposed 3.4 system were in effect we would still have had 204 students (29.4%) on the Dean’s List. If the new guidelines are approved and the average g.p.a. increases by just 0.1, a figure lower than 0.14% increase for upper division students and virtually identical to the predicted increase in graduation averages, a significantly higher percentage of students will receive this honor. The increase would most likely be at least equal to the number of current students with a semester g.p.a. between 3.3 and 3.4 i.e., another 29 students. If so, the percentage of Dean’s list students would exceed 45%.

A level in the range of 29-30% appears adequate. Although the reason for setting the level at 3.3 cannot be ascertained with certainty, it is probably more than coincidence that it matched the level required for cum laude honors of 3.3. The recommended standard of 3.4 is likely to be consistent with the predicted grade point levels for upper division students as well as to the potential cut-off for the award of graduation honors.
III. SOME RELATED OBSERVATIONS:

1. Disparity in award of honors:

There is a substantial disparity in regard to graduation honors and Dean’s List when the percentage of awards to full time students is compared to that of part time students. The projected honors awards for the class of 2007 reveals that 4 of 26 part time students (15.3%) will graduate with honors compared to 49 of 136 full time students (36%). Similarly, the Dean’s List data for Fall 2006 shows that only 9 part time students made Dean’s List (1.2% of total students enrolled) while 224 full time students made Dean’s List (32.3% of students enrolled). The disparity is further illustrated by the fact that 9 of 196 part time students (1L – 4L) made the Dean’s List while 224 of 497 full time students earned such honors: 4.5% compared to 45%.

2. Alternatives considered:

The Committee considered recommending that graduation honors be limited to a total of 30% through a scale that would leave the Summa cum laude and Magna cum laude percentages as specified but changing the cum laude percentage to 15%.

The Committee also considered recommending that the grade point average for Dean’s List be raised to 3.5.

In part because these changes were more dramatic and/or too limiting in honors awards than those proposed, it was determined to take the more conservative approach to change set forth in the proposals.
Upper Level Writing Requirement
and Independent Legal Research Standards

The Upper Level Writing Requirement and Independent Legal Research (L860) Standards, as approved by the faculty in November 1997 and amended in May 1999 and supplemented in November 2006 are as follows:

A. Upper Level Writing Requirement

The purpose of the Upper Level Writing Requirement is to have each student undertake at least one rigorous writing experience prior to graduation, in addition to Legal Writing, Research and Advocacy (L504) and the third semester of legal writing. Although the focus of this requirement is writing skills, effective legal writing requires application of the broad spectrum of skills essential to effective lawyering generally. Thus, research, analysis, and organization are important components in the preparation of any quality product of legal writing. For this reason, the goal of the Upper Level Writing Requirement is to require each student to demonstrate his or her ability to apply each of these skills in producing one substantial, cohesive piece of legal writing prior to graduating from law school.

1. Students may satisfy this requirement by completion of any one of the following:
   a. A seminar for which a paper is required;
   b. A specially designated upper level course for which a paper is required or offered for writing credit; or
   c. An appropriate two or three semester-hour Independent Legal Research (L860) project.

2. The Upper Level Writing Requirement is satisfied by the completion of a paper, brief, casenote, or other piece of legal writing that combines writing, research, analytical and organizational skills into one substantial written product under the direction of a faculty supervisor. As a general rule, “faculty supervisor” means full-time tenured or tenure-track faculty member, full-time legal writing professor, or full-time clinical professor.

3. If the written product consists of an Independent Legal Research (L860) project, it must satisfy the page requirements for L860, as listed in Section B below. What constitutes a “substantial” written product in other courses shall be left to the discretion of the instructor, subject to review by the Curriculum Committee at the time the course is submitted for approval, as stipulated in paragraph 5.

4. To complete the Upper Level Writing Requirement, it is assumed that the student will undertake exhaustive library or other approved investigation under the supervision of a faculty member. In order to insure a meaningful one-on-one consultation and critique between the student and instructor, it is strongly urged that the instructor:
   a. Require the student to meet regularly with the faculty sponsor during the course of the project;
b. Require the student doing an Independent Legal Research (L860) project to obtain the faculty sponsor’s written approval of a proposal prior to signing up for credit;
c. Require the student to submit and discuss an outline of the writing project prior to commencing the first draft;
d. Provide written comments concerning submitted drafts and discuss those comments in a meeting with the student;
e. Require the student to submit a detailed research path of one or two pages with the rough draft, indicating the full extent of the student’s research and sources used and showing unproductive investigation as well as that which produces materials bearing on the problem;
f. Require the student to familiarize himself or herself with the concept of plagiarism;
g. Make clear to the student that the Upper Level Writing Requirement is unrelated to, and independent of, any non-curricular requirements, such as those needed for acceptance of the paper by a student journal.

5. Any instructor wishing to designate a course as satisfying the Upper Level Writing Requirement must first obtain authorization from the Curriculum Committee.

6. Faculty have discretion, while awarding a passing grade to a student enrolled in a course or in Independent Legal Research (L860), to determine that nonetheless the student has not satisfied the Upper Level Writing Requirement. Students should be advised of this faculty option.

7. Copies of papers submitted in satisfaction of the Upper Level Writing Requirement shall be retained by the administration in the same manner as final examinations.

B. Independent Legal Research (L860) Standards

1. The minimum number of credit hours of Independent Legal Research (L860) that will satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement is two credit hours.

2. The text page minimum for Independent Legal Research (L860) projects completed to satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement should ordinarily be 12 to 15 double-spaced pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, per credit hour, but in no case less than 10 pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, per credit hour. Faculty may, in their discretion, define a “page” in terms of font size, margins, approximate number of words, etc.

3. Independent Legal Research (L860) may also be taken for one hour of credit, usually requiring a minimum of 12 to 15 double-spaced pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, as described above, but such projects will not satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement.

4. A maximum of three semester hours of Independent Legal Research (L860) credit may be elected to count toward the J.D. or LL.M. degree.
5. No faculty member may sponsor more than six (6) students per academic year, exclusive of the summer term, in Independent Legal Research (L860) without the approval of the Dean or his or her designate.

C. Supplementary Guidelines Regarding Law Review and Journal Notes

In November 2006 the faculty adopted additional guidelines for faculty supervision of Law Review and Journal Notes:

1) supervisory faculty of notes for L860 credit should attempt to co-ordinate their schedule of topic, outline, bibliography and draft submissions with that of the journal for which the note is being written;

2) the law review and the journal should make available to every faculty member each fall a written schedule detailing the stages in which the writing of the note becomes due;

3) each faculty member is requested to be available to supervise up to three notes for L860 credit;

4) a summary of each faculty member’s research interests should be made available to the law review and journals staffs each year.

D. 3-Credit-Hour ULWR Seminars with Reduced Class Time

Faculty members may teach a seminar or upper level course (in which students write a paper to satisfy the ULWR) worth three credit hours but in the time block of a two-credit-hour course. This is allowed under the ABA Standards and Interpretations that permit “regularly scheduled class sessions” to include “in a seminar or other upper-level course other than an independent research course, the minutes allocated for preparation of a substantial paper or project if the time and effort required and anticipated educational benefit are commensurate with the credit awarded.” ABA Interpretation 304-3(d). In light of the ABA Standard and Interpretation, faculty have the option, in a seminar or upper level course other than L860 (Independent Legal Research) in which students write a paper to satisfy the ULWR, of holding class meetings for the hours required for a two-credit-hour course while offering the course for three credit hours. This recognizes the substantial amount of time and effort that students and faculty are expected to spend on papers that satisfy the upper level writing requirement. Faculty may also offer the option to students of taking the seminar or upper level course for two credit hours if a student elects not to write a paper to satisfy the ULWR or for three credit hours if a student elects to write a paper to satisfy the ULWR. This policy is also available online on the Faculty Resources page.
What do I have to do to be licensed as an attorney in Ohio?

To get your license in Ohio after law school you must:

- Have a J.D. degree
- Complete the Character and Fitness Evaluation
- Pass the Ohio Bar Examination
- Pass the MPRE (Multistate Professional Responsibility Examination)

What is the Ohio Bar Examination?

The Ohio Bar Examination is a 2 1/2-day test, given every February and July. It consists of three parts:

1. MBE: 200 Multistate Bar Examination (MBE) multiple-choice questions covering Constitutional Law, Contracts/Sales, Criminal Law and Criminal Procedure, Evidence, Real Property, and Torts;

2. ESSAYS: 12 one-half hour essay questions covering the MBE subjects (see above), Business Associations (Corporations, Agency, and Partnership), Civil Procedure, Commercial Transactions (Commercial Law and Secured Transactions), Legal Ethics, Personal Property, and Wills (Estates and Trusts); and

3. MPTs: Two 90-minute Multistate Performance Test (MPT) consisting of a writing assignment based upon a closed universe of materials.

What do I have to file with the Office of Bar Admissions in order to take the Ohio Bar Examination?

You must file two Applications with the Ohio Supreme Court’s Office of Bar Admissions:

- Step 1: Application to Register as a Candidate for Admission (Character and Fitness Application), and
- Step 2: Application to Take the Bar Examination
Step 1: Application to Register as a Candidate for Admission
(Character and Fitness Application)

All applicants for the Ohio Bar Examination must file an “Application to Register as a Candidate for Admission” (also called the Character and Fitness Application) and complete the character and fitness evaluation process before the applicant is allowed to take the bar examination.

Application: The deadline for filing the “Application to Register as a Candidate for Admission” is NOVEMBER 15, 2012. This is the deadline for all second calendar year law students, full or part time, to timely file the Application. Please start early because the application contains a detailed questionnaire that covers many aspects of your personal, educational, and employment history. It takes time to gather data and complete the forms. Late filing of the Application increases the fees you must pay and delays your evaluation which can affect the date of the first Bar Exam that you are eligible to take. Students who have potential character and fitness issues should address these early in the process and are advised to timely file. The Application is on the Supreme Court of Ohio’s website at:
http://www.supremecourt.ohio.gov/AttySvcs/admissions/application/default.asp

Evaluation: After your Application is filed, the National Conference of Bar Examiners (NCBE) compiles your supporting documents and returns your record to the Supreme Court. You will then be interviewed by members of a local bar association. Your application will be submitted for review to the Board of Commissioners on Character and Fitness at the Supreme Court. The Board meets only twice per year. The answers to the written and oral questions must demonstrate that you possess the requisite character, fitness, and moral qualifications for admission to the practice of law. You cannot sit for the Bar Exam until this evaluation is finalized and you are approved.

Step 2: Application to Take the Bar Examination

A second, separate application, the “Application to Take the Bar Examination,” must be timely filed before an applicant may take the Ohio Bar Examination. For example, the deadline for the July 2013 Bar Examination is APRIL 1, 2013. Please check the Supreme Court’s website for future Bar Examination dates and deadlines. The application is located on the Supreme Court of Ohio’s website at:
http://www.supremecourt.ohio.gov/AttySvcs/admissions/Bar_Exam/default.asp

How can I contact the Bar Admissions Office?

The Supreme Court’s Office of Bar Admissions contact information is:
A list of important dates and current and future deadlines is located at: http://www.supremecourt.ohio.gov/AttySvcs/admissions/calendar.asp

What is the MPRE (Multistate Professional Responsibility Examination)?

The test is a 60 question, two-hour and fifteen-minute, multiple-choice exam administered three times each year generally in March, August and November at test centers across the country. Passage of the MPRE is a prerequisite to admission to the Ohio Bar. This test is administered by National Conference of Bar Examiners (NCBE), not the Ohio Supreme Court. It is not part of the Bar Exam and must be taken separately. Plan to take the MPRE before the Bar Examination. The dates are available at: http://www.ncbex.org/multistate-tests/mpre/mpre-test-dates-and-application-deadlines/

The remaining 2012 date and the 2013 dates are:

Saturday, November 3, 2012
Regular Application Receipt Deadline: September 18, 2012
Late Application Receipt Deadline: October 4, 2012

2013 MPRE Administrations will be April 6, August 17, and November 2. Registration will be available for these administrations beginning in early January 2013.

Law students often take this exam soon after completing a course in professional responsibility. The MPRE tests applicants on the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct and the ABA Code of Judicial Conduct. Ohio applicants must receive a score of 85 or better on the MPRE. You must take and pass the MPRE before being admitted to the practice of law in Ohio, including participation in the swearing-in ceremony.

Application deadlines are about six weeks prior to each test, although applicants may apply up to two weeks after that deadline if they pay an additional fee. Registration can be done online. Registration forms and other helpful information are provided at http://www.ncbex.org/multistate-tests/mpre/.

Take a commercial MPRE preparatory course. Law school professional responsibility courses are not MPRE preparatory courses. Prep courses are offered by bar review companies such as Barbri and other providers. They offer courses free of charge. Practice books are also available through the course providers. The National Conference of Bar Examiners also offers a one-year subscription for an online practice test.
What are My Chances of Passing the Bar Examination?

(1) The single best predictor for bar performance is your law school grade point average (GPA). Our research indicates that the higher your Cleveland-Marshall Law School GPA, the greater your possibility of success on the bar exam. Review of our bar passage data demonstrates that students with a law school GPA of 3.25 and above pass the bar exam at a consistently high rate. Those students with a law school GPA of 2.75 or below pass at a significantly lower rate. However, the data also indicates that students who increase their GPA from their first year to their final year also improve their bar passage rate.

(2) A second predictive factor is your entering LSAT score, although this is less predictive than law school GPA.

(3) Your participation in Cleveland-Marshall’s Six-Point Plan for Bar Success improves your chances of passing the Bar Examination.

What is Cleveland-Marshall’s Six-Point Plan for Bar Success?

1. Enroll in and Complete the Barbri Bar Review Courses
A full-service commercial bar exam preparatory course is essential to help you review and fill gaps in your knowledge to prepare for the MBE, Essay, and MPT portions of the exam. In order to make sure that you are able to afford a bar review course, C|M|LAW has made arrangements to underwrite the cost of Barbri Bar Review for you. As a 2L student, you will pay only $700 for the full BarBri bar preparation course; C|M|LAW will cover the rest. You also will be responsible for the $250 refundable book deposit and the applicable taxes (generally under $40).

Make sure that you are enrolled with Barbri and commit to participating fully in the bar review course.

2. Take the Ohio Bar Exam Strategies and Tactics Course
Ohio Bar Exam Strategies and Tactics (“OBEST”) is a three-credit law school course that provides you with an opportunity to preview some of the substantive law covered on the bar and to become familiar with the modes of testing. This class is a supplement to a commercial bar review class, NOT a substitute for one.

Data analysis conducted for a review of our bar preparation program confirms that students who successfully complete the OBEST course and who also participate in other bar preparation programs have higher passage rates than their non-participating counterparts. The data for the last thirteen bar exams indicate that the passing rate for those who took OBEST is 86% compared to 81% for those who did not take the class. The difference in passing rates is even more pronounced for students with a law school GPA below 3.0—those most likely to benefit from the class: 74% of students with a law school GPA less than 3.0 who took OBEST passed while only 47% of students with similar law school GPAs who did not take OBEST passed the exam—a difference of more than 25 percentage points.

3. Participate in C|M|LAW FREE MPT (Multistate Performance Test) Workshops

After graduation, C|M|LAW offers MPT Workshops. The MPT Workshops meet weekly for six weeks before the February and July bar exams. Each week you will discuss strategies for approaching the MPT and take practice MPTs from past bar exams. You will get feedback on your work including suggestions on how to improve your scores and you will receive copies of the official Point Sheet used by bar graders, and copies of a high-scoring MPT response released by the Ohio Supreme Court. The MPT is worth 13% of the possible points on the bar, more than 75 points. The best preparation for the MPTs is to practice taking them. Participation in the MPT Workshops has been highly correlated with bar exam success. A financial incentive for participants is anticipated.

4. Take Bar Subjects in Law School
In addition to the first-year curriculum and other required courses, such as Constitutional Law, Evidence, and Legal Profession, the following courses will be helpful:
- Corporations
- Commercial Law (covers Sales and Negotiable Instruments)
- Criminal Procedure I (and possibly Criminal Procedure II)
Courses Required in Law School after first-year courses:
- 3rd semester Legal Writing (drafting courses are good practice for the MPT)
- Administrative Law Requirement
- Skills Requirement
- Constitutional Law
- Evidence
- Legal Profession
- Perspective
- Upper Level Writing Requirement

5. Take Six to Eight Weeks Off to Study
We strongly recommend that you take a minimum of six weeks (eight would be preferable) completely off of work to prepare for the rigors of the Ohio Bar Examination. This period requires advance planning and preparation in terms of employment situation, vacation time, family support, and financial matters. You must also address time management issues.

6. Make Adequate Financial Arrangements
Plan ahead for the cost of taking the bar exam. Application fees for the Ohio Bar Exam are more than $500. You will have some cost for the Barbri Bar Review Course. In addition, you will have to pay for three nights at a hotel during the bar exam, food, and transportation expenses. You will also have your living expenses while you study. Time lost from employment may add to these financial burdens. Several loans are available to help cover bar expenses.

- First, review your law school student loans and plan ahead to have funds available for bar expenses.
- Second, some private lenders will lend money based on good credit. A list of bar loan lenders is located on the C-M website at: https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/bar/loans
- Third, the Hebrew Free Loan Association will lend money with co-signers. Contact the organization for further information on requirements and terms. http://www.hflaclev.org/ or 216.378.9042

LEGAL COMMUNITY ACTIVITIES

Ohio American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), Board of Directors member July 2004 to present; President of the Board May 2009 to present. The ACLU Ohio affiliate has over 13,000 members and engages in extensive educational programming, high impact litigation, and lobbying efforts with the goal of animating and defending the civil liberties grounded in the U.S. Constitution.

ACLU, Ohio Affiliate, Cleveland Chapter, June 1996-June 2004. Member of Chapter’s Board of Trustees, Legislative Concerns Committee, and LGBT Working Group.
Supreme Court of Ohio’s Commission on Rules of Practice and Procedure, (formerly the Rules Advisory Committee). Member, January 2003 – December 2008; Chair of Civil Rules Committee, January 2006-December 2008. The Commission is charged with reviewing and making recommendations to the Supreme Court of Ohio on possible changes to Ohio's civil, criminal, juvenile, and appellate rules of court as well as the rules of evidence and traffic rules. Provided leadership to effectuate major revisions to civil rules including the substantial revamping of rules relating to magistrates and rules governing pretrial practice to accommodate electronic discovery.

Advisory Group of the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, Member (Member, 1995-2009); Co-Chair, Committee on Professionalism, (1999 to 2005); Member, Civil Rules Committee (1995-2009). Advisory Group was formed pursuant to congressional mandate to develop and implement a plan to reduce unnecessary cost and delay in civil litigation. The Advisory Group is charged with assisting the court with programs such as electronic filing and technology in the courtroom, and bringing to the court’s attention matters of interest to the bar and community. Provided substantial input to proposed local rules over the years including rules establishing pro bono protocol and issuance of protective orders in civil cases.

Vice-President: Ohio Human Rights Bar Association, 1997-2001. The Ohio Human Rights Bar Association was formed in 1990 to provide education and legal support on issues affecting the lives of lesbians and gay men.

Arbitrator, Cuyahoga County Court of Common Pleas, 1987 – 2000. Heard six to twelve cases per year referred by judges or by consent of parties.

American Bar Association, Litigation and Legal Education Sections. Co-Chair of 1993-94 Subcommittee on Federal Rules Revision for Pretrial Practice and Discovery Committee of Litigation Section; August 1994 to 2000, served as member of the subcommittee.

Ohio CLE Institute. Member of non-profit organization's Young Lawyers Education Committee that plans and produces CLE and other educational programs for new attorneys (1991-1998).
American Inns of Court, Harold Burton Chapter. 1996 – 1998. Selected to join this group of judges, academicians, and attorneys who have earned reputations among their peers as being highly competent and ethical lawyers.

Pro Bono Activity

Legal service. Maintain most pro bono docket providing legal services to individuals and non-profit organizations. The Detention, Confinement, and Incarceration of Pregnant Women for the Purported Benefit of Fetal Health, 16 COLUM. J. GENDER & L. 147-97 (2007). Incarceration and civil commitment and threats thereof are sometimes used by judges to control the behavior of pregnant women who come before them on charges unrelated to their pregnancies. This project looks at these preventive detention cases in light of the undue burden standard articulated by the Supreme Court, as well as other conceptions of privacy, in order to determine whether confinement or detention in this context constitutes a violation of the privacy rights or liberty interests of pregnant women.

Roe’s Legacy: The Non-Consensual Medical Treatment of Pregnant Women and Implications for Female Citizenship, 6 U. PA. J. CONST. L. 723-751 (2004). In this essay, I demonstrate how I’ve come to the conclusion that, part and parcel of Roe’s legacy, is that the compelling state interest language used by the Court in Roe has been used to constrain and derogate women’s citizenship.

The Free Exercise Rights of Pregnant Women Who Refuse Medical Treatment, 69 TENN. L. REV. 563-622 (2002). This article explores the constitutional status of pregnant women’s religiously motivated refusals of medical treatment for the benefit of their fetuses in the face of judicial compulsion. I conclude that even under the current Supreme Court’s restrictive free exercise jurisprudence, pregnant women’s right to refuse medical treatment on religious grounds is protected by the First Amendment. Therefore, court orders compelling such treatment are constitutionally impermissible.

Nurturing in the Service of White Culture: Racial Subordination, Gestational Surrogacy, and the Ideology of Motherhood, 10 TEXAS J. OF WOMEN & THE LAW 83-128 (2001) (lead article). This article examines the ways in which the social devaluation of African-American mothers has led to the reproductive subordination of Black women in the context of gestational surrogacy.

Welfare Reform and the Use of State Power in the Prostitution of Poor Women, 48 CLEVELAND STATE L. REV. 67-77 (2000) (symposium issue). This essay argues that the time limitations of the “new” welfare reform regime, the under education and under employment of poor women, coupled with the popularity of describing prostitution as “work” will institutionalize the State's role as the procurer of women for prostitution.

Maternal-Fetal Conflicts, The Social Construction of Maternal Deviance, and Some Thoughts About Love and Justice, 8 TEXAS J. OF WOMEN & THE LAW 245-259 (1999). This essay examines the way in which social deviance theory is used to describe the cause of maternal-fetal conflicts and used as an excuse for judicial control over women described as being in conflict with their fetuses. Ultimately, this essay asks how the law can facilitate justice for women and their fetuses under difficult, possibly fatal medical circumstances.

Choosing Substance Justice: A Discussion of “Choice,” “Rights” and the New Reproductive Technologies, 11 WISC. WOMEN'S L.J. 431-441 (1997). This article addresses the tension between rights and substantive justice in the dialogue concerning new and emerging reproductive technologies.
Social Contract Theory, Welfare Reform, Race and the Male Sex-Right, 75 OR. L. REV. 1037-1094 (1996). This article analyzes traditional and contemporary social contract theory and its emphasis on the sexual subordination of women, as structurally necessary for the survival of the liberal state. The analysis is continued in a discussion of the “new” social contract of welfare reform, which expands the traditional male sex-right to the state, allowing the state to directly proscribe poor women's sexual and reproductive behavior in return for bare subsistence.

A Feminist Understanding of Sex-Selective Abortion: Solely a Matter of Choice? 10 WISC. WOMEN'S L.J. 161-223 (1995). This article analyzes the problem of the selective abortion of female fetuses in light of philosophical, moral and legal values regarding freedom of choice. It further analyzes the limits of choice as a value when deployed to further denigrate a socially and politically degraded insular group.

Experience

July 2007 to Present – Clinical Professor, Urban Development Law Clinic
September 2003 to June 2007 – Staff Attorney, Urban Development Law Clinic
Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, Cleveland State University, Cleveland, Ohio
As an attorney and member of the clinical faculty, I provide legal services to non-profit organizations engaging in community, real estate and economic development projects. I provide legal advice on a wide range of real estate and general corporate matters including environmental matters, site assembly, zoning, building codes, property management, joint development ventures, grant compliance, due diligence, governance, conflicts of interest, employment matters, complex contractual relationships, tax issues, risk management, various federal and state regulatory requirements and negotiate and draft a variety of documents including corporate resolutions and contracts including commercial leases, construction, purchase, development and operating agreements. I am responsible for teaching a seminar that focuses on real estate and corporate law as well as supervising law students who provide advice to the Clinic’s clients under my supervision.

July 2006 to Present – Assistant Law Director, North Olmsted, Ohio
As a part-time assistant law director, I provide advice on issues relating to real estate, housing and economic development.

April 2000 to September 2003 - General Counsel, Metropolitan Strategy Group, Cleveland, Ohio
As General Counsel, I handled all legal matters affecting the agency including monitoring and enforcing a variety of fair housing/lending laws. I litigated cases in both federal and state courts, oversaw research and investigations seeking to identify barriers in the Northeastern Ohio housing market, and assisted municipalities with drafting ordinances relating to housing.

September 1998 to April 1999 - Vice President, Administration and Finance, Biomec Inc., Cleveland, Ohio
Biomec was a start-up corporation founded in 1998 to transfer and commercialize biomedical technology from academic and research environments. As Vice President of Finance & Administration, I was responsible for all administrative/financial functions, including preparation of financial statements, shareholder relations, implementing/administering employee benefit plans, and grant/contract management/compliance. As in-house counsel for general corporate matters, I provided advice concerning intellectual property, employment issues, federal grants, regulatory matters, due diligence, acquisitions and negotiated and drafted a wide variety of contracts including consulting and nondisclosure agreements, technology development and licensing agreements and supplier contracts.

May 1998 to September 1998 - Staff Attorney, Housing Advocates, Inc., Cleveland, Ohio
As a Staff attorney, I litigated civil rights cases involving housing discrimination in state and federal courts. My responsibilities included investigating complaints of discrimination, drafting motions/pleadings, taking:defending depositions, drafting interrogatories and requests for production of documents and responding to same, developing/recommending litigation strategies, and negotiating settlements.
