TEACHING AND PRACTICE:

Cleveland State University
Cleveland-Marshall College of Law
Cleveland, Ohio 44115 1973 – Present

Attachment A
I joined the faculty in September, 1973 and was awarded tenure in 1976. I assisted in the organization of the school's in-house Legal Clinic which had begun operation the year before as a criminal law (only) clinic, supervised students in the clinic, developed teaching and practice materials, and organized seminars taught in conjunction with our clinical practice.

In addition to my work in the in-house Legal Clinic between 1973 and 1978 and my participation in the Housing and Fair Housing Law Clinics I have taught the other courses listed above at various times since 1973. My seminar in Immigration and Nationality Law was the first of that subject offered by the school, and has attracted not only our own students, but also those of other area law schools, and local practitioners who wish to expand their practice. My Trial/Evidence seminar, co-taught, originally, with Professor David Barnhizer, merged the teachings of the traditional courses in Evidence and Trial Practice to illustrate their interdependence. We found that a preliminary understanding of the trial process and the attorney's perspective in it contribute to greater student understanding of the principles taught in the traditional Evidence course.

With Professor Frederic White I helped to create and currently share supervision of our school's Housing Law Clinic as well as its Fair Housing Law Clinic. Law students work under direct supervision of attorneys from Housing Advocates, Inc., a public interest law firm, in the areas of housing discrimination, including access to public housing, zoning, receivership, insurance redlining, mortgage loan abuses, and other housing areas. Weekly seminars deal with litigational strategies for the office caseload and with the ethical considerations that necessarily arise.

Since 1986 I have experimented with extensive use of in-class quizzing as a pedagogical device. I have found the quizzes to be highly effective not only in maintaining student effort but also in providing me feedback with regard to student problems and in providing a basis for more frequent and fruitful post-class as well as in-class discussion.

In 1980 I received the Cleveland State University Student Government Faculty Appreciation Award. In 1992 I was recipient of the Cleveland-Marshall Law Alumni Association's Wilson G. Stapleton Award for Faculty Excellence. In 2001 I was named "Professor of the Year" by the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Student Bar Association. In 2007 I became the first member of the law faculty to receive the Cleveland State University Distinguished Faculty Teaching Award.
Urban Law Institute - Antioch School of Law
1626 Crescent Place, NW
Washington, D.C. 20036 1972 - 1973

Antioch School of Law opened in September, 1972, as the only fully clinical law school in the nation. As Attorney/Professor I participated, from February through September, 1972, in the planning and development of the school's clinical curriculum, its student orientation program, and in the ongoing practice of the school's teaching law firm component, the Urban Law Institute, an O.E.O.-funded public interest and poverty law firm. From September, 1972 through July, 1973 I continued the tasks above and also taught and supervised law students, paralegal students, and graduate research assistants as part of the school's Lawyering Process course and Legal Clinic. In addition, I developed materials on D.C. Housing Law to be used by our students and lawyers in our clinical work.

Williamsburg Neighborhood Legal Services
Brooklyn, New York 11211 1968 - 1971

An O.E.O.-funded neighborhood legal services program providing counsel and representation to the indigent residents of the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn, New York. As Staff Attorney from 1968 to 1970 and Assistant Attorney in Charge in 1970 to 1971 I represented clients in the various courts and administrative agencies in and around New York City, and assisted in administering the operations of our office, developing materials, and teaching and supervising lawyers, law students, and paraprofessionals. Special focus was placed on the laws and regulations dealing with Unemployment Insurance and Immigration and Nationality Law.

Walker and Walker
New York, New York 10006 1968

A small private law firm specializing in architectural and building-construction law. As sole associate in an office of two partners I assisted in the office's civil litigation practice.

The Legal Aid Society
New York, New York 10007 1965 - 1967

The main branch of a private organization funded both privately and publicly to provide legal assistance to the poor of New York City. As Staff Attorney I engaged in civil litigation in the courts (local, state, federal) and administrative agencies in and around New York City and Nassau County. Special emphasis was placed in deportation proceedings before the Immigration and Naturalization Service, consumer frauds, and landlord and tenant litigation.
Stephen R. Lazarus

United States Army, 42nd Infantry Division,
New York State National Guard 1964 - 1970

In December, 1964 I joined the 242nd Signal Battalion of the 42nd Infantry Division. My active-duty service at Fort Dix, New Jersey in 1965 consisted of basic infantry training and advanced training as a voice-FM radio operator.

LEGAL EXPERIENCE

– CLEVELAND-MARSHALL COLLEGE OF LAW, CLEVELAND STATE UNIVERSITY, Cleveland, Ohio.
  Associate Professor of Law since August 2002.  Assistant Professor, 1996 to 2002.  Visiting Assistant Professor, Fall 1995 to Spring 1996.

  – Teaching Awards:  Ten times I have won the Professor of the Year Award, bestowed by the Student Bar Association for “excellence in teaching.”  I received the award in 1997, 1999, 2000, bestowed by the Cleveland-Marshall Law Alumni Association for excellence in teaching.

  – Committee Work: Current Law School Committees — Teaching (chair); Admissions.  Past Service — Faculty Appointments (chair); Tenure Subcommittee (chair); Honor Code (chair); Faculty Affairs (chair); Curriculum Planning; Strategic Planning Steering; Adjunct Faculty.  University-wide Service — Past Service — Curriculum, Faculty Senate Nominating, Academic Steering, and Professional Leave Advisory Committees.

  – Faculty Advisor: Every year since Fall 1995, I have served as the faculty advisor to multiple students regarding their authorship of scholarly articles.  In January 1998, I served as the faculty advisor to our national moot court team, which, from a field of 208 teams, finished among the top eight in the nation at the National Finals in New York City.  I have also served as the faculty advisor to numerous student organizations, including the Student Democrats, the Student Public Interest Law Organization, the Criminal Law Society, the Sports and Entertainment Law Association, and the Justinian Forum.
– AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION, Cleveland, Ohio.
Ohio Legal Director, May 1991 to August 1995.  Responsible for supervising all ACLU litigation in the State of Ohio; trying selected cases myself; lecturing on constitutional issues at conventions, conferences, Continuing Legal Education seminars, law schools, and college campuses; and explaining law and ACLU policy to the news media.

– CLEVELAND-MARSHALL COLLEGE OF LAW, CLEVELAND STATE UNIVERSITY, Cleveland, Ohio.
Adjunct Professor, August 1993 through July 1995.  Taught a course in Constitutional Law spanning the Fall 1993 and Spring 1994 semesters.  In a 1994 poll of students, I was among three professors cited most often as the school’s best teacher.

– ARTER & HADDEN (now Tucker, Ellis & West), Cleveland, Ohio.

– SMITH & SCHNACKE (now Thompson, Hine & Flory), Dayton, Ohio.
Associate, August 1984 to December 1987; Summer Associate, 1983.

– UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, Cleveland, Ohio.
Intern for Hon.  Alvin I. Krenzler, Northern District of Ohio, May 1982 to August 1982.  Drafted routine orders; analyzed and cite-checked litigants’ briefs; performed legal research; drafted legal memoranda.

– RANGE OF LEGAL EXPERIENCE: Since graduating from law school in 1984, my work has spanned all phases of trial and appellate practice, in both state and federal court.  In my ongoing work for the ACLU, I have been exposed to a broad array of constitutional issues, from abortion to hate speech, flag burning to street sweeps, Biblical creationism to AIDS discrimination.  During my big-firm practice, I handled an even broader range of issues: fraud, breach of contract, and personal injury actions; antitrust, securities, and tender offer litigation; deceptive trade practices, unfair competition, copyright, and tradename disputes; insurance defense and wrongful death; RICO; ERISA; psychiatric malpractice; construction litigation; civil and criminal investigations of government contractors; public utilities; products liability; admiralty; Uniform Commercial Code.

— NOTEWORTHY CASES:

– City of Seven Hills v. Aryan Nations, 76 Ohio St. 3d 304, 667 N.E.2d 942 (1996): victorious representation of Holocaust survivors in this First Amendment challenge to an injunction entered shortly after the return of accused Nazi war criminal John Demjanjuk to the United States; the injunction barred the simultaneous presence on Mr. Demjanjuk’s street of protesters with opposing viewpoints on his readmission to this country; our appeal asserted that counter-demonstration is a unique form of expression that deserves the same degree of First Amendment protection as the right to protest generally.

– City of Cleveland v. Nation of Islam, 922 F. Supp. 56 (N.D. Ohio 1995): victorious representation of Minister Louis Farrakhan and the Nation of Islam in First Amendment controversy; the City of Cleveland refused to grant Minister Farrakhan access to its Convention Center for a “men only” address, but twice granted the Billy Graham Crusade single-gender access to the very same facility; obtained an injunction ordering the City to grant Minister Farrakhan the access he sought.
Northeast Ohio Coalition for the Homeless v. City of Cleveland, 105 F.3d 1107 (6th Cir. 1997): First Amendment controversy in which City of Cleveland sought to discourage the circulation of homeless and Nation of Islam newspapers by requiring each street vendor to pay a fifty-dollar peddler’s license fee as a prerequisite to distributing his/her papers. Obtained a permanent injunction barring enforcement of this licensing scheme against any street vendors of speech-related materials, 885 F. Supp. 1029 (N.D. Ohio 1995). The City appealed to the Sixth Circuit, which reversed, 105 F.3d 1107 (6th Cir. 1997), and the Supreme Court denied certiorari, 522 U.S. 931 (1997).

Clements v. City of Cleveland, No. 1-94-CV-2074 (N.D. Ohio, filed Oct. 4, 1994; settled Feb. 18, 1997): successful representation of homeless individuals who alleged that Cleveland police ordered them to stay away from certain sectors of downtown, and, when they defied those orders, transported them against their will to distant locations and abandoned them. Obtained a halt to this practice by means of settlement.

Capitol Square Review Board v. Pinette, 515 U.S. 753 (1995): successful First Amendment challenge to a State administrator’s decision barring the Ku Klux Klan from erecting a cross in a traditional public forum while permitting other groups to erect signs and religious symbols in the very same forum (on the brief).

State v. Lessin, 67 Ohio St. 3d 487, 620 N.E.2d 72 (1993): wrote amicus brief and, at direct counsel’s invitation, performed oral argument before the Ohio Supreme Court in successful First Amendment challenge to flag-burning prosecution aimed at local leader of Revolutionary Communist Workers Party.

Junger v. Daley, 209 F.3d 481 (6th Cir. 2000): served as third chair in successful First Amendment challenge to federal regulations that criminalized exporting any materials discussing or employing cryptography. Our client, a law school professor, was prevented by these regulations from publishing — or disseminating on the World Wide Web — a book, COMPUTERS AND THE LAW, that offers a discussion and example of cryptography in the context of computer privacy.

Treesh v. Taft, No. C-2-99-624 (S.D. Ohio filed July 6, 1999; settled Sept. 14, 2001): First Amendment challenge to an Ohio prison policy that barred Death Row inmates from uttering their last words in the moments before being executed. This action was successfully settled when Ohio prison officials adopted a new policy — containing language that I negotiated — granting condemned prisoners the right to deliver an uncensored speech, made audible to the assembled witnesses by means of a microphone, from inside the death chamber in their final moments of life. The policy also requires that two members of the news media must be afforded access as witnesses.

Eastwood Mall, Inc. v. Slanco, 68 Ohio St. 3d 221, 626 N.E.2d 59 (1994): invoked Ohio Constitution’s Free Speech Clause in effort to obtain right of access for speech activities in the common areas of privately-owned shopping malls.

Preterm Cleveland v. Voinovich, No. 92CVH01-528, 1992 Ohio Misc. LEXIS 1 (Ohio C.P. May 27, 1992), rev’d, 89 Ohio App. 3d 684, 627 N.E.2d 570 (1993), dismissed, 68 Ohio St. 3d 1420, 624 N.E.2d 194 (1993): Constitutional challenge to an Ohio statute that imposed restrictions on access to abortion; obtained landmark victory in May 1992, persuading trial court that the Ohio Constitution affords greater protection for reproductive freedom than the U.S. Constitution; reversed on appeal.

Glass v. City of Columbus, No. C-2-91-775 (S.D. Ohio 1992): constitutional challenge to inner-city street sweeps by the Columbus Police Department, in which African-American youths were systematically detained and frisked without any individualized suspicion; obtained a halt to this practice by means of settlement.

State v. Wyant, 64 Ohio St. 3d 566, 597 N.E.2d 450 (1992): successful First Amendment challenge to Ohio’s ethnic intimidation statute (amicus brief).

White v. Clinton County Board of Commissioners, 76 Ohio St. 3d 416, 667 N.E.2d 1223 (1996): successful Sunshine Act challenge to county commissioners’ refusal to maintain full and accurate minutes of their deliberations (amicus brief).

Hawley v. City of Cleveland, 24 F.3d 814 (6th Cir. 1994): Establishment Clause challenge to heavy governmental subsidy for Catholic chapel at Cleveland’s municipally-owned airport.

Meyer-Riggins v. City of Dayton, No. C-3-91-435 (S.D. Ohio 1992): By means of Section 1983 action, obtained lucrative settlement for African-American female mistreated by police. The woman used her camcorder to photograph policemen using excessive force in performing an arrest; the officers arrested her “for jaywalking,” confiscated her camcorder, jailed her, and erased the videotape while she was in custody.

– Littleton v. Good Samaritan Hospital, 39 Ohio St. 3d 86, 529 N.E.2d 449 (1988): successful defense of psychiatric malpractice claim; as an associate, formulated the theory and wrote the brief that prompted landmark ruling by Ohio Supreme Court limiting the liability of psychiatrists for torts committed by their patients.

– Mead Corporation v. Tilley, 490 U.S. 714 (1989): successful defense of paper producer in pension litigation; as an associate, formulated the theory and wrote the brief that culminated in a favorable ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court.

– Saudi Shipping & Maritime Services Co. v. M/V Nikaia (N.D. Ohio 1989): as an associate, wrote the briefs and handled oral argument on behalf of Saudi Arabian client in admiralty dispute with Cypriot vessel arising at a Red Sea port.

— PRO BONO LITIGATION:

– AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION, Cleveland, Ohio. Volunteer Attorney, February 1988 to May 1991; August 1995 to present. (Served as the ACLU’s Ohio Legal Director during the intervening four years, May 1991 to August 1995.) Notwithstanding my full-time commitment to law teaching, I remain active as a trial attorney and appellate advocate for the ACLU in First Amendment litigation.

– SOUTHERN UTAH WILDERNESS ALLIANCE, Salt Lake City, Utah. Volunteer Attorney, 1988 to 1992. Performed legal research and drafted legal memoranda to assist this environmental organization in opposing the commercial exploitation of Utah’s wilderness.

— LEGISLATIVE TESTIMONY: Since 1991, I have testified several times before legislative committees of the Ohio General Assembly — on topics ranging from abortion to welfare reform.

— BAR MEMBERSHIPS: I am currently admitted to practice before the United States Supreme Court, the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio, the United States District Court for the Southern District of Ohio, and the Ohio Supreme Court.

PEER REVIEW OF OTHER SCHOLARS

— October 2006: At the request of the Political Science department of Wright State University, I furnished a written evaluation of the scholarship and professional service of an assistant professor who was seeking promotion and tenure.

— In October 2005, I was approached by the editors of LAW & SOCIAL INQUIRY, a scholarly journal published by the American Bar Foundation, to perform a peer review of an article, Last Words, Last Meals, and Last Stands: The Illusion of Agency in the Modern Execution Process. One of the research fellows at the Foundation recommended me as a possible reviewer — probably because of my Last Words article in the ARIZONA STATE LAW JOURNAL. I submitted my evaluation of the article on November 7, 2005.

— OTHER TEACHING EXPERIENCE:

— Every year between 1990 and 1997, I served as the legal advisor to Shaw High School’s mock trial team. During that span, the team thrice won the state championship (1990, 1992, and 1997), placing third two years (1991 and 1996) and fourth another (1995). They garnered second place honors at the national championship in 1990. Every year since 2008, I have served as the legal advisor to Beaumont School’s mock trial team.

Student Works:

Working Papers (in decreasing order of completion):
A Statute by any Other (Non-acronomial) Name Might Smell Less Like S.P.A.M., or, The Congress of the United States Grows Increasingly D.U.M.B. (a survey and analysis of the increasing use of acronomial statute short-names, drawing some not particularly comic Legal Boundaries as Political Economy: A General Theory of the Regulation-Competition Dichotomy (explaining how better administered concept of the legally fictional, but very useful, regulation-competition dichotomy could inform the administration of a number of crucial judicial functions)

Incorporating Systemic Risk Measurement in Financial Sector Merger Review (examining ways that theoretically based risk measurement could inform federal review of financial institution mergers, in a principled and manageable way similar to antitrust pre-merger clearance, a process now largely non-existent)

American History and the Political Economy of Business Collaboration: A Brief Analysis for Legal Theory (a brief legal history of legally recognized collaborations, like corporations, corporate families, and joint ventures, all of which are comparatively recent, and an explanation of the usefulness of that history for current legal theory)

Antitrust, Institutional Personality, and the Presumption of Individualism in American Policy (observing an inner conflict in competition policy between its purportedly whole-hearted commitment to welfare economics, including its focus on allocational efficiency, and the large number of rules that continue to serve individualist values; the conflict lies in the fact that welfare economics is inherently collectivist and incompatible with principled individualism)

1. Standard Teaching Schedule. The standard teaching requirement for legal writing, tenured and tenure track faculty is two courses in the fall semester and two courses in the spring semester, typically totaling 11 to 13 credit hours.

The teaching load for a faculty member who teaches four courses totaling 14 or more credit hours in one academic year (exclusive of summer teaching for which additional compensation is received) may be set, at the discretion of the Dean, at three courses the following year, provided that the three courses total 10 or more credit hours.

Rationale: CSU Personnel Policies and Bylaws, also known as the Greenbook, do not set a standard teaching load for non-bargaining unit tenured or tenure-track or for legal writing professors. Cleveland-Marshall’s two course per semester, 11-13 credit hours standard is consistent with other schools. For example, Toledo, Capital, Ohio Northern and Cincinnati require four courses per year. Case and Ohio State each require three courses a year. Harvard requires 10 hours a year with “generous release time.” Other CSU faculty generally teach 16-24 credit hours per AY.²

² Article 13.1 of the CSU AAUP Collective Bargaining Agreement governs faculty workloads. It provides at §13.1D: “The teaching load for faculty shall range from 8 – 12 credit hours per term or 16 – 24 credit hours per academic year. Faculty reassigned to professional activities other than instructional activities may have their instructional load reduced below these levels. Faculty who are active in productive and assessable scholarship/research/creative activity, and/or University or professional service (including service to the community) shall normally be assigned responsibility for 8 credit hours per term. Faculty may be assigned a higher load if their teaching assignments involve less than full responsibility for a course (e.g., team-teaching assignments, laboratory monitoring, supervision of interns, etc.) or if they concentrate primarily on instructional activities rather than participating significantly in productive and assessable scholarship/research/creative activity, and/or University or professional service (including service to the community). . . . The maximum teaching load for a faculty member shall be 12 credit hours per term.” In general, CSU faculty members who publish regularly teach five courses an AY, but as the above language indicates, faculty may be assigned more or fewer than five courses based on other professional commitments. The average credit hours per course vary among colleges and departments. For example many Business Administration and Civil Engineering courses are 3 credit hours, while Psychology and Biology classes are usually 4 credit hours. Introductory, specialty courses and courses with laboratory components range from 1 to 7 credit hours. On average, however, other CSU colleges offer more 4-credit hour courses than we do.

⁴ Legal Writing and Civil Procedure are 6 hour courses (divided into two, 3-hours courses taught by the same instructor). Property, Torts and Contracts are 5 hours (divided into a 3 hour fall course and 2 hour spring course taught by the same instructor). Evidence, Estates & Trusts, Corporations, Tax I, Tax II, and Land Use Control (for
Due to the wide range of credit hours per course, a professor’s usual four course schedule might exceed the typical credit hour standard of 11-13 credit hours on a regular basis. In other instances a professor may be asked to pick up an additional course due to the unavailability of the faculty member originally scheduled to teach that course. If either scenario results in a professor teaching 14 or more hours in a particular year, exclusive of any credit hours for which additional compensation is received, the dean and the faculty member teaching the overload may negotiate a downward adjustment from the standard four course schedule the following academic year. This adjustment does not require a formal application as provided in §6. The name of any faculty member who negotiates such an adjustment is not included in the list of faculty receiving a course release or variance published by the Dean pursuant to §7.

This standard is not applicable to Cleveland-Marshall clinical professors. Clinicians contract to teach a particular clinical course each year (e.g. Employment Law Clinic, Urban Development Law Clinic) which involves a seminar component and significant work with students, but the contract does not describe these professors’ obligations in terms of credit hours.

2. Variance to Standard Teaching Schedule. A faculty member may request a variance from the standard two-courses per semester teaching schedule. For example, Professor A could apply to teach three courses in the fall semester and one course in the spring semester. Professor B could apply to teach two courses in the fall, one in the spring and one in the summer term, provided that no additional compensation is received for teaching the summer course.

The request for a variance is subject to application process set forth in §7 below and to the limitations in §6 below.

Rationale: This type of schedule flexibility has been individually negotiated by certain faculty members but has never been identified as an option available to all faculty members. It is beneficial to individual professors and to the law school to allow flexibility in scheduling. In addition, this system might encourage more people to teach in the summer.

3. Course Release. A faculty member may apply for a one-semester, one-course release if other substantial professional commitments, such as chairing a major university or law school committee, working on a significant publication, assuming a particularly burdensome teaching load, or a combination of these or similar professional commitments place significant demands on the faculty member’s time and the Dean determines that a course release is in the law school’s best interests. See §7 below for application process.

Rationale: Teaching releases have been awarded in the past for a variety of reasons on an ad hoc basis. There has been no formal application procedure and no clear criteria for such releases.

JD/MUPDD students) are 4 hour courses. Many classes are offered for 3 credit hours, although most third-semester writing classes are 2 credits, and professors often elect to teach seminar courses for two rather than three hours. Some courses including First Amendment and Legal Profession are offered for 3 credits during the AY and for 2 credits in the summer. [Note: The nature of first-year courses has changed upon semesterization of these courses pursuant to curricular reform implemented in 2012.]
While not limiting the discretion of law school administrators to grant or deny course releases in any particular case, this standard is intended to make all faculty aware that course releases are available and to identify some of the situations that have justified past releases. This negotiated process also appears consistent with that used in other CSU colleges governed by the CBA. See FN 2 for details.

In considering whether a “particularly burdensome teaching load” justifies a release, the Dean will generally consider a number of factors. These include the number of students in the professor’s classes, the nature and quantity of feedback mechanisms and assignments the professor incorporates into his or her courses, the level of preparation required for the courses and other relevant factors.

4. Tenure-Track Faculty. Untenured tenure-track faculty who commence their teaching careers at Cleveland-Marshall are usually allowed two course releases prior to the semester in which they are reviewed for tenure. Generally a new faculty member takes the first course release during the first two years and the second release in the year before being reviewed for promotion and tenure. This release time is negotiated by the faculty member and Dean and does not involve the formal application procedure set forth at §7 below. A faculty member should, however, include this request in the teaching preference form submitted by faculty each year.

Untenured lateral hires are not governed by this provision, but may negotiate pre-tenure course release(s) with the Dean.

Rationale: This is a codification of current practice. The release time allows new faculty time to work on teaching and scholarship and generally become acclimated to academia. This standard does not apply to clinical or legal writing faculty. It does not automatically apply to tenure-track lateral hires who are untenured, but those individuals may negotiate with the Dean for one or more course releases as a condition of employment.

5. Professorships. Faculty members who hold a named professorship may apply for a one-course release each academic year in exchange for a reduced financial stipend. The faculty member should include this request in the teaching preference form submitted by faculty each year. The form must be submitted by the identified due date and is not subject to the application process set forth in §7 below. [Note: The Dean’s policy regarding course releases for named professors may have changed. Please check with the Dean.]

Rationale: This is a codification of the professorships standards.

6. Relationship to CSU Professional Leave Policies. Absent extraordinary circumstances, a faculty member may not use any of the mechanisms described above, either alone or in combination, to obtain a complete teaching release for either a fall or spring semester. Such releases must be generally obtained pursuant to university policy and procedures for professional leaves (i.e. sabbaticals) set forth in §8.1.8.A.3 of CSU’s Personnel Policies and Bylaws (i.e. the “Greenbook”).
Rationale: Our obligations as Cleveland-Marshall law professors are not limited to teaching and scholarship. Service to and involvement in the law school and university communities are core components of our professional responsibility throughout the academic year. Faculty with no teaching responsibilities during either the fall or spring may be tempted to disassociate from the law school and university during that semester, thereby unilaterally transforming teaching release time into a professional leave. This transformation arguably usurps university professional leave policies governing “Leaves with Pay” (i.e., sabbaticals) under §8.1.8.A.3, which must be obtained through the application process set forth at §8.1.8 C.

An exception for “extraordinary circumstances” is included to allow reconsideration of the application of this general policy in a compelling case. For example, a professor who receives a Fulbright or similar grant or other unique opportunity for professional development that provides no significant financial remuneration may be able to obtain a release from teaching and perhaps all other law school responsibilities without meeting all the university requirements for a professional leave.

7. Application Process for Course Release or Variance. A faculty member seeking a variance from the usual two-course per semester schedule under §2 or a course release based on substantial professional commitments explained in §3 should submit a written application to the Dean and the Associate Dean in charge of course scheduling. The application is due when the Associate Dean solicits faculty teaching preferences for the upcoming academic year. The application should explain the reason for the request and not exceed two typed pages. If a course release is sought based on substantial professional commitments, the application should also identify and briefly explain all course releases and professional leaves the applicant has received during the proceeding five years.

At the completion of a semester in which a faculty member has received a course release due to substantial professional commitments, the recipient shall submit a brief report to the Dean reporting on the faculty member’s activities during that semester.

Rationale: In past years, some faculty members have submitted formal written applications for course releases while others have secured releases through informal discussions with the Associate Dean in charge of scheduling or the Dean. Some faculty members submitted requests well in advance of the affected semester and some asked to be released long after the course schedule has been finalized. This proposed application process is modeled after that used for summer research and teaching grants. It is designed to impose a minimal burden on the applicant, while also providing timely notice to the Associate Dean and Dean of the faculty member’s request and sufficient information on which to evaluate the request.

The requirement that a faculty member who receives a teaching release because of other substantial professional commitments report on his/her activities at the end of the semester ensure accountability similar to that required when other law school benefits are received, such as an official professional leave or a summer teaching or writing grant. This report is not required of a faculty member who holds a professorship or a faculty member who has obtained a teaching release by redeeming banked hours.

8. Decisions on Applications. The Dean shall make the final decision on all applications for course releases and adjustments to standard teaching schedules based on the recommendation of the Associate Dean in charge of course scheduling. Decisions on course scheduling are not subject to faculty review.

The Dean shall publish a list at the beginning of each AY of faculty members who have been granted a teaching release or variance for that year. The Dean may exercise discretion to omit a faculty member from the list if the release was granted for personal rather than professional reasons.

Rationale: Creating a course schedule that satisfies students, faculty, and our accrediting agencies is a daunting task. The Dean and the Associate Dean in charge of scheduling are in the best position to evaluate the individual requests of faculty members in light of larger institutional concerns such as course coverage and equitable workload distribution.

Moreover, principles of faculty governance empower the faculty to establish and revise the curriculum and approve the content of specific courses. The task of assembling a comprehensive course schedule each academic year does not fall within faculty governance powers, but is relegated to law school administration.

The requirement that the Dean publish a list of faculty members whose applications were approved is intended to increase the transparency of the system. The Dean does not have to provide the rationale for the decision.
MEMORANDUM

TO: C|M|LAW Faculty
FROM: Craig M. Boise, Dean
DATE: February 20, 2012
SUBJECT: Named Professorship Appointment Policy

Over a number of years, benefactors of C|M|LAW have created four named professorships: the James A. Thomas Distinguished Professor of Law; the Leon M. and Gloria Plevin Professor of Law; the Charles R. Emrick Jr.-Calfee Halter & Griswold Professor of Law; and the Joseph C. Hostetler-Baker & Hostetler Chair in Law. The terms of each of these four professorships stipulate that the Dean of the law school is to appoint the faculty member who will fill the professorship. Only the Calfee professorship specifies any particular criteria to be considered in making such appointments.¹

In developing this appointment policy, I have reviewed the history of the professorship appointments and am familiar with the issues that have arisen in connection with them in prior years. I have also considered the faculty’s responses to various questions posed by former dean Geoffrey Mearns about the professorship appointment process and the faculty’s role in that process. In particular, I have reviewed the following documents:

• May 9, 2007 Faculty Affairs Committee memorandum to Geoffrey Mearns (May 9 Memorandum)
• May 21, 2007 Memorandum to the faculty from Geoffrey Mearns (May 21 Memorandum)
• August 11, 2009 memorandum to the faculty from Geoffrey Mearns (August 11 Memorandum)
• February 24, 2010 memorandum to the faculty from Geoffrey Mearns (February 24 Memorandum)

Finally, I have taken into consideration the input I solicited and have received from faculty members since the January 12, 2012 faculty meeting.

¹ The Calfee professorship specifies a preference for a faculty member whose teaching and scholarly interest include corporate, transactional, and entrepreneurial matters—the issues on which Mr. Emrick’s practice focused.
This memorandum describes the process by which I intend to appoint faculty members to fill each of our named professorships as they become vacant. This policy adheres in some respects to the one created by former dean Geoffrey Mearns, and diverges from it in others.\(^2\) I have adopted the policy, however, with careful consideration of the views expressed by the faculty in the documents described above.

PURPOSE OF NAMED PROFESSORSHIPS

Law schools generally use endowed chairs and professorships to attract and retain nationally recognized scholars. At C|M|LAW, this orientation toward scholarship is reflected in the documents creating three of our four named professorships, each of which specifically mentions research support and summer research stipends as part of the benefit to appointees. The Faculty Affairs Committee, in its May 9 Memorandum, reinforced this notion by recommending that, in addition to a cash stipend, faculty members appointed to named professorships receive “a guaranteed summer writing grant, and an annual course release” both of which directly support research and scholarship of the faculty member.

Although for budgetary reasons we are not presently able to hire lateral faculty members who might be attracted by the offer of a named professorship, I believe the scholarly focus of the professorships should apply with respect to prospective appointees who already are C|M|LAW faculty members. Accordingly, I consider the purpose of the named professorships to be as follows:

To recognize faculty members who have made the most substantial contributions to raising C|M|LAW’s national profile through research and scholarship, and to facilitate their continued productivity during the term of the named professorship.

ELIGIBILITY

All full-time faculty members are eligible to be appointed to a named professorship, including those who previously have held named professorships.\(^3\)

APPOINTMENT CRITERIA

Although the purpose of the named professorships is to recognize research and scholarship, it has become axiomatic that the role of every faculty member is three-fold, embodying teaching and service to the institution, as well as scholarly productivity. Thus, the principal criteria I will use in deciding whom to appoint to the named professorships will be:

\(^2\) The most significant changes from prior policy are described in footnotes throughout this memorandum.

\(^3\) Under the prior policy, faculty members who previously had held named professorships were not eligible for appointment. With this change, a highly productive faculty member may hold a named professorship for two consecutive terms, but must be re-nominated and reappointed after the first term in order to do so. Given my desire to broadly reward and facilitate scholarship and the number of potential appointees among our faculty members, however, it is unlikely that I will appoint a faculty member for more than two consecutive terms.
- An established record of scholarly productivity and influence (through law review articles, books, essays, paper presentations, keynote speeches, blogs and other fora).\(^4\)

  However, a nominee must also possess each of the following two criteria in order to be considered for appointment to a named professorship:

- An exemplary record of service to the institution (e.g., committee work at the law school or university levels; involvement in student or alumni activities; support of law school and university initiatives; etc.)

- A sustained commitment to excellence in teaching performance (as reflected in, e.g., student evaluations; use of innovative teaching methods or course materials; etc.)

  To be perfectly clear, scholarly accomplishment will carry the greatest weight, but I will not appoint to a named professorship a faculty member who has not also demonstrated each of the last two listed criteria. In weighing these criteria, I will evaluate each nominated faculty member’s performance over the prior four-year period, with particular attention to scholarly productivity in the immediately preceding two-year period.

APPLICATION PROCESS

Faculty members should submit nominations directly to my assistant or me. Both nominations of faculty colleagues and self-nominations are permitted. Each nomination must include a memorandum, preferably not longer than five pages, along with a current curriculum vita. Additional supporting material that tends to establish any of the three selection criteria may also be submitted with the nomination.

FACULTY COMMENTS

Following receipt of all nominations, I will distribute to the faculty a list of the nominees. I encourage faculty members to provide me with their written comments regarding the merits (or relative merits) of any of the nominees.\(^5\) All such comments should relate to the appointment criteria and must be in writing and signed (or otherwise acknowledged) by the faculty member providing them. Anonymous comments will be discarded. After an appropriate period of time to receive and consider any additional relevant information, I will make a decision and announce that decision to the faculty.

\(^4\) The prior policy gave teaching and scholarship equal weight.

\(^5\) Prior policy provided for a five-person ad hoc faculty committee to evaluate nominations and recommend appointees to the dean. The February 24 Memorandum states that this policy was both time-consuming and labor intensive. The change to the policy permits all faculty members to provide me with their suggestions and thoughts at both the nomination and comment stages of the process. The absence of a formal committee structure streamlines the process while in no way precluding discussion and dialog among faculty members that may influence and inform the input that they provide at either stage of the process.
TERM OF APPOINTMENT AND EXPECTATIONS

The term of an appointment to a named professorship will be three years.6

The purpose of the named professorships is both to reward prior scholarly productivity and to facilitate continued productivity during the term of the named professorships. The benefits received by a faculty member appointed to a named professorship (set forth below) are intended to make it easier for the faculty member to sustain the high level of scholarly productivity that resulted in his or her appointment, and to broaden the level of exposure for the faculty member’s research and writing. Thus, I expect that named professors will be no less productive during the term of their appointments as they were before being appointed, and given the course release that will be part of the appointment, I anticipate that their scholarly productivity will increase.

Additionally, our named professors are in the unique position of being high-profile representatives of C|M|LAW in terms of research and scholarship, and I expect them to be willing to be visible and to make their work visible for the benefit of the law school. This includes being willing to talk to the Visiting Committee, National Advisory Committee and other important law school constituencies about their research, and posting their scholarship on our institutional repository, so that it is broadly accessible and can enhance C|M|LAW’s scholarly reputation.7

BENEFITS OF NAMED PROFESSORSHIPS

The following benefits will be awarded each year to faculty members who are appointed to our named professorships:

• A summer research grant.

• A cash stipend of $10,000.8

6 The February 24 Memorandum suggested that the three-year term of the named professorships be lengthened because of the time-consuming and labor intensive nomination and selection process, and to give the named professors more time to benefit from their appointments. Although I have decided to retain the current three-year term of the professorships, I have expanded eligibility to previous appointees, as noted above.

7 Prior policy did not include the expectations outlined in this paragraph.

8 Under prior policy, a faculty member who was awarded a named professorship received a summer research grant for three years, and either a course release and a $2,500 salary stipend, or no course release and a $10,000 salary stipend. I believe that when crafting incentives like these it is important to evaluate them in light of the purpose of the named professorships. The salary stipend principally rewards past productivity, because it is guaranteed once the faculty member has been appointed to the professorship and thus does not directly encourage the faculty member’s future scholarly productivity. By contrast, both the summer research grant and course release facilitate ongoing scholarly productivity.

Per the May 21 Memorandum, the partial stipend/full stipend alternative was intended to accommodate the law school’s need to ensure adequate course coverage. However, as a practical matter, a faculty member generally is free to choose either the course release and a $2,500 stipend, or the full $10,000 stipend. Particularly in difficult
• A single course release.\(^9\)

• Up to $2,000 in additional travel funds to support presentation of scholarship at high-impact venues.\(^{10}\)

\(^9\) See note 8.

\(^{10}\) The prior policy did not provide support for additional travel that would allow our most productive scholars greater opportunity to present their research to a national audience. However, if our scholarship is indeed capable of improving our U.S. News reputational ranking, it will only do so as our faculty members present their work to faculty members at other law schools who may be part of the pool of U.S. News voters.

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law
Statement on Professional Ethics and Academic Responsibility

The basic functions of the University are the advancement and dissemination of knowledge, the development of critical intelligence in the young, and the education of citizens and professional workers for the society of which the University is a part.

The indispensable condition for the successful discharge of these functions is an atmosphere of intellectual freedom. Unless he or she is free to pursue the quest for knowledge and understanding, wherever it may lead, and to report and discuss the findings, whatever they may be, the University faculty member cannot properly perform his or her work. It is imperative, therefore, that the University maintain an atmosphere of intellectual freedom and that faculty members uphold that freedom by their own actions. To make that freedom operational, it is equally imperative that the University establish democratic mechanisms for meaningful faculty participation in the governance of the institution.

Freedom entails responsibilities. It is incumbent upon the faculty member to accept the responsibilities which are concomitant with the freedom he or she needs and, for the most part, enjoys. Those responsibilities are: (1) to students, (2) to scholarship, (3) to colleagues, (4) to the University, and (5) to the larger community which the University serves.

A) Responsibilities to Students

As teachers, faculty members have the responsibility for creating in the classroom or laboratory and in relations with students a climate that stimulates and encourages the students' endeavors to learn. To the best of their ability, exemplify high scholarly standards, and respect and foster the students' freedom to choose and pursue their own goals.

Regardless of rank or position, the instructor of record is required to file with the department and to provide each student with a course syllabus specifying at a minimum:

a) the instructor's office and phone number
b) the instructor's office hours
c) the basis for determining the student's grade

Adequate supporting documentation regarding student performance should be continually maintained. Any changes to items a) through c) should be provided to the student in writing. Documentation shall be maintained for one semester.

Refusal to fulfill this responsibility after reasonable warnings and an opportunity to rectify the condition is cause for the Dean to recommend that the Chief Academic Officer initiate the procedure for sanctions.

1 Adopted by the faculty on January 17, 2008. This Statement is derived primarily from Cleveland State University’s Greenbook § 8.1.14 (Attachment C to 8.1).
1) The faculty member has the obligation to make clear the objectives of the course or program, to establish requirements, to set standards of achievement, and to evaluate the student's performance.

2) The faculty member has the responsibility to meet classes as scheduled and, when circumstances prevent this, to arrange equivalent alternate instruction.

3) The faculty member has the responsibility to teach courses in a manner that is consistent with the course description and credit published in the catalogue and with the announced objectives of the course.

4) The faculty member owes to the student and the University a fair and impartial evaluation of the student's work. Such evaluation should be consistent with recognized standards and must not be influenced by irrelevancies such as religion, race, sex, or political view, or be based on the student's agreement with the teacher's opinions pertaining to matters of controversy within the discipline.

5) Every student is entitled to the same intellectual freedom that the faculty member enjoys. The faculty member must respect that freedom. He or she may not impose restraints upon the student's search for or consideration of diverse or contrary opinion. More positively, the faculty member has an obligation to protect the student's freedom to learn, especially when that freedom is threatened by repressive or disruptive action.

6) The faculty member has obligations as intellectual guide and counselor to students. He or she has a responsibility to be available to students without undue delay. In advising students, he or she should make every reasonable effort to see that information given to them is as accurate as possible. The progress of students in achieving their academic goals should not be thwarted or unduly retarded because a faculty member has neglected obligations as advisor and counselor.

7) Faculty members should conduct themselves at all times so as to demonstrate respect for the student. They should always respect the confidences deriving from the faculty-student relationship.

8) The faculty member must avoid exploitation of students for personal advantage. For example, in writing and oral presentations, he or she makes due acknowledgement of their contributions to the work.

B) Responsibilities to Scholarship

The faculty member's responsibilities to scholarship derive from the University's commitment to truth and the advancement of knowledge. Furthermore, society has a vital state in maintaining the university as an institution where knowledge can be sought and communicated regardless of its popularity, its political implications, or even its immediate usefulness. The faculty member has an ethical responsibility both to make full appropriate use of that freedom in teaching and research and to guard it from abuse.

More specifically:

1) Faculty members are committed to a lifetime of study. Although no one can know everything, even about a limited subject, they must constantly strive to keep abreast of progress in their field, to develop and improve scholarly and teaching skills, and to devote part of their energies to the extension of knowledge in their area of competence.

2) The faculty member has the responsibility of being unfailingly honest in research and teaching, refraining from deliberate distortion or misrepresentation and taking regular precautions against the common causes of error.

3) In order to maintain or increase their effectiveness as a scholar, faculty members may find it advantageous to assume certain obligations outside the university, such as consulting for government or industry, or holding office in scholarly or professional societies. Such activities are appropriate in so far as they contribute to their development as a scholar in the field, or at the very least, do not interfere with that development. On the other hand, acceptance of such obligations primarily for financial gain, especially when such activities may be incompatible with the faculty member's primary dedication as a scholar cannot be condoned.

C) Responsibilities to Colleagues

As a colleague, the faculty member has obligations that derive from common membership in the community of scholars. He or she respects and defends the free inquiry of associates and avoids interference with their work. In the exchange of criticism and ideas he or she shows due respect for the rights of others to their opinions, refraining from personal vilification. He or she acknowledges contributions of others to the work. When asked to evaluate the professional performance of a colleague, the faculty member strives to be objective.

D) Responsibilities to the Institution

The faculty member's primary responsibility to his or her institution is to seek to realize maximum potential as an effective scholar and teacher. In addition, the faculty member has a responsibility to participate in the day-to-day operation of the University. Among the faculty member's general responsibilities to the University the following may be particularly noted:

1) When acting or speaking as a private person, the faculty member should make clear that the actions and utterances are entirely his or her own and not those of the University.
2) The faculty member must never attempt to exploit his standing within the University for private or personal gain. He or she may, on appropriate occasions, cite his connection with the University, but only for purposes of identification not permitting the impression to prevail that the University in any way sponsors any of his private activities.

3) University facilities, equipment, supplies, etc., must never be used for personal or private business.

4) A faculty member has the duty to ensure that the regulations of the University are designed to achieve the University's goals as well as being in accord with the principles of academic freedom. Recognizing the importance of order within the institution, the faculty member observes the regulations of the University, but in no way abdicates the right to attempt to reform those regulations by any appropriate orderly means.

5) Effective faculty participation in the governance of the University promotes academic freedom and the goals of the institution. Each faculty member should take part in the institution's decision-making processes to the best of his or her ability and should accept a fair share of the faculty's responsibilities for its day-to-day operation.

6) During periods of disturbance or high tension on campus, a faculty member should do everything possible to prevent acts of violence and to reduce tension.

7) A faculty member determines the amount and character of the work and other activities he pursues outside his responsibilities within the University and his primary loyalties to it.

E) Responsibilities to the Community

As a member of the community, the faculty member has the rights and obligations of any citizen. These include the right to organize and join political or other associations, convene and conduct public meetings, and publicize an opinion on political and social issues. However, in exercising these rights, the faculty member must make it clear that he or she does not speak for the University, but simply as an individual. The faculty member does not use the classroom to solicit support for his or her personal views and opinions.

Because academic freedom has traditionally included the faculty member's full freedom as a citizen, most faculty members face no insoluble conflicts between the claims of politics, social action, and conscience, on the one hand, and the claims and expectations of their students, colleagues, and institutions on the other. If such conflicts become acute, and the faculty member's attention to obligations as a citizen and moral agent precludes the fulfillment of substantial academic obligations, he or she cannot escape the responsibility of that choice, but should either request a leave of absence or resign the academic position.

F) Service to the Legal Profession

Faculty members are encouraged to work with the practicing bar and judiciary to improve the profession.

G) Service to the Public

Faculty members are encouraged to engage in pro bono and other public service activities.

H) Annual Evaluation Process

The law school will evaluate, on an annual basis, the extent to which faculty meet the criteria specified in (A)-(G) above through the annual reports that faculty members complete and submit to the Dean. The Dean will review these annual reports and discuss them at individual conferences with each faculty member. Pursuant to ABA Standard 404(a), faculty members need not meet these criteria uniformly.
I. Teaching.

A. Courses taught. Identify the courses you taught during the last two calendar years (i.e., January 1, 2010 through December 31, 2011), including the semester(s) in which each course was taught and whether it was taught in the daytime or the evening.

B. Feedback. Please describe any method of providing feedback other than final examinations.

C. Teaching materials and methodology. Did you make any significant revisions in your teaching materials (syllabus, course handouts, casebook, etc.) or methodology during the past two calendar years? If so, please describe briefly.

D. Independent Study. For the last two calendar years, list the names of students, if any, whom you supervised through Independent Study, the title of the project, and whether this project had been undertaken for the Law Review or the Journal of Law & Health.
E. Teaching Evaluations. I plan to review teaching evaluations before our meeting. I believe that it is important that faculty review them as well. Therefore, I am requesting that you review your teaching evaluations for courses taught during the past two calendar years and include in this section any comments that you have about these evaluations.

F. Technology. Do you use technology in the classroom?

   Yes_____ No_____

   Briefly describe uses.

G. Grades. During the past two calendar years, did you turn in your grades on time for all of your courses? If not, please explain the reason(s) for your failure to comply with our grading deadlines.

II. Scholarship.

A. Publications.

1. Please list any publications completed during the past two calendar years.

2. Please list any ongoing publication projects and expected completion dates.

3. Please list any published articles that are not on SSRN and whether you would like assistance getting them on to SSRN.
B. Scholarly presentations. Please list any scholarly presentations you have given in the past two calendar years and indicate the group, school or conference to which they were given.

C. Other scholarly activities. Please describe any other scholarly activities in the past two calendar years not reported above.

III. Service.

A. College of Law.

1. Identify the committees you have served on during the past two calendar years.

2. Beyond your normal committee work, please describe any unusual service activities engaged in during the past two calendar years.

B. University. Please list all university committees or other activities engaged in during the past year two calendar years. Include any activities with faculty in other colleges.

C. Professional service. Please describe your involvement with any professional organizations, such as AALS, ABA, Ohio Bar Association, local bar associations, CLE activities, practice manuals, etc.
D. Community service. Please describe any community service activities that you were engaged in the past two calendar years. If possible, estimate the time your spent on these activities.

IV. Consulting/Extramural Activities: Please check all that apply for the period January 1, 2011 through December 31, 2011.

___ I have rendered no professional service (consulting, contract work for a public or private firm, or other extramural employment) beyond my University duties.

___ I have rendered professional services (consulting, contract work for a public or private firm, or other extramural employment) beyond my University duties without renumeration.

___ I have rendered professional services (consulting, contract work for a public or private firm, or other extramural employment) beyond my University duties with renumeration.

If you have rendered professional service, please describe below the employer, dates of employment and total number of hours worked per year, per employer (with and without pay).

V. Other activities. Please list any other major activities you have been involved in the past two calendar years that you have not already reported.

VI. Bar Exam Plan. Please describe the steps that you have taken during the past two calendar years to improve our students’ success on the Ohio Bar Exam.
VII. Contributions to building and sustaining the law school community. Please describe any additional contributions you have made over the last two calendar years to building and sustaining the law school community.

Attached please find your student evaluation data for Spring 2012. I have also attached comparative data for Spring 2012 and composite data from Summer 2007 through Spring 2012. Explanations to help you interpret this data follow.

1. Individual Faculty Averages

Each individual question is averaged and your overall average for each course is weighted. Below is an explanation of what it means for an average to be weighted:

Assume Professor Joe taught two classes with 50 enrolled in class A and 6 enrolled in class B. All 50 students in class A give Joe a rating of "5" (total of 50x5=250 points with an average of 5) and all the students in class B give him a rating of "1" (total of 6x1=6 points with an average of 1). The un-weighted average will be the mean of the two class averages. In this case, (5+1)/2=3. For a weighted average, it will count all students ratings (250+6)/(50+6)=4.571. The mean of the 14 items reported is the weighted average.

CSU’s Department of Institutional Research and Analysis provided this analysis. My understanding of what it means for a single course is this: if there are fifty students in the class and five answer Question 1, forty answer Question 2, and other variations for the remaining questions, what you will see as the average for each question will be the total points divided by the number of responders for that question.

2. College Means and Average

In addition to each faculty member’s averages, Marcie Rechner has computed our means on the fourteen individual questions based on the Summer 2007 – Spring 2012 data. These are not weighted. She also computed our overall college weighted average mean – this is the average of all of the individual courses weighted averages (based on six semesters of our own data). We plan to recompute the means and average every semester as we add additional data.

Please let me know if you have questions.

I. Procedures for the Recommendation of Promotion and Tenure

Procedures § 1. Within the College of Law, personnel actions involve the participation of a candidate who applies for promotion, for tenure, or for promotion and tenure, an appropriate College of Law Personnel Action Committee (PAC), a Subcommittee of the PAC, and the Dean. These Procedures describe the role of each of the participants.

The Candidate

Procedures § 2. A faculty member who wishes to be considered for promotion, for tenure, or for promotion and tenure should notify the Dean by May 1 of the calendar year in which the faculty member wishes to be considered.

Procedures § 3. As soon as practicable after a PAC Subcommittee has been established (as described in Procedures § 18) for a particular candidacy, and no later than the beginning of the Fall Semester of the year in which the candidate wishes to be considered, the candidate should submit a dossier (described in Procedures §§ 4 and 5) to the Subcommittee, which contains the material that the candidate thinks is pertinent to the consideration of the application.

Procedures § 4. The dossier should contain at least the following:

(a) a Statement containing

(i) the desired personnel action;

(ii) a description of the candidate’s thoughts and approaches in the areas of teaching, scholarship, and service, with references to any supporting documentation; and

(iii) the candidate’s plans for future development; and

(b) a vitae with at least the following information:

(i) the candidate’s education, including the institutions attended, the degrees awarded, honors received, and law review participation, if any;

(ii) the candidate’s employment experience other than at Cleveland-Marshall;

(iii) the candidate’s professional consulting experience, if any;

(iv) the candidate’s bar membership, if any;

(v) the candidate’s membership and participation in professional and academic associations;

(vi) the candidate’s position on editorial boards of academic or professional publications, or any similar relationship;

(vii) the courses taught by the candidate at Cleveland-Marshall (as well as at other law schools, if relevant), the Committees on which the candidate has served at Cleveland-Marshall and at Cleveland State, and other relevant activities at Cleveland-Marshall or Cleveland State in which the candidate has participated;

(viii) the candidate’s publications;

(ix) any papers presented or other participation by the candidate in scholarly colloquia, conferences, and the like;

(x) the candidate’s participation, if any, as instructor in continuing legal education programs;

(xi) the candidate’s participation in significant litigation, if any;

(xii) the candidate’s legislative testimony, if any;

(xiii) the candidate’s additional public and professional service;

(xiv) the candidate’s work in progress;

(xv) descriptions of any other experience relevant to the candidate’s application; and

(xvi) the candidate’s home mailing address.

Procedures § 5. The dossier material should be presented in one standard three-ring binder, with dividers separating the sections, and an index. The PAC Subcommittee’s analyses of the candidate’s student evaluations, the evaluations of the candidate’s publications by outside evaluators, and the PAC report prepared by the PAC chair will be added to the dossier later by the office of the Dean and the PAC chair.

Procedures § 6. At the same time that the dossier is presented, the candidate should also provide the PAC Subcommittee with:

(a) copies of all publications that the candidate wishes to have considered in connection with the application, with evidence establishing the candidate’s specific contribution with respect to any co-authored publication;

(b) copies of the syllabi of courses taught at Cleveland-Marshall since the later of the candidate’s first teaching at Cleveland-Marshall or the candidate’s last successful application for personnel action here; and

(c) a list of names of highly qualified experts within the candidate’s field outside the College of Law who could provide the PAC with evaluations of the candidate’s publications.
Procedures § 7. If necessary, the candidate may later supplement the submissions described in Procedures §§ 4 and 6 with additional data.

The Personnel Action Committees

Procedures § 8. Recommendations for promotion in rank and for the granting of tenure are made to the Dean on behalf of the College of Law faculty by the appropriate Personnel Action Committee (PAC).

Procedures § 9. There are two PACs.

(a) Subject to subsection (b) below, the PAC for promotion to the rank of full Professor and for the granting of tenure to a full Professor ("the tenured full Professor PAC") shall consist of all full Professors with tenure, and the PAC for all other personnel actions ("the tenured faculty PAC") shall consist of all faculty with tenure.

(b) The following individuals are not members of either PAC:

(i) a faculty member on leave who does not attend a PAC meeting called for the purpose of making a personnel action recommendation or recommendations;

(ii) a faculty member who declares his or her temporary nonmembership in one or both PACs to the Dean’s office or to the PAC Chair before a PAC meeting called for the purpose of making a personnel action recommendation or recommendations;

(iii) a faculty member whose candidacy for promotion or tenure is under consideration by the PAC; and

(iv) the Dean of the College of Law.

(c) The Dean of the College of Law shall serve ex officio on both PACs, enjoying the rights to receive notice and be present at meetings and to fully participate in PAC discussions, but not to vote on PAC matters.

Procedures § 10. The members of the tenured faculty PAC shall elect from among full Professor members a Chair and a Vice-Chair who shall hold the same offices in the tenured full Professor PAC. The Vice-Chair shall perform the Chair’s duties in the absence of the Chair. The election should take place in the Spring Semester. Faculty with administrative positions in the College or University are not eligible for election to these offices.
Procedures § 11. PAC members are responsible for informing themselves with respect to the qualifications of all candidates for personnel action whose applications are before the PAC. PAC members fulfill this responsibility by reading the candidates’ publications, by attending classes taught by the candidates, by observing the candidates’ participation in faculty governance and in College of Law activities, and by considering Reports prepared for the PAC by Subcommittees.

Procedures § 12. PAC meetings for the purpose of making final personnel action recommendations will be scheduled by the PAC Chair and the Dean and will generally be held in early November. The PAC Chair, in his or her discretion, may call interim meetings to consider any matter that the PAC Chair determines should be considered by the PAC prior to the November meeting.

Procedures § 13. At a PAC meeting concerning personnel actions, PAC members should consider their own evaluations of candidates, the Reports of Subcommittees, any authenticated candidate evaluations prepared by other PAC members and distributed directly to the PAC, and the opinions expressed at the meeting by other PAC members.

Procedures § 14. To promote full and candid discussion, PAC meetings to consider personnel actions are confidential; members should not disclose the contents of discussions concerning personnel actions. Votes on recommendations for personnel action at such meetings shall be by secret ballot.

Procedures § 15. A PAC shall make its recommendation with respect to each candidacy by majority vote of all members, whether present or absent at the meeting. The PAC Chair and the Dean shall immediately report the PAC’s recommendation to each candidate.

Procedures § 16. As soon as practicable after a PAC meeting to consider one or more personnel actions, the PAC Chair shall forward to the Dean a separate written statement with respect to each candidate, providing the PAC’s recommendation, the reasons for that recommendation, the number of votes for and against the recommendation, and the number, if any, of members who were absent from the meeting or abstained. The PAC Chair shall make the written statements available to the candidate and to any PAC member who wishes to see them.

Procedures § 17. Any PAC member or members who disagree with the PAC majority’s recommendation may submit a written minority recommendation to the Dean with the reasons for that recommendation, who shall them forward these consistent with the Greenbook.

Subcommittees of the Personnel Action Committees

Procedures § 18. The PAC Chair, in consultation with the Dean, shall appoint a Subcommittee for each candidate composed of three members of the appropriate PAC. Before making appointments, the Chair shall consult with the candidate and the Vice Chair regarding the proposed membership and leadership of each Subcommittee and later with each proposed member of the Subcommittee. One of the members appointed will be designated Subcommittee Chair. At least one member of each Subcommittee shall be a full Professor. Subcommittees shall be appointed as soon as possible after the May deadline for notification and the PAC officer elections. Neither the PAC Chair nor the Vice Chair is eligible for appointment to a candidate Subcommittee.

Procedures § 19. A PAC Subcommittee gathers information from both inside and outside the College of Law with respect to a candidate and coordinates the analysis and sharing of both external and internal evidence and evaluations among PAC members. The Subcommittee acts in this regard on behalf of the PAC Chair.

Procedures § 20. Upon appointment, the Subcommittee shall meet with the candidate to discuss the material submitted with the dossier and the Subcommittee’s work.

Procedures § 21. As soon as possible after meeting with the candidate, the Subcommittee should select outside evaluators to be asked to read and comment on the candidate’s publications. In seeking outside evaluators, the Subcommittee should strive to obtain highly qualified experts who are well known and well respected nationally in their fields. In selecting outside evaluators, the Subcommittee should consider suggestions made by the candidate as well as suggestions made by other highly qualified experts in the field.

Prior to contacting any outside evaluators, the Subcommittee should provide the names of potential evaluators to the candidate and consider any objections raised by the candidate on the basis of the lack of either competence or objectivity of proposed evaluators. The candidate should disclose any relationship with any proposed evaluator. At a minimum, the Subcommittee should attempt to select at least twice as many evaluators as there are publications to be evaluated. However, whether an evaluator should be asked to read all of the publications, or only one or more of them, should be determined by the Subcommittee.

Procedures § 22. In the event of disagreement between the candidate and the Subcommittee regarding the selection of outside evaluators or other concerns, the candidate or a member of the Subcommittee may notify the PAC Chair of the disagreement. The Chair shall then promptly convene a meeting of the candidate, the Subcommittee, the PAC Chair, and the PAC Vice-Chair to facilitate a resolution of the matter. If a resolution cannot be reached through discussion, a majority vote of the PAC Chair, Vice Chair, and members of the Subcommittee will control.

Procedures § 23. The Subcommittee should telephone those selected as evaluators as soon as possible, ideally during the summer, inviting their participation in the process. When an invitation is accepted, a letter (samples attached in Appendix I and Appendix II), as well as the material to be reviewed, should be sent immediately, confirming the arrangement. Letters containing any significant substantive deviations from the samples should be approved by the PAC Chair and shown to the candidate before being sent out.
Procedures § 24. Copies of outside evaluations should be given to the candidate promptly as they are received by the Subcommittee, and the original should be added to the dossier by the Subcommittee.

Procedures § 25. At the start of the Fall Semester, each PAC Subcommittee should notify PAC members of the candidacy that the Subcommittee is overseeing, provide members with copies of all periodical publications proffered by the candidate, and describe how members can gain access to book-length publications. The Subcommittee should provide a schedule of the candidate’s classes and remind PAC members of their responsibility to observe classes. The Subcommittee’s notice to the PAC should also invite submission to the Subcommittee of PAC member evaluations of the candidate’s teaching, scholarship, and service.

Procedures § 26. The Subcommittee should periodically remind PAC members of their responsibilities and solicit their evaluations.

Procedures § 27. A PAC member submitting an authenticated evaluation of either teaching or scholarship may elect whether or not to be identified by the Subcommittee to the rest of the PAC as the author; evaluations submitted anonymously to the Subcommittee or to the PAC will be disregarded. When preparing its Report, the Subcommittee should incorporate PAC member evaluations of the candidate’s teaching, scholarship, and service only if the evaluations are authenticated by the faculty members submitting them.

Procedures § 28. The Subcommittee should obtain from the Dean’s office copies of all student evaluations of the candidate conducted at Cleveland-Marshall since the later of the candidate’s first teaching at Cleveland-Marshall or the candidate’s last successful application for personnel action here. If feasible, the Subcommittee should also obtain student teaching evaluations with respect to law school courses taught elsewhere before joining Cleveland-Marshall, if a candidate has not yet made a successful personnel application here, and the same material for law courses taught as a visitor elsewhere since the later of the candidate’s hiring here or the candidate’s last successful application for personnel action here.

The Subcommittee should analyze all such student evaluations. The goal of the analysis should be to determine the quality of the teaching rather than the popularity of the teacher.

Procedures § 29. In any year in which more than one PAC Subcommittee is established, all Subcommittees or their Chairs should meet with the PAC Chair and agree upon which of the questions on the candidates’ evaluation forms are most relevant to the determination of quality teaching, and Subcommittees should then focus their quantitative analysis on the answers to those questions.
Procedures § 30. The Subcommittee should interview, to the extent possible, the Chairs of all Cleveland-Marshall and University Committees on which the candidate served.

Procedures § 31. A Subcommittee may interview individuals with whom the candidate collaborated on work of a professional or academic organization, seeking evaluations of the candidate’s work.

Procedures § 32. The Subcommittee must submit a written Report to the entire PAC describing in detail the evidence regarding a candidate’s qualifications. The Report should be made available to the PAC, and to the candidate, approximately two weeks before the PAC meeting scheduled to consider the candidate’s application. The candidate may submit a statement to the PAC addressing any matters raised in the Subcommittee Report.

Procedures § 33. The Subcommittee Report should contain at least the following:

(a) a statement of the candidate’s background and, as an attachment, the candidate’s vitae, described in Procedures § 4(b);

(b) a description of the candidate’s approach to teaching and to scholarship based on observation, a personal interview by the Subcommittee with the candidate, course syllabi, and the candidate’s own dossier Statement, which should be attached to the Report;

(c) the Subcommittee’s analysis of student evaluations of the candidate’s teaching, which should be presented in numeric, quantitative form, and also in the form of representative quotations from the evaluations;

(c) a summary of authenticated teaching evaluations, including representative observations and comments;

(e) as attachments, copies of all authenticated PAC member evaluations of the candidate’s teaching that have been submitted to the Subcommittee, preserving the anonymity of those PAC members, if any, who choose not to have their identities disclosed by the Subcommittee;

(f) a detailed summary of outside evaluations of the candidate’s publications;

(g) as attachments, copies of all outside evaluations of the candidate’s publications;

(h) a detailed summary of all authenticated PAC member evaluations of the same publications;

(i) as attachments, copies of all authenticated PAC member evaluations, preserving the anonymity of those PAC members, if any, who choose not to have their identities disclosed by the Subcommittee;

(j) the Subcommittee’s determination regarding the specific contribution made by the candidate to any co-authored publication;

(k) a description of the candidate’s service on Cleveland-Marshall and University committees;

(l) a description of the candidate’s participation in bar association activities, legal scholarly or professional organizations, other scholarly organizations, editorial boards, or similar groups;

(m) a description of the candidate’s public service activities; and

(n) a description of any other information related to the candidacy that has been addressed to the Subcommittee or learned by the Subcommittee during its work.

Procedures § 34. The Subcommittee Report should avoid making evaluative inferences from the evidence compiled in the Report regarding the quality of the candidate’s scholarship, teaching, and service. Rather, the purpose of the Report is to gather into one place the evidence that each member of the PAC should consider in making his or her independent determination of whether the candidate has satisfied the criteria for promotion, the award of tenure, or both. The Subcommittee Report should not contain a recommendation regarding whether the candidate has satisfied the criteria.

Procedures § 35. In cooperation with the office of the Dean, the Subcommittee Chair should add to the candidate’s dossier the numeric quantitative analysis of the student evaluations.

The Dean

Procedures § 36. The Dean should consider PAC recommendations in preparing his or her separate decanal recommendation to the Provost for each candidate. The Dean’s recommendation or recommendations to the Provost should be made by November 25 and should be accompanied by the PAC Chair’s written statement of recommendation concerning each candidate, as well as any written minority recommendation.

Procedures § 37. The office of the Dean oversees the final compilation of the dossier, adding to what the candidate submits (see Procedures §§ 3, 4, and 5) the material received at the Dean’s office from the candidate’s PAC Subcommittee (see Procedures §§ 5, 24, and 35).

Procedures § 38. Promotion and the award of tenure become effective at the time designated by the University Board of Trustees, normally the beginning of the academic year following the academic year in which the faculty member’s candidacy was considered by the PAC and the Dean.

II. Criteria for the Recommendation of Promotion and Tenure

Criteria § 1. Faculty may apply for promotion, for tenure, or for promotion and tenure in any year of service. However, an application for personnel action which requests that consideration of the application by the PAC, the Dean, the Provost and the Trustees occur in the first, second or third year of the faculty member’s service in rank will be approved only under unusual circumstances, including the presentation of exceptionally powerful evidence of eligibility for the promotion or the award of tenure.

Criteria § 2. The Dean and the PAC will consider four factors, which are described in more detail below, in making promotion and tenure decisions. The factors are

(a) the candidate’s teaching,
(b) the candidate’s scholarship,
(c) the candidate’s participation in faculty governance within the College of Law and the University, and
(d) the candidate’s service to the public and to the profession.

Criteria § 3. Promotion to the rank of Associate Professor with tenure, and the award of tenure to a faculty member already holding the rank of Associate Professor, are both based on evidence that the candidate

(a) is a fully competent teacher; and
(b) has demonstrated significant scholarship.

Criteria § 4. Except as provided in Criteria § 11, promotion to the rank of full Professor, and the granting of tenure to a faculty member already holding the rank of full Professor, are both based on evidence that the candidate has

(a) a record of sustained excellence in teaching;
(b) an outstanding record as a scholar; and
(c) a reputation in the discipline beyond the local community.

Criteria § 5. In addition, all candidates for personnel action must demonstrate that they have fulfilled their faculty governance and public and professional service obligations.
Criteria § 6. Whether a candidate has become “a fully competent teacher,” as that term is used in Criteria § 3, or has demonstrated a “sustained excellence in teaching,” as that term is used in Criteria § 4, can be demonstrated in a variety of ways, but the following factors should generally be taken into consideration:

(a) comprehensive knowledge of the subject matter and an appreciation of its relationship to other fields, including current developments in both application and theory;

(b) thoughtful preparation and organization of individual class sessions and overall course coverage content;

(c) ability to stimulate intellectual curiosity in students and communicate knowledge to students as demonstrated by student participation in class and student involvement in independent learning;

(d) reasonable and fair evaluation of student work by examinations, papers, and other written and oral work appropriate to the subject matter;

(e) the extent and quality of individual mentoring with respect to written assignments, simulations, and clinical exercises;

(f) development of innovative methodology, including the use of technology in the classroom, if appropriate;

(g) extension of the teaching enterprise through the use of class listserves;

(h) use of clinical, individual, or small group programs;

(i) publications about teaching and teaching improvement;

(j) publication of textbooks, casebooks, or student treatises;

(k) development of unpublished teaching materials; and

(l) development of continuing legal education materials.

To a lesser degree, consideration may also be given to:

(m) accessibility to students outside the classroom;

(n) participation in teaching workshops and conferences; and

(o) enthusiasm about the subject and the enterprise.
Criteria § 7. “Scholarship,” as used in these Criteria, means published writing based on original research. It includes the presentation of new insights and the criticism of existing literature. Its quality depends on its clarity and the grace of presentation; the importance of the subject matter chosen for study; the persuasiveness with which points are argued; the thoroughness with which the topic is explored; the significance of its conclusions; its impact on subsequent scholarship; and the contribution it makes to our understanding of law. Scholarship consists of

(a) articles and substantial book review essays published in law reviews;

(b) law-related articles published in scholarly journals of other disciplines;

(c) a Uniform Law, Model Statute, Restatement, or American Law Institute Reporter’s Study or equivalent work of which the candidate was a principal author;

(d) books or monographs;

(e) treatises; and

(f) textbooks and casebooks if they contain significant original text that would otherwise satisfy the language contained in the first paragraph of this Criterion.

For promotion to Associate Professor or the award of tenure, only scholarship, as defined in (a) through (f) above, will be circulated for outside review and considered in determining whether the candidate has satisfied the minimum requirements for consideration of the promotion or award of tenure. For promotion to full Professor, only scholarship, as defined in (a) through (f) above, that has not been previously considered at Cleveland-Marshall in any successful personnel action will be circulated for outside review. In all cases, the candidate may also submit any of the following to be considered by PAC members:

(g) unpublished scholarly papers presented at conferences;

(h) significant appellate briefs submitted in litigation; and

(i) statutory text, not described in (c), drafted for any governmental entity.

Criteria § 8. “Significant scholarship,” as used in Criteria § 3, encompasses the production of a quantity of scholarship evidencing a real contribution to the candidate’s field, as well as the likelihood of continued contribution to scholarship, and will consist of the publication or formal acceptance for publication of no less than two works authored solely by the candidate listed in Criteria § 7(a) through (c) or one work authored solely by the candidate listed in Criteria § 7(d), (e) and (f). With respect to candidates who have the standard, six-year, tenure-track probation period, all such works must have been published or formally accepted for publication during the probation period. With respect to candidates who do not have the standard, six-year, tenure track probation period, all such work need not have been published or formally accepted for publication during the probation period.

Criteria § 9. A person who has an “outstanding record as a scholar,” as used in Criteria § 4, has produced a canon of work, such as several law review articles, or a treatise, or monograph, which establish the candidate as a well-recognized expert in the field.

Criteria § 10. “Public and professional service obligations,” as used in Criteria § 5, encompasses:

(a) public service, which means

(i) engaging in activities that enhance public understanding of the law or of issues in related social, economic, or political fields; and

(ii) providing professional services or making other contributions to the work of governmental, educational, charitable, or public interest entities, or to others that serve the interests of significant segments of the public; and

(b) professional service, which means

(i) service to the profession of law; and

(ii) service to organizations furthering the work of legal education.

Activities under (a)(i) include publishing books, magazine articles and op-ed pieces for lay audiences, giving talks to faculty or students at other colleges and universities, lecturing to public groups, and the like. Activities under (a)(ii) include doing pro bono work of any sort, testifying before public bodies, consulting with public agencies, writing amicus briefs, and making significant contributions to public service organizations.

Activities under (b)(i) include participating in local, state, and national bar organizations and similar law-related groups, giving papers at legal as well as interdisciplinary conferences, offering courses in Continuing Legal Education, and making analogous contributions. Activities under (b)(ii) include service to organizations furthering the enterprise of legal education, such as significantly contributing to the work of the American Association of Law Schools, the ABA Section on Legal Education and Admissions to the Bar, the Society of American Law Teachers, the American Association of Law Libraries, the Council on Legal Educational Opportunity, and the like.

Criteria § 11. In the case of a Dean of the College of Law, the tenured faculty PAC may recommend award of tenure, and the tenured full Professor PAC may recommend award of the rank of full Professor, based on the same criteria used in recommending the individual as Dean.

Criteria § 12. A Librarian is a faculty member who has had more contract responsibility for law library administration than for instruction and research during the period between the later of

(i) the faculty member’s first teaching at Cleveland-Marshall or

(ii) the faculty member’s last successful application for personnel action here and the faculty member’s latest application for personnel action.

The promotion and tenure criteria for Librarians are the same as for other faculty members, except as follows:

(a) relevant teaching may also include courses on legal research and writing, advanced legal research, electronic legal research, and other areas germane to librarianship;

(b) proportionally less time may be devoted to teaching by a Librarian than by other faculty members;

(c) “significant scholarship” may include publication of either two scholarly articles in a scholarly library publication, or one such article and another of a more practical library orientation published in a practice-oriented library publication; “an outstanding record as a scholar” may also be evidenced by publication of work of the same character; and

(d) Librarians must also demonstrate professional competence by effective application of library science in carrying out assigned managerial and administrative responsibilities in conformity with the law library standards of the American Bar Association, the Association of American Law Schools, and the American Association of Law Libraries.

Dear _____________:

I am delighted that you have agreed to read Professor __________’s article, ____________________________________________________________________, which I have enclosed, in connection with [his/her] request to be promoted to Associate Professor of Law with tenure. As I indicated in our telephone conversation, I am chair of a subcommittee charged with preparing a report for the eligible voting members of the faculty regarding Professor ____________’s credentials.

Our faculty is interested in learning your assessment of the quality and impact of Professor ____________’s scholarship. I would like your evaluation of the work’s clarity and grace of presentation; the importance of the subject matter chosen for study; the persuasiveness with which points are argued; the thoroughness with which the topic is explored; the importance of its conclusions; and the contribution it makes to our understanding of law. What is its potential for advancing theory, research, or practice? Does it demonstrate effective written communication of original research in a given field, including the presentation of new knowledge or criticism of existing literature? Does it evidence careful study, thoroughness, creativity, depth, precision, and balance? In sum, what is your view regarding the quality of the work as an example of scholarship, including its quality in relation to other scholarship in the field?

I specifically ask that you not include a recommendation regarding whether Professor _______ has met the criteria for promotion and tenure at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, your own institution, or any other institution.

You should also be advised that your evaluation will become part of the candidate’s file and thus made available to the candidate and to all other persons concerned in the University promotion and tenure process. Confidentiality cannot be guaranteed. Would you also please describe any personal or professional contact that you may have had with Professor _______ in the past.

I have also enclosed a copy of Professor _________’s resume, as well as other articles that are being reviewed in connection with [his/her] promotion petition. The piece that I have asked you to review is only one part of [his/her] scholarly output. If you would like to read these additional articles and wish to speak to their contribution, I would welcome those comments as well. I therefore thought that I would make them easily available to you.

In order that our faculty may meet University deadlines governing our internal review process, I ask that you forward your comments in a letter addressed to me no later than __________if at all possible. I would also appreciate it if you would enclose a copy of your own resume as well.

Many thanks for your assistance. Should you have any questions, please do not hesitate to call me at (216) 687-XXXX or contact me by e-mail at yyyy.zzzz@law.csuohio.edu.

Very truly yours,

Procedures for Mentoring and Evaluation of Faculty in the Years Preceding Application for Personnel Action

These Procedures for the Mentoring and Evaluation of Faculty describe the roles of the Dean and Law College Personnel Action Committee members in the years preceding the year in which a faculty member applies for promotion, for tenure, or for promotion and tenure (“personnel actions”). These Procedures supplement the Procedures and Criteria for Promotion and Tenure in the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law which govern promotion and tenure matters once a faculty member applies for personnel action.

PROCEDURES FOR UNTENURED TENURE-TRACK FACULTY

Notice, Appointment of a Mentor, and Appointment of Two Teaching Evaluators Procedures § 101. The Dean shall give every new untenured tenure-track faculty member a copy of the Faculty Personnel Policies, Sections 8.1.1 to 8.1.5 in the Cleveland State University Handbook (the Greenbook), together with the Law College “Procedures and Criteria for Promotion and Tenure in the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law as amended and these Procedures for Mentoring and Evaluation.

Mentors

Procedures § 102. During such faculty member’s first months at the Law College, the Personnel Action Committee (PAC) Chair, in consultation with the faculty member and the Dean, shall appoint a tenured faculty member of the same or higher rank as Mentor for the new faculty member. Thereafter, a Mentor shall be appointed or reappointed by the PAC Chair yearly until the new faculty member applies for personnel action.

Procedures § 103. The Mentor and the faculty member shall meet at a mutually convenient time at least once during each academic year. At such meeting or meetings the Mentor should do his or her best to answer all the questions that the new faculty member may pose regarding teaching, scholarship and service, and also consider offering suggestions regarding those and other relevant topics.

Procedures § 104. Starting in the faculty member’s second year, the Mentor shall visit one or more of the new faculty member’s classes and provide guidance.

Procedures § 105. The Mentor and the faculty member shall also continue to discuss the faculty member’s teaching, research and writing, (current and planned for the future,) and service obligations.

Procedures § 106. The Mentor shall encourage the faculty member to seek critiques of work in progress. Critiques might be sought from colleagues here, from relevant experts elsewhere, or from both such sources.
Procedures § 107. A new faculty member may request the PAC Chair to seek external review of published materials selected by the faculty member. Ordinarily, the PAC Chair shall honor that request. The external reviewers are to be chosen by the PAC Chair or his or her designee, in consultation with the faculty member. Such external evaluations of published work, when they are received by the PAC Chair, shall be forwarded by the Chair to the Dean who shall be their custodian until the faculty member applies for personnel action whereupon they shall be added to the faculty member’s dossier.

Procedures § 108. In the faculty member’s third year, (in the second year if the faculty member is an Associate or full Professor), the Mentor shall be joined by the Chair or Vice Chair of the PAC in the Mentor’s annual meeting or meetings with the new faculty member, in order to provide further guidance. New faculty members are encouraged to consult with other tenured faculty in addition to the Mentor if they care to do so. New faculty should also bring any concerns regarding their situations to the Dean, or to the PAC Chair or Vice Chair.

Teaching Evaluators

Procedures § 109. Beginning in a new faculty member’s third year, (beginning in the second year in the case of an untenured Associate Professor), the PAC chair, in consultation with the Dean and the faculty member, shall appoint each year prior to the year in which a request for personnel action is considered two tenured faculty members to serve as Evaluators of the candidate’s teaching. One Evaluator, typically, would evaluate the faculty member’s teaching in the Fall semester, and the other Evaluator would evaluate Spring classes. Evaluation shall be based upon observing at least two classes for each course.

Procedures § 110. Teaching Evaluators shall consult with the faculty member to determine appropriate times for class visits and to receive any relevant materials and information. Written teaching evaluations shall be prepared by each Evaluator and distributed to the faculty member evaluated, to the PAC Chair and to the Dean. Other faculty can obtain copies of evaluations upon request to the PAC Chair or the Dean. The PAC Chair shall monitor the submission of evaluations and remind evaluators of their responsibilities as appropriate. The Dean shall keep copies of all such evaluations in a separate section of the faculty member’s personnel file as maintained in the office of the Dean. The faculty member may submit comments or materials in response to teaching evaluations and they shall be kept by the Dean with the evaluations.

Procedures § 111. No evaluations, representations or statements of any kind by Mentors, teaching Evaluators, or others shall be construed as determinations that the standards for any personnel action have been met. There is to be no commitment made by Mentors, the teaching Evaluators, or any other member of the PAC regarding the sufficiency of the faculty member’s credentials for any personnel action. Faculty should understand as well that the PAC and the Dean will not be bound by any assurance, express or implied, conditional or otherwise, that maybe thought to have been given.
PROCEDURES FOR POST-TENURE TEACHING EVALUATORS

Procedures § 112. A tenured Associate Professor who anticipates applying for promotion to the rank of Professor within the next three-years shall so inform the PAC Chair. The PAC Chair shall then appoint in consultation with the Dean and the Associate Professor, two tenured, full Professors as Evaluators of the Associate Professor’s teaching. Appointments or reappointments shall be made each year thereafter prior to the year in which the Associate Professor’s application for promotion is considered. One Evaluator might assess the Professor’s Fall classes, and the other Evaluator, the Spring courses. There should be at least two classroom observations for each course. Each teaching evaluator shall consult with the candidate to determine the appropriate times for class visits and to receive relevant materials and information. Written teaching evaluations are to be prepared by each Evaluator and distributed to the Associate Professor evaluated, to the PAC Chair and to the Dean. Other tenured full Professors can obtain copies of evaluations upon request to the PAC Chair or the Dean. The PAC Chair shall monitor the submission of evaluations and remind evaluators of their responsibilities as appropriate. The Dean shall keep copies of all such evaluations in a separate section of the Associate Professor’s personnel file as maintained in the office of the Dean. The Associate Professor may submit comments or materials in response to teaching evaluations and they shall be kept by the Dean with the evaluations.
Criteria and Procedures for the Appointment of Tenured Faculty

Criteria §201. The criteria for appointment to the faculty as Associate Professor with tenure or as full Professor with tenure are the same as the criteria for the promotion of faculty to the same respective ranks.

Procedures §201. These Procedures shall apply when the Faculty Appointments Committee has decided to recommend a candidate for appointment to the Faculty, and has further determined, with the concurrence of the Dean, that the candidate may meet the criteria for appointment with tenure and that appointment with tenure may be appropriate.

Procedures §202. The Faculty Appointments Committee shall supplement its oral report to the Faculty recommending such a candidate’s appointment to the Faculty with a Written Report addressed to the relevant PAC which states the candidate’s qualifications for a grant of tenure and the evidence relied on in determining those qualifications.

Procedures §203. In preparing its Written Report, the Committee shall investigate the candidate’s teaching competence, scholarly accomplishments, and service experience.

Procedures §204. For all candidates, investigation shall include interviews of the candidate’s present and, if feasible, past colleagues, and others, in or out of academia, with whom the candidate has been associated, including interviews of individuals not listed as references by the candidate.

Procedures §205. For candidates who have been granted tenure at another law school, such investigation shall include, to the extent feasible, examination of the written evidence considered when tenure was granted, including written evaluations of published work, of teaching and of service.

Procedures §206. Investigation of the candidate’s teaching, for candidates with prior teaching experience, shall include to the extent feasible an examination of the candidate’s teaching evaluations at other law schools.

Procedures §207. For candidates without prior teaching experience and for experienced candidates whose teaching evaluations are unavailable, the Committee shall seek other evidence with respect to teaching competence such as interviews with the candidate or the candidate’s colleagues, the candidate’s receipt of an award or awards for teaching, or other support of a verifiable nature.

Procedures §208. Investigation of scholarly accomplishments shall include, ideally, the reading of all the candidate’s published work, or, at the least, a representative body of that work, by Faculty Appointments Committee members or by relevant PAC members designated by the Committee.
Procedures §209. In addition, to the extent feasible, investigation of scholarly accomplishments shall include interviews with experts here or elsewhere who are familiar with candidate’s work, and, again if feasible, written evaluations of some of that work by such experts.

Procedures §210. Investigation of service experience shall include interviews of others with whom such service was performed.

Procedures §211. The Written Report shall be presented to the appropriate PAC soon enough to enable a timely offer of appointment with tenure to be made, if the PAC recommends such an offer. What is “feasible” is to be determined, in part, in light of the time available to the Faculty Appointments Committee to accomplish its investigation.

Memorandum

January 26, 2009

TO: Full-Time Faculty, consisting of Permanent Tenured & Tenure-Track Faculty and Legal Research and Writing Faculty

FROM: The Teaching Committee (Janice Aitkin, Michael Borden, Patricia Falk, Brian Glassman, Michelle Lapp, Chris Sagers)

RE: Summer Teaching Enhancement Grants

Facility members interested in submitting a Summer Teaching Enhancement grant proposal for the summer of 2009 should submit an application to Chris Sagers by 5 p.m. Monday, February 23rd, 2009, either in hard copy or by email. The amount of a Teaching Enhancement Grant will be the same as C-M Summer Research Grants.

The purpose of Summer Teaching Enhancement Grants is to encourage both excellence and innovation in teaching. These are related concepts yet not necessarily synonymous. Possible differences between grants that focus on “innovation” and those that further “excellence” in teaching are described below. Innovation means something we have not done before. Thus, it is difficult to determine in the abstract what types of innovations faculty might appropriately propose. As a general guideline, summer teaching grants will not be available for the work regularly expected of law professors. For example, grants are not available for standard preparation for a course new to the instructor.

1 Persons eligible to apply for grants are all full-time faculty members whose primary duties include teaching and who are not otherwise under contract with the law school during the summer. Legal research and writing professors are eligible. Persons who are not eligible include (1) administrators, librarians, and clinicians on 12 month contracts; (2) faculty under contract to teach one or more standard courses during the summer; (3) and faculty who have summer research grants. Should a member of the Committee apply for a grant, that member will be ineligible to consider approval of grant applications. The Dean may substitute another faculty member for the sole purpose of determining approvals of grant applications.

An applicant awarded both a Summer Research Grant and a Teaching Grant will have one week to decide which grant to accept in order to permit the committee whose grant is not selected adequate time to decide whether to award a grant to another applicant. If the applicant does not select a grant within that time, the chairs of the Teaching Committee and the Summer Research Grant Committee shall meet and agree on which grant to withdraw.

Below follows detailed information regarding submission of a Summer Teaching Enhancement Grant proposal.

INSTRUCTIONS AND CRITERIA FOR TEACHING ENHANCEMENT GRANTS

Applications should propose projects that explicitly address the law school’s teaching and learning priorities, and/or the University’s teaching and learning priorities, including but not limited to one or more of the following:

- improvement to the practice and theory of teaching in general
- specific improvement to a particular course or courses
- development of a course not currently offered
- development of a new teaching methodology
- development of an interdisciplinary course
- improvements which make a positive impact on bar passage outcomes
- internationalization of an existing course
- increasing the availability of online resources in a course or courses
- incorporating newer or newly available technologies
- provide opportunities to involve practicing attorneys whose presence will enrich the students’ learning experience

Applications should address the following requirements:

- Applications will include a clear description of the proposed project and the outcomes in terms of one or more of the priorities above, or other priorities identified by the applicant.
- Proposed projects will be substantially completed within 12 months of notice of funding.
- Applicants will undertake to produce either a publishable article detailing the by-products of the research, or a demonstration project. A demonstration project may consist of, but is not limited to a webpage for open access through project home pages established on the law school’s website, a broadly disseminated annotated bibliography of materials relevant to the course improvements, or an electronic discussion forum of the project.
- Whether applicants undertake to research and write an article or to prepare a demonstration project, applicants must make a faculty presentation describing the work. Applicants will indicate the proposed date (an approximation) for the faculty presentation in their proposals.
STANDARDS for judging the merit of proposals

The Teaching Committee judges the merits of the applications for summer teaching enhancement grants by considering both the overall quality of the applicant’s proposed project and the extent to which the applicant’s proposal meets the criteria stated above. The Teaching Committee may also consider other factors such as the number of students impacted by the project, whether the project will result in long-term improvements to teaching and the extent to which the project helps to promote collaboration between or among law school faculty teaching in the same or in different substantive areas.

APPLICATION FOR SUMMER TEACHING ENHANCEMENT GRANT

1. Name
2. Title of Project
3. Indicate type pf project, referencing one or more of the law school’s teaching and learning priorities, and/or the University’s teaching and learning priorities, or priorities identified by the applicant.
4. How many students will be affected? At what level? Over what period of time?
5. Will your project promote collaboration between or among law school faculty?
6. How will you evaluate the success of this project? (Please check and briefly explain)
   - Student Evaluation
   - Student Questionnaire
   - Assessment Techniques
   - Other (explain)
7. Will your project result in long term improvements to your teaching? Briefly explain.
8. Proposed date for faculty presentation:
9. Detailed project description: Please attach no more than 2 double-spaced, typed pages. Be sure to (a) write for highly educated reviewers who are not necessarily experts in your teaching area; (b) address the requirements articulated in the section entitled “Instructions and Criteria for Teaching Enhancement Grants” on pages two and three.

Description of the 2010-11 Dean Search
Submitted by Alan Weinstein, Vice Chair of the Dean Search Committee

The Law School conducted a successful search for a new Dean in the academic year 2010-2011. The 12-person committee included the Chair, appointed by the Provost, seven faculty members elected by the entire faculty, three community representatives, one staff member and one student. Bette Bonder, Dean of the College of Science and Health Professions served as Chair of the Committee and Professor Alan Weinstein as Vice-Chair. Assistance with the search was provided by R. William Funk & Associates.

The Committee’s first task, after familiarizing members with the ABA and AALS standards relevant to a dean search, was to draft a position description. The Committee began that task by holding a faculty/staff Brown Bag discussion on September 14, 2010 to share information on the search process and to discuss the qualities it was looking for in our new Dean. Prior to that discussion, the Committee distributed the minimum and preferred qualifications required for our last Dean search in 2004. There were 31 people in attendance at the Brown Bag: 21 faculty members and 10 staff members. Notes from the Brown Bag, and e-mails received before and after, were circulated among the Committee members.

At this time, the Committee was also establishing a schedule for future meetings, arranging for Dean Bonder to meet with the faculty on October 7, 2010, and reviewing advertisements for other Law Dean positions. The Committee also drafted an announcement of Dean Mearns’s appointment as Provost and an announcement of the impending search for distribution on the Dean and Associate Dean listserves, while Interim Dean Phyllis L. Crocker shared information about

1 In addition to Dean Bonder and Professor Weinstein, the Committee comprised: Professors Caroline Boering-Jacobs (Director, Legal Writing), Steven Lazarus, Browne Lewis, Kris Niedringhausen (Director, Law Library), and Brian Ray; Community Representatives Bryan Penvose (Partner, Koblenetz & Penvose and President, C|M|LAW Alumni Association), Steven Sozio (Partner, Jones Day), and Hon. Melody Stewart (Judge, Ohio Eighth District Court of Appeals); Assistant Dean of Students Jean Lifter (Staff Representative), and Stanley Ball (Student Representative).

2 R. William Funk is a national executive search company specializing in higher education placements. For more information about the firm go to: www.rwilliamfunk.com/

3 The announcement stated: “Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Dean Geoffrey Mearns, who has served as Interim Provost of Cleveland State University since February, has been appointed the Committee and the impending search with the Visiting Committee, the Development Committee and the National Advisory Committee.

The Committee finalized the position description and began advertising the Dean Search in late September. In addition to placing ads in The Chronicle of Higher Education and other publications, the Committee coordinated with staff to create a Dean Search link on the C|M|LAW website, e-mailed the visiting committee asking for help identifying potential candidates, and sent letters to the managing partners at the 25 largest law firms in Cleveland, members of the judiciary, 25 northeast Ohio general counsels, and partners at various firms outside Cleveland.

After meeting in October to finalize the details of the search, the Committee began to review applicants with the expectation that it would conduct in-person interviews with a number of semi-finalists in mid-December. Based on those interviews, the Committee would invite several finalists to visit C|M|LAW early in the spring semester. Members of the C|M|LAW community would have an opportunity to meet with each of the Dean candidates and to share their evaluations of the candidates with the Search Committee. The faculty would then discuss the relative strengths of the candidates and forward its evaluations to the Provost and President, with President Berkman making the final choice of a new Dean for C|M|LAW. The Committee’s goal was to announce the selection of a new Dean on or before March 1, 2011.

The Committee received 43 applications and nominations, which was quite good in light of the fact that there were 32 other Dean searches in 2010-11. This compared very favorably with our 2004 search, when we received 35 applications or nominations at a time when there were only 15 other Dean searches. We received applications from across the country, including law professors and deans, university deans and presidents, municipal law directors, corporate general counsels, and partners in law firms.

The Committee initially selected twelve applicants to interview in person in mid-December. The interviewees came from a variety of backgrounds: professors and administrators in law schools and universities, lawyers in private and government law practice, and elected officials. Eleven of the interviewees were able to meet with the Committee in December and the Committee subsequently conducted two more face-to-face interview sessions in January during which they interviewed an additional five candidates.

The Committee initially selected five finalists from the eleven individuals interviewed in mid-December. Two individuals in this first group of finalists later withdrew their names from consideration and were replaced by individuals interviewed in the later rounds of interviews. Five finalists come to campus for two days of interviews. Each finalist met with many individuals and constituencies over the two days: Provost Mearns and President Berkman; the Deans of other C.S.U. Colleges as well as Vice-Presidents of C.S.U.; and within the law school, the Interim Dean, Associate and Assistant Deans, professional, clerical, and library staff, faculty, and students. Each finalist made a luncheon presentation to the faculty and staff. In addition, each person met with representatives of the Visiting Committee, National Advisory Committee and Alumni Association at evening receptions held at the Union Club. For each finalist we solicited and received numerous evaluations.

The five finalists who visited the campus were: Craig Boise, Professor of Law, DePaul University College of Law; Lee Fisher, Ohio’s former Lieutenant Governor and Attorney General; Daniel Hamilton, Professor of Law and History, University of Illinois College of Law; Susan Richey, Professor of Law and Associate Dean, University of New Hampshire School of Law; and Niels Schaumann, Professor of Law and Vice-Dean, William Mitchell College of Law. Daniel Hamilton withdrew from the search after his two-day visit in February. In light of the timing of his withdrawal, the Committee did not attempt to identify another finalist for a campus visit.

On March 3rd, the faculty met to discuss and vote on the finalists. Prior to the meeting, the Committee provided the faculty with extensive reports on each finalist. Twenty-seven of the thirty-two tenured and tenure-track faculty, all four of the clinical faculty and four of the six legal writing professors, as well as two non-faculty members of the Committee (Dean Bonder and Jean Lifter), were present at this meeting. Under the law school’s and university’s policies, clinical and legal writing professors participated in the discussion of the candidates but did not vote.

At the meeting the Committee presented additional evaluations that the Committee received after they had prepared the reports. The faculty then engaged in a 1½ hour, thorough discussion of the strengths and weaknesses of the four finalists, during which 27 individuals spoke, followed by a vote by secret ballot. The voting process followed the procedure the faculty uses for all faculty hires: first a vote to find the candidate acceptable or unacceptable, then a vote among those found acceptable to express the faculty’s preferences. In the first vote, a finalist had to receive 60% approval in order to move to the second vote. Two of the finalists met this criterion: Craig Boise and Lee Fisher. The other two finalists received an approval of 40% or less.

The Committee met on March 7 to review all the materials and the faculty input in order to make its own recommendations as Provost Mearns had requested. The Committee endorsed the faculty vote and recommended Craig Boise and Lee Fisher to the Provost. Provost Mearns recommended, and President Berkman agreed to, the appointment of Craig Boise as Dean.

SUMMER RESEARCH GRANT CRITERIA

MEMORANDUM

January 2011

TO: Law Faculty

FROM: Summer Research Grants Committee
Susan Becker
Sheldon Gelman
Alan Weinstein, Chair
Heidi Gorovitz Robertson (ex officio)

RE: Summer 2011 Research Grant Requests

Tenured, pre-tenured, legal writing, and clinical professors, are invited to submit a funding request for a research grant proposal for the Summer of 2010. The number of available research grants to be awarded and the dollar amount of each grant will be determined by the Dean’s office based on budgetary constraints. The format for application and the criteria for selecting meritorious applications are described below. Applicants should submit four (4) paper copies of their proposal to Alan Weinstein by noon on Monday, February 21, 2011. Please do not e-mail your proposals.

FORMAT FOR APPLICATIONS

Each applicant should submit a brief description (no more than two pages) of the proposed project, the methodology to be used, and the place of the project in the particular scholarly field. In addition, the applicant must report the following information regarding the immediately preceding three projects for which summer grants have been awarded: the title(s) and date(s) of each of the three most recently funded research proposals, a brief description of the draft(s) or published writing(s) that resulted from each grant (even if the money was used to fund different research from that originally proposed in the grant request), and the following details regarding the resulting work product:

- If the applicant has published any articles or chapters, the applicant should include a reprint or copy with his/her application.

- If the applicant has published any books, the applicant should provide a copy of the inside title page and table of contents. If the book does not have a table of contents, then please indicate the number of pages.

- If the applicant has produced any articles, chapters, etc., that have either been submitted or accepted for publication but not yet published, the applicant should identify the titles of the articles or chapters, their length, and the journal and volume/issue in which each is scheduled. to be published. If the work has not yet been accepted for publication, the applicant should describe where the piece is in the submission process.

- Finally, for any writing projects that are still in draft form, the applicant should identify the working title of the draft(s), the nature and anticipated length of the final product(s), the anticipated date(s) of completion, and provide a copy of the draft manuscript(s).

If you have submitted any of the above materials within the past two years, the Committee likely has it in on file and there is no need for you to re-submit unless we make a request. Please note that the Committee has had to defer review of some applications in the past due to inaccurate or incomplete information about an applicant’s prior grant history, so responding promptly and completely to any request from the Committee will allow us to review your application in a timely manner.

Please note that a faculty member who applies for a summer research grant after the expiration of a professorship or similar position that included an automatic award of one or more summer grants is subject to the same productivity criteria as other grant recipients. For the first three summer grant applications submitted following the end of the faculty member’s named Professorship, the applicant shall identify the scope and status of all works-in-progress, publications and/or summer teaching projects that were supported by any automatic summer grants that would be included as part of the “three previous grants” reporting period required of all applicants.

CRITERIA FOR JUDGING THE MERIT OF PROPOSALS

In making recommendations to the Dean regarding whether summer research grant proposals are worthy of funding, the Summer Research Grant Committee judges the merit of grant applications by considering both the overall quality of the applicant’s proposed project and the applicant’s record of past productivity. Pre-tenured faculty members have a preference in the award of grants. Because the purpose of the summer research grant program is to provide a sufficient financial incentive to devote the majority of the summer to scholarship rather than to other paid employment, anyone who accepts paid summer employment for a duration of the equivalent of more than two weeks is not eligible for a summer research grant.

A faculty member on a nine or ten month contract who is teaching during the summer under the College’s flexibility in teaching load policy, and thus the summer teaching is part of the standard teaching load and not for additional compensation, is eligible to apply for a summer research or teaching grant. A faculty member who applies under these circumstances is not eligible for a summer research grant, however, if s/he accepts paid employment for a duration of the equivalent of more than two weeks during the semester when his/her teaching load has been reduced as a result of teaching in the summer.

The Committee will be guided by the following principles in its review of grant requests. The purpose of these guidelines is to provide greater transparency to faculty members regarding the decision process, not to bind the discretion of the Committee in extraordinary circumstances that are not foreseen in these guidelines.
Both articles and books (including textbooks and monographs) may be supported with summer research grant money. In general, a substantial article or book (whether on the originally described topic or a different topic) must be completed and submitted for publication before a second grant will be awarded. In the case of an article, however, a second grant may be awarded prior to completion of an article if it can be shown that substantial progress has been made on a substantial article. The faculty member shoulders the burden of proving that this standard has been satisfied. In no event will a third grant be awarded before completion and submission for publication of a substantial article. In the discretion of the Committee, two shorter works may be considered the equivalent of a single, substantial article.

In the case of a book, a second grant may be awarded prior to completion of the book if it can be shown that substantial progress has been made, and a third grant may be awarded prior to completion of the book if it can be shown that substantial additional progress has been made since the award of the second grant. Generally, a fourth grant will not be awarded before completion of a book. If, however, the faculty member publishes at least one substantial article while also working on the book, the Committee may take this productivity into account in determining whether to recommend the award of additional grants for the book.

Abandonment of a project does not change the principles described above; an alternative substantial article or book (as the case may be) must be completed and submitted for publication before subsequent grants will be awarded. Co-authored articles and books are subject to the same principles that apply to articles and books wholly authored by the faculty member.

Example 1: In Year 1, Faculty Member A is awarded a grant to write an article on Topic X. After several months of work, Faculty Member A abandons work on Topic X and begins work on a new article dealing with Topic Y. In Year 2, Faculty Member A submits a grant request to continue work on Topic Y and satisfies his burden of proving that “substantial progress” has been made on the article. The Committee should recommend funding the grant. In Year 3, Faculty Member A, having not yet completed the work on Topic Y (or a substantial article on another topic), submits a grant request to continue work on Topic Y (or to start a new project on Topic Z). The Committee should recommend denial of the grant request. No further grants should be awarded until Faculty Member A has completed and submitted for publication a substantial article to satisfy his outstanding obligation under the prior two grants.

Example 2: In Year 1, Faculty Member B is awarded a grant to write a book. In Year 2, Faculty Member B submits a grant request to continue work on the book and satisfies her burden of proving that “substantial progress” has been made. The Committee should recommend funding the grant. In Year 3, Faculty Member B submits a grant request to continue work on the book and satisfies her burden of proving that “substantial additional progress” has been made since submission of the prior grant request. The Committee should recommend funding the grant. During Year 3, however, Faculty Member B instead writes and submits for publication a substantial article. In Year 4, Faculty Member B submits a grant request to continue work on the book. While generally a fourth grant will not be awarded for the writing of a book, the Committee may take into consideration the publication of the substantial article in Year 3 in deciding whether to recommend funding the grant. Because Faculty Member B’s outstanding obligation under the Year-3 grant was satisfied by the completion of a substantial article, the Committee should recommend funding the grant for Year 4 (which would be the third and final grant allocable to the book, absent publication of a substantial article instead, as in the prior year).
Subject: 2012-13 Travel Policy
From: Craig Boise <craig.boise@law.csuohio.edu>
Date: 8/30/2012 8:18 PM
To: faculty <faculty@law.csuohio.edu>

Colleagues:

As you know, the Cleveland-Marshall (C-M) Fund provides financial assistance for faculty travel to academic conferences, faculty travel to other conferences (teaching, curriculum, etc), reprints, and related expenses. Any spending above the amount budgeted for faculty travel by the C-M Fund committee must be covered by our hard-dollar budget, which has been decimated by cuts driven by our reduced entering class size and ever-shrinking state support of CSU. Our limited hard budget dollars also must cover staff travel (development, admissions, bar prep) and student travel for moot court and other activities.

Given our current budget constraints, the travel policy for this year will reflect last year's funding levels. Accordingly,

- each faculty member may apply for reimbursement for up to $3,000 in travel expenditures;
- faculty members may use the allotment in any way they choose, except that funding for travel to the AALS conference will be limited to $1,000. (This exception does not apply to pre-tenure, tenure-track faculty); and
- in limited and extraordinary situations, the Associate Dean may request that the Dean exceed these limits if a faculty member can demonstrate that the extra funding is likely to produce a clear and substantial benefit to the law school in terms of our scholarly profile or increased teaching effectiveness.

As in the past, travel requests must be submitted 3 weeks prior to the proposed travel. Requests must include a one- or two-paragraph description of the purpose of travel, how it advances the faculty member's scholarly agenda or teaching objectives, and how it is likely to elevate the law school's scholarship or teaching reputation. Please submit all travel requests to Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment, Heidi Gorovitz Robertson.

To help us plan effectively, I ask that each faculty member provide Heidi with a proposed travel plan for the upcoming year by October 1st. These individual travel plans will help us manage the travel budget more efficiently and appropriately. I understand that your travel plan may not reflect a firm commitment.

This policy will preserve faculty travel opportunities while ensuring that such travel furthers the important goal of increasing our reputational capital. In working with deans from across the campus on budget-related issues, I am reminded of how fortunate the law school is to have the Cleveland-Marshall Fund to underwrite our travel. This is a benefit that other university faculty members do not have.

If you have questions or concerns about this policy, please do not hesitate to contact me.
directly. Thank you.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Geoffrey S. Mearns, Provost and Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs
FROM: Phyllis L. Crocker, Interim Dean and Professor of Law
RE: C|M|LAW Budget Targets
DATE: 18 February 2011

C|M|LAW’s proposals for meeting our budget targets combine revenue generation and reductions in the permanent budget that affect areas across the college. To develop these proposals, I formed a budget team, held brown bag lunches with the staff (on February 7) and the faculty (on February 8), and invited everyone to meet with me individually, send emails and or make anonymous suggestions. Through all of these means, faculty and staff have participated in the process. The budget team is: Professor Susan Becker, Director of the Office of Career Planning Jen Blaga, Office Manager Laverne Carter, Law Library Director Kristina Niedringhaus, Associate Professor Brian Ray, Associate Dean Heidi Gorovitz Robertson, Associate Dean Mark Sundahl, and Budget Director Jeane White. We have met twice a week for the last three weeks.

Our proposals reflect the Provost’s goal of strengthening our college as well as our own goals and priorities. First and foremost, we are mindful that our purpose is to educate the next generation of lawyers. We also consider the following factors of importance: keeping our Center for Health Law and Policy vibrant, maintaining the quality of our student services, maintaining our graduates’ bar passage rates, keeping tuition affordable, improving faculty scholarship, maintaining teaching capacity, enhancing experiential learning, adhering to ABA and AALS accreditation standards, and protecting jobs. While we do not all agree on the order of these priorities, they have informed our conversations. They are also consistent with our 2007 Strategic Plan.

This memo, in Section I, describes each component as it adds up to the primary $917,029 (7.5%) target. Section II provides an alternate way to reach the 7.5% reduction. Section III sets forth additional measures to reach the $1,222,773 (10%) target and what we would restore if required to only meet the $611,386 (5%) target. Appendices A and B provide detailed financial data related to the 7.5% and 10% targets.
I. $917,029 (7.5%) Budget Reduction Target

The components of our plan are twofold:

1. Generating revenue by
   (a) increasing tuition while keeping the One L class size at 200 ($467,352) and
   (b) instituting a new graduate degree program ($19,312);

2. Making reductions in the permanent budget by
   (a) aligning faculty positions consistent with CSU and C|M|LAW priorities ($303,386);
   (b) reducing Law Library expenditures through a staff reorganization and other reductions ($201,887), and
   (c) reducing certain travel costs as well as print and communication expenses ($34,000).

The total of revenue and reductions is $1,025,937. See Appendix A for a detailed breakdown of these measures.

A. Revenue Generation

1. J.D. Tuition Increase and Class Size

   a. Tuition Increase

   We propose a 7% tuition increase over each of the next two years while maintaining an entering class of 200 students. This tuition increase will generate an additional $1,328,567 in revenue for the University.

   We recognize that our obligation is to identify how we will meet the budget targets in one year. We considered a significant (12%) one-year tuition increase followed by a smaller (5%) increase, but decided that it would be better for our students to add smaller, measured increases. In addition, the 7% increase will, for FY12, keep tuition below the maximum that students make take out each year in federal guaranteed loans ($20,500).

   The 7% increase keeps us in line with other Ohio public law schools. See Appendix F. We anticipate that all other Ohio public law schools will increase their tuitions this year in light of the statewide budget shortfalls. We expect to continue to be the best value legal education in Ohio even with the 7% tuition increase each of the next two years.

1 One sector will have a significant (20%) increase in tuition the first year—out-of-state-residents. In 2004 we decreased out-of-state tuition by 22.1% in the hope that our number and percentage of out-of-state students would dramatically increase. This did not happen—we continue each year at approximately 20% out-of-state 1Ls.
   Because of the large decrease in 2004 we are out of step with other Ohio public law schools. The 20% increase will still mean we are the best value for out-of-state residents.

2 Based on recent conversations our Assistant Dean of Admissions has had with other Admissions Offices we understand that the University of Cincinnati School of Law is planning a 6% tuition increase, Ohio State an 8-9%
Over the past several years the University has crafted its budget based on a 3.5% increase in law-school tuition. Last year, the Law School negotiated an arrangement with the University permitting it to use any tuition increase above the historical 3.5% level to increase scholarship funds. In this current process, if the University charges the Law School at the previously established 3.5% level, our proposed 7% tuition increase will contribute $598,438 to the University’s funds, leaving the Law School to count $730,129 towards meeting our individual target. See Appendix C summarizing tuition projections and Appendices D and E providing detailed University Forecasts of Law School tuition increases at 3.5%, 5% and 7% (prepared by Tim Long, CSU Director of Budget and Financial Analysis).

We understand that the President’s Budget Task Force has prepared a budget projection for this process that recommends increasing Law School tuition by 5% over the next three years. If the University charges the Law School at 5%, our proposed 7% tuition increase will contribute $861,215 to the common pool, leaving the Law School to count $467,352 towards meeting our target.

Recent practice and the specific arrangement negotiated between the Law School and the University in the last budget-planning process suggest that the University should credit the Law School for any tuition increase beyond 3.5% in this process. We understand that the budget landscape has changed and look forward to discussing a resolution to the allocation of increased tuition in a way that is equitable to the University, the Law School and our students.

b. Class Size

The Budget Task Force assumed that Law School enrollment would remain at FY11 levels. We agree with that assumption. As explained below, our projections are based on an incoming class of 200 because admitting a larger class will harm the quality of our One L class, jeopardize our bar passage rates, hurt our US News rankings and increase the difficulty of our graduates getting hired—all of which will harm our reputation for excellence that we have worked so hard to achieve over the last five years.

i. Nationwide the number of applicants to law school is declining. This year applicants are down nationally by 12.6%, in the Great Lakes Region by 10% and at C|M|LAW by 21.65%. While we are currently in the middle of the admission cycle, last year we were 4% below the prior year’s number of applicants at the end of the season. The smaller number of applicants means that we are already admitting applicants who we would have wait-listed last year based on their UGPA and LSATs. If we had to admit a larger class we would have to admit those whom increase and Toledo a 5% in-state and 8% out-of-state tuition increase; Akron was not comfortable disclosing this information.

3 Section II of this memo discusses the benefits to the University and the Law School of calculating the tuition differential from 3.5% rather than 5.
we would have denied admission last year. In addition, if we had to admit a larger class, our selectivity percentage (part of the U.S. News rankings) would rise by one percentage point. See Appendix G.

Our concerns about the caliber of students we would have to admit is exacerbated by the fact that we do not have the scholarship dollars to attract the very students we need. In 2008-09 we had the fewest scholarships dollars, especially per FTE, of any Ohio law school:

ii. Admitting a larger class will jeopardize our graduates’ bar passage rates. Even with the smaller class sizes, our July bar passage rates have dipped slightly the last two years. See Appendix H. A larger class will mean admitting students without the credentials that predict success on the bar exam. Although we provide greater academic assistance to our students than we did in 2004, one of the touchstones of our Bar Passage Plan was admitting a smaller, academically stronger class. Continued success on our Bar Passage Plan is critical to our students, as well as C|M|LAW’s standing in the community and our ranking in US News.

iii. The job market for our current students is extremely difficult. For the graduating class of 2009, only 84.8% were employed nine months after graduation – an important measure that is used for evaluation purposes by the ABA and by US News. It appears that this year we will be close to 86% employed at nine months after graduation. While this is encouraging in the present economic market, C|M|LAW has not had employment percentages that low since 1997. In addition, in comparison to past years, a greater proportion of our recent graduates are employed in contract and other temporary legal positions than in permanent positions. It would be irresponsible to admit more students when our current graduates cannot find employment, and when the job market prospects continue to be challenging at best. If our employment numbers were to drop due to an increased class size it would negatively affect our US News rankings.

iv. A larger class will negatively affect our US News rankings not only by admitting students with lower UGPAs and LSATs, risking lower bar pass rates, and lower employment percentages, but also by a further lowering of our Direct Expenditures Ranking. For 2010 we were ranked 158 by US News. See Appendix I. Based on ABA data, we ranked 165 among all law schools and 67 among public law schools in 2008-09. These are significant drops from 2004-05 when we were at 136 and 54. In 2004-5 we were the third highest among Ohio public law schools; in 2008-09 we were ranked the lowest. See Appendix J.

v. Finally, based on the current admissions situation and the changing economic outlook for law-related employment, and absent the current budget challenge facing CSU, the most prudent and responsible course for C|M|LAW would be to seek approval to reduce the size of the class to 190, not keep it at 200. This would allow us to retain the academic strength of the most recent class, use scholarship dollars more effectively, and improve our students’ employment prospects. In a very real sense, staying at 200 is the equivalent of increasing to 210 given the lower number of applicants. By staying at 200 this coming year we will likely be moving backwards especially in terms of the Fall 2011 entering class’s credentials.

2. New Program: the MLS Degree

The College of Law is establishing a Master of Legal Studies (MLS) degree program as an entry-level non-professional degree designed for individuals who seek a better understanding of the law, legal institutions and legal methods but who are not interested in obtaining a J.D. We expect to enroll our first students in Fall 2012.

The MLS program will require students to complete the equivalent of one year of full-time study, consisting of 30 semester credit hours. The maximum period to complete the MLS degree will be four years for a part-time student. Our conservative estimate is that 10 students will enroll in the MLS program; they will average 1.5 courses per semester per student, which is the equivalent of 1 FTE. See Appendix K.

This will generate $19,312 in FY 13.

B. Faculty Alignment

Six faculty members are changing or have changed their relationship to the Law School this year: Professors Lloyd Snyder and Gordon Beggs are retiring, Professor Dena Davis, Joan Flynn and Kermit Lind have or are resigning, and Professor Janice Aitken died in July 2010. As explained below, we propose relinquishing two and retaining four lines.

We make these proposals mindful of the effect they will have on our current students and those considering whether to attend C|M|LAW. While it is true that our law student population has grown smaller since 2004, our Student/Faculty ratio has remained relatively constant. See Appendix L. Compared to other Ohio public law schools, however, we have not fared well: we have dropped from having the second best Student/Faculty ratio in 2004-05 to having the fourth best (out of five). Id. From the perspective of Student/Faculty ratio (another US News factor) it

5 Based on conversations our Assistant Dean of Admissions has had with other Admissions offices we understand that Toledo is planning to reduce the One L class from 175 to 150, Ohio State, now at 225-230, is talking about becoming smaller, Cincinnati went up this year to 144, but is going back to 135, and Akron will remain at about 202.
would not be in our students’ best interests to relinquish more than two positions. In addition, decreasing the size of our faculty will negatively affect the calculation of our Faculty Resources in the US News ranking because it will lower our direct expenditures (already one of the lowest in the country)—which includes faculty salaries. See Appendix I.

The combined savings of these changes is $303,386. See Appendix M.

1. The departure of Professor Dena Davis is significant for the Law School because she is the most senior professor in the Health Law field and also among the most distinguished scholars on our faculty. In addition, Professor Davis regularly teaches the required first year year-long Torts course. In light of CSU’s focus on health, and the Law School’s own Center for Health Law and Policy, we propose retaining Dena Davis’s position and hiring a junior professor in health law. We estimate this will result in a savings of $56,547.

2. In light of the Law School’s long standing commitment to, and reputation for, educating our students to be practice ready, we propose retaining the three professor lines that relate directly to skills training: clinical professor positions in the Employment Law Clinic and the Urban Development Law Clinic and a legal writing position. We anticipate savings of approximately $71,259 for the two clinical positions based on replacing both positions with junior faculty. Continuing the Legal Writing position as a Visiting Professorship was approved in November 2010. We do not anticipate any savings in that line. We propose keeping all three lines in a visiting status for the coming year so that the new Dean has the opportunity to fully assess the Law School’s skills professor needs.

3. We agree to relinquish Professor Lloyd Snyder’s line. Professor Snyder is a co-author of one of the leading treatises on Professional Responsibility in Ohio. He has taught the required courses on Profession Responsibility and Evidence for many years. This will result in a savings of $175,580.

4. In addition to Professor Snyder’s position, we are relinquishing another position this year—that of Professor Joan Flynn. Professor Flynn resigned in June 2010—too late to seek to hire a replacement or a visitor. The loss of Professor Flynn has significant costs to the Law School’s scholarly profile as well as to our students. Professor Flynn taught core courses in the Labor and Employment areas—one of the few strong areas of job growth and thus of particular interest to our students. Due to a fluke of timing, her salary line ($146,422) was removed from the baseline budget which prevents us from counting the savings from this line toward our target. Nonetheless, the funds in this line will contribute to the overall pool of available funds for the University by increasing the Provost’s Position Fund.

C. Library and IT

Library and IT reductions will be made to both non-personnel and personnel budget lines which result in a total reduction of $201,887.
1. Non-personnel reductions

a. The Law Library will cut $10,000 from its maintenance budget. The maintenance budget is used for equipment maintenance (i.e., microfiche readers, security gates, etc.) as well as paint, wall repair, furniture repair, and other repairs to the physical facility.

b. The Law Library will also cut $10,000 from its supplies budget. The supplies budget for the Law Library includes office supplies, staff computers, and supplies used in the processing of library materials.

c. The Law Library will eliminate its entire binding budget of $5,000. The majority of binding involves the binding of individual issues of law reviews or other periodic materials. We will still need to occasionally bind materials, such as the faculty evaluations, but should be able to take that relatively small amount from another budget line as needed.

These non-personnel savings total $25,000.

2. Personnel reductions and restructuring

a. The Law Library and IT will cut $9,143 from its student worker budget leaving $30,000.00 available. Student workers perform duties such as processing materials, shelving books, computer lab assistance, and helping patrons at the Circulation Desk.

b. Daniel Maynard (IT) resigned his position and we are not seeking to fill it. The resulting budget savings is $87,598.

c. Marie Rehmar retired and was replaced with an entry-level law librarian resulting in a budget savings of $32,475.

d. Priscilla Howard retired and her position was restructured and downgraded to a lower salary grade (now filled by Sean Kennedy) resulting in a budget savings of $17,104.

e. Due to a retirement (Priscilla Howard), resignation (James Pape), and reassignment of duties, the Technical Services department needs to be restructured. There is currently a distinct lack of cataloging expertise and professional knowledge of Technical Services issues. We propose to restructure the department to include a Technical Services librarian (new position), a Library Associate I (existing position), and a Library Media Technical Assistant I (existing position). This would eliminate the Catalog Specialist position currently held by Richard Koloda ($56,896). The salary and fringe for a Technical Services librarian would be approximately $67,000. See Appendix N for a more detailed explanation of restructuring Technical Services.

These personnel savings total $176,887.
D. Other Reductions

1. Admissions will cut its travel budget by $10,000. It is important for our Admissions staff to travel throughout the country to attract the best entering class. But we can do so strategically—including alternating visits to states and colleges throughout the country which have yielded the most applicants in recent years.

2. We will reduce our printing and communications line by 10% ($24,000). We will accomplish this by more effectively using the web site and email both internally and externally. We will analyze and reduce printing costs including size of publications, number of copies and other related matters.

II. Alternative $917,029 (7.5%) Budget Reduction Target

While our principal 7.5% budget reduction proposal focuses on receiving the differential between a 5% and 7% tuition increase, permitting us to receive credit for reductions based on a 3.5% tuition increase instead would strengthen the University and the college in important and strategic ways.

A. If we were credited for any tuition increase over 3.5%, we would have some choices to make that could benefit our students, the Law School and the University. For our students, we could agree either to seek a lower tuition increase, or to contribute part of the credited amount to increasing our scholarship dollars—as we did in FY11. While our tuition appears lower than other Ohio law schools, the actual cost to our students is higher because of our relatively low scholarship dollars. For example, using 2008-09 figures (the most recent available), our tuition is $1508 lower than Toledo’s, but when one considers the average scholarship available per FTE, the actual average cost of C|M’s tuition is $600 higher per student.

|            | C|M|LAW | Toledo |
| Tuition    | $16,478 | $19,137 |
| Scholarship/FTE | $ 2,729 | $ 5,988 |
| Net Cost   | $13,749 | $13,149 |

This disparity has a substantial negative impact on our yield rate for admitted students.

We are in the first year of a strategic restructuring of our scholarship program that includes offering scholarships at different levels than in the past. We expect this will make us more attractive to high achieving students. Increasing our total scholarship fund would allow us to expand that strategy and help us better compete with our peer institutions for the strongest students. This would benefit the University and Law School on many levels: stronger students would improve our bar passage rates and their higher LSAT and UPGAs would improve our US News Rankings, which would help us attract stronger students and faculty.
B. If we were credited for any tuition increase over 3.5%, we could also make a lateral hire for a new health law professor, rather than a junior hire. This would have an immediate positive impact on the University and Law School’s stature because it would signal a heightened commitment to our Center for Health Law and Policy. This would, in turn, raise our scholarly profile in academia and the legal community and potentially increase the possibility of getting external funding. It would also benefit our students to have a senior faculty member as a professor not only in the classroom, but also as a more knowledgeable resource for externship and employment connections.

C. Finally, by receiving more credit for a tuition increase, we would be able to reduce some of the cost-cutting identified in Section I (including library and other reductions). These reductions could be reintroduced if necessary to meet the 10% target.

III. Proposals to Meet the 10% and 5% Targets

A. $1,222,773 (10%) Budget Reduction Target

If the Law School is required to reach the 10%, $1.2 million target, we will consider the following additional measures. See Appendix B for a detailed breakdown of these measures.

1. If we are not given the tuition credit between 3.5% and 7% under the 7.5% Budget Target plan, we will seek that under this scenario. This would credit the Law School with an additional $262,777.

2. We will reorganize and combine the Development/Career Planning departments. This could result in a savings of approximately $50,000.

3. We will reduce our part-time faculty by offering more courses every other year rather than every year. We anticipate a savings of $20,000/year.

B. $611,386 (5%) Budget Reduction Target

If the Law School were fortunate to have to reach only the 5% budget target of $611,386 we would increase tuition by less than 7% and seek to restore Professor Snyder’s line.

APPENDIX G
CLEVELAND-MARSHALL COLLEGE OF LAW
OFFICE OF ADMISSION

MEMORANDUM

TO: Phyllis L. Crocker, Interim Dean
FROM: Christopher Lucak, Assistant Dean for Admission and Financial Aid
DATE: February 8, 2011

REGARDING: Increasing C|M|LAW class size by 5 students

Applications to law school have declined nationally. At C|M|LAW, our current application volume is more than 20% below where we were at this time last year. At this level of decline, we have been forced to offer admission to students who would have been waitlisted last year. Any increase to the entering class size would require an even deeper dip into our applicant pool. Our current yield rate is about 30%. Assuming we are able to maintain that level, we would have to admit 15 additional applicants to yield 5 enrolled students. Admitting that many additional applicants would require us to admit students with LSAT scores as low as 150. Admitting at an LSAT level of 150 would also mean having a waitlist with students in the upper 140’s should we need them. The additional 15 admits would not likely hurt our incoming GPA as we would be able to focus on strong academic performance at the expense of the LSAT. Another important quality rating of the law school is admit rate, or selectivity. We want selectivity to be low and yield to be high. The additional 15 admits would increase selectivity, making us less selective, by one percentage point.

RE: U.S. News & World Report Direct Expenditures Ranking

In 2010, C|M|LAW was ranked 158 with respect to “average direct expenditures per full-time equivalent student” according to U.S. News & World Report. We are concerned that C|M|LAW’s low ranking in this area is preventing C|M|LAW from moving into the second tier in the U.S. News & World Report rankings. C|M|LAW’s overall rank is 115, while its rank in certain specific areas is well above 100 (e.g., Employment at Graduation Rank: 61, Library Volumes Rank: 63, Student/Faculty Ratio: 77). This memorandum (i) explains the methodology used to determine the “Average Direct Expenditures” ranking, (ii) provides the data that is used in the calculation of C|M|LAW’s ranking (as well as comparative data from other public Ohio law schools) and (iii) explains how C|M|LAW could improve its ranking in this category.

I. U.S. News & World Report Ranking Methodology

U.S. News & World Report rankings are based on a weighted average of twelve factors. One of the factors is “Faculty Resources,” which is weighted at 0.15. Sixty-five percent (65%) of the “Faculty Resources” component is based on “Average Direct Expenditures” which is defined as the “average fiscal year 2008 and 2009 expenditures per student for instruction, library, and supporting services” (financial aid, overhead and indirect expenditures are not included in this category of expenditures). The “Average Direct Expenditures” component is weighted at 0.0975 (65% of 0.15).

“Average Direct Expenditures” are calculated by U.S. News & World Report in the following manner:

- The expenditures reported to the ABA for (i) instructional salaries, (ii) summer salaries, (iii) administrative and student services salaries, (iv) library salaries, (v) other salaries, (vi) fringe benefits, (vii) library

---

1 The details regarding U.S. News & World Report methodology were provided by Samuel Flanigan, Deputy Director of Data Research, U.S. News & World Report ((202) 955-2642; sflanigan@usnews.com).
• operations, and (viii) law school expenses excluding library expenses are added up (after the salaries and fringe benefits are adjusted by a cost-of-living deflator).\(^2\)
• The resulting sum is then divided by the number of the full-time equivalent students.

II. ABA Data

In the ABA Report-Back for 2008-2009, C|M|LAW was ranked 165 for “Direct Expenditures Per FTE” among all accredited law schools. C|M|LAW was 67 among the public law schools (the lowest among the Ohio public law schools).

This ranking differs from our U.S. News & World Report ranking because the calculation of direct expenditures by the ABA differs from the U.S. News & World Report calculation in two ways: (1) the ABA includes financial aid expenditures (Item I of ABA Questionnaire) and (2) there is no cost-of-living adjustment.

A chart showing the ABA data for the Ohio public law schools follows:

III. Analysis and Recommendations

C|M|LAW has the second highest total expenditures for Ohio public law schools (after OSU). If the financial aid expenditures are subtracted from the total expenditures – which results in total expenditure figures that take into account the components used by U.S. News & World Report (but without a cost-of-living adjustment) – the Ohio public law schools’ total expenditures compare as follows:

OSU           $23,446,592
C|M|LAW       $13,727,045
Cincinnati   $11,262,802
Akron        $10,245,584
Toledo       $8,854,245

\(^2\) These are Items A-H in the General Fiscal Information portion of the ABA Questionnaire.
Even though C|M|LAW has higher expenditures than Cincinnati, Akron and Toledo, this fact is far outweighed by the much higher number of FTE students at C|M|LAW — resulting in a low “expenditure per student” figure for C|M|LAW (and, in turn, a low ranking).

In order to raise our U.S. News & World Report ranking for direct expenditures to 100 (i.e., the second tier), we would have to increase our expenditures by approximately $3,000,000. This figure is based on a comparison of C|M|LAW’s figures to those of Capital University Law School which is ranked 100 in the ABA report. In 2008/9, Capital had total expenditures of $19,901,186 and provided $3,076,835 financial aid. Capital had 611 FTE students (similar to C|M|LAW), which resulted in an expenditure per student figure of $32,556. Capital’s total expenditures excluding financial aid were $16,824,351. This is $3,097,306 more than C|M|LAW’s direct expenditures (excluding financial aid).

It is not clear that improving our ranking in this one area will be sufficient to move our overall ranking into the second tier, but it will certainly help. In the event that we increase our class size in the coming years and do not increase expenditures, our expenditure per student amount will decrease and may push our ranking in this area even further down. Therefore, it is important that C|M|LAW maintains its current class size in order to prevent a slip downwards in the rankings.

From another perspective, our low ranking with respect to direct expenditures can be viewed as a point of pride. C|M|LAW is providing a quality education on a small budget and this helps keep tuition low for our students. It is unfortunate that we are punished in the rankings for our efficiency.

From: Alan Weinstein
Re: Income Projection from MLS Program
Date: February 15, 2011

Below, I have provided both a conservative and optimistic projection of the income I anticipate from the MLS program during its first three years, assuming that the program begins in the Fall of 2012.

Conservative Projection

2012-13: 10 MLS students, average of 1.5 courses/semester/student = 1 FTE
2013-14: 20 MLS students, average of 1.5 courses/semester/student = 2 FTE
2014-15: 30 MLS students, average of 1.5 courses/semester/student = 3 FTE

Optimistic Projection

2012-13: 15 MLS students, average of 2 courses/semester/student = 2 FTE
2013-14: 30 MLS students, average of 2 courses/semester/student = 4 FTE

APPENDIX N

The restructuring of the Law Library’s Technical Services department requires some explanation. In December 2009, Priscilla Howard retired. A Technical Services consultant was hired to examine the department’s workflow and staffing needs. His report was issued in May 2010. Several of the report’s findings are relevant. Below is an organizational chart prior to the consultant’s report.

One of the consultant’s major findings was that Schuyler Cook could not effectively serve as both the Head of Technical Services with responsibilities for running a department while also serving as the Government Information Librarian. As Government Information Librarian, Schuyler is responsible for overseeing the Federal Depository Library Program for both the Law Library and the Michael Schwartz Library. Upon examination and consideration of a myriad of factors, not the least of which was Schuyler’s responsibilities to the Schwartz Library as well as the Law Library, Schuyler’s job was restructured in July 2010 as the Government Information and Special Projects Librarian and he no longer oversees Technical Services. Jan Babbit, Associate Director of the Law Library has been directly overseeing the Technical Services department since that time.

Next, the consultant felt that Priscilla Howard’s position should be retained and that we should find a replacement with her cataloging expertise. James Pape had gradually been assigned Priscilla’s duties from January through May 2010. James had applied for a job audit to recognize these changed duties just prior to his resignation in late November 2010 to take a job in Pennsylvania. Because James was performing Priscilla’s duties, Priscilla’s position was restructured and downgraded to a lower salary grade in early November 2010 resulting in a budget savings of $17,104.00. James Pape’s salary and fringe benefits total $40,671.

Given all the movement within the Technical Services Department, there is currently a distinct lack of cataloging expertise and professional knowledge of Technical Services issues. The department needs a professional librarian to deal with catalog and other Technical Services issues and to supervise the work of the department. In order to make this feasible, I believe the department could operate efficiently with a Technical Services Librarian, Library Associate I, and Library Media Technical Assistant I. This would eliminate the Catalog Specialist position currently held by Richard Koloda. The salary and fringe for a Technical Services librarian would be approximately $67,000.

Here is an organizational chart of the proposed structure for Technical Services:

Bylaws of the Faculty of the College of Law

ARTICLE I — NAME

The name of this organization is The Faculty of the College of Law (“the Law Faculty”).

ARTICLE II — MEMBERSHIP

SECTION 1. MEMBERSHIP GENERALLY

The membership of the Law Faculty is as follows: the President of the University, ex officio; the Vice President for Academic Affairs, ex officio; the Dean and Associate Deans of the College of Law; all persons assigned to the College of Law with the faculty rank of Professor, Associate Professor, Assistant Professor, Emeritus Professor, Clinical Professor, and Legal Writing Professor.

SECTION 2. VOTING RIGHTS

All members of the Law Faculty, except ex officio members and emeritus professors, are eligible to vote on all matters except as follows. Clinical Professors and Legal Writing Professors are not eligible to vote on matters related to hiring, tenure or promotion of tenured or tenure-track faculty, or the hiring or retention of the Dean.

ARTICLE III — OFFICERS

SECTION 1. THE DEAN

The Dean of the College of Law is the chief executive officer of the College of Law and is the chairperson of the Law Faculty. The Dean or the Dean’s designated representative shall preside at faculty meetings of the College of the Law.
SECTION 2. THE SECRETARY

The Dean of the College of Law will appoint a Secretary of the Law Faculty. The Secretary will notify each member of the Law Faculty of the time, place, and agenda of each faculty meeting, and will keep accurate minutes of all such meetings.

ARTICLE IV — MEETINGS

SECTION 1. REGULAR MEETINGS

The Law Faculty will meet at least twice during each of the Fall and Spring semesters. The Dean (or, in the Dean’s absence, his or her designated representative) will call meetings and may call additional meetings as the need arises.

SECTION 2. ADVANCE NOTICE OF ALL MEETINGS

All meetings must be called and the preliminary agenda announced by written or electronic notice to all members of the Law Faculty not less than 48 hours prior to the time set for the meeting.

SECTION 3. QUORUM FOR MEETINGS

Forty percent of the voting members of the Law Faculty who are not on professional or personal leave constitutes a quorum. Faculty excused from attending a specific meeting are not considered faculty 'on professional or personal leave' when calculating the number of faculty necessary to constitute a quorum.

SECTION 4. EXECUTIVE SESSION

A. The Law Faculty can convene an executive session for consideration of personnel matters and any other matter requiring confidentiality.

B. Forty-percent of the members of the Law Faculty eligible to vote on the issue who are not on personal or professional leave constitutes a quorum for an executive session.

ARTICLE V — COMMITTEES

The members of the Law Faculty have an important responsibility to participate actively in the governance of the College of Law. One of the principal means through which the members of the Law Faculty satisfy that responsibility is participation in committees in the College of Law.
SECTION 1. COMMITTEES

The following are the committees of the Law Faculty:

A. The Dean’s Faculty Advisory Committee. The elected Faculty Senators from the College of Law constitute this committee.

B. The Faculty Affairs Committee. The Faculty Affairs Committee must consist of at least six persons, including at least one full Professor, at least one Associate Professor, at least one Assistant Professor and at least one member of the legal writing or clinical faculty. Each member of the Committee is elected for a two-year term. Law Faculty with an administrative position in the Law College or University are ineligible to serve on the Faculty Affairs Committee.

C. The Personnel Action Committee (PAC). The PAC will consist of all tenured members of the Law Faculty. The members of the PAC will elect by majority vote a Chair and Vice-Chair of the PAC. The Chair and Vice-Chair must be full professors without an administrative position in the Law College or University at the time of election.

D. Other Committees. Appendix A lists all other currently constituted committees of the Law Faculty.

SECTION 2. CREATING AND DISBANDING COMMITTEES

Upon recommendation of the Faculty Affairs Committee or the Dean, the Law Faculty may, by majority vote at a regular faculty meeting, create additional standing committees. All other committees or subcommittees may be created: (a) by the Dean, or (b) by the Law Faculty, after consultation with the Dean, by majority vote at a faculty meeting. All committees and subcommittees, except the PAC, may be disbanded by majority vote at a faculty meeting.

ARTICLE VI — ROBERT’S RULES OF ORDER

The rules contained in the most recent version of ROBERT’S RULES OF ORDER will govern the Law Faculty in all regular and special faculty meetings, to the extent that they are not inconsistent with these bylaws or with the special rules of this faculty or the bylaws of the Faculty Senate.

ARTICLE VII — VOTING BY SECRET BALLOT

Voting for election to the Faculty Senate, election to the Faculty Affairs Committee, election of the Chair and Vice-Chair of the PAC, amendment of these bylaws and all personnel action decisions will be by secret ballot. Any faculty member can request a secret-ballot vote on any other issue. Voting will be by secret ballot on that issue if any other faculty member seconds the request.

ARTICLE VIII — AMENDMENT

Any member of the Law Faculty may propose amendments to these bylaws. A proposed amendment to these bylaws must be submitted in writing at a faculty meeting and referred to the Faculty Affairs Committee. At a subsequent faculty meeting, not sooner than thirty days after the submission of the proposed amendment, the Faculty Affairs Committee will report its recommendation regarding the proposed amendment. The Law Faculty will determine by majority vote whether to submit the amendment to a secret ballot. A vote of two-thirds of those casting secret ballots is required to amend. These procedures will not be required for amendment of the “Other Policies and Procedures” referenced in Article IX.

ARTICLE IX — OTHER POLICIES AND PROCEDURES

These bylaws incorporate by reference all other policies and procedures adopted by the Law Faculty or established by the Dean, the Provost, President or Board of Trustees of CSU, including, but not limited to, policies and procedures for hiring, promotion, tenure and professional leaves.

Approved by faculty vote May 14, 2009.

Re: Year End Status Report – Academic Standards Committee Report

This report provides an update on various items within the jurisdiction and charges of the Academic Standards Committee. This report also summarizes the actions taken by the Academic Standards Committee regarding petitions filed after Spring Semester 2011 and includes petitions decided through April 2012. The Dean will be advised of the resolution of any additional petitions the Committee may receive before the end of the academic year.

A. Student Petitions

During the period covered by this report, the Committee decided a total of 29 petitions. This is a decrease from a high of 41 petitions in 2010-11, and 66 petitions in 2009-10. The Committee granted a total of 24 petitions, including all 6 faculty requests to change student grades. Excluding the faculty grade change petitions, the Committee granted 18 student petitions and denied 4. One student petition is currently pending before the Committee. There was a reduction in the number of petitions filed by both faculty and students as compared with last year: In 2010-11 there were 14 faculty grade change petitions and 28 student petitions, compared to 6 faculty petitions and 23 student petitions in 2010-11.

Discussion

Faculty Grade Change Requests

The Committee continued to receive a steady stream of grade change requests from faculty members. The vast majority of these requests continue to be for “computational or clerical error” under Academic Regulation 2.4(c)(1).

Student Grade Change Petitions

The Committee denied all 3 grade change petitions filed by students in 2011-12. In the Committee’s analysis, none of the student petitions satisfied the relevant sections of Academic Regulation 2.4(d)(4).2

Probation and Reduction of 2-Year Waiting Period

The Committee received 4 petitions for a reduction of the mandatory 2-year waiting period before an academically dismissed student may reapply to the law school. The Committee approved 3 of these petitions on its merits and denied 1. The Committee did not receive any petitions for probation, which is a reduction from 9 such petitions received in 2010-11, and 13 in 2009-10.

Late and Retroactive Withdrawal from Course(s)

The Committee received 6 petitions to withdraw from a course or courses after the deadline. The Committee generally takes a liberal approach to granting petitions to withdraw from law courses after the deadline, but reviews each petition on its individual merits. All 6 of the petitions for late withdrawal were granted.

B. Committee Charges

Charge 1—Reg. 2.4(d)(4)(a): “review, and if appropriate, propose a revision to Academic Regulation 2.4(d)(4)(a) (and, if necessary to 2.4(c)(2)), regarding the circumstances under which the Committee may hear a student petition for a change of grade.”

Academic Regulation 2.4(d)(4)(a) allowed a student to petition for a change of grade on the grounds that the grade awarded was “arbitrary or not in accord with the grading standards applied to the other members of the class because of factors or circumstances extraneous to the grading process itself.” In past years, students have

2 As indicated in the chart above, the Committee also received and approved 2 student petitions for grade change based on the unique circumstance where their exams had been lost.
petitioned for a change of grade on the ground that a grade awarded was "arbitrary" for a variety of reasons, including claims that they disagreed with the professor's assessment of their performance, that they did not perform at their best on the day of an exam, or that the professor did not use a numerical grading rubric.

The second part of the above standard ("not in accord with the grading standards," etc.) has proved confusing, and no one seems to be sure what its original intended meaning was. Students have utilized it to appeal grades based on unfavorable exam conditions, such as a computer crash or an unusually cold exam room.

Some schools do not allow grade appeals at all, while others permit challenges only on the basis of computational or clerical error. Still others allow grade appeals on grounds that the grading was "arbitrary and capricious" or the result of demonstrable personal bias by the professor toward the student.

Last year's Academic Standards Committee found that the Committee was receiving a number of non-meritorious petitions for grade changes that really did not fit within the meaning of existing Regulation 2.4(d)(4)(a). Last year's Committee Chair, Prof. Claire May, began the task of trying to clarify the grounds for student grade appeals; this year's Committee was charged with completing that task. One suggestion made last year was to include in the Regulation examples of what would not be considered grounds for appeal.

The Committee discussed the above issues and proposed revisions to the language of Regulation 2.4(d)(4)(a), which were adopted at the February faculty meeting. New Regulation 2.4(d)(4)(a) reads as follows:

2.4 Grade Dispute Procedures, Grade Appeals and Changes of Grade
(d) Student Petitions for a Change of Grade: Petitions to the Academic Standards Committee

4. A student may petition the Academic Standards Committee for a change of grade to the grade of "P" or "W." Such a change of grade shall be awarded only in cases in which the student has satisfied the Academic Standards Committee by clear and convincing evidence that:
   a. The grade awarded was arbitrary or capricious, but in no event shall the Committee re-grade or otherwise evaluate the petitioning student's examinations or other course work, or that of other students in the course.

Examples of what shall not constitute proof of arbitrary or capricious grading within the meaning of the above regulation include, but shall not be limited to, the following:
   --disagreement with the professor's evaluation of the merits or quality of the student's work;
   --criticism of the merits of a professor's examination or the professor's grading methodology;
--a student's claim that his or her work did not accurately reflect his or her knowledge of the material.

Charge 2- Reg. 4.6: "review (with input from the Student Bar Association) and, if appropriate, propose a revision to our Pass/C-/D+/D/F policy, currently reflected in Academic Regulation 4.6."

The Committee has discussed existing Regulation 4.6 this year; this Regulation had also been a part of the Committee's discussions over the past several years, under Professor Claire May as Chair. This year, the Committee discussed extensively the appropriateness of our existing policy, as reflected in Regulation 4.6. The Committee also consulted with the Student Bar Association on this issue. Ultimately, the majority of Committee members voted in favor of keeping the existing Regulation 4.6; thus, the Committee did not bring up this matter before the entire faculty.

Charge 3—Reg. 3.6(a): "review, and if appropriate, propose a policy similar to Academic Regulation 3.6(a) regarding the consequences for a student's failure to submit a take-home examination within the time deadline established by the professor."

While Regulation 3.6(a) establishes that a student who fails to appear for a scheduled examination shall receive a final grade of "F," there is no comparable regulation providing for failure to submit a take-home examination by the deadline established by the professor. The charge asked the Committee to come up with such a policy.

The Committee noticed several ambiguities in the wording of Regulation 3.6(a) and thus proposed revisions, which were adopted at the April faculty meeting.

3.6 Examinations and Examination Scheduling

(a) Failure to Appear for a Scheduled In-School Final Examination

Unless the student obtains advance permission from the Dean to take a scheduled in-school final examination at another time, any student who fails to appear for such examination shall receive a grade of "F" for that examination or, if the examination is graded numerically, a zero for that examination. Permission to take an in-school final examination at a different time will be granted only upon a showing of good cause. Unless the student obtains advance permission from the Dean to take a rescheduled in-school final examination at another time, any student who fails to appear for such rescheduled examination shall receive a grade of "F" for that examination or, if the examination is graded numerically, a zero for that examination.

A professor shall also have discretion to stipulate that failure to take the final examination in the course shall constitute a failure to complete the requirements of the course and shall result in a final grade of "F" being awarded for the course.
Charge 3—New Regulation 3.6(b) regarding Take-Home Final Examinations

Apparently problems have arisen when students have turned in take-home final examinations late. There is currently no academic regulation governing this matter. We therefore recommended that a new section 3.6(b) be added, which was approved at the April faculty meeting. The text of new Regulation 3.6(b) states as follows:

(b) Failure to Submit a Take-Home Final Examination by the Deadline Established by the Faculty Member

Unless the student obtains advance permission from the Dean to submit a take-home final examination at a different time, any student who does not submit such examination by the deadline established by the faculty member shall receive a grade of “F” for that examination or, if the examination is graded numerically, a zero for that examination, unless the faculty member has given notice to the class in advance of the final examination of a different system of penalties for failure to submit such examination on time. Permission to submit a take-home final examination at a different time will be granted only upon a showing of good cause. Unless the student obtains advance permission from the Dean to submit a rescheduled take-home final examination at a different time, any student who fails to submit such examination by the rescheduled deadline shall receive a grade of “F” for that examination or, if the examination is graded numerically, a zero for that examination.

A professor shall also have discretion to stipulate that failure to submit a take-home final examination by the established or rescheduled deadline shall constitute a failure to complete the requirements of the course and shall result in a final grade of “F” being awarded for the course.

Charge 3—New Regulations 3.6(c): Exceptions to Regs. 3.6(a) and 3.6(b)

The Committee thought it advisable explicitly to include exceptions to the two foregoing Regulations in case of extraordinary unforeseeable emergency, such as a student being involved in an automobile accident on the way to school to take an in-school final exam or submit a take-home final exam by a designated deadline. The Committee proposed revisions to Regulations 3.6(c), which were adopted at the April faculty meeting:

(c) Exceptions to Academic Regulations 3.6(a) and 3.6(b) for Unforeseeable Emergencies

Exceptions to the requirements of Academic Regulations 3.6(a) and 3.6(b) may be granted by the Dean only in cases of extraordinary unforeseeable emergencies, and provided that the student notifies the Dean as soon as practicable of the circumstances of the emergency.
Charge 4—Reg. 5.1: “review, and if appropriate, propose a revision to our policies regarding students who withdraw from law school voluntarily during the first year; specifically whether such students, if they completed the Fall semester, should be limited to one additional semester to attain a 2.0 [Grade Point Average] rather than completing “the first Spring semester” as provided in Academic Regulations 5.1.”

A student who fails to attain a 2.00 GPA after the first semester of his or her first year and chooses to remain in school must attain a 2.00 by the end of the immediately following Spring semester. Hence that student has only two semesters to attain the required 2.00 or else be dismissed. However, under the existing regulation, if a student voluntarily withdraws after the first Fall semester and then returns in the following Fall semester, that student has an additional two semesters to attain a 2.00 (since the student can't be dismissed before completing the “first Spring semester”), for a total of three semesters. It was thought that this gave the second student an unfair advantage over the first.

The Committee proposed a solution whereby every student would be given two, but only two, semesters (not including Summer terms) to attain a 2.00 average before being dismissed. The Committee therefore recommended eliminating existing reg. 5.1 and replacing it with a new provision, the text of which was adopted at the February faculty meeting.

5.1 Dismissal
Any student who fails to achieve a cumulative Grade Point Average of 2.00 or higher upon completion of two full semesters, not including Summer semesters, shall be dismissed. Any student who falls below a cumulative Grade Point Average of 2.00 in any semester thereafter, including Summer semesters, shall be dismissed.

Conclusion

I would like to extend my gratitude to all those who served on the Academic Standards Committee during the period covered by this report:

Professors Mickey Davis, Peter Garlock, Steve Lazarus, Brian Glassman, and Pam Daiker-Middaugh; student members Lon'Cherie Billingley, Sarah Kendig, and Peter Zahirshey; and Assistant Dean Jean Lifter for her countless and invaluable contributions to the work of the Committee. In particular, I would like to thank Professor Peter Garlock for his meticulous work in drafting various revisions to the above-mentioned Regulations.

RE: Admissions Committee
DATE: May 31, 2012

The Admission Committee began meeting in January of 2012 and met almost weekly for most of the Spring Semester. Because the committee had almost all new members, the first two meetings in January of 2012 were primarily orientation meetings.

The Admissions Committee conducted more than 70 full file reviews of LCOP applicants. Depending on the complexity of the application file, each review takes between 10 and 45 minutes. In addition to LCOP applicants, the Committee reviewed several applicants who disclosed criminal histories to determine if their past criminal conduct should preclude them from admission. Members of the Committee also assisted the Admissions Office with Admitted Student Weekend.

Finally, we received a draft policy for transferring LL.M. course credits (either from our own institution or from another institution, including foreign institutions) to our J.D. program from the Graduate Studies, International Programs & Joint-Degree Committee. Members of the Admissions Committee conducted research concerning the appropriate standards and suggested changes to the draft policy reflecting admission practices at our law school. The Committee approved the revised policy.

If you have any additional questions or need additional information, please let me know.

Re: Committee Year-End Report

Date: May 31, 2012

During the 2011-2012 academic year, I chaired two law school committees: the Awards Committee and the Cleveland-Marshall Summer Research Grants Committee.

I. Awards Committee

Charge:

The Awards and Competitions Committee should:

1. make decisions on student awards;
2. work to assure that the awards program properly recognizes the academic and public service accomplishments of our students; and
3. work with the administration to assure good attendance at the ceremony.

Actions Taken:

The Chair solicited nominations for student writing awards from faculty members. The committee met, discussed, and selected the awardees from the nominated papers. The Chair hosted the Annual Awards Ceremony held on November 1, 2011; committee members participated in giving awards. The Chair sent emails encouraging faculty members to attend the Awards Ceremony.

Re: Annual Report of the Cleveland Marshall Fund/Baker & Hostetler Committee
Date: May 31, 2012

I. Introduction and Committee Charge

The Cleveland Marshall Fund/Baker & Hostetler Committee is charged with the following duties:

1. Planning and implementing Visiting Scholar events in the current year;

2. Developing a proposed budget for the Cleveland-Marshall Fund for submission to the faculty;

3. Selecting Visiting Scholars and making plans for upcoming academic years.

Below is a summary of committee activities for 2011-2012.

II. 2011-2012 Visiting Scholars

1. Michael D. Green
Professor Michael D. Green visited with us between October 4 and 6, 2011. Professor Green is the Bess and Walter Williams Distinguished Chair, Wake Forest School of Law. He currently serves as a Co-Reporter for the Restatement (Third) of Torts: Liability for Physical Harm, a publication of the American Law Institute. He is one of the country’s best-known experts in the area of tort law and has recently been ranked as the 6th most cited law professor writing about torts and product liability. Professor Green is a co-author of one of the best selling torts casebooks and of the most popular products liability text, and is also a co-author of the Reference Guide on Epidemiology in the Federal Judicial Center’s Reference Manual on Scientific Evidence, which serves as a reference on scientific disciplines for federal judges.

The committee offered the following events:

Wednesday, October 5: Faculty Jurisprudence Conversation, 12:15-1:30 P.M., "FELA: Cross-breeding Tort with Compensation Systems."

Wednesday, October 5: Moot Court Room Public Lecture 5:00 P.M., “Deforming Tort Law: The Role of the American Jury.”
Thursday, October 6: Faculty Luncheon, Faculty Presentation Room, 12:00-1:15 P.M., "Reflections on Restating."

Thursday, October 6 Visit to Professor Peter Garlock’s Torts Class, 2:45-4:00 P.M.

2. Professor Philip Hamburger
Professor Philip Hamburger, the Maurice and Hilda Friedman Professor of Law at Columbia Law School, visited us with between March 20 and 22, 2012. Philip Hamburger’s scholarship focuses on constitutional law and its history. His publications include Separation of Church and State (Harvard 2002); "Religious Liberty in Philadelphia," Emory Law Journal (2005); "The New Censorship: Institutional Review Boards," Supreme Court Review (2004); "More is Less," Virginia Law Review (2004); "Law and Judicial Duty," George Washington Law Review (2003); "Liberality," Texas Law Review (2002); "Revolution and Judicial Review: Chief Justice Holt’s Opinion in City of London v. Wood," Columbia Law Review (1994). Before coming to Columbia, Hamburger was the John P. Wilson Professor at the University of Chicago Law School, where he was the Director of the Bigelow Program and the Legal History Program. Earlier, he was the Oswald Symyster Colclough Research Professor at George Washington University Law School and a Professor at the University of Connecticut Law School. He has been a Visiting Professor at the University of Virginia Law School and at Northwestern Law School, where he was the Jack N. Pritzker Distinguished Visiting Professor of Law.

The committee offered the following events in conjunction with Professor Hamburger’s visit:

Tuesday, March 20 Faculty Jurisprudence Luncheon Conversation, Jones Day Room 12:15-1:20 P.M. His talk centered on his article "Getting Permission."

Tuesday, March 20: Moot Court Room Public Lecture 5:00 P.M., "Censorship and Death." The reading was his article "Getting Permission."

Wednesday, March 21: Faculty Luncheon, Faculty Presentation Room, 12:00-1:15 P.M. His topic was "Unconstitutional Conditions: The Irrelevance of Consent."

III. The Proposed 2013 Fiscal Year Budget

The Cleveland-Marshall Fund Baker Hostetler Fund (CMF/BH) Committee is charged with proposing a budget for the Cleveland-Marshall Fund (CMF) and sending it forward to the faculty. The Board of Trustees of the University manages the CMF monies. The Trustees direct and/or approve investment decisions regarding the funds held by the fund custodian (Key Bank) and approve the annual budgets for the funds sent forward by the law school. The value of the portfolio on December 31, 2010 (the last measuring point for assessing FY12 spendable income from investment) was $4,752,406.97. Corresponding spendable income for FY 2012 was $222,646. The value of the portfolio on December 31, 2011 (the last measuring point for assessing FY13 spendable income from investment) was $4,234,199. Corresponding spendable income for FY 2013 is $231,573.36, representing a 4 percent increase over spendable income from the fund in FY 2012.

Attached is the detailed budget memo and budget previously submitted to the faculty for approval.

IV. Plans for FY 2013 and Beyond

The CMF-BH Fund solicited suggestions from faculty twice during the academic year and met to consider several of those names earlier this spring. Although there was substantial agreement on the suitability of some of the names submitted, it was the sense of the committee that we should change directions, moving away from a two speaker model and instead offering one speaker in the course of an academic year and offering a larger, more elaborate program featuring that speaker. It was also the sense of the committee that we should look well beyond the names that were in consideration if in fact we envisioned a speaker of greater renown. One suggestion offered subsequent to the meeting was that the future speaker might be tied to one of the new health law initiatives. If such a speaker is envisioned for academic year 2012-2013, it is recommended that a member or members of the health law program be added to the CMF-BH committee for the upcoming academic year. An offer should ideally launched within the next few months for a spring 2013 event.

Re: Cleveland-Marshall Fund Proposed Budget FY 2013

I. Introduction

The Cleveland-Marshall Fund Baker Hostetler Fund (CMF/BH) Committee is charged with proposing a budget for the Cleveland-Marshall Fund (CMF) and sending it forward to the faculty. The Board of Trustees of the University manages the CMF monies. The Trustees direct and/or approve investment decisions regarding the funds held by the fund custodian (Key Bank) and approve the annual budgets for the funds sent forward by the law school. The value of the portfolio on December 31, 2010 (the last measuring point for assessing FY12 spendable income from investment)$^1$ was $4,752,406.97. Corresponding spendable income for FY 2012 was $222,646. The value of the portfolio on December 31, 2011 (the last measuring point for assessing FY13 spendable income from investment) was $4,234,199. Corresponding spendable income for FY 2013 is $231,573.36, representing a 4 percent increase over spendable income from the fund in FY 2012.

Because of market fluctuations, there have been changes in the amount of spendable income over the past several years. To put this into perspective, below are the spendable amounts that have been available per fiscal year (FY) for the last several years (pre-2006 data was provided several years ago to past CMF Committee members by former budget director Victoria Plata):

$^1$ Per our fund administrator at Key Bank, spendable income for the Cleveland-Marshall Fund is calculated by taking the month-end market value of the total portfolio for each month of a calendar year and then averaging those amounts and finally multiplying the average by 5%. Because spendable income from investment is not solely calculated by applying a multiplier to the total portfolio value at the end of a calendar year, this helps to explain why a lower principal amount at the end of a calendar year may yield a higher spendable income than in a year with a higher end of the calendar year principal balance. The formula for determining spendable income is required by the Ohio State Institutional Trust Funds Act, first enacted in 1999.

In some years we have spent more than was available to us from spendable income. We have done this by using monies available from carry forward from previous years and/or from a reserve account ("Transition Funds"). In FY 2004 and 2005 we used Transition Funds (FY 2004 $33,528; FY 2005 $18,505). There was also a proposal from the 2007 CMF/BH Committee to use Transition Funds in FY 2008 but a look at what appears to be the final FY 2008 CMF budget does not indicate that this occurred. As the income from the CM Fund has fallen in the last few years, we have curbed some expenditures. This meant reductions in some areas for FY 2010, the most noteworthy being to Faculty Support/Research. Because of the continuing reductions in spendable income for FY 2011, we made further cuts, and again drew from Transition Funds to help fund student scholarships ($35,000).

Having reviewed the actual expenditures for FY 2011 and FY 2012 (through March 5, 2012), we recommend the budget attached for FY 2013. In summary, because spendable income is up approximately 4 percent for FY 2013, because this is the third year of growth in investment income and as a result of predicted carryovers from FY 2012, we anticipate being able to meet our proposed budget without reducing most amounts available in FY 2012 and without drawing from Transition Funds. We also anticipate being able to increase available funds in a few areas. Although there has been an increase over FY 2012 in spendable income for FY 2013, we are mindful of the fact that spendable income for FY 2013, at $231,573.36, is still among the lowest spendable incomes since FY 2000 and is below the average amount of spendable income for the period from FY 2000 through FY 2013 ($250,186). Also, while this is the third year of increase in investment income, this year’s growth rate was 4 percent versus last year’s 10 percent. Hence, some fiscal prudence is still in order for use of these funds.

A note about the FY 2013 proposed amounts shown below and in the budget attached: The figures shown below as the FY 2013 proposed amounts are the amounts budgeted, that is, the amount of money to be drawn from spendable income earned on our investment portfolio. Additional amounts may be drawn from carryover (funds unspent in a previous fiscal year) or from Transition Funds. The “total available” (far right column of the budget attached) shows the actual amount that will be used to meet the expenditures of a particular budget line and is a combination of money from spendable income and/or from carry over and/or from Transition Funds.

We recommend the budget attached. Some of the notable items in the proposal are:

1. Spending tied to investment income and carry forward only with no use of Transition Funds
2. Maintenance of Student Scholarships budget line amount: $75,000
3. Maintenance of the Faculty Support/Research budget line amount: $75,000
4. Increase in Faculty Summer Research budget line amount: $82,000

II. Discussion of Notable Items

1. Spending tied to investment income and carry forward only with no use of Transition Funds

Although we continue to be in a very uncertain financial climate, the increase in spendable income in FY 2012 means that we need not draw from Transition Funds for FY 2012. We believe that it is wise to use only funds earned on the investment and any carry forward funds from previous years rather than reserve funds. This allows us to have a cushion for what may come in the future.

2. Maintenance of Student Scholarships budget line amount

Since FY 2001, we have funded some Student Scholarships out of the CMF budget. It was the sense of the faculty that providing such support was vital to attracting and retaining good students and in demonstrating our collective commitment to students. As we noted in previous years, the Student Scholarships line item in the CMF budget, while a significant outlay from the fund, represents only about 5% of the total amount of scholarships that we award to students at our institution—there are other sources of funds. We once more reiterate the suggestion made last year in this regard; there should be greater faculty involvement in the creation of policy for awarding scholarship funds; it is not clear that there is any such faculty-enunciated policy at present. Given recent concerns about student quality, the difficult economic times, and the increasing need to attract the best students, we need to deploy the best strategies possible in using scholarship funds. 3. Maintenance of the for Faculty Support/Research budget line amount

In FY 2011 we reduced the budget for Faculty Support/Research. This covers faculty travel. As was noted last year, looking across the budget, this represented the largest absolute reduction in the FY 2011 budget. Because this is the only significant source of faculty travel funding for the law faculty, the size of the cut had severe impact. This has meant, among other things, the imposition of spending limits for faculty travel. While spending limits and other cost-savings measures are prudent in this financial climate, we believe that providing faculty with an adequate level of funding is crucial to helping to grow our national reputation. It is all the more important that we marshal these resources in a way that best accomplishes this goal. In FY 2011 we reduced the budgeted amount for this item to $55,000 and supplemented with approximately $5,000 carry forward. For FY 2012 we increased Faculty Support/Research to $75,000, and added an anticipated carry forward of approximately $5,000. For FY 2013 we propose to maintain the budgeted amount of $75,000 with an estimated carryover of $25,000. Maintaining the $75,000 budget line allows us to take advantage of the recently better performance of the portfolio, and also offers some payback on the savings gained from the sacrifices made by faculty travelers in FY 2010, FY 2011 and FY 2012. Finally, the budgeted amount of $75,000 is still less than the historic budgeted high of $95,000 in FY 2009.
Caution should still be used in expending these funds. Below are some historic amounts for this category followed by the proposed amount for FY 2013:

4. Increase in Faculty Summer Research budget line amount

Faculty summer research has traditionally been funded by a combination of "hard" (drawn from the principal law school budget) and "soft" (variable, auxiliary monies, in this case, CMF money) funds. This means that we need to budget to cover only a portion of the actual amount needed to fund the Faculty Summer Research line item.

We propose a budget line amount that is more in line with the average budgeted amount in this area since 2006. As was true last fiscal year, there is once again a large carry forward projected. Apparently the large carry forward may be at least partly attributed to relatively fewer summer grants being awarded in FY 2011 and FY 2012. As was noted last year, as a general matter it is certainly better to end in the black (positive carryover) rather than in the red (negative carryover). However, in order to make more effective use of these funds, this year's CMF/SH committee has attempted to more accurately predict use of these funds by consulting with the summer grants committee.
III. Conclusion

We have more spendable income from investment for FY 2013 than was available in FY 2012, and as a result, we propose maintaining many budget lines established in FY 2012 and in a few cases increasing amounts over FY 2012 budgeted amounts. Our spending policy should, however, still be one of cautious optimism.

2011-2012 Bar Committee Report

Dean’s Directive to the Committee

1. review the decline in our bar passage rate since its peak at 90% in 2007, and propose an update to the Bar Passage Plan, specifically identifying any new tactics or programs or reorganization of our current structure that may help advance the Plan’s goals in light of newly acquired data; and

2. as required by the Plan, prepare an annual report for the Board of Trustees, by June 30, 2012, on implementation of the Plan and on the performance of our graduates on the Ohio Bar Exam.

Committee’s Response to Directive 1:

The committee met a number of times during 2011-12 AY to discuss directive number 1. It quickly became evident that we could not propose new tactics and programs until we developed more comprehensive data for identifying our students’ strengths and weaknesses related to the bar exam. Accordingly, we identified more than 50 factors that might correlate with bar performance, ranging from entering credentials to academic performance throughout law school, courses taken, participation in AEP, enrollment in OBEST, time spent studying for the bar and myriad other factors. We next worked to narrow down that list to the most meaningful factors and to identify possible sources of information with the following goal in mind:

Goal: To develop a fully integrated system for gathering and storage of data relevant to students’ bar exam performance. The system must be conducive to multivariate regression analysis and other forms of data manipulation that allow us to identify the specific factors that alone, and in particular combinations, accurately predict and improve our students’ bar performance. The system must also be maintained at university and/or law school institutional level rather than remaining the responsibility of the Bar Pass or other faculty committee.

Law school records office Marcie Rechner was instrumental in helping us identify key data maintained at the law school and elsewhere on campus and helping us negotiate the bureaucracy and technological impediments to gathering this information in one place and in a format that allows for regression analyses. During the second semester Associate Dean Robertson worked closely with Tom Geaghan, CSU Director of Institutional Research, to mine the available databases for relevant information. Mr. Geaghan was able to identify correlations between bar passage and factors such as LSAT scores, undergrad gpa, first year law school gpa, law school graduation gpa, participation in PMBR, enrollment in OBEST and taking practice MPTs. While this project represents a monumental step forward in identifying areas where additional support may be needed for students, thus providing guidance on how to strengthen our bar passage program, the results are based on a very limited data set. This important data-gathering and analysis project continues under the very able direction of Associate Dean Robertson.

Committee members also served as a sounding board throughout the year to Bar Program Director McGinty, providing feedback on various issues she brought to the committee, such as updating the information provided to students entering their second year of law students.

The individual counseling of students as they embark on the second year of law school continues to be very effective in making clear to students what they need to do throughout the remainder of their time at CM to prepare academically, financially and emotionally to pass the bar.

Another concern the Committee discussed was that there seems to be a substantial increase in the number of students who encounter difficulties passing their character and fitness review which is a prerequisite for sitting for the bar exam in Ohio and elsewhere. Students need to be counseled to start this review process early and to fully disclose all information to the National Board of Bar Examiners.

An annual report was prepared from 2004 through 2010 over the summer by the committee chair and the associate dean serving ex officio on the committee. This is a very time consuming task. Although the report is circulated to CSU administrators and the law faculty each year, it appears that no one except the law school dean and committee members have ever paid any attention to the information contained in the annual reports.

Initially the committee chair took the lead and did most of the work on the report with significant input from the associate dean. In recent years, however, the associate dean’s hands-on management of the bar pass program increased substantially, making the associate dean the more logical choice to take the lead in drafting the report.

Associate Dean Robertson and I believe that our time would be better spent focusing our time and energies gathering and analyzing data relevant to strengthening the bar pass program rather than writing yet another comprehensive report. We would like to meet with you at your convenience to discuss the concept of the annual report and other issues, including the appropriate role of the bar pass committee at this stage of the program’s development. Specific issues include the staffing of the committee and its role in oversight of the bar program in general and the new academic support model being implemented this fall.
MEMORANDUM

To: Dean Craig Boise
From: Professor Patti Falk
Re: Committee Year-End Report
Date: May 31, 2012

During the 2011-2012 academic year, I chaired two law school committees: the Awards Committee and the Cleveland-Marshall Summer Research Grants Committee.

I. Cleveland-Marshall Summer Research Grants Committee

Charge:

The Committee should review summer research grant applications and make recommendations to the Dean as to which applicants should be funded.

Actions Taken:

The Chair solicited applications for summer research grants from faculty members. The committee met and discussed the applications. The committee prepared a memo containing its recommendations. On March 23, 2012, the committee submitted its recommendations to the Dean.

From: Brian Ray, Chair Clerkship Committee 2011-12

Re: Final Committee Report 2011-2012

The Clerkship Committee this year focused on continuing the clerkship recruitment and education program we began developing last year with the goal of increasing both the number and quality of clerkship applicants. We work closely with Jen Blaga and Jessica Mathewson in the Office of Career Planning. Both Jen and Jessica attend most of our meetings and plan and execute all of our events.

This year our events were well attended and generally well received, and we succeeded in nearly doubling the number of applicants from approximately 6 in fall 2010 to 12 in fall 2012. Unfortunately, none of our applicants obtained a clerkship in this process, although several interviewed with one or more judges, including one interview with a magistrate judge in West Virginia. We recognized from the beginning that this would be a multi-year process, and we continue to focus on the rising 3L class this year to encourage the top 25% of students to consider applying at the state or federal level.

Events

We have developed a schedule of two major clerkship events each year. First, we hold a judges forum early in the spring semester. This event has two objectives: (1) to expose students to the importance of clerking and the benefits it provides; and (2) to give judges who will be hiring clerks in the following fall some exposure to Cleveland-Marshall. This spring we hosted federal district court judges James Gwin and Donald Nugent and federal magistrate judge Kathleen Burke. The event was well attended but there was some concern from several students that the judges appeared to communicate that clerkships were beyond the reach of all but the most highly qualified students.

The second event is a “nuts-and-bolts” of application process meeting focused specifically on rising 3Ls and graduating students interested in applying. We have been fortunate to have Judge Dan Polster’s career clerk, Mary Hughes, a Cleveland-Marshall graduate, host this event for the past two years. This year Linda Kovach, another Cleveland-Marshall graduate and former Polster clerk, also spoke at the event. This forum provides a detailed outline of the steps in the application process as well as insight into what judges are looking for and the questions candidates can expect in an interview. This event also was well attended this year.
Clerkship Handbook

A major initiative we began last year and completed this year was a complete rewrite of the Judicial Clerkship Handbook. We looked at several handbooks from other Law Schools and modeled ours on the Georgetown Handbook. This document provides comprehensive information on the kinds of clerkships available as well as detailed advice on the application process. Jessica Mathewson is working with student assistants to compile the revisions into a final document for distribution this fall.

Rising 3L Targeting

For the second time, with the help of OCP, we have identified the students in the top 25% of the class and divided them among ourselves. We contact each student personally via e-mail and phone and ask them to consider applying for clerkships as well as offering to provide advice and assistance in the process. We hope that over time this effort will result in a substantial increase on the number of students from the top quarter of our class applying for clerkships.

Future Plans

In addition to continuing the two annual events and the 3L-targeting initiative, we have discussed several other possible initiatives to both increase the number and quality of applicants as well as our placement rate. These include:

Judicial CLE: we discussed the possibility of hosting events that would provide judicial CLE credit. Hosting events like these would increase exposure to Cleveland-Marshall and provide possible networking opportunities for faculty.

Judicial Alumni Event: given Cleveland-Marshall’s extensive judicial alumni network we considered planning an annual event in the fall semester inviting both Cleveland-Marshall alumni judges as well as the other federal and state judges in the region to some kind of evening event. The potential benefit would be to expose more judges to Cleveland-Marshall and also highlight this strong network.

From: Jonathan Witmer-Rich, Chair, Curriculum Committee 2011-2012

Re: Year-end report

The following is the report of the Curriculum Committee for the 2011-2012 academic year, setting forth the activities of the committee.

I. Summer Sports and Entertainment Law Academy. The Committee, at the request of Associate Dean Mark Sundahl, approved the creation of the Summer Sports and Entertainment Law Academy. Creation of this academy included several actions by the Curriculum Committee, specifically:
   a. Approval of a new course, the Summer Sports and Entertainment Law Academy, to be taught by CSU Executive in Residence Peter Carfagna and adjunct professors Mark Avsec and David Shall.
   b. Approval of a credit hour variation for an existing course, Representing the Professional Athlete, (Carfagna), from 3 credits to 2 credits, for purpose of fitting that course within the Summer Academy.
   c. Approval of a credit hour variation for an existing course, Entertainment Law, (Carfagna), from 3 credits to 2 credits, for purpose of fitting that course within the Summer Academy.
   d. Approval of a new course, Representing the Musical Artist, by adjunct professor Marc Avsec, as part of the Summer Academy.
   e. Approval of Summer Academy externships, a special sub-set of externships to be available to students only through the Summer Academy.

II. Health Care Compliance Certificate Program. At the request of Professor Browne Lewis, the committee approved the creation of a Health Care Compliance Certificate Program. Creation of this program included the creation of several new courses:
a. Approval of a new course, Health Care Compliance, to be taught by adjunct professor Steve Sozio. (This course is available to students pursuing the Certificate as well as to any other CJM Law students who wish to enroll.)

b. Approval of a new course, Health Finance Law, to be taught by adjunct professor James Schuster. (This course is available to students pursuing the Certificate as well as to any other CJM Law students who wish to enroll.)

III. Experiential Skills Criteria. As a charge from the faculty related to the 2011 Curriculum Reform package, the Curriculum Committee formulated a new standard for Experiential Skills courses. The Committee met several times to discuss the revised criteria and evaluate the proposed language (drafted by Jonathan Witmer-Rich to reflect the committee's discussions). The Committee relied heavily on the guidance provided by the Curriculum Reform memorandum prepared by the Ad Hoc Curriculum Reform Committee, which set forth the Ad Hoc Committee's proposal and charge to the Curriculum Committee (which was adopted by the faculty in 2011). The revised standard was presented to and approved by the faculty in spring 2012.

IV. Other Activities.

a. Approved new course proposal, Fraud and Abuse in the Healthcare Industry, to be taught by adjunct professor David Schweighoefer.

b. Approved new course proposal, Trademark Law, to be taught by adjunct professor Thomas Adams.

c. Consideration of new course proposal, Transnational Law, to be taught by Professor Brian Ray. The Committee expressed general approval for this course, but had two questions. First, Professor Becker has taught a similar course in the past. After inquiry, Professor Becker confirmed that she has no intent to teach the course anytime soon and had no objection to Professor Ray teaching the course. Second, the Committee decided Professor Ray should meet with Mark Sundahl and Milena Sterio, who teach courses with some potentially overlapping content, to ensure that the courses are distinct and not redundant. The Committee has not yet heard a response to this comment, and thus has not yet taken any final action in approving this course. Professor Ray has confirmed that he does not plan to teach the course in 2012-2013, but hopes to teach it in the future. Thus the Committee will take this issue up again in the coming year.
d. Approved course hour variation for Comparative Constitutional Law, by Professor Brian Ray, permitting the course to be offered for 2 credits or 3 credits, at the option of the professor.

e. Approved cross-listing at C|M Law of Seminar on Financial System Integrity, taught by Professor Richard Gordon (CWRU Law), as part of CSU/CWRU Joint Legal Summer Associate Internship Program at KeyBank.

f. Approved change in name of the Urban Development Law Clinic to the Transactional Law Clinic.

Please let me know if you have any questions.
Memorandum

TO: Dean Craig Boise

FROM: Matthew W. Green Jr., Chair, Faculty Affairs Committee 2011-12

RE: End of year Final Committee Report

DATE: May 31, 2012

The following is the report of the Faculty Affairs Committee ("FAC") for the 2011-2012 academic year setting forth the charges of the committee, the resolution of those charges and matters that remain outstanding. The FAC had three items on its agenda this academic year: (1) making a recommendation to the Dean on Faculty applications for professional leave of absences; (2) making a recommendation to the Faculty on whether the bylaws should be amended to allow Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty the right to vote on the hiring and retention of the Dean; and (3) making a recommendation to the Dean on the travel policy. In addition, the FAC has been asked to deliberate on and make a recommendation to the Dean regarding a policy for handling courses with low enrollment. Finally, the FAC was advised this semester that in the upcoming academic year, the incoming FAC will be charged with reviewing proposed revisions to the Greenbook that will affect the law school. Each item is discussed below.

A. Professional Leave of Absences

One of the responsibilities of the FAC is to make a recommendation to the Dean on whether to approve Faculty applications for professional leave. Professors Kevin O’Neil, Brian Ray and Milena Sterio submitted professional leave applications for all or part of academic year 2012-2013. The FAC met on February 2, 2012 to discuss the applications and unanimously voted to recommend approval of the three applications. The FAC informed you of its decision that day.

B. Decanal Voting Rights

During the November 18, 2010 Faculty Meeting, Professors Carolyn Broering-Jacobs and Kenneth Kowalski proposed that the Faculty bylaws be amended to allow Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty the right to vote on the hiring and retention of the Dean. Professors Broering-Jacobs and Kowalski referred the matter to the FAC but requested that the FAC wait to consider the issue until the Dean search that was in progress at that time was concluded. The FAC took up the voting rights issue this year. To assist with making its recommendation to the Faculty, the FAC requested that the sponsors of the proposed amendment submit written comments to the FAC indicating why they believed the proposal should be adopted and held a brown bag lunch on March 26, 2012 so that other members of the Faculty could discuss the proposal and the propriety of adopting it. Individual members of the FAC also spoke with members of the Faculty regarding the proposal, particularly those who had a hand in drafting the bylaws, to ascertain, among other things, the purpose behind the current proscription on decanal voting rights. The FAC met on March 29 to discuss the information it gathered and to vote on whether to recommend amending the bylaws. After the vote, the FAC drafted a report setting forth its recommendation and the bases for it. The FAC’s report is attached to this memorandum. The FAC presented its report to the Faculty at the April 26, 2012 Faculty meeting. The Faculty voted on the matter at that meeting.

C. Travel Policy

At the April 14, 2011 Faculty Meeting, then Interim Dean Phyllis Crocker raised the issue of revising and updating the travel policy. She thought that it was appropriate to wait to do so until the new Dean was in place. She asked that the incoming FAC, in consultation with you, revisit and update the travel policy. I have attached to this memorandum the minutes from the April 14, 2011 Faculty meeting during which the travel policy issue was discussed (See the bolded text on page 2 of the attached minutes). You and I discussed this charge earlier this semester. You indicated that the travel policy recently had been updated but that if the FAC had any recommendations regarding the travel policy to submit them to you for your consideration. The FAC briefly discussed the travel policy during its February 2 meeting but did not come to a resolution on any proposals or changes to the policy. The incoming FAC, in consultation with you, may want to take up this issue next academic year.

D. Low Enrollment Policy

At the May 10, 2012 Faculty Meeting, Associate Dean Mark Sundahl announced a new policy regarding courses with low enrollment. Some Faculty expressed concerns about various aspects of the policy, including that any course with six or fewer students may be cancelled at the Dean’s discretion and that without Faculty consultation the Dean would determine what a Faculty member would do instead of teaching the cancelled course. A motion was made for the FAC to deliberate on this issue and recommend to the Dean options for handling courses with low enrollment. You indicated your support for submitting the matter to the FAC.

E. Greenbook Revisions

The FAC was recently asked to review recommendations on proposed amendments to the Greenbook. You have informed us that the FAC will take up the issue of reviewing the proposed amendments in the Fall.

Please let me know if you have any questions.
REPORT AND RECOMMENDATION OF THE FACULTY AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON WHETHER TO AMEND THE BYLAWS TO ALLOW CLINICAL AND LEGAL WRITING PROFESSORS A VOTE ON THE HIRING AND RETENTION OF THE DEAN

The following is the Report and Recommendation of the Faculty Affairs Committee (the “FAC”) regarding a proposed amendment to Article II, Section 2 of the bylaws to allow Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty a vote on the hiring and retention of the Dean. (See Proposed Amendment to Article II, Section 2 of the Bylaws—attached as Attachment B).2 Professors Carolyn Broering-Jacobs and Kenneth Kowalski proposed the amendment at the November 18, 2010 Faculty Meeting. Because the Faculty was then involved in a Dean search, Professors Broering-Jacobs and Kowalski asked that the FAC wait to consider the proposal until the Dean search concluded. This Report and Recommendation sets forth the issues that were referred to the FAC and the FAC’s resolution of those issues in connection with the proposed amendment.

The FAC was asked to decide two issues. The first issue regards its jurisdiction to consider the proposal; the second issue pertains to making a recommendation to the Faculty on the substance of the proposal. As to the jurisdictional issue, at the November 18, 2010 Faculty Meeting, it was suggested that a Faculty vote might be required to refer this particular voting rights issue to the FAC. The concern appeared to be that Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty currently cannot vote on matters related to the hiring and retention of the Dean, yet by virtue of the proposed amendment such Faculty were referring an amendment to the FAC related to decanal voting rights—an issue on which they cannot currently vote. Thus, the FAC was asked first to decide whether the proposal was properly before it. If the FAC believed the proposal was properly before it, it was tasked with making a recommendation to the Faculty on the substance of the proposal. If, however, the FAC determined that the Faculty was required to vote on whether the FAC had jurisdiction to consider the substance of the proposal, the FAC was directed both to (1) determine which members of the Faculty could vote (all members of the Faculty or only tenured, tenure-track Faculty) and (2) inform the Faculty of that determination so that the Faculty could then vote on the matter. Below is the resolution of the jurisdictional and substantive issues.

1 For the benefit of the Faculty, a copy of the Bylaws of the Faculty of the College of Law is attached to this Report and Recommendation as Attachment A.

2 At the outset, it is worth noting that at least as far as the last law school Dean search went, no Faculty member was technically allowed to vote on Dean candidates. This Recommendation and Recommendation, however, speaks in terms of a “vote” as that is the language set forth in the bylaws and the proposed amendment.
I. Jurisdiction

The FAC unanimously determined that it has jurisdiction to consider the proposed amendment and that a Faculty vote is not necessary to refer this issue to the FAC. The FAC concluded that Article VIII of the bylaws, which specifically addresses amending the bylaws, answers the jurisdictional question. Article VIII, in pertinent part, provides:

Any member of the Law Faculty may propose amendments to these bylaws. A proposed amendment to these bylaws must be submitted in writing at a faculty meeting and referred to the Faculty Affairs Committee.

(See Bylaws, Attachment A, Art. VIII).

Article VIII does not explain the procedure for submitting a proposed amendment of the bylaws to the FAC. It is silent on the matter. However, the first sentence of Article VIII is broadly worded. It provides that “[a]ny member of the Law Faculty may propose amendments to these bylaws.” Article II of the bylaws includes Clinical and Legal Writing Professors as members of the “Law Faculty.” (See id., Art. II). Moreover, Article VIII does not place restrictions on the ability of any member of the Law Faculty to “propose amendments to these bylaws” based on the subject matter of the proposal. The FAC believes, therefore, that a reasonable interpretation of Article VIII (considering silence on the issue of how a proposal is to be referred to the FAC) is that any member of the Law Faculty may submit a proposal to amend the bylaws to the FAC and no Faculty vote is required before they may do so.

The FAC does not believe that Article II, Section 2 of the bylaws alters its analysis. Article II, Section 2 provides that “Clinical Professors and Legal Writing Professors are not eligible to vote on matters related to hiring, tenure or promotion of tenured or tenure-track faculty, or the hiring or retention of the Dean.” (See id., Article II, Section 2) (emphasis added). The provision speaks explicitly to voting rights of Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty. Such Faculty cannot, among other things, vote on matters related to the hiring and retention of the Dean. In the FAC’s view, this provision might reasonably affect the ability of Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty to refer a proposed amendment to the FAC on the hiring and retention of the Dean if a vote were necessary to refer a proposed amendment to the FAC. Because Clinical and Legal Writing Professors cannot vote on matters related to the hiring and retention of the Dean, it might be reasonable to interpret the provision as barring such Faculty from voting on whether to submit a proposal to the FAC that regards the hiring and retention of the Dean. Article VIII, however, can reasonably be interpreted to mean that any member of the Law Faculty may propose an amendment to the bylaws by both submitting the proposal in writing at a Faculty meeting and referring it to the FAC, which any member of the Law Faculty may do. Thus, no vote is required to send a matter to the FAC regardless of the subject matter and Article II, Section 2 does not control under these circumstances.

The FAC’s interpretation of the bylaws on the jurisdictional issue may not be the only interpretation that might be drawn from the language of the bylaws. For the reasons explained, however, the FAC believes its interpretation is consistent with the plain language of Article VIII and is not explicitly undermined by the plain language of Article II, Section 2. Accordingly, the FAC determines that it has jurisdiction to consider the substantive issue.

II. Recommendation

After considering the language of Article II, Section 2 and the intent behind the provision and input from the Faculty on this issue, the FAC by a 3-to-2 vote recommends that the Faculty not adopt the proposed amendment to the bylaws. The FAC wants to make clear that its recommendation is not a reflection of a lack of respect or admiration for the Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty. Each member of the FAC recognizes the valuable contributions Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty make to the law school. Moreover, as the vote reflects, the FAC was divided on the issue of whether to recommend adoption of the proposed amendment. For the benefit of the Faculty and its vote on whether to amend the bylaws, this report sets forth the various issues the FAC considered in making its determination.

The FAC sought input on the jurisdictional issue and the substance of the proposal from several sources. First, it invited the sponsors of the proposal, Professors Broering-Jacobs and Kowalski, to provide the FAC with written comments setting forth the reasons they believed the proposal should be adopted (See Memorandum from Proposal Sponsors—attached as Attachment C). The FAC also held a brown bag lunch on March 26, 2012 so that other members of the Faculty could discuss the proposal and the propriety of adopting it. Twelve members of the Faculty attended the lunch. The FAC also invited Faculty who could not attend the brown bag lunch to provide comments via e-mail. Finally, several members on the FAC had discussions with members of the Law Faculty, particularly those who had a hand in drafting the bylaws, to ascertain, among other things, the purpose behind the current proscription on decanal voting rights. Below are the factors the FAC gleaned from the aforementioned sources and considered in its deliberation:

- The current policy was recently adopted and is consistent with the hiring of all tenure-track Faculty. The Faculty voted to adopt the bylaws in 2009. Thus, very recently a Faculty Bylaws Committee considered this very issue, and the Faculty decided that Clinical and Legal Writing Professors would not be allowed to vote on the hiring and retention of the Dean. Article II, Section 2 codified the existing practice of decanal hiring and is consistent with the hiring procedure for all tenure-track Faculty. Clinical and Legal Writing Professors cannot currently vote on the hiring (not just the tenure) of tenure-track Faculty. Although the Dean position is heavily administrative, it is a foregone conclusion that a candidate offered the position of Dean will in all likelihood expect to be granted tenure. Otherwise, it would be extremely unlikely that he or she would accept the position. Thus, there is a reasonable basis for treating decanal hiring the same as the hiring of other tenure-track faculty.
Voting Blocs and Scholarship. While some Faculty were concerned that Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty might vote as a bloc in expressing a preference for a particular Dean candidate, other Faculty dismissed such concerns as not reflective of informal discussions about past Dean candidates among Legal Writing Professors. Nevertheless, some tenured Faculty opined that all Faculty are likely to vote in favor of their own interests. To that end, some Faculty were concerned that because Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty are not required to engage in scholarship, they may be less likely than some tenured, tenure-track Faculty to take into account the importance of scholarship and the support for it (whether in terms of travel funds, teaching-load reductions or additional research and clerical support for productive scholars) in selecting a Dean. Tenured, tenure-track Faculty must engage in scholarship to earn tenure or to become full professors. In addition, some Faculty expressed that they enjoy the scholarship function of being a Law Professor and indeed joined the academy to engage in scholarship. Moreover, scholarship is important to the national reputation of the law school. There are currently twelve (12) Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty members. Some Faculty expressed concern about the possibility of permitting a significant segment of the Faculty to express their preference for Dean candidates when such Faculty may not share with some tenured, tenure-track Faculty a vision regarding the importance of scholarship and the need for scholarly support. Considering the need to make hard decisions regarding increasingly scarce resources, the concern was that Faculty who do not have a commitment to or requirement to produce scholarship may be less likely to support a Dean candidate who regards scholarship as highly as he or she regards other areas relevant to the duties of the Law Faculty such as teaching and service.

Despite this concern expressed by some Faculty, other Faculty also expressed that Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty understand the importance of scholarship to C-M’s national reputation and would take a Dean candidate’s commitment to scholarship into account when assessing that candidate as a suitable potential hire. Moreover, although Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty are not required to engage in scholarship, some do so.

Permitting a significant segment of the non-tenured Law Faculty to vote on the hiring of the Dean could result in recommending to the Provost a candidate who subsequently may not be granted tenure. This concern centers on the disproportionate number of Faculty who would be voting on the hiring of the Dean (if the proposal passes) versus the much smaller number of Faculty who would be voting on the separate issue of tenure. Adopting the proposal could result in there being a majority of the Faculty (including Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty) who prefer a particular candidate although that candidate enjoys much less support among the tenured Faculty who would later vote on the separate issue of whether the candidate is eligible to receive tenure. In that scenario, a candidate conceivably could receive majority support from the Faculty but not be granted tenure. As explained earlier, it is highly unlikely a Dean candidate offered a position at the law school would ultimately come if he or she is not also granted tenure. Of course, a greater number of Faculty now votes on the decanal hiring decision than votes on the separate issue of tenure. This issue, therefore, could potentially arise under the current system. The concern, however, is that this hiring/tenure issue has a much greater chance of occurring if twelve (12) additional members of the Law Faculty who cannot vote on tenure are permitted to vote on initial hiring.

- Clinical and Legal Writing Professors who are in their first five-years of employment are vulnerable to decanal reprisals, which may weigh against granting such Faculty decanal voting rights. Clinical and Legal Writing Professors for their first five years of employment work on one-year contracts. The Faculty is not involved in deciding whether these contracts should be renewed. That decision is largely left to the discretion of the Dean. One Faculty member opined that this structure could undermine the independence of Clinical and Legal Writing Professors in their first five years of employment with regard to their stewardship of the law school. Because the Dean determines whether these Faculty contracts are renewed, nothing would stop the Dean from considering as a factor in the renewal decision a position a Faculty member took on a particular issue. With regard to the proposed amendment, the Dean’s discretion whether to renew a particular Clinical or Legal Writing Professor’s contract could be problematic if the Dean learns that a particular Clinical or Legal Writing Professor who is in his or her first five years of employment voted against hiring that Dean or ranked that Dean low among other candidates. Thus, permitting these Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty a vote on the hiring of the Dean could potentially subject them to reprisals.

One Faculty member, who recognized the potential for this reprisal issue, suggested that a remedy to the problem might be for the Faculty to agree to vote by secret ballot on decanal candidates. That way it would be unlikely that any Dean would learn how a Faculty member voted on that Dean’s hiring and whether that Dean was the Faculty member’s first or second choice or was not considered a viable choice for Dean at all. Moreover, the threat of decanal reprisals is much less an issue (if an issue at all) after a Clinical or Legal Writing Professor’s fifth year as after the fifth year, such Professors are eligible for five-year, presumptively renewable contracts. Moreover, the Dean is not alone involved in determining whether to renew these presumptively, renewable contracts as a PAC is involved in the assessment and renewal process.

As stated earlier, the FAC was essentially split on this recommendation. There are reasonable arguments to be made in favor of adopting the proposed amendment, and as set forth above, there are counter-arguments to many of the reasonable arguments the FAC considered that were made against adopting the proposal. In addition to the considerations mentioned above, the FAC has included as an attachment to this recommendation the well-stated memorandum submitted by Professors Broering-Jacobs and Kowalski, which sets forth arguments supporting the proposed amendment in addition to any that appear above. (See Attachment C). The FAC has attached that memorandum for the benefit of the Faculty as it determines whether to consider the proposal further and whether to adopt it.

MINUTES OF REGULAR FACULTY MEETING OF COLLEGE OF LAW
April 14, 2011
4:00 p.m. – LB 60

ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT:  Interim Dean Crocker; Associate Dean Robertson and Sundahl; Professors Becker, Borden, Broering-Jacobs, Buckley, Cherry, Curtis, D. Davis, M. Davis, Forte, Garlock, Geier, Gelman, Green, Hoke, Inniss, Kerber, Kowalski, Lazarus, Lewis, Majette, May, Niedringhaus, O'Neill, Plecnik, Snyder, Sterio, Wemstein, Wilson, and Wittmer-Rich

EXCUSED:  Professors Daiker-Middaugh, Dougherty, Falk, Gard, Glassman, Heyward, Keating, Mika and Ray

NOT PRESENT:  Professor Lind, Oh and Sagers

A regular meeting of the faculty was convened at 4:05 p.m. by Interim Dean Phyllis L. Crocker.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Approval of Minutes of February 17, 2011 Faculty Meeting
Professor Kevin O'Neill moved to approve the minutes of the February 17, 2011 faculty meeting as submitted. Professor Niedringhaus seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Approval of Minutes of March 24, 2011 Faculty Meeting
Professor Becker noted that on page 4, under the Curriculum Review Committee Update, the second sentence should read, "The committee hopes to have a specific proposal for the faculty at the April 28 faculty meeting." She moved to approve the minutes as revised. Professor Snyder seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Dean's Report – Interim Dean Crocker
• Congratulations to John Plecnik whose article entitled, Abolish the Inflation Tax on the Poor & Middle Class has been accepted for publication in the QUINNIPIAC LAW REVIEW and to Lolita Buckner Inniss who was quoted in Newsweek regarding Henry Louis Gates’s view on African American reparations.

Approved as revised on 5/12/11.
- Budget Update – The University’s tentative allotment from the state should be $62 million. This is less than we received last year but a little more than we had anticipated. All deans are meeting individually with the Provost. We expect our target reduction will be in the 7.5% range.

- Travel – There has been some conversation on email regarding the travel policy. As a background, prior to two years ago, there actually was no travel policy. Then due to budget constraints, Dean Mearns developed an interim policy and asked the Faculty Affairs Committee to develop a long term policy. That did not happen. Dean Crocker decided to wait to update the travel policy until the new dean is in place. She believes it is now appropriate to charge the incoming Faculty Affairs Committee, in consultation with Dean Boise, to revisit the travel policy issue.

- Upcoming Events – The official grand opening of the trial courtroom will occur on Thursday, April 21st at 5:30 p.m. Professor O’Neill’s Evidence class will be doing demonstrations of all the software. Judge Pistor will serve as judge. At 6:15 there will be a short program in the Moot Court room. Please begin thinking about how you can utilize the trial courtroom for class experiences. We will be renting out the courtroom when classes are not using the room.

- Dean Crocker received a letter from Access Group informing her that one of the items in Congress’s budget resolution is to take away from law and graduate students their interest subsidy. Currently students do not pay interest on their loans until six months after graduation. The cost of taking away this interest subsidy for a law student could amount to as much as $5,000 per law student. When additional information is received about this matter, the faculty may want to consider a resolution.

Associate Deans’ Report

Heidi Gorovitz Robertson
- Reminder that the faculty colloquium will be tomorrow.
- Academic support – Daniel Dropko has been asked to keep track of the students who meet with him and those who refer students to him to see who is utilizing his services. Dean Robertson encouraged faculty to identify students who are struggling and refer them to Daniel Dropko. Also, please let students know that academic support is available.
- Daniel Dropko would like to become more visible to the students. In order to do so, he has asked to observe each of the first year classes next year. He will develop a proposed schedule. If you have an objection to his coming to observe your class, let Dean Robertson know.

Mark Sundahl
- There has been some discussion about tracking course prerequisites. Assistant Dean Lifer has some reservations about doing this for all courses because some part-time students are taking courses while finishing their prerequisites.
- Prior to the faculty meeting, a memo was circulated regarding exam procedures. (See memo attached to these minutes.) These procedures are essentially the same procedures we have used in the past with some minor changes. One of the changes is to not allow any student to leave the exam room during the last five minutes of an exam. Another change is that proctors will be responsible for placing all test material inside the exam booklet and ensuring that all of the material is submitted as one packet. Professor Garlock suggested that the students be responsible for putting the packets together, not the proctor. The issue of problems with exams on computers was discussed. Professor Niedringhaus noted that students are supposed to go through a test before taking an exam on computer, however, the compliance rate is very low. Professor Dena Davis suggested staggering exams thus making it easier for the tech people. Interim Dean Crocker said she would discuss that matter with Assistant Dean Jean Lifter to assess the feasibility of doing that in the future. After additional discussion, Associate Dean Sundahl stated that he agrees that students should be responsible for placing all exam material in one packet and turning it in to the proctor. He will send out a revised exam procedure memo. He also noted that the staff will be trained on these new procedures since they assist in proctoring exams.

Curriculum Committee
Professor Jonathan Wither-Rich, chair of the Curriculum Committee, presented several recommendations from the Curriculum Committee for the faculty’s consideration. The first recommendation was to approve the course “Legal Responses to Terrorism” as a permanent course. Hearing no objection from the faculty, the course is approved as a permanent course.

The Curriculum Committee was given the charge to “clarify for every concentration the lowest grade a student must obtain in the concentration’s foundational courses.” Currently the requirement is that students must attain a minimum GPA of 3.0 and may not earn below C+ in one non-foundational course. The issue the minimum GPA for a foundational course. The Curriculum Committee moves to simplify the requirements by eliminating the statement “may not earn below a C+ in more than one non-foundational course” and require student maintain a 3.0 GPA in all concentration courses. The motion passed unanimously.

The Curriculum Committee was also given the charge to “evaluate and, if appropriate, propose clarification whether the paper requirement for seminars satisfies the upper level writing requirement.” The Committee recommends changing the seminar rules so that all seminars satisfy the upper level writing requirement. All seminars currently are required to have a “substantial paper or equivalent written product.” Currently the seminar requirements stated that “Although a seminar must require a ‘substantial paper or equivalent work product,’ it may not satisfy the upper level writing requirement if the paper requirement is not a substantial research project as anticipated by the latter requirement.” The Committee moves to modify this to read, ”The ‘substantial paper or equivalent work product’ required for a seminar satisfies the upper level writing requirement.”

Professor Borden questioned whether this is a substantive change if students are required to do a series of small papers instead of a research paper. Professor Broering-Jacobs stated that this will limit flexibility in designing seminars because an upper level writing requirement may be different from the writing requirement for a seminar course. Professor Snyder noted that the problem is there is no consistent notion of the requirements for a seminar course. Professor May suggested that this proposal intersects with what the Ad Hoc Curriculum Committee is doing and she moved to table the motion for the time being. Professor Michael Davis seconded the motion to table. Professor Witmer-Rich withdrew the motion.

Law Review Bylaw Amendment

Professor Kerber, Faculty Advisor to the Cleveland State Law Review, moved to approve the amendments to the Law Review Bylaws as stated in the attached memo. She stated that the proposed amendments are necessary to simplify the process by which the editorial board reviews Associate members’ Notes. Professor Becker seconded the motion.

Professor Buckley suggested a revision to Article V, Section B(4)(b) to read, “Each paper shall be distributed to a minimum of three Editors none of whom is the Editor-in-Chief or a Research Editor.” Professor Kerber accepted the revision to the motion. A short discussion followed regarding Article V, Section B(4)(e) and what constitutes rejection of a Note during the initial evaluation. Professor Kerber stated that she would bring to the Law Review’s attention the faculty’s comments. The motion passed unanimously.

Nominations for 2011-12 Faculty Senate and Faculty Affairs Committee

Faculty Senate – According to 8.2.2 Article II A) 1) of the Bylaws of the Faculty Organization, the College of Law is tentatively entitled to five (5) representatives on Faculty Senate for the 2011-2012 academic year. It is therefore necessary to elect two (2) representatives for two-year terms expiring August 31, 2013 to replace the Deborah Geier and Milena Sterio whose terms expire August 31, 2011. Both are eligible to be re-elected. Additionally, we will also need to elect one (1) representative for a one-year term expiring August 31, 2012 to replace Dena Davis.

Interim Dean Crocker opened the floor for nominations. Professors Sheldon Gelman, Deborah Geier and Milena Sterio were nominated. Professor Geier volunteered to fill the one-year term vacated by Dena Davis. Professors Gelman and Sterio will serve two-year terms.

Faculty Affairs Committee – We must elect three (3) faculty members to the two-year terms currently filled by Michael Borden, April Cherry, and Stephen Lazarus. The continuing members are Matthew Green (Assistant Professor), Sandra Kerber (Legal Writing Professor), and Jonathan Witmer-Rich (Assistant Professor). Under our applicable policies, there must be representation from four faculty groups - (a) full professors; (b) clinical and legal writing professors; (c) associate professors; and (d) assistant professors. Therefore, we must elect at least one associate professor and one full professor.

Interim Dean Crocker opened the floor for nominations. Professors Peter Garlock, Lolita Buckner Inniss and Milena Sterio were nominated. All three will serve two-year terms.

Adjournment

The faculty meeting adjourned at 5:15 p.m.
MEMORANDUM

To: Craig Boise
From: Alan Weinstein
RE: Report of Graduate, International and Joint Degree Programs Committee
Date: May 29, 2012

The Committee was tasked with the items listed below. I’ve indicated the status for each as of the end of the Fall semester before I began my Sabbatical.

1. Evaluate each of the international programs and initiatives that CM||LAW has been engaged in over the last 10 years (including Westminster, Brunell University, St. Petersburg, and our new status with the Bar Council of India); determine the one(s) from which we can derive the most benefit in terms of (a) faculty interest and professional development, (b) faculty and student research and scholarship collaboration; (c) student interest (for both our students traveling abroad and LL.M students coming here); (d) employment opportunities; (e) entrepreneurial programs; (f) faculty and University contacts and networks, and similar factors; recommend to the faculty what program(s) should continue, given the current and anticipated budget conditions and the need to concentrate our resources; and outline a strategy for that proposed program(s).

Status: We did not reach this matter during the Fall semester.

2. Identify, explore and develop all possible concentrations that might be part of our Master of Legal Studies program and develop an aggressive marketing strategy to grow enrollment in the program.

Status: We identified a number of possible concentrations by circulating suggested courses in those concentrations to core faculty in the areas involved. These concentrations were then listed in the MLS materials.

3. Serve as the admissions committee for the LL.M. Program, provide oversight for the Program, and implement efforts to increase enrollment.

Status: (1) We reviewed approximately five completed applications. I would need to check with Jean Lifter re: precise numbers, but my recollection is that we offered admission to at least three of the applicants. In addition, I responded to approximately another ten e-mail inquiries about conditional admission, primarily from Saudi applicants pursuing English language study in the U.S. (2) We reviewed – and returned for revisions – one LL.M. candidate’s thesis and formed a Thesis Committee for a second LL.M. candidate. (3) We agreed we need to discuss efforts to increase LL.M. enrollment. (4) We recognized the need to discuss the issue of whether, and if so, how, concentrations in the LL.M. might be noted on transcripts.
4. Work with the Admissions Committee to develop a policy on transferring LL.M. course credits, either from our own institution or from another institution, including foreign institutions, to our J.D. program.

Status: We drafted a proposal with the Admissions Committee which was presented to the faculty and approved during the Spring semester.

5. Develop a proposal for faculty approval concerning the creation of a general dual-degree program for law students who wish to obtain a dual-degree with master's degrees in programs for which we do not have an established dual-degree program.

Status: We did not get to this item during the Fall semester.

6. Review and, if appropriate, propose a policy as to whether the advisory grading guidelines should apply to all students enrolled in law school courses or whether LL.M. candidates should be exempt from the grading guidelines.

Status: At my request, Jean Lifter circulated an inquiry to other Assistant Deans re: this issue, which produced a number of responses. The Committee did not have time to evaluate those responses and decide how to proceed prior to the end of the Fall semester.

RE: The Health Law and Policy Center Committee Report

Date: May 14, 2012

The Committee was charged with continuing "to evaluate and propose enhancements to our health law curriculum, certificate program, and Center" and continuing "to work with our external Health Law Advisory Committee." In this brief report, I will explain the steps the Committee took to fulfill its charge.

Enhancements to the Program

In order to enhance our certificate program and to improve our curriculum, we created the following two courses: Introduction to Health Care Compliance (Compliance) and Health Care Finance Law (Finance). Both of these courses will be taught by prominent local attorneys. The compliance course is a two-credit course designed to introduce students to the seven basic principles of health care compliance. In the course, students will gain a practical understanding of the laws and regulations that compliance professionals regularly encounter. The finance course is a three-credit course designed to teach students about the financial side of health care, including health care finance policy, health care insurance reform, and health law finance regulation and oversight. In addition, professors are developing the following courses for implementation in the spring of 2013: disability law, elder law, and a health care compliance skills course.

Members of our external Health Law Advisory Committee (Advisory Committee) have indicated that we should offer more compliance courses. Relying on the Committee's advice, we sought to improve the Center by creating a health care compliance certificate program that will be geared towards health law attorneys, social workers, doctors and other health care professionals. The certificate is designed for persons who want to learn about the laws and regulations that impact the health care industry, but do not want to receive a law degree. Nonetheless, Cleveland-Marshall students will also be eligible to enroll in the program. Students enrolled in the general health law certificate program will be able to use the compliance courses as electives.

Working with the Advisory Committee

On September 13, 2012, we met with our external Health Law Advisory Committee (Advisory Committee). At that meeting we introduced the executive boards of the Health Law Society and the Journal of Law & Health. In addition, we gave the members information about the health law activities we had planned for the academic year. We also discussed the proposed curriculum for our health care compliance certificate program and the MLS health law concentration. Throughout the year, we continued to utilize the members of our Advisory Committee in various capacities. For instance, some members of the Advisory Committee were mentors for students enrolled in the program. When we had our health law career awareness fair, some members of the Advisory Committee served as panelists. Members of our Advisory Committee also taught in our program and created new courses for us.

The Future

In order to further enhance our health law program, we need to take the following steps.

First, we need to get our new health care compliance certificate program accredited by the Compliance Certification Board (CCB). I am in the process of putting together the application materials. I will submit them to you for review.

Second, we need to market the new certificate program. I am in the process of putting together a marketing plan that I will work with you and Elaine to implement.

Third, we need to increase the number of attorneys in our health law mentorship program, so each student enrolled in the program will have a mentor. This will be a great way to increase the reputation of our program with the local bar.

Fourth, we need to create more experiential learning opportunities for the students enrolled in the program. Currently, Pam only supervises four students per semester in the medical-legal partnership that we have with Metro Hospital. Dr. Gieseke Greene, Chief Medical Officer of the Sisters of Charity Health System, would like for us to create a similar program with St. Vincent’s Hospital. I think this would be a wonderful opportunity for our students. Moreover, if our students could do externships with law firms, that would open up additional opportunities.

Fifth, we need to work more closely with the health law section of the Cleveland Metropolitan Bar Association.

Sixth, we need to try to host the health law professors’ conference within the next five years. Gwen and I are in the process of getting on the list for this.

Seventh, we need to follow up on your idea about establishing an annual health law policy meeting at the law school. I have my research assistance looking into topic and possible speakers.

Eighth, we need to be actively involved in the university’s new Center for Health Profession and the American Health Lawyers Association Health Law (AHLA) Curriculums Project. I have submitted a volunteer application to AHLA to participate in the project.
Finally, Dr. Hess from the Cleveland Clinic has indicated that she would like to collaborate with the Center to create a summer health law institute for doctors and health law attorneys. I think we need to pursue this further.

I will be researching in Switzerland from June 1st to July 27th. When I return, I would like to meet with you to discuss the Center's activities for the upcoming academic year.

If you have questions, please let me know.

Re: Honor Council Report

This academic year, Dean Sundahl informally resolved a few minor cases.

Since I have become Chair, we have strictly followed the Law School prehearing procedures that permit the Associate Dean to informally resolve cases but not to have the power to “plea bargain” by promising a certain punishment if a student admits a violation. Thus, they have to admit wrongdoing without knowing the sanction. While this approach obviously differs from the criminal justice system, it has the advantage of encouraging students to act honorably. While a few more cases may go before the Council for formal hearings than otherwise would be the case, that cost seems worthwhile. When I pointed out this unusual procedure at a faculty meeting and explained some of its strengths and weaknesses, nobody suggested that we change it.

This Summer, two students will be having hearings involving allegations of improper assistance, claims they have both denied. Because one of the students was hospitalized, we had to delay the hearing until June 16. We wanted to hear both cases on the same day, because credibility may play a major role in the outcomes. Because we have yet to resolve these cases, there was nothing to report to the faculty.

At Orientation sessions, Dean Sundahl has emphasized the seriousness of the Honor Code. He has presented anonymous examples of students who have been suspended and/or had damaging reports put in their record.
MEMORANDUM

Re: Year-End Report for Scholarship Committee, 2011-2012

May 29, 2012

Dear Craig:

This memorandum is to report on the activities of the Scholarship Committee for the academic year 2011-2012, its first year as a standing committee.\(^1\) I also wanted to make a few recommendations about the Committee’s work next year.

To summarize, we took four major steps:

(1) We compiled a set of specific policy initiatives that might be adopted at C|M|Law, in memo form submitted to you in February (attached).

(2) We devised a draft course-release policy, which ultimately was not submitted to faculty because I and you together agreed that it would be inappropriate to introduce this year in light of other law school pressures (attached).

(3) Heidi began the work of an internal inventory of our scholarly productivity (some relevant correspondence is attached).

(4) While it was not the work of the Committee itself, Heidi and I were also members of the Summer Research Grants Committee, and we worked with that Committee to impose somewhat tougher expectations of summer grant applicants.

\(^1\) In AY 2010-2011 Interim Dean Crocker convened an ad hoc scholarship committee, whose members were Michael Borden, Brian Ray, Heidi Gorovitz-Robertson, Chris Sagers, Milena Sterio, and Jim Wilson. AY 2011-2012 is the first year in many years in which the Scholarship Committee has been appointed as a regular faculty committee. The members this year are Brianne Lewis, Reggie Oh, Heidi Gorovitz-Robertson, Chris Sagers, Milena Sterio, and Jim Wilson.
I confess first and foremost that in some major respects, we did not accomplish what I had hoped, and I take full responsibility. Most importantly, we did not engage the faculty as you had requested. I will have a few concluding remarks on how I think that might work better next year.

I. Our Understanding of the Charge, and Additional Objectives

Because we began the year with a little work trying to understand your charge to us, and thinking about what we wanted to accomplish as a group, I wanted to explain how we approached our job. The Committee also took on a few things not necessarily contained in the charge that I understood to be your wishes, based on our conversations.

As I understood your charge, it called on us to do two things: (1) engage in a general brainstorming effort, in collaboration with the whole faculty, aimed at identifying specific policy initiatives, and (2) complete an internal inventory of our scholarly productivity. I would like to explain my interpretation. Here is your charge to the Committee for AY 2011-2012:

1. In consultation with faculty members, develop a detailed set of proposals for enhancing scholarship at the College of Law, with particular attention to creating an atmosphere of vibrant intellectual exchange among faculty and students; raising the quality of faculty scholarship; fostering collaborative scholarship projects among College of Law faculty and between College of Law faculty and scholars at other institutions; and raising the national profile of our faculty as leading edge, innovative thinkers through symposia, conferences or other creative means; and

2. Make proposals to the faculty for increasing and improving our scholarly productivity (both quality and quantity) and recognition. Towards this end, the committee should be creative and expansive in its approach and recommendations. Among other efforts, the committee might conduct an evaluation of the scholarly productivity at CMU LAW compared to comparable schools and to schools with which we seek to be comparable. Proposals should be specific and need to be mindful of budgetary constraints but could include both monetary and non-monetary incentives and initiatives.

In an email during the fall semester I asked the Committee for some discussion as to the charge, and on our own aspirations for the Committee, and I started the discussion by suggestion the following interpretation:

As I read the charge, it breaks down into two discrete tasks, the first quite broad and the second very specific.

1. First, in "consultation with faculty," we should prepare a "detailed set of proposals" for specific initiatives, which may include "monetary and non-monetary incentives," "symposia, conferences, or other creative means," and we "should be creative and expansive in our approach and recommendations." This set of proposals should strive to achieve the following four goals:
   (a) "enhance scholarship at the College of Law," as to both quality and quantity;
   (b) "create an atmosphere of vibrant intellectual exchange among faculty and students" (Craig’s italics);
   (c) "foster collaboration," both within the school and with outside scholars; and
   (d) "raise the national profile of our faculty."
But to me, all of this really just boils down to "come up with a list of ideas to improve output, like the Ad Hoc Scholarship Committee did last year," the difference being that faculty consultation is required and presumably some formal proposal must be made by the committee to the dean or to the faculty.

2. Second, we should perform an in-house study that will evaluate CMLaw productivity as compared to other schools.

During the academic year, you and I also spoke about the Committee on a few occasions, and from those conversations I gathered two further projects you wanted us to take on: you wanted us to compile for you all the various scholarship initiatives we had learned about from other schools, and you wanted us to think about strengthening the standards for summer research grant applicants.

II. Progress this Year

A. Brainstorming

We approached this in a few ways. We met as a committee several times throughout the year, and were engaged in a continuing debate throughout the year as to how we thought feasible and effective improvements could be effected, given what we understood to be very limited funds. We also compiled, as you requested, a memo entitled "Summary of Scholarship Initiatives," dated February 21, 2012 (attached). This memo both summarized matters we had discussed among ourselves pursuant to item 1 of your charge, and all the policy initiatives we had learned about by surveying a group of 12 peer schools.

Finally, we put substantial effort into drafting a formal course-release policy for productive faculty, which exists as a lengthy, undated draft amendment to the Policies on Standard Teaching Schedules, Variances, and Course Releases, which were adopted in 2008 (draft is attached). We identified a course-release policy as one specific initiative that seemed most important to us as scholars, but also one that could feasibly produce a big impact without significant money expense. (We thought that might be possible because there would be some freed-up faculty time from the first-year semesterization change.)

In my mind, these efforts were all in response to item 1 of your charge.

B. Internal Inventory

Heidi has mostly handled this, which is pursuant to item 2 of your charge. As you will recall, the project is now designed as an exclusively internal inventory, similar to the "faculty publications database" the Law Library has maintained for some years. Heidi informed me today that she is still in the process of formulating the survey questionnaire she will use to request faculty to self-report their publications, because she was waiting from Committee input on her questionnaire and never got any. She has not yet requested any faculty self-reporting or any work by the Law Library. Actual data collection will presumably have to wait until Fall.

By email correspondence of February 2012 (attached), I explained a preference for quite a different approach. I believe we would be better served, and that it would actually be less work, if we conducted some simpler, more objective study that would not just count our internal output, but would compare our output with that of a set of comparable schools.

Whether or not you like that idea, I think it would be better to use the Law Library's existing database as much as possible, rather than faculty self-reporting.

III. Recommendations for Next Year

- I would recommend that the Committee be charged with specific initiatives chosen by you. We have done two years of what I would describe as brainstorming, and another year will not materially aid us.

- I also think having specific charges will help with the one major failure I feel most acutely: a failure to engage with the faculty as a group. It will be easiest for the Committee to set up brown-bag discussions in Fall, early enough in the year that proposals could feasibly be adopted, if the Committee has in hand nicely detailed, specific proposals for discussion.

- If you find it too awkward to recommend specific initiatives, perhaps you could direct the Committee to choose from a list of specific ideas or to come up with detailed specific ideas. If you find it too awkward to recommend specific initiatives, perhaps you could direct the Committee to choose from a list of specific ideas or to come up with detailed specific ideas by some specified date, early in Fall semester.

- Because the internal inventory has not even been begun, I would like to suggest that you, Heidi, and I (or whomever else will chair the committee) meet this summer to discuss next steps. I would urge that even if you don't like my model (you've both made that quite clear), you should just use the Law Library's existing publications database as much as possible instead of starting from scratch, which I understand to be the current plan.

- As for my last point, I don't know exactly what to suggest, and I also don't know how much of the blame is on me for just not being an effective chair, but I had a lot of difficulty getting this particular group to get work done. Almost everything we did this year was done by me alone, and when I would send draft proposals for discussion, I would get literally no response even after repeated prompting. This is by its nature a technical policy committee, and people need to be prepared to do real policy work.

At your request, the following summarizes information collected by the Scholarship Committee during the past two academic years concerning scholarship support initiatives. We compiled this list for informational purposes only, and take no position on which if any of these ideas should be adopted.

We mainly relied on three sources. First, we studied initiatives that have been in place at Cleveland-Marshall, by reviewing the Faculty Manual, the current strategic plan, past faculty meeting minutes and policy documents, and personal recollections. Second, we performed a survey last year. We contacted 12 schools that we believed were roughly our peers and that we admired, to ask what initiatives they'd begun and what had worked well or poorly. Finally, we reviewed some of the small journal literature that addresses scholarship support initiatives, most of it collected by Dean Robertson.

We did not include all of the initiatives we learned about. For example, all schools appear to

1 In AY 2010-2011 Interim Dean Crocker convened an ad hoc scholarship committee, whose members were Michael Borden, Brian Ray, Heidi Gorovitz-Robertson, Chris Sagers, Milena Sterio, and Jim Wilson. AY 2011-2012 is the first year in many years in which the Scholarship Committee has been appointed as a regular faculty committee. The members this year are Browne Lewis, Reggie Oh, Heidi Gorovitz-Robertson, Chris Sagers, Milena Sterio, and Jim Wilson.

2 Chapter IX of the Cleveland-Marshall Faculty Manual, entitled “Faculty Development: Scholarship and Teaching,” describes some of the initiatives currently in place.

3 The current Strategic Plan was adopted by the faculty in April of 2007, effective for a period of five years. Its “Goal #3” is to “improve the scholarly reputation and productivity of our faculty.” That goal is elaborated by eight specific “tactics,” which consist of technology and research support ideas, publicity ideas, faculty presentation and retreat ideas, and so on.

4 Arkansas Fayetteville, Florida International University, Chapman, Howard, Indiana University-Indianapolis, LSU Baton Rouge, Louisville Law School, New York Law School, University of Denver, University of Las Vegas, University of San Francisco, and University of St. Thomas (MN).

provide support for travel and research assistance, all schools maintain internal workshop and collaboration opportunities, and they mostly maintain some sort of visiting scholar series or visiting opportunities. CM provides them all as well. While we learned about variations in these kinds of programs and the amounts of money apparently spent on them, in their substance they seem largely similar at most peer schools.

We therefore included ideas that seemed innovative and that hold some potential for significant change.

To summarize CM’s current stance, we maintain a set of essentially miscellaneous scholarship support tools, which are broadly similar to those in place at our peer schools. Most prominent are a handful of compensation items (four named professorships, faculty merit awards, summer research grants), an ad hoc course release policy, and an Associate Dean appointed to encourage scholarship. Various less ambitious initiatives have been in place from time to time, like the present system of “scholarship groups,” in-house faculty presentations and retreats, faculty exchanges with other schools and regional collaborations. Problems at present are that (i) the dollar amounts available for these initiatives are quite small, and (ii) there has been substantial hostility to compensation or other initiatives perceived as unfairly discriminatory. Thus, compensation, travel, and teaching load are all relatively flat, even though the degree of productivity varies. There also has been persistent uncertainty concerning CM’s actual scholarship goals—we are of many minds as to what priority scholarship has within the school and what sort of scholarship is to be encouraged. As one consequence, the chairs and the merit awards have sometimes been granted to recognize non-scholarship values, and there has been general hesitation to inquire into the quality of scholarship or to distinguish among faculty.

In short, despite maintaining a small battery of scholarship support tools that makes us at least superficially similar to other schools, our overall goals remain ambiguous and compensation and other incentives are essentially uniform despite differing levels of productivity.

1. Goal Ambiguity

While your request was for specific strategic initiatives, a first important strategy might be to consider what the purpose should be of a CM scholarship policy. Choosing a consistent overall purpose might hone the specific initiatives adopted, and avoid counterproductive conflicts in goals.

While CM has always espoused some commitment to scholarship, the commitment is ambiguous in at least one important respect. The commitment could serve one of at least three different and sometimes inconsistent goals:

Quality. The policy might focus on the substantive quality of the scholarship produced. In that case, there might be less concern that every faculty member be productive or that productivity entail a large quantity of publication. Given the subjective nature of that purpose, rewards would probably have to be distributed with two problems in mind: (i) rewards would not be equal, unless all faculty produce equal amounts in equal quality, and so an administration likely must accept some personal tensions among faculty, and (ii) rewards would necessarily be awarded with a fair bit of discretion, which implies disagreements over fairness.

Morale and Retention. If productive faculty find flat compensation and equal course and committee burdens to be unfair, productivity compensation could prevent attrition and poor morale. In this case it seems that the problems and useful approaches would resemble those of the first model.

Quantity. Finally, the goal might be quantity oriented. It might encourage either productivity by all faculty or large quantity of publication, or both. On such a model, rewards could be given with comparatively little discretion on more or less objective standards. The problems would be at least these: (i) there still will be faculty tension, as disagreement will persist whether productive faculty deserve additional rewards, and (ii) objective standards may be less effective in encouraging good placement or substantive quality.

II. Specific Initiatives

Structure of the Institution

Associate Dean for Scholarship. Most schools we contacted had an associate dean with either an exclusive or a prominent focus on encouraging faculty scholarship (“Research Dean”). Some schools emphasized the importance of the Research Dean (e.g., the Dean at Denver described the having of such a dean as “one of the best things we have done in this area.”).

The Research Deans at some schools have devised innovative approaches:

We learned that the Research Dean at Florida International University (Joelle Mirano), assisted by reference librarians, scours conference announcements to see if she can place faculty members on panels or enable them to make presentations. She is willing to make the phone calls and be rejected.

The Research Dean at CWRU (Jacquie Lipton) also engages in a large amount of publicity and public relations work to promote the faculty’s work. She apparently has tried to establish informal relationships with the editors of individual law reviews, looking for publication openings and access.

Some Research Deans appear to have some discretionary budget authority. For example, at the University of Denver (where the Research Dean is Alan Chen), every faculty member receives an annual, fixed "development" allotment to pay for travel and research support, but Dean Chen then has what appears to be a substantial discretionary fund to supplement those faculty who can show a need for it.

Specific suggestions:

The Research Dean should not be over-burdened with non-scholarship-related functions. The has been a persistent basis of complaint for those who have held the post at CM, and has been raised in prior studies of our scholarship policy.

A Research Dean might be given some budgetary authority, for example to help support unusual travel or research assistance needs, or to support special projects (e.g., a legal empirical project might require PACER access over and above that usually available through the Library).

A Research Dean might be tasked with public relations duties, to get the word out about scholarly successes. A Research Dean also might be tasked to arrange for specific opportunities, like making inquiries of specific law journals or specific schools to place faculty members' articles or get them on panels.

Hiring

Appointments Committee Personnel. While various sources stressed the significance of hiring, the only concrete policy suggestion we heard was to ensure appropriate personnel on each year's Appointments Committee. The Committee should not be a "cross section" of interests, but should be composed of serious scholars.

Compensation and Release Time

Overall Recognition Awards or Merit Pay. Salary can be increased with pay raises or one-time bonuses to reflect overall achievement. Most schools seem to adopt some mix of such incentives, and mainly place merit pay decisions in the dean's discretion. (Some specific ideas are discussed below under "Decanal Review and Internal Publicity."

Course Release Policies. We were surprised at the number of schools that have modified or considered modifying their curricular planning to reduce traditional teaching loads. The details of the plans varied substantially. We heard from a few schools that have 3-course loads for all faculty (Cincinnati, St. Thomas and UNLV, although we were told that UNLV is considering requiring a 4-course load for faculty that do not produce). Much more common were plans that provided presumptive or per-application course releases for productive faculty.

As a separate policy, all schools we spoke to appear to have some automatic course release time for pre-tenure faculty.

Summer Stipends. All schools appear to offer some sort of money support for faculty who choose to produce scholarship in summer rather than teach. A problem at many schools seems to be ensuring that faculty receiving support are productive, and we heard of some creative ideas.

CMU Law is apparently unusual in that we allow subsequent funding requests to be made even though a prior grant-funded project remains incomplete. While many schools will allow two years or more to complete a piece, most require some evidence of completion at some point.

At the University of Denver, it is (apparently informally, but firmly) required that a person publish at least once every two years to receive the summer stipend; a person who had not published in two years would be denied “absent extraordinary circumstances.”

At New York Law School, faculty members must publish 25 pages per year to continue receiving the summer stipend.

UNLV requires faculty to write reports, due in September, explaining what progress was made on that summer’s grant-funded project.

We were told that the Dean at Marquette, who was new as of last year, did away with the traditional system of fixed, equal summer grants, and instead made them vary in amount, totally within his own discretion. The amounts have varied between a few thousand and $20,000.

Per-Publication Bonuses and Awards. Some schools have adopted cash bonuses or awards for individual publications.

The most striking as at the University of San Francisco, which awards a $15,000 cash bonus for any “substantial” publication. There is no limit on the number of publications per year for which a faculty member can receive the bonus, and there apparently is no inquiry into placement or quality.

We summarize one such program that existed at CM, because the policy had and continues to have some faculty support, but was controversial while it existed.

For some time prior to 2000, CM offered the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Howard Oleck Award for Distinguished Legal Writing by a Faculty Member. The award appears to have been established by the late Prof. Oleck, formerly of the CM faculty, though we were unable to learn exactly when it was established. In 1996 the school added the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Excellence in Faculty Writing Award. Both were administered by a committee called the Awards and Competition Committee, which for some years was chaired by Peter Garlock. Our records search could locate no specific details of the amounts of cash awards, but Phyllis Crocker, who won both of them at different times, recalls that each carried a small cash stipend.

However, in 2000 the faculty chose to discontinue both awards. The reasons given were the doubts of Prof. Garlock's committee that the awards were effective, the difficulty of judging one another's work, and personal animosities.

Since 2000, at least one effort was made to revive some such award. Patti Falk, when she was Associate Dean about 3 to 4 years ago, proposed a plan that would make cash awards for every substantial academic publication, with larger awards available for higher quality placements. She proposed some objective criteria to determine the quality of placement. There was some discussion via email at that time, but the idea went no further.

Information Gathering and Moral Suasion

Productivity Comparison Studies and Internal Monitoring. Many schools keep some objective record of each faculty member's productivity. A school might also maintain some sort of objective comparison with other schools.

The Committee this year, pursuant to your charge, has begun a process of information collection, though the details are still being worked out. The Law Library has also maintained a fairly comprehensive faculty publication database for many years.

One ideal might be to develop standards and databases for comparing our own productivity to that of other faculties. For example, by studying our own productivity and that of a sample of other schools, we could develop a simple, objective quality comparison by using the "impact factor" tool on the Washington & Lee Law Library's law journal database. Ideally, we could generate an estimated, quality-adjusted average productivity measure for faculty at each of a sample of schools. That would provide some rough benchmark for judging our school's work overall, as well as a measure for each individual faculty member. For example, a quality-adjusted productivity number could be generated for each CM faculty member and reported confidentially to that faculty member, along with an averageumber for CM and another average number for the sample schools combined.

Decanal Review and Internal Publicity. Several schools reported that annual decanal reviews include discussion of each faculty member's productivity. Some deans appear to do this fairly informally, some with a great deal of structure. As an example of the latter, we learned from Dean Martin Katz of the University of Denver that he runs a data-driven, substantially objective study of each faculty member as part of his annual review. It has these highlights:

Dean Katz assigns a numerical grade to each faculty member, according to a formula which he provides to the faculty before the fact. He shared the memo with us, and it is attached. He says that he “rate[s] people on their scholarship (40%), teaching (40%), and service (20%).” He added that he looks at longer than one-year productivity averages, in order not to discourage ambitious, long-term projects. The objective system allows Dean Katz to set concrete benchmarks—a minimum expectation of an article every other year or an essay/book review every year, and a presentation every year.

One other approach to the use of information gathering and objective standards is to distribute some productivity data internally. Presumably, to avoid embarrassment or hostility, that information might only include college-wide averages, plus a faculty member’s own data delivered confidentially directly to the faculty member.
Here is the text of Dean Katz's scholarship memo to his faculty at Denver, which he cut-and-pasted into an email to me:

All scores were for work completed during the relevant time period (Sept. 2009 - Aug. 2010). For unsolicited articles and essays, completion was based on the date you accepted your offer. For solicited works, and for books and book chapters, completion was based on final submission to the publisher. Where you had co-authors, I reduced the credit you received, though by slightly less than the proportion represented by other authors. For example, if you had one co-author, I credited you for 3/4 of the work. If you had two, I credited you for 1/2 of the work.

I then gave everyone a raw score, based on the total number of points they had.

In this area, I scaled grades around an expectation of either one article-length piece every other year or one essay/book review length piece every year, as well as one presentation on your scholarship every year. I scaled grades here so that those with a raw score of 1.1 (which reflects this basic expectation) received a grade of 3. (Note that the mean and median were both higher than this expectation. This is a good thing, suggesting that, as a faculty, we are generally exceeding what may be becoming a dated expectation of scholarly output and activity.)
Because I recognize that the relevant time-frame for scholarship is more than one year, I also looked at your two-year average for scholarship. (And I plan to do this even in years when we have had merit raises in the prior year.) If someone has low scholarly productivity in one year, but a high two-year average, I was able to see this. My goal here is to encourage ambitious, long-term projects that might take more than one year to complete.

Re: Proposed Course Release Policy Modification

The Scholarship Committee for AY 2011-12 proposes two modifications to the CM|Law Policies on Standard Teaching Schedules, Variances, and Course Releases.1 The first is a technical amendment to conform to the new Named Professorship criteria, and the other is a substantive policy change. The Committee moves their adoption as two separate motions.

A. Motion 1: Technical Correction Concerning Named Professorships

The Dean's changes to the named professorship appointment process require a technical modification to the Policies. Section 5 of the existing Policies accommodates the prior named professorship policy, under which named professors could elect either an automatic course release and a stipend of $2,500 or a full teaching load and a stipend of $10,000. Under the Dean’s revision, named professors will always receive a course release and a stipend of $10,000. To reflect this, the Committee proposes the following amended § 5:

5. Professorships. Absent extraordinary circumstances, faculty members who hold named professorships are not eligible for course release in addition to the one-course release afforded to them automatically. Request for an additional release for extraordinary circumstances may be made through the application process set forth in § 7, but is subject to the rule of § 6.

Rationale: This is a codification of the professorships standards.

B. Motion 2: Presumptive Course Release for Productivity

The Dean charged the Committee to "make proposals to the faculty for increasing and improving our scholarly productivity (both quality and quantity) and recognition."2 The

2 Dean Boise's full charge for AY 2011-2012 directed the Scholarship Committee:

1. to consult with faculty members, to develop a detailed list of proposals for enhancing scholarship at the College of Law, with particular attention to creating an atmosphere of vibrant intellectual exchange among faculty and students; raising the quality of faculty scholarship, fostering collaborative scholarship projects among College of Law faculty and between College of Law faculty and scholars at other institutions; and raising the national profile of our faculty as leading edge, innovative thinkers through symposia, conferences or other creative means; and

2. make proposals to the faculty for increasing and improving our scholarly productivity (both quality and quantity) and recognition. Towards this end, the committee should be creative and expansive in Committee's ideal, in consultation with Dean Boise, was to identify only one or a very few proposals that would be feasible and have significant impact.

The Committee recommends a policy to use curricular flexibility from semesterization to provide prescriptive course reductions for faculty members who meet standards of quality productivity. Briefly, the proposal would presumptively reduce the standard teaching load for productive legal writing, tenured or tenure track faculty members. It adopts an objective measure of "productivity," which attempts to encourage both quantity and quality, while removing administrative discretion. The proposal retains essentially all other aspects of the Policies.7

The Committee has collected evidence that CMLaw's peer schools have increasingly modified their teaching loads either for all faculty or for productive faculty, with the idea of encouraging productivity.8 The Committee has also worked with the Dean's suite to estimate the likelihood that this new policy could be put in place without additional hard dollar expenditures.

It retains the rule in existing §1 under which a faculty member who teaches 14 credit hours in one academic year may receive a discretionary reduction to 10 credit hours the following year. It retains existing §3, under which any legal writing, tenured, or tenure track faculty member can still request a one-time course release even if they are not eligible for the new prescriptive reduction. It also retains existing §2 of the Policies (now §4), under which any faculty member may request a "variance" to the standard 2-2 schedule. This is in effect a "banking" provision and it will be preserved. Finally, the proposal retains existing §6 of the Policies (now §7) under which, absent extraordinary circumstances, no combination of the prescriptive course reduction, one-time course-release, or banking may be used to secure a zero-course teaching load in any semester.

As under the existing Policies, clinical faculty are not covered by the prescriptive course reduction, the one-time course-release, or the banking policy, because of their different contractual relationship with the school. Clinicians contract to teach year-long courses, which are not defined in terms of credit hours.

7 During NY 2010-11, the ad hoc scholarship committee surveyed 12 schools that we considered to be our peers, to learn about their productivity initiatives. At about the same time, Debby Gore reported responses to a query on TaxProf Blog concerning teaching loads, which added results for an additional 38 schools.

Of the 70 schools included in the two surveys, roughly half (33) have adopted some sort of reduced load either for all faculty or for productive faculty. Among schools that could be plausibly said to be our peers, the following 11 have adopted either a 3-course load for all faculty or some such schedule for productive faculty: CWRU, Cincinnati, University of Denver, DePaul, Loyola L.A., University of Miami, UNLV, University of Oregon, University of San Francisco, Santa Clara, and St. Thomas. Three other schools among our peers are considering moving to some such format. We were told that Marquette and Drexel are both considering a 3-course load policy for productive faculty, and that SNHU is "gradually drifting toward" a 10-credit per year schedule for all faculty.

Such programs are apparently unusual among first and second tier schools. From these data the following 22 schools have such programs: University of Alabama, BYU, University of Colorado, Duke, University of Florida, University of Georgia, George Washington University, University of Illinois, University of Iowa, University of Michigan, University of Minnesota, NYU, University of North Carolina, Northwestern, Notre Dame, Penn State, University of Southern California, University of Texas, Tulane, University of Virginia, Washington University, and William & Mary.
To implement such a plan, the Committee proposes the adoption of the following amendments to the Policies:

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, Cleveland State University
Policies on Standard Teaching Schedules, Variances, and Course Releases

1. Standard Teaching Schedule. The standard teaching requirement for legal writing, tenured and tenure track faculty is two courses in the fall semester and two courses in the spring semester, typically totaling 11 to 13 credit hours, except as may be adjusted under §2, 3 or 4 below.

The teaching load for a faculty member who teaches four courses totaling 14 or more credit hours in one academic year (exclusive of summer teaching for which additional compensation is received) may be set at the discretion of the Dean, at three courses the following year, provided that the three courses total 16 or more credit hours.

Rationale: CSU Personnel Policies and Bylaws, also known as the Greenbook, do not set a standard teaching load for non-bargaining unit tenured or tenure-track or for legal writing professors. Other CSU faculty generally teach 16-24 credit hours per year. Our peer schools vary in their standard teaching load policies. For example, Toledo, Capital, and Ohio Northern require four courses per year. Case, Cincinnati and Ohio State each require three courses a year. While some peer schools require less than a traditional 4-course load, the details of their course load policies vary substantially, and reduced loads are often keyed to other areas of productivity.

1 Adopted by the faculty May 8, 2008. Except where otherwise noted, the proposed standards apply to legal writing and clinical professors as well as tenured and tenure-track faculty. "Academic year" (AY) as used in these proposals excludes the summer term.

2 Article 32.1 of the CSEA AAA-P Collective Bargaining Agreement governs faculty workload. It provides at §13.10: "The teaching load for the faculty shall range from 8 - 12 credit hours per term or 16 - 24 credit hours per academic year. Faculty reassigned to professional duties other than instructional activities may have their instructional load reduced, below these levels. Faculty who are active in productive and assessable scholarship, research, creative activity, and/or University or professional service (including service to the community) that normally be assiged responsibility for 8 credit hours per term. Faculty may be assigned a higher load of their teaching assignments, especially those that add to the responsibilities for a course (e.g., comprehensive exam, laboratory, supervision of interns, etc.) or if they concentrate primarily on research activities, rather than participating in productive and assessable scholarship, research, creative activity, and/or University or professional service (including service to the community). The maximum teaching load for a faculty member should be 13 credit hours per term." In general, CSU faculty members who publish regularly teach five courses per AY, but as the above language indicates, faculty may be assigned more or fewer than five courses based on other professional commitments. The average credit hours per course vary among colleges and departments. For example, many Business Administration and Civil Engineering courses are 3 credit hours, while Psychology and Biology classes are usually 4 credit hours. Introductions, specialty courses and courses with laboratory components range from 1 to 7 credit hours. On average, however, other CSU colleges offer more 4-credit hour courses than we do.
These Policies therefore adopt a what is in effect a four-course teaching load, typically totaling 11 to 14 credit hours, but permits reduction of that load for productive faculty.

Cleveland-Marshall classes taught by tenured, tenure track and legal writing faculty generally range from 2 to 4 credit hours. In some instances, the faculty can choose to teach a course for either 2 or 3 hours. In other courses the credit hours are set (for instance first-year courses that are 3 credits in the fall and 2 in the spring).

Due to the wide range of credit hours per course, the usual four course schedule for a faculty member subject to § 1 might exceed 11-13 credit hours on a regular basis. In other instances a professor may be asked to pick up an additional course due to the unavailability of the faculty member originally scheduled to teach that course. If either scenario results in a professor teaching 14 or more hours in a particular year, exclusive of any credit hours for which additional compensation is received, the dean and the faculty member teaching the overload may negotiate a downward adjustment from the standard four course schedule the following academic year. This adjustment does not require a formal application as provided in §6. The name of any faculty member who negotiates such an adjustment is not included in the list of faculty receiving a course release or variance published by the Dean pursuant to §7.

This standard is not applicable to Cleveland-Marshall clinical professors. Clinicians contract to teach a particular clinical course each year (e.g. Employment Law Clinic, Urban Development Clinic) which involves a seminar component and significant work with students, but the contract does not describe these professors’ obligations in terms of credit hours.

2. Presumptive Course Reduction for Scholarly Productivity. Notwithstanding §1, the standard teaching requirement for legal writing, tenured and tenure track faculty who meet the standard of minimum scholarly productivity set forth in this § 2 is presumed to be two courses either in the fall or spring semester and one course in the other, typically totaling 9 to 11 credit hours.

“Minimum scholarly productivity” means to have published during the preceding two academic years either (a) one substantial, broadly law related article in a journal that is within the top 100 law journals, (b) two substantial, broadly law related articles that are in either the top 200 journals or in highly rated specialty journals, or (c) one substantial, broadly law related book. “Substantial article” means a substantive article, essay, book review or similar journal publication of

8 Students participating in a clinic can register for 2 to 5 credit hours per semester, externs can register for 4 to 6 credit hours.
9 Legal Writing and Civil Procedure are 6 hour courses (divided into two, 3-hour courses taught by the same instructor). Property, Torts and Contracts are 5 hours (divided into a 3 hour fall course and 2 hour spring course taught by the same instructor). Evidence, Estates & Trusts, Corporations, Tax I, Tax II, and Land Use Control (for JD/MURD students) are 4 hour courses. Many classes are offered for 3 credit hours, although most third-semester writing classes are 2 credits, and professors often elect to teach seminar courses for two rather than three hours. Some courses including First Amendment and Legal Profession are offered for 3 credits during the AY and for 2 credits in the summer.
more than 29 typeset pages. It excludes purely non-substantive publications like in memorium or personal reminiscences, but it includes invited articles and co-authored works. “Substantial book” means a book published by a reputable publisher of more than 119 pages. The Dean and the Associate Dean responsible for course scheduling will determine whether publications are “broadly law related” but will so find unless a work has no likely bearing on an issue of professional or academic relevance to law.

Rationale: The purpose of the presumptive course reduction policy is to encourage scholarly productivity, but it aims to encourage both quality and quantity. Any definition of “minimum scholarly productivity” will be imperfect, but to account for its imperfections this section only sets a floor that should be reasonably attainable for faculty making serious efforts. The reduction is presumptive, and not mandatory, because there may be cases in which too many faculty members qualify for it, given curricular needs. As under the current Policies, the school’s educational mission remains paramount.

The ranking of law journals will be by impact factor using the Washington & Lee Law Library database Law Journals: Submissions and Ranking (http://lawlib.wlu.edu/LL). The impact factor query will include all student- and peer-edited English language journals published anywhere, in any subject included within that database.

If in a given year the Dean and the Associate Dean responsible for course scheduling determine that more faculty members are eligible for course reduction under §2 than would be consistent with curricular needs, the Associate Dean responsible for course scheduling will award such course reductions as are available to those faculty whose qualifying publications appear in the most highly ranked journals, using the impact factor ranking method set forth above. In cases in which the qualifying publication is a book, the Associate Dean responsible for course scheduling will perform this ranking by making an appropriate judgment based on the length of the book, the prominence of its publisher, and the professional reception the book has received.

3. Course Release. A legal writing, tenure or tenured or tenure-track faculty member not entitled to course reduction under §2 may apply for a one-semester, one-course release if other substantial professional commitments, such as chairing a major university or law school committee, working on a significant publication, assuming a particularly burdensome teaching load, or a combination of these or similar professional commitments place significant demands on the faculty member’s time and the Dean determines that a course release is in the law school’s best interests. See §7 below for application process.

Rationale: Teaching releases have been awarded in the past for a variety of reasons on an ad hoc basis. There has been no formal application procedure and no clear criteria for such releases. While not limiting the discretion of law school administrators to grant or deny course releases in any particular case, this standard is intended to make all faculty aware that course releases are available and to identify some of the situations that have justified past releases. This negotiated process also appears consistent with that used in other CSU colleges governed by the CBA. See Fn 2 for details.
In considering whether a "particularly burdensome teaching load" justifies a release, the Dean will generally consider a number of factors. These include the number of students in the professor's classes, the nature and quantity of feedback mechanisms and assignments the professor incorporates into his or her courses, the level of preparation required for the courses and other relevant factors.

4. Variance to Standard Teaching Schedule. A faculty member not entitled to course reduction under §2 may request a variance from the standard teaching schedule under §1. For example, Professor A could apply to teach three courses in the fall semester and one course in the spring semester. Professor B could apply to teach two courses in the fall, one in the spring and one in the summer term, provided that no additional compensation is received for teaching the summer course.

The request for a variance is subject to application process set forth in §7 below and to the limitations in §6 below.

Rationale: This type of schedule flexibility has been individually negotiated by certain faculty members has has never been identified as an option available to all faculty members. It is beneficial to individual professors and to the law school to allow flexibility in scheduling. In addition, this system might encourage more people to teach in the summer.

5. Tenure-Track Faculty. Untenured tenure-track faculty who commence their teaching careers at Cleveland-Marshall are usually allowed two course releases prior to the semester in which they are reviewed for tenure. Generally a new faculty member takes the first course release during the first two years and the second release in the year before being reviewed for promotion and tenure. This release time is negotiated by the faculty member and Dean and does not involve the formal application procedure set forth at §7 below. A faculty member should, however, include this request in the teaching preference form submitted by faculty each year.

Untenured lateral hires are not governed by this provision, but may negotiate pretenure course release(s) with the Dean.

Rationale: This is a codification of current practice. The release time allows new faculty time to work on teaching and scholarship and generally become acclimated to academia. This standard does not apply to clinical or legal writing faculty. It does not automatically apply to tenure-track lateral hires who are untenured, but those individuals may negotiate with the Dean for one or more course releases as a condition of employment.

6. Professorships. Faculty members who hold a named professorship may apply for a one course release each academic year in a reduced financial stipend. The faculty member should include this request in the teaching preference form submitted by faculty each year. The form must be submitted by the identified due date and is not subject to the application process set forth in §7 below.

Rationale: This is a codification of the professorships standards.

7. Relationship to CSU Professional Leave Policies. Absent extraordinary circumstances, a faculty member may not use any of the mechanisms described above, either alone or in combination, to obtain a complete teaching release for either a fall or spring semester. Such releases must be generally obtained pursuant to university policy and procedures for professional leaves (i.e. sabbaticals) set forth in §§1.8.A.3 of CSU’s Personnel Policies and Bylaws (i.e. the “Greenbook”).

Rationale: Our obligations as Cleveland-Marshall law professors are not limited to teaching and scholarship. Service to and involvement in the law school and university communities are core components of our professional responsibility throughout the academic year.18

Faculty with no teaching responsibilities during either the fall or spring may be tempted to disassociate from the law school and university during that semester, thereby unilaterally transforming teaching release time into a professional leave. This transformation arguably usurps university professional leave policies governing “Leaves with Pay” (i.e. sabbaticals) under §§1.8.A.3, which must be obtained through the application process set forth at §§1.8.C.11

An exception for “extraordinary circumstances” is included to allow reconsideration of the application of this general policy in a compelling case. For example, a professor who receives a Fulbright or similar grant or other unique opportunity for professional development that provides no significant financial remuneration may be able to obtain a release from teaching and perhaps also other law school responsibilities without meeting all the university requirements for a professional leave.

8. Application Process for Course Release or Variance. A faculty member seeking a variance from the usual two-course per semester schedule under §2 or a course release based on substantial professional commitments explained in §3 should submit a written application to the Dean and the Associate Dean in charge of course scheduling. The application is due when the Associate Dean solicits faculty teaching preferences for the upcoming academic year. The application should explain the reason for the request and not exceed two typed pages. If a course release is sought based on substantial professional commitments, the application should also identify and briefly explain all course releases and professional leaves the applicant has received during the preceding five years.

18See Greenbook, §§8.1.2.A.1.c
11Under CSU by-laws that govern law school operations, all “Extended leaves [that] last more than five weeks...must be approved in accordance with Section 8.1.8.C)” of the Greenbook.
At the completion of a semester in which a faculty member has received a course release due to substantial professional commitments, the recipient shall submit a brief report to the Dean reporting on the faculty member's activities during that semester.

Rationale: In past years, some faculty members have submitted formal written applications for course releases while others have secured releases through informal discussions with the Associate Dean in charge of scheduling or the Dean. Some faculty members submitted requests well in advance of the affected semester and some asked to be released long after the course schedule has been finalized. This proposed application process is modeled after that used for summer research and teaching grants. It is designed to impose a minimal burden on the applicant, while also providing timely notice to the Associate Dean and Dean of the faculty member's request and sufficient information on which to evaluate the request.

The requirement that a faculty member who receives a teaching release because of other substantial professional commitments report on his/her activities at the end of the semester ensure accountability similar to that required when other law school benefits are received, such as an official professional leave or a summer teaching or writing grant. This report is not required of a faculty member who holds a professorship or a faculty member who has obtained a teaching release by redeeming banked hours.

9. Decisions on Applications. The Dean shall make the final decision on all applications for course releases and adjustments to standard teaching schedules based on the recommendation of the Associate Dean in charge of course scheduling. Decisions on course scheduling are not subject to faculty review.

The Dean shall publish a list at the beginning of each AY of faculty members who have been granted a teaching release or variance for that year. The Dean may exercise discretion to omit a faculty member from the list if the release was granted for personal rather than professional reasons.

Rationale: Creating a course schedule that satisfies students, faculty, and our accrediting agencies is a daunting task. The Dean and the Associate Dean in charge of scheduling are in the best position to evaluate the individual requests of faculty members in light of larger institutional concerns such as course coverage and equitable workload distribution.

Moreover, principles of faculty governance empower the faculty to establish and revise the curriculum and approve the contents of specific courses. The task of assembling a comprehensive course schedule each academic year does not fall within faculty governance powers, but is relegated to law school administration.

Hi Guys: Very sorry it took me so long to get to this. I have a hand of thoughts, and I cc'd Craig mainly because I want to register some mild disagreement about the direction this is taking. I definitely won't stand in anybody's way, but I have some concerns. Anyway, now that I've had this chance to think about it, I will distribute to the Committee for their thoughts as well (that's what you wanted, right HG?))

1. I'm concerned about how many things we request information about. Maybe the omnibus request makes sense for some internal purposes, but I fear two problems. First, something to bear in mind is that we won't be able to make any sort of comparison between this data and data for other schools. I don't believe there would be any way from publicly available sources to figure out how many media appearances or amicus briefs or whatever have been written by faculty elsewhere. So in order to use this data to make a multi-school comparison, I think we would have to kind of start from scratch--we would have to reduce the Survey Monkey results to a simplified quantitative form (e.g., take the list of title, citation and page lengths of articles, essays, book reviews, and book chapters, and reduce it to a simple number for each faculty member).

But much more importantly, our experience with the Law Library's many-year effort to maintain a faculty publication database suggests that this is going to be a lot of work. Despite what others have thought, I believe it will be more work than the multi-school survey I suggested. I wouldn't actually care about how much work it is except that I think it will be damaging to the usefulness of some internal productivity metric, which I believe could be really useful to us.

Here is what I mean. I desire that this Information collection project not only get off the ground, but that it become a reliable, consistent metric from year-to-year, indefatigably, and that it become a fact of life within the Law School. That seems feasible if we develop some relatively simple, objective measure, which we might get if we just do an impact-adjusted count of articles and books. But I fear that it's the effort we try to do what is proposed here--an omnibus collection of a broad spectrum of information—it will wind up being so much work that it just gets dropped after a year or so. But even if it doesn't, it will not in itself produce a meaningful, objective basis of comparison that means anything to people. It will just be a nebulous mass of information.

2. Here's why I believe this will be so much work, even though it is set up as a self-reporting survey. First, I believe we can expect less than 100% participation, and it may be substantially less. Bear in mind that this survey will actually be fairly tedious for people to fill out, because you are asking for titles, citations, and page lengths. For many people, especially more senior or more productive people, it's going to take an hour or more to track all that down. Moreover, this is going to feel redundant to people, because the Library has already collected this information. They have been keeping a publication database, that is relatively complete, for all faculty. They also have periodically asked people to update their library publication lists, and I expect people will feel like this is redundant.

So, what will we do if we get, say, 50 or 60% compliance? We may be stuck doing the hard work that we are trying to avoid by doing a self-reporting survey.

For what it is worth, if we still want to proceed with the omnibus collection effort, maybe a better way to do this is to have the library make a request that faculty supplement their existing publication lists. If there is substantial non-compliance with that request, then the library or someone else will have to try to supplement non-compliers' publication lists as best they can.

Anyway, as to the details of the survey itself, I had only one point of feedback: Why do we care about length? I believe it is unimportant and if you make an explicit metric out of it, you indicate to people that we value length for its own sake, thereby encouraging longer articles for no good reason. The kinds of articles that should be de-emphasized—short, light, tightly sourced essays or personal reminiscences or the like—speak for themselves without us having to know how short they are, and, on the other hand, sometimes very short papers can be very prestigious, important, and high impact.

Heidi Gorovitz Robertson wrote:

Hi Chris,

As you know, Craig wants us to start with a baseline of what we are doing/have done at our own school, on our own faculty. From the bottom, we can focus on 1, improving, and 2, comparing. So, I've put together a draft of a survey we can have faculty fill out, but it's just a draft. I'd love your thoughts, and the thoughts of the Committee on whether I've asked the right questions or chosen the right categories. Feel free to add, delete, change, criticize. Once we've got it where we want it, I can turn it into a survey monkey survey that'll be easy to fill out. That will also give us the data in a very usable format.

MEMORANDUM

TO: Dean Craig M. Boise
FROM: Professor Phyllis L. Crocker
RE: Self Study Committee 2011-12
DATE: 16 May 2012

The Self Study Committee began working on the self-study process in the fall of 2012. In the fall the committee as a whole met four times, and in the spring we met seven times. In the fall we created three subcommittees: Mission/Vision, 140 Plan, and Surveys. These groups met regularly apart from the Self Study Committee. In the spring some of these groups continued to meet. In the spring we also created subcommittees for each of the Self Study chapters we will write. These groups also met independently of the Self Study Committee.

This year the Self-Study Committee accomplished many projects:

1. We led the law school conversations about downsizing to a 1L class of 140. As part of this we gathered comprehensive information about other schools in our region and other comparable schools based on criteria such as urban location, public/private, and student population size. We hosted discussions with faculty and staff throughout the fall and spring.

2. We created and administered surveys for faculty and staff. We worked with Tom Geaghan, the head of CSU’s Institutional Research on analyzing and understanding the survey results. The survey subcommittee and the entire Self Study Committee each met with Geaghan. We provided survey results in a variety of formats to the faculty and staff. We held separate discussions with the faculty and staff about the survey results.

3. We participated in the nationwide Law School Survey of Student Engagement.

3. We engaged the faculty and staff in several conversations about our Mission and Vision. The Mission/Vision subcommittee and the Self Study Committee as a whole worked on revising and sharpening the Mission and Vision. We discussed the Mission and Vision with the Visiting Committee, and will do the same with the NAC next week.

4. We divided up responsibility for each of the key sections of the Self Study Report and each of the subcommittees met at least once in the spring. We agreed on a timeline for drafts to be presented to the faculty in the fall of 2012. See attached.

Please let me know if you would like any additional information.

RE: Self-Study Timeline
DATE: 24 April 2012

Our site visit will begin March 31, 2013. We need to get the Self-Study Report to the ABA and AALS at least six weeks prior to their visit (mid-February). Therefore, I propose that our goal be to have the report approved by the faculty at the last faculty meeting in December 2012. Prior to that we will need to present draft sections of the report to faculty for discussion at lunches. Here is my proposed schedule:

October: We present drafts of the chapters on Program of Legal Education, Students, Library, IT, Administration November: We present drafts of the chapters on Faculty, Bar Passage, Facilities, Overview/History.

Completed drafts of each chapter will be due on October 1 for the first set and November 5 for the second set. All appendices should be completed by those dates as well.
Memorandum

DATE:       June 4, 2012

TO:         Dean Craig Boise

FROM:       The Teaching Committee — Kevin O’Neill (chair)

RE:         Year-End Report (2011-2012 Academic Year)

Over the past academic year, the Teaching Committee performed two basic tasks: (1) giving you its recommendations on the award of Summer Teaching Enhancement Grants; and (2) giving the faculty its recommendations on updating the Academic Regulations to accommodate our switch to "semesterized" courses.

RECOMMENDATIONS ON THE AWARD OF TEACHING GRANTS

The Committee received an application from one faculty member: Brian A. Glassman.

Brian A. Glassman:
From Art School to Law School:
Lessons for Visual Learners

Recommendation: By a 3-to-1 vote, the Committee recommends that funding for this project be denied.

Comment: The Committee's primary concern with this application is that Professor Glassman is seeking funding for a project on which he has already completed a substantial amount of work — enough work that he gave a presentation on the topic at the Rocky Mountain Legal Writing Conference in March 2011. (Click on the link below for more information on his talk.)

In response to these concerns, Professor Glassman submitted a one-page supplement to his application in which he identified several additional steps, above and beyond what he has already accomplished, that his grant will embrace. Those additional steps would include: (1) familiarizing himself with the body of research on human learning styles; and (2) writing “a publishable article of 15-20 pages” on his project topic. Though some members of the Committee were impressed by this additional work, a majority of the Committee nevertheless rejected Professor Glassman’s application by a 3-to-1 vote.

RECOMMENDATIONS ON SEMESTERIZATION
UPDATES TO THE LAW SCHOOL’S ACADEMIC REGULATIONS

On April 10, 2012, the Teaching Committee sent a memorandum to the faculty containing our recommendations on semesterization updates to the law school’s academic regulations. That memorandum stated:

THE TWO PROBLEMS TO BE RESOLVED

In this memorandum, the Teaching Committee recommends updating the Academic Regulations to address two problems arising from our switch to “semesterized” courses. Here are the two situations that will pose a problem after our switch to semesterization:

(1)
What happens if, this year, one of our students fails or withdraws from the second semester of a two-semester core course? This poses a problem because next year, that core course will be a one-semester, not a two-semester course.

(2)

OUR SUGGESTIONS FOR RESOLVING THESE PROBLEMS

We suggest that in both of these situations, the student should be required to take our one-semester course. We believe that this bright-line rule is preferable to the alternative, which would require an individual review of all the topics that were covered in the student's first exposure to the course as compared with the full range of topics to be covered in our "semesterized" course, in an effort to ensure that the two courses overlap sufficiently.

If, as we suggest, all students should be required to take our one-semester course, what do we do with the credit hours that the student has already received for successfully completing the "first half" of the course? We suggest that those credit hours remain on the student's transcript; i.e., that each student be given full credit for all of the work they've successfully completed. The only down side to this approach is that some students might wind up, for example, receiving seven credits for Contracts — three credits for completing the first semester of a two-semester variation of the course, then another four credits for completing our "semesterized" version of the course. But this seems to us much fairer to the student, and much simpler from an administrative standpoint, than nullifying all credit for completing their first exposure to the course.

OUR SUGGESTED REVISIONS TO THE ACADEMIC REGULATIONS

To effectuate our suggestions, it will be necessary to add some language to the Academic Regulations. To address Problem #1 (involving students here at Cleveland-Marshall who have failed to complete the second semester of a core course), we'll need to update Academic Regulation 3.3 — Withdrawal from Multiple-Term or Two-Semester Core Courses. To address Problem #2 (involving transfer students), we'll need to update Academic Regulation 6 — Credit for Work Completed at Other Approved Law Schools.

To resolve Problem #1, we suggest that a new subparagraph be added to Academic Regulation 3.3, as follows:

(e) This provision applies specifically to "semesterized" courses — i.e., core courses that have been transformed from two semesters to one. Any student who fails or withdraws from the second semester of a two-semester course that is subsequently "semesterized" from two semesters to one must enroll in and complete the new one-semester version of that course. The student shall not lose any credit hours previously awarded for successful completion of the first semester of a subsequently "semesterized" two-semester course.
To resolve Problem #2, we suggest that a new subparagraph be added to Academic Regulation 6.1, as follows:

* * * * *

At the April 26, 2012 faculty meeting, the faculty voted to accept our recommendations with minor revisions.

As to the first amendment (Academic Regulation 3.3(e)), the faculty voted to accept it exactly as the committee worded it.

As to the second amendment (Academic Regulation 6.1(g)), here is the revised language that the faculty voted for:

(g) Any transfer student who arrives at Cleveland-Marshall having completed only one semester of a two-semester course that is here taught as a one-semester course (i.e., Torts, Contracts, Civil Procedure, and Property) must enroll in and complete Cleveland-Marshall's one-semester version of that course. The student shall not lose any credit hours previously awarded for successful completion of the first semester of a two-semester course that is here taught as a one-semester course.

MINUTES OF REGULAR FACULTY MEETING OF COLLEGE OF LAW
September 1, 2011
4:00 p.m. – LB 60

ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Deans Robertson and Sundahl; Professors Becker, Broering-Jacobs, Cherry, Curtis, Daiker-Middaugh, Davis, Falk, Forte, Gard, Garlock, Geier, Gelman, Glassman, Heyward, Hoke, Inniss, Kerber, Kowalski, Lazarus, Majette, Mika, Niedringhaus, O’Neill, Plecnik, Ray, Sterio, and Wilson; Visiting Professors Bouvier, Johnson and Simek; Assistant Deans Dempsey and Lucak.

EXCUSED: Professors Borden, Buckley, Crocker, Dougherty, Green, Keating, Lewis, May, Sagers and Weinstein

NOT PRESENT: Professors Oh and Witmer-Rich

A regular meeting of the faculty was convened at 4:03 p.m. by Dean Craig M. Boise.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Approval of Minutes of May 12, 2011 Faculty Meeting
Professor Ken Kowalski moved to approve the minutes of the May 12, 2011 faculty meeting as submitted. Professor Hoke seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Dean’s Report

- Dean Boise invited Assistant Dean Christopher Lucak to give a report on the demographics of the incoming class. Dean Boise then reported that the entering class is smaller than anticipated – 169 students instead of the 190 on which the budget was premised. The reason for accepting a smaller class was due to a reduction in applications (13% down) as well as a decrease in the quality of the applicants.

- The result of accepting a smaller class left a budget shortfall for this fiscal year. A hiring freeze partially addressed the shortfall lost from tuition. The rest will be covered by not replacing Dena Davis and some additional relatively minor cuts.
The budget committee will reconvene to evaluate different budget scenarios for the future.

- This year we will engage in a self-study in advance of the ABA site visit. Professor Croker has agreed to chair this committee. The ABA wants us to look seriously at our institutional issues including the appropriate size of our institution in terms of bar passage and job placement as well as in terms of our faculty needs.

- This year we will be focusing on creating an environment in which scholarship, research, intellectual inquiry and ideas are predominant. We want to raise the profile of faculty scholarship. It is important that faculty be on campus. We have to have a community of scholars when we are in the building.

- The travel policy will be revisited this year. It is expected that it will stay largely the same as last year with the exception of an increase in the total amount of travel allowance per faculty member and a detailed explanation of how this travel will increase our profile and further the scholarly objectives of the law school.

- Dean Boise will be appointing faculty members to fill the two vacant named professorships and chairs. The focus of these appointments will be scholarship. If you have any comments or suggestions regarding additional factors to be considered in filling the openings, feel free to communicate these to Dean Boise.

- A Faculty Scholarship Forum will be held on September 13th at 4:00 p.m. Andrew Morris from the University of Alabama will be the speaker.

- A great deal of thought and discussion went into the curricular reform. It is now important to make sure the implementation of this reform is successful. Two committees will be key to this objective. The Teaching Committee will look carefully at how we move to semesterization. The Curriculum Committee will look at the experiential skills requirement. Later this semester there will be a semesterization retreat designed to begin thinking together about moving from two semesters to one.

- In light of the reduced budget it is becoming ever more important to ramp up our development efforts. This year, we plan on completing the fundraising for the Fund for Excellence. Our goal is to raise $1.2 million dollars. We are about half way to our goal. The money raised by this fund will be used for a range of things including scholarship and travel. In order to assist us in these endeavors we have hired a Director of Advancement, Jennifer Nye. Ms. Nye will begin on September 8th. She has extensive experience with calling centers and annual fund raising. Along these same lines, Dean Boise and Jennifer Blaga hope to visit one law firm every week. They hope to use these firm visits to build a pipeline for jobs as well as increase annual giving. They will be targeting small and mid-size law firms.
Associate Deans’ Report

Associate Dean for Faculty Enrichment

- Over the summer changes have been made in how we communicate with each other and outside the law school. Faculty Focus has been replaced by a blog. The blog is more efficient and versatile. Please sign up to receive the blog and send Dean Robertson any items that you believe are newsworthy.
- The fall schedule of lunchtime lectures will be out in the next few days. The first scheduled lecture will be given by Professor Gelman on September 14th.
- The Supreme Court Review has been moved to Monday, October 17th. If you would like to present 5-7 minutes on a Supreme Court case in your area, please contact Associate Dean Robertson.
- Faculty scholarship groups will be starting again. Please let Associate Dean Robertson know if your research has changed or if you want to change groups.
- Hard copies of all faculty publications will be placed in the faculty lounge. If you have any publications, please give them to Associate Dean Robertson.
- The Northeast Ohio Colloquium will be held on Friday November 11th. Please plan on attending. Our speaker will be Patricia Falk.
- Faculty Coffee Hours have begun. They will be held on alternating Tuesdays and Wednesdays to accommodate teaching schedules.
- The Faculty Research Room in the basement of the law school is open again. We have a limited number of carrels and some tables. Let Associate Dean Robertson know if you are interested. Space will be allocated on an annual basis.
- We will be having faculty exchanges with Capital, Duquesne and Toledo. Professor Plecnik will be speaking at Capital.
- Hartford Insurance Plan is one of the benefits you receive from the university. Copies of the plans were included with your agenda packets. Associate Dean Robertson will disseminate the group number.

Associate Dean for Administration

- Visiting Clinical Professors Linda Johnson and Maya Simek were introduced.
- The printer in the faculty lounge will remain.
- Please review the spreadsheet sent out listing the prerequisites for classes. Assistant Dean Lifter would like to load these prerequisites to the online registration system.
- In preparation for exam review, please submit spring and summer exams to Israel.
• The Curricular Reform Retreat on semesterization will be held on October 14th at noon. Lunch will be served and then a discussion will ensue about redesigning 1L courses. If you teach or plan on teaching a 1L class, please attend.
• Associate Dean Sundahl will be visiting 1L sections to promote the St. Petersburg summer program. Professor Sterio taught there this summer and she gave a short report about the program.
• Last year the Cleveland-Marshall Law Alumni Association began a program to bring practitioners into the classroom. The pilot program went very well. If you want to bring a practitioner in to your classroom, let Associate Dean Sundahl know and he will give you names from which you can select.
• Cleveland State will be hosting a Homecoming Week (October 15-22, 2011). The law school will participate by hosting an admissions open house on Saturday, October 22nd. We will also try to pair other events in the law school to Homecoming.

Report of the Honor Council
Associate Dean Mark Sundahl provided a memo prior to the faculty meeting reporting on the disciplinary matters handled by the Honor Council during the 2010-11 academic year. (A copy of that memo is attached to these minutes.) He noted that the report was informational only.

Professor Wilson, Chair of the Honor Council, stated that the Honor Council will be tougher in their penalties in the coming year. He noted that due to the accessibility of technology, cheating is becoming easier and more prevalent. This is bad for our reputation and we must show students we are serious about imposing penalties for cheating. Associate Dean Sundahl stated that he spoke to a student who believes there is rampant cheating via smart phones. He stated that some faculty do not allow students to bring phones to exams. Professor Hoke suggested banning smart phones and all other electronic devices. This would eliminate the opportunity for easy cheating. A discussion ensued regarding various methods used by students to cheat. Associate Dean Sundahl suggested that faculty make students aware of the repercussions of cheating. Send the message that cheating can ruin their careers.

Report on Dean’s List and Graduation Honors
Associate Dean Mark Sundahl provided a memo prior to the faculty meeting revisiting a motion tabled in 2007 which sought to change the method used to award graduation honors from a numerical to a percentage system. (A copy of that memo is attached to these minutes.) The motion came after the faculty passed a motion to implement a new grading system. At the time, the faculty worried that the new grading system would lead to grade inflation. Four years have passed and data has now been gathered. It appears as if there is a slight increase in graduation honors, but nothing substantial.
Professor Sterio stated that she believes there are too many grades on the lower end of our grading structure. If we were ever to change the structure, she urged the faculty to drop a plus or minus at the lower end. Dean Boise stated that at DePaul, they added minus grades and there was concern that there would be grade deflation not inflation. Professor Curtis asked if a 10% summa cum laude percentage is considered high. Professor Ray replied that other schools have higher than 10% at the summa level.

Clerkships and University Budget Updates
Professor Ray announced that we are on pace to have a record number of clerkships. He encouraged faculty to please respond to any outstanding requests for recommendations. The deadline is Tuesday.

Professor Ray reported on the University Budget Committee of which he is a member. The Budget Committee met with the President last week. The President wants to develop a new budgeting frame work for the university. He wants to have some kind of incentive to develop projects consistent with school and college priorities. He also asked the committee to come up with recommendations on how to do program reviews. He would like a comprehensive, across the board review of each program in the university, what they do and how well they do it. The President wants to redirect resources away from underperforming programs. How this effects the law school is unclear. This program review will most likely take place next year. At some point the law school will be asked to engage in its own internal review of what we do and that will be appraised by some external group. The fact that we will be engaged in a self-study this year will actually help us. The President was unhappy with budget cutting from last year because the results were across the board. If more cuts are necessary, he will want to look at underperforming programs.

Professor Wilson questioned whether the review program will look at administration as well as faculty. Professor Ray responded that the review is looking at the academic side only. Professor Gelman expressed concern about the process.

Adjournment
Professor Falk moved to adjourn the faculty meeting. Professor Curtis seconded. The meeting adjourned at 5:35 p.m.
MINUTES OF REGULAR FACULTY MEETING OF COLLEGE OF LAW
October 6, 2011
4:00 p.m. – LB 60

ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Dean Robertson; Professors Becker, Broering-Jacobs, Buckley, Crocker, Curtis, Daiker-Middaugh, Davis, Falk, Forte, Gard, Garlock, Geier, Gelman, Glassman, Green, Heyward, Inniss, Kowalski, Lazarus, Lewis, Majette, Mika, Niedringhaus, O’Neill, Plecnik, Weinstein and Wilson; Visiting Professors Johnson and Simek; Assistant Deans Dempsey and Lifter; Guest Gerald Modjeski.

EXCUSED: Associate Dean Sundahl; Professors Borden, Cherry, Dougherty, Hoke, Keating, Kerber, May and Sterio

NOT PRESENT: Professors Oh, Ray, Sagers and Witmer-Rich

A regular meeting of the faculty was convened at 4:05 p.m. by Dean Craig M. Boise.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Proposed Changes in Retirement Benefits
Mr. Gerald Modjeski, Director of Employee Benefits for CSU distributed a handout outlining proposed changes to the STRS program. (See handout attached to minutes.) He explained that the changes are necessary to keep the program sustainable. After answering faculty questions, he thanked the faculty for their time.

Approval of Minutes of September 1, 2011 Faculty Meeting
Professor Patricia Falk moved to approve the minutes of the September 1, 2011 faculty meeting as submitted. Professor Kevin O’Neill seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Dean’s Report
• Congratulations to Professor Lolita Buckner Inniss for receiving her PhD from York University in Canada.
• Congratulations to Professor Majette and Professor Ray for publishing their most recent scholarship. Professor Forte debated Daniel Mach, Director of the ACLU Program on Freedom of Religion and Belief at the Cornell Club in New York. Emeritus Professor Beggs was interviewed by the ACLU for their Oral History Project regarding his service to the ACLU.

• Committee charges will be circulated tomorrow. Committee chairs should begin scheduling meetings with their committees.

• Dean Boise and Jennifer Blaga are visiting local law firms in hopes of expanding job opportunities for our graduates and as part of our development efforts. So far, they have visited three firms. They plan on visiting many more this year – with a focus on mid-size firms.

• Three major publications will be sent to alumni and friends of C|M|LAW this year – the “Giving Book” which will be a report on giving for the previous year; “Stories Book” which will highlight stories of some of our alumni; and a “Yearbook” which will serve as a solicitation in advance of the end of our current fiscal year.

• The Dean’s Holiday Party is scheduled for Saturday, December 10th from 4:00 to 8:00 p.m. Please mark your calendars. Invitations will be sent out closer to the date of the event.

• The Office of Career Planning is hosting a Hiring Partners mini-conference on November 18th. They are bringing in Bill Henderson of Indiana University who has done a great deal of empirical research on what it takes to hire a good lawyer.

• Moot Court Night will be held on November 10th at 6:00 p.m. in the Moot Court Room. The judges will be Chief Justice Maureen O’Connor and Judges Dan Polster and Benita Pearson.

• Dean Boise will be the keynote speaker at the Norman S. Minor Bar Association’s Trailblazer luncheon on October 14th.

• The law school will be co-hosting an event with Kol HaLev synagogue entitled The People vs. King David: A Trial on November 12th at 7:30 p.m. If you would like to purchase a ticket, please see Professor Weinstein or Associate Dean Robertson.

Associate Deans’ Report
Heidi Gorovitz Robertson

• The faculty research room in the law library is now open. Contact Associate Dean Robertson if you want to reserve space.

• Please make sure your CV on the website is up to date. If you need assistance updating the website, see Associate Dean Robertson.

• Professor Veronica Dougherty is ill and will not be able to return to work. Associate Dean Robertson will send out her address for those who want to send Professor Dougherty a card.
Elect reps for AALS House of Representatives
Dean Boise asked for nominations to the Association of American Law Schools House of Representatives. We need to elect a representative and an alternate. Associate Dean Robertson offered to serve as our representative. Professor Majette offered to serve as the alternate. Both nominations passed by acclamation.

Report of the Self-Study Committee
Professor Phyllis Crocker stated that we are embarking on a self-study in advance of the Spring 2013 ABA site visit. We have no outstanding issues from our last accreditation. Dean Boise and Professor Crocker will be attending a workshop in Chicago to learn about changes in the process since our last time. The Self-Study Committee will be gathering data to determine what size the incoming class should be in the future. They are gathering data from similarly situated schools with incoming classes of 120-170 students. Additionally, the committee will host a brown bag for faculty. Eventually this data will be used for a discussion with the university administration. The Self-Study Committee is also working on a faculty and a staff survey. In the Spring, the committee will turn their attention to mission, vision and strategic plan for C|M|LAW.

Status Report on Proposal to Allow Non-Tenure Track Faculty to be Eligible for Professional Leaves of Absence
Professor Sheldon Gelman updated the faculty on the proposal, previously endorsed by the faculty, to allow non-tenure track faculty to be eligible for professional leaves of absence. He stated that the proposal went from the law school to the University Faculty Affairs Committee (UFAC). The UFAC approved the recommendation and it went on to the Steering Committee. The Steering Committee chose to table the proposal until they could gather further information regarding what other schools do in similar situations. To date, no information has been collected, so it was sent back to the UFAC. At a UFAC meeting, attended by the Provost and Dean Boise, the Provost urged the committee to reject the proposal because he felt there are adequate professional development opportunities for clinical/legal writing faculty. At this point the UFAC has decided to send a formal written request to Dean Boise asking what professional development opportunities are available to clinical and legal faculty. Professor Gelman stated that he believes the UFAC will not approve the proposal. Professor Glassman thanked Professor Gelman for his efforts.

Announcement – Wireless Upgrade Project
Professor Niedringhaus announced that IS & T has begun a campus-wide Wireless Upgrade project. There are several phases of the project, with the first phase being an analysis of signal strength. Beginning on Tuesday, contracted engineers along with a CSU employee, will be walking through every space in the law school to assess the signal strength. This means they will need to unlock your office, walk through with a laptop, and leave the office. It should not take long and they should not disturb anything in your office.
Adjournment
Professor Falk moved to adjourn the faculty meeting and move to Executive Session. Professor Becker seconded. The meeting adjourned at 5:15 p.m.
ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Deans Robertson and Sundahl; Professors Broering-Jacobs, Buckley, Cherry, Crocker, Curtis, Daiker-Middaugh, Davis, Geier, Glassman, Green, Heyward, Hoke, Kerber, Kowalski, Niedringhaus, O’Neill, Plecnik, Ray, Sterio, Weinstein and Witmer-Rich; Visiting Professors Johnson and Simek.

EXCUSED: Professors Becker, Borden (PLOA), Dougherty, Falk, Forte, Gard, Garlock, Gelman, Inniss, Keating, Lewis, May, Mika and Wilson

NOT PRESENT: Professors Majette, Oh, and Sagers

A regular meeting of the faculty was convened at 4:05 p.m. by Dean Craig M. Boise.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Dean’s Report

- The results of the Ohio bar exam were released. Our passage rate for first time bar takers was 85%. Although we are one percentage point above where we were last year, it still places us 7th out of the nine Ohio law schools. We are now looking at whether we need to increase the attrition rate. This can be accomplished two ways – either by applying the full range of grades and/or by raising the minimum GPA to stay in law school. Professor Geier asked Professor Falk if there is a difference at Capital Law School since she had just completed a year there as Visiting Professor. Professor Falk stated that class time is 55-60 minutes per hour. This adds 7 more hours per semester with the students. Additionally they have Friday evening classes for part-time students. Professor Lazarus stated that he believes the main reason that students fail the bar is not that they aren’t capable but because they don’t work hard enough in the two months prior to the bar exam. Also, students generally slough off in their second and third year so he suggested not limiting attrition to only first year students.
Professor Davis raised concerns about the writing ability of students. Dean Boise turned the meeting over to Associate Dean Robertson to further discuss the issue of bar results.

Associate Dean Robertson shared two charts: one showing statistical data related to those students passing the July 2011 bar exam and one for those who did not pass. She noted that 20 first-time takers failed the bar. Students who failed the bar are being contacted to obtain additional data. The data that has been compiled shows that:
- 4 of the 20 students did not take the first bar offered after their graduation
- 4 of the 20 had LSAT scores at 150 or below
- 13 of 20 had first year GPAs of 2.5 or below
- 13 of 20 did not attend the free MPT workshops and most of the rest did not participate in a large number of MPT workshops (7 are offered)

Professor Sterio asked if there was a way to make attendance at the free MPT workshops mandatory. Associate Dean Robertson said the bar committee is discussing this idea. They are also talking about having a mandatory writing skills boot camp for those struggling. Dean Boise stated that another idea is to tack on a per semester fee to each students’ tuition which would be used to pay for a bar prep course in the students’ third year. We are still waiting for university approval. Professor Weinstein suggested offering various incentive-based programs. For example, students who attend MPT or other classes have some of their fee returned to them. He suggested that an incentive approach is better than a mandate approach.

Associate Dean Robertson stated that there is a 2-year lag in ABA data regarding attrition. Attrition rates are based on students who withdraw, transfer, or are academically dismissed. For the most recent data (the entering class of 2009) we were 4th in the state with an attrition rate of 15.9%. Our attrition rates have slowly gone down (18.7% in 2006; 17.5% in 2007; 17.3% in 2008). For the entering class of 2010 we had 13 withdraw, 2 transfer and 15 academically dismissed.

Professor Buckley asked whether we track students who take out of state exams. Associate Dean Robertson replied that we have a file on those states that send us reports. Professor Sterio asked if we counsel students to wait and take a later bar exam if they don’t feel ready. Dean Boise replied that we counsel students to take the first bar exam after they graduate when the information and study skills are still fresh.

• If you have not already done so, please plan on attending the NE Ohio Faculty Colloquium this Friday at Blue Canyon. A large attendance by our faculty will show our peer schools how much we value scholarship.
• Last Monday (November 7th) 110 of our graduates were sworn to the Ohio State bar. The ceremony was preceded by a very nice luncheon, which was attended by four of the seven Ohio Supreme Court justices.
• Moot Court Night is this evening (November 10th). Presiding judges are the Honorable Maureen O’Connor, the Honorable Benita Pearson and the Honorable Dan Polster.
• John Dean is scheduled to visit C|M|LAW in April 2012. His visit will coincide with the 40th anniversary of Watergate and it will also tie in to the students’ professionalism problem. Mr. Dean will make a radio appearance on WCPN, host a faculty talk in the afternoon and speak at a 5:00 p.m. public event.
• The “Giving Book,” a summary of the giving over the past year, is scheduled to go out in the next week or 10 days.
• Next week the Dean is traveling to Washington, DC and New York City on a development trip. He is scheduled to meet with individual alumni and host two alumni receptions.

Professor Crocker asked the status of the clinical faculty search. Dean Boise responded that we have been approved to hire two clinicians. Associate Dean Sundahl is heading the search committee.

Professor Ray asked the status of filling the open named chairs. Dean Boise responded that he will be asking faculty to apply for those chairs in the near future. When choosing faculty to fill these positions, he will focus on scholarship.

Associate Dean for Administration
• Associate Dean Sundahl is chairing the committee to hire two clinicians. The committee is currently working on the job description. If you have any recommendations of potential candidates, please see a committee member.
• Professor Steve Gard has been discharged from the hospital and is expected to make a full recovery. Thank you to everyone who stepped up to cover his classes.
• In response to student complaints regarding cheating during exams involving the use of smart phones, Associate Dean Sundahl proposed the following amendment to the exam procedures:

Electronic Devices and Other Personal Effects
Students are not permitted to bring any electronic devices other than their personal computer to an exam (e.g., cell phones, Personal Digital Devices (PDAs), mp3 players, cameras, or digital or tape recorders). Students may not keep book bags, purses, or briefcases at their table during the exam. If a student brings a bag, purse or briefcase to the exam, they must be left at the front of the exam room and may not be accessed during the exam. If a student has an emergency that requires the student to make or receive a call during an exam, the student should inform Dean Lifter and arrange to have the call made or received from the Student Services Center. Neither the law school nor the proctor shall be responsible for items left in the front of the room.

Insert the following as a new paragraph 4 under “Proctoring Responsibilities”

4. Remind the students that electronic devices (as described above in Section C) are not permitted in the exam room. Tell the students that if they have any bags, purses, or briefcases, they must place the items in their locker or place them in the front of the room before taking the exam.

Professor Weinstein said that when he proctors exams he only allows one student out of the room at a time and he has them sign out and then back in again. This makes them aware that he tracking how long they are gone. Professor Cherry asked if students turn in their colleagues since they are obligated to do so as part of the Honor Code. Associate Dean Sundahl responded that sometimes students do turn in their colleagues. He also thought that reminding students of this responsibility is a good idea. Professor Geier suggested exploring the possibility of hiring proctors. Associate Dean Sundahl responded that he is looking into hiring proctors or possibly a security firm to proctor exams. Some faculty expressed their concern with hiring a security guard to proctor an exam. They felt it would send a negative message to students. Professor Ray suggested hiring graduate assistants to proctor. Associate Dean Sundahl thought this was a good idea and said he would investigate the matter further.

• The curricular reform retreat was held earlier this month. Although it was not well attended, the conversation was very productive. Criteria for the skills courses still need to be created. This was moved to the Curriculum Committee.

• In light of the reduced number of applications received by the Admissions Office, Associate Dean Sundahl asked for suggestions on how to attract good applicants. Specifically he asked for faculty assistance to break through the media clutter and get information out to potential students. He suggested that if students receive a personal letter from faculty it would make a lasting impression. Several professors offered to participate. Professor Ray suggested having faculty take top prospects out for dinner.

Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment
Associate Dean Robertson’s report was incorporated into the Dean’s Report.

Self-Study Update
Professor Crocker, Chair of the Self-Study Committee, reported on the status of the committee’s work. She stated that the committee is finalizing both the faulty and staff surveys which has been created using SurveyMonkey software. The surveys will be available shortly.

The committee hosted a brown bag to discuss the size of the next incoming class. This same conversation was held with both the Visiting Committee and the National Advisory Committee. Both committees were impressed with the forward thinking of the law school.

Professor Hoke questioned whether SurveyMonkey is completely anonymous. Professor Crocker stated that she believed it is but she will verify the anonymity feature. Professor Ray asked when the proposal for a smaller incoming class would be presented to the university. Dean Boise responded that when we have more data available, probably after the first of the year, he would present it to the University. Currently he is waiting for some modeling data. Professor Buckley asked if other law schools were reducing their incoming class sizes. Dean Boise responded that most law schools have reduced their class size, however, whether they will continue this reduction is not clear.

Adjournment
Professor Ray moved to adjourn the faculty meeting. Associate Dean Robertson seconded. The motion passed unanimously. The meeting adjourned at 5:19 p.m.
MINUTES OF REGULAR FACULTY MEETING OF COLLEGE OF LAW
December 15, 2011
2:00 p.m. – LB 60

ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Deans Robertson and Sundahl; Professors Becker, Broering-Jacobs, Buckley, Crocker, Curtis, Garlock, Geier, Gelman, Glassman, Green, Heyward, Hoke, Kowalski, Lewis, Majette, May, Mika, Niedringhaus, O’Neill, Plecnik, Ray, Sagers, Weinstein, Wilson and Witmer-Rich; Visiting Professors Bouvier, Johnson and Simek; Assistant Dean Lucak.

NOT PRESENT: Professors Davis and Oh.

Dean Craig M. Boise convened a regular meeting of the faculty at 2:05 p.m.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Approval of Minutes of October 6, 2011
Professor Geier moved to approve the minutes of the October 6, 2011 faculty meeting as submitted. Professor O’Neill seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Approval of Minutes of November 10, 2011
Professor Geier moved to approve the minutes of the November 10, 2011 faculty meeting as submitted. Professor O’Neill seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Dean’s Report

• Faculty Scholarship and Speaking Engagement Update: Professor Milena Sterio is currently in the Seychelles advising officials on the formation of a court dedicated to the prosecution of Somali pirates. She was also recently elected president of the Central States Law Schools Conference. Professor Wilson spoke at the Central States Law Schools conference last month. Professor Karin Mika spoke at the Legal Writing Institute Regional Workshop at Chicago-Kent Law School. Professor Ray organized and hosted a half-day conference here at the law school on e-discovery. Professor Gelman addressed the Cleveland-Marshall Law Alumni Association board on his recent research. Professor Plecnik’s article was included on SSRN’s top ten downloaded list for three different sub-journals. Please let Associate Dean Robertson know when you present a paper at other law schools and please remember to give a pitch for our law school when speaking at outside engagements. Also, if you have contacts at other law schools, please let us know so that we can secure speaking engagements for our faculty at their schools.

- Committees: There are still a few committees that did not meet this semester. Chairs need to convene meetings early and often to ensure completion of committee charges and to give members time for quality and deliberate decision-making.

- Development/OCP: Firm visits continue to go well. We are on track to visit 25 law firms this academic year – mostly small and mid-size firms. The firm visits are used to press job opportunities for our students and also as a development tool. The Giving Book was placed in faculty mailboxes yesterday. Thanks to those who attended the holiday party last Saturday night. Approximately 250 alumni, faculty and friends of C|M|LAW attended. The goal for this year is to complete the $1 million Fund for Excellence by the end of 2012. This money will be used to expand our branding, update our website, and provide additional funding for faculty research and scholarship.

- Solo Practice Incubator: Approximately 15% of our students end up in solo practice. We are looking into creating a solo practice incubator in the law school to give our students inexpensive office space and to allow students to support each other. Last month, we brought in Fred Rooney to give us advice on how to start our own program. Professor Rooney started the first incubator program at CUNY. Dean Boise followed up this meeting by visiting the program at CUNY during his development trip to New York. The Cleveland Metropolitan Bar has indicated they would like to be involved by mentoring the students involved in the incubator program. There is also a possibility for funding from the Cleveland Foundation and other grant-making organizations.

- Clinics: Curricular reform requires that students acquire more experiential skills prior to graduation. The best way to do so is with one-on-one supervision. Therefore, to expand our experiential opportunities we will be expanding our externship opportunities. Our clinical faculty will supervise outside attorneys who will supervise our students. This will create more opportunities for our students to practice in a supervised environment and in a broader array of practice areas.

- Misc.:
  - Cheating is always a concern during exam period. Please be vigilant when proctoring. Remind those who still have finals to be vigilant of cheaters.
Recently a projector was stolen from a classroom that was left unlocked. Please be more attentive to locking classroom doors after your class.

John Dean of Watergate fame will be here on April 19, 2012. He will be on WCPN, followed by an ethics program for our students, a faculty chat in the afternoon, and a public lecture at 5:00 p.m. The topic of his lecture will be “Watergate: 40 Years Later.” We hope to acquire firm sponsorship to defray the cost of bringing Mr. Dean to C|M|LAW.

Nominations for research chairs will begin in January. After break, Dean Boise will distribute a memo detailing the criteria for securing a chair and the nomination process.

Self-nominations forms for merit pay increases will also be circulated in mid-January.

The People v. King David event held last month at C|M|LAW will be aired on WCPN in January. Next year we will host The People v. Eve.

Associate Dean for Administration

- Thank you for implementing the new exam procedures. Although we did not have enough time to secure paid proctors for this exam period, we hope to have them in the future. Professor Becker suggested asking retired professors to proctor exams.
- Please send your teaching preferences to Associate Dean Sundahl as soon as possible. If you want to discuss your teaching preferences personally, feel free to stop in his office.
- On March 28th at 10:30 a.m. the 8th District Court of Appeals will hear oral arguments in the Moot Court Room

Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment

- When grading, please remember to use the full range of grades.
- If you are interested in speaking at a faculty luncheon next semester, contact Associate Dean Robertson. She is currently working on the calendar of events for next semester.
- Thank you to those who attended last month’s faculty colloquium. Professor Falk did a great job presenting on behalf of our law school. Case will host the next colloquium in the spring.
- If you are doing research that involves student data, or information about our students, check with the CSU Institutional Review Board. Any information you utilize regarding our students needs to be vetted by the IRB. We also need to ensure there are no FERPA implications.
- Please let Associate Dean Robertson know whenever you have an article published, speak at a conference, or participate in a public event so that it can be included in the faculty blog and SSRN. This also enables the Dean to talk about our faculty scholarship when he goes out into the community.
Admissions Report
Christopher Lucak, Assistant Dean of Admissions and Financial Aid, reported on the admissions statistics for the incoming class of 2011. (See report attached to these minutes.) He noted that applications decreased 13% from last year. This is consistent with the national average of 10% decrease. This trend is continuing this year with current applications down 14%. Specific details of the incoming class of 2011 include:

Selectivity – 38% (increase from 2010 rate of 34.3%)
Yield – 27.5% (decrease from 2010 rate of 30.6%)
Median LSAT – 155 (decrease from 156 score of 2010)
25% LSAT – 152 (decrease from 154 score of 2010)
75% LSAT – 157 (decrease from 158 score of 2010)
Median GPA – 3.27 (decrease from 2010 GPA of 3.45)
25% GPA – 3.02 (decrease from 2010 GPA of 3.16)
75% GPA – 3.52 (decrease from 2010 GPA of 3.65)
Offers to students of color increased 6% this year.
Overall 26% increase in student of color population from last year.

In relation to other public law schools in Ohio:
LSAT Quartiles – we are ahead of Akron, Capital, Dayton, Ohio Northern and Toledo GPA Quartiles – we are ahead of Capital and Dayton.
Selectivity – we are the second most selective law school in Ohio
Yield – we are the third highest yielding school in Ohio
Students of Color – we are the second highest school with minority enrollment
Female Enrollment – we are the third highest school with female enrollment

In response to questions from the faculty regarding how our scholarship dollars are used to secure applicants, Dean Lucak explained that we have strategically reallocated our scholarship dollars in order to build our incoming class of students in the 157-159 LSAT range. He stated that the competition is steep for scholarship dollars. Akron is outspending us giving $17,000 scholarships to students with LSATs as low as 153.

Professor May asked what class size we are looking to bring in next year. Dean Boise responded that the university administration would like us to enter a class of 200. We believe a class of 140 would be ideal. We are in the process of making the case for a smaller incoming class.

Self-Study Report
Professor Crocker reported on behalf of the Self-Study Committee that surveys have been sent to both the faculty and staff. Please complete your survey before December 23rd. The Self-Study Committee will be hosting another brown bag in January to discuss class size. Dean Boise will present budget models based on a class of 200, 175 and 150.
Sense of the Faculty Regarding Under-Enrolled Courses
Dean Boise asked for a sense of the faculty regarding a policy for classes that are under-enrolled. There are some classes that have only two or three students enrolled in them. If we cancel the classes, how do we ensure that faculty “pull their weight?”

Professor Weinstein asked if there is data on the extent to which this is happening. Associate Dean Sundahl responded that there is such data over time. Currently three courses taught by full-time faculty and three courses taught by adjunct faculty are under-enrolled. Professor Buckley stated that this should be an administrative decision, however, if it is the same course year after year, there should be some warning and then the course should be dropped. Professor Hoke stated that she would be in favor of a requirement that a course not move forward without a threshold of five students at the point of preregistration. Professor Geier stated that she is leery of hard and fast cut-off rules. She stated that she would trust the Associate Dean’s judgment in cancelling a course. Professor Simek noted that she is hesitant to cancel classes that are more specialized. It may be the students’ only opportunity to learn about more select areas of the law.

Dean Boise suggested that if a course is canceled, then we could “bank the course.” For classes that do not have a sustained enrollment, we can have a list of needs and faculty can select from one of those courses to teach. Professor Lewis stated that if the purpose is to make sure that all faculty carry their weight, you need to look at what other courses the faculty member is teaching. They may be teaching one large class and one smaller class so that it may balance out in the end.

Professor Crocker asked if we have information on what other schools do in this situation. Associate Dean Sundahl responded that he heard from 30 other law schools. Most schools canceled under-enrolled courses and professors are reassigned or asked to teach a third course the following semester. The reassignments can be either administrative, picking up another course, taking over a course from an adjunct, or taking a large course and splitting it up.

Professor Ray noted that the rest of the university has some sort of teaching formula to quantify teaching loads. Dean Boise said that the university is currently looking into work load issues.

Sense of Faculty Regarding Policy on Students with Felony Convictions
Dean Boise asked for a sense of the faculty regarding creating a policy for admitting students with a felony conviction on their record or who are convicted of a felony while in law school. He said this question arose after a student was convicted of a felony while in law school and several students contacted him inquiring about our policy for this situation. Professor Crocker stated that we have a policy that we do not exclude people with felony convictions from being admitted to law school. Each case is evaluated on a case-by-case basis.
Professor Geier asked if students exceed the high hurdle of being admitted with a known felony on their record, are they told that they may not be admitted to the bar if they don’t pass the character and fitness requirement? Professor Curtis noted that if they do graduate but are not admitted to the bar because of their character and fitness, we then carry them on our statistics forever.

Some professors stated apprehension to admitting a known felon into law school or allowing them to continue their law school education if they are convicted of a felony stating that it shows disrespect for the law. Additionally, they want to know if someone who is violent is in their classroom. Other faculty stated that we should not be the ethical monitor of these students since they will have served their sentences and therefore paid their debt to society. Still others thought that students convicted of a felony should have the burden of convincing the Honor Code Committee of why they should not be expelled.

Professor Wilson stated that if we do determine a policy, we should have a specific rule for nonviolent political dissent and political crimes.

Discussion of University Governance
Professor Wilson followed up on an AAUP News newsletter that was forwarded to the law faculty (see copy of newsletter attached to these minutes) discussing faculty governance issues at Cleveland State University. He stated that at the last Faculty Senate meeting Dr. Berkman said he wants to meet with the Steering Committee to talk about faculty governance. In response the Steering Committee will have an Executive Session for all voting members to discuss this issue. If you have any thoughts regarding faculty governance and its effect on the law school, please share them with Professor Wilson.

Adjournment
Professor Hoke moved to adjourn the faculty meeting and move into Executive Session. Professor Niedringhaus seconded. The faculty meeting adjourned at 3:39 p.m.
MINUTES OF REGULAR FACULTY MEETING OF COLLEGE OF LAW
January 12, 2012
4:00 p.m. – LB 60

ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Deans Robertson and Sundahl; Professors Becker, Broering-Jacobs, Buckley, Cherry, Curtis, Daiker-Middaugh, Davis, Falk, Forte, Garlock, Gelman, Glassman, Hoke, Inniss, Kerber, Kowalski, Majette, May, Mika, Niedringhaus, O’Neill, Plecnick, Ray, Sagers, Sterio, Wilson and Witmer-Rich; Visiting Professors Bouvier and Simek; Assistant Dean Lifter

EXCUSED: Professors Borden (PLOA), Crocker, Dougherty, Gard, Geier (PLOA), Green, Heyward Keating, Lazarus, Lewis, and Weinstein (PLOA); Visiting Professor Johnson

NOT PRESENT: Professor Oh

A regular meeting of the faculty was convened at 4:02 p.m. by Dean Craig M. Boise.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Approval of Minutes
Professor Wilson moved to approve the minutes of the December 15, 2011 faculty meeting as submitted. Professor Becker seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Dean’s Report – Craig Boise

- Faculty Scholarship and Speaking Update: Jonathan Witmer-Rich gave a presentation on federal criminal practice at the Federal Court Training Seminar for the Northern District of Ohio; Chris Sagers was quoted in the L.A. Times on December 10 for his views in AT&T’s merger bid to acquire T-Mobile; Lolita Buckner Inniss reviewed Serena Mayeri’s Reasoning from Race on Dicta; Debby Geier was invited by the U.S. Senate Finance Committee to participate in a two-day Academic Roundtable discussing fundamental tax reform; Alan Weinstein spoke on “The Impact of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalize Persons Act on State and Local Governments” at Association of American Law Schools annual meeting; Heidi Robertson has been invited by the ABA Rule of Law Initiative to train the law faculty at Helwan University in Cairo, Egypt on environmental clinical education; and Candice Hoke co-chaired a half-day program on internet voting and e-voting at the Association of American Law Schools annual meeting.

- Sidebar: The Dean convened a Dean’s Student Advisory Council comprised of 40 students who he meets with periodically through the year in order to get a sense of their law school experience. One thing that came out of these meetings was a desire by the students to have more informal contact with faculty outside of the classroom. To that end, beginning Thursday, January 26th we will have a law school-wide happy hour event for faculty and students entitled Sidebar. Sidebar will be held in the atrium from 4:00 – 6:00 p.m. every Thursday this semester. It will be jointly underwritten by SBA and the law school. The Dean encouraged faculty to attend and mingle with the students.

- John Dean: John Dean will visit C|M|LAW on Thursday, April 19, 2012. He will start out the day with an appearance on WCPN followed by a two-hour student presentation from 10:30 to 12:30 p.m. In the afternoon he will have a faculty conversation from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m. in LB 60. At 5:00 p.m. Mr. Dean will give a presentation entitled, “Watergate: 40 Years Later.” This event will be open to the public and ethics CLE will be given.

- Annual Reviews: Self-evaluation forms in connection with assigning merit pay increases will be distributed next week. Bear in mind that turning in grades on time is an important faculty responsibility. Students are anxious about their performance and need to receive the feedback of grades as soon as possible.

- President Berkman: President Berkman will address the faculty at the Thursday, April 5th faculty meeting.

- Student Applications: Applications are down by 30%. Christopher Lucak and the Dean are looking into strategies to increase applications and increase scholarship dollars. Professor Buckley asked if the university has approved a smaller incoming class. Dean Boise responded that they have not. He explained that part of what must happen before approving a smaller class size is that tuition must be increased. He encouraged all faculty to attend a brown bag luncheon convened by the Self-Study Committee on February 8th to discuss the incoming class numbers as well as tuition increases.

- Committees: Committee chairs should plan to convene their committees early and often so as to complete committee charges well before the end of the spring semester. By May 31st all Committee Chairs must submit a report to the Dean regarding action taken by the committee to fulfill their charges.

Associate Dean for Administration

- Thank you to the faculty who attended the Winter Open House for potential students on January 4th. The next opportunity to assist admissions is on March 31st for Admitted Students Day.
• Thank you to those who responded to the request for suggestions on scheduling first year classes. After reviewing all of your comments, for those teaching courses that meet three days per week, classes will be held for 70 minutes each. Professor Garlock pointed out that by doing so, those teaching the 3-day option will be teaching 210 minutes a week and those teaching the 2-day option will be teaching 200 minutes per week (two 100-minute classes). Professor Sterio suggested that faculty teaching the three-day option can choose two classes to cancel which would even out the time.
• Plagiarism is a recurring problem. Some students believe it is acceptable to adopt the text of another writer and drop a footnote. Please make a point of explaining plagiarism whenever writing is involved in a course.
• Students will be receiving an email regarding proper Internet usage during class time.
• If you are interested in having a practitioner speak to your class, please let Associate Sundahl know.

Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment
• Bar Exam Coordinator, Mary Jane McGinty is working on faculty presentations to prepare students for the upcoming bar. If you want to participate, please contact Mary Jane.
• Faculty volunteers are needed to call students preparing for the upcoming bar exam and wishing them good luck. If you want to participate, contact Associate Dean Robertson.
• A master schedule for this semester’s faculty luncheons, coffee hours, and evening events was sent via email. Please mark your calendars.
• Thank you to Professor Becker and Professor Lazarus for the time and effort they put into creating the professionalism problem of the semester.
• Mary Jane McGinty distributed bar exam questions from the June bar exam. Please look at them so you can get a sense of the kinds of questions being asked on the bar exam.

Election of an Interim Faculty Senator
Professor Wilson asked for nominations to serve Professor Geier’s Spring, 2012 term on the Faculty Senate while she is on professional leave. Professor Hoke nominated Professor Majette to fill the position. With no additional nominations on the floor, Professor Gelman moved to close nominations. Professor Majette’s nomination was approved by acclamation.

Health Care Compliance Certificate Proposal
Professor Sheldon Gelman, on behalf of the Health Law Special Committee, brought forth a proposal seeking the faculty’s support for the creation of a health care compliance certificate program. (See copy of proposal attached.) The Curriculum Committee approved this proposal earlier this week. It now needs the full faculty approval and the Dean’s approval before it can go on to the Graduate Council.

The proposal includes an 18-credit curriculum which includes three new courses. Professor Gelman suggested that admission requirements be added to the proposal. He recommended the minimum CSU admission requirements for non-JD students to apply to this program.

Associate Dean Robertson stated that she is concerned that many of the courses are not being taught by our own faculty members therefore we have to rely on adjuncts. Professor Majette responded that utilizing people currently practicing in the field is important because it keeps the curriculum up to date. Professor Davis questioned whether it would reflect poorly on us if a large number of our graduates fail the CHC (Certified in Healthcare Compliance) or CCEP (Certified Compliance and Ethics Professional) test. Professor Gelman stated that even if our graduates don’t pass these tests, they remain very marketable. It is not a legal requirement to be certified by these agencies.

Another question arose as to whether students who had graduated and want to return can carry forward their courses. It was agreed that they should be allowed to do so.

After further discussion, the question was called. Professor Gelman asked that the minutes reflect the motion comes from the Health Law Special Committee, the minimum CSU admission requirements will be required for non-JD applicants, and J.D. students who are returning, can carry forward courses for which they previously received credit. The motion passed unanimously.

Research Chair Procedures
Dean Boise, referring to his memo of January 11, 2012 (see attached memo), reviewed the new process for Named Professorship appointments. He noted that there would be no formal committee review of applications. Dean Boise will rely on the nomination process. For those who feel strongly about colleagues who should be considered for professorships, please submit a memo nominating them. He will also accept self-nominations. Another difference in this process is that there is the possibility of a faculty member receiving a subsequent three-year appointment.

Professor Falk stated that she is disappointed with the late date the memo was distributed as well as with the substance of the process. The faculty discussed this process extensively in years past and she feels that entire conversation has been ignored. Additionally, the lack of faculty governance is bothersome. Dean Boise responded that he didn’t feel he was in a position to address the policy in his first semester here. If the faculty wants more time to consider the policy, he is more than happy to discuss it at the next faculty meeting. He views named professorships as his prerogative to choose with input from the faculty. He has invited this input by asking for comments from the faculty after all applications have been submitted.

Professor Gelman stated he found it extraordinary that a faculty appointment would be made without any formal faculty input. He also stated that he sat on the committee that reviewed applications in the past, and the committee was asked to review applicant’s entire career at C|M|LAW not just the past 2-3 years. Professor Inniss agreed that committee review is important stating there is a certain amount of integrity brought to the process when you sit in a room and talk. Professor Forte stated that he believes for faculty to be intimately involved in a choice of their own, is not a good idea.

Dean Boise responded that he believes faculty are overburdened by committee work. He is looking for people’s candid views without the fear of having to express those views in front of anyone else. Further, he believes this is a different decision-making process than whether someone receives a promotion. It is a way of rewarding productivity that in turn raises the profile of the law school. He asked for comments from faculty on the new procedures between now and the next faculty meeting. At that time he will announce his plans for the named professorship selection process. In the interim, please submit nominations so that piece moves forward.

Professor Becker introduced the Professionalism Problem of the Semester (see attached). The purpose of the professionalism problem is so that students can look at the issue beyond one course and throughout their curriculum. The problem and supporting material will be placed on the faculty web page. The Teachers Guide gives six general areas of discussion. The Resource Packet has primary materials for your perusal.

Entering Class of 2011 Student Performance – Dean Boise
Dean Boise asked for the faculty’s thoughts on the entering classes’ performance as a whole in light of comments he has heard regarding their abilities.

Professor Wilson agreed stating that this class seems to have a large lower third and the lower half of the class has abysmal writing skills. He suggested that the focus of the Self Study should be on how to deal with the decline of student performance now and in the future. Several other professors agreed with Professor Wilson’s assessment of the class.

Professor Becker expressed concern with students’ attitudes. They seem to have a “it’s your job to teach me, not my job to learn” attitude. Professor Curtis added that she believes these students are profoundly disengaged.

Professor Kerber said she has not encountered this issue. She believes it is because she sends individual emails to students to stem problems as they arise. She suggests that we need to target weaknesses in students, diagnose the problems and then attack the problem before it gets out of hand.

Adjournment
Professor Hoke moved to adjourn the faculty meeting and move into Executive Session. Professor Falk seconded. The motion passed unanimously. The meeting adjourned at 5:49 p.m.
MINUTES OF REGULAR FACULTY MEETING OF COLLEGE OF LAW
February 9, 2012
4:00 p.m. – LB 60

ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Deans Robertson & Sundahl; Professors Broering-Jacobs, Buckley, Cherry, Crocker, Curtis, Daiker-Middaugh, Davis, Forte, Garlock, Gelman, Glassman, Green, Heyward, Inniss, Kerber, Lazarus, Majette, May, O’Neill, Plenick, Ray, Sagers, and Witmer-Rich; Visiting Professors Bouvier, Johnson and Simek; Assistant Dean Lifter.

EXCUSED: Professors Becker (PLOA), Borden (PLOA), Falk, Gard, Geier (PLOA), Hoke, Keating, Kowalski, Lewis, Mika, Niedringhaus, Sterio and Weinstein (PLOA).

NOT PRESENT: Professors Oh and Wilson

A regular meeting of the faculty was convened at 4:04 p.m. by Dean Craig M. Boise.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Approval of Minutes of January 12, 2012 Faculty Meeting
Professor O’Neill moved to approve the minutes of the January 12, 2012 faculty meeting as submitted. Professor Ray seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Dean’s Report

• Faculty Scholarship and Speaking Update: Professor Sterio appeared on WCPN’s Sound of Ideas and was featured in a PD story in December discussing her work on piracy prosecutions in the Seychelles with the Public International Law & Policy Group’s Piracy Working Group; Candice Hoke co-organized and moderated a program at the AALS titled “The Law and Science of Trustworthy Elections: Facing the Challenges of Internet Voting & Other E-Voting Technologies”; Dennis Keating wrote a review of Harvard Professor Susan Fainstein’s “The Just City” that appeared in the January issue of Urban Affairs Review. In order to raise our scholarship profile, Associate Dean Robertson will be contacting other schools to get our faculty on their speaking calendars. If you have any contacts, please let Associate Dean Robertson know.

- Committees: Committee chairs should plan to convene their committees early and often so as to complete committee charges well before the end of the spring semester. This will encourage quality, thoughtful deliberation and avoid rushed decisions.

- Clinical Hiring: The two clinical faculty positions have been posted. The Hiring Committee will begin reviewing CVs on February 21st. Dean Sundahl is chairing this committee.

- John Dean Visit: John Dean will be visiting the law school on April 19th. His public presentation will be entitled, “Watergate: 40 Years Later.”

- Great Lakes Sports and Entertainment Law Academy: Our enrollment for this three-week summer program is up to 47 students.

- Professionalism Problem: Professors are encouraged to incorporate the professionalism problem into their classes this semester. The reinforcement from a variety of perspectives will benefit students.

- Named Professorship Policy: The Dean received several comments regarding the revised Named Professor policy. In response to those comments: candidates’ performance will be evaluated over a four-year period instead of the originally chosen two-year period; there was concern about reducing the stipend from $10,000 to $7,500 in connection with providing an automatic course release. The Dean reviewed the accounts that fund the professorships and decided to retain the $10,000 stipend and still provide an automatic course release. The Dean reminded faculty that any faculty input regarding candidates’ qualifications for named professorships must be in writing and signed or otherwise acknowledged by the person providing them. Comments are due by February 6th at 5:00 p.m.

- Annual Reviews: All Annual Review forms must be completed and returned by March 25th. (This was later corrected in an email to faculty stating the completion date is March 1st.) Annual Reviews will be used to determine merit pay increases.

- Sidebar: Thank you for attending Sidebar. Dean Boise has received several positive comments from students regarding faculty attendance at Sidebar.

- Development/OCF: The focus of our development efforts this year is to complete the $1 million Fund for Excellence by June 30th. To date $533,061 has been raised ($150,000 in this fiscal year alone). Significant donations have been received by C|M|LAW faculty member Peter Carfagna and his wife who pledged $100,000 to establish the Captains Scholarship. Richard Stovsky, the incoming NAC Chairman, pledged to match, dollar-for-dollar, any NAC donation up to $10,000. This match pledge alone has generated over $27,000. Four new law firms have been added to the Law Firm Giving Challenge program. This program seeks 100% participation by C|M|LAW alumni in law firms. In FY 11, eleven firms reached 100% participation. The goal for FY 12 is 20 firms. The Dean and his development team are heading to California next week to meet with donors and alumni in San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego.

Associate Dean for Administration

- The Fall 2011 and Spring 2011 grade distribution sheets were distributed with the agenda. Looking at the percentages for 1L courses for Fall 2011, the combined D+/D/F ranges go from 0% to 25%. The standard is 13%. In Spring, 2011, the ranges were even greater. It is important faculty give out those grades when they are due for the benefit of the law school and the law student. Additionally, it is desirable for all faculty to utilize the same guidelines for grading so that students are graded on equal footing.
- There were 15 course grades that were received after the grading deadline. The Gavel is doing a cover story on the large number of late grades. It is very important for faculty to submit grades in a timely fashion so that students can apply for internships, summer jobs and, in some cases, to ensure they can continue in law school.
- It is very important that faculty assist in the process to help attract the best students. Please attend the March 31st Admitted Students Day and the March 30th Admitted Students Scholarship Reception. Details will follow by email. Also, please volunteer to write a letter to admittees encouraging them to attend. Dean Lucak will create a template for the letter.
- An email will be sent to students reiterating the definition and consequences of plagiarism. Dean Sundahl will also send out an email to students regarding internet usage during class time.
- If you are interested in having a practitioner speak to your class, please contact Dean Sundahl.
- The Provost will launch a new series of Provost lunches where faculty from different departments will get together for an informal lunch and discussion.

Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment

- The law school has opened an Expresso Student Account. If you have a student who has written a worthy paper, please let Dean Roberson know and she will facilitate the process. Similarly, if you have anything to post on SSRN, or need help with the article submission process, Dean Robertson can assist you.
- Upcoming events: We are hosting the investiture of our alumni Annette Butler on February 9th; The Northeast Ohio Faculty Colloquium will be held on March 23rd at Blue Canyon – Professors Sagers will be our speaker; The Health Law Symposium will be held on April 4th; John Dean will be visiting the law school on April 19th – there will be many opportunities for students and faculty to meet with Mr. Dean; we are hosting the Urban Agriculture Conference on April 20th.
• The Fulbright Catalog is available. If you are interested, there is a long lead-time so you might want to start looking into it early. Milena and Brian are in the running for next year.

Self-Study Committee Update
Professor Phyllis Crocker thanked the faculty for attending the luncheon to discuss class size. The next luncheon meeting will be held on February 22nd and will focus on revising the mission and vision statements. Drafts of the mission and vision statements adopted in 2005 will be sent prior to the meeting.

Academic Standards Committee
Professor Peter Garlock, on behalf of the Academic Standards Committee, presented two proposed revisions to the Academic Regulations. (See memo detailing the proposed revisions attached.)

The first proposed revision is to regulation 5.1. The provision currently reads: "Any student achieving a cumulative Grade Point Average below 2.00 upon completion of the first Spring semester or any term thereafter, including a Summer term, shall be dismissed.” As the regulation is now written, if a student voluntarily withdraws after the first Fall semester and then returns the following Fall semester, that student has an additional two semesters to attain a 2.00 (since the student can’t be dismissed before completing the “first Spring semester”), for a total of three semesters. It was thought that this gave the second student an unfair advantage over the first student. The committee moved to revise regulation 5.1 to read:

Any student who fails to achieve a cumulative Grade Point Average of 2.00 or higher upon completion of two full semesters, not including Summer semesters, shall be dismissed. Any student who falls below a cumulative Grade Point Average of 2.00 in any semester thereafter, including Summer semesters, shall be dismissed.

Professor Forte questioned how many probations have been granted thus far this year? Assistant Dean Lifter did not have that information with her. Associate Dean Sundahl asked if the committee looked at similar practices at other schools. Professor Garlock stated they had not. A vote was taken and the motion passed unanimously.

The second proposed revision is to regulation 2.4(d)(4)(a). The provision currently reads: “2.4 Grade Dispute Procedures, Grade Appeals and Changes of Grades (d) Student Petitions for a Change of Grade: Petitions to the Academic Standards Committee (4.) A student may petition the Academic Standards Committee for a change of grade to the grade of “P” or “W.” Such a change of grade shall be awarded only in cases in which the student has satisfied the Academic Standards Committee that: (a.) The grade awarded was arbitrary or not in accord with the grading standards applied to the other members of the class because of factors or circumstances extraneous to the grading process itself, but in no event shall a review of other students’ examinations occur; . . .” Last year’s Academic Standards Committee found that the Committee was receiving a number of non-meritorious petitions for grade changes that really did not fit within the meaning of Regulation 2.4(d)(4)(a). Last year’s Committee began the task of trying to clarify the grounds for student grade appeals; this year’s Committee was charged with completing that task. The Committee surveyed how other schools handle grade disputes. Some schools do not allow grade appeals at all, while others permit challenges only on the basis of computational or clerical error. Still others allow grade appeals on grounds that the grading was “arbitrary and capricious” or the result of demonstrable personal bias by the professor toward the student. The Committee proposed to revise Academic Regulation 2.4(d)(4)(a) to read:

2.4 Grade Dispute Procedures, Grade Appeals and Changes of Grade

(d) Student Petitions for a Change of Grade: Petitions to the Academic Standards Committee

4. A student may petition the Academic Standards Committee for a change of grade to the grade of “P” or “W.” Such a change of grade shall be awarded only in cases in which the student has satisfied the Academic Standards Committee by clear and convincing evidence that:

a. The grade awarded was arbitrary or capricious, but in no event shall the Committee re-grade or otherwise evaluate the petitioning student’s examinations or other course work, or that of other students in the course.

Examples of what shall not constitute proof of arbitrary or capricious grading within the meaning of the above Regulation include, but shall not be limited to, the following:

--disagreement with the professor’s evaluation of the merits or quality of the student’s work;
--criticism of the merits of a professor’s examination or the professor’s grading methodology;
--a student’s claim that his or her work did not accurately reflect his or her knowledge of the material.

Professor Gelman stated that he worries that the examples of what does not constitute proof of arbitrary or capricious will prove misleading. He suggested that the committee state that “mere disagreement” of a grade is not enough. Professor Garlock stated that the committee discussed whether to include the examples and chose to do so. Professor May stated that the examples are helpful because many students have no idea of what is considered arbitrary. After additional conversation, Professor Gelman moved to strike the examples section from the proposal. Professor Forte asked if there is another vehicle through which examples can be stated rather than in the actual regulation. Assistant Dean Lifter stated there are explanatory sections. The question to strike the examples section of the proposal was called. The motion failed with 7 voting in favor of striking the examples and 16 opposed to striking the examples.

The original proposal as submitted by the Committee was then voted upon. The motion passed unanimously.

Proposal for Amending the Procedures and Criteria for Promotion
Professor Buckley, Chair of the PAC, in consultation with Professor Inniss, Vice Chair of the PAC and Professor Gelman, brought forth an amendment to the Criteria for Promotion to the rank of full Professor in the Procedures and Criteria for Promotion. The purpose of the amendment is to bring the law school’s criteria into conformity with the University’s Personnel Policies and to add corresponding changes to the Procedures in order to implement the proposed modifications in the Criteria. (See copy of the proposed changes attached to this agenda.)

Associate Dean Robertson noted that she is not in favor of this amendment because it allows for the rank of full Professor based on a candidate’s scholarship or “sustained outstanding intellectual leadership.” The question arose as to whether the law school is bound by the Greenbook. Professor Crocker noted that the law school’s tenure guidelines for Associate Professor and tenure do not allow for promotion based purely on teaching but the Greenbook allows for promotion based on teaching only. Professor Ray suggested the law school could conform our rules to the Greenbook or we could try to change the Greenbook. Professor Buckley noted that changes to the Greenbook must be approved by the Board of Trustees. He stated that the Provost has created a task force to create more uniformity across the university when it comes to promotion and tenure matters.

Professor Ray moved to table this motion and asked the PAC to look into the possibility of amending the Greenbook instead of amending the Criteria for Promotion and Tenure. Professor O’Neill seconded the motion to table. The motion passed unanimously.

Adjournment
Professor O’Neill moved to adjourn the faculty meeting and move into Executive Session. Professor Crocker seconded. The motion passed unanimously. The meeting adjourned at 5:25 p.m.
ATTENDANCE:

EXCUSED: Dean Boise; Professors Becker (PLOA), Borden (PLOA), Buckley, Crocker, Forte, Gard, Geier (PLOA), Green, Keating, Lewis, Mika, Sagers and Weinstein (PLOA); Visiting Professor Johnson.

NOT PRESENT: Professors Broering-Jacobs, Cherry, Glassman and Oh

A regular meeting of the faculty was convened at 4:03 p.m. by Associate Dean Mark J. Sundahl.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Announcements

- Faculty Scholarship and Speaking Update: Professor Sterio is a regular panelist on the new WCPN radio program entitled “Talking Foreign Policy”; Professor Witmer-Rich was interviewed on Fox 8 News regarding the shootings at Chardon High School; Professor O’Neill and C|M|LAW alum Patrick Charles have accepted an offer to publish their article in the UTAH LAW REVIEW; Professor Weinstein spoke on the Impact of the Religious Land Use and Institutionalized Persons Act at the AALS conference; Professor Inniss has accepted the position of Elihu Root Peace Fund Visiting Professor in the Women’s Studies Department at Hamilton College in New York for the 2012-2013 academic year.
- Development: Dean Boise sent out an email yesterday delineating the many successes of our development team.
- Admissions: Applications continue to decline. We are down 24% from last year.
Associate Dean for Administration

- A streamlined electronic exam number system has been developed. If you give more than one midterm worth more than 10% of the total grade, please ask students to get numbers from Marcie.
- FY 13 schedules will be coming out in the next week or so.
- The Great Lakes Sports Academy currently has 70 students enrolled. Most of the students are from C|M|LAW and Case.
- The Eighth District Court of Appeals will hear oral arguments at C|M|LAW on March 28th at 9:00 a.m. and 10:30 a.m. in the Moot Court Room. This is a public event open to students and the community.
- The Progressive Art Collection invited us to bring our students to the gallery to discuss philosophical questions triggered by the artwork that may have legal or ethical issues. If this is something you find useful, please contact Dean Sundahl.

Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment

- Dean Boise and former C|M|LAW faculty Linda Ammons and Fred White have been named to the Black Lawyers Power 100 list.
- Professor Crocker had an article accepted by the Toledo Law Review on interim deaning. Professors Forte and Sterio each had a letter to the editor published in the Plain Dealer. Professor Keating’s review of The Just City appears in the January issue of Urban Affairs Review. Dean Emeritus Steinglass was appointed to the Ohio Task Force on the Funding of Ohio Courts.
- John Dean will be speaking here on April 19th.
- The Urban Agricultural Symposium will be held here on April 20th.
- Please attend Sidebar at the conclusion of this faculty meeting.

Approval of Joint Faculty Appointment for Professor Ralph Mawdsley

Associate Dean Mark Sundahl requested approval from the faculty to grant Professor Ralph Mawdsley a joint appointment with the College of Law. Professor Mawdsley is a prestigious scholar in education law currently tenured in the College of Education. His background will match up well when we launch our Master of Legal Studies program because one of the demographics for that program is students in the education field.

Professor Inniss asked whether Professor Mawdsley would be considered a part of the PAC and would he have voting rights? A discussion ensued as to whether other colleges allow joint appointments to vote on faculty matters.

Professor Hoke moved to approve Professor Ralph Mawdsley’s joint appointment. Professor Plenick seconded. A request was made for the pertinent Bylaws and Greenbook provisions to be read to determine voting rights. Another question arose as to whether non tenure-track faculty are able to vote on this motion.
Professor Inniss moved to table the motion to allow for time to determine who is eligible to vote on this matter and whether Professor Mawdsley would be able to vote on law school faculty matters. Professor Gelman seconded. Prior to voting on tabling the motion, Professor Hoke withdrew her motion.

Emeritus Status for Thomas Buckley
Professor Thomas Buckley is seeking emeritus status upon his retirement at the end of this academic year. Professor Falk moved to grant Professor Buckley’s request for emeritus status. Professor Hoke seconded the motion. The motion carried unanimously.

Cleveland-Marshall Fund Budget
Professor Inniss, on behalf of the Cleveland-Marshall Fund Committee, presented the proposed budget for fiscal year 2013. Prior to the meeting, the committee distributed the proposed budget. (See memo attached to these minutes.) The amount of spendable income from investments for FY 13 is $231,573. She noted that the spendable income is up 4% from last year. Professor Inniss then reviewed each of the lines of the proposed budget. The motion from the committee to approve the Cleveland-Marshall Fund budget for FY 13 passed unanimously.

Update on Parking Issues
Professor Sheldon Gelman, in his capacity as Senate Representative to the Parking Advisory Committee, reported on current parking issues on campus. He stated that the good news is there is hundreds of parking spaces available at all times in the South Garage. However, students don’t park there because of the distance and security concerns. The University has eliminated 808 parking spaces this semester as well as 100 metered spaces on Chester Avenue in order to build Campus Village. The Student Government Association is deeply concerned about students missing classes due to the lack of parking. The University is looking at available options including a three-tiered parking system. In the interim, three shuttle buses are running throughout the day and early evening, transporting students/faculty/staff from the outer garages to the core campus.

Professor Hoke suggested having the law school rent parking spaces in Playhouse Square and adding the cost into students’ tuition. Professor Gelman stated he doubts the university will allow us to set up our own parking program. Professor Witmer-Rich asked if the administration is concerned about selling fewer parking passes. Professor Gelman responded that the sense he gets is that a strategic decision has been made to build housing rather than devote space to parking.

University Computing/IT Upgrades that Impact the Academic Mission: When to Schedule for Least Impact – Candice Hoke
Professor Candice Hoke, in her capacity as faculty representative to the University Computational Services Committee, asked for the faculty’s thoughts on the least problematic time for computer upgrades so as not to disrupt academic services. Professor Inniss stated that when she uses CampusNet it is usually around 10:00 p.m. at night and several times it has been offline for the evening. She suggested upgrades to CampusNet should be done overnight.

Professor Gelman asked if the change in the physical location of our server affects the autonomy of our IT department? Professor Niedringhaus stated that the moving of servers was a result of the CSU Audit last year. The audit noted that the servers were sitting too close to the sprinkler system and therefore it was determined that the best place to move the servers was into the IT department. Professor Niedringhaus stated she was not under the impression that the move was for any other reason and that the servers are still controlled and maintained by our law school IT department. She also stated that the exam server would be moved at the completion of exams.

Discussion of Crosswalk Between Law College and Business College

Professor Forte submitted this item for the agenda. Since he was not able to attend the meeting, the item was not addressed.

Adjournment

Professor Falk moved to adjourn the faculty meeting. Professor Witmer-Rich seconded. The meeting adjourned at 5:33 p.m.
MINUTES OF REGULAR FACULTY MEETING OF COLLEGE OF LAW
April 5, 2012
4:00 p.m. – LB 60

ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Dean Sundahl; Professors Broering-Jacobs, Buckley, Cherry, Crocker, Curtis, Daiker-Middaugh, Davis, Falk, Forte, Garlock, Gelman, Glassman, Green, Heyward, Hoke, Kerber, Kowalski, Lazarus, Lewis, Majette, May, Mika, Niedringhaus, O’Neill, Plecnik, Sterio, Wilson and Witmer-Rich; Visiting Professors Bouvier, Johnson and Simek; Assistant Deans Lifter and Lucak; Jennifer Blaga, President Berkman and Provost Mearns

EXCUSED: Associate Dean Robertson; Professors Becker (PLOA), Borden (PLOA), Geier (PLOA), Inniss, Keating, Ray, Sagers, and Weinstein (PLOA)

NOT PRESENT: Professors Gard and Oh

Dean Craig M. Boise convened a regular meeting of the faculty at 4:02 p.m.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Dean Boise reported on the many accomplishments of the faculty during the past month:

- Dennis Keating was interviewed for WCPN’s recent story on demolitions in response to the foreclosure and abandonment crisis. The program was included in this morning’s NPR business segment. He also spoke at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill on “Responding to Foreclosure and Home Abandonment” co-sponsored by its Center for Urban and Regional Studies, Department of City and Regional Planning, and School of Law.
- Browne Lewis accepted an offer to publish an article “Due Date: Enforcing Surrogacy Promises in the Best Interest of the Child “ in the St. John’s Law Review.
- Lolita Inniss was awarded a Friends of the Princeton University Library Research grant in order to help support additional work at the Princeton University Archives. This is in reference to her book project, The Princeton Fugitive Slave Case, and marks the third award she’s received for this book proposal.

- David Forte was reappointed to the Ohio State Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights.
- Milena Sterio will be co-editing a book on maritime piracy with Michael Scharf (Case). It will be published by Oxford University Press. Milena was also elected Secretary of the Women in International Law Group within the American Society for International Law.
- Craig Boise participated in a discussion on the law school bubble, along with Brian Tamanaha and Paul McGreal through the ABA Journal’s Law Scribbler Podcast.
- Phyllis Crocker became a member of the Board of Directors of the Cleveland Rape Crisis Center.
- Kris Niedringhaus’ article, Ethics Considerations Relation to Legal Research Practices: A Selective Annotated Bibliography was published in Legal Reference Services Quarterly.
- Steve Steinglass was a featured speaker at a colloquium on the Ohio Constitutional Modernization Commission.
- Brian Ray received a Fulbright grant to go to South Africa next year.
- Jaime Bouvier has accepted an offer to publish her article on the regulation of backyard chickens by the Environmental Law Institute’s Environmental Law Reporter.
- Candice Hoke has accepted an offer to publish her article in the Case Western Reserve’s Election Law Symposium and she has written a book chapter for the ABA’s Election Law Anthology.

President Berkman and Provost Mearns

President Berkman explained that he and Provost Mearns were meeting with all college faculties as he concludes his third year as President, to give a sense of where we are at a macro and micro level and the opportunities and challenges ahead. He stated that in terms of the budget situation, Ohio has made incremental gains forward. CSU is trying to expand corporate partnerships to provide a pathway for graduates to stay in Cleveland. The incoming freshman class should be the largest and strongest ever. The university is working on ways to retain and bring these students along and ultimately increase our graduation rate. President Berkman discussed the university’s exploration of borrowing money and bonding additional funds. He noted that the debt burden has risen dramatically due to several projects coming due at the same time - Education Center, Student Center, Parker-Hannifin Bldg, Prospect garage, etc. Specifically we have $20 million in debt with a high interest rate, which needs to be refinanced at a lower rate; $230 million is needed for infrastructure repair and deferred maintenance, and $30 million is needed for the Health Sciences Bldg.
Provost Mearns acknowledged the challenges facing legal education and the impact that it has on law schools. He stated that he is currently discussing with the Dean the impact of reduced enrollment and the fiscal challenges it presents. President Berkman also acknowledged the “law bubble,” and he stated that this provides a unique opportunity to re-position legal education. He said that he believes legal education is an entryway to a lot of different opportunities and it provides a different and unique set of skills applicable in lots of different environments. President Berkman and Provost Mearns then entertained questions from the faculty.

Professor Hoke asked, in light of Chancellor Jim Petro’s comments about the state needing to support more physicians and therefore reducing the number of law schools in Ohio, what are your thoughts in terms of protecting and promoting our law school. President Berkman stated, if it does become an issue, we will need to have a differentiator between C|M|LAW and Akron Law School. We need to make a value proposition between those two law schools indelibly in favor of C|M|LAW. Provost Mearns stated that Chancellor Petro has already eliminated the law school subsidy for out-of-state residents. That has had an insignificant effect because most students create in-state residency by their second year. He fears that Chancellor Petro will eventually eliminate the subsidy all together.

Professor Crocker asked what was the administration’s process for considering allowing the law school to become smaller and what specifically do they want to see. Provost Mearns stated that he has asked the Dean for justification for the proposed enrollment reduction. He stated that the possibility of reducing the size of the law school creates curricular opportunities and he thinks the goal should not be to replicate this law school but to make a smaller and better law school. On the financial side, if enrollment is reduced, this obviously translates into a reduction in revenue. Plans to cover this shortfall will need to include an increase in revenue as well as an expense reduction, which can be addressed over several years. The Provost will review the plan submitted by the Dean and then make his recommendations to the President. He noted that the reduction in revenue is relevant to all university deans because this is a shared enterprise and the law school may require financial assistance.

Professor Gelman stated that he was concerned about the draft Greenbook revisions, which he believes changes the paradigm. President Berkman responded that the Greenbook is a document is in need of syntactical corrections and also needs to be aligned with procedural changes. The Provost, in collaboration with other Vice Presidents, was the logical team to lead that effort. Like most things in academia there are many levels of review that this document must go through. Everyone will have an opportunity to weigh in on the process. The changes you have seen are a beginning and a consultation point. Administration is waiting to hear what the UFAC and other groups have to say. President Berkman acknowledged that the law school is specially situated because we are not part of the Union so the Greenbook has greater meaning. Provost Mearns added that they are not trying to achieve some radical paradigm change. He stated that he believes the process for disciplinary sanctions for law faculty should parallel the process in the union contract. Professor Forte noted that when the law faculty chose not to join the union there was a whole methodology in place regarding how we solve problems. It is his hope that there is a lengthy consultative process to determine if that methodology should change. Professor Wilson stated that if the procedures end up being less than what the contract offers, perhaps the law faculty would consider joining the union.

To give a sense of some of the action the law school has already taken to reshape ourselves, Associate Dean Sundahl noted our recent curriculum review, expanded clinical offerings, the new certificate program in health law, the Great Lakes Sports Academy, working on the bar passage plan, etc. The President said he was very impressed.

Professor Falk asked if anything could be done about the parking situation. A lengthy discussion ensued about parking. The President acknowledged his concern about parking discontent but he stated there are hundreds of available parking spaces during any given day – just not in the most popular parking lots. Professor Hoke suggested leasing a parking lot. Dr. Berkman said that is one of the options being looked into however, money is an issue.

Dr. Berkman and Provost Mearns thanked the faculty for their time and thoughtful questions. They then left the meeting.

Approval of Minutes of February 9, 2012 Faculty Meeting
Professor Brown Lewis moved to approve the minutes of the February 9, 2012 faculty meeting as submitted. Professor Falk seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Dean’s Report
Dean Boise presented an initial draft of the “140 Plan” to the Provost along with budget considerations. The Provost will look at the memo and make suggestions with an eye toward making it most effective for the President. Regarding a tuition increase for next year, it was determined that a 9½ % increase is the limit to raise tuition and still allow for an affordable law degree. Even though we are unclear as to how much other schools will be raising their tuition, we will still be in the bottom 2-3 of Ohio law tuition. It is anticipated that the law school will face a $1.4 million shortfall next year. The Provost asked Dean Boise to prepare three budget models: a $500,000 reduction, a $900,000 reduction, and a $1.4 million reduction. The Budget Advisory Committee met three times and created these three models using very strategic cuts. Professor May asked if the Dean would be willing to share the “140 Plan” memo with the faculty. Dean Boise stated he would e-mail the rationale portion of the memo.

Associate Dean for Administration
• The St. Petersburg Summer Law Institute has been canceled for lack of students. Hopefully it will run next year.
• A Graduation Fair will be held on April 10th. All graduating students will be required to attend and certain information will be requested from them prior to receiving their commencement tickets.
• Graduate students have been hired to proctor exams this semester. You are still asked to be available during your exam time for any questions that may arise. Please let Jean Lifter know if you plan on giving a take home exam.
• Disability accommodations apply for midterms as well as final exams.
• Transactional Law Clinic is the new name of the Urban Law Clinic.

Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment
Dean Boise reported, on behalf of Associate Dean Heidi Gorovitz Robertson:
• Faculty are asked to find a way to incorporate the Professionalism Problem of the Semester into their courses.
• Upcoming Events – John Dean on April 19th; Urban Agricultural Symposium on April 20th; Lawyers Without Rights Exhibit will be here from mid-April through the end of May. There will be several events surrounding this exhibit. The first one will be the morning of Friday, May 11th. The second event is an evening panel discussion on May 16th.

Admissions Update
Assistant Dean for Admissions, Christopher Lucak, reported that applications are currently down 29%. Students of color applications are down 31%. Nationally 84% of all law schools are reporting some degree of decline in their admissions numbers. First deposits are due April 15th. So far 59 students have submitted their deposits (14 students of color). Second deposits are due June 1st.

9-Month Post Graduation Employment Statistics
This report was deferred until a later faculty meeting.

Approval of Joint Faculty Appointment for Professor Ralph Mawdsley
Associate Dean Mark Sundahl revisited the question of Professor Ralph Mawdsley’s joint appointment. At the last faculty meeting questions arose regarding what voting rights a joint appointee would have and whether all faculty are eligible to vote on this appointment. Regarding the joint appointee’s voting rights, the practice across the university is that a joint appointee has voting rights only in their primary college where they have tenure but voting rights can be granted by the secondary faculty. Our current bylaws give no direction regarding whether joint appointees have voting rights.

Professor Hoke moved to grant Professor Ralph Mawdsley a joint appointment but to follow the precedent of our current joint appointment faculty who are non-voting. A second was heard. After some discussion, Professor Hoke altered her motion to grant Professor Ralph Mawdsley a joint appointment in the law school and to decide later about his voting rights. Professor Gelman moved to formally amend Professor Hoke’s motion to offer Professor Mawdsley a joint appointment with no voting rights. There was no second to this motion. After further discussion, Professor Hoke restated her motion to invite Professor Ralph Mawdsley to a joint appointment with no voting rights at this time and to postpone until a later point the question of joint appointees’ voting rights.

Associate Dean Sundahl was asked who is allowed to vote on this motion. He stated that since this is not a hiring matter, he believes all faculty should be allowed to vote. The question was called. The motion passed with one vote cast in opposition.

Academic Standards Committee
In light of the late hour this item was deferred until the next faculty meeting.

Faculty Affairs Committee addition of Sheldon Gelman
In light of the updating of the Greenbook (see discussion above with the President and Provost), Dean Boise proposed adding Professor Gelman to the Faculty Affairs Committee. He stated that Professor Gelman’s expertise on the Greenbook would be advantageous as the FAC work through the proposed revisions. Professor Crocker noted there is a preset number of people on this committee. She asked why Professor Gelman has to be elected at this time and suggested that he could be an ex-officio member or simply volunteer his time for this committee. Professor Gelman stated he would volunteer his time.

Adjournment
Professor Falk moved to adjourn the faculty meeting. Professor Hoke seconded. The meeting adjourned at 6:04 p.m.
ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Deans Robertson & Sundahl; Professor Buckley, Cherry, Crocker, Forte, Garlock, Gelman, Green, Hoke, Lazarus, Lewis, Majette, Niedringhaus, O’Neill, Plecnik, Sterio, Wilson & Witmer-Rich; Legal Writing Professors Broering-Jacobs, Curtis, Glassman, Kerber, May & Mika; Clinical Professors Daiker-Middaugh & Kowalski; and Visiting Professor Bouvier.

NOT PRESENT: Professors Davis, Gard, Inniss, and Keating

Dean Boise called the meeting to order at 2:15 p.m.

Approval of Minutes of March 8, 2012 and April 5, 2012 (attachment)

Professor Cherry suggested correcting “Professor Brown” to “Professor Lewis” under the Approval of Minutes section on p. 4 of the April 5 minutes, and then made a motion to approve both March 8 and April 15 (as amended) minutes. Professor Hoke seconded the motion. The vote passed unanimously.

Dean’s Report - Dean Boise

Dean Boise made several announcements on faculty accomplishments:

Alan Weinstein, with co-author Richard McCleary, published “The Association of Adult Businesses with Secondary Effects: The Legal Doctrine, Social Theory, and Empirical Evidence” in the Cardozo Arts and Entertainment Law Review. Alan presented this work at the Association of American Geographers Conference in New York. Alan was also a speaker at the annual national conference of the American Planning Association and in a national teleconference sponsored by the International Municipal Lawyers Association.
At Northern Kentucky University, David Forte spoke on “Can the Secularist Onslaught against Religion Be Halted?” in a debate against Edward F. Kagan, National Legal Director of the American Atheists, Inc. At University of Akron Law School, David debated Akron’s Dean Martin Belsky on issues raised by the question “Is Islam Compatible with Democracy?”

Amsterdam Law Forum, the law review at University of Amsterdam, solicited an article on piracy from Milena Sterio, who is co-editing a book with Michael Scharf of Case on Martime Piracy. Milena was elected Secretary of the Women in International Law subgroup of the American Society of International Law.

Mark Sundahl was quoted extensively in a Space News article on Virgin Galactic’s new space flight program, in particular on issues concerning export licenses for flying U.S. citizens on suborbital flights.

Claire May was interviewed on the Lofty Ambitions Blog regarding this month’s production of her short performance piece, The Trinity Project, at the Oddy Theater Lab.

Gwendolyn Majette has been invited to participate in a two-day workshop—Advancing Public Health through the Law: The Role of Legal Academics—this summer to discuss the role of legal scholarship in public health theory and practice. The workshop is being sponsored by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation. Gwen will also present an article on health care reform at the Colloquium on Law and Global Health at the University College of London.

Quinnipiac Law Review recently published an article by Matthew Green entitled “Family, Cubicle Mate and Everyone in Between: A Novel Approach to Protecting Employees From Third-Party Retaliation Under Title VII and Kindred Statutes.”

Dean Boise said there was nothing to report on the 140 Plan because the President’s meeting originally scheduled for today was postponed.

Dean Boise is thinking about dividing committee workloads differently over the year so that faculty meetings at this time of year are not so packed with committee reports.

Associate Dean for Administration - Mark Sundahl
Dean Sundahl made three announcements: (1) ABA approval was just received for our Masters of Legal Studies Program. (2) Faculty are encouraged to attend the upcoming lunch presentations by finalists for the two Clinical Professor openings (litigation and transactional). We need to make a good impression on the candidates, and the search committee needs input from faculty. (3) For the first time in C|M|LAW history, we have hired proctors. They have been trained and are ready to begin this semester. Faculty are asked to be available to the proctor during their exam—via phone or present in their office—in case students have any substantive questions.
Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment - Heidi Gorovitz Robertson

Dean Robertson reported the success of two recent events: (1) April 19th was a terrific day for the law school with Former Nixon White House Counsel John Dean. The law school was very crowded and the Watergate CLE program was a great success. (2) Thanks to Jaime Bouvier’s huge effort, the next day’s Urban Agriculture Symposium was also very well attended with 250-300 people from all over the country.

Dean Robertson announced the upcoming CLE program Lawyers without Rights: Jewish Lawyers in Germany Under the Third Reich on May 11, which will feature a series of high-profile panelists including the Honorable Dan Polster and the Honorable Marcia Ternus. C|M|LAW is hosting the Lawyers without Rights exhibit, which opened on April 20. The exhibit was produced by the German Federal Bar and is being sponsored by the Cleveland Metropolitan Bar Association. It has been nicely displayed in the atrium outside of the law library by some of our library staff since April 16, but the CMBA will be sending professionals to make aesthetic improvements. The exhibit will be displayed through May 31.

Dean Robertson stated that everyone has been great in helping students to prepare for the bar exam. She encouraged faculty to sign up for one-hour presentations in their area of expertise to be held on July 10 and 11. She also has a sign-up sheet for making phone calls to students, and encouraged faculty participation.

Dean Robertson has been working with Thomas Geaghan of the university on building a model Bar Calculator, which allows you to plug in certain data (e.g., LSAT, 1L GPA, etc.) to predict bar passage. There will be a demonstration at the next faculty meeting.

Dean Robertson announced that Professor Sterio is the incoming President of Central State’s Conference, coming in the latter half of October. Faculty are encouraged to present their works in progress.

Dean Boise stated we are focusing heavily on the Bar Calculator and are also looking into the Solo Practice Incubator, which will enable students to rent space cheaply. However, he wants to know the cost first, so he and Professor Niedringhaus have been having meetings with the architects. Dean Boise needs faculty input, so he will appoint a Building Committee this summer to have meetings with the architects.

Nominations for 2012-13 - Dean Boise

Dean Boise explained that (1) three faculty members need to be appointed to the Faculty Senate, (2) there are for three openings on the Faculty Affairs Committee, one of which must be filled by an assistant professor and one by a Legal Writing professor, and (3) faculty are needed to serve on a number of committees at the university level.
Regarding university committees, Professor Wilson said the Strategic Planning Committee is the only one.

Faculty Senate (3 open positions)

Dean Boise called for nominations. Having served on the Faculty Senate for 21 years, Professor Forte withdrew his continued candidacy and nominated Professor Witmer-Rich. Professor Gelman nominated Professor Wilson. Professor O’Neill nominated Professor Geier, who was not present. Professor Forte made a motion to close nominations, and Professor Crocker seconded. The motioned was approved unanimously. The Legal Writing and clinical professors did not participate in this vote.

Faculty Affairs Committee (3 open positions - must elect at least one Assistant Professor and one Legal Writing/Clinical Professor)

Dean Boise explained that whoever is appointed to the Faculty Affairs Committee will be dealing with making substantial revisions to the Greenbook. He announced the current members are Professors Inniss, Garlock, Witmer-Rich, Kerber, Green, and Sterio. Dean Boise called for nominations. Professor Hoke nominated Professor Kowalski. Professor Niedringhaus nominated Professor Gelman, who declined. Professor Broering-Jacobs nominated Professor Kerber. Dean Robertson wanted to make three nominations, but Professor Hoke said that nominations cannot come from our associate deans but only faculty members. Professor Forte asked Dean Robertson for the names of faculty she wished to nominate, and then he nominated them for her—Professors Becker (who was not present), Green, and Lewis. Professor Wilson nominated Professor Witmer-Rich. Professor Crocker nominated Professor Falk, who was not present). Dean Boise said that a private ballot would be distributed.

Academic Standards Committee - Peter Garlock (attachments)

Professor Garlock explained that, having reviewed Academic Regulation 3.6(a) regarding the consequences for a student's failure to submit a take-home examination within the time deadline established by the professor, the Committee proposes that faculty adopt a revision of 3.6(a) and the addition of 3.6(b) and 3.6(c)—all three of which were attached to the faculty meeting agenda along with the Committee’s rationale for each.

A discussion ensued about the ambiguity of the phrase “a grade of ‘F’ or its numerical equivalent” in the proposed revision of 3.6(a), and Professor Forte summarized the following amendments that were agreed upon:

3.6 Examinations and Examination Scheduling
(a) Failure to Appear for a Scheduled In-School Final Examination
Unless the student obtains advance permission from the Dean to take a scheduled in-school final examination at another time, any student who fails to appear for such examination shall receive a grade of "F" or its numerical equivalent for that examination or, if the examination is graded numerically, a zero for that examination. Permission to take an in-school final examination at a different time will be granted only upon a showing of good cause. Unless the student obtains advance permission from the Dean to take a rescheduled in-school final examination at another time, any student who fails to appear for such rescheduled examination shall receive a grade of "F" or its numerical equivalent for that examination or, if the examination is graded numerically, a zero for that examination.

A professor shall also have discretion to stipulate that failure to take the final examination in the course shall constitute a failure to complete the requirements of the course and shall result in a final grade of "F" being awarded for the course.

The vote to adopt the Committee’s revision of 3.6(a) as amended was unanimous.

Professor Garlock moved on to the proposed addition of 3.6(b) and said that the same amendments as just agreed upon for 3.6(a) should also apply. Hence, the proposed 3.6(b) was amended as follows:

3.6(b) Failure to Submit a Take-Home Final Examination by the Deadline Established by the Faculty Member

Unless the student obtains advance permission from the Dean to submit a take-home final examination at a different time, any student who does not submit such examination by the deadline established by the faculty member shall receive a grade of "F" or its numerical equivalent for that examination or, if the examination is graded numerically, a zero for that examination, unless the faculty member has given notice to the class in advance of the final examination of a different system of penalties for failure to submit such examination on time. Permission to submit a take-home final examination at a different time will be granted only upon a showing of good cause. Unless the student obtains advance permission from the Dean to submit a rescheduled take-home final examination at a different time, any student who fails to submit such examination by the rescheduled deadline shall receive a grade of "F" or its numerical equivalent for that examination or, if the examination is graded numerically, a zero for that examination.

A professor shall also have discretion to stipulate that failure to submit a take-home final examination by the established or rescheduled deadline shall constitute a failure to complete the requirements of the course and shall result in a final grade of "F" being awarded for the course.
Professor Curtis thought it might be better to retain the phrase “or it numerical equivalent” in the case of take-home finals. Professor Majette did not see a need for creating a penalty system in advance nor for including a statement about such a penalty in a syllabus. Professor Hoke suggested it might avoid a charge of favoritism. Professor Garlock said that there is an obligation to be uniform and encourages faculty to consider penalties in advance. Professor May thought it was a good idea to include a statement in the syllabus in order to avoid arguments with students later. Dean Robertson agreed with Professor Majette and said that providing them with a statement in advance was like giving students the option to skip an assignment. Professor Forte said this was analogous to giving word limits on exams. What do we do if a student exceeds the word limit? He felt there is a need to define the sanction in advance. Professor Gelman asked what if there is no stated penalty but just a warning that there will be a penalty. Professor Crocker questioned how a take-home is different from an in-class final. Professor Sterio said the same rationale would apply if a student submitting an exam via e-mail encounters a power outage versus a student trying to arrive for exam and the car breaks down. Professor Garlock said that gets into a case by case situation. Professor Crocker asked about students who turn their exams in late. Why are they allowed? Professor Niedringhaus said the language between 36(a) and 36(b) does not have to be parallel, but different language is likely to create problems.

Professor Majette called the question. The Committee’s proposal to adopt 3.6(b) as amended was carried unanimously.

Professor Garlock read the Committee’s proposed 3.6(c)

3.6(c) Exceptions to Academic Regulations 3.6(a) and 3.6(b) for Unforeseeable Emergencies

Exceptions to the requirements of Academic Regulations 3.6(a) and 3.6(b) may be granted by the Dean only in cases of extraordinary unforeseeable emergencies, and provided that the student notifies the Dean as soon as practicable of the circumstances of the emergency.

A brief discussion followed regarding the embellished language of “extraordinary unforeseeable emergencies.” Professor Cherry suggested these regulations be included in the packet of materials given to students at Orientation.

The vote to adopt Regulation 3.6(c) as written by the Committee was carried unanimously.

Semesterization Updates to Academic Regulations - Kevin O’Neill (attachment)

Professor O’Neill summarized the proposal from the Teaching Committee to revise Academic Regulations 3.3 and 6.1 in order to solve two problems:
(1) What happens if, this year, one of our students fails or withdraws from the second semester of a two-semester core course? This poses a problem because, next year, that core course will be a one-semester, not a two-semester, course.

(2) What do we do with a transfer student who arrives here having completed only one semester of a core course that we have transformed from two semesters down to one?

Professor O’Neill explained that the proposed addition of subparagraph (e) to 3.3 was written to resolve problem #1:

3.3(e) This provision applies specifically to "semesterized" courses — i.e., core courses that have been transformed from two semesters to one. Any student who fails or withdraws from the second semester of a two-semester course that is subsequently "semesterized" from two semesters to one must enroll in and complete the new one-semester version of that course. The student shall not lose any credit hours previously awarded for successful completion of the first semester of a subsequently "semesterized" two-semester course.

The proposed addition of subparagraph (g) to 6.1 was written to resolve problem #2. Dean Sundahl and Professor Forte suggested the following amendments:

6.1(g) This provision applies specifically to "semesterized" courses at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law — i.e., core courses that have been transformed from two semesters to one. Any transfer student who arrives at Cleveland-Marshall having completed only one semester of a two-semester course that has been "semesterized" from two semesters to one must enroll in and complete the new Cleveland-Marshall’s one-semester version of that course. The student shall not lose any credit hours previously awarded for successful completion of the first semester of a two-semester course. Cleveland-Marshall has "semesterized" that is here taught as a one-semester course.

The amendments were accepted. The motion to adopt the committee’s proposal to add 3.3(e), as written by the committee, and 6.1(g), as amended, to the Academic Regulations was carried unanimously.

Professor Witmer-Rich summarized the Curriculum Committee’s proposed new standard for the Experiential Skills Requirement, which was attached to the faculty meeting agenda.
Professor Hoke suggested adding the phrase “at least” to the first sentence of the proposed new standard: “In order to graduate every student must complete at least one experiential skills course, as described below.” She also suggested changing item 3.b. from “Appellate advocacy” to “Advocacy before appellate courts, administrative agencies, or legislative bodies.” Both of Professor Hoke’s amendments were accepted.

Professor Sterio asked if we currently have experiential skills courses besides the clinical ones. Professor Crocker pointed out Trial Advocacy, and Professor Kelly named Moot Court. Professor Hoke asked if faculty are now going to be encouraged to develop courses that meet the Experiential Skills Requirement. Dean Sundahl replied that the Curriculum Committee will survey existing courses that satisfy the requirement, and that faculty should also develop more courses so that they will be on the schedule beginning 2013.

Because double-dipping is prohibited by the ABA, Professor Crocker suggested the following clause (highlighted) be added to the tail-end of the last sentence of the proposed standard: “The experiential skills requirement cannot be satisfied by the same course used to satisfy the 3rd Semester Legal Writing requirement, and cannot be satisfied by the same course used to satisfy the Upper Level Writing requirement.” Professor Crocker’s amendment was accepted.

Hearing no further discussion, Dean Boise called for a vote on adopting the Curriculum Committee’s proposal as amended. The motion was carried unanimously.

Faculty Affairs Committee: Decanal Voting - Matthew Green (attachment)

Professor Green explained the proposal by the Faculty Affairs Committee to amend the Bylaws granting Legal Writing and Clinical Professors the same decanal voting rights as the tenured and tenure-track faculty have.

We are entering into tough times that will get tougher, Professor Lazarus stated, and the faculty needs to be unified. Therefore, everyone on the faculty should be able to vote on the incoming dean.

Having reviewed faculty meeting minutes from 2002 and 2006 when this same issue had been raised, Professor May reported that she found nothing in the minutes that fully addressed the decanal voting rights of Legal Writing and Clinical Professors.

Professor Glassman stated that some of the Legal Writing and Clinical Professors are approaching decades of experience at C|M|LAW. He asked tenured and tenure-track faculty to consider if they really have the best interests of the law school at heart in not including a portion of very experienced faculty in decanal decisions. In particular, he addressed the tenure-track assistant professors and pointed out that, according to Section 8.1.2b of the Greenbook, they can be fired by the Dean, whereas LW and clinical faculty could not. Professor Green clarified that there are various levels before the Dean can fire someone.

Professor Crocker was in favor of the proposal and felt that everyone seems to have the same fears—e.g., that the Dean would find out how an individual voted and perhaps deny that professor tenure. She noted that everyone seems to have worries and fears about self and one another, and those worries and fears will not change regardless of whether the proposal passes.

Professor Garlock asked if granting decanal voting rights to LW and clinical faculty will next lead to their wanting to vote on promotion and tenure issues, which he does not agree they should have.

Professor Curtis said she did not favor this proposal and agreed with Professor Garlock. She asserted that the law school is in crisis right now, and we have far more important matters that we should be focusing on. She left the meeting.

Professor Forte was against the proposal. He said if the LW and clinical faculty block supported a dean candidate that tenure and tenure-track faculty were against, then that could result in favoritism by a new dean who learns he/she was not supported by the regular faculty. Professor Kowalski pointed out that there is a misperception that LW and clinical faculty are all in agreement on issues. Professor Niedringhaus agreed and stated that a group of people can have the ability to look outside of themselves to see what is best for the law school.

Professor Lewis, who served on the last Dean Search Committee, said that input of everyone at the law school, including LW and clinical faculty, was considered in the selection of our Dean. Therefore, she agreed with Professor Curtis and did not see why time was being spent on this issue.

That LW and clinical faculty are perceived as somehow different from tenured and tenure-track faculty, Professor May said, means that the first group is not being represented.

Professor Kerber addressed Professor Lewis and said that being given a form to complete on each decanal candidate is not the same thing as having the right to vote. She further pointed out that, except for perhaps Professor Wilson, Professor Kerber had herself been at C|M|LAW longer than most of the tenured and tenure-track faculty present at the meeting. Yet she is not perceived as faculty but as staff and said that this issue is about equality and collegiality.

In the 22 years that she has been at C|M|LAW, Professor Mika said, she has never cared about who the Dean was. Professor Mika said voting will not make or break her, and others in her position. However, it is not good for the future of the law school to continue denying LW and clinical faculty the right to vote—and, Professor Glassman added, to maintain standards of lesser forms of participation.

Professor Garlock pointed out that none of the faculty vote, but they simply recommend decanal candidates to the Provost and the President based on a procedure that has included opinions of everyone in the law school. Professor Crocker pointed out that our Bylaws specifically refer to voting.

Professor Garlock asked who gets to vote on today’s proposal from the Faculty Affairs Committee? Professor Green stated that the committee discussed it, but they had not been charged with resolving that issue. Professor Garlock suggested that the Dean should now rule since it is a Greenbook issue in question; alternatively, perhaps we should vote both ways and, if the outcome is the same, then there is no appeal.

Dean Boise said that much of the discussion has focused on the differences between Legal Writing and clinical versus tenured and tenure-track faculty, and he agreed with Professor Curtis that too much time is spent in regard to status issues. The two groups of faculty have different duties and responsibilities. The faculty’s role in a dean search is advisory to the President only, and if a significant portion of the faculty is not being heard, then it is up to the President to change. Dean Boise’s opinion is that LW and clinical faculty should be allowed to vote. However, Article II, Section 2 of the Bylaws restricts voting “on matters relating to ... the hiring or retention of the Dean,” to tenured and tenure-track faculty. The vote that is on the table now should be made by the tenured and tenure-track faculty. He reiterated Professor Crocker’s sentiments in regard to fears and worries. Dean Boise then called the question.

Professor Green stated that the first vote was to determine if the voting on the Faculty Affairs Committee’s proposal was to be by secret ballot. Index cards were circulated, which Professor Wilson and Rosa DelVecchio counted. The result was 10 to 9 in favor of a secret ballot.

The second vote was on the Faculty Affairs Committee’s proposal to amend the Bylaws so that Legal Writing and Clinical Professors would be granted the same decanal voting rights as the tenured and tenure-track faculty have. Index cards were circulated, and Professor Wilson and Rosa DelVecchio counted them. Results were 10 opposed the proposal to amend the Bylaws, and 9 in favor of amending the Bylaws. The majority ruled, so the Bylaws were not amended.

Self-Study Update - Phyllis Crocker

Due to time constraints, this item was tabled until the next faculty meeting.
Professor Lewis made a motion to adjourn the faculty meeting. Professor Wilson seconded. The motion carried unanimously. The meeting was adjourned at approximately 4:15 p.m.
MINUTES OF REGULAR FACULTY MEETING OF COLLEGE OF LAW
May 10, 2012
2:00 p.m. – LB 60

ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Deans Robertson and Sundahl; Professors Broering-Jacobs, Buckley, Crocker, Curtis, Daiker-Middaugh, Falk, Forte, Garlock, Gelman, Glassman, Green, Heyward, Hoke, Kerber, Kowalski, Lazarus, Lewis, Majette, May, Mika, Niedringhaus, O’Neill, Sterio, Wilson and Witmer-Rich; Visiting Professor Simek; Assistant Dean Lifter

EXCUSED: Professors Becker (PLOA), Borden (PLOA), Cherry, Geier (PLOA), Inniss, Keating, Plecnik, Ray and Weinstein (PLOA)

NOT PRESENT: Professors Davis, Gard, Oh and Sagers

Dean Craig M. Boise convened a regular meeting of the faculty at 2:05 p.m.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Approval of Minutes of April 26, 2012 Faculty Meeting
Approval of the minutes for the April 26, 2012 faculty meeting will be voted on at the next faculty meeting.

Dean’s Report
140 Plan - Legal education is experiencing difficult times and Dean Boise reiterated that we must find a way to respond to these changes and not only survive, but thrive. The response we have developed is the 140 Plan. The Plan’s goal is to reduce the entering class to 140 students, improve our entering credentials, selectivity, bar passage rates, placement and other factors. This plan will be financed through a combination of tuition increases and budget cuts. This week, President Berkman approved our 140 Plan on the condition that we raise tuition 9.5% in each of the next three years, make $800K in budget cuts, and forego future replacement of retiring or resigning faculty members until we’ve achieved $750K in salary and fringe savings.
Over $620K of the required budget cuts will be achieved through positions that already have been vacated and will not be refilled. Another approximately $170K will be achieved through uncommitted savings from new hires and an across the board operating budget cut.

Part of the savings we were able to count toward the $800K requirement will come from reorganizations of various functions within the law school that were not undertaken for budget purposes.

The first reorganization is academic support. As previously configured the program had become populated with high-performing students, not at-risk students. Additionally our CSU funding for the AEP Fellows was in jeopardy. Accordingly, Daniel Dropko's position will be eliminated and responsibility for academic support will be given to faculty member Kelly Curtis. She will assume the title of Director of Academic Support and will be working with Associate Dean Robertson to develop a new model for providing critical academic support to our most at-risk students.

Our bar passage rate has declined for the past five years. As part of the 140 Plan, we will provide every student enrolling this fall with the BAR/BRI course at no cost. In addition, we will contract with BAR/BRI to assist with our OBEST course and provide online training, testing and diagnostic support for our students through all three years of law school.

The Office of Admissions will also be reorganized in order to adapt to the increasing use of technology in the admissions process that is being driven by best practices at the undergraduate admissions level. Elaine Terman’s role as communications coordinator will expand to include a broader set of marketing, web content and social media management, and print marketing functions. Steve Antol will be leaving the Admissions office to assist Elaine in her expanded duties.

A Director of Student Life position will be created to oversee student organizations and events, provide an office of financial aid counseling, administer our LRAP program, oversee SBA financing which will be transferred from CSU to the law school, and generally ensure that our students have a great experience here at C|M|LAW.

The Advancement department will be hiring an additional person to assist with the greatly expanded development work we’ll be doing.

The Clinics will be redesigned in order to expand our engaged learning experiences for students. A key component of this expansion of clinical faculty duties is oversight of adjunct supervising attorneys who will work one-on-one with students on projects in a much broader array of practice areas.

Professor Falk said she is disappointed that this is the first time she is hearing about the academic support changes. Dean Boise responded that one of the reasons is that the situation itself was unstable so he was not sure what he would be able to do in terms of the 140 Plan. It was not his intention to exclude the faculty from these decisions. He appreciates faculty comments and suggestions and he is working hard to provide the best opportunity for students. Professor Wilson noted that at Akron Law School, students identified as at-risk after their first semester are placed in a special class. There is not much stigma associated with placement in this class. A short discussion ensued regarding placing at-risk students in a separate section.

Great Lakes Sports & Entertainment Legal Academy – The GLSELA begins on May 19th. There are close to 70 students enrolled. The proceeds from this program will be split 50/50 with Case. We anticipate a net profit of $50, 000.

Health Care Compliance and Master of Legal Studies – We hope to market and launch both of these programs in 2013.

Associate Dean for Administration
- The new proctoring system has been successful. If you have comments or recommendations please let Dean Sundahl know.
- Please abide by the exam deadlines, which will be circulated.
- Dean Sundahl has received complaints from students regarding some professors unilaterally making changes to their class schedule. Students rely on the schedule; so if you need to make variations to your class schedule, let Dean Sundahl know.
- In compliance with the faculty handbook, all take home exams must be given during the exam period.
- Thank you for attending the luncheons for clinical professor candidates. The Committee will bring forth three candidates for each of the two available positions.

Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment
- Thank you to all faculty who have agreed to make phone calls to bar takers.
- Presented a spreadsheet containing data on students who failed the Feb. 2012 bar exam. Also demonstrated a calculator created by the Office of Institutional Research that took the relevant factors in predicting whether a student will pass the bar on their first attempt. When the relevant data is plugged in (LSAT, first year GPA, undergraduate GPA and taking an MPT course) participation in MPT workshops raises the probability of bar passage substantially as does first year GPA. This is a useful, but not definitive tool. The faculty may want to consider raising the minimum GPA to stay in law school.

Approval of Graduates
Dean Boise presented a list of 179 J.D. candidates. (See list attached to these minutes.) Professor Forte moved to accept the list of graduates, subject to confirmation of their completion of all requirements. Professor Buckley seconded the motion. The motion passed unanimously.

Nomination to the University Task Force on Promotion and Tenure
Dean Boise explained that under the AAUP contract, a task force was charged with better coordinating the promotion and tenure procedures across the university. Professor Buckley was the law school’s representative to this task force. Since he is retiring at the end of this year, we need to choose a replacement. Professor O’Neill was nominated and seconded. Hearing no additional nominations, Professor O’Neill was unanimously voted to the University Task Force on Promotion and Tenure.

Self-Study Committee Update
Professor Phyllis Crocker, Chair of the Self-Study Committee, announced that the ABA/AALS visit is scheduled for March 31, 2013. She then gave an update of the committee’s work to date. She stated that the committee first looked at the 140 Plan and then turned their attention to revising the mission and vision statements. The mission and vision statements were presented to the Visiting Committee who were very impressed. The Self-Study Committee will next present the mission and vision statements to the Alumni Association and the National Advisory Council for their recommendations. Law students were asked to participate in the Law School Survey of Student Engagement in April. Just over 50% participated. We should have the results of this survey in June. The committee will continue their work throughout the summer.

Adjunct Appointments
Associate Dean Mark Sundahl referred to his memo of May 8, 2012 (see memo attached to these minutes) in which he recommended renewing the appointment of Adjunt Professor status for Thomas A. Moran, David Neel, the Honorable Diane Palos, and the Honorable Benita Pearson for a period of three years – FY11 through FY13. He stated that each professor has met the threshold requirement of having taught at least three semesters and at least once in the last three years. Additionally, he requested a motion to recommend new appointments for the same three-year period for: Adam Davis, Charles Fleming, Pamela Johnson, Margaret Koosel, Anthony Lazzaro, and Patricia Ritzert. Professor O’Neill moved to recommend the six new appointments. Professor Hoke seconded. The motion passed unanimously

Low Enrollment Policy
Associate Sundahl referred to his memorandum of May 8, 2012 (see memorandum attached to these minutes) in which he introduced a new policy for courses with low enrollment. He noted that this issue had been discussed at a prior faculty meeting and that the issue of low enrollment presents itself on a regular basis. Classes with low enrollment taught by adjunct faculty are cancelled. Classes with low enrollment taught by tenure or tenure-track faculty raise the question of whether this is the best use of faculty time. Associate Dean Sundahl surveyed other law schools to find out their policies before deciding on the policy below. The new policy preserves all options and gives the dean the discretion to cancel courses while taking into account various factors.

If any course has an enrollment of six or fewer students one week after enrollment has opened for all students, the course may be cancelled at the discretion of the Dean. In making this determination, the Dean will take into account the needs of students, such as the need to complete graduation requirements or prepare for the bar exam. If a course is cancelled, the Dean may require the professor, in lieu of teaching the course, to (1) undertake additional administrative duties during that semester or a future semester, (2) teach another class that semester, or (3) teach an additional class during a future semester. In addition, the cancelled course may be offered less frequently in future semesters in order to attract higher enrollment when the course is offered again.

Several faculty members felt that this policy should have been referred to the Faculty Affairs Committee for recommendation and then brought before the faculty since it deals with terms and conditions of faculty work. Associate Dean Sundahl felt that the proposal and recommendations are within the scope of his duties. There also was discussion regarding what is considered “low enrollment” and whether six is an appropriate cut-off number. Additionally, one faculty member felt that the proposed policy is inflexible and provides no consultation with the faculty member whose class is being cancelled.

Professor Garlock moved to refer the low enrollment issue to the Faculty Affairs Committee for further discussion and ask that they make a recommendation to the Dean. Dean Boise noted that there is a fine line between what is administrative policy and when faculty input is appropriate. He said he has no problem sending this matter to the Faculty Affairs Committee for their recommendation.

University Health Care Committee Update
Professor Ken Kowalski reminded the faculty that Open Enrollment for employee benefits is currently underway and will close on May 20th. This year you are required to re-enroll for medical, dental and vision benefits. Professor Kowalski reviewed some of the nuances of the changes for this year.

FERPA and IRB Policies
Professor Karin Mika gave a brief presentation on the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act and Internal Review Board policies.

Adjournment
Professor Falk moved to adjourn the faculty meeting. Professor O’Neill seconded. A meeting of the tenured faculty PAC followed.
ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Dean Sundahl; Professors Becker, Borden, Broering-Jacobs, Curtis, Daiker-Middaugh, Davis, Falk, Forte, Heyward, Gard, Garlock, Geier, Glassman, Green, Kalir, Kerber, Kowalski, Lazarus, Lewis, Majette, May, Mika, Niedringhaus, Plecnik, Ray, Sterio, Weinstein, Wilson and Witmer-Rich; Assistant Dean Lifter; Dan Thomas, Assistant Dir., Technology Operations

EXCUSED: Associate Dean Robertson; Professors Cherry, Crocker, Gelman, Hoke, Inniss (LWOP), O’Neill (PLOA), Sagers

NOT PRESENT: Professor Oh

A regular meeting of the faculty was convened at 4:02 p.m. by Dean Craig M. Boise.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Approval of Minutes of April 26, 2012 Faculty Meeting
Professor Borden moved to approve the minutes of the April 26, 2012, meeting as submitted. Professor Kerber seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Approval of Minutes of May 10, 2012 Faculty Meeting
Professor Kowalski moved to approve the minutes of the May 10, 2012, meeting as submitted. Professor Borden seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

New IT Support System
Dan Thomas, recently appointed Assistant Director of Technology, introduced some changes to the technology department. He noted that “automation” is a dated term so his department is henceforth to be known as C|M|LAW Information Technology. The email address will be information.technology@law.csuohio.edu.

During the first three weeks of school, the C|M|LAW Information Technology department received 154 requests for assistance. 114 of those were closed. In order to facilitate technology assistance, Mr. Thomas introduced a system he called a “Clear Path to IT Support.” There are three ways to request IT support. They are: 1) to open a ticket via the library website; 2) to send an email to newticket@law.csuohio.edu (this will convert into a new ticket just as the website does); and 3) to call the help line at ext. 7555.

Dean’s Report – Dean Boise
• Please plan on attending the State of Law School address this Thursday for an update on the general status of the law school.
• We continue to hear from students that they feel disengaged from the faculty. This was also reflected in the LSSSE survey. One opportunity to engage with students is at Sidebar. This year Sidebar will be held twice a month, the first and third Thursday of each month, in the newly renovated Student Lounge. Please plan on attending and engaging with your students.
• Professors Green and Hoke are up for tenure and promotion. We need to have as many faculty evaluations as possible of their classroom teaching. Contact Professor Wilson or Cherry to schedule a time to visit their classes.
• The Ohio legislature passed pension reform bills that now await the governor’s signature. The reform bills affect COLAs, contribution rates, the calculation of final average salary and the benefit formula. Professor Becker sent an e-mail about this to the faculty yesterday, and you can click through that e-mail to find detailed information about the changes.

- The composition of the faculty committees and charges for each committee was circulated in hard copy. Dean Boise noted that committees have been designated either full-year, Fall or Spring committees. Fall committees will need to complete their committee charges by the end of this semester. Full-year and Spring committee charges need to be completed by the end of the Spring semester. The Curriculum Committee has one charge that needs to be completed by October 31st. Professor Ray suggested moving the Clerkship Committee to the Spring. Dean Boise concurred. The Committee list also includes some additions in Spring – Employment Law Faculty and Criminal Law Faculty Group. The sole charge of these committees is to determine, by the end of Spring semester, programming for the following year. This will allow us to better promote our conferences well in advance.

- Professor Heyward, newly appointed Director of Engaged Learning, distributed a handout delineating all of the externships available. She asked faculty to encourage students to complete the application by the October 1st deadline.

Associate Dean for Administration

- Thank you for participating in orientation. The new class of students is very impressive. This year, orientation included a new session called “Entering the Session Profession” which emphasized professionalism and focused the Honor Code. On the Saturday of Orientation week, Professor Daiker-Middaugh spearheaded a “Living Justice Day” which was well attended. Ipads were given to the incoming class. An upper class orientation for returning classes will be held to talk to them about the Barbari program and Bloomberg Law as well as impressing upon them professionalism and networking.

- Faculty iPad training is set for October 3rd at noon. The eight available iPads have been distributed. If you have your own iPad, please join.

- Associate Dean Robertson is participating in the Utica Shale Conference, which is why she is not in attendance today. She invites all faculty to join the conference. Part of the strategy of holding this conference is for C|M|LAW to be at the forefront and to build a curriculum in energy law. We hope to partner with the College of Urban Studies.

- When the Curriculum Committee completes their survey, we can determine how many skills courses are being offered and if we need to create more courses. Please consider re-tooling or creating a new skills course. If you do choose to teach a new course next Fall (Fall of 2013), approval must be secured by Jan. 2013.

- Dean Sundahl has received a number of desperate complaints in classes where there were a great number of cancelled classes. Some students even demanded tuition refunds. This complaint was also reflected in the LSSSE surveys. The issue needs to be addressed. If you have recommendations, please see Dean Sundahl. In the meantime, Dean Sundahl will be following-up on canceled classes to ensure that they are being made up.

Self-Study Committee Update – Kristina Niedringhaus
Professor Niedringhaus, on behalf of the Self-Study Committee, reported that the committee met with the Visiting Committee, National Advisory Council, and C|M|LAW Alumni Board of Trustees for suggestions regarding the mission and vision statements. Professor Crocker will be meeting with the Dean’s Student Advisory Council in the near future. Additionally the committee received an excellent response rate for the LSSE. The summary of results was sent to faculty via email. If you have any questions about the summary, please see a committee member.

The Committee is in the process of drafting chapters for the Self-Study and completing the Site Visit Evaluation questionnaire. Half of the chapters will be completed by October 1st and will be distributed to the faculty. On October 16th and 17th, the Self-Study Committee will host brown bag lunches to discuss the chapters and hear your comments. The second set of chapters are due November 1st and again, they will be distributed to the faculty. Brown bag lunches will be held on November 14th and 15th. After incorporating faculty comments into the report, the committee will have the final draft ready for the faculty to approve at the December faculty meeting.

Nominations for University Committees – Milena Sterio
Professor Sterio requested volunteers to serve on the University Strategic Planning Committee (we need one representative from the law school for a two-year term), the Academic Misconduct Review Committee, the Committee on Athletics, and the Student Life Committee. Additionally, the Faculty Senate expressed concern to President Berkman with the composition of the Provost Search Committee. President Berkman promised to re-populate this committee. Therefore, we are being asked to submit two names of faculty who would be willing to serve as the law school representative to this search committee. The President will pick one of those two people. Finally, we need a volunteer to serve on the University Research Committee. This volunteer must be a full or associate professor. If you are interested in volunteering for any of these committees, please contact Professor Sterio.

Adjournment
Professor Borden moved to adjourn the faculty meeting. Professor Falk seconded. The meeting adjourned at 4:58 p.m.
ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Dean Sundahl; Professors Becker, Borden, Broering-Jacobs, Cherry, Crocker, Curtis, Daiker-Middaugh, Forte, Garlock, Geier, Gelman, Glassman, Green, Heyward, Kalir, Kerber, Kowalski, Lazarus, Lewis, Majette, Plecnik, Ray, Sagers, Sterio, Weinstein, Wilson and Witmer-Rich; Assistant Deans Lifter and Lucak; Amy Miller (Director of Student Life)

EXCUSED: Associate Dean Robertson; Professors Falk, Gard, Hoke, Inniss (LWOP), Keating, Mawdsley, May, Mika, Niedringhaus and O’Neill (PLOA)

NOT PRESENT: Professors Davis and Oh

A regular meeting of the faculty was convened at 4:02 p.m. by Dean Craig M. Boise.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Approval of Minutes of September 13, 2012 Faculty Meeting
Dean Boise noted an error on page 4 of the minutes under the Associate Dean for Administration report. The correct title of the orientation session is Entering the Profession, not Entering the Session. Associate Dean Sundahl moved to approve the minutes with the correction noted by Dean Boise. Professor Kerber seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Recent Faculty News
- Professor Becker, in her capacity as President of the Ohio ACLU, participated in a webcast sponsored by the National LGBT Bar Association. She addressed the issue of voter rights and voter suppression.
- Professor Borden’s article Of Inside Monitors and Outside Monitors: The Role of Journalists in Caremark Litigation has been accepted for publication in the University of Pennsylvania Journal of Business Law.
• Professor Geier’s Letter to the Editor was published in the Wall Street Journal regarding capital gains tax rates and their impact on the U.S. Economy.

• Professor Inniss’ Letter to the Editor was published in the Wall Street Journal regarding the importance of parental support and early economic advantage in child success.

• Professor Lewis has been invited to be a visiting scholar for the first two weeks in July at the Hastings Center for Bioethics and for the last two weeks in July at Yale University’s Interdisciplinary Center for Bioethics.

• Associate Dean Robertson served on the organizing committee and spoke at a conference held at C|M|LAW on the development of shale oil and gas in Ohio. The conference was jointly sponsored by C|M|LAW, the College of Urban Affairs, CMB, Crains Cleveland Business, the University Clean Energy Alliance of Ohio, and several law firms.

• Professor Sagers participated in the WCPN program, Civic Commons, discussing the Crisis in the Courts. He also commented in the Huffington Post on Libertarian Party candidate, Gary Johson’s antitrust lawsuit arguing that the major political parties have monopolized politics. He was also interviewed on a new internet TV channel, Huffington Live, concerning the Universal-EMI merger.

• Professor Sterio presented to the U.N. Contact Group on Piracy off the Coast of Somalia in her capacity as an independent academic member of the Public International Law and Policy Group. She spoke about the treatment of detained juvenile pirates by the capturing or prosecuting state, as well as the need to aggressively detain and prosecute those who recruit juvenile pirates. She also was a participant on WCPN’s Talking Foreign Policy program. She spoke on the presidential power in a “war without end.”

• Dean Emeritus Steinglass participated on a panel at the Ohio Constitutional Law Seminar, sponsored by the law firm of Vorys, Sater and presented at the Ohio Historical Society in Columbus.

Dean’s Report

• Thanks to faculty who responded to the library’s request for permission to put their works in the Engaged Scholarship institutional repository. Dean Boise encouraged those who have not yet responded to please do so. Works in Engaged Scholarship make them more discoverable and accessible on the web. So far, the library has uploaded records for 607 faculty works. These records received 3,782 hits since Spring 2012. There were 612 full text downloads. Faculty with works in the Engaged Scholarship repository receive statistics via email as to hits and downloads. Contact Sue Altmeyer or Amy Burchfield with any questions about Engaged Scholarship.

• Thanks to faculty who volunteered to help with mandatory 2L bar counseling. It is great to have faculty involvement in this important part of our bar plan.
• Two faculty members are up for tenure or promotion this fall. Please contact Jim Wilson and April Cherry to find out when you can sit in on Matt Green’s and Candice Hoke’s classes.

• The Marketing Department has been working with the Library, IT and Admissions on a new website design. The work so far has largely been technical, but we have received proposals for the project from outside vendors, one of which is particularly compelling. Minds On, one of the vendors who submitted a proposal, will give a presentation at a faculty brown-bag on Wednesday, November 8th to show faculty some of the ideas they have regarding the look and functionality of the new website and to get faculty comments, suggestions and ideas.

• Professor Falk asked that the Dean remind faculty of the upcoming PAC meeting on November 8th.

• In Associate Dean Robertson’s absence she asked Dean Boise to report that the Academic Support program appears to be working much better than in the past. The AEP fellows are working hard and are very engaged with the students. Professor Curtis is meeting with them weekly on both teaching and substance issues. The revamped Academic Support program is a work in progress. A brown bag will be held in the spring, once Professor Curtis has enough data to provide some feedback on what works and what needs improvement.

• CSU Homecoming is this week. Faculty are encouraged to attend the C|M|LAW Alumni Reception on Thursday, October 11th from 5:30 to 7:00 p.m. Alumni are always pleased to reconnect with their former professors. As part of the homecoming festivities, CSU is sponsoring a 5K and 10K race, on Saturday, Oct. 13th. Professor Sterio is coordinating a 5-person C|M|LAW team. If you are interested in running or walking, please contact Professor Sterio.

Associate Dean for Administration

• Please start thinking about final exams. If you are giving a take home exam, please inform Assistant Dean Lifter. Take home exams may only be given during the exam period. Please also check the on-line schedule to ensure that your course is listed. If it is not, please contact Assistant Dean Lifter.

• If you are interested in having a practitioner participate in your class, please speak to Associate Dean Sundahl.

• The Northeast Ohio Faculty Colloquium with Case and Akron is scheduled for Friday, October 26th from 12:00 – 4:00 p.m. at Blue Canyon Restaurant. Professor Lewis will be speaking on behalf of C|M|LAW. Please contact Associate Dean Robertson if you plan on attending.

• If you are not yet signed up for the Faculty Blog, please do so. Contact Associate Dean Robertson if you need assistance. Professor Kalir suggested sending out an email before faculty are scheduled to be on the radio or at local events so that faculty can plan on attending.
• Associate Dean Robertson will continue to monitor Scholastica, a new tool for submitting articles to law reviews, to see how many schools are utilizing this service.
• Jackson Lewis LLP funds a labor and employment law scholarship. This year, in addition to a cash award, the awardee will receive preference for a clerkship position. If you know of any student who may be interested in applying, please contact Associate Dean Sundahl.

Admission Report
Christopher Lucak, Assistant Dean for Admissions, gave a final report on statistics for the 141 members of the incoming class of 2012. He stated that the admissions process was very challenging this year for several reasons. The number of applicants dropped by 29%, the largest drop in volume in C|M|LAW’s recorded history. This was mirrored nationally with 170 schools reporting drops in application volume. 114 of those schools reported application drops in the 10-29% range. The quality of applicants also declined as noted in their LSAT scores. The most challenging for us was an 18.4% decline in applicants with LSAT scores in the 150-154 range because this is the range that we draw a large number of our applicants. The end result was a much more competitive process for a smaller applicant pool.

The good news is that the median undergraduate GPA as well as the 75% percentile undergraduate GPA of our incoming class is slightly higher than last year’s. The 25th percentile is slightly lower. The incoming class’s median and 75th percentile LSAT scores were the same as last year with the 25th percentile slightly lower. In relation to all Ohio law schools, our incoming class’s median undergraduate GPA is exactly in the middle at 3.30. We fared slightly better in median LSAT scores with the fourth highest score in Ohio at 154.

In terms of the percentage of female students enrolled as a percentage of the entering class of 2012, C|M|LAW is at 39% with the average of all Ohio law schools at 45%. We are finding that there was a decline in women applicants nationally. Women tend to be more concerned with the amount of scholarship money they can obtain and they seem to shy away from urban universities. We rank fourth highest in the state in the percentage of minority students enrolled as a percentage of the entering class of 2012 at 19%. The state average is 18%.

We rank first among all Ohio law schools in terms of our selectivity or rate of admission (applications received divided by offers sent) at 43.4%. We rank second highest in Ohio for our yield (offers sent divided by those who actually enroll) at 28.8%. Professor Witmer-Rich asked why we are so successful in these categories. Assistant Dean Lucak replied that we are able to focus our attention on those students that we feel are the best fit for C|M|LAW. We are not just looking at numbers in our application process; we are looking at student’s likelihood of coming here. We then have consistent, meaningful conversations with these students and make them feel connected to our community.

Professor Gelman asked, in Assistant Dean Lucak’s opinion, how many students who were not admitted would be capable of doing well at C|M|LAW. Assistant Dean Lucak replied there is very slim viability on the waiting list. The waiting list is the size of the admitting class. Professor Becker asked if we admitted an extra 12 students, can he estimate how many would accept our offer. Assistant Dean Lucak said he didn’t really know.

Professor Daiker-Middaugh asked if the LCOP students are factored into the statistics. Assistant Dean Lucak replied that they are factored in because they are fully admitted students. This year we accepted 17 LCOP students with a median UGPA of 2.85 and a median LSAT of 144 – both stats are declines from the previous year. Professor Wilson asked if we should consider changing the LCOP system to a conditional admission and use the process to eliminate the weakest students similar to how other law schools administer their programs. Professor Crocker noted that a few years ago a committee chaired by Professor Falk, looked into the LCOP program and determined that we should maintain the same system.

Professor Gelman noted that we are tied for the 10th highest percentage of decline in application volume in the country. Akron’s decline was only 12%. He asked for Assistant Dean Lucak’s thoughts on why he believes this occurred. Assistant Dean Lucak replied that we are behind the times in terms of how we communicate with potential students. Students no longer attend law school fairs, they find information via websites and social media. We are currently working on updating our web site and will be hiring a Communications Specialist solely for the Admissions department to address these issues.

Professor Crocker asked if more scholarship dollars would have improved our median LSAT and UGPA scores and would have helped meet the target of 140 students in the incoming class earlier. Assistant Dean Lucak agreed that more scholarship dollars would help especially because we are consistently outspent by our peer law schools. By increasing tuition last year we increased scholarship dollars, but we still miss students in the 160 and above LSAT range. He noted that in addition to increasing dollars for scholarships, we need to improve the renewal rate for scholarships. Our renewal rate used to be 60%. This past year it was less than 50%. Professor Sterio asked if other law schools give out scholarships without tying them to a particular GPA and if so, would that help us. Assistant Dean Lucak stated there are schools that offer scholarship awards at a much higher amount and that the bar to maintain the scholarship is very high, sometimes unrealistic. Assistant Dean Lucak was asked if we are awarding more money to less qualified students. He replied that we are and that the sooner a target class is secured, the easier it is for him to plan and to aggressively pursue students. Professor Weinstein stated that he wonders whether an all or nothing approach is a good idea. Alternatively, we could give scholarships with the requirements that if you drop below a certain GPA, you are guaranteed a certain portion of your scholarship and at another pre-determined point you lose your scholarship altogether. There is a cognitive bias against losing everything. By facing an all or nothing we are keying into that risk aversive. Dean Boise stated that when you talk about increasing retention rates, that is a re-allocation issue. The available scholarship dollars have to cover all years. If we increase scholarship retention, we have to reduce scholarships awarded to first-year students. You take into account the first-year scholarships, so unless you are talking about enlarging the pool, then you need to determine what brings students in. There is the risk that if you expand retention on the back end, you will need to decrease scholarships granted on the front end. It’s a risk assessment.

Student Life Report
Recently appointed Director of Student Life, Amy Miller, spoke about her four main initiatives for the coming year. First, she will work with the 28 law student organizations on the idea of continuity, creating programming that is impactful internally and within the community, and working to plan ahead. Second, as advisor to the SBA, she will work on the application process organizations will need to complete to access their money, which is held by the SBA. President Berkman gave $150,000 to SGA to create a better student government. SBA did not receive any of that money. Amy will work to coordinate a petition requesting that SBA receive a fair portion of that money. Third, Amy would like to focus student programming on three tracks – dual degrees and concentrations, financial literacy for law students, and helping law students to be better citizens and attorneys. Finally, Amy would like to create a binder for each organization that describes the role faculty advisors play in each organization.

In conclusion, Amy stated that if you have any issues or ideas for student organizations, please see her. Additionally if you recognize that a student is “falling through the cracks,” please let her know so that she can help that student.

Self-Study Committee Update
Professor Crocker, Chair of the Self-Study Committee, reported the committee will be releasing a draft copy of five chapters of the self-study. On October 16th and 17th faculty and staff are invited to a luncheon to comment on those chapters. The committee is especially interested in the strengths and weaknesses section of each chapter. The next set of chapters will be released in early November followed by two more luncheons for faculty and staff to comment.

Strategic Priorities Committee
Dean Boise stated that as part of his presentation at the State of the Law School he included a slide that stated budget cuts may create faculty salary freezes, salary cuts or faculty layoffs. He stated that it was not his intent to cause panic. He does not anticipate any imminent cuts or layoffs; however, he wanted to make it clear that this is the environment that we face. In his address he challenged faculty to work together to create such a compelling legal education program that no one outside the law school would want to change it. Dean Boise then announced a May Day summit to talk about some of the big picture items. He noted that he believes the market will be flat or down for the next few years so he does not have the sense that we have to come up with budget cuts between now and May. Following the State of the Law School address several faculty suggested that we begin to think about what we might do to adapt and look at legal education ahead of the May Day summit. To that end, Dean Boise said he intended to hold a series of faculty discussions about various aspects of the current legal education environment as a lead up to the May Day summit. Dean Boise noted that Professor Ray also circulated an email proposing creation of a Strategic Priorities Committee. This committee would be the precursor to a larger strategic plan. Dean Boise asked Professor Ray to introduce his proposal.

Professor Ray stated that after speaking with several faculty members and Dean Boise, he drafted the following proposal for creating a Strategic Priorities Committee.

Strategic Priorities Committee. This committee will consist of at least six faculty members, elected by the faculty. There will be at least one Full Professor, one Associate Professor, one Assistant Professor, one Clinical Professor and one Legal Writing Professor on the committee. Faculty members who presently serve in an administrative role are not eligible to serve on this committee. The Chairs of the Budget and Curriculum Committees will serve ex-officio on this committee if they are not elected as members.

Mandate 1: The committee will examine the effects of the 140-plan on student enrollment, the size and structure of the faculty and the Law School’s budget. The committee will examine whether possible future decline in applications warrants seeking faculty approval for a further reduction in the entering class, the effect of any such reduction on the Law School’s budget and potential cost savings in that budget and other possible revenue sources to offset revenue losses. The committee should consult with the Budget Committee in this process. Any recommendation to reduce next year’s entering class size should be made to the Dean and the Faculty no later than March 1, 2013.

Mandate 2: The committee will examine the effects of the 140-plan in light of the issues that Dean Boise raised in his recent State-of-the-Law-School presentation, including the overall decline in Law School applications, the effects of tuition on student debt burden and applications to Cleveland-Marshall, and the bar-passage and job placement prospects of our graduates. The committee will work with the Curriculum Committee, and the Bar Passage Committee to consider recommendations to the Dean and the Faculty for addressing these issues.

Mandate 3: The committee will work with the Faculty Affairs Committee to examine past Law School initiatives that recommended major changes in Law School policies and the role of shared governance in those initiatives, including the Bar Passage Plan, the recent curriculum changes and the 140-plan.

Professor Ray stressed that this is a draft proposal and he is open to suggestions.

Professor Gelman asked Dean Boise if he was considering further reducing the incoming class size and if so, and the university is not asked to bear any more of the costs, wouldn’t that mean budget cuts in the next fiscal year? Dean Boise responded that in that case we would need to come up with a budget effective in 2014. Professor Gelman asked if we admit 120 students next year would there be budget cuts effective in the fall of 2013? Dean Boise responded that he would go to the Provost and ask for financial help.

Professor Sterio noted that Assistant Dean Lucak said in his report today, that the earlier our target number for the incoming class is set, the better it is for our admissions department. What is our target for the next class? Dean Boise responded the target class is 140 and that he will not cut that number unless absolutely necessary.

Dean Boise noted that according to the bylaws, committees can be created by either the Dean or the faculty. He said that the only issue he has with Professor Ray’s proposal is that faculty with administrative responsibility are exempt from serving on the committee. He thought that creates an artificial separation. Further, if we are to resolve these issues, there is knowledge and information that administrators have that can be helpful to this process. If you exclude administrators, he suggested tasking the Faculty Affairs Committee with this charge. Professor Gelman noted that if an administrator disagrees with their superior, they could lose their administrative position. Dean Boise stated that Associate Deans Robertson and Sundahl often disagree with him. He said that is not part of an administration conspiracy, and that he fights for the law school at the administrative level all of the time. Additionally, he would prefer to sit with faculty and talk about ideas about which he would have to make a unilateral final decision. Professor Curtis noted that she, Professor Heyward and Professor Lewis all have administrative titles. Would they be exempt?

Professor Ray stated that there are two issues here – the serious issues facing the law school and the faculty governance concerns. He considered whether to recommend sending this to the Faculty Affairs Committee, however he wouldn’t want to be told as a FAC member that this was part of their charge in addition to everything else they are dealing with. Dean Boise asked for clarification on the faculty governance issue.
Professor Ray responded making sure that when we decide the class size, that all faculty are consulted and understand the effects of a smaller class. Also that faculty are on the front end of decision making. He reiterated his belief that the administrative faculty should not be members of this committee.

Professor Sterio agreed saying that sometimes if the Dean is a member of the committee the discussion becomes skewed because people don’t participate as freely. She did agree that the committee should be in regular communication with the Dean. Professor Becker agreed stating that she would be uncomfortable if the Dean was on the committee because he has exclusive control and ultimate authority.

Professor Gelman then seconded Professor Ray’s motion as submitted. After similar discussion of whether administrative faculty should be part of this committee, Professor Ray said he would amend his proposal by striking the third sentence, “Faculty members who presently serve in an administrative role are not eligible to serve on this committee.”

Professor Gelman questioned approving a committee if the charge is unclear. Professor Sterio suggested revisiting the mandate at the next faculty meeting. Professor Ray stated that he agrees with Professor Gelman. Professor Weinstein suggested that it does make sense to say that a committee should be created and then discuss the charge at the October 18th brown bag. A formal vote could be taken at the next faculty meeting. It was widely agreed that this was the best method of moving forward.

Professor Ray tabled his motion to create a Strategic Priorities Committee.

Adjournment
Professor Heyward moved to adjourn the faculty meeting. Professor Green seconded. The meeting adjourned at 5:45 p.m.
MINUTES OF SPECIAL FACULTY MEETING OF COLLEGE OF LAW
November 19, 2012
12:00 p.m. – LB 60

ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Deans Robertson and Sundahl; Professors Becker, Borden, Broering-Jacobs, Cherry, Crocker, Curtis, Daiker-Middaugh, Falk, Forte, Garlock, Geier, Gelman, Glassman, Green, Heyward, Kalir, Kerber, Kowalski, Lazarus, May, Mika, Niedringhaus, Plecnik, Ray, Sagers, Sterio, Weinstein, Wilson and Witmer-Rich

EXCUSED: Professor Hoke, Inniss (LWOP), Keating, Mawdsley, O’Neill (PLOA), and Oh

NOT PRESENT: Professors Davis, Gard, Lewis, and Majette

Dean Craig M. Boise convened a special meeting of the faculty at 12:05 p.m.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

James Flaherty
Dean Boise noted the passing of Professor Emeritus James Flaherty. After giving a brief eulogy, he asked for a moment of silence in memory of Professor Flaherty.

Strategic Priorities Committee
Dean Boise stated that this special meeting was called to revisit Professor Ray’s motion to create a Strategic Priorities Committee, which was tabled at the October 18th faculty meeting so that a brown bag could be held. Since that time a brown bag was held and Professor Ray distributed a revised motion based on the discussion at the brown bag. Dean Boise asked Professor Ray to present his motion. Professor Ray introduced the following motion:

Strategic Priorities Committee: This committee will consist of at least six faculty members, elected by the faculty. There will be at least one Full Professor, one Associate Professor, one Assistant Professor, one Clinical Professor and one Legal Writing Professor on the committee. Faculty members who presently serve in an administrative role are not eligible to serve on this committee. The Chairs of the Budget and Curriculum Committees will serve ex-officio on this committee if not elected as members and if they do not serve in an administrative role.

Mandate. 1. The committee will examine the effects of the 140-plan on student enrollment, the size and structure of the faculty and the Law School’s budget. The committee will examine whether possible future application declines warrant seeking faculty approval for a further reduction in the entering class, the effect of any such reduction on the Law School’s budget and potential cost savings in that budget and other possible revenue sources to offset revenue losses. The committee should consult with the Budget Committee in this process. Any recommendation to reduce next year’s entering class size should be made to the Dean and the Faculty no later than March 1, 2013.

2. The committee will examine whether the Law School should consider other measures, in addition to the 140-plan, to address the issues that Dean Boise raised in his recent State-of-the-Law-School presentation, including the overall decline in Law School applications, the effects of tuition on student debt burden and applications to Cleveland-Marshall, and the bar-passage and job placement prospects of our graduates. The committee will work with the Curriculum Committee and the Bar Passage Committee to consider recommendations to the Dean and the Faculty for addressing these issues.

3. The committee will work with the Faculty Affairs Committee to examine past Law School initiatives that recommended major changes in Law School policies and the role of shared governance in those initiatives, including the Bar Passage Plan, the recent curriculum changes and the 140-plan.

The floor was then opened for discussion.

Professor Lazarus asked who is considered an administrator. Professor Ray stated that he believed that administrators were those with oversight authority in terms of staffing. Dean Boise read a list of administrators who fall within that definition: Dean Boise, Associate Deans Robertson and Sundahl, and Professor Niedringhaus, Broering-Jacobs, Curtis and Heyward. Professor Gelman suggested following the Faculty Senate’s definition, which is to consider anyone whose administrative responsibilities entail more than 50% of his or her time as an administrator. Professor Niedringhaus and Broering-Jacobs each withdrew themselves from consideration. Professor Forte stated that he believes the strength of this faculty is that we have faculty who also administrate. He stated that other than the Dean and two Associate Deans who have the power to create policy, he believes everyone else on the faculty should be eligible to serve on this committee. Professor Sterio suggested adopting a bright line approach and setting a precedent for the future rather than having faculty excuse themselves from consideration.

Professor Forte moved to limit the definition of administrator to the Dean and both Associate Deans only. Professor Becker seconded. The motion passed by a majority of hand votes.

Professor Ray noted that the last sentence of the first paragraph should read: “The Chair of the Curriculum Committee will serve ex-officio on this committee.” Professor Weinstein questioned the rationale for eliminating the chair of the Budget Committee as an ad hoc member. Professor Ray responded that the current Chair of the Budget Committee is the Dean who is an administrator. Dean Boise stated he is more than happy to meet with the committee to discuss budget matters.

Professor Gelman asked whether the last sentence of Mandate 1, stating “recommendations to reduce next year’s entering class size should be made to the Dean and the Faculty no later than March 1, 2013” is an appropriate recommendation. Dean Boise stated that the reduction in class size will depend on applicant data and that March 1st may be premature. He said he is not in favor of lowering entering credentials to fill a class of 140 students. If we do have to go to a smaller class size he will go to the administration and ask for support. He further stated that he believes the administration will honor our three-year budget plan. Professor Ray stated that he anticipated that the committee would look at existing data and suggest various models to the Dean to create a broader discussion. Professor Becker noted that March 1st is a short period of time to gather and analyze data. Professor Heyward suggested using the second seat deposit date as a deadline date. Dean Boise noted that the second seat deposit date is June 15th, which would be too late for faculty discussion. Professor Ray reiterated his point that March 1st was just an arbitrary date by which the faculty would have a full discussion. The idea was not to lock into a particular class size but rather to assess the variables and model possibilities.

Professor Forte suggested moving the date to April 1st because the faculty meets twice in April allowing time for faculty discussion. Professor Gelman stated that his concern is that the decision will be made before March 1st. He stated that according to Greenbook, requirements for admission is a faculty decision. Dean Boise disagreed stating that since this is a budget concern, it is ultimately a Dean’s decision with faculty consultation. Professor Falk suggested leaving the actual date up to the committee.

Professor May moved to move the deadline to “no later than April 1st.” Professor Becker seconded. The motion passed unanimously.
Professor Becker asked that Mandate 1 be corrected to read “Budget Task Force Committee” instead of Budget Committee.

Professor Forte asked what “at least” means in the first sentence of the motion. Professor Becker moved to strike the words “at least” from the first sentence so that it reads: “This committee will consist of six faculty members ...” Professor Ray seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

The faculty then voted on the original motion as amended. Below is the corrected motion:

Strategic Priorities Committee: This committee will consist of at least six faculty members, elected by the faculty. There will be at least one Full Professor, one Associate Professor, one Assistant Professor, one Clinical Professor and one Legal Writing Professor on the committee. Faculty members who presently serve in an administrative role are not eligible to serve on this committee. The Chairs of the Budget and Curriculum Committees will serve ex-officio on this committee if not elected as members and if they do not serve in an administrative role.

Mandate. 1. The committee will examine the effects of the 140-plan on student enrollment, the size and structure of the faculty and the Law School’s budget. The committee will examine whether possible future application declines warrant seeking faculty approval for a further reduction in the entering class, the effect of any such reduction on the Law School’s budget and potential cost savings in that budget and other possible revenue sources to offset revenue losses. The committee should consult with the Budget Task Force Committee in this process. Any recommendation to reduce next year’s entering class size should be made to the Dean and the Faculty no later than March April 1, 2013.

2. The committee will examine whether the Law School should consider other measures, in addition to the 140-plan, to address the issues that Dean Boise raised in his recent State-of-the-Law-School presentation, including the overall decline in Law School applications, the effects of tuition on student debt burden and applications to Cleveland-Marshall, and the bar-passage and job placement prospects of our graduates. The committee will work with the Curriculum Committee and the Bar Passage Committee to consider recommendations to the Dean and the Faculty for addressing these issues.

3. The committee will work with the Faculty Affairs Committee to examine past Law School initiatives that recommended major changes in Law School policies and the role of shared governance in those initiatives, including the Bar Passage Plan, the recent curriculum changes and the 140-plan.

The floor was then opened for nominations. The following faculty members were nominated but declined: Professors Becker, Crocker, Daiker-Middaugh, Garlock, Heyward, Ray, Green, and Kalir.

The following faculty members were nominated and accepted the nomination: Professors Cherry, Falk, Geier, Wilson, Borden, Lazarus, Weinstein, Plecnik, Witmer-Rich, Curtis, Robinson-May, and Kowalski.

It was agreed that a paper ballot would be distributed at a later date with the results being reported via email.

Teaching Schedules
Associate Dean Sundahl stated that he is beginning the scheduling process. Soon he will be sending out an email asking for faculty course preferences. One change from last year is that he will attempt to schedule for the next two years. Although this has been attempted in the past, he believes that scheduling for two years is beneficial for students, especially part-time students. He also noted that the University is moving towards two-year schedules.

Professor Becker asked if the rumor about reducing the number of first-year sections is accurate. Associate Dean Sundahl stated that at this point, he is considering reducing the sections from three to two day sections. The effect of this would be an increase in the average class size from 37 to 50 students. The trade off is that it will free up faculty to teach a specialty course or secure a course release for scholarship.

Several faculty stated that they were in favor of keeping smaller sections because they felt students were more inclined to participate in a smaller group, they could give better feedback, and with the change from two-semester to one-semester courses, there is already a lot of anxiety amongst students.

Adjournment
Dean Boise adjourned the meeting at 12:55 p.m.
MINUTES OF REGULAR FACULTY MEETING OF COLLEGE OF LAW
November 28, 2012
4:00 p.m. – LB 60

ATTENDANCE:

EXCUSED:  Associate Dean Robertson; Professors Davis, Heyward, Hoke, Inniss (LWOP), Mika, O’Neill (PLOA) and Oh

NOT PRESENT:  Professor Geier

Dean Craig M. Boise convened a regular meeting of the faculty at 4:07 p.m..

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Approval of Minutes of October 9, 2012 Faculty Meeting
Professor Falk moved to approve the minutes of the October 9, 2012 faculty meeting as submitted. Professor Broering-Jacobs seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Approval of Minutes of November 19, 2012 Faculty Meeting
Professor Carolyn Broering-Jacobs moved to approve the minutes of the November 19, 2012 faculty meeting as submitted. Professor Borden seconded. The motion passed unanimously.

Dean’s Report
Dean Boise began the meeting by stating that he wanted to discuss what he described as a widely perceived continuing disconnect between himself and the faculty. He noted that he had meet earlier in the day with the Faculty Affairs Committee to discuss this issue and he had an extremely positive and productive meeting. On a personal level he continues to work on how best to communicate his concerns at the administrative level and how best to obtain faculty input, suggestions and guidance regarding his concerns. At the State of the Law School address he laid out his plans to begin a strategic planning process to map out the future course for the law school. When the faculty asked to begin this process earlier, he cooperated by setting up a series of meetings to address the formation of a faculty committee charged with developing strategic priorities. He has also engaged faculty in the development of our website and by scheduling a series of roundtable discussions. However, the Dean noted, this openness needs to be a “two way street.” He stated he senses that the faculty is becoming more divided and he pointed to the faculty’s effort to unionize as an example. He also noted that some faculty have chosen to deal with their concerns by approaching the Editor of the Gavel to make their case and at least one faculty member, Sheldon Gelman, approached a staff member and asked for information to “go after Craig.” Dean Boise said, “Shame on you Sheldon Gelman. Shame on you.” Dean Boise stated that he is concerned about the effects of this subversive underground campaign on our law school. He stated he was concerned about the effect this will have on our students, on our ability to attract prospective students, and on our reputation in the community.

Dean Boise turned to the positive happenings at the law school. He talked about the Great Lakes Sports and Entertainment Law Academy, the solo practice incubator project, and the positive press we are receiving for both of these programs. He singled out several faculty who have been successful and innovative in their teaching and research.

Dean Boise stated that we have the ability to end the bickering and divisiveness and he said it has nothing to do with whether the faculty unionize. It is a question of collegiality. Additionally, we have spent a lot of time building our reputation in the community. It is critical that we pull together to maintain and build on this reputation for our prospective students and employers. We cannot afford to dissolve into negativity. Dean Boise then pledged to better communicate with the faculty and he asked that the faculty join him in that endeavor.

Dean Boise then moved on to the issue of class size for the incoming class of 2013. He said he just received word from the President and the Provost that they want us to bring in an entering class of 140 students next year. Having a clear directive from the administration, Dean Boise announced a Strategic Roundtable on December 4th to discuss admissions and suggestions for how to bring in the best possible class.

Professor Sterio recommended the Dean schedule office hours. Dean Boise thanked Professor Sterio for this idea and stated he would do so. Professor Sagers said he heard Dean Boise speak about C|M|LAW at a public forum and he was very impressed with how well he was received. Professor Crocker stated that having additional scholarship dollars, even an influx on a short-term, emergency basis, will help us in recruiting new students. Dean Boise acknowledged that we are behind in terms of scholarship dollars as compared to the other public law schools in Ohio. He stated that Akron has put a lot of money into scholarships, however, he noted a small percentage of those students retain their scholarships for their entire tenure at the law school. He stated he would have scholarship figures at the Strategic Roundtable on December 4th.

Dean Boise announced that he had met with Patricia Motta, who had originally accepted her appointment as a Clinical Professors effective January 1, 2013. Since that time she was offered a position with her current employer that she felt she could not pass up. Therefore, she has withdrawn her application. This leaves an unfilled faculty position in the Clinic and the question of whether to fill that position or re-arrange responsibilities and relinquish the position toward our $750,000 obligation to the university. Some faculty felt that it was important to start paying down the $750,000 obligation. Others felt that the position should be filled especially in light of the effort to increase experiential learning for our students. Dean Boise explained the process by which the law school fills vacant positions when faculty leave or retire. He also noted that he has proposed to the administration a retirement incentive plan for the next academic year. He is waiting to hear back from the administration.

Associate Dean for Administration

- Following up on last month’s discussion regarding reducing the number of 1L day sections from three to two, Associate Dean Sundahl stated that the general feedback he has received is that it would be best to maintain three day sections and that based on that feedback the Dean directed him to do so to the extent that it is possible. Professor Borden asked what the staffing effect has been from going from a class of 250 students to 140. If we will indeed only have four clinical positions and we are making the strategic decision to emphasize skills, then all faculty should consider themselves subject to helping out with experiential skills courses. Professor Broering-Jacobs stated that after legal writing lost Jamie Bouvier’s position and with the shifting numbers, the first year section size is about 35 students per faculty member. Most upper level writing courses are now taught by adjuncts. Professor Borden asked if we are in compliance with ABA standards. Associate Dean Sundahl stated that after analyzing the data he has determined that we are indeed in compliance with the AALS standards which means that 2/3 of all credit hours are taught by full-time professors.

- Once again we will use outside proctors for exams. Proctors go through an intensive training process.

- On November 16th Associate Dean Sundahl attended a program in Columbus, Ohio hosted by the Task Force on Professionalism under the auspices of the Ohio Supreme Court. He was proud to listen to Professor Lazarus speak about professionalism in our curriculum and various initiatives at C|M|LAW.

Nomination of Representative and Alternate Representative to AALS House of Representatives
Dean Boise asked for nominations to the Association of American Law Schools House of Representatives. According to the AALS Bylaws, “The Faculty of each member school shall select the individual who is to represent the school in the House of Representatives and an alternate representative to serve in the absence of the regular representative.” Dean Boise and Professors Lewis and Borden were all nominated. Professor Lewis declined her nomination. Dean Boise agreed to serve as the representative and Professor Borden agreed to serve as alternate. Both nominations passed by acclamation.

Nomination of Representative to the University Personnel
Professor Falk explained that the law school needs to elect an ex-officio member to the University Personnel Committee. The representative must be a tenured member holding the rank of Professor, and this person may not have served on the subcommittee of any candidate or as PAC chair. The faculty member elected by the law school faculty will serve a two-year term.

The function of the UPC is to study dossiers and make recommendations to the Provost where the PAC and the Dean have made conflicting recommendations. In our case both the PAC and the Dean have given the candidates applying for promotion and tenure favorable recommendations. The Provost, however, may solicit the UPC for consideration and recommendation.

Professors Becker, Forte, Gard and Geier all received nominations to fill this position. Professor Forte declined the nomination. Professor Geier was not present to accept or decline the nomination.

It was determined that a paper ballot would be distributed with the three candidates’ names: Susan Becker, Stephen Gard and Deborah Geier. If the top vote getter was Professor Geier, Professor Falk would ask her if she wanted to accept the position. If not, then the next highest vote getter would receive the nomination.

Professor Geier received the highest number of votes. After the meeting, Professor Geier agreed to be the law school’s representative to the University Personnel Committee.

Self-Study Committee Update
Professor Crocker, Chair of the Self-Study Committee reported that a full draft of the Self-Study will be sent to the faculty next week. The Committee anticipates voting on approval of the report at the December 13th faculty meeting. At that same meeting, the Committee would like to have a discussion regarding identifying the top strengths and weaknesses. She thanked the committee members for their hard work.
Unionization
Professor Crocker suggested the faculty meet to discuss the unionization issue. She also suggested that an independent labor law attorney be invited to answer any questions. Questions could be submitted ahead of time in written form to preserve anonymity. It was agreed to hold this meeting on Thursday, December 6th at 12:15 p.m. in LB 60.

Professor Garlock stated that as he understands the procedure, once the SERB Request for Recognition notice has been posted the only question is whether CSU will object to recognition. While it is fine to discuss the merits, he questioned what more can be done at this point. Professor Curtis noted that individual faculty who have been excluded can file an objection. Professor Gelman said that of the proposed unit of 32 members, 21 people signed union cards. He further stated that the process was followed according to the statute and that no one asked for any meeting and no procedural consideration was denied.

Professor Weinstein said he considered this the most significant decision the faculty has made in the past two decades since he has been here. Essentially, if the university does not object, we are unionized. He further said that he was told there would be an opportunity to consider whether we unionize. Had he known that was not the case, he would have taken more action. Several other faculty stated they too believed it was a preliminary step and not a final vote when they signed the union card. Professor Ray stated that he is sympathetic to views about consultation and process, however this is a legal issue. You have a right to collectively bargain. It is not a faculty’s right. Further, faculty shouldn’t view the process as flawed because the law doesn’t require openness. It is important to understand that shared governance is different from individual choice. It is a legally defined majoritarian process.

Dean Boise stated that regardless of how this comes out we must all work together. He called for cohesiveness. We have students to teach and a reputation to uphold.

Faculty Affairs Committee – Susan Becker
Professor Becker began by stating that the Faculty Affairs Committee and Dean Boise had a very candid conversation earlier in the day. She believes that they now have a much better understanding of each other. She further stated that she is proud of this institution and when we all work together we will come out of this experience much stronger.

Professor Becker explained that the Provost created a University Task Force Committee charged with developing specific criteria to assure university-wide application of standards for granting promotion and tenure. Professor Buckley served as the law school representative on this committee until his retirement. After receiving the final report of the Task Force, the Provost made some minor revisions and then directed all Deans with implementing these recommendations. The directives are divided into four categories:

1. Standards and Procedures for Student Evaluation of Instruction
2. Standards and Procedures for Peer Evaluation of Instruction
3. Standards and Procedures for Obtaining External Reviews of Scholarship
4. Standards and Procedures for Departmental Tenure and Promotion Guidelines

Dean Boise charged the Faculty Affairs Committee with looking at these directives and proposing methods for implementation. The Faculty Affairs Committee found that we already follow most of these procedures. However, for the procedures that we do need to revise, the Faculty Affairs Committee proposed several motions.

The first motion is in response to category 1 – Standards and Procedures for Student Evaluation of Instruction (SEI), recommendation 8. The Task Force recommendation stated that “The Student Evaluation of Instruction process should be institutionalized and centralized.” Professor Kerber, on behalf of the Faculty Appointments Committee moved that the Associate Dean for Administration serve as Coordinator of SEI Activities and further that they be responsible for reporting to UFAC on content issues and questions in order to comply with the CSU Task Force Committee recommendations. Professor Borden seconded the motion. The motion passed unanimously.

The next motion was also in response to category 1 – Standards and Procedures for Student Evaluation of Instruction, recommendation 9. The Task Force recommended that “Current materials (sheets of questions and the green or blue test forms) should be replaced with a scannable score sheet.” Professor Kerber, on behalf of the Faculty Appointments Committee, moved to maintain the current SEI sheet, which is scannable with open questions on the back side and to slightly modify the Faculty Instructions distributed with the course evaluations forms. (A copy of the revised Faculty Instructions is attached to these minutes.) After a short discussion, Professor Kerber modified her motion to change the text of Guideline 1 in the Faculty Instructions to read: “The law faculty unanimously voted to make course evaluations and the use of the forms mandatory of all faculty members. You must use the enclosed forms, although you may supplement them with your own survey.” Also the form should remove the words “The Teaching Committee” from the bottom. Professor Niedringhaus seconded the motion with the revisions proposed by the faculty. The motion passed unanimously.

Due to the late hour, the remainder of the Faculty Affairs Committee motions will be addressed at the next faculty meeting.

BarBri Outlines for Core Courses
Due to the lack of time, this agenda item will be addressed at the next faculty meeting.
Adjournment
Professor Falk moved to adjourn the faculty meeting. Professor Curtis seconded. The meeting adjourned at 5:58 p.m.
ATTENDANCE:

PRESENT: Dean Boise; Associate Deans Robertson and Sundahl; Professors Becker, Borden, Broering-Jacobs, Crocker, Curtis, Daiker-Middaugh, Falk, Forte, Gard, Garlock, Geier, Gelman, Glassman, Heyward, Kalir, Kowalski, Lazarus, Lewis, Majette, May, Mika, Niedringhaus, Plecnik, Ray, Sagers, Sterio, Weinstein and Witmer-Rich; Self-Study Committee members Jennifer Blaga and Christopher Lucak

EXCUSED: Professors Cherry, Davis, Green, Hoke, Inniss (LWOP), Kerber, O’Neill (PLOA), Oh and Wilson

NOT PRESENT: None

Dean Craig M. Boise convened a regular meeting of the faculty at 2:00 p.m.

The agenda is attached as Appendix I to these minutes.

Approval of Minutes of November 29, 2012 Faculty Meeting

Prior to the faculty meeting, Professor Gelman sent an email requesting that the minutes under the Dean’s Report section be changed from: “He also noted that some faculty have chosen to deal with their concerns by approaching the Editor of the Gavel to make their case and at least one faculty member (who the Dean named) approached a staff member and asked for information to ‘go after Craig.’ Dean Boise said the faculty member should be ashamed of having made such a comment to a staff member” to the following. “He also noted that some faculty have chosen to deal with their concerns by approaching the Editor of the Gavel to make their case and at least one faculty member, Sheldon Gelman, approached a staff member and asked for information to ‘go after Craig.’ Dean Boise said, ‘Shame on you Sheldon Gelman. Shame on you.’” Also prior to the faculty meeting, Professor Weinstein sent an email requesting that the minutes be changed in the same section from “He further said that he felt pressured to sign the union card and was told there would be an opportunity to consider whether we unionize” to “He further said that he was told there would be an opportunity to consider whether we unionize.” Both changes were made to the minutes prior to the faculty meeting.

Professor Forte moved to approve the minutes as submitted. Professor Becker seconded.

Professor May stated that on page 5 of the minutes under the discussion about Unionization, there is a statement that reads “Several other faculty stated they too believed it was a preliminary step and not a final vote when they signed the union card.” She said she did not recall faculty specifying that they actually signed a card under this impression. She therefore suggested that the minutes be revised to read: “Several other faculty stated they too believed that if they signed the union card, it would be a preliminary step and not a final vote.”

Professor Crocker asked that the last line of the first bullet point under the Associate Dean for Administration’s report be changed from “Associate Dean Sundahl stated that after analyzing the data he has determined that we are indeed in compliance with the standards which means that 2/3 of all credit hours are taught by full-time professors” to “Associate Dean Sundahl stated that after analyzing the data he has determined that we are indeed in compliance with the AALS standards.”

Professor Forte accepted both amendments to the minutes and moved to approve the minutes as revised. Associate Dean Sundahl abstained from voting because he was not present during the portion of the meeting that was revised. The motion passed unanimously.

Self-Study Committee Update
Professor Phyllis Crocker, Chair of the Self-Study Committee began by identifying the members of her committee and thanking them for their hard work. She noted that there will be some additional changes to the Self-Study report before it goes to the ABA such as Patricia Motta’s decision to decline the clinical position, Professor Niedringhaus’ leaving to accept new position, the unionization situation, etc.

Professor Garlock asked if a friendly amendment to the report is still acceptable. He suggested that under Section III, Program of Legal Education, Strengths, #3 should be expanded to read, “Our redesigned first-year curriculum recognizes the importance of legislative and administrative law, while continuing to recognize the importance of a thorough grounding in core, common law subjects.” Professor Crocker accepted the change and said she would make the revision. Professor Majette asked that her areas of expertise be corrected in the Health Law section of the report. Professor Crocker accepted that change as well.
Professor Crocker than moved, on behalf of the Self-Study Committee, to approve the Self-Study document including the strengths and weaknesses. The motion passed unanimously.

Dean Boise thanked the Self-Study Committee for their hard work and in particular Professor Crocker for shepherding this process. Professor Crocker then noted that the chair of the Site Team, Dean John Hutson, will be coming to C|M|LAW for a pre-visit in January. He will be meeting with alumni, administrators and students. There will be an opportunity for faculty to meet with Dean Hutson on January 15th at 3:00 p.m. for a coffee hour. He is also scheduled to meet with the Faculty Affairs Committee at 4:15 p.m. on that same day.

Dean Boise stated that he would send out a list of the members of the site team next week. He noted that Dean Hutson specifically requested that faculty not contact any of the site team members.

Faculty Affairs Committee
At the November 28, 2012 faculty meeting, the Faculty Affairs Committee (hereinafter “FAC”) presented motions to bring the law school in compliance with the Provost’s directives to implement the University Task Force on the Application of Promotion and Tenure Standards and Processes. Professor Becker reminded the faculty that the Provost’s directives were divided into four categories:

5. Standards and Procedures for Student Evaluation of Instruction
6. Standards and Procedures for Peer Evaluation of Instruction
7. Standards and Procedures for Obtaining External Reviews of Scholarship
8. Standards and Procedures for Departmental Tenure and Promotion Guidelines

The faculty approved motions to bring us in compliance with category 1: Standards and Procedures for Student Evaluation of Instruction, at the last faculty meeting. The next directive addressed was category 4: Standards and Procedures for Departmental Tenure and Promotion Guidelines. According to the FAC, we are in compliance with all but one recommendation – “There needs to be a mechanism in place for periodic review and updating of these documents, given that performance standards and the types of evidence that measure these standards do change over time. We suggest that this mechanism be activated from the Provost’s office and be applied university-wide to all academic units. Every five years may be the right interval.” The committee proposed the following motion to bring us into compliance:

_Cleveland-Marshall Procedures and Criteria for Promotion and Tenure (PCPT) as amended in 2009 and as supplemented by Procedures for Mentoring and Evaluation of Faculty in the Years Preceding Application for Personnel Action and by Criteria and Procedures for the Appointment of Tenured Faculty shall be referred to the Faculty Affairs Committee_ every five years for review, starting in the spring semester of 2013. The FAC will consult with tenured and tenure-track faculty about possible revisions and recommend all proposed amendments for a faculty vote. This five-year review process does not preclude faculty from amending any of the procedures or criteria contained in these materials at other times.

The motion passed unanimously. After the motion passed it was agreed that the Criteria, Standards, and Procedures for the Appointment of Non-Tenure-Track Clinical and Legal Writing Professors shall be referred to the Faculty Affairs Committee every five years for review, starting in the spring semester of 2014.

The next directive to be addressed was 2. Standards and Procedures for Peer Evaluation of Instruction. The Provost’s directive accompanying the Task Force Recommendations asks deans “to work with faculty to develop and disseminate consistent peer evaluations policies.” The Provost further directs that “to the degree that they are applicable, the Task Force Recommendations 1-4 on Peer Evaluations should be explicitly and fully incorporated into each department’s written policies and procedures. Whenever possible, peer evaluations should be done by tenured faculty with multiple evaluators. Deans are charged with ensuring that these policies are in place by the end of Fall 2012, so that they can be implemented by departments conducting evaluations in the Spring 2013.”

The FAC noted that we have never created a form or specific criteria for faculty evaluations. They felt that having a uniform form would be helpful for both the evaluator and the evaluatee. The FAC created a Peer Teaching Evaluations Form, which is included in the agenda packet. The form includes items that need to be addressed when considering promotion and tenure and it includes the Provost’s directives. Since this form has not been considered by the entire faculty, the FAC put forth three options: Option A – refer to the Teaching Committee for consideration developing a standard peer teaching evaluation form. This would then be brought to the faculty for consideration no later than the March 2013 faculty meeting; Option B – adopt the Peer Teaching Evaluation form as presented; or Option C – adopt the Peer Teaching Evaluation form as presented for use during the Spring 2013 term and refer the matter to the Teaching Committee for further evaluation and potential modification. This would then be brought to the faculty for consideration no later than the March 2013 faculty meeting. After a short discussion, Professor Becker, on behalf of the FAC, put forth the following motion:

_The faculty adopts the Peer Teaching Evaluation form presented at pp. 7-8 of the Faculty Affairs Committee’s memo of 11-27-12 for use during the spring semester 2013 and refers the matter to the Teaching Committee for further evaluation and potential modifications to or substitution of_
The motion passed unanimously.

The Provost’s directives also stated that a pre-observation and post-observation meeting of the instructor and observer should be scheduled and held. The FAC put forth the following motion in order to comply:

The Teaching Committee shall consider the procedural issues related to pre- and post-evaluation meetings between the evaluation and the person being evaluated pursuant to Pt. 4(c) and (d) of the Provost’s Category II: FAC Recommendation re Peer Evaluation of Instruction during the spring 2013 semester. The Teaching Committee shall present a recommendation to Faculty regarding possible amendments to CM’s “Procedures for Mentoring and Evaluation of Faculty in the Years Preceding Application for Personnel Action” (which supplement Cleveland-Marshall Procedures and Criteria for Promotion and Tenure) no later than the March faculty meeting to comply with the Provost’s mandates.

The motion passed unanimously.

Joan Baker Eulogy
Professor Becker gave a moving eulogy of Professor Emerita Joan Baker. She announced that a memorial service for Professor Baker would be held at the law school sometime after the winter break. Dean Boise then asked that the faculty join him in observing a moment of silence in memory of Professor Baker.

The final directive from the Provost was 3. Standards and Procedures for Obtaining External Reviews of Scholarship. Professor Witmer-Rich introduced the FAC’s motions related to this directive. He stated that in most respects, our Procedures and Criteria for Promotion and Tenure meet or exceed the recommendations of the Task Force and those of the Provost. However, there are two differences regarding reviewer impartiality and the number of external reviewers.

Currently the C|M|LAW standard regarding reviewer impartiality calls for full disclosure, “The candidate should disclose any relationship with any proposed evaluator.” (Procedure §21) The Task Force recommends the following:

“The reviewer:
  o Cannot have been a co-author or collaborator on any project with the candidate;
o Cannot have been a mentor or professor in any institution during the time the candidate received a degree or other form of professional training;
o Cannot be someone in a position to receive some advantage or benefit beyond the honorarium based on the outcome of the candidate’s review.
• Evidence of arm’s-length impartiality requires a written statement of such from the reviewer within his/her review letter and from the candidate during the process of developing the list of potential reviewers.
• Candidates should refrain from any direct or indirect contact with a potential external reviewer.”

The FAC recommends that the Dean seek permission from the Provost to vary our standards to read:
“The reviewer:
  o Cannot have been a co-author or collaborator on any project with the candidate;
  o Cannot have been a mentor or professor in any institution during the time the candidate received a degree or other form of professional training;
  o Cannot be someone in a position to receive some advantage or benefit beyond the honorarium based on the outcome of the candidate’s review during the review period.
• Evidence of arm’s-length impartiality requires a written statement of such from the reviewer within his/her review letter and from the candidate during the process of developing the list of potential reviewers.
• Candidates should refrain from any direct or indirect contact with a potential external reviewer.”

Professor Niedringhaus asked for clarification regarding what the “review period” entails? Professor Weinstein suggested a bright line rule that starts the prohibition at the time an individual formally seeks promotion or tenure and ends after the external review has been received. Professor Sterio stated that if you are working on an ongoing project with someone, i.e., perhaps on a panel for a conference, that is a long time.
Associate Dean Sundahl agreed stating that not being able to contact a roster of experts in his field would be very difficult for him. Several other suggestions were made to the motion.

The faculty agreed to vote on the following motion and, if approved, request the Dean present the proposal to the Provost and request a variance:

  The reviewer:
  • Cannot have been a co-author or collaborator on any project with the candidate
  • Cannot have been a mentor or professor of the candidate in any institution during the time the candidate received a degree or other form of professional training from that institution
• Cannot be someone in a position to receive some advantage or benefit beyond the honorarium based on the outcome of the candidate’s review
• Evidence of arm’s-length impartiality requires a written statement of such from the reviewer within his/her review letter and from the candidate during the process of developing the list of potential reviewers
• Candidates should refrain from any direct or indirect contact regarding the review process with a potential external reviewer during the review period from the time of the candidate’s application to the Dean for promotion or tenure until the reviewer has submitted the review.

The motion passed unanimously.

Professor Witmer-Rich then moved to the second variation between C|M|LAW practices and the Provost’s directives - the number of external reviewers. The Provost’s directive states “The PRCs are expected to obtain at least five evaluations from external reviewers. In the event that this is not possible, the PRCs will seek approval from the Provost’s Office for soliciting a minimum of three reviews. The College of Law will seek approval from the Provost’s Office by the end of Fall semester 2012 for a higher number of minimum and maximum external evaluations than those recommended by the Task Force, the recommendation will be consistent with national practices and include the rationale.” Currently the C|M|LAW standards provide: “At a minimum, the Subcommittee should attempt to select at least twice as many evaluators as there are publications to be evaluated. However, whether an evaluator should be asked to read all of the publications, or only one or more of them, should be determined by the Subcommittee.” Procedures §21.

The FAC recommended that the law school add the following sentence to Procedure §21 to make it clear that five external reviewers is the minimum. The sentence would read: “At a minimum, the Subcommittee should attempt to select at least twice as many evaluators as there are publications to be evaluated, and in no event fewer than five evaluators.” Regarding the maximum number of reviewers, the FAC recommends not having a maximum. The FAC recommends asking the Dean to seek a variance from the Provost to have no maximum number of external reviews.

Professor Sterio asked if we must choose a maximum number of reviewers, who would decide which letters to omit from consideration. Professor Falk noted that our rule has always been that if we solicit a review that it has to become part of the file. Dean Boise stated that he would seek a variance from the Provost and strongly advocate for not having a maximum number of reviewers.

The faculty agreed to vote on the following revision to § 21 and, if approved, request the Dean present the proposal to the Provost and request a variance on the maximum number of reviewers:
At a minimum, the Subcommittee should attempt to select at least twice as many evaluators as there are publications to be evaluated, and in no event fewer than five evaluators. However, whether an evaluator should be asked to read all of the publications, or only one or more of them, should be determined by the Subcommittee.

The motion passed unanimously.

Curriculum Committee
Professor Witmer-Rich, Chair of the Curriculum Committee, explained that in 2011, the Ad Hoc Committee on Curriculum Review proposed and the faculty approved the following “The [Ad Hoc] committee proposes that our skills requirement be strengthened in two ways. First, we propose redefining the criteria so that only courses offering students an experiential approach to skills development satisfy this requirement. Second, we propose that students not be allowed to “double dip” requirements by automatically satisfying their skills requirement by taking any required 3rd semester Legal Writing course (except Scholarly Writing, which does not qualify as a skills requirement). (Memo of the Ad Hoc Curriculum Committee, p. 20.).” The faculty then charged the Curriculum Committee with drafting a revised standard in line with the Ad Hoc Committee’s report. The Curriculum Committee drafted the Experiential Skills Course Requirement (hereinafter ESCR), which the faculty approved in the spring of 2012. The new requirement applies to the incoming 2012 class, meaning current 1Ls will need to satisfy the new ESCR standard in their upper-class coursework.

The faculty then charged the Curriculum Committee with evaluating which courses satisfy this requirement. The Committee began by asking each faculty member to identify courses that they felt satisfied the ESCR standard. The Committee then discussed how the new standard should be applied. The sense of the committee was to make the existing skills course requirement substantially more robust. As the Committee began applying the ESCR standard to the list of potential courses, it became apparent that an application of the plain meaning of the terms in the new ESCR standard might result in approval of the exact same (or nearly the same) list of courses under the new standard as were approved under the old standard. The Committee discussed three options: 1. Apply the standard in some “heightened” manner; 2. Apply the standard without any “heightened” interpretation; or 3. Propose that the faculty adopt a new standard. Given the need to approve courses satisfying this requirement for students to enrolling starting next fall, the Committee decided to approve a list of courses under the existing standard.

The courses approved by the Committee are: Externships, all Clinics, Moot Court I and II, Trial Advocacy and Trial Advocacy Team, and Legal Drafting: Special Topics: Patent Preparation and Prosecution (L798). Professor Witmer-Rich, on behalf of the Curriculum Committee, moved to approve this list of courses to satisfy the Experiential Skills Course Requirement.
Professor Geier asked if this limited list is approved will there be enough room for all students to satisfy their ESCR requirement. Dean Boise responded that yes there is. He also noted that it would encourage students to enroll in externships. Professor Heyward stated that the clinics could accommodate 50 or more students each semester and 80 students in externships. Professor Witmer-Rich asked about how part-time/evening students would be able to fulfill this requirement. Dean Boise noted that would have to be addressed.

Dean Boise then said that in considering the capacity of the clinics, faculty should be aware that he has decided to fill the clinical position which Patricia Motta vacated. The search will reopen and the search committee will reconvene next semester.

Professor Curtis pointed out that students must try out for both the Moot Court teams and Trial Advocacy teams. Professor Lewis asked how those students who do not have a minimum 2.5 GPA would be eligible for an externship.

Professor Crocker asked what standard was used to approve courses. Professor Niedringhaus stated that there was disagreement among the committee members regarding how the standards were to be applied. Professor Witmer-Rich noted that due to time constraints, after significant discussion the committee needed to vote. The classes with the majority of votes are in the list presented today.

Professor Kowalski stated that real life experiences, representing clients or being in a law office dealing with attorneys is very valuable. Professor Curtis agreed, stating that she believes in simulation courses but they are not the same as experiential, true client contact or even working with an attorney. Dean Boise agreed and stated that requiring an externship or clinic experience would put us in the forefront of U.S. law schools.

Professor Ray said that although he likes the idea of externships, the question of how to work these into the night program and what to do with those below a 2.5 GPA still needs to be addressed.

Professor Broering-Jacob recommended following the third option considered by the committee: proposing a new standard. Professor Crocker proposed returning this to the Curriculum Committee because under ABA standards we cannot give part-time students an experience that is less than full-time students. Dean Boise asked if there was consensus to send this back to the Curriculum Committee? Professor Geier suggested that if this does go back to the committee that the committee should state that although simulation courses have value, only experiential classes (clinics and externships) would satisfy the ESCR.

The sense of the faculty was to require all students to participate in a clinic or externship and to have the Curriculum Committee consider how best to require part-time students and those with GPAs below 2.5 to participate. The Committee should then report back to the faculty by April in time for spring registration.

Associate Dean Robertson noted that this is not what the faculty voted on when it passed curriculum reform. If that is now what the faculty wants, then they need to pass a different curriculum reform. Professor Lewis stated that what is now proposed is beyond the scope of the Curriculum Committee. Dean Boise stated that the faculty could override the previously approved curricular reform by its action on this proposal.

At that point the faculty voted to have the Curriculum Committee develop a proposal under which clinics and externships would be required in order to satisfy the ESCR. Such proposal should address how to provide externships or clinics for part-time students and students having a GPA below 2.5.

The motion passed unanimously.

Dean’s Report
Dean Boise read the names of 22 J.D. candidates and 2 LL.M. candidates for graduation. (See list attached to these minutes.) Professor Curtis moved to accept the list of graduates, subject to confirmation of their completion of all requirements. Professor Borden seconded the motion. The motion passed unanimously.

In the interest of time, Dean Boise said he would save the rest of his report for the January faculty meeting.

Associate Dean for Administration
- An email with the grade deadlines was sent out earlier this week. Please turn in your grades by the established deadlines.
- Two new adjuncts have been hired for spring semester. Scott Bratton will be teaching Asylum Law and Glenn Krassen will be teaching Oil and Gas Law.
- As part of this year’s Great Lakes Sports and Entertainment Law Academy we will be piloting a remote learning class. Dean Sundahl is meeting with the IT people to work out the details. The end goal is to allow students all over the world the ability to log on and participate in this program.
- New Associates at Benesch will be holding a voir dire exhibition on February 14th at 8:00 a.m. in the trial courtroom. C|M|LAW law students will be portraying the jurors. So far 20 students have volunteered to participate.
- Please give your teaching preferences to Dean Sundahl by the end of next week.

Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment
- Working on putting together names, dates, and speaker bios for future programs by early summer so that we can properly promote these events.
Working with faculty on utilizing iPads in the classroom. There has been one training session and one brainstorming meeting. If you would like to participate in an upcoming webinar, please let Associate Dean Robertson know and she will send you the link.

The Cleveland-Marshall Fund Committee will be seeking recommendations for a visitor for next year. They would like the visitor to stay for 2-3 days.

If you have an abstract, draft or newly published paper that you would like posted on SSRN, please contact Associate Dean Robertson. Also, if you have anything for the faculty blog, please let her know that as well.

BarBri Outlines for Core Courses
In the interest of time, Professor Garlock suggested moving this item to the January agenda.

Graduate Council Faculty Representative Replacement for Brian Ray
Dean Boise asked for nominations to replace Professor Ray as the law school Graduate Council Faculty Representative for spring semester. (Professor Ray will be on leave during the spring semester.) Professor Plecnik was nominated. Professor Forte moved to close nominations. Professor Plecnik was chosen by unanimous vote to serve as the Graduate Council Faculty Representative for the spring semester.

Dean Boise also asked for nominations to replace Professor Sterio as a member of the Faculty Affairs Committee for the spring semester. Professor Sterio resigned her position because she will be on leave spring, 2013. Professor Lewis nominated Professor Green. A motion to close nominations was accepted. Since Professor Green was not present to accept the nomination, it was determined that the faculty would vote on his nomination and, if approved, he would be contacted as to whether he wanted to accept. The faculty voted unanimously to approve Professor Green’s nomination to the Faculty Affairs Committee for the spring semester.

Law Library
Professor Niedringhaus, Director of the Law Library, distributed a list of law review subscriptions indicating which have been canceled for budgetary reasons. (See list attached to these minutes.) The total savings is just over $42,000. After a short discussion, Professor Niedringhaus invited any faculty with further questions or comments to see her.

Adjournment
The meeting adjourned at 4:01 p.m. and moved into Executive Session.
8.1.3 Academic Freedom

Cleveland State University subscribes to the 1940 "Statement of Principles on Academic Freedom and Tenure" of the American Association of University Professors and the Association of American Colleges (as shown in Attachment A, 8.1.12).

A) The Right to Demonstrate and Protest on University Property

It is recognized that free speech is essential in a democratic society. As individuals or as groups, the faculty are permitted to demonstrate and protest on University property in opposition to University, city, state, national, or international policy provided they do not violate any applicable local, state or federal law, or, in the case of members of the bargaining unit, provisions of the Agreement between CSU and the CSU-AAUP Chapter, and no acts are performed that (1) cause damage to property (personal University); (2) cause physical injury to any individual; (3) prevent any student from attending class, entering or leaving any University facility, or attending any special program on University property; (4) prevent administrative officers, faculty, students, employees, or invited guests of the University from performing duties they are authorized to perform; (5) block the normal business of the University, particularly classroom or laboratory instruction; and (6) block pedestrian or vehicular traffic.

Faculty members are subject to the limitations imputed by law in the exercise of their rights of freedom of speech, protest, and demonstration in support of or opposition to public or University policy. Some of these limitations are set forth in Attachment D (8.1.15) appended hereto.

1) Institutional Due Process. As a principle, the University will operate in such a way that faculty enjoy freedom from arbitrary or discriminatory treatment. Each Dean or faculty body, as appropriate, shall establish reasonable criteria and fair procedures pursuant to which decisions significantly affecting faculty, including the assignment of courses, the scheduling of classes, the participation in summer quarter instructional programs, and the award of promotional and annual salary increments, shall be made.
College of Law Clinical Professor Positions at Cleveland State University – Non-tenure track

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law (CM|LAW) invites applications for two clinical professor positions to begin in the 2012-2013 academic year. The clinical professors will be non-tenure-track full-time members of the law faculty on 11-month contracts with full benefits and will be eligible for a long-term contract after five years. CM|LAW strives to be a model of experiential education by offering a broad array of experiential learning opportunities in a variety of practice areas for our students. In furtherance of this goal, we seek clinical professors with an entrepreneurial spirit who will actively grow our experiential learning curriculum. The clinical professors will be responsible for providing experiential learning opportunities, or “engagement experiences,” designed to prepare our students to enter the legal marketplace with the skills and knowledge needed to make them successful lawyers committed to excellence and ethical practice. In this role, the clinical professors will (1) develop and oversee a variety of external engagement experiences supervised by adjunct faculty or on-site attorneys, (2) develop and teach a skills course to prepare students for their engagement experiences, and (3) directly supervise students in the representation of clients. We seek to fill one position with a transactional lawyer and the other with an experienced litigator.

Minimum qualifications: Candidates must be admitted or be eligible for admission to the Ohio bar.

Preferred qualifications: Candidates should have a strong academic record and significant transactional or litigation experience (5 years or more); ability to manage and supervise other attorneys; teaching experience and knowledge of pedagogical methods; familiarity with the Cleveland bar; strong interpersonal skills; and strong communication and writing skills.

To apply, candidates should submit the following items in pdf format by email to Rosa DelVecchio at rosa.delvecchio@law.csuohio.edu: a resume, a list of three references, and a cover letter addressed to Mark J. Sundahl, Chair of Hiring Committee. Candidates should indicate in their cover letter whether they are applying for the transactional or the litigation position. The search committee will begin to review applications on January 9, 2012 and the positions will remain open until filled. Hiring is contingent on maintaining existing levels of funding from the state.

Cleveland State University is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action employer. Women and minorities are especially encouraged to apply. All applicants will receive equal consideration for employment without regard to race, color, national origin, religion, sex, pregnancy, marital status, sexual orientation, gender identity, age, physical or mental disability, or covered veteran status.
THE CLEVELAND-MARSHALL COLLEGE OF LAW, CLEVELAND STATE UNIVERSITY, invites applications for two tenure-track faculty positions. Applicants must have a J.D. degree or its equivalent, a distinguished academic record, and a potential for significant scholarly achievement. Our principal curricular needs include health law, criminal law and criminal procedure, tax, and business law, but we encourage all qualified candidates to apply. In furtherance of our institutional commitment to a diverse faculty, we particularly welcome applications from women and minorities. Cleveland State University is an equal opportunity employer. We have successfully implemented a comprehensive plan to make the law school student body smaller and stronger, so the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law is a dynamic place to teach and write. Cleveland possesses world-class cultural amenities, such as the Cleveland Orchestra, the Cleveland Museum of Art, and the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame and Museum, and it has major league basketball, baseball, and football teams. With reasonable real estate prices and an excellent quality of life, Cleveland is a great place to live. Contact: Please promptly submit letters of interest, resumes (including the names and addresses of at least three references), and a statement describing your scholarly research agenda to Professor Kevin O’Neill, Chair, Faculty Appointments Committee, Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, 2121 Euclid Avenue, LB138, Cleveland, OH 44115. These positions will remain open until filled. These positions are contingent on continuous levels of funding from the State of Ohio.
8.1.2 Standards and Procedure for Faculty Appointments, Continuation, Promotion and Tenure (Non-Bargaining Unit Members Only)

Recommendations for appointments and promotion shall be made to the President and thence to the Board of Trustees pursuant to the procedures set forth in Sections 8.1.2(D)(1-2) and shall be accompanied by the academic and personal qualifications of nominees, as stipulated in Section 8.1.2(A)(1-6), including relevant biographical data, evidence of academic degrees and honors, a statement of publications and other professional achievements, and letters or memoranda evidencing recommendations from at least three responsible academic or professional sources.

A) Qualifications for Academic Rank

Appointment to the faculty shall be on the basis of merit and without regard to race, color, religion, sex, or national or ethnic origin. In addition to requirements of formal education, the relevant standards are teaching ability, creative achievement, professional service, and professional ethics and academic responsibility.

1) Standards of Professional Merit

1.a) Teaching. The highest standards are comprehensive knowledge of the field of study, thorough preparation, intense interest in students as well as sensitivity to student interest, open-mindedness, independence and integrity, and above all, intellectual enthusiasm that is transmitted to students.

1.b) Creative Achievement. The standard of scholarship requires a working commitment to inquiry and research and to creative achievement. The University obligation for the generation of new knowledge and practices imposes a responsibility for creativity, whether in inquiry and investigation, writing, design and production, or in the performing and fine arts. In the best of scholars and the best of teachers, creative inquiry is joined with effective classroom teaching.

1.c) Professional Service. A University faculty member is "a citizen, a member of a learned profession, and an officer of an educational institution."* After a period of personal growth in which she or he is encouraged to develop abilities as a teacher and creative scholar, a faculty member may properly be expected to assume increased responsibility, in keeping with his or her professional interest, for the government of the University, the standards of his or her discipline, and the welfare of the civic community.

1.d) Professional Ethics and Academic Responsibility. Commitment to acceptable professional ethics and academic responsibility shall be a relevant consideration in appointments and promotion. Attachment C provides a statement that may be used as a standard to the extent that it is not in conflict with University policies.

2) The evaluation of faculty members shall be based upon the standards of professional merit and the standards of academic rank set forth in Sections 8.1.2(A)(1) and 8.1.2(A)(3) and 8.1.2(A)(4) of these policies. The Chairpersons shall annually attempt to reach agreement with each faculty member concerning goals based on these standards. If a goals statement is developed, it will serve at least in part as the basis for evaluation of the faculty member for promotion and tenure. Any agreement on goals between the Chairperson and a faculty member will be communicated in writing promptly to the faculty member and to the members of the Personnel Action Committee responsible for the evaluation of the faculty member for promotion or tenure.

3) Possession of an earned doctorate in the discipline or a cognate field of study is required for all appointments above the rank of instructor except as specified herein.

3.a) When the doctorate is not the recognized standard of attainment in a discipline or field of study, the Faculty Affairs Committee, upon petition from the appropriate Chair and/or Dean, may determine that a field is atypical. In fields in which the Master's Degree is the terminal degree, appointment to the rank of assistant professor shall follow a period of several years of professional experience in the field.

3.b) In rare cases, when there is a shortage of appropriate candidates in a given field, evidence may be submitted by the Dean of the College to the University Faculty Affairs Committee requesting a temporary exception for the discipline or field of study. If the University Faculty Affairs Committee is convinced of the need, a field may be exempted for a period not to exceed three years. At the end of the specified period, the Dean may request a renewal of the exception for a further limited period.
3.c) An exception to the requirement for the earned doctorate may be made in cases of outstanding intellectual leadership in the field.

3.d) An exception to the requirement for the earned doctorate may be made in cases where there is extensive publication in refereed journals or of scholarly books that are deemed to be equivalent to an earned doctorate.

With respect to all such appointments made in the absence of an earned doctorate, at the time of initial appointment a statement establishing specific criteria to be applied in promotion and tenure decisions shall be agreed to in writing by the appointee, the Department Chair, and the Dean.

4) In addition to the requirements of subsection (3) above, the following are the minimum standards for appointment at each faculty rank:

4.a) Instructor. An instructor is appointed principally upon evidence that she or he holds a Master's Degree or its equivalent, is well advanced upon doctoral or comparable study, if such is required in his or her discipline, exhibits good promise as a teacher and original scholar, and possesses the qualities for professional development.

4.b) Assistant Professor. Appointment or promotion to the rank of assistant professor shall be based on evidence of interest in and potential for effective teaching and upon evidence of the ability to conduct valuable research.

4.c) Associate Professor. Appointment or promotion to the rank of associate professor is based on evidence that the candidate is a fully competent teacher. In addition, the candidate shall demonstrate significant scholarship beyond publication of material contained in his or her dissertation, or outstanding intellectual leadership beyond the University community, or exceptional achievement as a teacher. Only in rare cases may promotion to associate professor occur before the beginning of the fourth year in rank as assistant professor.

4.d) Professor. Appointment or promotion to the rank of professor is based on evidence of sustained excellence in teaching. In addition, the candidate shall have an outstanding record as a scholar or shall demonstrate sustained outstanding intellectual leadership as a practitioner in his or her field. Evidence of reputation in the discipline or a related discipline beyond the local community is required. Only in rare cases may promotion to professor occur before the beginning of the fourth year in rank as associate professor. In rare instances, promotion to professor may be based in significant part upon sustained and generally acclaimed leadership in the realization of the mission of the University.

5) Outstanding intellectual leadership for the purposes of these rules means the attainment of a position of prominence in the field, demonstrated by activities (other than simply holding positions in committees and organizations) evidencing that the candidate has played a major role in developing in the field a policy or program that can be documented by papers, reports, or other written evidence.

6) Exceptional achievement as a teacher for the purposes of these rules means outstanding classroom performance plus a significant contribution to good teaching evidenced by papers, reports, or other materials that can be evaluated.

B) Procedures for Appointment to the Faculty

(1) These procedures shall be followed for appointment to the faculty:

1.a) The appropriate Peer Review Committee shall assist the Chairperson in seeking well-qualified candidates for the faculty. The Chairperson shall forward the name of the recommended candidate, including a recommended salary, rank, and tenure status or tenure decision date to the Dean and Provost. Before the Chairperson forwards his or her recommendation, he or she must submit a recommendation of salary range, rank, and tenure status to the Peer Review Committee. This committee will either support the Chairperson's recommendation or submit a recommendation of its own. Recommendations shall include statements of evidence in support of, or critical of, the candidate's qualifications. If the Peer Review Committee and the Chairperson disagree on an appointment recommendation, the matter shall be submitted to a vote of the entire faculty grouping concerned (Section 8.1.1 (I)). If the faculty grouping supports the Chairperson, its recommendation supplants that of the Peer Review Committee. If the faculty grouping supports the Peer Review Committee, the Provost shall refer the matter to the University Personnel Committee (see Section 8.1.2(F)(3)) or University Peer Review Committee. In cases where a Chairperson is selected from outside the University, his or her appointment to the departmental faculty shall follow the above delineated procedures; however, the Chairperson of the selection committee (Section 8.1.5(A)(1)) shall perform the functions delegated to the Chairperson.

1.b) Where a majority of the faculty committee does not support an appointment, on grounds other than salary considerations, and the committee is supported by a majority of the faculty grouping, such an appointment shall be made only in rare instances and for compelling reasons that shall be stated in detail by the President or Dean to the faculty grouping. The candidate should be informed of the negative recommendation of the majority of the faculty grouping at or before the time she or he is formally offered an appointment; however, if after discussion with the Chairperson the faculty grouping deems that forwarding of such information to the candidate is unwise, the candidate shall not be informed and the entire faculty grouping shall be bound by this decision.

1.c) The name of each candidate proposed shall be forwarded to the President, accompanied by statements from the Peer Review Committee, the Chairperson, the Dean, and the Provost.

1.d) From such candidates, the President shall recommend to the Board of Trustees those acceptable for appointment.

2) Joint appointments to two or more departments, colleges, or academic units shall be made in accordance with the procedures for appointment to each such department, college, or academic unit.

3) Members of the faculty may be selected for and removed from the faculty of the College of Graduate Studies according to the procedures established in the Bylaws of the Cleveland State University Faculty Organization and the Bylaws of the College of Graduate Studies. Such selections shall not be considered to be joint appointments.

C) Conditions of Appointment

Appointments to the faculty shall be either with tenure or subject to a probationary period, both as provided in Personnel Policies Section 8.1.2(D)(1) below. Contracts accompanying appointment shall stipulate the following conditions: rank, tenure, status, salary, pay periods, and if the appointment is without tenure, the length of the probationary period specifying the latest date by which a tenure decision will be made. Absence of a statement with respect to tenure status shall not be construed as the granting of tenure. Subject to the limitations hereinafter set forth, a contract may specify that successive contracts shall be offered to the faculty member.
1) Instructor. An instructor shall be offered a contract for one academic year, subject to dismissal pursuant to Sections 8.1.2(D)(1) and 8.1.4(A-D), and may be offered not more than three subsequent contracts in the rank of instructor. An offer of a contract for a fourth year as an instructor shall be accompanied by notice of termination (see Section 8.1.2(E)(5)).

2) Assistant Professor. An assistant professor shall be offered a contract for one academic year, subject to dismissal, pursuant to Sections 8.1.2(D)(1) and 8.1.4(A-D), and may be offered subsequent annual contracts. Except as stipulated in Section 8.1.2(D)(1), however, the cumulative years of appointment in Cleveland State University in the ranks of instructor and assistant professor shall not exceed seven.

3) Associate Professor and Professor. An appointment to the rank of associate professor or professor may be with tenure or may be subject to a probationary period.

   3.a) If the appointment is with tenure, an associate professor or professor shall be offered a contract for one academic year and must be offered subsequent one-year contracts, subject to dismissal, pursuant to Sections 8.1.2(D)(1) and 8.1.4(A-D).

   3.b) If the appointment is without tenure, the associate professor or professor without prior full-time college teaching experience (8.1.2(D)(1)), shall be offered a contract for one academic year, and may be offered not more than four subsequent one-year contracts unless tenure is granted, subject to dismissal, pursuant to Sections 8.1.2(D)(1) and 8.1.4(A-D).

   3.c) If the appointment is without tenure, the associate professor or professor having had one or more years of prior full-time college teaching experience (8.1.2(D)(1)) shall be offered a contract for one academic year and may be offered not more than three subsequent one-year contracts unless tenure is granted, subject to dismissal pursuant to Sections 8.1.2(D)(1) and 8.1.4(A-D). A contract for a fourth year without tenure shall be accompanied by notice of termination.

D) Tenure

Tenure is the University's most effective guarantee of academic freedom and embraces the reciprocal obligation of the faculty member to maintain the highest standards of his or her profession. It is awarded, therefore, in recognition of professional competence and not simply as a condition of employment.
1) Probationary Periods and Tenure.

Tenure may be granted only to faculty members of the rank of associate professor or professor. Persons who hold concurrent faculty appointments and administrative positions may have tenure only in their faculty capacities. Unless granted at the time of the original appointment in the rank of associate professor or professor, tenure may be granted during a probationary period (8.1.1(E)) which shall not exceed three years, or, for a person without previous full-time college teaching experience, four years. Faculty members whose original appointment was as instructor or as assistant professor shall have a probationary period (8.1.1(E)) not exceeding six years. In computing years of service in fulfillment of this six-year maximum probationary period, credit shall be given for:

1.a) all years of full-time service at Cleveland State University, except for the optional waiver of pre-terminal degree service as explained below.

1.b) all years of full-time service at the equivalent rank of instructor or higher in other fully accredited institutions which grant baccalaureate or higher degrees, following receipt of the terminal degree in the field, except that the Dean may choose to limit to three years the amount of such service which is to be credited. Faculty members for whom three years of prior service is counted will submit dossiers for promotion and tenure no later than the beginning of their fourth year at Cleveland State University, even though, in such instances, the probationary period may exceed six years.

The faculty member may choose to waive in writing up to two years of prior full-time service at Cleveland State University or another institution which complies with Section 8.1.2(D)(1.b) if it took place before the granting of the terminal degree in his or her discipline. All other years of such prior full-time service must count toward the tenure probationary period at Cleveland State University. The faculty member wishing to count or waive any prior service performed before the granting of the terminal degree must come to a written agreement with the Dean at the time of initial appointment in a tenure-track position (Section 8.1.2(C)(1) and (2)).

If tenure is not granted at the end of the probationary period, notice of termination shall be given in accordance with the schedule of dates set forth in Section 8.1.2(E).
2) Promotion and Tenure. Promotion to the rank of associate professor or the promotion of a non-tenured associate professor to the rank of professor must be accompanied by the granting of tenure. Therefore, if separate Peer Review Committees vote upon promotion recommendations and tenure recommendations, the recommendations of both committees are required. If these recommendations are in conflict, the Provost shall refer the matter to the University Personnel Committee or the University Peer Review Committee.

3) Tenure Without Promotion. The awarding of tenure to a faculty member already holding the rank of professor or associate professor is based on evidence that the candidate has continued to maintain the standards for academic rank outlined in Section 8.1.2(A)(4.c) or Section 8.1.2(A)(4.d) as appropriate.

E) Continuation or Termination of Non-tenured Appointment

Subject to the limitations of Section 8.1.2(C), a faculty member who is subject to a probationary period will receive successive annual contracts for each year of such probationary period unless: (1) his or her original contract states the contrary, or (2) the University has made the decision to terminate his or her appointment pursuant to the following procedures and his given him or her timely notification according to the provisions of this rule.

1) Recommendations for the termination of a faculty member's services may originate with the Peer Review Committee, the Chairperson, or the Dean. Whatever the origin, the committee, the Chairperson, and the Dean shall consider the faculty member's qualifications and make a recommendation to the Provost. If the several recommendations are in conflict, the Provost shall refer the matter to the University Personnel Committee (See Section 8.1.2(F)(3)) or University Peer Review Committee. The Provost shall consider all the recommendations and forward them, together with his or her own recommendation, to the President, who makes recommendations to the Board of Trustees.

2) The University complies with the Standards for Notice of the A.A.U.P.* The initiation of the formal (i.e., written) recommendation

*The A.A.U.P. Standards for Notice as adopted at the 50th Annual Meeting in 1964 are: “Notice of non-reappointment, or of intention not to recommend reappointment to the governing board, should be given in writing in accordance with the following standards:

(1) Not later than March 1 of the first academic year of service, if the appointment expires at the end of that year, or, if a one-year appointment terminates during an academic year, at least three months in advance of its termination.

(2) Not later than December 15 of the second academic year of service, if the appointment expires at the end of that year, or, if an initial two-year appointment terminates during an of termination should occur at least four weeks before the acceptable A.A.U.P. notification date, and normally it will not occur later than three weeks before that date. A faculty member whose termination is under consideration shall be informed of the contemplated action at least four weeks (or, if the faculty member is in his or her first year, three weeks) before the initiation of the formal recommendation and shall be given an opportunity to submit materials in his or her behalf.

Regular academic year contracts shall be considered to expire on the third day after the spring commencement.

3) Recommendations for termination shall be forwarded to the President and shall be accompanied by all relevant documents including statements for and against the recommendations and materials submitted by the affected faculty member.

4) If a termination notice is not sent by the President or the President's designated representative by the appropriate dates specified in Section 8.1.2(E)(2) above, the faculty member shall receive one additional annual contract. This contract shall be a terminal contract unless the faculty member is awarded tenure during its term.

5) A member of the faculty in the rank of instructor who is not to be promoted to assistant professor at the beginning of his or her fourth year of full-time regular service shall receive notice by the third day after the spring commencement of his or her third year that the contract for a fourth year is a terminal contract unless she or he is promoted during that year. Failure to send appropriate timely notice does not obligate the University to grant promotion even though the faculty member is entitled to a fifth year terminal contract according to the provisions of Section 8.1.2(E)(4) above.

6) A member of the faculty in the rank of assistant professor who is not to be promoted to associate professor with tenure at the beginning of his or her seventh year of full-time regular service shall receive notice by the third day after the spring commencement of his or her sixth year that the contract for a seventh year is a terminal contract unless she or he is promoted during that year. Failure to send appropriate timely notice does not obligate the University to grant promotion or tenure even though the faculty member is entitled to an eighth year terminal contract according to the provisions of Section 8.1.2(E)(4).
7) Any other faculty member who has not been formally granted tenure by the end of his or her probationary period shall receive timely notice (see this section above) that the next annual contract is a terminal contract unless she or he is awarded tenure during the forthcoming year. Failure to send appropriate timely notice does not obligate the University to grant tenure even though the faculty member is entitled to an additional terminal contract according to the provisions of Section 8.1.2(E)(4) above.

8) Any assistant professor in his or her fourth or fifth year of full-time service shall be prepared to submit a dossier setting forth his or her qualifications for promotion and tenure. The appropriate Peer Review Committee, the Chairperson, the Dean, or the Provost may request that she or he submit the dossier by October 15 for review. Following review, the faculty member shall be advised (1) that she or he is a qualified candidate for promotion, or (2) that she or he has a reasonable chance for promotion with additional effort, or (3) that she or he is unlikely to be promoted and that a termination recommendation may ensue. Unless an assistant professor is recommended for promotion and tenure or is sent a notice of termination, the advice given to the faculty member is to be deemed a current status report which is subject to revision in subsequent reviews.

F) Procedures for Promotion in Rank and for the Award of Tenure in the Cleveland Marshall College of Law*

1) These procedures shall be followed with respect to promotion in rank and the award of tenure:

1.a) Every faculty member eligible for promotion and/or the award of tenure shall have the opportunity to be considered for promotion and/or tenure and shall be permitted to submit material supporting his or her request for promotion and/or tenure.

1.b) Prior to October 15 of each year, preferably in the preceding spring term, each Peer Review Committee shall meet to consider candidates for promotion to the rank or ranks over which it is given jurisdiction or for the award of tenure or both.

1.c) The committee may seek, in addition to the materials submitted by the candidate, other materials it deems relevant to the evaluation.

1.d) The committee shall adopt by a vote of the majority of the total membership a statement of all substantial reasons it relied upon in forming its judgment. A minority statement (or statements) may also be prepared together with notation of the number of committee members supporting the statement(s). A copy of each such statement shall be supplied to the candidate upon that candidate's written request.

1.e) On or before October 27, each such committee shall forward the candidate's application together with the committee's recommendation to the Chairperson. The committee recommendation shall include a numerical record of the committee vote and shall be accompanied by any minority statements. By November 1 the Chairperson will transmit these documents, along with his or her own recommendation, to the Dean for forwarding to the Provost. The Dean will supply a statement of support or lack of support for the recommendation to the Provost on or about November 15. The Chairperson will be provided with a copy of the Dean's statement.

1.f) At the time they are transmitted to the Deans and to the Provost, written copies of recommendations by the Chairpersons and the Deans that are favorable to the candidate shall be given to the candidate and the Peer Review Committee, and candidates who received one or more unfavorable evaluation(s) shall be so informed. Written copies of recommendations by the Chairpersons and Deans that are unfavorable shall be given to the candidate as soon as possible following upon his or her written request. The candidate may also request in writing that these evaluations be given to the Peer Review Committee. A recommendation that, in the opinion of the Provost, is not clearly stated to be favorable shall be considered unfavorable.

1.g) If a candidate receives an unfavorable recommendation, she or he may remove himself or herself from further consideration at that time unless constrained by the provisions of Section 8.1.2 (E)(8) above.

1.h) If the recommendations of the majority of the Peer Review Committee, the Chairperson, or the Dean are in conflict in a particular case, the Provost shall refer the matter to the University Personnel Committee (see Section 8.1.2(F)(3)) or University Peer Review Committee. Before making its recommendation, the University Personnel Committee or University Peer Review Committee shall solicit comments and supplementary materials pertinent to the conflicting recommendations regarding the candidate. In no case does the University Personnel Committee or University Peer Review Committee have the authority to hold hearings concerning dossiers. It shall forward its recommendations to both the candidate and the Provost. Supporting reasons sent to the Provost shall be given to the candidate upon his or her written request. These reasons may be given to the Peer Review Committee only upon written request of the candidate.

1.i) The Provost shall consider all documents and recommendations before him or her, giving particular attention to the University Personnel Committee's or University Peer Review Committee's recommendation on disputed cases, and forward them together with his or her recommendations to the President. Only in rare instances and for compelling reasons shall the Provost recommend persons lacking faculty support (i.e., the candidates should have the support of their Peer Review Committee, the University Personnel Committee, or the University Peer Review Committee); the Provost must discuss all such cases with the University Personnel Committee or the University Peer Review Committee before making a recommendation. If the Provost declines to support a candidate having uniformly favorable recommendations, she or he shall refer his or her reasons to the University Personnel Committee or the University Peer Review Committee. The University Personnel Committee or the University Peer Review Committee shall provide the candidate with these reasons and solicit the candidate's response. The University Personnel Committee or the University Peer Review Committee shall then advise the Provost concerning the faculty member's candidacy.

1.j) From candidates who have been reviewed in accordance with the procedures outlined above, the President shall recommend acceptable candidates to the Board of Trustees for promotion, the award of tenure, or both. The President shall recommend persons lacking faculty support only in rare instances and for compelling reasons that must be stated in detail to the faculty grouping prior to making such recommendations to the Board of Trustees.

1.k) On or before April 15, every candidate shall be notified of the decision with respect to his or her promotion and/or tenure by appropriate administrative officials. (Revised 12/6/00)

1.l) It is the responsibility of each participant in the promotion/tenure process to consider the qualifications of each candidate and in comparison to appropriate departmental, college, and University standards. The candidate should receive notification as to the positive or negative nature of the recommendations of his or her departmental Peer Review Committee, his or her Chairperson, and/or his or her Dean concomitantly with the forwarding of these recommendations to the appropriate University officer.

1.m) A candidate who believes that the denial of promotion and/or tenure in his or her case was:

(a) arbitrary, discriminatory, or based on an inadequate consideration of his or her qualifications;

(b) in violation or disregard of the established standards for promotion or tenure; or

(c) in violation of his or her academic freedom, may request a hearing after January 15 from the formal hearing committee as provided in the Bylaws of the Faculty Senate. In such hearings the burden of proof rests on the faculty member. The formal hearing committee shall forward its report and recommendations to the Provost promptly.

2) Special Provisions for Joint Appointments. In cases of joint appointments, the department, college, or academic unit with primary responsibility (8.1.1(G)), shall, after consultation with the other concerned academic division(s), make the nomination for promotion and/or tenure.

3) In the case of disagreements in the recommendations forwarded to the Provost by the Peer Review Committee, the Department Chairperson, and/or the College Dean, the Provost will forward the candidate's dossier together with all recommendations to the University Personnel Committee or the University Peer Review Committee. It is the Committee's function to study the dossier and to recommend a course of action to the Provost. The Committee's recommendation must be submitted to the Provost within the time constraints she or he specifies.

4) While faculty are expected to act according to the highest standards of professional ethics, conflicts of interest may arise to varying degrees in numerous situations. Traditional safeguards and the good conscience of individual faculty members may be relied upon to maintain high ethical standards, yet in the areas of faculty activity described below, the overall perception of total fairness is deemed so important that specific safeguards are given:
4.a) Nepotism

No person shall initiate or participate in any decision involving a direct benefit (e.g., initial appointment, continuance of non-tenured appointment, promotion, tenure, salary increment, leave of absence) to a member of his or her immediate family (here defined as spouse, parent, child, or sibling). Where such a relationship exists, the Provost shall approve a procedure that shall eliminate such related person from any role in direct benefit decisions affecting the other related person. The President shall replace the Provost in the function described above if the Provost is himself or herself involved in a direct benefit decision affecting a member of his or her immediate family.

4.b) Faculty Awards and Internal Research Grants

No faculty member seeking, or having been nominated for, internal research grants or any other award in recognition of excellence or outstanding performance shall participate in any deliberations or decisions made by the evaluating committee during the academic year in question. Agreement to serve on such an evaluating committee shall be construed as agreement not to receive direct benefits from decisions made by the committee.

4.c) Personnel Actions

No faculty member seeking, or having been nominated for, tenure and/or promotion shall participate in any deliberations or decisions made by the same Peer Review Committee or University Peer Review Committee during the academic year in question. Agreement to serve on a Peer Review Committee shall be construed as agreement not to receive direct benefit from decisions made by the committee.

No faculty member shall participate in the discussion and/or vote in a given personnel action both at the University Personnel Committee (UPC) level or University Peer Review Committee (UPRC) level and at either the college or departmental Peer Review Committee (PRC) level. If the entire faculty of a college constitutes its PRC, the Conflict of interest provision would be invoked only when a UPC member or a UPRC member has been delegated a substantial role other than as a voting member of the body in the evaluation process at an earlier stage. The faculty member shall choose at which level to participate.
4.d)  Dual Status as Student and Faculty Member

No faculty member at Cleveland State University may enroll in any Cleveland State University course in which credit will be awarded toward the degree program in which that faculty member serves. No student at Cleveland State University may serve as instructor of record in any Cleveland State University course in the degree program in which that student is enrolled.

I Introduction

Professor Green received a B.A. from the University of Maryland at College Park in 1992, majoring in Journalism and minoring in Spanish. He received a J.D. degree, magna cum laude, in 2000 from the University of Baltimore School of Law, where he was a member of the Heisler Honor Society and received a Law Faculty Award. He also was the Associate Managing Editor of The University of Baltimore Law Review. In 2007, he received an L.L.M. from the Columbia University School of Law, where he was a Harlan Fiske Stone Scholar.

After graduating from Law School in 2000, he clerked one year for U.S. District Court Judge Deborah K. Chasanow and one year for the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Eric L. Clay. From 2002 to late 2004, he worked at the law firm, Hogan & Hartson. From 2005 to June, 2008, he worked at the firm, Ober, Kaler, Grimes, & Shriver.

Professor Green joined the faculty of Cleveland-Marshall with the rank of Assistant Professor in August, 2008. At the law school Professor Green has taught Contracts, Civil Liberties, and Employment Discrimination. As an Adjunct at the University of Baltimore Law School, he taught a litigation process course.

Professor Green's Application Statement was submitted in October 2012; it is reproduced in the Appendices.

II Scholarship

The subcommittee and the candidate selected three articles for outside peer reviews, all of them published since Professor Green joined the Cleveland-Marshall Law Faculty. The three articles and the reviewers are:

A. Family, Cubicle Mate and Everyone in Between: A Novel Approach to Protecting Employees from Third-Party Retaliation Under Title VII and Kindred Statutes, 30 QUINNIPAC LAW REVIEW 249 (2012). Reviewers: Professor Susan Carle, American University School of Law; Professor Patricia Wilson, Baylor University School of Law; and Professor Camille Hebert, Ohio State University School of Law.
B. Express Yourself: Striking a Balance Between Silence and Active Pursuative Opposition Under Title VII’s Antiretaliatin Provision, 28 HOFSTRA LAB. & EMP. JOURNAL 107 (2010). Reviewers: Professor Alex Long, University of Tennessee College of Law; Professor Deborah Brake, University of Pittsburgh School of Law; Professor David Gregory, St. John’s University College of Law; and Professor Mark Brodin, Boston College Law School.

C. Lawrence: An Unlikely Catalyst for Massive Disruption in the Sphere of Government Employee Privacy and Intimate Association Claims, 29 BERKELEY JOURNAL EMP. & LAB. LAW 311 (2008). Reviewers: Professor David Gregory, St. John’s University School of Law; Professor Marvin Jones, University of Miami School of Law.

The subcommittee considered approximately twenty possible reviewers for Professor Green’s articles. Professor Green suggested names at the subcommittee’s request. The subcommittee identified other potential reviewers by using Westlaw and the AALS handbook to identify scholars in employment discrimination law. Professor Green did not oppose any reviewers recommended by the subcommittee. The three articles that were reviewed and the reviewers' qualifications are described in detail below, accompanied by summaries of the reviewers' comments. The letters of reviews and the resumes of the reviewers appear in the appendices. Unless indicated otherwise, Professor Green and the reviewer had no significant professional or personal contacts. The report includes edited versions of the reviewers’ analysis.

Summary by Professor Green

My first article, Lawrence: An Unlikely Catalyst for Massive Disruption in the Sphere of Government Employee Privacy and Intimate Association Claims, 29 Berkeley J. Lab. & Emp. L. 311 (2008), addressed privacy rights in government employment. Privacy and intimate association claims most often arise when a government employee is terminated or otherwise punished for being involved in a relationship the public employer contends conflicts with the employer’s interest. The idea for the article stemmed from the 2003 U.S. Supreme Court decision, Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003). In Lawrence, the Court overturned a Texas statute that banned homosexual sodomy. One of the dissenting opinions in Lawrence argued that the Court’s holding would cause a "massive disruption" in the current social order. To substantiate its point, the opinion cited cases, many in the area of public employment, the foundations of which allegedly were undermined by Lawrence. The purpose of my article was to examine decisions that implicate privacy and intimate association rights that arose in government employment and examine whether Lawrence might have the effect the dissenting opinion claimed. The article argues that the "massive disruption" theory was unfounded. The conclusion was based on several factors. The article argues, for instance, that the government's interests are generally at their zenith when it acts as an employer, and courts traditionally have afforded personnel decisions made by government employers significant deference. Lawrence did not appear to change the level of deference government employers are traditionally afforded. Specifically, Lawrence did not appear to undermine the deference given to decisions made by government employers to curb a worker's right to enter into a relationship the employer contends conflicts with its effective functioning. The article also notes that several lower courts have adopted stringent tests to analyze employee privacy and intimate association claims and that such tests rarely result in employee victories.

Review by Professor Gregory, St. John's University College of Law

With reference to the factors you expressly asked me to address: his scholarship, both analytically and descriptively, is delivered with clarity and grace. He has chosen important subjects for his scholarship. While he is a persuasive writer, the thoroughness of his presentation seems somewhat abbreviated. That is particularly true of the conclusions reached in his articles. Of course, the relatively brief conclusions may be due to the grinding "style" of law reviews. Nevertheless, I would like to know what Professor Green thinks, with more detail and depth.

Review by Professor Jones, University of Miami School of Law

The article was excellent. It was well organized, clear and displayed a craftmanship in the analysis of complex issues involving the intersection of the right of privacy and public sector employment law. Professor Green challenges [Justice Scalia's] massive disruption thesis in the context of public employment law. The implications of Scalia's thesis are that the doctrine "employment at will" would be upended and employers would lose their freedom to separate employees who engaged in "immoral" acts. He demonstrates clearly that in this context of public law Scalia's prophecy is not likely to come true. * * *

Professor Green has done a fine job. He deserves to participate in the national conversation about equal rights, privacy and public employment. While I am very happy to say it is a fine piece, I would like to close with some ideas as to how Professor Green can have an even greater impact. The problem that I see is that while Professor Green is quite correct in his analysis about the durability of the employment at will doctrine there is question of whether that doctrine is legitimate or coherent in the modern context.

1 After my Lawrence article was published I received an e-mail from Professor Paul M. Secunda lauding the article. Although we disagreed on the potential impact of Lawrence, Professor Secunda congratulated me on doing a "great job." (See Attachment A). An associate professor at Marquette University School of Law, Professor Secunda is a well-regarded employment and labor scholar and editor of the Workplace Prof Blog. The Workplace Prof Blog is a popular site among employment and labor scholars and features current information on scholarship, legislation and judicial opinions in employment and labor law.

Professor Green’s Summary

After my Lawrence article was completed, I contemplated where I wanted to go with my scholarship. I initially considered turning my attention to another of my passions, education law. I decided, however, to continue to focus on employment discrimination. I have focused my scholarship in this area for several reasons. I teach employment discrimination and believe that my teaching is enhanced greatly by contributing to the scholarly discussion in that area. In settling on a particular area of interest, I found the issue of retaliation under federal anti-discrimination statutes ripe for critical study. In an often-cited article on retaliation, Professor Deborah Brake at the University of Pittsburgh School of Law stated “[i]n the wealth of scholarship about discrimination and inequality, retaliation is an understudied phenomenon.”2 I agree with Professor Brake’s observation about the dearth of scholarship in the area of retaliation. I have thus focused my scholarship on the issue of workplace retaliation for complaining about unlawful discriminatory practices. However, I do not only write on the important issue of retaliation because it is an “understudied” topic that could use scholarly debate and development, although, in my view, it certainly does. I also believe that a strong anti-retaliation provision is critical to the viability of any workplace anti-discrimination statutory scheme. The primary purpose of such a scheme is to eliminate workplace discrimination on the basis of prescribed characteristics, e.g., race, sex, or religion. However, without affording strong protections to employees for raising the specter of possible discrimination in the workplace, the underlying goals of the statute will never be achieved. Few employees will be willing to allege they have been victimized by discriminatory practices, thereby creating an opportunity for such practices to be eliminated, if after making such complaints, an employer is permitted to discharge or otherwise sanction that employee. Thus, I also began to write on the area of retaliation because it is critical to the success of challenging and eliminating unlawful workplace discrimination. Finally, I also opted to write on retaliation because the issue has received recent attention by the Supreme Court. Within the past six years, the Court has decided several cases addressing workplace retaliation. The lower federal courts must follow Supreme Court interpretation of federal anti-discrimination statutes. Often state courts analyzing discrimination issues under state anti-discrimination statutes look for guidance to the interpretation given to similarly worded federal anti-discrimination statutes by the Supreme Court and other lower federal courts. I saw the Court’s recent retaliation decisions as a unique opportunity for me to join the discussion regarding how the holdings in these decisions should be interpreted and applied by other courts going forward.

My first article addressing retaliation, Express Yourself: Striking a Balance Between Silence and Active, Purposive Opposition Under Title VII’s Anti-Retaliation Provision, 28 Hofstra Lab. & Emp. L. J. 107 (2010), addressed the scope of the opposition clause under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Title VII protects individuals from workplace discrimination on the basis of race, sex, color, religion and national origin. The statute also protects employees and others who oppose alleged unlawful workplace discrimination. The statute is silent on the type of opposition that is protected. I recognized that several courts had held that opposition had to be “purposive”—i.e., communicated to the employer with the intent to remedy the alleged discriminatory practice. In some instances, however, employees who feared retaliation for what they perceived to be a discriminatory practice failed to alert their employer directly but voiced their concern to a third-party, a colleague or relative. Nevertheless, the employer learned of the discrimination complaint and retaliated against the employee who indirectly voiced concern about alleged discrimination. The issue in such instances is whether that employee had opposed a discriminatory practice although he or she did not bring a grievance to the employer’s attention for the purpose of remediation. My article disagrees with those decisions that extend protection only to purposive or intentional opposition. The article focuses largely on a recent U.S. Supreme Court decision, Crawford v. Metropolitan Government of Nashville & Davidson County, Tennessee, 129 S.Ct. 846 (2009). Crawford examined the term “oppose” under Title VII. Although the Court imposed no definitive limits on the term, it acknowledged that the term carried several meanings, including to “resist,” “withstand” and “to be hostile or adverse to, as in opinion.” Because of the Court’s inclusion of “opinion opposition” as a possible meaning of the term oppose, some critics, including a concurring opinion, opined that the Court’s language might open the door to “silent opposition.” Such an understanding was problematic because it could potentially hold employers liable for retaliation although an employee never expressed a word of opposition to anyone. My article advocates for a middle ground between these two polls: purposive, intentional opposition on the one hand and purely silent opposition on the other. I argue for an expressive form of opposition but argue against imposing an intent requirement. I contend that as long as the employee can demonstrate an employer learned of the expression of opposition and retaliated because of it, the employee should be protected under the statute. The article demonstrates, among other things, that such an interpretation is consistent with the language and purposes of the statute and is consistent with the position adopted by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the government agency charged with administering Title VII, which has long recognized that opposition need not be intentional.
Review by Professor Deborah Brake, University of Pittsburgh School of Law

Overall, I was very favorably impressed by the article and found it particularly helpful in furthering my own thinking about this area of the law. *  The article addresses...what might count as "opposition" for purposes of the retaliation claim, and in particular, might be the mere holding of an opinion ("silent opposition") qualify as protected activity under the opposition clause? The article answers the latter in the negative and goes on to develop a proposed standard...

The article is well-organized and progresses logically toward a conclusion. [P]rotecting silent opposition would under the purposes of the affirmative defense, which is premised on the goal of encouraging reporting and voluntary compliance. * ***

Despite the clarity and persuasiveness of the argument...I wondered whether the prospect of courts protecting truly "silent" opposition was at all realistic...the employer would never find out about it. In other words, the problem—if there is one—of protecting silent opposition is already addressed by the existing doctrine of causation, which requires proof both that the employer knew about the plaintiff's opposition and the opposition was the reason (or motivating factor) for the adverse action taken. *  Upon further reflection, I saw two reasons for taking seriously the silent opposition problem. For example, an employee might keep a diary. A second justification...[the article] adds credibility to the article's take-home point: the advocacy of a broad and employee-friendly standard of opposition. * ***

The article's greatest strength, however, lies in its advocacy of an expressive standard for establishing "opposition," rejecting [Justice Alito's] stricter and narrower alternative, an "active and purposive" standard. *  This section makes good use of employment discrimination scholarship on the affirmative defense and shows a thorough grasp of the relevant literature, while making an important contribution to that literature by exploring how the affirmative defense intersects with the retaliation doctrine. *  It compares very well with other legal scholars writing in the area of retaliation law and policy.

I had not my Professor Green until he hosted my visit for the Little-Mendelsohn Labor-Employment Law Lecture this past Spring. He was a delightful host and I very much enjoyed talking to him. Prior to that, [I read] Lawrence: An Unlikely Catalyst..., which I found helpful in thinking through such arguments in the educational/athletics context. Since then, I have also read Family, Cubicle Mate, which I found to be incisive, well-researched, and very helpful on my own work in retaliation law. [I]t too compares very favorably to other scholarship in the field.

Review by Professor Alex Long, University of Tennessee College of Law

Although I have never met Professor Green, I was actually familiar with the piece. * *
* The introduction lays out a hypothetical to help illustrate his point ...that under the approach advocated by Justice Alito... the employee would not have a claim for retaliation under Title VII because she did not engage in "active, purposive" opposition to unlawful behavior.

[M]y primary criticism of the article is that is always clear to me which way Professor Green is using the phrase ["silent opposition"];...an "opinion that is unexpressed" or "an opinion that is expressed, but not to the employer." [The first issue] is "not one that as a practical matter is likely to arise very often." [The second issue] is "by far, the more important issue, and the article is on much firmer ground when it focuses on this point. * * * The interpretation of the term "oppose" in Title VII's anti-retaliation that Professor Green proposes is consistent with those goals. These arguments are strong and Professor Green presents them in a persuasive manner. The article makes a good point that I hadn't considered before, namely that Justice Alito's requirement by purposive would leave unprotected the employee whom the employer mistakenly believed held hostile or adverse opinions.

I believe Parts III and IV make a meaningful contribution * * * He raises an interesting point that caused me to think about the concept of opposition in a manner I hadn't before. Thus, to my mind, the quality of these sections outweighs the concerns I raised earlier and allows me to form a generally favorable impression of the article.

Review by Professor Mark Brodin, Boston College Law School

His topic here—silent opposition—is a narrow part of the story, but nonetheless important. The piece is well-researched and thoughtful, and I believe makes a contribution to the scholarly conversation. * * * I particularly like...Professor Green's use of a hypothetical...especially since I found myself a bit confused by his Introduction, which does define either "silent" or "opinion opposition." (I confess I remain somewhat confused as to the latter, as I do with regard to "expressive opposition," by which Green includes "words, action, or inaction." Green is quite persuasive in his case against Justice Alito's eccentric and constricted view of 704(a) protections (although, in fairness, Alito is an easy target here, and certainly no fan of anti-discrimination statutes at that).

I also like Green's analogy to the hostile workplace cases* He makes effective use of Title VII's legislative history...."

While I find the prose clear (albeit repetitious in spots, and chopped up into too many subsections), definition of key terms earlier would have better served the reader. I would also like to see some attention to the broader (and more interesting) question of why the Court is more sympathetic to retaliation plaintiffs than to those raising claims of bias. What philosophy/ideology/worldview does this contrast evidence?

Professor Green has produced a piece of quality scholarship. I would hope, though, that in future endeavors, he broadens his perspective and takes on the larger issues in the areas he chooses to explore.
Review by Professor Gregory, St. John University College of Law:

[Please note that Professor Gregory reviewed two articles by Professor Green and applied his conclusion to both]

With reference to the factors you expressly asked me to address: his scholarship, both analytically and descriptively, is delivered with clarity and grace. He has chosen important subjects for his scholarship. While he is a persuasive writer, the thoroughness of his presentation seems somewhat abbreviated. That is particularly true of the conclusions reached in his articles. Of course, the relatively brief conclusions may be due to the grinding “style” of law reviews. Nevertheless, I would like to know what Professor Green thinks, with more detail and depth.

Professor Green’s Summary:

My most recent published article on retaliation, Family, Cubicle Mates and Everyone in Between: A Novel Approach to Protecting Employees From Third-Party Retaliation Under Title VII and Kindred Statutes, 30 Quinnipiac L. Rev. 29 (2012), focuses on an issue that the lower federal courts had grappled with for decades—the viability of third-party retaliation claims. Third-party retaliation arises when an employee complains about discrimination but is not punished directly for the complaint. Rather, the employer targets the employee’s close associate, typically a spouse, relative or a romantic partner, who also works for the same employer. Contrary to the position adopted by many lower courts, in Thompson v. N. American Stainless, L.P., 131 S.Ct. 863 (2011), the U.S. Supreme Court recently held that third-party retaliation was unlawful under Title VII. My article analyzes the Court’s holding in Thompson. Much of the discussion surrounding third-party retaliation revolves around who should be protected under the theory—a spouse? sibling? close friend? coworker? Some lower courts that had recognized the theory prior to Thompson had argued that only extremely close relatives of the person who engaged in protected activity should be protected under the theory. I argue against such a mechanical, formalistic approach to third-party retaliation, extending protection against third-party retaliation when a fixed-class of relationships is alleged and rejecting claims in all other cases. Rather, I argue that an employee should be protected against third-party retaliation whenever there is proof that the employer targeted him or her to get back at a coworker who engaged in protected activity regardless of the relationship between the coworkers—family, friend, cubicle mate or otherwise. I argue for protecting that coworker whenever that individual suffers a particular adverse action (e.g., discharge or failure to promote) that would have sufficed for an actionable retaliation claim had the employer taken the same action against the employee who engaged in protected activity. Thus, my proposal would bar employers from doing indirectly (to a third party) what they are prohibited from doing directly to the third-party’s associate who engaged in protected activity.

Review by Professor Camille Hebert, Moritz College of Law, OSU

I very much enjoyed his article.  The article does a good job of explaining [Burlington Northern v. White] and critiquing that standard.

The article persuasively argues that the lower courts should not insist on the existence of a familial or intimate relationship between individuals in order to find third-party retaliation to be actionable, as some lower courts seem to be suggesting.

The article is well written, with its analysis and conclusions clearly stated. The article presents a thorough analysis of the issue of third-party retaliation and makes an important contribution to the literature on retaliation claims under the anti-discrimination laws. I believe the article has the potential to advance the understanding of the lower courts concerning the implications of Thompson decision for third party claims generally, if the courts are interested in listening.  I believe the work is of high quality, compared to other scholarship in the field, particularly by a relatively junior scholar.

Review by Professor Wilson, Baylor Law School

I thoroughly enjoyed reading it.  In short, my conclusion is that Professor Green makes a significant and worthy contribution that I expect both academics and practitioners in the area of employment law will appreciate. ***

Professor Green selected an interesting and important issue to tackle [Employer retaliation against third parties]. The answer to this question has far-reaching implications given the myriad state and federal statutes that prohibit employers from retaliating against employees who engage in protected conduct, and now the associates of those employees...

Professor Green not only argues that the scope of relationships that should be protected from third party retaliation should be broad, but also that it should be based on a totality of the circumstances test. He then proceeds to make arguments in support of this thesis.

I appreciate that Professor Green took a balanced approach....In my former days as an in-house lawyer, I might not have liked Professor Green’s conclusion given that it is one that is fairly characterized as favoring employees and I represented a major employer. Nonetheless, I would have been hard-pressed to argue that his suggestion is not reasonable, and indeed a well-supported, conclusion.

Review by Professor Carle, American University School of Law

Professor Green starts his article by noting a curious feature of the U.S. Supreme Court's employment discrimination jurisprudence, which is that it is far more pro-employee on retaliation issues than on most other areas of doctrine. He is right about this, and also right to focus on it as an interesting area for scholarly inquiry. The point of Professor Green's article is to argue for an expansive interpretation, based on the individual circumstances of the case presented, of when third party retaliation is covered under Title VII's anti-retaliation provisions; Green wants to argue that it is not just spouses, other close relatives, and intimates, that should be protected, but potentially a much broader class of third party employees.

Ultimately, Professor Green succeeds in suggesting how the issue should be addressed in a manner that is consistent with the policy of the antiretaliation statutes as well as the cases that have interpreted those statutes.  The next section of his article undertakes a clear, thorough and accurate analytic description of the Court's doctrine in the retaliation area. It displays the marks of a scholar who knows his field very well. It may have been a bit long, and at times I felt that points that were already well made were repeated, but overall this section was impressive in its thoroughness and sophistication. Professor Green also did a good job of weaving in other scholars' work, especially an important article by Cynthia Estlund about how workplace relationships matter generally. ***

I must confess that up to this point in the article, I was enjoying the work very much but I retained quite a bit of skepticism about its thesis. Even though I am a fairly liberal, pro-employee scholar who has also written about the importance of appreciating the subtleties of context, just as Professor Green is doing in this article, I could see many reasons why his thesis might be over-broad and unworkable. But despite my views in this regard going in, Professor Green thoroughly persuaded me of his thesis in his analysis section. He did this by starting with a concrete set of facts -- facts that not only presented the perfect case to illustrate his point, but also happened to have been drawn from a real case, which the plaintiff lost, unfairly it seems based on the equities of the facts involved. ***

Professor Green skillfully comes back to Estlund's theoretical point to drive his thesis home: relationships built in workplaces matter a great deal to the employees involved even when they do not lead to personal intimacy. Professor Green also does an excellent job of refuting potential objections to his argument -- such as the ones I had had earlier in reading the piece.  I ended the article thoroughly convinced of Professor Green's point, and intend to make reference to it in my teaching of retaliation doctrine in the future (especially the concrete example, which will stay with me for a long time).

Every review of this type must mention some points of criticism so I will mention mine, though they are quite minor. As already noted, I think the sections of this article laying out the case law developments could have been somewhat tighter (without sacrificing thoroughness, which I found a virtue). I likewise would have enjoyed more by way of Professor Green's analysis and argument. Professor Green is a thoughtful and careful analyst; I think in future work he could be bolder and take on bigger issues, but only because he is clearly capable of doing so while continuing to maintain his steady level-headedness as a reliable commentator, observer, and analyst. To make his analysis section longer and even deeper (though as mentioned it did not lack for persuasiveness), he could have delved more into theory.

III Teaching

A. Professor Green's Description of his teaching philosophy

I have taught several courses during my four years at C-M Law: Contracts (formerly Contracts I and Contracts II), Employment Discrimination and Civil Liberties. I have taken different approaches to teaching these courses, but with all the courses I have taught I encourage an interactive, participatory learning experience. One of the most enduring pieces of advice I ever received as a new lawyer was from a more senior associate with whom I worked at Hogan & Hartson. A partner had given me a complaint that had been filed against our client and asked me to draft an answer. I recall feeling lost because I knew little about the facts or the law. I mentioned my feelings to my colleague who told me that I would never know everything about a case going into it. A large part of our jobs as attorneys is "to figure stuff out." I took from that discussion that as a lawyer it was my job to study thoroughly the law and the case before me in an effort to determine how best to meet my client's needs. No one was going to give me the legal principles I needed wrapped in a package. I have approached teaching that way. I do not believe that legal training should be based on a strict lecture format with me in the first instance telling students what they should have learned from the material they studied before class. To better reflect actual practice, I believe that learning should be a joint effort between the students and myself, engaging the material together. Therefore, I encourage students thoroughly to study the material before class to try to understand it as best they can. In class, by way of questions and answers and general discussion, the students and I then unpack the legal principles set forth in the material and the rationale underlying those principles. I have grown into this philosophy, and I tend to take this interactive approach with the various courses that I teach.

While my more recent teaching evaluations have been relatively favorable, I realize there is always room for improvement. I have attempted to improve my teaching in several ways. First, each semester I study my teaching evaluations for those aspects of the classroom experience students thought were effective and those students believed were not as effective. One example where I used this technique to change my approach to teaching involved mid-semester assessment. In my Contracts class, student grades are based primarily on their final exam, a traditional law school practice. I learned from my evaluations, however, that some students thought that a mid-semester assessment would be helpful so that they could better appreciate where they stood with understanding the material covered up to that point. In the fall 2010, I gave students a midterm. The first time I did so, it took me several weeks to grade and to return the exams to students. I gathered from the evaluations that semester that while students appreciated the assessment, they also wanted a faster turnaround. Recognizing that what students desired foremost was feedback, I began to offer ungraded mid-terms, which provided the feedback students desired but with a quicker turnaround. Another way I have sought to improve my teaching is by inviting another professor into my classroom to offer helpful criticism, visiting another professor’s class to learn new insights on teaching from that professor’s perspective and talking to colleagues about teaching methods. During my first year, Professor Kathleen Engel visited my Contracts course and offered advice on how I might make the learning experience more effective. She advised that students might benefit if I used more visual aids as well as wrote more of the concepts we discuss on the board. I have since made every effort to use visual aids when teaching and constantly use the blackboard to write out various points of discussion throughout the lecture. A couple of years ago, I also visited Professor Browne Lewis’s class to study how a more senior colleague approaches teaching. I learned from Professor Lewis the importance of summarizing each topic after we conclude it and also to constantly ask students throughout the lecture whether they have any questions. I believe these additions to my lectures have enhanced the learning experience, among other things, by allowing me to assess during class whether students are grasping the material. I also spoke with my colleague Professor Michael Borden about teaching methods. I adopted from Professor Borden the practice of beginning each class with a wrap-up from the prior day’s class. Professor Borden opined, and I agreed, that doing so, among other things, reaffirms important points from the topics previously covered and provides a transition into the material that will be covered during class that day. Finally, I have sought to enhance my teaching by participating in CSU’s Center for Teaching Excellence in 2010. During the program, I created a teaching portfolio, which enabled me to articulate my teaching philosophy, describe my teaching methods and examine why I teach as I do. The program provided me an excellent opportunity to examine my approach to teaching. One of the enduring lessons I took from the workshop is to examine critically the methods I use to teach a concept (e.g., visual aids) and to use student feedback on questions I pose as a means to gauge the effectiveness of a particular method.

Contracts (formerly Contracts I and Contracts II)
Until fall 2012, Contracts was divided into a two-semester course. In Contracts, I teach first-year law students. I begin my contracts class with the story that I shared earlier about our jobs as attorneys being to figure things out. I tell students that the class is not based on strict lecture format but that they will have to study the material carefully in an effort to understand it and that we will then discuss the legal principles and underlying rationale together. Over the years, I have experimented with several approaches to engaging students. While I do take volunteers, I also tend to call on a large number of students at random each class to discuss the material and concepts we are studying. I believe this approach is helpful for two reasons. First, it keeps students engaged as everyone is on notice that he or she may be called on to discuss the material. Second and equally as important, it allows me to assess which students are grasping the material and which students are having more difficulty. I have used this method to identify students who may need additional assistance after class. To that end, I am a stickler about keeping my office hours as I believe part of engaged learning requires me to be accessible to students outside of as well as in class. While I believe students should put the hard work in to understand the materials before class, I also try to guide students through the material in various ways to ensure they are taking from it what they need to know. For instance, I always ask students at various points in the discussion whether they have any questions about the material. I also attempt to wrap up a particular lesson by explaining to students what I believe are the primary points they should take away from the lesson. Moreover, I begin each class with a mini-review of the topics we covered during the previous class.

Employment Discrimination

I use an interactive approach to discuss various legal principles and their underlying rationale in employment discrimination as well. I also encourage students to think about discrimination law from a normative perspective, i.e., what the law should be based on any number of policy considerations. For instance, under federal and state law, employees have a right to be free from unlawful discrimination on the basis of certain protected traits, e.g., race or sex. Courts also recognize, however, that in enacting various employment discrimination statutes, Congress intended to leave intact the traditionally broad discretion an employer enjoys to select and control its workforce. Those competing interests may influence a judicial decision on how broadly or narrowly to define what it means to discriminate. I advise students that protecting employees from discrimination is still a relatively recent phenomenon. As practitioners they may be in a position to grapple with novel legal issues that the law has yet to address. They may find themselves arguing for expanding existing judicial interpretations of the law (or for the passage of new laws) to address emerging issues. By using hypotheticals often based on decisions working their way through the courts or situations taken from the news, I challenge students not only to think about how particular judicial decisions might apply to these diverse factual scenarios but how the law should address these scenarios taking into account numerous policy considerations, including those previously mentioned.

I have also attempted to introduce students to the practical aspects of practicing employment discrimination. For instance, I have previously invited a representative from the Ohio Civil Rights Commission to my class to discuss administrative filing requirements in Ohio.

Civil Liberties

I taught civil liberties during my first semester at C-M Law. My approach to civil liberties mirrored my approach with my other courses. I strove to keep students engaged and make class as interactive as possible. The course focused primarily on First Amendment constitutional issues, including freedom of expression and religion. We also covered First Amendment issues in the context of schools and employment. The course was taught in seminar format. For the first several weeks, students read various cases and law review articles pertaining to the First Amendment for in-class review and discussion. Students were also required to write a 25-page research paper on a topic of their choosing pertaining to the First Amendment. Students selected such diverse topics as the right to protest at funerals of U.S. soldiers to the legality of laws and regulations that attempt to curb cyber-bullying. After students selected paper topics, I met with them several times throughout the semester during mandatory meetings to review their outlines and first and second rough drafts of their papers.

During the final few weeks of the course, students were required to present their papers to the class. I ended the class this way because a large part of the class involved student independent research and the presentation phase allowed students to share with the class their hard work on the topics they had selected.

B. Student Evaluations

Introduction

The evaluations inspected for this report were those for the following 13 courses taught by Professor Green:

Civil Liberties Seminar, fall semester, 2008
Employment Discrimination, spring semesters, 2009 and 2011 and fall semesters, 2010 and 2011.
a. Quantitative Evaluations

Given the criteria for awarding tenure and promotion to associate professor outlined in paragraph I.A. of this report the questions selected for analysis from the quantitative portion of the "Student Evaluation of Faculty and Course" commonly used at the law school were the following:

a) Knowledge of Subject Matter
b) Preparation for Class
c) Overall Effectiveness of Instruction
d) Overall Effectiveness of Course

Statistics are furnished in the pages that follow reflecting the quantitative student assessments for Professor Green's classes. Students were asked to rate their professor on a scale of 1 (poor) to 5 (excellent) in each category listed.

b) Illustrative Student Comments

Contracts I, fall semester, 2008, evening

Positive

Professor is very courteous and well prepared for class. He is very knowledgeable on subject matter.

Spends a few minutes recapping what we learned in the class before; it's a good review and gets my brain going.

Very intelligent.

He knows his stuff.

Critiques

Maybe too intelligent. Speaks over heads of ILs.

Professor needs to speak up and enunciate clearer.

Civil Liberties Seminar, fall semester, 2008, day

Positive

Prof. Green did an excellent job and is a great addition to Cleveland-Marshall.

Permitted all sides of a discussion to be presented.

Accessible outside class.

Critiques

The casebook seemed unnecessary.
Contracts II, spring semester, 2009, evening

Positive

Very knowledgeable on material and respectful of students.
I like that he gets alternative viewpoints.

He is always well organized.

The material is presented clearly and students are encouraged to share their views.

Critiques

The 50 minutes class sessions seemed a little too short at times.

Too specific with case facts.

Employment Discrimination, spring semester, 2009, day

Positive

Very enthusiastic and interesting.

Well organized and well presented.

Refreshingly encourage[ing] in interactions with students.

Critiques

[None]

Contracts I, fall semester, 2009, evening

Positive

He does not ignore the questions/concerns of students.

Very approachable.

Very respectful and knowledgeable about subject matter.
The professor challenges us to think through the cases and explore concepts on our own rather than just giving answers.

Critiques

Class discussions go too far off topic.

I don't like this course in general;
contracts is hard.

Contracts II, spring semester, 2010, evening

Positive

Very well prepared. Sparks good discussion.

[i like] knowledge of subject matter and experience in practice.

[Good] flow and slowed down material when appropriate.

Always fair to the students while maintaining a high standard for learning.

You could feel and tell that Professor
Green cares about his students.

Critiques

Professor Green answers too many questions.
Moved a little fast sometimes.

Contracts I, fall semester, 2010, day

Positive

He communicates the subject matter well.
[i like] general demeanor, use of humor, deepth of explanation.
Very analytical, precise. Course tested ability to think critically. Very receptive to students’ questions and responses. [I like] on call list.

Critiques

[I do not like] on call list. I feel uncomfortable asking questions when I’m not on call.

The socratic method of teaching was hard to follow.

Employment Discrimination, fall semester, 2010, day

Positive

Very respectful of students and questions. Far more collaborative than other law profs.

Extremely organized and knowledgeable.

He is very clear and always willing to reexplain [if] people do not understand.

He actually enjoys what he teaches and therefore makes the class interesting.

Great professor.

Critiques

Insists on waiting on volunteers instead of either calling on students or continuing with lecture.

I would like to know exam details sooner.

Contracts II, spring semester, 2011, day

Positive

[I like] being on call; allows for better preparation.
Took time with each topic and explained them thoroughly.

Very knowledgeable of the material.

Highly effective.

He is very respectful and knowledgeable.

Although he uses the socratic method he's still very helpful in guiding students through his questions.

Critiques

Exams (i.e., multiple choice) were excessive and exhaustingly tedious.

[His pace] is inconsistent. He can be extremely slow sometimes but really fast other times.

Employment Discrimination, spring semester, 2011, evening

Positive

Great materials and presentation.

Very thorough.

His great sense of humor makes the class interesting.

One of the best professor at CM.

Critiques

Sometimes the pace of the class was slow if no one volunteered.
Contracts I, fall semester, 2011, day

Positive

Extremely knowledgeable.

He wants to make sure everyone understands the concepts.

Professor Green keeps the class interesting and goes at a good pace.

There is a lot of material to cover in this course; Professor Green keeps everyone involved and forces you to pay attention.

Out of all my professors this semester, Professor Green displays the most professionalism and compassion for his students.

Critiques

Allows students to expand on wrong answers.
Sometimes difficult to follow.

Employment Discrimination, fall semester, 2011, day

Positive

Knowledgeable and has great real world insight.

By far my favorite professor.

Professor is truly an expert in the field.

The professor is amazing.

Give him a raise.

Critiques

Too much discussion.
Contracts II, spring semester, 2012, day

Positive

[I like] the pace and clarity.

I like how thorough and consistent the instruction is.

I like his knowledge of the material and how it relates to real world situations.

Professor Green's knowledge of contracts is second to none. He keeps everyone involved by cold calling on people.

Green is great.

Critiques

Sometimes his questions can be a bit vague.

The pace of the class could have been a bit quicker.
c. PAC Members' Evaluations of Candidate's Teaching

On this page and on those following are thirteen evaluations of Professor Matthew Green's classes. Two are longitudinal evaluations, made prior to Professor Green's application for promotion and tenure, in accordance with law school policy on faculty development. Nine of the evaluations were made during the fall semester, 2012, as part of the promotion and tenure process.

In summary, the PAC evaluations are highly positive. They recognize the diligence with which Professor Green prepares his classes, his skill in inducing his students to thoughtfully and actively participate in their education, and his sensitivity to what his students are thinking and feeling. Without exception, each PAC evaluation finds Professor Green to possess the qualities necessary to satisfy the required criteria for tenure and promotion to associate professor.

III SERVICE

A) LAW SCHOOL

This section lists the various services Professor Green has provided, and provides more detailed commentary by Chairs of important Committees that he has served on.

2008-09:

Bar Exam (Susan Becker, Chair)
Special Committee on Orientation Planning (Michael Borden, Chair).

Professor Borden described Professor Green's contributions on the Special Committee on Orientation Planning:

I was chair of the Special Committee on Orientation planning in 2008-09 on which Professor Green served. This committee did a lot of work in reformulating the orientation program for first year students. Professor Green was extremely helpful in this committee. He attended all the meetings, occasionally helped me prepare for the meetings, and cheerfully and carefully performed all of the tasks I assigned him, particularly providing feedback on the various documents I drafted for distribution to the incoming students. His input during meetings was thoughtful and helpful. In short, his service on this committee was excellent.

2009-10:
Bar Exam (Susan Becker, Chair)
Honor Council (Stephen Gard, Chair)
Hiring Committee for the Director of the Office of Career Planning (Phyllis Crocker, Chair)

Professor Gard summarized Professor Green’s contributions on the Honor Council:

    Matt Green served on the Honor Council in 2009-10. I was the chair. Matt served honorably and performed all of the duties of a council member diligently, professionally and more than competently. In fact, he was outstanding.

Professor Crocker described Professor Green’s contributions on the Hiring Committee for the Director of the Office of Career Planning:

    As Associate Dean, in 2009, I chaired a search committee for a new Director of the Office of Career Planning. Matt was one of four members of that committee. We worked quickly and efficiently—but that meant everyone had to be focused, available, and thoughtful. Matt was all of those. In addition, the time frame was not the best for anyone—we conducted the search, interviews, and deliberations during May and June—the time for giving and grading exams. Matt arranged his schedule so that he could fully participate in this search.

2010-2011

Cleveland-Marshall Fund/Baker & Hostetler Scholars Committee (Lolita Buckner-Innis, Chair)
Clerkship Committee (Brian Ray, Chair)
Honor Council (Michael Borden, Chair)
Faculty Affairs Committee (no Chair selected)

Professor Green reported on his service and role on the Faculty Affairs Committee:

    There was no chair this year, but I took the lead in calling a meeting so that the FAC could discuss Professional Leave of Absence Applications. I also drafted the e-mail to then interim dean Crocker explaining the FAC’s recommendations for the leave applications.

Professor Crocker further reported on Professor Green’s service on the Faculty Affairs Committee:

    As Interim Dean in January 2011, I had the responsibility of recommending to the Provost which faculty Professional Leaves of Absence applications should be granted. I asked the Faculty Affairs Committee to review and make recommendations to me regarding each application. The committee had no chair, but Professor Green took the lead in convening the committee and writing the explanation of the committee’s recommendations. I was grateful to Professor Green for his initiative and follow through on this important and time-sensitive matter.

2011-2012

Clerkship Committee (Brian Ray, Chair)
Faculty Affairs Committee (Matthew Green, Chair)
Faculty Advisor to the Christian Legal Society
Interim Faculty Advisor to C-M Allies
Hiring Committee for Clinical Professors (Mark Sundahl, Chair)

Professor Ray reported on Professor Green’s service on the Clerkship Committee:

Matt has been a very active member of the Clerkship Committee since we reconstituted it several years ago. In addition to regularly attending and contributing to our planning meetings, Matt took the initiative for recruiting the judges for our first, highly successful judicial panel on clerkships. He spent many hours contacting federal district court and sixth-circuit judges. Those same contacts also helped lay the groundwork for the judicial panel in following years, and we have had a much easier time recruiting judges because of Matt’s hard work.

Professor Sundahl described Professor Green’s contributions on the Hiring Committee for Clinical Professors:

Matt served on the hiring committee for the two clinical professorships this last year of which I was chair. Matt was an excellent member of the committee. He was reliable and completed any tasks assigned to him in a prompt and professional manner. He also contributed thoughtfully to the committee’s discussions and posed helpful questions during the interviews.

Clerkship Committee (Brian Ray, Chair)
Admissions Committee (Debby Geier, Chair)
Co-faculty Advisor of BLSA (with Browne Lewis)

B) UNIVERSITY

Professor Green was appointed to the President’s Council on Diversity in March 2010 for a two-year term. Professor Green currently serves on this committee. As part of his duties on the Council, Professor Green was a member of a subcommittee that was charged with recommending ways to improve the recruitment and retention of diverse faculty and staff.
Professor Green has been a University Senator in 2009-10 and 2010-11. As a Senator in 2010, Professor Green was a member of the Interim Dean Search Committee.

Professor Sterio, who was also a Senator in 2010, described Professor Green’s work on the Interim Dean Search Committee:

Matt Green was a diligent member of the Interim Dean Search Committee. This Committee met frequently over a 30-day period. In addition to meetings among Committee members, this Committee also met with the University President and Interim Provost several times, as well as with the entire law faculty, to report on progress in the interim dean search. Many of these meetings were contentious as difficult matters were being discussed. Matt Green conducted himself professionally and demonstrated the ability to handle high-pressure situations. I was thoroughly impressed with Matt Green throughout the search process.

C) OTHER

Professor Green is a member of the American Bar Association.

Professor Green, along with Professor Becker, organized a conference at Cleveland-Marshall on October 21, 2011, entitled “The Politicization of Judicial Elections and its Effect of Judicial Independence.” Professor Becker reported on Professor Green’s role in organizing this conference:

Starting in the spring of 2011 Matt Green and I started planning a conference on the topic of the role of judicial independence in advancing or hindering the LGBT civil rights movement. Matt came up with this idea after Iowa’s Chief Judge, Marcia Ternus, and two other Iowa Supreme Court judges were ousted in their retention bids due to the court’s unanimous decision that the Iowa Constitution bestowed the right to marry on same-sex couples. This project required a tremendous amount of work throughout the spring and fall of 2011, and included getting students and other organizations working on the conference (e.g. Ohio ACLU, Northeast Ohio Chapter of the American Constitution Society). More than 200 people attending the conference, titled “The Politicization of Judicial Elections and its Effect on Judicial Independence," at CM on Oct. 21, 2011, and the vast majority rated the program very highly. Former Iowa Justice Ternus was the keynote speaker. The program also featured remarks by attorney Camilla Taylor, the Lambda Legal attorney who argued the Iowa marriage case, and Ohio State Professor Daniel Tokaji, the Deputy Director of the Mortiz College of Law’s Election center. A video of the conference is available at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/guides/sexualorientation and the speaker’s comments are published in the Volume 20, no. 2 edition of the Cleveland State Law Review.

I. INTRODUCTION

Professor S. Candice Hoke has petitioned the PAC for promotion to Professor of Law. In May of 2012, Professor Patricia Falk, Cleveland-Marshall PAC Chair, in consultation with the Dean and the Vice Chair, Professor Susan Becker, appointed this Subcommittee to gather information and submit a report to the PAC concerning Professor Hoke’s qualifications in the areas of teaching, scholarship, and service. Pursuant to the College of Law’s requirement that “[t]he report shall not carry a recommendation,” the Subcommittee makes no recommendation regarding whether the candidate has met the criteria for promotion. Rather, the Subcommittee has gathered and summarized relevant data below so that individual PAC members may make informed individual decisions.

The Subcommittee studied the candidate’s resume, Personal Statement, student evaluations, and scholarship. It also solicited external evaluators of Professor Hoke’s scholarship, as well as evaluations of her scholarship and teaching by members of the PAC. Members of the Subcommittee, acting in their capacity as PAC members, have submitted teaching evaluations which have been incorporated as part of this report. The candidate’s statement, her curriculum vitae, copies of both external and internal reviews, and scholarship impact analyses and citation lists are contained in separate Appendices that have also been distributed to each PAC member. A copy of this report and its Appendices also has been provided to the candidate at the same time. If the candidate wishes to submit an additional written statement regarding matters contained in this report, the Subcommittee will circulate it to the PAC members prior to the meeting scheduled to consider Professor Hoke’s petition for promotion on November 8, 2012.

II. BIOGRAPHICAL INFORMATION ON CANDIDATE

Candice Hoke earned her undergraduate degree from Hollins University in Roanoke, Virginia, earning departmental honors for her thesis and the Bushnell Award for the “Finest Spirit of Leadership.” After graduate study in Political Science at the University of Chicago, Professor Hoke attended the Yale Law School where she was awarded her J.D. degree. While at Yale, she was Senior Editor of the Yale Law Journal. Professor Hoke then clerked for two years with the Honorable Hugh H. Bownes of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit in Boston, Massachusetts and in Concord, New Hampshire. Following her clerkship, Professor Hoke spent two years at the Hill and Barrow law firm practicing in the area of employment litigation. Professor Hoke left this position in order to enter academia. She spent six years as an Assistant Professor of Law at the University of Pittsburgh School of Law, and one year as a Visiting Professor at Case Western University Law School prior to joining the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law in 1994, where she received tenure effective in the fall of 1996.
Since 2005 Professor Hoke has been active in concerns regarding election law and electronic voting technology. From 2005 to 2008, Professor Hoke served as the Director of the Center for Election Integrity at Cleveland-Marshall, the College of Law's first research center. From 2006-2008 Professor Hoke served as the Project Director of Public Monitor of Cuyahoga Election Reform. In the summer of 2007, Professor Hoke served as the Research Team Leader and Visiting Research Engineer at the University of California — Berkley, working on an assessment of voting systems for the California Secretary of State. In addition, to these activities, Professor Hoke has provided testimony and has consulted with federal, state, local, and academic entities on issues of voting technologies since 2006.

At present, in addition to teaching, Professor Hoke is pursuing a masters' degree in information security at the Heinz College, School of Information Systems at Carnegie Mellon University. She states that this degree program will enhance her scholarship and public service, as "so few lawyers and law professors understand the technical aspects of computer-based information systems that have generated vast new vulnerabilities for our nation and its assets."

III. Promotion Standards: Teaching, Scholarship, and Service

Promotion Standards

Cleveland State University Faculty Personal Policies §8.1.2 provides:

Professor. Appointment or promotion to the rank of professor is based on evidence of sustained excellence in teaching. In addition, the candidate shall have an outstanding record as a scholar or shall demonstrate sustained outstanding intellectual leadership as a practitioner in his or her field. Evidence of reputation in the discipline or a related discipline beyond the local community is required. Only in rare cases may promotion to professor occur before the beginning of the fourth year in rank as associate professor. In rare instances, promotion to professor may be based in significant part upon sustained and generally acclaimed leadership in the realization of the mission of the University.

In addition, Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Procedures and Criteria for Promotion and Tenure, Criteria §4 provides:

[Promotion to the rank of full Professor . . . ] is based on evidence that the candidate has (a) a record of sustained excellence in teaching; (b) an outstanding record as a scholar; and (c) a reputation in the discipline beyond the local community.
Criteria §9 provides that a person has an “outstanding record as a scholar” if he or she “has produced a canon of work, such that as several law review articles, or a treatise, or monograph, which establish the candidate as a well-recognized expert in the field.”

Finally, Criteria §5 provides that “all candidates for personnel action must demonstrate that they have fulfilled their faculty governance and public and professional service obligations.”

Professor Hoke’s candidacy is based on sustained excellence in teaching, her outstanding record as a scholar, and sustained outstanding intellectual leadership as a practitioner in her field.
A. Sustained Excellence in Teaching

Professor Hoke's Approach to Teaching

Associate Professor Hoke was promoted to Associate Professor and awarded tenure commencing in the fall of 1996. Since her promotion, she has taught a variety of courses, including Civil Procedure, Jurisprudence, Constitutional Federalism, Federal Jurisdiction, Work-Family Law, Employment Law, Agency & Partnership, Regulatory Law, and Election Law. In addition, she taught Comparative Constitutional Federalism in the College of Law summer program in St. Petersburg, Russia.

Professor Hoke explains her general approach to teaching as follows:

As my cardinal teaching objectives, I strive to challenge students to develop the essential analytic and practical skills that will distinguish them as legal and public leaders. As often noted by both faculty and students, my classes require intense intellectual inquiry. During our study of the distinctive subject matter, queries, and skills that comprise law school, I also attempt to instill in my students a fundamental respect for the dignity of all persons and openness to new ideas, values, and ways of thinking. But I also hone skills in logical critique, to support their rigorous assessment of competing arguments. I encourage students to reflect upon their most deeply held values and prejudices, and to develop a lifetime commitment to become better persons as well as excellent public-spirited, ethical lawyers. I hold out the goal of their becoming creative architects of the law and legal systems, to assist law in responding to rapid changes in the world instead being merely passive inheritors of a static legal tradition. Finally, I counsel students to retain a healthy degree of their idealism about the ability to achieve justice through law, and to work steadfastly to achieve the promise of "equal justice for all," despite the many diversions and cynics who will cross their paths.

Fundamentally, I recognize that by articulating high goals for my students, cultivating the skills and values to attain them, and overtly affirming my belief in their capacity to reach them, they both achieve more academically and develop the personal confidence requisite to success. Although there usually are some students who would prefer a less personalized method of instruction, I believe most of my students have appreciated being in my rather demanding classes. And while I can be exceptionally theoretical and abstract, reflecting both my prior training in philosophy as well as law, I also teach concrete practical skills, and endeavor to illuminate my students on the essential interrelation of legal theory and practice. As most of my students and many prior faculty evaluators have attested, the dual exposure I provide is both valuable and unusual.

I love teaching and delight in my students’ achievements. I encourage them to develop the character and behavior that befits the public leadership role bestowed upon lawyers. And like a parent (for good teaching in many ways is, I think, like wise parenting), I strive to treat them with equal respect, knowing that sometimes equality for those historically excluded from law and public leadership means providing additional counsel, assistance, and warm endorsement in order that they may have an equal opportunity to succeed.

Over the past decade, I have modified the course requirements in each of my courses in order to implement the law faculty’s recommendations for curricular improvement and to help achieve the Board of Trustees’ objectives for higher rates of bar passage. My course modifications have included requiring more written homework with more frequent feedback than merely a final exam; the use of the full range of grades, especially in the earlier years of law study; using a broader range of classroom technology where it supports educational objectives; and integrating skills development and practical application of legal principles via problem sets into traditional legal courses.

When describing her pedagogy and general objectives, Professor Hoke notes:

In all of my courses at the outset, I use contemporary news articles (and occasionally short videos) to bring vividly to life the types of legal issues that the course will cover and their importance to the world external to law school. I believe that students should have a chance to see how in “real life” currently – not simply in the casebooks – the course’s legal issues matter. This technique has assisted in tying legal theory and concepts to actual legal practice, and whets student interest. Often, the materials I selected allow me to identify the role of lawyers in the dispute or public policy problematic, and to comment on their contributions or lack of skill/judgment. A subsidiary purpose has been to help build student understanding of the importance of their dedication while a law student as real people and their interests will depend on the quality of their representation.
In all courses, I also provide Supplementary Reading materials that have included scholarship (interdisciplinary and legal), news articles, additional judicial opinions, and occasionally an editorial cartoon – that I have developed to update the casebook at low charge to students. These materials allow me to emphasize some points or skills that otherwise would be missed although they are costly in time to produce.

Professor Hoke seeks to refine her teaching methodology and objectives as is appropriate for each class. Her efforts to tailor her teaching to the specific material and concerns of the courses she has most recently taught (Employment Law, Agency & Partnership, Regulatory Law, and Election Law) are described below.

1. Employment Law

Employment Law is an elective . . . introductory survey course that explores the law covering predominantly the non-unionized workforce. I was one of the first law professors in the nation to teach this course (at the outset of my teaching career elsewhere), preceding the creation of the first casebook. . . .

Teaching Employment Law is quite demanding for a law professor because it is actually a course that has been pulled together from a variety of disparate fields that impact the employment setting (i.e., common law wrongful discharge, occupational safety/workers’ compensation, agency, noncompetition and trade secrets law, pension and benefits, and depending on the teacher, various other law). One of the chief hardships in Employment Law is the persistent fact that to remain abreast of the “field,” one actually must stay abreast of at least five fast-moving subfields of employment law, each of which could be a separate course. Trying to remain current in Employment Law can require as much (or more) time as remaining current in all of one’s other teaching responsibilities.

I believe my course has been a success because I did not let any casebook dictate the structure or provide the majority of materials my students read. Instead, based on my own practice knowledge as a former employment litigator and my frequent discussions with current practitioners in the field, I update my Syllabus and materials annually. I want my students to be exposed to the basic law but also develop sufficient sophistication to be able to deal with cutting edge employment law issues.
The materials have succeeded pedagogically. I have often heard praise from prior students regarding their success in handling difficult employment law problems, which they attributed to my course. Numerous former students have written me to relate that they received permanent job offers from their law firms primarily based on the skill with which they were able to analyze and handle complicated employment problems. One alumna reported that she had shared a photocopy of my course materials among numbers of associate attorneys at the large law firm where she was located, as it provided a well-organized overview of the major judicial decisions in the field.

2. Agency & Partnership

The Agency and Partnership ("A & P") course provides an opportunity to study the three hundred year old common law of agency. The course title is actually a misnomer because in addition to Agency law, its scope includes the law of all unincorporated business structures. Thus, in addition to general partnerships, it includes limited partnerships (LPs), limited liability partnerships (LLPs), limited liability limited partnerships (LLLPs), and the most important new development, limited liability companies (LLCs). The LLC form blends aspects of both partnership and corporations with a limited liability shield. It has become the most popular business organization form, now exceeding by far the number of new businesses choosing the corporate form.

The law of Agency is not only fundamental for corporate and business law but also constitutes the essential grounding for parts of Employment Law. By teaching A & P, I deepened my understanding and capacity for teaching that portion of Employment Law. I created a supplement of fascinating, memorable Agency cases, a portion of which I use in Employment. To assist students in the most fundamental Agency principles needed for legal life and the Bar exam, I also wrote a four-page outlined summary which students have repeatedly said has helped them greatly in their bar study and success. Notably, I do not distribute this "crib sheet" until after we have studied the Agency materials.

The business organization materials that cover the hodge-podge of business governance options can be brutally abstract, dry, and uninteresting. Hence, I have taught this portion of the materials as a business strategy course. Using a series of problem-focused materials that I developed, students are exposed to different types of problems that can arise as a particular business grows from one owner to multiple investors in a multi-million dollar entity. They first study the pros and cons of a particular business organized as a sole proprietorship. These include its exposure to lawsuits for tort liability, obstacles to capital for expansion, opportunities to shield from the public its internal business records, and other considerations.

Over the weeks post-Agency, the business grows and faces new challenges. Students must consider whether, at each juncture, one of the newer studied business forms would be preferable to their present organization. A portion of class time is dedicated to group work where legal and client roles are assigned. After the business has expanded into multiple investors, the group work becomes relatively intense and challenging. The students seem to appreciate having limited lecture on major points, and instead having the opportunity to apply the principles to a concrete business situation with "clients" they represent.

When students report back at the end of class on how the problem was resolved, each group has reached a distinct approach, which they explain and we critique. This experience drives home the importance of sound judgment and creative problem-solving as well as legal learning. I am pleased that the A & P course now allows for teaching the lessons I believe to be most important for preparing our students for the contemporary challenges of legal practice, especially in the world of business law practice.

3. Regulatory Law

I originally taught Constitutional Federalism and the Regulatory State. That course provided students with depth exposure to the constitutional doctrines of federalism that are derived mainly from constitutional structure and from the Tenth Amendment. It then explored federalism-intensive statutory areas where the Federal and State governments were both involved in regulating the subject matter or entities. Such areas include (but are not limited to) the health care industry; public assistance benefits/"welfare"; the environment; employment and the workplace; corporate business entities; public education at all levels; the election administrative system; food and agricultural production; the pharmaceutical industry, and energy production and distribution (electrical grid, "green" energy sources, oil/gas, etc.). The original course provided students with an opportunity to study the interaction of constitution, statutory, and administrative law in complex fields of regulation. But it did not provide opportunities for legal practical skills development other than analytic and critical reading, and writing skills.
Over the past decade, I have modified the course substantially and revised its name twice, better to reflect major changes in its structure, expectations, and learning objectives. It became Regulatory Federalism and then simply Regulatory Law. In its current structure, I include more exposure to basic Administrative Law than previously.

Perhaps most importantly, I have re-designed the course is designed to function as a "capstone" that integrates legal learning across the curriculum with skills development. For the past decade, the course has culminated in a student research project and presentation on a regulatory project of their own choosing. They are permitted to satisfy the final written work requirement by either writing a paper on their regulatory problem or by taking an exam.

The regulatory project and its presentation are problem-oriented, focused on a real world regulatory problem that has persisted or a regulatory apparatus that has failed in some manner. To support their skills development, I include units on researching administrative and regulatory law, delivering effective presentations, and exercises in applying core concepts in regulatory law and process. A law librarian visits the class to lecture on relevant research skills, which are different from general legal research. Students learn strategic legal research approaches covering legislative and administrative action, and pending regulatory activity. They meet with me several times to discuss and hone a topic, to craft their thesis, and to clarify expectations. I invite a prior year's Regulatory Law student in to deliver his/her project presentation to clarify the expectations for the presentation. I encourage them to use the presentation grading rubric I have developed as a guide to expectations, and to use visual presentation software such as PowerPoint or Keynote. As audience members, the students use the grading rubric I distribute to provide the student presenter with constructive feedback. This exercise also assists them in drawing lessons for how to construct and deliver their own presentations.

Thus, Regulatory Law is no longer primarily a substantive law class but seeks to integrate skills development with a sophisticated understanding of how the regulatory process actually works—which can differ importantly from the legal rules specifying the process. I seek for them to understand how to analyze and influence the regulatory process for their clients and for the larger public good. My own public service contributions in the regulatory apparatus for election administration, health care/health insurance, and national security have deepened my understandings of the reality of regulatory process, which I seek to communicate.

At least nine student presentations have resulted in published legal articles in law reviews that range from our own to specialized journals at other law schools. I also encourage students who are not interested in publication credit to write up their presentation in a form that allows it to be submitted to the particular regulatory apparatus that needs to improve. These short memoranda have helped to generate important modifications in some regulatory apparatus, including the Cleveland brownfields policy and the city's omission of a comprehensive inventory of available properties for redevelopment. I currently encourage students to let me help them craft a regulatory project that will help to qualify them for the legal positions in which they are most interested. This approach has assisted several students recently in securing a permanent legal position that they value.

4. Election Law

As traditionally conceived and taught nationwide, Election Law is a constitutional law course that draws close attention to the conflicts over federalism and Individual rights that characterize other constitutional courses. From my vantage point, that solely constitutional focus was one of several huge mistakes; most Election Law issues that arise are not constitutional but regulatory and procedural. When I began teaching Election Law in 2005, the existing casebooks exclusively focused on Federal constitutional law and the quasi-constitutional Voting Rights Act (also taught for its constitutional features rather than regulatory import).

Unquestionably, an Election Law course must begin with the U.S. constitutional structure and texts that ground our democratic Republic; that law is a necessary foundation. The mistake scholars have made, however, is to treat it as sufficient. My background as a teacher of Federal Jurisdiction and Regulatory Law, and my public service exposure to the limitations in the practicing bar when election disputes and crises occur, caused me to restructure the course significantly. Beginning with my first Election Law course offering (2005), I have sought to ensure that students recognize all the sources of law that govern our election system, and that they have exposure to the law-making and implementation apparatus at every level and in every branch of government. Thus, I included a major chunk of Ohio election law (constitutional, statutory and regulatory) and comparisons with other States’ law. I modified the topics for depth focus depending on the particular set of issues that were at the time receiving the most news or legal attention (e.g., 2005-06: litigation over Ohio’s election performance; nonpartisan election administration; transition to e-voting; 2007-08: voting technology deficiencies & reform of Ohio’s election laws; 2009-2010: redistricting; 2011: Citizens United and campaign finance). Students were able to satisfy the Administrative Law credit requirement in Election Law.

At the beginning of Election Law, I always ask students if they would like simply the “by the book” course or a more dynamic course that responds to the developing law. By overwhelming margins, they always choose the latter. It does mean more work for me and also less ability for them to know well in advance exactly what judicial opinions we will be reading, which has generated some student frustration. I now allocate less time to dynamic developments and also provide an open-book, open notes examination that focuses on applying their knowledge to resolve an emerging Election Law issue.

This class challenged me as a teacher. Since we were located at “ground zero” for the national elections scene, I endeavored to structure opportunities for students to learn how, or if, the governing law was implemented reasonably. Thus, I appear to have been the first Election Law professor who requested that law students serve as poll workers (election “Judges”). In this position, they would be charged to implement the governing law and also serve the larger public interest in fair elections. I included an “experiential learning” requirement that could be satisfied by being a poll worker or any of several other roles, and required a reflective essay on what they observed and learned.

Most years I permitted a paper in lieu of exam, including for the Upper Division writing credit. Some semesters I supervised as many as 20 papers in this one course in addition to classroom teaching. One paper involved field research on Ohio’s implementation of the National Voter Registration Act. That paper resulted in path breaking litigation after the student submitted it to national voting rights organizations. The student was featured at press conferences, and the litigation ultimately resulted in a comprehensive settlement and consent decree requiring statewide implementation of the Act.

To expose students to a range of election law ideas and critiques, I have brought in speakers from both major political parties, the local Board of Elections, the Secretary of State’s office, and the Libertarian Party. In 2008, in the midst of multiple litigations over Ohio's election laws, litigators from two cases addressed the class about their cases and the litigation's purpose. Both litigators won major federal injunctions upholding their positions.
Summaries of Student Evaluations

The subcommittee reviewed student evaluations of Professor Hoke’s classes from Fall, 1996 to Spring, 2012. The "AVG" scores for Spring, 2009 and earlier semesters were calculated by hand, since computer calculations were unavailable. Results for each semester follow, including representative student comments.

Representative Student Comments:

Prof had great attitude!
I liked her, but believe I could have learned more.
Vibrant, energetic, incredibly smart well-informed & caring professor. You can tell she truly wants us to succeed. Like relying on case law instead of the rules to learn this subject.
I think this will end up being a good class for long-term learning.
Prof Hoke is very nice & cares about her students.
Prof. Hoke handed out the evaluations and was present in the room when we started evaluating.
So distracted/unorganized – rambled on and on most days – wasted a tremendous amount of time throughout the semester.
So off topic – classes largely irrelevant.
Very compassionate and has great anecdotes.
She knows her stuff, but cannot talk about it for more than 10 min of class.
She’s obviously passionate and knowledgeable about the subject matter and she tried hard to pass that knowledge along to the students. She was also very concerned with each student’s path in law school and offered her help and support numerous times.

1 No evaluations were on file for the following semesters: Spring, 2010; Fall, 2009; Spring, 2002; Fall, 2001; Fall, 1997; Spring, 1997.
Helpful for explaining difficult concepts.

Representative Student Comments:

Very passionate and knowledgeable about issues and field. Brings a lot of current issues into class discussion.

Professor is very knowledgeable and well established but better as a contact than a prof.

Class can be a bit random. I feel you do so much excess reading and material for nothing since its barely discussed in class and you’re told way after the fact not on exam.

Fix the syllabus & online course page – only have us read what we will go over in class.

The topic is interesting but I don’t feel like I learned as much as I could have.

She cares about the potential success and interests of her students. She may be the only professor I’ve had who does.

Talks about herself way too much.

Learned nothing.

Representative Student Comments:
Professor Hoke is very knowledgeable and is able to present a fairly unbiased position on election law issues. Extremely intelligent and fun. Interesting issues and she is very enthusiastic. I like the requirement to participate in the election process. It’s the best way to learn. Very nice woman, very intelligent — however the class is a joke. No matter what our assigned reading was she would ramble for 45 mins about election machine hacking. Professor Hoke is very kind and she obviously cares for her students and subject very deeply. Poor organization, and poor teaching methods.

Representative Student Comments:
She’s knowledgeable about regulatory law. And she’s enthusiastic about it. Although she is very intelligent and excited about reg law, she seems passive aggressive and controlling. Prohibits laptops. Most if not all students take notes on laptops. She claims to be flexible, but she’s passive aggressive and makes students feel they’re unprepared.
It was disorganized. No real syllabus. Lectures had little substance. Book was hardly used. Prof tried to sell value of course through Oct. Last half of semester was a class on listening to student presentations.

I have never given a bad review. But this class was a complete waste of time & money. If this is going to be on the 1st year curriculum, it needs significant retooling.

Nice teacher – very experienced & has strong knowledge.

Professor is disorganized. The book was rarely used. While the presentations were great, they were too long and basic[ally] let the professor take a month off. Sometimes we went on tangents.

Professor Hoke inspires you not to be complacent and that if you seek reform you must become a thorn in the side of those who are in control.

... Professor was often too flighty and could not keep on task.
She is knowledgeable about the topic.
She made a course which should have [been] entertaining & interesting boring & a dread to attend.
She isn’t a bad teacher but her concerns about the class seem to be misplaced.
The class is unfocused and I don’t feel like I am ready for the final exam at all. Professor is too intense.
Professor knew the material and was easy to work with outside of class.
I didn't learn anything useful. The course is time consuming. She makes you work on election day. Her lectures are all over the place.
Smart, she cares deeply ... .
Thanks for being a very accommodating teacher.
Very insightful and good use of powerpoint.
Just horrible, scary. She might know the subject but doesn’t teach it. I liked the experiential learning requirement. She knew... her stuff on election law. Best professor.

Representative Student Comments:

- Tangents in class & news recaps distract from lessons/materials which are on the exam.
- Lectures should be more focused on actual reading.
- Too much tried to be squeezed in each class period so that we had to rush over several cases without much discussion.
- One of the worst teachers/professors I have ever had. In fact, I would advise anyone thinking about taking any class with her to go a different route.
- Very respectful.
- Very unclear teaching.
- Nice person. Irritating teaching style.
- Solid, interesting class.
- Course is useful, and very easy.

She is a good professor w/ inside information on the subject.
She truly cares about the subject material.
Class wasn't cohesive – we spent a lot of time on technology problems but only one class on campaign finance & electoral college.
Learned a lot.
[Like about prof/course] House party and practical experience.
She really cares about her students and the issues. Her passion toward election law is infectious. It was very nice of her to have us over to her house.
The course could be better organized. Class time could be used more efficiently.
Respectful to students.
The compassion & her intelligence are unmatched. The lack of structure was not a factor . . . [illegible].
Did not learn much substance.
Should offer 2 sections. 1 practice & 1 more law based. We overlapped too much to do justice to either.
Prof Hoke has great knowledge & enthusiasm for the subject.

Professor Hoke is very concerned about fairness and helping students out in any way possible. She truly wants us to do well and is very supportive. Keeps class interesting. Fun but fair, and always willing to help. She genuinely cared [that]... we understood the material and its applicability to the real world. Very knowledgeable professor. Very interesting professor, I enjoyed her enthusiasm in class and the class was very interesting. Prof is so smart sometimes don't understand questions posed until after class & 3rd review of assignments. While her real world approach to course is helpful and different, I feel she failed to treat enough law and cover relevant material. While certain aspects were frustrating at times, overall I enjoyed the class.

Professor Hoke is a terrific lecturer.

[Like least] The constantly changing syllabus and lack of organization.
I have taken her the last 3 semesters...I think she is a great teacher that cares about/motivates the students.

[Like least] disorganized, often off track discussions. So many cancellations make exam prep extremely difficult.
The Professor is interesting and provides a lot of information. The material was organized and clear.

Professor Hoke is clearly very knowledgeable on this subject matter but I feel I didn't learn anything from her lectures. She was unorganized and sometimes would lashout at students' questions.

Consistently unprepared – cancelled class constantly & came late – does not cover ½ of our syllabus – rude to students – talked more about election law than employment law – unclear when she did lecture – today was last class & I still have no idea what is on the exam. Disrespectful.

[typed statement] This class has been a horrible experience... Prof. Hoke has cancelled class a total of 4 times this semester... [A] substantial portion of our class time each day... was spent discussing areas of law completely unrelated to employment law... [W]e have had to skip almost half of our syllabus...

She was the worst law professor I have ever had. She is extremely unorganized and her lecturers are always over random topics that are unrelated to the readings. She had little to no respect for her students.

She loves this subject & is highly knowledgeable about it, as well as passionate.

Very unorganized – very moody and unreasonable at times. There were incidents where she came to class totally unprepared and other times where she unreasonably snapped at students... She has way too much on her plate right now.

Representative Student Comments:
Disorganized; the lady answered her cell phone in class!!
She is very informed on the issues.
She had a strong understanding of the subject matter.
She did not have good organization, we did not really learn much law.
The class was enjoyable, and the professor very knowledgeable.
No organization—did not cover a lot of topics, a lot of discussion was on election problems. There was no study on the actual law of elections.
Very passionate/energetic professor.
Incredible depth & breadth of knowledge on subject . . . .
Fair teaching and grading.
Too disorganized.
Interesting—thought provoking.
She’s not afraid to get beyond black letter law and talk about what’s really going on.
Experiential learning is what I liked. I enjoyed working at BOE.
She did not teach us one thing about election law.
The professor was never organized and never taught us anything. This was a waste of time and money.
She is one of the most well-known experts in election law and it was great to get her perspective on the issues.

Representative Student Comments:
The professor really explained the subject and applied it to the real world.
Professor Hoke is very smart and very kind—a great combination for a professor. You’ll learn a lot in this class, and she has a lot of knowledge about practical & real world problems.
She gets the students excited about the subject. Professor is fair and very respectful to all.

Great teacher, very approachable.

Great teacher! Her teaching style is conducive to learning materials very well!! It is obvious that Prof. Hoke cares deeply about her students.

Very poor organization, barely discussed cases that were assigned — essentially had to teach yourself the material.

Professor very interested in the material. Very enthusiastic about the class. Very caring about the student & the students doing well in the course & in the careers.

Difficult to follow. Teaching, in class, could have been more organized & clear. I felt like she assumed that I had a business background. It was difficult b/c I have no business background at all.

She taught from Examples & Explanation — this was not a professionally instructed course.

Party @ Prof's house was a nice idea.

Lacks respect for students. Unorganized. Veers off-topic & leaves students to teach themselves.

Representative Student Comments:

She is obviously an expert in this field, and has great passion for the subject.
Seemed a bit distracted with other work and seemed at times to view class as interfering with her schedule.
She really cares about teaching students the material.
No syllabus.
Interesting Professor who is passionate about subject matter & speakers.
Needed more clarity about what was expected from students.
It was the first class that got me actively involved in issues.
She needs more structure and organization in her teaching.

Representative Student Comments:

Actually cares about students.
Top-three professors I’ve experienced . . . Hire more like her for first year classes, as well as generally.
Disorganized syllabus, I never knew what we were doing.
Full of herself . . . . If you are a national expert in something, you typically do not have to tell me a dozen times. Don’t take this class.
Very scattered. Gets off topic sometimes.
I have learned more about legal writing, procedure, and common sense type matters than [in any other class] . . . . She is awesome!
. . . . Great class.
With all of her other academic obligations, it seems like employment law class is an afterthought.
Excellent “teacher.” Does get carried away with personal stories.
. . . . Her presentation is all over the placed, she does not return assignments, and constantly berates students for her perception of lack of preparedness, although untrue. Always off on tangents for more than ½ the class time & talking about how great she is.

Representative Student Comments:
- Truly seemed to care about students and used many alternative forms of instruction... allowed option of paper vs. final for grading.
- Prof Hoke is very excited about the subject is able to excite students about the subject as well.
- Very willing to talk to students about a variety of issues.
- Not as focused on covering the material as I would have liked.
- I truly enjoyed the opportunity to craft a presentation – excellent exercise. Also to opt to do a paper rather than final.
- Too much disorganization.
- Professor is absent minded, rude, and disrespectful of students.
- This subject area... is Prof. Hoke’s strong suit. She was at her best.

Representative Student Comments:

- Employment law is very interesting and Professor Hoke is inspired by it and passes that on to us in class.
She tried hard to engage the students.
Class was everywhere—I had no clue what was going on.
Very nice professor—truly enjoyed this class.
Professor Hoke is a clear presenter with great lectures... Very accessible outside of class.
A little unclear about what our assignments were.
She always made us make-up missed classes! I wish we would have just had a free day!
Very knowledgeable on the subject matter. Doesn’t talk down to students like some professors.
Sometimes she loses track of what is to be done.
She respects students and understands our situation in law school.
Very disorganized presentation...

Representative Student Comments:
I think Prof Hoke is very down-to-earth and accessible. A lot of times I think professors enjoy the power that the title “professor” holds and use every drop to their advantage, but Prof Hoke is not like that at all. She knew so much about the subject area, but was eager to learn from student presentations. This was a treat learning experience and it was very helpful that you could pick your own topic.
... This is a tremendous class!!
One of the best professors I’ve had.

Representative Student Comments:

Easy to... discuss personal presentations.

It was a really interesting course. I liked the class presentation method.

Not much gained from it, but other than paper & presentation – workload is small, so good class with several heavy classes.

A lot of this course seems rather vague; either from the breadth of the subject or just lack of real experience with the course. This course still feels experimental.

I enjoyed the opportunity for researching & presenting information on current topics. Admittedly the first time this class has been offered, but organization needs to be improved & [student] presentations scrapped or altered.

She has an excellent broad based wealth of knowledge and she shares this with the students. The student presentations and papers a great way to assure that we learn how to determine [?] regulatory activities around given topic of interest. This will likely be a good resource in the future.

Excellent course taught by an excellent professor.

Representative Student Comments:

Professor Hoke has difficulty with students. She can be very arrogant & sometimes treats students poorly. She has little patience & often treats us like children. I did not care for that.

I thought the overall presentation was awful. She was frequently unable to answer questions & never returned with [an] answer. To make matters worse, she frequently mistated the law. While I did quite well on her quizzes, I fail to see the relevance of them & do not feel that they prepared me for the bar exam or practice.

She has enthusiasm for the subject matter and genuinely wants the students [to] be better people/lawyers.

She appears utterly unorganized and does not seem very confident in her knowledge of the subject matter; plus she wastes lots of class time.

She has a complete lack of respect for our ages and intellects. She treats students like middle-schoolers – she goes off on unrelated tangents and fails to cover the materials assigned. I spent too little time on partnerships & LLC’s – too much time on agency. She relied & taught out of Examples & Explanations.

Without a close second, she is the worst "in class" professor . . . in this law school.

. . . She seems to care about the success of her students – even if she fails to focus on the course material most times.

Obviously, Candice Hoke is a bright, knowledgeable professor. However, her teaching & student relationship skills leave a great deal to be desired . . .

I thought that the instructor was very pleasant and considerate outside of the classroom, and I really like her as a person.

Helpful, available, knowledgeable – we learned a lot more than it seemed – Very nice Professor, caring, accessible to student questions & after class.

[Like best] Clarity of presentation and selection of relevant cases only for assignments. This professor really cares for students.

I disliked the disjointed lectures that sometimes varied from topic to topic and sometimes backtracked.

I thought this professor was very knowledgeable and explained things clearly. I enjoyed the real-life examples she shared with us also.

This is my fourth & final year of law school and for some reason it’s the first class where I noticed a lot of whiners and complainers in the class—wish she had better control over noise level, etc. at times.

Representative Student Comments:

The class was very interesting and the professor was very enthusiastic and intelligent. In my entire C-M education I have never felt this strongly as to not recommending a professor. Completely unprofessional.

I really liked this class. Some students have been very childish and disrespectful which I found very disturbing. A couple of things about the class were not perfect but what/who is? Keep at it, Professor Hoke!

There was little to no attention given to Employment Law. I wanted to learn the legal doctrines of all aspects of employment. In that respect, I was limited to what I learned on my own from my reading. However, I wanted to get a better understanding of employment law from her, which I did not get. The class format was more similar to an undergraduate class on the social effects of employment policy in America. Interesting, but not what I paid for.

Not very well organized, expects too much from students especially when she missed so many classes, was not well prepared, and failed to cover most of the employment law topics thoroughly.

Sidetracked way too much.

Overall, Prof is interested in students learning.

Very organized. Very dedicated to teaching employment law.

Very nice. Very knowledgeable.

Professor seemed to have real interest in teaching her students. The course introduced me to many new concepts.

We never got our quizzes back.

Often times canceled class or presented a videotape lecture as a replacement. One audio version of a missed class was not made available until 1 week before the final exam – students were responsible to listen on their own time.

[Like best] Her enthusiasm, openness & Intelligence. Professor Hoke as much to offer but the disorganization is a problem.
Very intelligent professor. Does a good job stimulating interest in employment law and applying the issues to present day problems.

In all 3 years of law school, she is the worst professor I have had – based on her lack of respect for us.

She really made students think about the impact of unemployment on economy.

It is one of the most practical courses I have taken at this law school.

Clearly very committed to teaching & to students learning.

Representative Student Comments:

Too opinionated, one sided - for employees.

Very knowledgeable & seeks to give both sides of picture.

Professor Hoke is [a] very interesting speaker (lecturer) She knows the subject very well. The material is also interesting.

Professor Hoke is extremely knowledgeable about employment issues and explains the material very well.

Talks about many things – don't know what it is we need to know – don't feel like I learned anything. Just speaks & can't distinguish learning points.

I think that at times it was hard to follow the syllabus. We skipped around & omitted things in syllabus.

Excellent knowledge base on subject matter integrates such knowledge with everyday examples, thus permitting students to understand the real life applicability of empl law in daily life.

Great respect for other opinions, refreshing to discuss why subject is important rather than just the nuts and bolts.

Incredible knowledge and understanding – took very difficult issues and made them clear.

Frequently late and skips classes.

I understand Con Law & Civ Proc much better now.

Professor Hoke is an excellent teacher – friendly, available, explains well.

Representative Student Comments:
She is a very intelligent . . . accessible prof w/ a great attitude . . .
Towards the end clarity on the material was lacking.
The professor is great, the material is just boring & the book not effective.
She uses plain language to explain things. Very funny person too.
Superior knowledge of the subject matter. Great clarity of presentation. Friendly atmosphere.
I thought the in class problems & fact patterns were helpful in learning how to apply the materials.
I liked her teaching method very much.
Great teacher who responds to students needs.
Supplemental reading packets were wonderful. Prof took time to edit cases & provide factually interesting cases.

Very knowledgeable, enjoyable, great lecturer – Interesting, really enjoyed discussion in class – she explained a lot about procedure . . .
She had a passion for the subject.
Prof very easy to understand. Really knows the course subject and trys to convey it to students.
She is a good “teacher.” She is extremely knowledgeable and she takes the job of conveying her knowledge to the student seriously.
Sometimes lectures strayed from the issues – but not that big of a deal in scheme of class.
Very good instructor – Definitely in the same league as Professor O’Neil.
The progression of the course was somewhat slow and lacked clarity regarding black letter law and its application.
She is extremely intelligent and I appreciated her wealth of knowledge on policy. Every class I learned new concepts, excellent strategies, and new ways of seeing Employment law & issues.

Representative Student Comments:

Whether it was the fault of a poor administrative decision or Hoke herself -- Hoke should not be teaching this course. She is not knowledgeable about Agency/Part. She does not know the subject matter. She obviously did not prepare for this course. The casebook, by her own admission, is no good. So then why did she choose to use it? Shouldn't a prof make sure a casebook is adequate/organized, useful before assigning it? Now --¾ through the semester she tells us to buy another expensive supplement, to make up for the expensive casebook.

Prof Hoke was highly recommended by other students -- however I do not believe Agency is one of the strongest classes she has had to instruct. I really would have preferred to take Prof Hoke for federal cts.

At times she seemed lost which made it difficult to follow the lecture.

She has a thorough knowledge of the law.

She's nice & really cares about the students -- also gave us bar question on agency -- very helpful. Obviously really cared about students & teaching the law.

The lack of preparation just irks me too much.

She puts her heart into her instruction and goes well beyond call of duty to educate her students not just about the course but related matters and practice tips.

I really thought she was a great teacher & had a lot of information.

Very clear.

Sometimes the wording of Professor Hoke's questions are vague, unclear & sometimes "over students' head."

Very accessible/enthusiastic. Keeps the subject matter interesting.

Very knowledgeable about the subject matter – provides interesting, useful "real-life" examples. Respects her students.
Knowledge of employment law w/ excellent supplemental info w/ very useful.
Pleasant to listen to. Gives clear insight on subject matter and knows students interests when needed when further explanation was required.
I enjoyed her style of teaching, and the class itself was very informative.
... she is great.
She's tremendously dedicated to our profession & it shows; tries hard to help us be better attys in future.
Tends to get off pt. a bit but we love her anyways! Course too much work to do 2 emails & paper plus time to ready everyone else's e-mails plus teacher's numerous e-mail.
Too much, too quickly. Would have liked more discussion in the different topics.
Very personable and knowledgeable.
She's extremely knowledgeable in this area.
Spent too much time on Emp. At Will – had to rush through rest of material.
The course covered too many topics. Taking E'ment discrimination out of the syllabus would be beneficial in understanding other areas.
Fair, understandable; one of the few generally good professors.
I thought it was an excellent course. Covered a lot of the employment law in scope.

Representative Student Comments:
Prof. very personable and understanding that this is a very complex area of law which needs lots of explaining.
Especially appreciate practical advice.
Might just be the material but seems very "up in the air" a lot of the time.
She is very passionate about the subject matter. Professor Hoke tries to present all the viewpoints and not just her own ideas. She is an excellent Professor. She cares about her students and how she can help them to do their best.

This course was fabulous & very complex. Prof. Hoke is enthusiastic & very lively; dedicated to our profession & passionate on the subject. Perhaps a bit difficult for professor to bring material to our level of expertise & some haven’t finished con law, either.

Great energy and knowledge of the material. Very good Professor! Also willing to help you understand the different issues.

Organization of the material. There is much material in this course it is hard to structure or pull it together. It is not really her fault, more the subject matter of the course.

The professor displays a genuine concern for the students and possesses an immense amount of knowledge on the subject matter. Sometimes we got off on tangents—although the discussions were always interesting.

She really cares about her students. She is great.

She was very knowledgeable about the course.

I think some concepts were very unclear, it was hard to get a bottom line or underlying rule at it some of the topics.

It is a pleasure listening to a professor who is passionate & knowledge about her subject.

She is truly concerned with her students doing well. She lectures in a manner that is clear. She assigns only relevant reading material.

Very knowledgeable about the subject matter.

Subject matter was very un-interesting.

Sometimes didn’t answer student questions succinctly.

I think the fact that she knows so much tended to be a barrier in her teaching style. It was obvious she viewed herself as teaching clearly, and wasn’t very receptive to students who didn’t share the same view.

Has genuine concern for students. Very knowledgeable.
Professor Hoke cares about this subject and the students. Her respect for students is unparalleled amongst this faculty.
Professor Hoke is extremely knowledgeable on the subject matter. In addition, she allows the class to express alternative points of view.
Her opinions are often terribly one-sided... students are left to believe hers is the only possible interpretation.
Good class. Effective instruction, great enthusiasm.
I like her relaxed style and willingness to "go beyond what’s in the “4 corners” of a case. I enjoy hearing her stories about the “real world” of lawyering, although I know others find her comments border on the excessive.

She's fair – no matter how many people... [complain], she's still fair in her methods.
I enjoy having Professor Hoke as an instructor.
Her teaching style is based on humiliating students – I hate it.
Prof Hoke cancelled too many classes (at least 9!!).
She spent a lot of time talking about herself and her accomplishments. She made me feel inferior because of her “highly regarded” education. She says her teaching method was so good – but felt the need to justify it. Constantly boasts of being so important in this school’s Civ Pro Dept . . . .
She is understanding and very knowledgeable about Civil Procedure. She talked about her personal experience and how law applies outside the classroom. Gave writing assignments that helped develop these skills.
Often talked too much about subjects not relevant to subject matter. Sometimes when she asks questions I felt like she was the only person that knew the answer. There were times I did feel nervous about participating because if my answer was wrong I felt discouraged and embarrassed.
In 18yrs of education she is by far the worst teacher... that I’ve ever had.
Professor was very personable, knew her subject matter, but was too disorganized – often missing class, not having syllabus prepared, etc.

Representative Student Comments:
Teacher is very knowledgeable on topic and generates interest in subject matter. Demonstrates respect for students in & out of class.

[Recommend] More examples, problems to pull all the mat’l together. She was very nice. She really seemed to care about students/course. She never looked down on students.

[Like best . . . ] obvious, extreme knowledge of the subject matter. Presentation wasn’t always clear. It seemed we spent a long time on facts of a case (Prof. would lecture about what happened in case) and then the holding would get lost somewhere in the discussion. Prof. Hoke really tries to take complicated issues & simplify them so we can understand the concepts.
High quality of presentation – provided a clear understanding.
I believe she is really in touch w/ her students' needs and knows how to best impart her knowledge . . .
Professor Hoke is extremely knowledgeable and up to date in her subject area.
Great professor.
Professor Hoke is an excellent professor. It is a pleasure to be in her class.

Representative Student Comments:
This professor is very effective, especially in this course. She was also extremely responsive to student questions and concerns.
Seemed to be unorganized. It was a lot of work for 2 credits. Most of the material was . . . (?) and areas that we covered were not very effective.
Gets off subject much too often.
Enjoyed her open approach.
Hoke is intelligent and highly competent.
Very enthusiastic & knowledgeable. Very in tune with current issues.

Representative Student Comments:

Great teacher. Creates a relaxed atmosphere that creates learning.

Very knowledgeable on the subject matter. Made the course interesting through her enthusiastic teaching style.

Professor was often hard to follow. Spoke above the class.

She spends too much time chatting about herself & not enough on the important issues to be covered.

Prof Hoke is one of the top three professors I have experienced in my ten years as a student. Her teaching ability is superb, her respect for the students clear & her personal knowledge of the subject matter very high.

Prof Hoke is very knowledgeable about fed jurisdiction. However, her tendency to digress widely limited the amount of knowledge she was able to impart.

The class work is fair and the learning environment is comfortable.
PAC Evaluation of Professor Hoke’s Teaching
Summary of Class Visits/Teaching Evaluations

Fall, 2012 Teaching Evaluations

Five PAC members visited Professor Hoke’s class in Fall, 2012 and submitted evaluations. The evaluations are summarized below, and their full text appears in the Appendix.

Professor April Cherry visited Professor Hoke’s Regulatory Law class on October 22, 2012. Professor Cherry observed “spirited discussion” throughout the class and noted that “every student participated.” Professor Cherry concluded:

Throughout the class, I was impressed with both Professor Hoke and her students. There was a mutuality of respect between them. Professor Hoke’s expertise in regulatory law was evident in her teaching. She conveyed the material in a clear, organized, and effective manner. Her teaching style demonstrates affection and respect for her students while demanding rigor of them. Professor Hoke’s Regulatory Law class is a great example of what our students should be doing during their third year of law school.

Professor Phyllis L. Crocker visited Regulatory Law on September 26, 2012. Professor Crocker commented on Professor Hoke’s “deep and broad knowledge of regulatory systems and the political and economic forces and people that affect them” and on her “deft” responses to students. Professor Crocker’s “one disappointment with the class was that it was almost exclusively lecture.” In general, Professor Crocker concluded that Prof. Hoke did an excellent job, throughout the class, of connecting the topics to the practice of law—be that by working in the government relations department of a law firm, for a non-governmental organization, a trade organization, or a government agency. She talked about the value of being able to identify the players and the available options in any matter, as well as the importance of carefully and fully diagnosing the problem at hand so that one can know best how to respond. She tied together the players, options, and problems that the students identified in the automobile industry example to show how one needs to, and can, do that in any regulatory context.

One of Prof. Hoke’s goals in the class is to have students learn skills that they can use as attorneys in the regulatory context. This is a unique skill set that can help set our students apart from others. I was impressed at the way Prof. Hoke wove this goal throughout the class and was explicit with her students about identifying the particular skills they were learning.

Finally, Professor Crocker observed that Professor Hoke remained after the class hour to discuss student writing projects, an act that was "very helpful and meaningful to the students."

Professor Patricia J. Falk visited Regulatory Law on September 29, 2012. She commented that "[c]lass interest, attention, and participation were quite high" and that Professor Hoke demonstrated "almost encyclopedic command of the material . . . . a tour de force in teaching." Professor Hoke "did a fine job teaching the class," Professor Falk observed. Professor Falk concluded:

Professor Hoke is an accomplished and gifted teacher. She is knowledgeable and enthusiastic about her subject matter. She is animated and demanding—keeping her students engaged in the material. She encourages students to come to class prepared and to maximize their classroom experience. It seems abundantly clear that students leaving Professor Hoke's class would have an excellent understanding of regulatory law.

Professor Sheldon Gelman visited Regulatory Law on September 29, 2012. He described Professor Hoke as "lucid" and commented on the wide variety of pedagogical techniques that she employed. He concluded that:

[T]he class was exemplary. It was simultaneously structured, informal, serious, and engaging. Professor Hoke had outstanding command of the material and inspired a high level of student involvement and learning.

Professor James Wilson visited Regulatory Law on October 20, 2012. He commented that students were "engaged" (although a single student was surfing the internet) and they brought special expertise to bear on problems. One student, for example, was a journalist and another is an elected office holder. Professor Wilson summarized his assessment as follows:

It was a very fine class, a model example of what a third year class should be. Her extraordinary expertise and experience was illuminating. She was very lucid, enthusiastic, and respectful. She supplements her personal experience with nontraditional sources that reveal the political aspects of regulatory law.
Longitudinal Evaluations

PAC members visited Professor Hoke’s classes in the years prior to her current application for promotion. Their evaluations are summarized below, and appear in full in the Appendix.

Professor Thomas Buckley visited the candidate’s Regulatory Law class in Fall, 2011. Professor Buckley concluded: “My overall impression of the class was extremely favorable. Professor Hoke is an expert on regulatory law and she conveys what she knows effectively to her class.” Professor Buckley also visited the Election Law class taught by Professor Hoke in Fall, 2011. The class was “mainly a lecture.” Professor Buckley observed that Professor Hoke “is a nationally recognized expert in this field and the class demonstrated that she knows how to convey her knowledge and her own insights in clear and down to earth language.” He concluded:

This entire class was engaging and informative thanks to Professor Hoke’s knowledge of the subject and her enthusiasm in conveying what she knows. She is an excellent teacher.

Professor Susan Becker visited the candidate’s Election Law and Employment Discrimination classes in Fall, 2010. Professor Becker characterized the Election Law class as follows:

Students seemed engaged throughout the class and demonstrated significant knowledge of - and comfort with - the complex subject matter covered in this class. Professor Hoke was clear, enthusiastic, and connected with students on a personal level. Overall this seemed to me a very effective class.

And Professor Becker provided this summary of the Employment Discrimination class:

This was a very good class. Professor Hoke did an excellent job of explaining the origin, structure and contemporary role of agencies, and of emphasizing the importance of agencies in creating and enforcing laws. She also explained how, unlike courts and legislatures, the work of these agencies often seem invisible, but in some areas it is the most powerful force in the development and enforcement of law. Students undoubtedly came away with a new appreciation of administrative law that likely filled a gap in their legal education and which will serve them and their future clients well.
Professor Thomas Buckley visited the candidate’s Election Law class in Fall, 2008. Professor Buckley described the class in detail and characterized the discussion of provisional ballot issues as “excellent.” Also in Fall, 2008 Professor Buckley visited the candidate’s Employment Law class. He noted “a lot of student participation” and that students “seemed genuinely interested.” Professor Buckley visited a second Employment Law class during Fall, 2008. He concluded his evaluation as follows:

This was a good class, with a lot of student participation. The topic is inherently of great human interest and Professor Hoke elicited the lots of good ideas from the students.

Professor Kunal Parker visited the Regulatory Federalism class taught by Professor Hoke in Spring, 2008. Professor Parker described Professor Hoke as “an effective instructor” and the course as an “engaging and instructive” one.

Professor Stephen Gard visited the candidate’s Agency & Partnership class in Spring, 2007. Professor Gard observed that the “presentation was clear and straight-forward” and Professor Hoke responded to student questions “with clarity.”
B. An Outstanding Record as a Scholar and Reputation in the Discipline

Criteria §7 of the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Procedures and Criteria for Promotion and Tenure provide that only scholarship published since promotion to Associate Professor with Tenure and not previously reviewed by outside scholars will be circulated for outside review, as sending out material that was previously reviewed by outside scholars in connection with promotion to Associate Professor would be duplicative. The standard for promotion to Professor, however, looks to whether the candidate has “an outstanding record as a scholar” and “a reputation in the discipline beyond the local community.” Moreover, a person has an “outstanding record as a scholar” if he or she “has produced a cannon of work, such as several law review articles, or a treatise, or monograph, which establish the candidate as a well-recognized expert in the field.” The impact of all of the candidate’s work has had is thus relevant to the consideration of whether the promotion standard has been satisfied.

Description of Candidate’s Scholarship Not Evaluated by Outside Reviewers

In addition to the scholarship evaluated by outside reviewers, Professor Hoke has published one law review article, four interdisciplinary papers in major conferences proceedings that include online access to scholarship, and four “white paper” monographs.

In 1997, Professor Hoke authored Arendt, Tushnet, and Lopez: The Philosophical Challenge Behind Ackerman’s Theory of Constitutional Moments 47 CASE W. RES. L. REV. 903 (1997; solicited). This article was not circulated to the external reviewers for evaluation.

With regard to the interdisciplinary paper she authored, Professor Hoke, in her personal statement, reveals that “[t]hree of the four papers were accepted for publication via competitive peer-review, with one solely authored and three co-authored. Two are focused on Internet voting regulatory and research issues. One develops election forensics approaches in an academic manner. The fourth is a study of Cuyahoga County’s former Diebold voting system.” These papers, not distributed for outside evaluation for the purposes of promotion, are:

Professor Hoke’s “white paper” monographs and reports for various government agencies are listed below. Descriptions of these works can be found in the candidate’s personal statement.

1. Final Report Of The Cuyahoga Election Review Panel (July 20, 2006) (with Ronald Adrine and Thomas J. Hayes) (200+ page report was published electronically to a wide readership and received prominent news coverage).

Professor Hoke describes this project:

Description of Candidate’s Scholarship Evaluated by Outside Reviewers

Synopses of Professor Hoke’s most recent post-tenure scholarship evaluated by outside reviewers and summaries of these reviews are found below. The subcommittee and the candidate selected four pieces of scholarship for outside review, consisting of 2 law review articles and 2 book chapters.

   Professor Hoke’s Summary:

   The article advanced an assessment of the Clinton era bipartisan welfare reform act that substantially differed from its reigning interpretation. Specifically, several critics had condemned the Act for devolving vast discretion to the State governments that would erode the vital social safety net. My close review found this claim faulty. The Act had actually devolved very limited discretionary power to State governments, and delegated power almost only in ways that permitted States to be more punitive and restrictive toward public assistance beneficiaries. It was actually the Federal Act itself that mandated preemption of the social safety net that many States had erected and sought to protect. States possessed very little discretion to undo the harsh terms built into the Act unless the Federal Government authorized a variance from the Act.

Professor Hoke's Summary:

In Voting Technologies and the Quest for Trustworthy Elections, in AMERICA VOTES! (2nd ed. Benjamin Griffith, ed. 2012) (ABA Press, solicited), I argue that both Departments have not fulfilled their statutory legal duties and need to reassess their activities. While my earlier legal works were mainly dedicated to explaining and critiquing statutory and regulatory schemes that governed election technologies, in my most recent article I have moved to a constitutional assessment of deployed voting technologies. The chapter summarizes the conclusions of the definitive scientific scholarship on voting technology and translates the scientific findings into legally meaningful and actionable concepts. I advance the argument that deploying voting technologies that are capable of secretly changing votes and vote tabulation without also using quality assurance auditing measures to check on the tabulation violates the Equal Protection Clause.

Professor Hoke's Summary:

In the aftermath of the Florida 2000 election and the US Supreme Court's Bush v. Gore decision, comprehensive Federal legislation was enacted with over $3 billion appropriated for new election technologies. This chapter poses two questions:

-- From the early 2009 vantage point, what has been the field record of the Federally financed election technologies (voting technologies and statewide voter registration databases)?
-- What are the reasons for the abysmal performance of this new computer-based election technology? Are the deficiencies partly attributable to the Federal regulatory system?

The chapter outlines briefly the types of technical malfunctions that were reported in the 2008 presidential election cycle. It spends most space reviewing the Federal statutory requirements (2002) and dysfunctional regulatory system that resulted. It reaches four main conclusions that include: the activities the statute mandated were not properly sequenced for achieving technological improvement, as the timetables for spending the monies expired before the standards-setting apparatus was in place.

The chapter's overarching goal was to identify Federal regulatory mistakes so that any revised effort would not repeat these. Toward the end, it concludes that instead of preventing future Florida 2000 voting technology problems, the Act has nationalized the problems, rendering us much more likely to experience

2 Professor Hoke's co-author indicates that his contribution was minimal. In a letter addressed to Professor Cherry (found in the Appendices), Dr. Jefferson specified that the book chapter was fundamentally (Professor Hoke's) work. She initiated the project and wrote the entire draft. Obviously all of the legal material was hers. My role would be best characterized as "editor". I took a second pass over the prose, smoothing it, removing redundancy, and correcting the technical material by adding qualifications, rendering it into standard vocabulary, and helping with the footnotes where needed. The only reason I was a coauthor is that we had originally planned for me to do much more of the writing, and because we were trying to bridge the two worlds, legal and technical. I would say our respective contributions in that work were something over 90% hers and the remainder mine.
major vote tabulation or voter registration issues in many States than in 2000. The Federal legislation pushed State and local election administrators into the use of technologies they do not understand and which have vulnerabilities that they cannot control. The impact on election integrity and overall government legitimacy has not been fully recognized.
Evaluations of External Reviewers

The external reviewers’ qualifications are described in detail below, accompanied by summaries of the reviewers’ evaluations of each piece of reviewed scholarship. The letters of review and the resumes of the reviewers appear in the appendices. Unless otherwise noted, Professor Hoke and the reviewer have had no significant professional or personal contacts.

Review by Richard Hasen, Chancellor’s Professor of Law and Political Science, University of California – Irvine, School of Law.

On the University of California – Irvine website, Professor Hasen describes his work in Election Law and statutory interpretation as being at “the intersection of law and politics.” The issues he has written about include campaign financing, election administration (such as voter identification laws), redistricting, the initiative process, and statutory interpretation. Moreover he has been very active in helping to develop the field of Election Law, including co-authoring a casebook, serving for nine years as founding co-Editor of the Election Law Journal, writing (since 2003) for his Election Law Blog (now with over 19,000 posts), and by co-managing listservs in Election Law and Legislation.

Reviewing Judicial Protection of Popular Sovereignty, Professor Hasen writes:

Judicial Protection of Popular Sovereignty accomplishes two aims. The first half of the article serves as a definitive history of the last decade’s attempts to improve voting technology, and particularly attempts to evaluate the security and reliability of various voting systems used either directly to record voters’ votes or indirectly, through vote tabulating equipment which counts hand-completed ballots. Professor Hoke explains in detail the California and Ohio reviews ordered by each state’s Secretary of State and their troubling findings about voting systems’ lack of security and reliability. The first part also describes particular voting technology controversies which arose in the last few years and uses those controversies to illustrate the challenges facing those who wish to have confidence in voting technology. The second part of the article turns from the historical and technological focus to a legal and normative one. In this part, Professor Hoke reviews and critiques a number of court cases which have considered constitutional (and in some cases, federal statutory) challenges to various voting technologies. For example, does it violate the due process, equal protection, or other rights of individuals to cast a vote using technology which does not provide for a "paper trail" to verify that the vote counting machinery is accurately counting the ballots? Professor Hoke argues that these judicial decisions have been insufficiently protective of voters' rights, and argues by analogy from minority vote dilution cases and similar cases that courts should impose stricter scrutiny in these voting technology cases.

Moreover Professor Hasen remarks:

Professor Hoke's article is a powerful indictment of the legal system's failure to grapple with the constitutional issues raised by potential insecure and unreliable voting technology. She is right to call out the election law scholarly community for failing to pay sufficient attention to these issues. Some of the stories she tells in the article are quite chilling, and suggest that much more needs to be done to protect the right to vote for these issues which are nonsalient to the general public and even to many specialists.

Professor Hasen notes that his "only quibble" with this article is that he "would have liked to see Professor Hoke offer more detail about how specifically she would have courts evaluate and adjudicate these kinds of claims, as well as a stronger description of the similarities and differences between more traditional voting rights litigation and these claims."

In summary, Professor Hasen states that this "article makes a strong contribution to the literature and is of very high quality. It is original and thoughtful. It is well researched, well-written, and passionate. It can have an effect on thinking in both the academy and the courtroom (not to mention in state legislatures considering legislation concerning the security and reliability of voting technology)."

Review by Daniel Tokaji, Jones Day Designated Professor of Law and Senior Fellow, Election Law @Moritz, Ohio State University, Moritz College of Law.

Professor Daniel Tokaji is an authority on election law and voting rights. He specializes in election reform, including such topics as voting technology, voter ID, provisional voting, and other subjects addressed by the Help America Vote Act of 2002. He also studies issues of fair representation, including redistricting and the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Professor Tokaji's scholarship addresses questions of political equality, racial justice, and the role of the federal courts in American democracy, with a special focus on election administration. His work has appeared in such prestigious journal as the Michigan Law Review, Stanford Law & Policy Review, Yale Law Journal, and the Yale Law and Policy Review. He is also a co-author of the

In his correspondence, Professor Tokaji notes that he has known Professor Hoke "for several years in a professional context, and (has) spoken with her at various academic conferences and other election-related events." Furthermore he observes that his "professional contacts with Professor Hoke further support (his) opinion that she is a leading expert on the subject of voting technology."

After reviewing the content of the article, Professor Tokaji states:

In my opinion, the article makes an important contribution to the election law literature. As Professor Hoke notes, there has been relatively little scholarship undertaking a thorough assessment of voting technology, and specifically considering the computer science literature on the subject. I am one of the few legal scholars who has written on this topic, but Professor Hoke has paid much closer attention to the computer science literature in recent years, surpassing my own knowledge. In fact, she is more conversant with the computer science of voting technology studies than any other legal scholar of whom I am aware. Her article also does an effective job of explaining the relevance of this literature to constitutional cases challenging voting technology. This is a complicated subject, but Professor Hoke's clear and graceful writing makes it easy to understand.

The article is also quite thorough in its research, referencing all the relevant sources on both the computer science and election law side. She is also fair and balanced in her criticism of the approach that some judges and scholars (myself included) have taken. Although I do not agree with all her conclusions, there is no doubt that the article represents a creative and careful approach to an important subject. It is persuasive on a number of points, most notably the need for courts to pay close attention to computer security research when considering challenges to contemporary voting technology. In this regard, I especially appreciated her inclusion of a comparative law perspective, specifically her discussion of a decision by the German Constitutional Court, whose approach she recommends for U.S. courts.
Professor Andrew Appel has an extensive background in Computer Science, having been awarded a PhD in Computer Science from Carnegie Mellon in 1985, and serving on the faculty of Princeton University since 1986. While much of his focus has been in the area of computer science, he has also written and published articles on information technology policy, the federal policy concerning the export of cryptography. Professor Appel scholarly activity is wide-ranging. He has published 6 articles on electronic voting machines and internet voting, and spoken on panels at the APSA (Political Science) and AALS (Law) national conferences. In addition he has published approximately 98 other refereed articles and books in pure computer science. In 2003 he started studying the issue of computerized voting machines, and their vulnerability to election manipulation by the simple expedient of loading new (fraudulent) computer programs in the voting machine.

Professor Appel discloses that he met Professor Hoke at the Electronic Voting Technology conference in 2007, and has seen her at professional conferences since then. In addition, he notes that he has corresponded with her on about a dozen times since 2007, when he was seeking her advice on some issue or when she was seeking his advice.

Regarding his knowledge of Professor Hoke's work, Professor Appel notes:

Candice Hoke first came to my attention when I was the editor/referee for an article she submitted to the 2007 workshop on Accurate Electronic Voting Technology. This was a refereed conference (that is, full articles were solicited, not panels, and the articles were selectively refereed with less than a 50% acceptance rate). The conference organizers solicited articles from computer scientists, lawyers, political scientists, and related fields. Professor Hoke's article, "GEMS tabulation database design issues in relation to voting systems certification standards" was one of the only articles submitted by a lawyer, and what was interesting was that it was primarily on an issue of technical computer science and engineering. This was an excellent article that raised an issue not previously noticed; it was well written, technically accurate, and timely.

In discussing his review of this article, Professor Appel writes:

I have also read Prof. Hoke's recent article entitled "Judicial protection of popular sovereignty: redressing voting technology," 62 CASE W.L. REV. 997 (2012). I am not a lawyer (as they say on the Internet), so I cannot evaluate the Supreme-Court jurisprudence analysis, but the explanations of how the science bears on the topic is first-rate. Lawyers are sometimes tempted to pile on with every possible argument, so that the important arguments are hidden under a mess of weak arguments; but this article homes in on the main technological point, with a sharp focus. If there’s no good way of knowing that the numbers reported by the machine have anything to do with the actual votes cast, then the people have lost the substantive right to vote. This is an excellent article, scholarly and precise (with regard to the aspects where I can judge).

Review by Deborah Merritt, the John Deaver/Baker Hostetler Chair in Law, Ohio State University, Moritz College of Law.

Professor Merritt has published widely on issues of equality, affirmative action, federalism, health and technology, legal education, tort reform, and law and social science. In December 2008, Professor Merritt and her colleague Ric Simmons published a new Evidence casebook, Learning Evidence: From the Federal Rules to the Courtroom. It has been described as a text that offers a new pedagogy for teaching the basic Evidence course. In addition to her impressive body of scholarship, Professor Merritt has been honored by the Ohio State University as a University Distinguished Lecturer (1999), University Distinguished Scholar (2002), and Distinguished Teacher (2009). These are awards that are bestowed upon the University’s most outstanding professors.

Professor Merritt describes State Discretion Under New Federal Welfare Legislation: Illusion, Reality, and a Federalism-Based Constitutional Challenge as a “very thoughtful article that challenges the conventional wisdom about aspects of the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation Act of 1996.” According to Professor Merritt, in this article, presents a novel thesis. Professor Hoke “persuasively argues, the statute substantially restricted state discretion: It imposed massive new costs on the states, while tightly limiting their ability to deviate from federally mandated program requirements.” Professor Merritt explains:

To buttress this conclusion, Professor Hoke carefully analyzes the statute’s complex scheme. Her observations are meticulously documented, yet easy to follow. Achieving that dual result is no easy task; the original statute is densely worded. Professor Hoke, however, clearly illuminates key aspects of the statute. States, for example, must compel welfare recipients to assign child support rights to the state and to cooperate in establishing paternity. If a state deviates from these requirements—finding them, for example, an unwise intrusion into family privacy—the state loses some of its federal support.
In addition to illuminating the operation of this landmark welfare legislation, Professor Hoke identifies options for states that want to challenge federal control of their decisionmaking. Some states may choose to forego at least some federal funds; others may apply for program waivers; still others may establish "segregated" programs supported entirely by state dollars. Professor Hoke helpfully and concisely explains how states might pursue each of these paths.

Finally, Professor Hoke outlines a possible Tenth Amendment challenge to the federal act's provisions. She acknowledges that, at the time of her writing, the Supreme Court treated spending conditions with extreme deference. She notes, however, the Court's burgeoning doctrine in other Tenth Amendment cases and suggests ways to apply this doctrine to spending-power challenges. Her analysis proved extremely prescient in light of the Supreme Court's recent health care decision.

Concluding, Professor Merritt states:

Professor Hoke is a widely respected scholar in the field of federalism; this article contributes to her well deserved reputation in that field. The article, like her other work on federalism, has been cited by dozens of scholars—including scholars as renowned as Daniel Meltzer, the Story Professor of Law at Harvard Law School. Even before reading this piece, I would have named Professor Hoke as one of our leading national scholars on federalism. This piece amply confirms her stature in the area.

Review by Muriel Morisey, Associate Professor of Law, Temple University, Beasley School of Law.

Professor Morisey teaches Administrative Law, Legislation and Public Policy, and Professional Responsibility. Her primary scholarly interest is how the United States Congress makes policy decisions and enacts legislation. Prior to joining the Temple faculty Professor Morisey was on the faculty of Harvard University’s Graduate School of Education and Director of Policy Analysis in the University’s Office of Government, Community, and Public Affairs. She has also served as Legislative Counsel of the American Civil Liberties Union and the United States Department of Justice Civil Rights Division. Professor Morisey is Vice-chair of the Leadership Conference Education Fund, a national civil rights organization, and a former Chair

Concerning State Discretion Under New Federal Welfare Legislation: Illusion, Reality, and a Federalism-Based Constitutional Challenge, Professor Morisey notes that "[t]he clarity, effective organization and solid analysis of the article enhanced its contribution to understanding one of the most significant pieces of domestic policy legislation in decades." With regard to the analysis, Professor Morisey writes:

Professor Hoke rebuts critics who complain that the legislation transfers too much control to the states over the use of federal social welfare funds. She presents her thesis clearly and succinctly at the outset. She facilitates understanding of the subject area for those with special expertise and those who are not already familiar with it. The article is also well-organized. The reader gets at the outset a thorough summary of the legislation's provisions, a necessary element of following and appreciating the subsequent analysis. The summary presents the substance of the legislation without succumbing to the temptation some feel to use inaccessible legalize when presenting legal material. Statutory language is inherently so cumbersome that plain English summaries, such as the one Professor Hoke provides, are enormously useful...

Professor Hoke argues that, contrary to the widely-held view, the legislation grants too little rather than too much discretion to the states. She says states cannot fully undo the troublesome impact of the statute's rejection of indigents' entitlement to benefits based on national eligibility standards. She says Congress provides some opportunities for states "to move in a more compassionate direction" but adds states face "onerous procedural hurdles or a risk of financial penalties." Such a charge is most persuasive when grounded in specific features of the statute, which Professor Hoke sets out effectively and in detail.

Professor Hoke also argues that states should undertake two strategies mending the safety net, as she puts it. One is to take advantage of specific statutory features and the other is to pursue constitutional challenges based on "the Spending Power as informed by Tenth Amendment values." Her argument about using statutory provisions is solid but would be more persuasive with a bit more detail in the form illustrative examples of how her suggestions would operate in practice. As for the possible constitutional challenges, Professor Hoke is rather tentative about their potential. For that reason her argument is less persuasive than it might have been. Both her statutory and constitutional arguments find support in her endnotes. Much of this could have been put in the text to strengthen its persuasive power.

Professor Hoke was writing about a new, complex statute that embodied a number of controversial policy positions. Much more could have been and since has been written about the statute. But she had a specific thesis that did not require exploration beyond what she covered. Professor Hoke could have inserted more textual detail about the political and public policy controversy surrounding welfare reform. However, I am not persuaded doing so was essential to the analysis and might have been a distraction from her key goal, which was to challenge the prevailing liberal commentary on the legislation.

Although Professor Morisey does not believe that Professor Hoke continues to be a well-recognized expert in this field because “it is important to note that at some point after writing the article evaluated here she shifted her focus to voter participation and electoral politics.” Regarding the contribution made by this article, Professor Morisey believes that “the article’s greatest potential was to aide implementation of the statute at the state level. It may in fact have done so.”

In the end, Professor Morisey concludes that “Professor Hoke’s article makes a high quality contribution to the field of statutory analysis and policy implementation in the area of social welfare programs.”

Review by Andrew W. Appel, Eugene Higgins Professor of Computer Science, Princeton University.

With regard to Professor Hoke’s book chapter, Voting Technologies and the Quest for Trustworthy Elections, Professor Appel notes that Hoke covers different ground than in her previous work. He writes:

The Chapter, “Voting Technology and the Quest for Trustworthy Elections” by Hoke in the second edition of America Votes covers slightly different ground. Again there is a good summary of the technology issues for the law audience, but instead of focusing on the legislative history 2002-2008, she covers litigation 2004-2010. Indeed there was quite a bit of litigation, mostly at the state level in several stages, and this is the best coverage of it that I have seen. Also in that article is coverage of Internet voting. Several computer scientists, including myself, wrote during 2004-2008 on the dangers of Internet voting. Professor Hoke is the only scholar to notice (and pay sufficient attention to) the role of the Defense Department’s “Federal Voting Assistance Program” in promoting Internet voting; that section of the article covers material that cannot be found anywhere else. In general it is one of the best scholarly articles on Internet voting.

Professor Appel concludes:

Of the half dozen law professors that write on the issue of election technology, the two that are the most knowledgeable and active, that have published the most influential work, that are best-connected to the technology side, are Prof. Candice Hoke and Professor Richard Hasen of U.C. Irvine. Among computer scientists, the ones that write on the policy and legislative history of voting technology are Prof. Douglas Jones (U. Iowa) and Dr. Barbara Simons (researcher emeritus, IBM). I would say that Prof. Hoke is certainly in this top-four group, in terms of influence in recognition; that is, she is clearly a well-recognized expert in the field. There are other computer scientists who write on these topics, but are less knowledgeable about law and legislation; and there are other law professors in this field who know the voting and legislation but not so much the technology.

Review by Walter Mebane, Professor of Statistics and Professor of Political Science, University of Michigan.

Walter R. Mebane, Jr. is a Professor of Political Science and a Professor of Statistics at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. He works on political methodology and American politics, especially elections. His current primary project is election forensics, a field of study that aims to develop statistical and computational tools for detecting anomalies and diagnosing fraud in election results. Professor Mebane’s work in this area includes several papers about the 2000 presidential election focused on Florida and a report written for the Democratic National Committee analyzing the 2004 presidential election in Ohio. Another project that Professor Mebane is currently engaged in studies strategic coordination among voters in American elections, linked to the separation of powers between the President and the Congress.

Professor Mebane discloses that he has had previous contacts with Professor Hoke, but that these have mainly involved meeting her at various conferences.
In his review of Professor Hoke's scholarship, Professor Mebane writes that he believes that "Professor Hoke's work . . . make[s] her a well-recognized expert in the field" of election technology. With regard to Professor Hoke's book chapter, Voting Technologies and the Quest for Trustworthy Elections, Professor Mebane writes:

This chapter has a thorough and accurate coverage of state of the voting technology field (where it intersects legal and policy processes) as of late 2011. . . . The chapter conveys with great clarity how the narrowly technical issues have presence in policy fights, both in entirely domestic settings (HAVA, TGDC) and as concerns overseas ballots (UOCAVA, FVAP).

While generally complementary of this book chapter, Professor Mebane has one "minor complaint." He writes:

The one development it would have been good to see discussed more is technology for post-election audits of paper ballot records, which can be very useful for validating electronic tallies. . . . I don't know whether any litigation has yet involved such audits—perhaps the lack of such cases is a reason for their omission— but they and analogous technology is an essential part of the 'evidence-based elections' mention in the paper.

Review by Daniel Tokaji, Jones Day Designated Professor of Law and Senior Fellow, Election Law @Moritz, Ohio State University, Moritz College of Law.

After reviewing the scope of the subject matter of the book chapter, Professor Tokaji opines:

Professor Hoke's book chapter covers a great deal of ground, but it is impressively thorough and careful in its analysis of all four topics. Like her article, the book chapter is meticulous in its research, addressing all the relevant computer science and election law literature of which I am aware. It is also lucidly and engagingly written, discussing complicated topics in a way that makes them easy for non-experts to understand.

While there is much to admire in this chapter, I was especially impressed by her discussion of administrative and technical challenges that have attended the implementation of HAVA's voting technology mandate. These problems include the sequencing of voting technology changes—including the replacement of old voting technology before new voting system standards were in place—as well as problems with the market the HAVA created for new systems. She offers the most comprehensively research and rigorously analyzed discussion of these technological and administrative problems that I have seen anywhere. I also found great value in the book chapter's discussion of the role that the Justice Department has played and should play with respect to voting technology. She makes a persuasive case that the Justice Department has not been sufficiently active in its enforcement of federal laws governing voting technology, probably because it lacks the requisite technical expertise to evaluate arguable violations. Finally, her discussion of the perils of internet voting is the most extensive that I have seen in any legal scholarship. She makes a strong case that the U.S. should proceed with great caution in this area.

With reference to both this book chapter and her article, Judicial Protection of Popular Sovereignty: Redressing Voting Technology, Symposium: Baker v. Carr After 50 Years: Appraising the Reapportionment Revolution, 62 CASE W.L. REV. 997 (2012), Professor Tokaji states:

Taken together, these two pieces make a significant contribution to the scholarly debate over voting technology. Both are high-quality legal scholarship addressing an important subject. Both the article and book chapter are careful and balanced in her approach, clearly and gracefully written, and original in their conclusions. There is no doubt that Professor Hoke has established herself as a leading expert on the subject of voting technology through this scholarship. While it is always hard to gauge the impact of relatively recent work, I expect that both pieces will have a significant influence not only in academic circles, but also in the ongoing debates in courts and legislative bodies.

Review by Andrew W. Appel, Eugene Higgins Professor of Computer Science, Princeton University.

Regarding this book chapter, Professor Appel succinctly writes:

This is a scholarly and readable account of computerized voting in the period 2002-2008: legislation and legislative history, technology and its scientific analysis, and administration. It is accurate on the facts and their interpretation (at least for the parts where I have expertise to judge, which is much of it). One of the article’s main contributions, from my point of view is to analyze concisely and effectively the many ways and mechanisms by which HAVA (Help America Vote Act of 2002) made things worse instead of better—and in a case where legislators really intended, in a bipartisan way, to make things better. The article has a good explanation for a law audience of the relevant results in computer science. In addition, Section III of this paper is the best coverage of computerized voter-registration databases that I have seen, except for Prof. Hoke's later work.

Review by Walter Mebane, Professor of Statistics and Professor of Political Science, University of Michigan.

Professor Mebane states:

This chapter offers a thorough discussion of HAVA, covering its origins, form and consequences. Appropriately, it is mostly a catalog of HAVA's essential failure. The California TTBR and Ohio EVEREST studies, discussed in the chapter, demonstrate the inadequacies of procedures, regulatory environments and markets in the wake of HAVA to produce reliable and trustworthy voting technologies. The chapter also gives a good overview of shortcomings in voter registration databases following HAVA. The chapter is not framed as a road map to future litigation in that it does not cite specific state and federal laws that are implicated by the various events discussed, but the discussion of the facts of the matter is sound.
C. Service

Criteria for Service

Candidates seeking promotion to full professor “must demonstrate that they have fulfilled their faculty governance and public and professional service obligations.” Criteria § 5. As defined in Criteria § 10, the “Public and professional service obligations,” as used in Criteria § 5, encompasses:

(a) public service, which means

(i) engaging in activities that enhance public understanding of the law or of issues in related social, economic, or political fields; and

(ii) providing professional services or making other contributions to the work of governmental, educational, charitable, or public interest entities, or to others that serve the interests of significant segments of the public; and

(b) professional service, which means

(i) service to the profession of law; and

(ii) service to organizations furthering the work of legal education.

Candidate’s Record of Service to C-M and Cleveland State University

Professor Candice Hoke has served the College of Law and Cleveland State University in several capacities since her promotion to associate professor with tenure in 1996. Her committee work and related service work is described below. In addition, Professor Hoke has given numerous presentations in the wider community in an effort to expand public understanding of the law. Her recent presentations are described in her curriculum vitae provided in the Appendices. In addition, Professor Hoke has served the College of Law and the University as the Director of the Center for Election Integrity.

Professor Hoke describes her record of service to C-M, as follows:

I have served on a myriad of law school committees that shouldered substantial work, including Standing Committees and a multi-year ad hoc Curriculum Reform Committee. The most significant workloads and work products occurred in that committee and in the Building Committee. My Building service extended over virtually all the years that the law Building renovation was planned and executed. I have also served a total of five years on Academic Standards, two years on the Admissions Committee, five years on the Cleveland-Marshall Fund, four years on the Teaching Committee, two years on the Appointments Committee, and have chaired the Library committee. I have also served on an assortment of other committees that were not charged with significant duties.

For the better part of two years during the late 1990s, the Ad Hoc Curriculum Reform Committee met repeatedly under Associate Dean Jack Gutman’s leadership. I drafted large portions of the final report that contained recommendations for restructuring the First-year law program. That report received law faculty endorsement by overwhelming margins but then was later set aside. The successful C|M curricular reform discussed over the past 24 months offered similar recommendations and rationales as that prior effort.

For six years I served as the Law Faculty’s representative to the University Health Care and Benefits committee. This committee demanded considerable hours each year, both in committee work and in following up with the law school constituencies. I was a major contributor to the structure of employee health care options, and helped the university administrators craft the options.

Other College of Law service has included four years as a Faculty Senator and over a decade of participation and rotating leadership in the Employment & Labor Law Teachers’ Group. In the latter role, I drafted the documentary record required for the Concentration, and first launched the annual E/L speakers program that has been underwritten by a prominent local labor and employment law firm. The E/L teachers group exercises stewardship over the E/L curricular offerings and quality of adjuncts; we work closely with the Associate Dean to facilitate class scheduling that does not cross-schedule major E/L courses to ensure that students can satisfy the Concentration requirements. We also work with the ELLA student group (Employment and Labor Law Association) to plan social and educational events.

In work for the PAC, I have chaired the PAC subcommittees on the tenure and promotions of Professors David Snyder and Lolita Inniss, and have served as a member on Professor Brian Ray’s subcommittee.
While her services to the Cleveland State University over the past 15 years has been multi-faceted, Professor Hoke believes that four of her activities are most noteworthy. She states:

The contributions I have made to the University’s larger interests that may be most noteworthy include:

1. The Student Poll worker excused absence policy that the Faculty Senate and University Administration approved in 2006 and which continues in force currently. I drafted the proposal and presented it to the Senate after President Schwartz also endorsed the idea. Our CSU policy has been quoted in Federal documents nationwide as a model policy that other universities, colleges and community colleges should emulate. Congressional oversight committee counsel have also commented on its helpfulness. As a result, CSU has been able to support “engaged learning” opportunities for students and also help shoulder the public service of staffing polling places. Our CSU effort is cited to employers around Cuyahoga County as a challenge for them to release some employees to help staff polling places with qualified workers. CSU has provided regional and national leadership that fills a gap, assists in assuring the fundamental right to vote, and helps rebuild Ohio’s reputation as a “good government” State.

2. Working closely with the University’s HR Administrator and the CSU Executive VP on Health Care issues: The cost and set of health insurance options constitute contentious, expensive issues over which some employers face strikes, decreasing morale, and other negative responses. We forged a congenial working environment across units, with all seeking to understand and realize simultaneously the University’s interests in cost containment with the needs of employee groups. I helped to set the tone in the committee, aggressively questioning insurance companies on their proposals (to reveal hidden profit lines), and seeking to develop options that would assist in keeping health insurance options affordable for all CSU employees. I left the Committee in 2006 to focus on the Center for Election Integrity’s work.

3. Currently, I chair the Senate’s Computational Services Committee (2011 - present), and serve on the University’s IT planning committee, ITAC (Information Technology Advisory Committee) (2010 - present). These are proving to be intensive assignments as the University faces major IT decisions and transitions.

4. U. S. Department of State-sponsored International Guests – Over the past six years, by request of the Cleveland Council on World Affairs (which works with the State Department), I have organized and hosted at least eight separate groups of international guests at CSU. One of these featured over 30 journalists from around the world. Another brought forward legislators from Southeast Asian nations. Virtually all wanted to learn about government accountability in the U.S., the university’s role in fostering democratic process, and how the university was working to help resolve Ohio election issues. Sometimes I brought in other speakers, for instance, from local government. Other law faculty joined or moderated discussions with these groups and managed other groups when I could not. More recently, the Dean’s Office has assisted in the organization of these meetings.

The Center for Election Integrity

Professor Hoke drew up a proposal for the Center. Consistent with the University’s policies governing research centers, she presented it to the Deans of Law, Urban Affairs, and Graduate Studies. With the endorsements of key administrators, including then-President Schwartz, Professor Hoke worked with CSU Board of Trustees in defining the Center’s work and structure. In her personal statement, Professor Hoke writes about her ideas for the center:

Founding the Center for Election Integrity seemed the responsible course of action after the 2004 presidential election. Ohio’s election system had not functioned in ways that guaranteed fundamental voting rights and the capacity of the People to hold their governments accountable. The requirements of Ohio election law had not been taught to poll workers and election staff, undermining the capacity for respecting and implementing the law. While some critics perceived a partisan strategem within the Ohio election difficulties, from my discussions at the polls and with poll workers of both parties, it seemed more a failure of education. Ohio needed to improve its assurance that voters’ ballots would be cast and counted in accordance with governing law. Our University’s assets for this work included its geographic location, its public administration faculty and research center, and its law school’s historic depth in public law.

Although the Center was open for only 3 years, the Center was awarded $346,000 to study and produce a guidebook on recruiting and training college poll workers. Vis-à-vis the success of this project, Professor Hoke writes: “The congressional oversight committees were so impressed with it that they funded multiple special grant programs for colleges and universities to pilot such programs using our Guidebook.” The Center also held two conferences during the fall of 2005 that were dedicated to exploring Ohio election reform issues.
In May 2006, “following the Federal primary election debacle that launched the county’s new Diebold e-voting equipment,” the Cuyahoga Board of Elections (BOE or Board) appointed Professor Hoke to a member of the 3-member Cuyahoga Election Review Panel. They charged the panel to investigate the causes of the primary debacle. With Congresswoman Stephanie Tubbs Jones, the Center convened public hearings around the county, hired law student staff and produced a Report in late July, in time for the recommendations to be implemented during the preparation for the November general election. Professor Hoke states:

> With our findings, we recommended over 300 separate steps to improve the county’s election performance. I drafted approximately 90% of the Report. Shortly thereafter, the Cuyahoga County Commissioners and the county Board of Election appointed the Center for Election Integrity to serve as “Public Monitor of Cuyahoga Election Reform.” In that capacity, we spent many hours at the Board’s offices between August – December, seeking to explain and support their implementation of the Report.

In summing up her participation in the Center, Professor Hoke writes: “Our Center drew notable national, State, and local attention for its unprecedented on-the-ground security work in an actual election.”
Candidate’s Record of Service to the Bar and Legal Professional

Professor Hoke has been an active member of the American Bar Association (ABA) and the Association of American Law Schools (AALS). She describes this service as follows:

I have been active in the American Bar Association, serving as a Presidential appointee to the ABA Standing Committee on Election Law (2007-10, 3 annual appointments). In this prestigious and influential bipartisan policy body, I have drafted two Resolutions related to election technologies that the Committee introduced and the House of Delegates unanimously passed. I chaired subcommittees on the ABA’s election policy statements, and delivered lectures at national conferences and Section meetings (as requested), and worked with other Sections on other policy statements.

In the 1990s-early 2000s, I was active in the Section on State and Local Government, where I also helped to plan two national Section meetings.

In the Association for American Law Schools (AALS), I co-chaired a “cross-cutting” session on voting technologies at the 2012 Annual Meeting in Washington, D.C., and planned the session’s panels with a law professor at the University of Miami.

Candidate’s Record of Public Service

Professor Hoke has been actively involved in service to the public through her activities in connection to election law and voting technology. Although the Subcommittee requested evaluations from sources identified by Professor Hoke regarding her public service, only one, Douglas A. Kellner, replied. Mr. Kellner serves as the Co-Chair of the New York State Board of Elections, and is a partner in a law firm that specializes in litigation and real estate law. Mr. Kellner worked with Professor Hoke on various projects. Regarding their interactions Mr. Kellner writes:

In the course of my activities with the Board of Elections, I have worked with Professor Hoke in connection with the promotion of election integrity. She has appeared on a number of panels on the subject that I have attended. I have also gotten to know her through her attendance at several conferences on election integrity issues that we have both attended. We also serve together on the Advisory Board of the Verified Voting Foundation.

In evaluating her service to the cause of election integrity, Mr. Kellner states:
Professor Hoke has been an extremely active contributor to the work of the Verified Voting Foundation. She writes very frequently, often more than once a day, to the internal list of the Election Verification Network, which keeps the members informed on issues relating to election technology, legislation, litigation and regulatory issues that affect voting systems. Her writing is both high informative and incisive.

Professor Hoke also took a leadership role in a particular project when I also invested a substantial amount of time – the acquisition of Diebold/Premier’s election business by Election Systems & Software (ES&S). ... Professor Hoke assumed the laboring oar in negotiation of anti-trust and other issues with the United States Department of Justice. Her preparation was extremely thorough and we achieved a very successful result.

In closing, Mr. Kellner states that Professor Hoke’s contribution to election integrity has been indispensable.

Professor Hoke and the Center for Election Integrity have made a very substantial contribution to the field which is absolutely essential to maintenance of a vital democracy. Her grasp of both the legal and technical issues of election administration cannot be matched and could not be easily replaced.

In 2009, the former PAC Chair, Tom Buckley spoke to the former Ohio Secretary of State, Jennifer Brunner about Professor Hoke’s election reform work. Professor Hoke had been part of a watchdog group involved in the surveillance of Ohio election reform. Secretary Brunner had an unfavorable impression of Professor Hoke’s involvement. Professor Buckley reports:

Secretary of State Brunner began by saying that she could not give Candice the best recommendation. While she "has made contributions," her actions were erratic and were not helpful to election integrity.

Secretary Brunner said that Candice’s attacks on a state agency (which I understood to the Secretary of States office) were not helpful.

Secretary Brunner turned to a voting machine study which was commissioned. "Confidentiality agreements" had to be entered into to protect the manufacturer’s source code. There was a negotiation with CSU regarding participation in the study of the voting machine; university scientists and corporate scientists were both to be involved in parallel studies of security. Candice caused CSU to lose a $300,000 grant because she could not keep up. ... Secretary Brunner had to call in Mike Schwartz, CSU's former president on account of Candice.

While, Secretary Brunner noted that she maybe “too sensitive,” she believed that Professor Hoke’s work made her job as Secretary of State more difficult.

In her personal statement, she details two of the major public service initiatives she undertook after the closing of the Center for Election Integrity. She believes that these projects are illustrative of her service to the public. They are described in detail below.

1. 2009-10: Divestiture Following the Merger of the Two Largest Voting System Companies

   When the two largest voting systems companies in the world announced a completed merger in August 2009 for a price tag just under $5 million, the combined company's voting technology would have obtained control of over 75% of all U.S. cast votes. Both of the companies that had merged had generated a deplorable record of price discrimination and virtual extortion against county governments, among other well-documented misconduct. ES&S/Election Systems and Software’s purchase of Diebold’s Premier Election Solutions Division and their merger of operations had been shrouded from the public until implementation was underway, likely designed to render any objection moot.

   Many election officials were deeply concerned about the portent of monopolistic pricing and worse. Specifically, election officials had been building the record of the voting system vendors’ threats that if the officials publicly reported equipment flaws and inaccuracies in vote tallies, the companies would substantially raise their county costs for voting tech service and replacement parts. Some county officials in more remote locations who had refused to knuckle under had faced 300% price increases the following year. In addition to election officials around the nation (both the State and local levels expressing concern), the major national nonpartisan nonprofit “think tanks” that work for fair and accountable elections also identified this merger as a major threat to election integrity.

   Various impediments blocked these individuals and organizations from working together, however. The election officials were concerned that if their names were known, their counties or States might be targeted by the merged company for pricing penalties that had occurred in the aftermath of election officials taking other public stands. The national nonprofits, for the most part, lacked legal staff or where lawyers were on staff, they lacked antitrust knowledge. The national nonprofits did seek the U.S. Department of Justice Antitrust Division's (AD) inquiry, but the AD responded that the dollar amount fell below the threshold of concern.

Our Nation faced a disastrous situation if we could not unwind this merger. Time was of the essence. We also lacked the funds for a protracted private litigation, even if we could entice a law firm into the battle on a pro bono basis. We needed the DoJ to act in the larger public interest. Our goal was first, to achieve the Justice Department's scrutiny of the merger, and then to assist the DoJ/AD in pursuing the case vigorously. Because we knew quite well the sins of these vendors against both the market/governmental units and against the public, and also knew the Justice Department lacked the time to master the intricacies of the market and still unwind the merger effectively (with the 2010 election cycle about to begin), we concluded that we needed to be closely involved in developing the case.

I did not rush to this work. I had just begun my sabbatical, the deaths of my father and father-in-law (within weeks of one another) had just occurred after long illnesses, and my research plans were set. But I had the right combination of knowledge about relevant law and the voting systems vendors, plus significant knowledge of the voting systems market and vendors' market conduct. As a law clerk, I had drafted a First Circuit opinion on a major divestiture that had departed decisively from national precedent; it had received major legal and business press attention when it first issued. The Supreme Court had relied upon and cited this opinion in issuing other antitrust divestiture orders. After no one else had stepped up to manage the situation, I agreed to do so. We needed a lawyer with relevant legal antitrust and voting systems knowledge, plus the trusted relationships with election officials that could bring forward the evidence we needed to mount a successful challenge to the merger.

Thus, in late fall 2009, I temporarily shelved my planned academic work on Internet voting in order to lead this national effort. We needed to protect the budgets of state and local governments nationwide from confiscatory discriminatory pricing that a monopoly or duopoly could achieve. But we also wanted the Justice Department to force these vendors to modify other problematic conduct, given the public's need for trustworthy voting systems.

We ultimately won this battle. With Senate leadership publicly pressing for DOJ investigation into the merger, the AD began its preliminary inquiry. Our effort was initially designed to show the AD that the national import of the merger could not be summed in the total sales price of the acquired company, and that that metric should be discarded. Once the AD had agreed to a fuller investigation, I led the effort to pull together the evidence of price discrimination, extortion, and any other censurable conduct that the companies had engage in prior to this merger (whether an antitrust injury or not). Many counties did not want their names attached, so the evidence-gathering was impeded by fear. Nevertheless, through a variety of intermediaries and my promise of confidentiality, we were able to gather concrete evidence and pass it forward to the AD, which then further investigated and confirmed many claims.

I also drafted a long memorandum that detailed for the public record the legally problematic conduct of the voting system vendors. It detailed the antitrust claims we believed arose from their anticompetitive conduct. Most importantly, I delineated a series of creative remedies that were designed to penalize the merged Company and also require far better conduct toward all stakeholders that depended on the Company’s work. We released this to the press, which provided wide coverage to the claims and desired remedies.

As part of this work, I went to DC twice to meet with the Antitrust Division legal team assigned to the case. Present for the discussions were the Assistant Attorney General for the Civil Division, plus all the officials throughout the hierarchy over the case, down to the attorneys with primary charge of the case development. (The Assistant Attorney General for the Antitrust Division had recused herself because ES&S had strategically retained her former law firm as its merger attorneys.) Prominent national nonprofits and two brave election officials were also present. My second presentation at the DOJ was partially addressed to the DoJ misunderstanding about the relation between various components of the voting system. The vendors had misrepresented some technical facts about absentee voting and its tabulation in a plausible manner, resulting in justification for only limited divestiture.
In advance of the meeting, I had graphed the voting systems components in a color diagram that we distributed at the meeting. The terms of the settlement significantly changed thereafter, apparently attributable to our presentation.

Our activity led to achievement of the most important of our remedial goals. The federal District Court approved the Government’s antitrust suit against ES&S and the settlement documents that the AD attorneys submitted for judicial approval. Further, the Court ordered substantial divestiture. County governments now have a more competitive marketplace and alternatives to ES&S products and services. Importantly, ES&S will also remain under Federal AD antitrust scrutiny for a decade, which will assist in protecting county budgets and personnel from illegal threats and provide an umbrella for investigation of other problematic market conduct.

2. 2011-12: Halting the Defense Department’s Pressures on States to Adopt Internet Voting

The U.S. Department of Defense is charged with the task of promoting and facilitating voting participation of all enlisted personnel and their families, plus all overseas American voters. For over a decade, the small agency charged with these duties, the Federal Voting Assistance Program (FVAP), has been relentlessly pursuing Internet voting as “the” solution for military voters. My academic work over the past four years convinced me that the FVAP has been violating the internal Directives of the DOD and violating governing Federal statutory law. It was also clear that FVAP’s programmatic goals had not been vetted by cyber security experts in DOD, and that the supervision by the DoD HR division (Personnel and Readiness) where FVAP was lodged had not been very effective. This was not a partisan critique; the record has largely been the same under both Administrations since 2000.

When my efforts to discuss the legal problems generated by this agency’s conduct failed (the FVAP Director disparaged lawyers as “causing problems”), I worked with Washington, D.C.-area associates to bring forward the critique and the dangers FVAP was generating for the nation. I discovered that the FVAP through the years had developed a strategy of flying underneath the radar of its DOD supervisors and lawyers, basically acting as a rogue agency beyond the law in its pursuit of Internet voting.

I wrote several legal memoranda that detailed the results of my research and recommended particular remedial steps, directed to the DoD’s General Counsel. Virtually immediately, public indicators suggested the FVAP’s supervision had been tightened. The agency’s web-posted Strategic Plan was amended, and other documents were modified to withdraw the endorsement of all-electronic elections over the Internet. The Director started stating publicly that the agency “did not favor or endorse Internet voting.” But he also privately continued to push this dangerous form of voting in discussions with State and local election officials, information that I documented and delivered to the General Counsel’s office. This conduct was consistent with the intensive lobbying of State governments that he had engaged in over three years and that the agency had undertaken for at least six.
In late November 2011, I took Dr. David Jefferson and Dr. Barbara Simons with me to the Pentagon for a high-level presentation and meeting with the top Pentagon attorneys. Both scientists had previously worked with DoD on voting systems for military voters, and are widely recognized for their expertise. In our 90-minute meeting, the scientists presented the technical and cyber security dangers of Internet voting in terms understandable by average lawyers. I explained the facts' legal import, and drew the attorneys' attention to the various legal provisions arguably violated by the FVAP's conduct. The meeting included the Principal Deputy General Counsel, the Air Force General Counsel, the Chief of Staff of the DoD's Chief Information Office (CIO), the top Division attorneys in three of the Secretary of Defense's divisions (including those having ultimate supervision of FVAP's conduct). We left the lawyers with a variety of materials supporting the presentation.

By April 2012, the FVAP Director had announced his resignation, effective the next month. The FVAP Deputy Director transferred to another part of the Pentagon. While the Agency still has much work to revise and re-educate State governments about the importance of not moving to Internet voting, the DoD lawyers appear to have interceded and helped to ensure that the agency's path would not continue toward an illegal endpoint. I believe that the meeting I organized and the legal memoranda I submitted (drawn from the book chapter that the ABA would publish several months later) helped to bring to the General Counsel's attention the need for remedial action.

Candidate's Service as a Media Contact

Due to her work in electronic voting technology, Professor Hoke has had numerous contacts with the media. She describes these contacts as follows:

Over the past six years, I have been interviewed and quoted in major newspapers across the U.S. and in at least 8 foreign nations, with my affiliation to CSU noted. These include the New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, Los Angeles Times, Washington Post, Boston Globe, Cleveland Plain Dealer, Columbus Dispatch, and major newspapers in Baltimore, Cincinnati, San Jose, San Francisco, Chicago, Detroit, Trenton, NJ, and Knoxville, plus McClatchy News, Reuters, and the AP. Radio and television broadcasts of interviews with me include: CNN, CBS News, FOX News, National Public Radio, and local affiliates of these news organizations. This media contact began because Cuyahoga and Ohio were receiving outsized attention for their election failures. The amount of press coverage has waned as our elections have improved. I have continued to respond to reporters' inquiries as my other work permits.
CLEVELAND-MARSHALL COLLEGE OF LAW

ADDENDUM TO

REPORT TO THE COLLEGE OF LAW FULL PROFESSOR PERSONNEL ACTION COMMITTEE

EVALUATING THE APPLICATION FOR PROMOTION OF ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR S. CANDICE HOKE

APRIL L. CHERRY (CHAIR)

MICHAEL H. DAVIS

SHELDON GELMAN

NOVEMBER 5, 2012
Candidate's Record of Service to C-M and Cleveland State University

Evaluations:

Thomas Buckley, Building Committee (Chair) reports that Professor Hoke was an exemplary member of the building committee:

Candice Hoke was a member of the Law College Building Committee for several years when I was the Chair of that Committee. Candice was an exemplary committee member. She took an active role. Candice was an early proponent of "green" construction and architecture, insisting on environmentally friendly materials and designs. She was also a continuing voice in favor of a lactation room for female students, staff and faculty, and we now have such a room. She was also a busy and active member when the committee was assigned the task of "auditing" the building to come up with a punch list of needed repairs. This entailed walking through the entire premises, making notes, on such matters as loose carpeting, broken lockers, displaced baseboards, etc, etc. etc. ad infinitum. Candice participated in this thankless task cheerfully and very helpfully. She was always a reasonable and responsible voice when bigger issues were confronted such as the projects that led to the new 18th street entrance and the revamping of the basement lounge. It was always a pleasure to work with her.

Ken Kowalski commented on Professor Hoke's dedicated work with the Employment and Labor Law faculty as part of her service to the College of Law. He noted:

This is not technically committee work, but Candice has been a stalwart member of the Employment & Labor faculty. Even when her research interests pulled her in a different direction, she still remained very active in our Concentration activities. She has helped plan our speaker series and been responsible for inviting and then serving as contact and squire for a number of speakers in our speaker series; helped to provide input to the administration in shaping the E&L curriculum and scheduling E&L courses; and has led our efforts to get input into our program from the advisory board of local E&L practitioners.
Candidate's Record of Public Service

In response to the committee's queries regarding Professor Hoke's public service regarding election law, the committee received several responses.

Benjamin E. Griffith, Chair ABA Standing Committee on Election Law, has been acquainted with Professor Hoke for more than six years. Their primary connection is through their work on the American Bar Association’s Standing Committee on Election Law and its Advisory Commission. Mr. Griffith’s letter speaks to Professor Hoke’s work with the ABA, including the book chapters reviewed in connection with this application. Mr. Griffith writes:

I have known Candice principally in her capacity as a professor of election law at Cleveland State University, as a fellow ABA member with a demonstrated proficiency and expertise in voting technology and issues relating to election technical and administrative systems, and as a fellow member of an ABA entity created in 1973 for the purpose of developing and examining ways to improve the federal electoral process. She and I are what you would call election wonks.

My assessment of her ability, specialized knowledge and skill in the field of election technology policy and legal issues is very favorable and positive. Candice is a nationally recognized expert in scientific, legal and policy circles. She has substantial experience that has equipped her to address the causes and potential remedies for election failures attributable to flawed software-based election technologies.

On a personal and professional level, I have always found Candice to be a cheerful, outgoing, and devoted scholar, teacher, advocate and friend. During our time together on the ABA Standing Committee and Advisory Commission, she worked very well in a collaborative setting, contributed in a meaningful and helpful way to the many election-related projects, CLE program development and initiatives that were undertaken. Her academic and professional work with which I am familiar includes service as Project Director of the Public Monitor of Cuyahoga Election Reform from 2006 to 2008, through which she led the State of Ohio in its first post-election audit of cast ballots. Considering the pivotal role of Ohio in this year’s Presidential Election, this places Candice Hoke at the epicenter of the most relevant, timely and helpful analysis of election-related data, information that, in short, will likely be a significant factor in helping us understand and evaluate the electoral results of November 6, 2012.

Susan Dzieduszycha-Suinat, President and CEO of U.S. Vote Foundation and Overseas Vote Foundation, also responded the committee’s request for information. Ms. Dzieduszycha-Suinat’s letter speaks to Professor Hoke’s willingness to be of assistance to her organization and to others public service organizations of which they both are members. She writes:

It is my greatest pleasure to recommend Professor Hoke as not only a marvelous scholar, writer, communicator, collaborator, but as a person who brings a profound level of integrity forward in all activities she undertakes.

As President and CEO of Overseas Vote Foundation (OVF), I have interacted and collaborated on many occasions with Professor Hoke regarding voting and elections, in particular overseas and military voting procedures, policies, legislation, and programs. We are also mutual members of the Election Verification Network within which Professor Hoke is a very active and generous contributor of vital information regarding a vast array of election policy, administrative and legal topics ranging from Internet Voting and our National Security to Common Data Format and beyond.

Professor Hoke has a certain spirit and enthusiasm that infuses her work while inspiring those around her. Perhaps this is something that a "real teacher" can do, and therefore, she must be one. But also, I know her as a team maker and player. Without her, I honestly do not think that OVF's annual Summit conference would have developed properly – Professor Hoke volunteers her insights on speakers and content every year. In 2010, Professor Hoke coordinated and moderated a landmark panel on Internet Voting risks and alternatives, which served to reset the topic within the election community that serves overseas and military voters.

Not the least of her accomplishments, but crucial to OVF, Professor Hoke was the only election expert to make time in her overbooked schedule to team with our attorneys at Winston & Strawn LLC, Washington D.C. She was instrumental in providing a much-needed, election-specialist review of a legal brief regarding the Pentagon’s action to change the 2012 voter registration form imposed by the Federal Voting Assistance Program on overseas and military voters. The result of this action was an overturning of the policy and a glorious decision by the Pentagon to reverse their earlier decision. This is a perfect example of the high-impact, high-value contributions and that Professor Hoke has gone out of her way to make in the cause of helping voters. Without her timely encouragement and coaching, OVF would have not realized this important accomplishment.

Additionally, Matthew Damschroder, the former Director of Franklin County Board of Elections responded to our request for information. In his correspondence, Mr. Damschroder recounts that he found Professor Hoke to be “more than collegial... she demonstrated herself to be, in all ways, a professional: knowledgeable, pragmatic, guileless, and respectful.” Furthermore, Damschroder notes that even when they “disagreed on matter of policy or politics — I know Professor Hoke to have acted from a foundation of unwavering, high academic and personal integrity. To the extent she has ever been characterized differently was inaccurate and unjustified.”
Professor Matt Bishop, a Professor of Computer Science at the University of California, Davis, also responded to our requests. He writes favorable of Professor Hoke based on his experiences working with her on electronic voting issues. Professor Bishop writes:

I met Candice Hoke during the Top-to-Bottom Review. She was the leader of one of the teams analyzing the documentation that the vendors provided with the systems; the question was whether the documents complied with the requirements of various federal and state laws. . . . We discovered many problems, and as a result the Secretary of State decertified two systems, forbidding their use until the problems were fixed, and allowed the third system to continue to be used provided certain stringent conditions were met. The report Prof. Hoke and her colleagues wrote played a key part in the Secretary of State's actions.

I have also worked with Prof. Hoke and some other colleagues (all of whom are technical experts, with little to no knowledge of the law) to develop a paper describing steps that election officials can take to prepare for a forensic audit of electronic voting systems should they deem one necessary. This paper, done under the aegis of the Center for Election Excellence, resulted from some questions she asked. The paper covers both technical and legal precautions, and draws on the experience of people who have participated in such reviews. It has been downloaded over 400 times, including many times recently, and several ABA web pages link to it. Both the Democratic and Republican parties' senior counsels asked for copies just before the 2010 election (I don't know about this election, but many others have). This paper therefore is having a great impact on educating people about how to conduct forensic audits. The legal part of the paper was Prof Hoke's work, and her work also helped inform us of what technically needed to be done to gather and preserve data in such a way that it could be used in court, if needed.

Prof. Hoke's impact in the election community is great, as you can see. She is the person we go to for legal questions about elections. She has improved our understanding of them, and in her role as a member of the ABA's Standing Committee on Election Law, has injected technical knowledge into the legal process.

In another context, her work is also having an impact. Software currently is very badly written, as the resulting security (and non-security) problems are well known. Given Prof. Hoke's interest in public policy and her expertise in regulatory law, I invited her to participate in an NSF-funded workshop that I was cochairing, the Summit on Education in Secure Software (SESS). The participants in the Summit discussed licensure and certification. Prof. Hoke provided much basic legal information that none of us knew. She also became quite excited about the technical ramifications of the discussion, and how licensing professionals, or certifying either people or software, could affect the quality of code development, and the resources given to software engineers to do the development. . . . What she said swayed many of the participants away from a "certification is either junk, useless, or good only for making money" stance. She is continuing to advise people in the Department of Homeland Security and other government agencies, and this too will have a great impact nationally.

To sum up, Prof. Hoke's work is having an impact at the state and national levels. She has been a key member of several efforts that have changed the way the nation thinks about electronic voting systems, and in efforts to improve the processes and technologies used in running elections. She also is providing similar leadership in the very nascent area of software security and certification/licensure.

I hope this is helpful to the Personnel Action Committee.

Dear Professor Davis,

Thank you for your letter requesting information about Professor Candice Hoke's service at the state, local and national level. I am glad to provide the following based on my personal firsthand knowledge of Candice's professional work, service and scholarship since I first met over six years ago through our work on the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on Election Law and its Advisory Commission.

I have known Candice principally in her capacity as a professor of election law at Cleveland State University, as a fellow ABA member with a demonstrated proficiency and expertise in voting technology and issues relating to election technical and administrative systems, and as a fellow member of an ABA entity created in 1973 for the purpose of developing and examining ways to improve the federal electoral process. She and I are what you would call election wonks.

My assessment of her ability, specialized knowledge and skill in the field of election technology policy and legal issues is very favorable and positive. Candice is a nationally recognized expert in scientific, legal and policy circles. She has substantial experience that has equipped her to address the causes and potential remedies for election failures attributable to flawed software-based election technologies.

Specifically, Candice co-authored a chapter entitled "Voting and Registration Technology Issues: Lessons from 2008" contained in the 2009 supplement to the first edition of America Votes! A Guide to Modern Election Law and Voting Rights (ABA 2009, Benjamin E. Griffith, Editor), a peer-reviewed publication, which was followed by the second edition of America Votes! published in June 2012, in which Candice authored a chapter entitled "Voting Technology and the Quest for Trustworthy Elections." Her chapter in the second edition was a thoroughly researched and informative analysis of e-voting equipment deficiencies, litigation of voting technology deficiencies, and problematic internet voting promoted at the federal level. This most recent chapter authored by Candice reflected a substantial amount of core research in the assessment and explanation of risks and alternatives to internet voting within the framework of voting rights and systemic election integrity. Of the seventeen chapters in the book, it was the best in my opinion.

On a personal and professional level, I have always found Candice to be a cheerful, outgoing, and devoted scholar, teacher, advocate and friend. During our time together on the ABA Standing Committee and Advisory Commission, she worked very well in a collaborative setting, contributed in a meaningful and helpful way to the many election-related projects, CLE program development and initiatives that were undertaken. Her academic and professional work with which I am familiar includes service as Project Director of the Public Monitor of Cuyahoga Election Reform from 2006 to 2008, through which she led the State of Ohio in its first post-election audit of cast ballots. Considering the pivotal role of Ohio in this year's Presidential Election, this places Candice Hoke at the epicenter of the most relevant, timely and helpful analysis of election-related data, information that, in short, will likely be a significant factor in helping us understand and evaluate the electoral results of November 6, 2012.

I would be more than happy to provide you with any additional information or clarification, if necessary, regarding my evaluation and opinion about Professor Candice Hoke, and I do trust that this communication will assist in the process of determining her suitability for promotion at CSC College of Law.

Ben

OVERSEAS VOTE FOUNDATION

October 15, 2012

Dear Professor Davis,

Thank you so much for contacting me regarding Professor Candice Hoke's potential promotion at the Cleveland State College of Law.

It is my greatest pleasure to recommend Professor Hoke as not only a marvelous scholar, writer, communicator, collaborator, but as a person who brings a profound level of integrity forward in all activities she undertakes.

The recent ABA book chapter on Voting Technology and the Quest for Trustworthy Elections that Professor Hoke has authored, will certainly give you a strong indication of Professor Hoke's diligence and commitment to election integrity and excellence in execution. Her investigative abilities are tremendous - there is a real curiosity that one can only admire. Her talents in writing and expression, I believe they are self-evident!

Not the least of her accomplishments, but crucial to OVF, Professor Hoke was the only election expert to make time in her overbooked schedule to team with our attorneys at Winston & Strawn LLC, Washington D.C. Dear Professor Davis:

Thank you for your letter of October 4, 2012 and for giving me the opportunity to share some thoughts about Professor Candice Hoke.

I have known Professor Hoke since approximately 2005 when I was the Director of the Franklin County Board of Elections. Candidly, I entered our initial conversations with some hesitation because not all of my previous interactions with other individuals from the elections “advocacy” community had been collegial. Very quickly, I found Professor Hoke to be more than collegial. Through those interactions, she demonstrated herself to be, in all ways, a professional: knowledgeable, pragmatic, guileless, and respectful.

Since that time, I have enjoyed our opportunities to continue building our professional relationship. She has frequently opened doors for me to engage others outside of my normal network. I have done the same for her. In every instance, whether through her work with the Cuyahoga Board of Elections, consulting with the EVEREST project, participating at conferences together, or serving as sounding boards for each other’s research or ideas – even when we disagreed on matters of policy or politics – I know Professor Hoke to have acted from a foundation of unwavering, high academic and personal integrity. To the extent she has ever been characterized differently was inaccurate and unjustified. In my experience, Professor Hoke has proven herself to have, always and at her core, a deep commitment to educating her students and improving the system of elections administration.

I have had the privilege to be a guest in Professor Hoke’s classroom. I found her students to be well-informed in election law subject matter – from historic background to current, open litigation – such that my presentation and question/answer time were instructive both for her students and me.

In sum, I believe that Professor Hoke is a respected member of the elite class of academic experts in the field of elections administration and an asset to this state, and, specifically, the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law.

Sincerely,

Matthew M. Damschroder

Dear Prof. Davis,

This letter is in response to your note asking for information about Prof. Hoke's service, and especially its impact. The short answer is: it has been very high.

Some background will help explain why I say this. I am a professor of computer science, and my specialty is computer security. I have been active in working with electronic voting (“e-voting”) systems since 2003, when our county Clerk/Recorder (the head election official) asked me to look at them and recommend whether she should use them. I shortly thereafter participated in a technical analysis of Maryland’s systems, in which during a test we compromised them in under 30 minutes. I have been on the California State Voting Systems Technology Assessment Advisory Board, which advised the California Secretary of State on e-voting systems. I co-led a technical assessment of all e-voting systems certified for use in California (the “Top-to-Bottom Review” by the Secretary of State) in 2007, and am currently doing research into the process by which elections are run.

I met Candice Hoke during the Top-to-Bottom Review. She was the leader of one of the teams analyzing the documentation that the vendors provided with the systems; the question was whether the documents complied with the requirements of various federal and state laws. Because the systems were in a secured room in the Secretary of State’s office, the document review teams visited us there one week so they could examine the systems to understand the quality of the documentation better, and to have us test the procedures in the documents. We discovered many problems, and as a result the Secretary of State decertified two systems, forbidding their use until the problems were fixed, and allowed the third system to continue to be used provided certain stringent conditions were met. The report Prof. Hoke and her colleagues wrote played a key part in the Secretary of State’s actions.

I have also worked with Prof. Hoke and some other colleagues (all of whom are technical experts, with little to no knowledge of the law) to develop a paper describing steps that election officials can take to prepare for a forensic audit of electronic voting systems should they deem one necessary. This paper, done under the aegis of the Center for Election Excellence, resulted from some questions she asked. The paper covers both technical and legal precautions, and draws on the experience of people who have participated in such reviews. It has been downloaded over 400 times, including many times recently, and several ABA web pages link to it. Both the Democratic and Republican parties’ senior counsels asked for copies just before the 2010 election (I don’t know about this election, but many others have). This paper therefore is having a great impact on educating people about how to conduct forensic audits. The legal part of the paper was Prof. Hoke’s work, and her work also helped inform us of what technically needed to be done to gather and preserve data in such a way that it could be used in court, if needed.

Prof. Hoke’s impact in the election community is great, as you can see. She is the person we go to for legal questions about elections. She has improved our understanding of them, and in her role as a member of the ABA's Standing Committee on Election Law, has injected technical knowledge into the legal process.

In another context, her work is also having an impact. Software currently is very badly written, as the resulting security (and non-security) problems are well known. Given Prof. Hoke's interest in public policy and her expertise in regulatory law, I invited her to participate in an NSF-funded workshop that I was co-chairing, the Summit on Education in Secure Software (SESS). The participants in the Summit discussed licensure and certification. Prof. Hoke provided much basic legal information that none of us knew. She also became quite excited about the technical ramifications of the discussion, and how licensing professionals, or certifying either people or software, could affect the quality of code development, and the resources given to software engineers to do the development. Prof. Hoke added her thoughts to several discussions about how such controls would complicate security policies—both in the way software would have to be developed, and in the way in which vendors would describe the policies that their software could implement, and under what conditions. What she said swayed many of the participants away from a "certification is either junk, useless, or good only for making money" stance. She is continuing to advise people in the Department of Homeland Security and other government agencies, and this too will have a great impact nationally.

To sum up, Prof. Hoke's work is having an impact at the state and national levels. She has been a key member of several efforts that have changed the way the nation thinks about electronic voting systems, and in efforts to improve the processes and technologies used in running elections. She also is providing similar leadership in the very nascent area of software security and certification/licensure.

I hope this provides the information you need. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you need more details.

Sincerely,

Matt Bishop

CRITERIA, STANDARDS, AND PROCEDURES FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF NON-TENURE-TRACK CLINICAL AND LEGAL WRITING PROFESSORS

Effective July 1, 2003
Amendments Effective March 2009

I. Introduction

(A) Purpose
These policies and procedures govern initial appointments and renewals for Clinical and Legal Writing faculty at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, Cleveland State University beginning in the 2002-2003 academic year. They do not apply to persons teaching or otherwise participating in any of the clinical or legal writing programs who hold tenured or tenure-track appointments, nor do they apply to attorneys who may be hired to work in the clinical programs for temporary periods of time. The subsequent standards, criteria and procedures will be used to evaluate candidates for initial appointment as Clinical or Legal Writing Professors, Clinical or Legal Writing Faculty members applying for five-year appointments, as well as Clinical or Legal Writing Faculty members applying for renewal of either one-year or five-year appointments.

(B) Role of the Director of Legal Writing
The Director of Legal Writing has the responsibility for the program and supervision of the Legal Writing faculty teaching within it. Supervisory evaluations and annual written reviews of the Legal Writing faculty are the responsibility of the Director.

II. Appointments

A. Initial Appointments

1. Clinical Professor
Persons applying for initial appointment to a position as a member of the College of Law’s non-tenured Clinical Faculty will be evaluated based upon the demonstrated potential for excellence as a teacher in the College’s clinical program as shown by educational achievement, prior practice of law, prior teaching, or other relevant achievement and skills.
2. Legal Writing Professor

Persons applying for initial appointment to a position as a member of the College of Law’s non-tenure Legal Writing Faculty will be evaluated based upon the demonstrated potential for excellence as a teacher of legal writing and research as shown by educational achievement, prior practice of law, prior teaching, and/or other relevant achievement and skills.

B. Subsequent Appointments

1. Clinical Professor

For all subsequent appointments, a Clinical Professor must demonstrate excellence in teaching, outstanding lawyering skills, commitment and contributions to the improvement of the law, the legal system, legal education, and the profession, and academic and community service. A Clinical Professor applying for a five-year appointment, in addition to the above, must demonstrate the likelihood of continued growth as a Clinical Professor pursuant to the criteria contained in Part III below.

2. Legal Writing Professor

For all subsequent appointments, a Legal Writing Professor must demonstrate excellence in the teaching of legal research and writing, effectiveness in relating collegially with peers, and an overall proficiency and professionalism. A Legal Writing Professor applying for a five-year appointment, in addition to the above, must demonstrate the likelihood of continued growth as a Legal Writing Professor pursuant to the criteria contained in Part III below.

III. Five-Year Appointment Criteria

A. Clinical Professor

The following criteria will be used to determine if the College of Law will recommend that a Clinical Professor be granted a five-year appointment. Exceptional strengths with respect to certain criteria may, to a limited extent, offset weaknesses with respect to others.

1. Excellence in Teaching

The evaluation of clinical teaching should take into consideration the primary educational goals of clinical courses, i.e., the teaching of lawyering skills. In clinical courses, the experience is the primary teaching tool. Excellence in teaching is demonstrated by effective supervision and mentoring of students in the clinical setting and successful classroom performance in clinical and other courses. Student evaluations and classroom visits by faculty will be used to evaluate teaching performance. Supervision of independent study and research and individual counseling of students are considered part of teaching responsibilities.

2. Lawyering Skills
Clinical professors must demonstrate outstanding ability in the performance of lawyering skills. These skills include client interviewing, client counseling, fact development, case planning, negotiations, hearing advocacy, legal writing, and practice management. In addition, clinical professors must exhibit a high degree of ethical behavior and professionalism as both teachers and attorneys.

3. Professionalism Contributions
Clinical professors are expected to contribute to the improvement of the law, the legal system, legal education and the profession. Membership in professional associations and active participation in committees are examples of ways in which to make these contributions. Clinical professors should also actively participate in efforts to improve the law and the administration of justice in their areas of expertise, including significant litigation, scholarship, work with public interest organizations, legislative advocacy, and/or pro bono activities. For purposes of this requirement, “scholarship” should be defined to include substantial briefs and position papers that reflect a significant exertion of research and analytical skills.

4. Academic and Community Service
Clinical professors are expected to engage in activities that serve students, the University and the community. They should (as compatible with the demands of their clinic responsibilities) accept such assignments as moot court judge, student counselor, student organization advisor, and member of University and College of Law committees. They should be regularly available for individual consultation with students and other members of the University community. They should engage in community service.

5. Information and Factors to be Used in Evaluating Five-Year Appointment Criteria
   (a) A description of the clinical and other courses taught at the law school;
   (b) Recent syllabi or clinical equivalent;
   (c) Student course evaluations;
   (d) Prior written evaluations and recommendations of the Clinical Professor’s supervisor(s).
   (e) A list of committee assignments and comments from committee chairs;
   (f) A description of service activities in or outside the law school;
(g) Observation of one or more of the Clinical Professor’s classes by members of the special faculty committee reviewing the candidate;
(h) Review of materials the Clinical Professor has prepared in conjunction with his or her teaching;
(i) A meeting with the candidate;
(j) Scholarship, presentations, publications, briefs or other court or administrative filings, or other work enhancing the school’s reputation;
(k) Any evaluations, recommendations or other materials commenting on the work of the Clinical Professor from clients, judges, co-counsel, opposing counsel, professional colleagues or others in the community in a position to observe the Clinical Professor’s work and its impact that may be submitted by the candidate; and
(l) Other materials submitted by the candidate.

B. Legal Writing Professor
The following criteria will be used to determine if the College of Law will recommend that a Legal Writing Professor be granted a five-year appointment. Exceptional strengths with respect to certain criteria may, to a limited extent, offset weaknesses with respect to others.

1. Classroom Teaching
The Legal Writing Professor exhibits a command of legal analysis, legal writing, legal research, and advocacy. The candidate is focused and well prepared for class, organized and effective; defines the goals to be accomplished; incorporates effective methods of conveying those goals to the students relying on techniques appropriate for teaching writing, analysis and research; and, offers insights to the students that they would not get from reading the text alone.

2. Designing Writing Assignments
The Legal Writing Professor’s assignments and teaching materials should intellectually challenge students. Assignments are appropriate to the students’ realistic analytical ability. Problems are factually realistic and, if persuasive writing is required, are well balanced. There are sufficient research exercises during the year to challenge students, expose them to a variety of research methods, and lead them to competence in research performance. The research is organized with a clear focus and continuum throughout the year.

3. Evaluating Student Work
The Legal Writing Professor should be able to provide insightful, detailed critiques of student papers with written comments that do the following:
(a) Recognize the difference between effective and ineffective writing and analysis;
(b) Conceptualize that difference between effective and ineffective writing by explaining why one thing works and another does not;
(c) Diagnose writing and analysis problems by identifying the habit or misuse that causes the student to write effectively;
(d) Prescribe solutions that identify what steps the student can take to improve;
(e) Make informative comments on student papers while achieving a tone that motives students to improve;
(f) Grade student papers in a way that accurately reflects a paper’s quality when compared with that of other student papers;
(g) Prepare, select, and highlight the problems to discuss with students; and
(h) Evaluate papers in terms of practical effectiveness, rather than in terms of the teacher’s personal preferences.

4. Student Conferences
The following criteria will be used to evaluate a candidate’s student conferencing techniques:
(a) Demonstrated interest in student’s development as legal writers, researchers, and professionals and consistent availability to students for one-on-one and/or small group consultation regarding writing projects;
(b) Ability to convey important information to students in a manner that they can understand and accept; and
(c) Ability to ask questions designed to provoke thought, and delivered in a sequence that builds on the answers to preceding questions and leads to the teacher’s goal.

5. Relating to Students
The candidate relates constructively with students inside and outside the classroom.

6. Course Administration
The candidate handles administrative tasks efficiently as exhibited by the following criteria:
(a) Coordinates and works well with other legal writing teachers, faculty, and other members of the law school community;
(b) Provides students with fair notice of office hours, conferences, and scheduling that affects them; and
(c) Completes preparation of assignments well in advance.
7. Judgment
The candidate exercises sound judgment in all aspects of work, solves problems reasonably and decisively, and seeks assistance from experienced colleagues when appropriate.

8. Team Work
The candidate exhibits collegiality by the following:
(a) Coordinates and works well with other legal writing teachers, faculty, and other members of the law school community;
(b) Shares ideas with others in the field, both internally and externally;
(c) Focuses on compliance with school and Legal Writing program policies rather than individual preferences;
(d) Participates in departmental meetings, and responds to Director’s requests in a timely fashion;
(e) Timely files grades, follows Department and school polices; and
(f) Balances appropriately between individual initiative and acceptance of direction.

9. Scholarship
A Legal Writing Professor is not expected to engage in published legal scholarship as a part of teaching and Program responsibilities. However, the Dean, Director, and faculty encourage and support Legal Writing Professors who wish to engage in scholarship regarding legal writing, including publications, research and conference presentations. Also, Legal Writing Professors may choose to engage in scholarship in subjects beyond the scope of legal research and writing. Nothing prevents Legal Writing Professors from submitting that scholarship for favorable consideration in connection with reappointment or promotion.

10. Information and Factors to be Used in Evaluating Five-Year Appointment Criteria
Consideration of the above criteria shall be based on at least the following:
(a) A list of courses taught at the law school;
(b) Recent syllabi;
(c) Student teaching evaluations from at least the previous three years’ first year or Third Semester course[s];
(d) Prior written evaluations and recommendations of the director or supervisor;
(e) Observation of one or more of the Legal Writing Professor’s classes;
(f) Review of materials the candidate deems relevant such as individual projects, grading guidelines, teaching exercises, worksheets, research and lesson plans;
(g) Meeting with the candidate;
(h) Scholarship, presentations, publications, editing, pro bono or other work or activities that serve to enhance the law school’s local or national reputation; and
(i) Other materials submitted by the candidate.

IV. Procedures for Appointment

A. Initial Appointments and Renewal of Yearly Appointments

1. Prior to making any recommendations of an initial appointment pursuant to these procedures the Dean shall receive the recommendations of the Special Committee for Appointments.
The Dean shall take into account the Special Committee’s recommendations and the needs of the institution in acting on the appointment.

2. The member of the law school administration (the Director of Legal Writing, the clinical faculty supervisor, or the associate dean) who directly supervises the performance review of each candidate on a yearly basis shall recommend renewal or non-renewal to the Dean of the College of Law. The Dean shall then determine whether to grant a renewal of the yearly appointment.

3. The Special Committee for Initial Appointments for Clinical and Legal Writing Faculty shall include two tenured or tenure-track faculty members, two members of the clinical or legal writing faculty (dependent on the position to be filled) and the Chair of the College of Law Faculty Committee on Clinical Legal Education and Externships or Legal Writing and Research, depending on the position to be filled. If the position to be filled is a legal writing position, the Director of the Legal Writing Program shall constitute one of the two legal writing faculty members of the Committee and the other legal writing position on the Committee shall be filled, where possible, by a member of the legal writing faculty who has more years of service than the applicant. If the position to be filled is a clinical faculty position the immediate supervisor of the clinical program shall constitute one of the clinical faculty members of the committee, unless that person is a tenured faculty member and that person shall constitute one of the tenured faculty members of the committee.

B. Five-Year Appointment and Renewals

1. A Clinical Professor or Legal Writing Professor is eligible to apply for an initial five-year appointment after five one-year appointments and shall, as a condition of employment beyond the current appointment, apply for a five-year appointment during the fifth yearly appointment, subject to the phase-in provisions of Section IVB(2) below. Renewals of five-year appointments shall be considered during the year the term expires.

2. Years taught previously in the Clinical or Legal Writing Program, when this section is adopted, count toward the eligibility requirement. The granting of initial five-year appointments shall be phased-in over a five year period starting in the academic year immediately following the adoption of these provisions.

3. Applications of several candidates during the same year may be considered based upon each candidate’s years of prior service. Preference will be given to those with the greatest number of years of service in order of hiring date. While several candidates may be considered during one year, the Dean, in consultation with the director of the applicable program and the chairs of the Clinic and Extern and the Legal Writing Committee will determine how many candidates’ applications will be considered based upon the available personnel, the resources, and the timing of the applications. A Clinical or Legal Writing Professor who has applied for a five-year appointment but who has been deferred under this paragraph shall be eligible for a yearly appointment subject to the yearly appointment procedures.

4. The Dean, prior to making a recommendation to the Provost on a five-year appointment, shall appoint a special committee, after consultation with the PAC Chair and the applicant, to prepare a report to the faculty based on the criteria contained in Section III above. The faculty will then make a recommendation to the Dean.

5. For purposes of this section the faculty shall consist of all tenured and tenure-track faculty, all clinical and legal writing faculty who hold five-year appointments. Clinical or legal writing professors who are being considered for renewal of a five-year appointment shall not be considered members of the faculty for purposes of this section during the year that they are seeking the renewal.

6. For purposes of this section the special committee shall consist of two tenured or tenure-track faculty members and one clinical or legal writing faculty member who holds a five-year appointment (depending on whether the applicant for the five-year appointment or renewal thereof is a clinical or legal writing faculty member). If there is not a clinical or legal writing faculty member who holds a five-year appointment then the special committee shall consist of three tenured or tenure-track faculty members one of whom is a member of either the faculty Legal Writing and Research Committee or the Clinic and Extern Committee (depending on whether the applicant for the five-year appointment or renewal thereof is a clinical or legal writing faculty member).

7. Renewals of Five-Year Appointments

(a) The award of a five-year appointment to a Clinical or Legal Writing faculty member carries the presumption of successive five-year appointments. Faculty members awarded five-year appointments shall be denied successive five-year appointments only for just cause, or the material modification of the program in which the faculty member teaches, or a declaration of financial exigency.

(b) The application and review process for renewals of five-year appointments shall be as follows:

(i) A faculty member seeking renewal of a five-year appointment shall notify the Dean in a letter no longer than two pages in length delivered to the Dean by September 1 of the final academic year of the existing appointment.

(ii) The Dean shall, in consultation with the PAC Chair and the applicant, appoint a special committee to review the application for renewal. The special committee will be constituted pursuant to Sections IV B 5 and 6 above.

(iii) The special committee shall review the letter, the applicant’s annual reports for the first four years of the appointment, the applicant’s student teaching evaluations for the first four years of the appointment, and any other relevant written information related to whether just cause exists for nonrenewal.

(iv) The special committee will apply the “presumption of renewal” standard to its review of this information. The special committee shall determine that nonrenewal is appropriate only upon a finding that “just cause” exists as defined in CSU Professional Staff Policies 8.5.8.5.1; “just cause” includes but is not limited to “unsatisfactory performance.” The term “unsatisfactory performance” in CSU Professional Staff Policies 8.5.8.5.1 shall be interpreted to mean:
- professional incompetency, or
- substantial, willful, and persistent neglect, without justification or excuse, of an essential institutional duty, validly prescribed by the University.

(v) The special committee shall formulate a recommendation as to the renewal and communicate the recommendation to the applicant and the Dean in writing by November 1 of the final academic year of the existing appointment.

(vi) If the special committee recommends renewal, the committee shall recommend to the Dean that the applicant receive an additional five-year appointment. No further action is required by the special committee.

(vii) If the special committee recommends nonrenewal, the special committee shall identify the reason(s) for the recommendation in the written communication to the applicant and the Dean described in IV B 7 (b) (v) above. The written communication shall also identify the information and materials on which the special committee relied in making the recommendation for nonrenewal. The special committee will make those materials and information available to the applicant upon the applicant’s request.

(viii) The Dean shall review the material listed in Section IV B 7 (b) (iii) above, the materials provided by the special committee, and any additional materials submitted by the applicant. The Dean will formulate a recommendation regarding the renewal of the applicant’s appointment. The Dean shall communicate his or her recommendation to the special committee and to the applicant in writing no later than December 1 of the final academic year of the existing appointment.

(ix) Both the Dean’s recommendation and the special committee’s recommendation shall be provided to the Provost no later than December 15 of the final academic year of the existing appointment.

(x) Nothing in these procedures affects the applicant’s rights related to termination of employment as set forth in Greenbook Section 8.3.8(B)(3) or Professional Staff Policies expressly incorporated in that Greenbook Section, specifically Professional Staff Policy Section 8.5.8 Termination of Employment and 8.5.9 Grievance Procedures.

C. University Personnel Policies
Nothing in these Criteria, Standards, or Procedures shall be construed to circumvent or otherwise contradict University personnel policies for non-tenure track teaching faculty.

V. Termination
A Clinical or Legal Writing Professor may be terminated at any time during the term of a five-year appointment or any renewal period for good cause, or due to the termination or material modification of the entire clinical or legal writing program. Termination proceedings shall be done in accordance with University policy governing non-bargaining faculty.
8.1.8 Leaves of Absence (Non-Bargaining Unit Members Only)

Leaves of absence under this section are only those leaves taken by faculty members for professional purposes requiring that the faculty member miss assigned classes. Such leaves of absence fall into three categories: absences, short leaves, and extended leaves. Absences last no more than one week and entail no cancellation or rescheduling of classes. Absences require no more than prior notification to the Departmental Chairperson or, in non-departmentalized colleges, the College Dean, and are limited to a maximum of three absences per quarter or four absences per semester. Short leaves either (1) last more than one week but no more than five weeks or (2) require cancellation or rescheduling of classes. All short leaves require written permission of the Departmental Chairperson or, in non-departmentalized colleges, the College Dean. Extended leaves last more than five weeks and must be approved in accordance with Section 8.1.8(C). Extended leaves include the following leaves with pay and leaves without pay.

A) Leaves with Pay

1) Military Leave. (All Members) As a general rule, faculty members who participate in military reserve programs should take their training during the summer months. Leave with pay will be granted, however, to members of the National Guard and other armed forces for 31 days each year.

2) Judicial Leave. (All Members) Leave with pay is granted when a faculty member is called for jury duty or is subpoenaed to testify as a witness before any court or governmental hearing body. Service as an expert witness shall be considered to be in the same category as consulting and shall be subject to the limitations thereon specified in Section 8.1.10.

3) Professional Leave. (Non-Bargaining Unit Members Only) A full-time faculty member with at least six academic years of teaching service at the University may be granted professional leave with pay for a period not to exceed one full academic year to engage in further education, research, or other programs of professional improvement that can contribute directly to the improvement and development of the faculty member and the University.

3.a) Eligibility.

1.) Completion of six years of full-time academic service at Cleveland State University at the time of the initiation of the leave.

2.) Tenure effective as of the date the professional leave becomes effective.

3.b) Definitions for Eligibility.
1.) "Full-time faculty" defined as persons holding full-time faculty appointments in one or more academic departments or colleges, as specified in the Faculty Personnel Policies.

2.) "Academic years of teaching service" defined as two semesters of academic responsibilities (teaching, research, etc.) in a given calendar year. Years of partial service may accumulate to equal the equivalent of a year of full-time service. Summer teaching for faculty on nine-month contract does not count toward the accumulation of years of service.

3.) Leaves of absence from faculty assignments without pay that occur during the six-year period do not count toward eligibility for professional leave. On the other hand, such leaves of absence will not be considered to have substituted for faculty professional leave with pay as defined in these guidelines.

3.c) Period of Leave and Compensation.

Except in the College of Law the period of professional leave for the non-bargaining unit faculty member who has completed at least six full years of academic service may consist of one of the following:

1.) One quarter: 100% of 9-month salary.
2.) Two quarters: 83.3% of 9-month salary.
3.) Three quarters: 66.67% of 9-month salary.

Summer term will not normally be considered as available for a professional leave.

For eligible faculty in the College of Law, the period of professional leave may consist of one of the following:

1.) One semester at 11/12 of 9-month salary.
2.) Two semesters at 66.67% of 9-month salary.

3.d) Other Considerations.

1.) Fringe Benefits. For professional leaves of only one quarter, regular fringe benefits including retirement and insurance benefits will continue at the normal level. For leaves of two or three quarters, all fringe benefits will continue at the normal level with the exception of retirement benefits, the payment of which is based on actual dollars earned.

2.) Salary Increments. Faculty members on professional leave will be eligible for salary improvement for the following year in the same way as faculty members currently teaching on campus.

3.) Additional Compensation During the Period of Leave. A faculty member on professional leave under this policy will not hold a paid position unless that position can be shown to assist him/her professionally. Should he/she hold such a paid position, however, the sum of the professional leave salary and additional funds in the form of grants, stipends, gifts, or pay shall not exceed the amount of the normally contracted salary, with the exception of such funds as are allocated in a grant for special expenses such as equipment, books, professional travel, etc.

4.) Continuing Institutional Responsibility. To assure that the University shares in the benefits of the professional leave, faculty members taking professional leave agree to return to Cleveland State University for at least three quarters or, if appropriate, for two semesters (excluding summer) after completing their professional leave.

5.) Accrual of Time Toward Subsequent Leaves. Upon completion of professional leave, a faculty member starts accruing time toward eligibility for the award of his/her next professional leave as of the date of his/her resumption of normal academic duties.

6.) Released Time or Assigned Duty. Professional leave taken as part of a faculty improvement program established under this rule shall not be deemed to be in lieu of released time or assigned duty in connection with a specific research, scholarly, or creative program.

B) Leaves Without Pay

1) Military Service Leave.

2) Special Leave. Special Leave without pay may be granted for study, research, professional employment, election or appointment to public office, or other personal reasons such as travel or rest. During a Special Leave the faculty member may accept an appointment at another educational institution provided such an appointment is not in a regular tenure-track position. The University discourages requests for leaves to enter private business or practice unless such request is considered by appropriate University Personnel to be an opportunity to enhance and strengthen the professional development of the faculty member.

Special Leaves are normally granted for a period of up to one year. An extension of up to one year may be granted only if it is shown that this would clearly benefit either the University or the professional career of the faculty member. Further extensions beyond a second year will be granted only in rare instances such as an opportunity to engage in projects of unusual value to the faculty member and the University.

Periods of leave without pay may be credited as professional service in consideration of promotion, tenure, and increments according to the provisions of Section 8.1.1(F). University benefits may continue during a period of special leave, as permitted by law and with approval of the President, provided that the faculty member on special leave makes proper arrangements to pay any premiums on the continuing benefit programs.*

3) Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993 (FMLA):

University benefits shall continue provided that a faculty member on leave makes proper arrangements for payment on premiums in all contributory benefit programs.

Complete information on the FMLA can be obtained from the Department of Human Resources Development and Labor Relations

C) Application for Extended Leaves (Non-Bargaining unit Members Only)

All extended leaves of absence, with or without pay, are granted by the Board of Trustees upon recommendation of the President. Applications for professional leaves with pay and special leave without pay must be submitted at a sufficiently advanced date that they will reach the Board of Trustees for its consideration at least one full academic quarter before the beginning of leave. Applications for other extended leaves shall be submitted at the earliest practicable date.

1) Professional Leave With Pay. Procedures to be followed in granting professional leave with pay are:

Procedure for Application and Review

The following steps will be followed:

* Faculty members who do not carry their benefits while on leave need to make new application upon their return to resume benefit coverage.
1.a) Applications from faculty members seeking professional leave for the following academic year should be submitted to the department office, or, in colleges that do not have departments, to the office of the Dean, by the announced deadline. The proposals should follow the required format, should define carefully and as completely as possible the purpose of the leave, and should specify clearly what outcomes can be expected. A current curriculum vitae should accompany the proposal.

1.b) The Department Chairperson or the Dean of a college without departments will initiate a review by a faculty committee of the proposal submitted. The primary criterion shall be the merits of the proposal, bearing in mind that the purpose of professional leave is to enable faculty members to engage in further education, research, or other program of professional improvement that can contribute directly to the improvement and development of the faculty member and the University. The faculty committee should also keep in mind the maintenance of departmental standards and responsibilities for all ongoing programs.

1.c) The Department Chairperson or the Dean of a college without departments is responsible for making advance arrangements to provide adequate coverage for a faculty member on professional leave on a "break even" or "no-cost" basis. (In some cases, a "no-cost" program may be arranged on a college-wide basis.) Duties of persons on professional leave normally will be assumed by the remaining faculty. If a faculty member is on leave with less than full salary, the remaining part of his/her budgeted salary may be used for (partial) replacement. No professional leave shall be granted that requires a compensating addition to the permanent faculty or staff.

1.d) In colleges having departments, applications supported by the department with a statement from the Chairperson indicating how adequate coverage will be provided for the faculty member in his/her absence shall be forwarded by an appropriate departmental committee to the appropriate Dean.

1.e) The Dean will initiate a review of all applications by a faculty committee. In this review, the quality of the proposal shall be the primary criterion. The committee should also bear in mind the necessity of providing adequate coverage for the faculty member in his/her absence and the necessity for maintenance of departmental and college standards and responsibilities of all ongoing programs. The maximum number of proposals that may be recommended by the college may be announced in advance by the President. In that case, the committee should prioritize proposals, if necessary. In any event, the Dean shall issue a statement indicating how adequate coverage will be provided for the faculty member in his/her absence.

1.f) Applications shall be forwarded to the University Professional Leave Committee by the college committee. Law School applications must include the recommendation of the applicant's Dean and the recommendation of the college committee.

1.g) The Professional Leave Committee shall consist of one faculty representative from each of the academic colleges, appointed by the Academic Steering Committee, and two Deans appointed by the Provost. The role of this committee as advisory to the Provost is to review proposals submitted, to evaluate the merits of the proposals, to make suggestions as to the entire process, and to recommend proposals to the Provost for favorable action.

1.h) The Provost shall, in turn, make recommendations on faculty professional leaves to the President. The President shall make his/her recommendations to the Board of Trustees for final approval at its March meeting.

1.i) Upon returning to University duties, a faculty member shall submit a written report of activities during the period of professional leave. The report should be submitted to the Department Chairperson or the Dean of a college without departments, who shall comment upon the report in writing. The report and comments shall be forwarded simultaneously to the Dean and/or the Provost and should be made available to the Professional Leave Committee.

2) Other Extended Leaves. Application procedures for other extended leaves shall be as above for professional leave with pay, except that the extent of information required may vary and the President may seek the advice of the appropriate committee of the faculty at his/her discretion.

RE: Proposed Actions in Response to the Legal Writing Consultants’ Report, Part I

Background

In response to a recommendation by the ABA site visit team in 2006, Dean Geoffrey Mearns arranged for a group of three nationally known legal writing professors to perform an independent evaluation of our Legal Writing Program. In a report dated April 17, 2007 (and made available to the faculty shortly thereafter), the team made numerous recommendations for improvement of our program. In response to that report, the legal writing faculty submitted a responsive report dated May 8, 2007. This was also made available to the faculty last spring.

On June 1, 2007, Dean Mearns formed this ad hoc Legal Writing Committee and charged that it “determine which of the team’s suggested changes, if any, the law school should implement.” He added: “To the extent that our legal writing faculty have proposed alternative or additional suggestions, this committee may consider these suggestions as well, if this committee determines that those suggestions will enhance the quality of the legal writing instruction that we provide to our students.” Finally, he asked that the committee “submit its recommendations to the entire law school faculty by November 2007.” We submit this report in partial fulfillment of this charge.

From the outset, the Committee worked hard to view this endeavor as a positive, unique opportunity to enhance our legal writing program for the benefit of our students. The Chair specifically and repeatedly asked Committee members to approach our task with an open mind, rather than as advocates for any predetermined positions. The Committee’s guiding principle was to examine the issues presented from the point of view of our students. Our primary hope was to adopt suggestions likely to make the first-year writing program as strong as possible so that each student finishes the first year with a solid and reliable grounding in legal writing. In this regard, the student members of the Committee, who were not shy in sharing their views, were particularly valuable. While unanimity with respect to the Committee's recommendations was neither expected nor achieved, these recommendations represent the strong consensus view of the clear majority of the Committee after long, open, and honest discussions.

The consultants' report included three major sections. The first described what a solid, effective legal writing program might look like. The second evaluated and sharply criticized the program at Cleveland-Marshall. The third purported to make suggestions to improve the circumstances set forth in section two. The Committee found some fault with the consultants' report. In particular, its specific recommendations, in some instances, did not seem to address directly the problems raised. One Committee member thought the report was "mean." That said, the report raised enough serious concerns about the quality and consistency of our program that the Committee felt that it would be missed opportunity to disregard it, despite its flaws. The Committee will not rehash here the numerous problems identified in the consultants' report as that report is and has been available to the faculty.

The consultants' report included numerous recommendations, ranging from hiring a new legal writing director from outside Cleveland-Marshall (to provide leadership, fresh ideas, and accountability), to improving the use of computer technology by the legal writing faculty. Some of the suggestions we felt were important, others were perhaps not even relevant to the problems raised. Many of the suggestions, the Committee believes, would be best evaluated by the legal writing faculty themselves, perhaps in conjunction with a fresh leader. For example, the consultants' report criticized the choice of materials used in the first-year course by some legal writing professors, as well as the significant variation among the legal writing professors regarding the number of writing assignments and the extent and quality of the student conferences, comments on papers, and opportunities for re-writes.

The Committee decided that many of the problems raised fell under the general category of leadership—that is, they are problems that could be improved with thoughtful, creative leadership of the program. The Committee therefore chose to focus first on the question of what leadership model would best serve the program and our students. We felt that for the Committee to address many of the substantive curricular issues would amount to micromanaging the program. Yet, many of the problems raised in the report seemed to indicate the need for effective leadership in their resolution. Further, if the faculty chooses to bring in a director, that director should have the opportunity to work with the current legal writing faculty on handling the remaining consultants' suggestions, especially those with substantive curricular and programmatic impact. We therefore concluded that many of the suggestions would fall under, or would follow, the recommendation we made with respect to the question of hiring a Legal Writing Director. A new director, should the faculty support our recommendation to hire one, would work with the legal writing faculty to evaluate and implement many of the remaining suggestions in the report.

The Committee determined that two other issues raised by the consultants’ report should also be addressed by the Committee (in addition to the many others that would need to be addressed if the choice of leadership structure required it). The first was a resources issue, specifically, whether the current graduation requirement of a third semester of legal writing should be reconsidered at this time, as recommended by the outside report, so the faculty can focus energy and resources on the first-year program. The second was how we could provide a more focused program of professional development for our current legal writing faculty. The committee will submit proposals regarding these last issues at a later date.

Leadership Structure

In the recent past, an appointed person held the position of Director of the Legal Writing Program indefinitely. The position has not been tenure-track, and the recent directors have not perceived their role as supervisory, but rather more as an advocate for the program and for the status and pay of the program faculty.

The outside report recommended that we hire a tenure-track Director of Legal Writing after conducting a national search. It said:

> Cleveland-Marshall would do well to consider devoting the next available tenure-track line to the position of legal writing program director and having that director report directly to the dean, not through an associate dean.

In its responsive report to the faculty, the legal writing faculty favored either a “directorless” model or a model where the Director position is only an administrative chair, rotated among the existing Legal Writing Professors so that someone is responsible for the administrative duties inherent in the program. The legal writing faculty does not favor a Director with supervisory duties. The responsive report said:

> In contrast to the team’s view, an increasing number of legal writing programs are moving toward a cooperative “directorless” model, in which legal writing professors work cooperatively, either without a formal leader or with a rotating department coordinator or chair. This is the model that we as a department unanimously advocate adopting at Cleveland-Marshall.” [Emphasis in original.]

The Committee did not confine our discussion and consideration to the two models proposed in the two reports (tenure-track director v. directorless.) Instead, the Committee evaluated a comprehensive list of leadership options, largely derived from the ABA’s Legal Writing Source Book (Source Book) and the Association of Legal Writing Director’s 2007 Annual Survey (2007 ALWD Survey). The Chair asked Committee members to think about the pros and cons of each leadership model as they pertain to our school and our students at this time and to come to the meetings with an open mind. In wide-ranging conversations over the course of several meetings, the Committee discussed the perceived strengths and weaknesses of many different leadership models. The Chair listed the pros and cons on a whiteboard under each possibility as it was mentioned, and Committee members came up with a long list, which helped ground our discussion of the relative values of the available options.

Although we remained focused on what would be the best model for our school at this time, we did obtain data from the 2007 ALWD Survey regarding leadership models currently used at other law schools:

Does the program have a director? (direct responsibility for design, implementation/supervision of the program) 156 Yes, 25 No

A tenured faculty member whose primary responsibility is directing the LW program: 33
An untenured faculty member, on tenure track, whose primary responsibility is directing LW: 17
A faculty member, not on tenure track, who primary responsibility is directing LW: 66
A faculty member or administrator whose primary responsibility is not the 1L LW program: 6
An administrator whose primary responsibility is directing with LW program: 5
A faculty member with clinical tenure/clinical tenure track: 12
Other: 19

In addition, we consulted the latest ALWD survey for information on the employment status of legal writing directors:

1. LW Director is tenure/tenure track / “clinical” tenure, 62/180
2. LW Director is not tenure track but primary responsibility is Legal Writing, 66/180

While not unanimous, the broad consensus of the Committee was that—at this particular point in time—we need to bring in a new Director with substantive responsibility for the program, preferably with substantial experience that would justify an immediate long-term contract or tenure (see below), and who could bring an outside perspective and enthusiasm to leading and improving our legal writing program. In particular, all of the students on the committee thought it critical that the new Director have supervisory responsibilities so that there would be real accountability to both the students and the Dean regarding the substance and consistency of the program and the experiences of all first-year students. The primary rationales behind this recommendation included the need for consistency throughout the program in terms of the substance conveyed to students and the quality and quantity of student feedback, and the need for accountability with respect to program quality. The Committee agreed that the program, and therefore our students, would benefit from a director from outside the law school, who could bring energy, fresh ideas, and leadership to the program, while also guiding the program to consistency in substance and quality. The Committee also felt that this action would show our seriousness of purpose to the ABA visitors who suggested the outside review, as well as to the Legal Writing consultants who evaluated our program.

One member of the committee preferred the “directorless” program model to the model the Committee ultimately recommended. We consulted the ALWD information on programs that function with no director and learned that currently 14% of legal research and writing programs operate according to a “directorless” model. This can mean several things in terms of administrative responsibility; sometimes there is a rotating administrative chair, sometimes a permanent administrative chair, neither with supervisory responsibility.

The ABA Sourcebook suggests that the appropriate leadership model for any particular program should be determined, in part, according to the employment status and experience of the legal writing teachers, as well as other factors concerning the functioning of the program. Currently, our legal writing department is staffed by persons on, or eligible for, long-term contracts. For a legal writing department of this type, the Sourcebook says:

In general, a director under this model has greater responsibility than a director of a program with tenure-track writing professors. The potential additional turnover increases the director’s responsibilities for recruiting, hiring, training, and supervising new legal writing professors. As they gain experience, writing professors with renewable long-term contracts or two-year contracts that are indefinitely renewable will need commensurately less training and supervision. The director will become more of a general coordinator, continually “taking the pulse” of the program and its faculty, striving to develop an intellectual community that fosters creativity in teaching and curriculum development, and finding opportunities for individual faculty members to engage in service activities and scholarly publication.

We acknowledge that experienced teachers on long-term contracts staff our legal writing program. However, the Committee was sufficiently concerned about the need for change in the current structure that we found it premature to adopt a “directorless” model at this time, regardless the experience of the teachers.

With respect to the issue of whether the recommended Legal Writing Director should have a tenure-track position or a long-term contract, the Committee was split. Approximately one-half of the Committee felt that tenure was either not appropriate or not the best form of employment for this position. Approximately the other half of the committee felt that the most important issue was to find the best leader for the program and were open to virtually any form of employment status for the right person. One member felt that tenure was critical for the person to do their job effectively. Because this issue will certainly be debated at the faculty level, we set forth our rationales below.
The initial inclination of the Committee was that the new Director should be hired on some sort of clinical tenure or legal writing tenure track, \textit{i.e.}, a new kind of tenure track that we do not currently have (assuming that we could get the University to agree to it). The consultants’ report had recommended that the position be tenured or tenurable. The rationale was that tenure would provide security and status to the new Legal Writing Director to help that person work with the Dean and tenured faculty on the needs of the program. The Committee members supporting this idea also thought that providing tenured/tenurable status to the position would make it more attractive to the best prospective candidates and would give real clout to his or her work with and advocacy for the program.

The rest of the committee voiced serious concerns about creating an additional form of employment status for this position. Their first concern was that a Director who was working on the publication demands necessary for obtaining tenure might give short shrift to the work of reviewing the current program and coordinating its improvement. Second was a concern that a Director with an employment status different from the rest of the Legal Writing Professors would introduce an additional distancing layer between the legal writing faculty and the tenured faculty. Third, many committee members did not agree that providing “legal writing tenure” to the Director would provide an opportunity to move the rest of the legal writing faculty into that same status (as opposed to long-term contracts). They also indicated that many legal writing programs with tenured directors tend to be those that rely primarily on adjuncts to teach in the first-year program, so such a model would not be appropriate here. For these programs the director usually creates, writes and supplies all the program assignments, syllabus and leadership to the program.

An ancillary benefit of using a long-term contract rather than a tenured or tenure-track approach is that it introduces flexibility for future changes in leadership structure for the program. While the vast majority of the Committee believes that a Legal Writing Director with supervisory responsibilities makes sense today for Cleveland-Marshall, the Committee also recognizes that it might be appropriate in future to move to a different leadership model. In other words, even though the great majority of the Committee did not believe that a “directorless” model is appropriate for our program at this time, a future committee, dealing with a different set of circumstances, might well decide that a change in model is warranted.

So, although the Committee almost unanimously decided to recommend hiring a Legal Writing Director from outside the law school, through a national search, the Committee did not reach consensus with regard to whether the law school should offer a long-term contract or some form of tenure for the new Director.

\textbf{Motion:} Cleveland-Marshall College of Law should conduct a national search to hire a new Director of the Legal Writing Program. While it was the consensus of the Committee that an effective leader would recognize that good leadership does not entail “micro-managing” the legal writing program, the Director—working closely with the rest of the legal writing faculty—should have primary responsibility for leadership of the program, including the authority to implement changes, as necessary, under the guiding principle that it be structured so that it is the most effective program for our first-year students. The Director would report directly to the Dean.

Should this motion pass, the Committee will ask the Dean to initiate an appropriate hiring process as soon as possible. The Committee recognizes that a full search for this position may well extend to the next semester and also may function outside the AALS process.

If the faculty rejects our recommendation to hire a Legal Writing Director, the Committee would then, in satisfaction of our charge, have to address the remaining substantive and curricular issues set forth in the consultants’ report and make recommendations with respect to each of them. The Committee feels that a Legal Writing Director, in conjunction with the existing legal writing faculty, would be better suited to evaluate the individual substantive and curricular suggestions.
Sample Materials for Adjunct Workshops

An annual Adjunct Appreciation Luncheon is held in the spring during which one or more full-time faculty members lead a discussion of selected pedagogical topics to assist our adjunct faculty in improving their performance in the classroom. This discussion is opened up to all in attendance to encourage a rich exchange of best practices on the topic. These are generally well-attended and have been well-received by the adjunct faculty. The topics in recent years have included the following:

- Drafting Exams and Evaluating Student Progress: A panel of full-time faculty members explained the variety of ways in which exams can be structured (including essays, short answers, and multiple choice questions) and discussed the strengths and weaknesses of the different approaches. The panel also discussed methods for evaluating student progress in the course of a semester in order to identify and address problem areas.
- The Use of Online Course Materials: Professor Jonathan Witmer-Rich presented his innovative web-based course materials that garnered him a 2010 University System of Ohio's "Faculty Innovator Award".
- Incorporating Skills Training into a Course: Two full-time faculty members led a roundtable discussion of how best to incorporate skills into the classroom curriculum. A variety of approaches to skills training were shared such as drafting exercises, negotiation simulations, and problem solving.
- Engaging Students in the Classroom: Three full-time faculty members described the ways in which they actively engage their students in the learning process. The methods discussed included having students work with each other in small groups, identifying an animating point and core concept for the course (and each class), and giving substantial feedback to students to ensure a dynamic learning experience.
- The Use of Computer Learning Aids: The Director of our Law Library made a presentation on CALI exercises and explained how they can be used to improve student learning.

In 2012, Prof. Broering-Jacobs, the Director of Legal Writing also organized a luncheon workshop for all adjunct faculty on the topic of how to provide useful comments on student writing assignments. Some of the materials provided in this workshop are appended hereto.
COMMENTING ON STUDENT WORK

September 2012

Writing Effective Comments

Remember your role.

- teacher or coach, not editor and proofreader

- our goal should be to teach our students to become effective self-editors

Explain your methods up front.

- let students know that you’re not marking everything

- it sometimes helps to clarify that you’re responding as a reader

Prioritize.

- tailor comments to course goals and learning objectives

- be clear about what you are trying to teach and stay focused on those objectives in your commenting

Don’t comment on everything.

- higher-order concerns first
  - law and analysis,
  - then organization (if the law is wrong, organization likely to be off, too),
  - finally, things like grammar, punctuation, and sentence structure

- mark the first one or two instances of a mistake, explain how to correct the error, and encourage student to look for similar errors throughout

- too much can overwhelm and create false impression of you as their editor Be specific.

explain
- comments like “awkward” or “vague” or “???” don’t help much
- provide some explanation or direction, at least the first time you see the error

Examples of comments with explanation and direction.

Weak thesis. This sentence just restates the element of attractive nuisance under discussion. The sentence should instead say something about the first factor in your test.

As written, this agreement suggests that there is only one statement of work. Look at the language in the precedent for an idea about how you might rephrase.

This agreement doesn’t follow the guidelines for use of shall. Use shall for covenants. Remember the Adams article and his simple test: use shall when imposing an obligation on the subject of the sentence.

provide examples
- you can use student work (even in the same document)
- refer student to examples in the text or other course materials, page numbers can help

if you identify a problem and you’re unsure of the solution, try a reader-centered comment

Examples of reader-centered comments that don’t suggest specific solutions:

I’m having trouble understanding your argument in section II.
Unclear what this means. Perhaps if you explain it to me, I can help you to revise.

Connect comments to other aspects of your teaching.

text and other course materials class discussion

individual conferences

Include positive comments.

students need to know what to keep and what to emulate in the future make sure positive comments are specific, too

Examples of specific and positive comments:

Very nice comparison. You were specific and the conclusion you draw from the comparison is clear.

Good. You’ve included counter analysis and you’ve come up with a reason that the defendant probably won’t succeed on this argument.

Focus on the writing, not the writer.

avoid “you” in your comments; refer to the writing instead

Consider tone.

avoid sarcasm

generally avoid humor because it can be misinterpreted students react negatively to comments like “No!” “Yikes!” and “Are you kidding?”

Add a cover sheet or an end comment.

This gives a student an overview of his or her writing and helps students understand your overall impression of their work, see patterns, and prioritize tasks for revision.

An example of an end comment on an A paper:

This is an excellent working draft. Your writing is clear and easy to follow; it also is free from excessive grammar and punctuation problems. When we meet, please make sure we talk about exploring counterarguments. Some factors in your test could go either way. In a memo, it’s important to explore both sides.

An example of an end comment on a paper with mechanical problems but few analytic problems:

Good work on the draft. Your analysis is sound and thorough. I note a number of problems on your memo that we can discuss during your conference. I’d also like to discuss the struggle you seem to be having with verb tense. I think we might want to enlist the help of the folks over at the University’s writing center on this.

An example of an end comment on a paper with major analytic problems:

You have a good start here. I’m especially pleased with your ability to draw specific comparisons between relevant facts and then draw conclusions based on those similarities or differences.

One big problem that I’d like to see you work on is your expression of the relationship between factors. The factors don’t operate in isolation, so your writing needs to consider each in relation to the others.

Additionally, foreseeability is just one element of attractive nuisance. You shouldn’t be writing about liability in this memo; liability is several steps beyond the foreseeability question.
Finally, you exceeded the page limit. This would be a significant problem for you on a graded assignment and an even bigger problem on a document filed with a court. Be sure to review instructions carefully.

Dealing with the paper that is truly awful.

talk to the student, offer some additional instruction or interim steps, and ultimately get a redraft

- could ask for an outline

- could have student go back to the beginning and outline the rule

This example gives the student a small task before a conference:

When you come in to meet about the draft, please bring a one paragraph summary of your analysis of each issue. No cites or conforming to CREAC required. Just bring me your analysis in your own words. I think your analysis is getting lost in your efforts to conform to the memo requirements.

This example gives an opportunity for a complete rewrite:

If you have time after class, I think it would be a good idea for us to meet to discuss your working draft. I’m concerned that you may have misunderstood the assignment because some of the major (and most important) components of the working draft are missing. Additionally, you focused on elements of attractive nuisance that aren’t relevant to the issue.

If you’re interested, you may rewrite the working draft early in the week, and I’ll give you additional feedback before the conference.

Let’s talk to come up with a plan to get this memo back on track.

Commenting Efficiently

On certain assignments, there are ways to avoid commenting individually on every paper and still give students useful feedback.

review selected examples in class
- project using the document camera
- create a handout that students can mark up

Offer written feedback on select student work

- no need to provide an entire document
- pull excerpts that demonstrate common errors

Provide global comments to entire class

- there are times when the entire class makes a similar mistake
- no need to comment on identical error repeatedly
- instead, provide written or verbal feedback applicable to the whole class

Get the students involved.

Self-evaluation

- helps students develop self-editing skills in an explicit way
- requires direction
- consider leading the self-evaluation in class
- alternatively, you could require that students perform certain self-evaluation as part of the document that they turn in to you for a grade

Peer feedback

- also helps students develop editing skills
- also requires direction
- gives students experience as a reader
- students seem to get more from giving the feedback than they do from receiving it

Consider using commenting cover sheets or grading rubrics.

Useful for teaching, not just for grading

- clarify your expectations
- a rubric provided in advance helps students take responsibility for their own learning keeps your grading and comments focused

I. INTRODUCTION

This manual provides information to assist you in your professional endeavors at Cleveland-Marshall. Please review this material carefully. Feel free to ask Dean's Office personnel or other persons mentioned in the manual for more information on any item. If you have questions about matters we do not cover, please ask. Every Fall you also will receive a copy of the STUDENT HANDBOOK that we provide every student. The STUDENT HANDBOOK is also online at www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudent/ (click on “Student Resources” and then “STUDENT HANDBOOK”). If you need additional copies, please ask Layla Davis (687-2396) for the STUDENT HANDBOOK and Rosa M. DelVecchio (687-2300) for the ADJUNCT FACULTY MANUAL.

II. A BRIEF HISTORY OF CLEVELAND-MARSHALL

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, founded in 1897 as the Cleveland Law School, was the first law school in Ohio to admit women and one of the first to admit minorities. In 1946, the Cleveland Law School merged with the John Marshall School of Law, founded in 1916, to become the Cleveland-Marshall Law School. In 1969, the Law School joined Cleveland’s new public university as its sixth college and was renamed the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law of Cleveland State University.

Because egalitarianism was a motivating principle of the law school’s founders, the early school’s student population was remarkable for its diversity. Many of the men and women who studied in the new law college were immigrants or the sons and daughters of immigrants; many were older students and minorities, and most worked during the day while studying law at night.

A number of the law school’s earliest alumni and alumnae had notable careers, including the Honorable Genevieve Cline ’21, the first woman in America appointed to a federal court; the Honorable Mary Grossman ’12, the first woman in America elected to a municipal court bench; former Cleveland Mayor, the Honorable Carl B. Stokes ’56, the first African American mayor of a major American city; the Honorable Louis Stokes ’53, Ohio’s first African American Congressman; and former Cleveland Mayor, five-time Ohio Governor and two-term U.S. Senator, the Honorable Frank Lausche ’21, son of Slovenian immigrants. Other graduates left their imprint in large and small ways in the local history books as influential attorneys, judges, public servants and leaders in commerce and industry. Cleveland-Marshall graduates laid the foundation for the legal profession in Northeast Ohio and shaped the future of our region as surely as the early explorers who mapped the outlines of the Western Reserve. Today’s alumni and alumnae remain the foundation of the legal profession in Northeast Ohio, serving the judiciary at every level, heading law firms, chairing corporations and contributing to the region’s and nation’s economic and social wellbeing.

Accredited by the American Bar Association in 1957 and accepted into the Association of American Law Schools in 1969, the law school offers the J.D., the LL.M., and five dual degrees—J.D./M.B.A. (Master of Business Administration), J.D./M.P.A. (Master of Public Administration), J.D./M.U.P.D.D. (Master of Urban Planning, Design and Development), J.D./M.A.E.S. (Master of Arts in Environmental Studies), J.D./M.S.E.S. (Master of Science in Environmental Science). Under the supervision of the clinical faculty, C|M|LAW students receive experiential training in six legal clinics: Community Health Law Advocacy Clinic, Employment Law Clinic, Housing Law Clinic, Urban Development Law Clinic, Environmental Law Clinic, and Law and Public Policy Clinic. Students receive onsite legal training through externships in a multitude of settings including federal district and appellate and state appellate courts, federal immigration and medicare appeals courts, the U.S. Attorney’s Office, county prosecutor and public defender offices, general counsels’ offices (Cleveland State University, John Carroll University and Cleveland Metropolitan School Board), and the National Labor Relations Board; they edit three journals—Cleveland State Law Review, Journal of Law and Health, and Global Business Law Review—and participate successfully in moot court competitions throughout the country. Cleveland-Marshall students may choose a subject-specific curriculum through the law school’s concentrations in Employment and Labor Law, Business Law, Criminal Law, Civil Litigation and Dispute Resolution, International and Comparative Law, and Tax Law (suspended for new students as of 2007-08). Moreover, C|M|LAW students are learning the lawyer’s responsibility to the community through countless volunteer opportunities in the law school’s Pro Bono Program. Finally, C|M|LAW students, graduates and members of the bench and bar study and research in one of the country’s
The finest law libraries, which houses the state’s second largest legal collection and all major online resources.

III. ADJUNCT OFFICE AND MAIL

A. Office Space. The office for adjuncts is located in the Law Library, second floor, LL 215. To enter you need the code to the electronic lock. Layla Davis (523-2396), Secretary to Assistant Dean Lifter, or Israel Payton (687-2344), Law School Receptionist, will tell you the code.

The office has several desks for your use, a Microsoft Windows-based computer, and a printer. The office also has a separate small office that you should feel free to use to meet with students. You may also prepare for class in the faculty lounge (LB 132) if it is not being used for a law school event.

B. Mailboxes. Your mailboxes are located in the Adjunct Office. Please check your mailbox regularly although, in order to stay current on law school events, deadlines, and other pertinent information, please check e-mail regularly.

C. Receiving Mail at the Law School. Mail related to law school business can be sent to you at our mailing address: Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, Cleveland State University, 2121 Euclid Avenue, LB 138, Cleveland, Ohio 44115-2214. Mail addressed to faculty as well as memos and other items distributed by C|M|LAW personnel will be placed in your mailbox.

IV. WEBSITE

The C|M|LAW website address is www.law.csuohio.edu. This site contains useful information such as course descriptions, schedules, first class assignments, course book assignments, and faculty profiles. The Student Handbook, containing the law school academic regulations and the Honor Code, may be found at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/resources/studenthandbook. The website also contains a calendar of events and other important law school dates, as well as information about admissions, career planning, financial aid, and the law alumni association. This calendar is updated regularly and contains information such as lectures, conferences, important student dates, holidays, and faculty meetings. The Calendar can be found at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/newsevents/calendar. The site links to the law library website, a very useful research tool.

Many of the documents that are helpful to faculty members are also available online on the Faculty Resources page, found under the Faculty/Staff tab. Although the content of the Faculty Resources page is always changing, currently posted documents and forms include: Class Rosters and Photos, Document Templates, Exam Grade Report Form, Faculty Manual, First Assignments Posting, Grade Distribution Form, Grade Due Dates, Lunchtime Lecture Series, Materials at the Reception Desk, Take Home Exams Policy, and ULWR Seminars Instruction Sheet.

V. E-MAIL AND NETWORK ADDRESSES

Law School e-mail addresses are formatted as follows: firstname.lastname @law.csuohio.edu. This format is used for all currently enrolled students, faculty (including adjuncts and lecturers), and staff.

Law school network accounts are available to all adjunct faculty. This account is required to check law school e-mail, access course web pages, and past exams online.

You may communicate with students via individual e-mail or class listservs. To obtain a class listserv, contact automation@law.csuohio.edu or 523-7555.

We will provide you with a copy of your account username and password by letter prior to the beginning of each semester. You can have your law school e-mail account forwarded to your work account upon request by e-mailing automation@law.csuohio.edu. It is, however, important to keep your account login information handy to access course webpages and past exams.
VI. ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICES

A. OFFICE OF THE DEAN
(Law Building, Room 106)

Dean Craig M. Boise (LB 108; 687-2300) is the chief academic and administrative officer of the law school. His duties include oversight of the hiring of full-time and adjunct faculty, fundraising and development, appointment of committees and special task forces, and alumni and community relations.

- Administrative Secretary Holli Goodman (LB 107; 687-2300).
- Assistant Dean for Admissions and Financial Aid Christopher Lucak (LB 137A; 687-4692)
- Career Planning Director Jennifer Blaga (LB 137B; 687-2540)

Associate Dean for Administration Mark J. Sundahl (LB 111; 687-2300) is responsible for the administration of many functions of the law school including course scheduling, curriculum planning, recruiting and working with adjunct and visiting faculty, student advising, clinics, and oversight of the Student Services Center offices of Academic Affairs, Student Life, and Student Records.

- Administrative Secretary Rosa M. DelVecchio (LB 106; 687-2300) schedules appointments for Associate Dean Sundahl. She handles submission of CLE forms for teaching credit to the Ohio Supreme Court.
- Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs Jean Lifter (LB 143; 687-4557)
- Director of Student Life
- Student Records Officer Marcie Rechner (LB 142; 687-2289)

Associate Dean for Academic Enrichment Heidi Gorovitz Robertson (LB 130; 687-9264) is responsible for cultivating faculty intellectual enrichment and student achievement. Her duties include coordinating workshops and other faculty-focused teaching and scholarship presentations, advising on internal and external communication strategies that promote faculty development, providing guidance to junior faculty in helping them develop their scholarly agendas, and working with faculty committees to enhance the quality of teaching and scholarship. Associate Dean Robertson also has... administrative responsibility for academic excellence programs for students, as well as the implementation of our plan to improve our bar passage rate.

- Administrative Secretary Rosa M. DelVecchio (LB 106; 687-2300) schedules appointments for Associate Dean Robertson.
- Director of Academic Support Kelly Curtis (LB 54; 687-2359)
- Director of Bar Examination Preparation Mary Jane McGinty (LB 147; 687-2297)

Law Library Director Kristina Niedringhaus (LL 110; 687-3547) is in charge of the library and is responsible for the oversight, development, and coordination of technology.

Director of Budget and Administration Jeane H. White (LB 112; 687-2306) is in charge of law school financial matters and is the law school liaison for telecommunications, physical plant and equipment needs. She is responsible for general oversight of the areas managed by Sandra Natran (see below) and Laverne Carter (see section on Faculty and Administrative Services).

- Administrative Secretary Donna Helfrich is Ms. White’s assistant.
- Administrative Coordinator Sandra Natran (LB 145; 687-2354) coordinates and facilitates special events. She schedules law building rooms for meetings, conferences and lectures, and serves as the law school’s liaison to Conference Services, Food Services, Instructional Media Services, Physical Plant, and campus police. Ms. Natran prepares and submits Supreme Court of Ohio CLE applications for upcoming lectures and conferences.

Director of Advancement Jennifer N. Nye (LB 113; 687-2491) is in charge of fundraising.

- Administrative Secretary Rita Pawlik (LB 115; 687-4617) is Ms. Nye’s assistant.
B. CLERICAL SERVICES

Manager Laverne Carter (LB 118; 687-2349) oversees the Word Processing Unit, the Student Services Information Center, and Photocopying. To request secretarial assistance relating to your courses, see Ms. Carter, whose staff consists of:

- Secretaries Diane Adams (LB 115; 687-6884), Karen Isobe (LB 115; 687-4626), and Yolanda Salviejo (LB 120; 523-7234), and Administrative Secretaries Donna Helfrich (LB 115; 687-4594) and Rita Pawlik (LB 115; 687-4617) provide support to assigned faculty and administrative staff.

- Word Processing Specialist Mary McGee (LB 55; 687-2307) provides support to the Legal Writing faculty and to the offices of Law Review, Journal of Law and Health, and Moot Court.

- Word Processing Specialist Harold Jackson (LB 116; 687-4888) expedites your course-related photocopying requests. Check with him for proper procedures, deadlines, and costs, especially in regard to reproduction of class materials and exams. Also see him for supplies such as paper, pens, staples, exam blue books, and the like.

- Clerical Specialist Israel Payton (LB 138; 687-2344) manages the Student Services Center Information desk. (See Student Services Center section.)

C. LAW ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Executive Director Mary McKenna (LB 121; 687-2368) is in charge of alumni activities and special events. If you are trying to locate any of our alumni, Ms. McKenna can assist you.

- Assistant Director Jill McDonnell (LB 120; 523-7357)
VII. STUDENT SERVICES CENTER (SSC)
(Law Building, Room 138)

A. HOURS

When classes are in session in the fall and spring semesters, the SSC hours are M & T 8:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m., W & TH 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., and F 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Summer hours are M & T 8:00 a.m. to 6:30 p.m., W & TH 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., and Friday 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. For hours at other times, contact the receptionist. For the hours of a specific office within the SSC, contact that office.

B. RECEPTION

Israel Payton (687-2344) is the law school's Student Services Center first point of contact. He is responsible for incoming mail, faxes, phone calls, walk-in traffic and sales of student materials.

C. ACADEMIC AFFAIRS

Assistant Dean Jean Lifter (LB 143; 687-4557) is responsible for course scheduling and classroom assignments, student advising, course registration, academic affairs, and supervising ADA accommodations for classes and exams.

- Secretary Layla Davis (2396) finalizes teaching contracts for adjuncts. She is the person to notify of any room changes and class cancellations. Call Ms. Davis if you need to cancel a class, whether or not the cancellation has been previously announced in class—preferably at least several hours before class time—and she will make sure that the appropriate notices are posted. She can provide you with classroom seating charts and class rosters. Textbook orders are now placed directly through the CSU Bookstore. Ms. Davis will notify you when orders must be placed, which is generally two months before the semester begins.
D. ACADEMIC SUPPORT

Mary Jane McGinty (LB 147; 687-2297) is Director of the Bar Examination Preparation Program. She teaches our Bar Preparation course, coordinates programs related to the bar exam, and oversees our Academic Excellence Program.

Kelly Curtis (LB 54; 687-2359) is the Director of Academic Support Program, which provides academic support to our students.

- Secretary Layla Davis (LB 144; 687-2396)

E. ADMISSIONS AND FINANCIAL AID

Assistant Dean Christopher Lucak (LB 137A; 687-4692) directs the student admissions process and oversees financial aid. His staff consists of:

- Assistant Director Gina Huffman (LB 135; 687-5317)
- Administrative Secretary Steve Antol (LB 138; 687-2304)
- Secretary Jacqueline Carner (LB136; 687-2287)

F. CAREER PLANNING

Director Jennifer A. Blaga (LB 137B; 687-2540) coordinates on-campus interviewing and develops programs to assist students in planning their careers during and after law school. Ms. Blaga's staff consists of:

- Assistant Director Francie Fields (LB 137C; 687-2260)
- Assistant Director Kristen Rutter (LB 137C; 687-2260)
- Coordinator Jessica Mathewson (LB 137A; 687-6871)

G. STUDENT LIFE

The Director of Student Life maintains a vibrant, supportive, and healthy environment for students at C|M|LAW and serves as the students’ point of first contact for the law school administration. She provides academic and financial aid counseling to students and oversees programs to enhance the student experience at C|M|LAW. She oversees our Peer Advisor program, is our student organizations liaison, and oversees the law school’s initiatives to promote diversity.
H. STUDENT RECORDS

Student Records Officer Marcie Rechner (LB 142; 687-2289) maintains student records, including those relating to grades and graduation requirements. See her if you need grade report forms or other information relevant to the law school's processing of grades. She also collects and maintains faculty evaluations.

- Student Assistant Jessica Hodge (LB 142; 687-2289)

I. LEAVING MATERIALS FOR STUDENTS

Faculty may leave materials for student pick up at the Student Services Reception Desk under the following conditions:

Please identify the course and/or professor on the materials and/or envelope containing the materials. If you want a student to receive the material in an individual envelope, please provide the material to the receptionist in that form with the student identification marked on the outside. If you need a secretary to prepare the envelopes, please see Laverne Carter.

Also, please tell the receptionist:

a. whether students will identify themselves by name or exam number,

b. how long the material will be available for students (You may leave the material for a specific length of time or for the entire semester), and

c. the conditions under which students may review the material. For example, you should specify whether students may take the material with them or if students should only view the material in the Student Services Center.

A Quiz/Paper/Exam Viewing Form is attached as Appendix 8. You should provide this form to the receptionist when delivering materials for student review. This form will allow you to provide the instructions for the receptionist to follow. If you are simply dropping off an envelope for a student to pick up, it is not necessary to complete the form.
At the beginning of each semester, we will return to the professor any material that students did not pick up from the prior semester.

VIII. LAW SCHOOL COURSE INFORMATION

A. Teaching Schedules

Many adjunct professors teach the same course at the same time each year; others teach the same course at the same time every other year. Each spring as we are working on the next year's schedule, we will contact you about your availability to teach the following year. We greatly appreciate prompt responses to our inquiry so that we may finalize the schedule. Copies of the course schedules and accompanying exam schedules are available at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/academics/schedules/current.

Contracts are not prepared until shortly before the semester during which you are scheduled to teach. If your circumstances change such that you are unable to teach, please contact Associate Dean Sundahl or Assistant Dean Lifter as soon as possible.

B. Course Planning and Preparation

1. Selecting and Ordering Course Materials. You are responsible for selecting your own course materials. Upon request, legal publishers will furnish you with complimentary copies of the casebooks and related materials they publish on the subject you are teaching. You may also want to consult with colleagues who teach the same course. Please ask Associate Dean Sundahl for assistance in identifying appropriate faculty to contact.

Ms. Davis (523-2396) coordinates the ordering of casebooks and other course materials with the university bookstore; she will provide you with request forms the semester prior to the one in which you are scheduled to teach. You may also choose to use materials you have compiled as a supplement to (or even in lieu of) a commercially available casebook or other course materials. See the section below on photocopying for more information on this option.
2. Preparation of Course Syllabi. University Academic Regulations require that you provide students with a written syllabus at the beginning of your course, outlining the topics you will cover and the assignments related to each as well as your contact information. The written syllabus must also contain information regarding your expectations of the class, the factors you will take into consideration in determining final course grades, attendance policies, and your availability to students outside of the classroom—including telephone number and e-mail address. If you need to modify the syllabus as the semester progresses, that is fine.

Two examples of course syllabi are attached as Appendices 1A and 1B). Consulting with colleagues is helpful. Upon your request, Associate Dean Sundahl will also provide you relevant course syllabi.

You are required to provide a copy of your syllabus for your course to Associate Dean Sundahl by the end of the first week of the semester. Course syllabi from recently past years are available at Library Circulation and earlier years are kept in the Rare Books room.

3. Posting of First Class Assignments. First class assignments are posted in two ways: on the law school website or through Layla Davis.

First class student assignments can be viewed at:

http://devel-drupal.law.csuohio.edu/first_assignments/view_firstassignment.php3

4. Photocopying. Harold Jackson (687-4888; LB 116) is in charge of photocopying. You should submit your course syllabus and any other materials you want duplicated for your classes as far in advance as possible to avoid being caught in the last-minute rush. Assistant Dean Lifter (687-4557) or her secretary, Ms. Davis (687-2396), can give you a rough head count of students registered for your classes. The logistics of the system are greatly simplified by having a set of handouts prepared prior to the first class, but it is not always possible to anticipate all the materials you will use throughout a course.

For smaller photocopying jobs that you might want to do on your own, photocopiers are available for your use in the Office of the Dean and behind the Student Services Center Information counter.
Each class is allowed fifty (50) pages of free photocopies per student per semester to provide students with a syllabus and initial handouts. After the fifty-page limit, students will be charged .05 cents per page.

If you anticipate having a substantial amount of material reproduced as class handouts, talk to Harold Jackson about having the materials copied as a set and packaged for sale to students by the copy center. These materials are sold at .05 cents per page to students, plus the cost of covers and binding.

5. Course Web Pages. Library staff will assist you in setting up, maintaining, and adding items to Course Materials web pages for any classes you teach. Course Materials webpages are password-protected resource pages for individual classes, which remain available throughout the semester that the course is taught. Any items a faculty member places on Course Reserve, whether print or electronic, will be placed on a Course Reserve page. Electronic Course Reserve items will be linked from the page; print Course Reserve items will be represented by a link to their Scholar records. All Course Reserve items that appear on Course Materials webpages will be listed under the heading “Library Materials.” (CONTACT: Circulation ext. 2250). Course Materials webpages can be used for much more than just gathering your Course Reserve materials into one place. Course Materials webpages can be used as a complete online resource for your class. You can add items such as syllabi, assignments, readings, relevant web links, CALI lessons, PowerPoint presentations, podcasts, videos, and more. For more ideas on creating a customized online resource page for your class, see Course Webpage Options on the library webpage under Faculty Services. (CONTACT: Sue Altmeyer ext. 4894).

6. Technology in Classroom. All of the classrooms in the law school, with the exception of room 205, are equipped with presentation technology. These classrooms feature LCD projectors, document cameras, computers, DVD/VCR units, as well as inputs for external USB drives and laptop computers. All classroom presentation computers have standard office software, including PowerPoint, and are connected to the Internet. If you would like an overview of the new technology control systems, please contact a member of the Automation staff for assistance. New podium keys will be issued to replace the keys to the older podium models at the beginning of the Fall semester. You may obtain a key at the library reference desk. Smart Podium Instructions are also available online on the Faculty Resources page.
The seminar rooms (LB 64, 65, and 66 - located across the hallway from the law clinics) are equipped with LCD monitors and wall ports for the connection of laptop computers. If you would like to use the technology in these rooms, but do not own a laptop, please contact the automation department for assistance.

7. Placing Course Materials on Reserve. If there are resources such as specific treatises or articles that will provide helpful optional reading for your students, contact Circulation (687-2250) to arrange to have the materials put on reserve in the law library for easy access by your students.

8. Posting Notices for Students. You can communicate with students via e-mail, class listservs, or transmission to an individual student. To obtain a class listserv, contact a Network Administrator at extension 523-7555 or automation@law.csuohio.edu. If you need to get a document to an individual student, please give it to Israel Payton (Student Services Reception) and notify the student to pick it up there.

9. Student Pictures. Shortly after the start of the term, the Automation Department distributes picture rosters of students enrolled in each class. You can also see photos of students in your class on Campus Net. See Class Roster, infra at XI.C.1. You may also view photos of all currently enrolled students at https://intra.law.csuohio.edu/roster/roster.php. If you have questions, contact Automation at automation@law.csuohio.edu or 523-7555.

10. CALI, LexisNexis, and Westlaw. Access to CALI Lessons (Computer-Assisted Legal Instruction tutorials), as well as the LexisNexis and Westlaw databases, is available to adjunct instructors for work limited to your teaching during the semester(s) in which you teach. For information on how to access CALI Lessons, as well as to obtain a LexisNexis activation code or Westlaw password, contact Laura Ray, Educational Programming Library, at 216-687-6880.
C. COURSE PROCEDURAL MATTERS

1. Class Roster. You can download your class roster on Campus Net. (See Campus Net, infra at XII.F for how to access this site). It will be under the Instructor tab. You can also access contact information for every student in your class: Once you have the class roster on the screen, click on the word “details” next to the student’s name. You can download the pictures of students in your class by clicking on Roster with Pictures, which is on the left-hand side directly above the light brown bar that identifies the semester and course number of your class.

2. E-mail Class Lists. You can communicate with students via individual e-mail or class listservs. To obtain a class listserv, contact the Network Administrator at automation@law.csuohio.edu or 523-7555.

3. Student Mail. Student mailboxes no longer exist. If you need to get a document to an individual student, please give it to Mr. Payton and notify the student to pick it up at the Student Services Information counter.

4. Monitoring Class Attendance. According to the ABA, our accrediting agency, "A law school shall require regular and punctual class attendance." ABA Standard 304(d). Our Academic Regulation 1 states that “[s]tudents are required to attend class with substantial regularity.” Unsatisfactory attendance "unless otherwise defined by the course instructor with reasonable notice to students enrolled, shall be absence from more than two weeks of classes in a single semester (or, in the case of Summer term, absence from more than one week of classes) and shall be cause for lowering the final grade entered, involuntarily withdrawing a student from the course or withholding credit and entering the grade of F, in the sole discretion of the course instructor." See Student Handbook, Academic Regulation 1. Some professors meet this requirement by taking attendance at the beginning of each class or by circulating a copy of the class roster during each class so students can document their attendance by initialing the roster next to their names. You should state the class attendance requirement in your course syllabus. Students may be administratively withdrawn from a course due to excessive absenteeism. See Assistant Dean Lifter for details on this process.

5. Excused Absences for Election Work. In order to foster student engagement and participation in the civic sphere, Cleveland State University has encouraged students to serve as poll workers and in polling support positions for the last several national and statewide elections. In Spring 2008 the Faculty Senate of Cleveland State University adopted a policy pertaining to student absences arising because of such service in these elections. See Appendix 3, CSU Poll Worker Excused Absence Policy.

6. Class Time. Our hour is 50 minutes. We expect you to teach that length of time for each hour whether you teach a course worth 2, 3, or 4 credit hours. If you take a break in a class, we expect you to make up that time. For example, if you teach a 4-credit-hour course in two 1-hour and 40-minute sessions, and you take a 10 minute break, you need to make up that 10 minutes.

7. Class Cancellations. Class cancellations should be avoided, and missed classes must be made up before reading week begins. If you must cancel a class for any reason, even if you have given your students prior notice, please inform Assistant Dean Lifter at 687-4557 or her assistant, Ms. Davis, at 687-2396. If neither answers, then call Mr. Payton (687-2344). They will post a notice of the cancellation and e-mail your class (with copy to Associate Dean Sundahl). Please provide as much advance notice as possible. For evening classes, please call by 4:00 p.m. If you are cancelling a class, please make sure you speak with a live person. Do not rely on voice mail or e-mail unless receipt of the message is confirmed.

8. Makeup Classes. ABA Standard 304 requires that classes meet for a specific total number of minutes per academic credit hour during the semester, and our courses are scheduled to meet those requirements. Accordingly, makeup classes should be scheduled if you cancel a class. Depending on your students' schedules, you may also be able to make up lost time by starting classes earlier or extending classes. Check with Ms. Natran and Ms. Davis to determine classroom availability if you are planning extended or makeup sessions.

Other options for making up classes include bringing in a guest speaker (so you don’t have to cancel the class in the first place), having an online discussion if you use TWEN (or some other comparable website for your class), or videotaping a lecture. To videotape a class lecture, contact Automation at automation@law.csuohio.edu or 523-7555 at least one week in advance of when you intend students to watch the video.
Makeup classes cannot be scheduled during the designated reading period or during the exam period because that time is reserved for students to prepare for exams.

9. Form of Address. Lecturers and adjunct professors often ask how their students should address them. As with full-time faculty, this decision is a personal one well within the instructor's discretion. It is appropriate, however, for a lecturer or an adjunct professor to have her/his students address her as "Professor" both inside and outside of the classroom. You also may choose how you address students. Some professors use the formal Mr./Ms., while others use students’ first names.

10. Student Evaluations. Student evaluations are required for all courses. Near the end of the semester, you will receive a packet of student evaluations. Most professors set aside 10-15 minutes of class time to have students complete the evaluations. You must not be in the room while students fill out the evaluations. Please ask a student to collect the completed forms and return them to the Records Officer. Evaluation forms for evening students can be returned to the Legal Writing mail slot. You will not receive copies of your evaluations until you have submitted final grades for the course. The evaluations for all courses are bound by year and available to students at the Reserve Desk in the law library. A set is also kept in the Records Office for use by faculty and staff.

D. EXAMINATIONS AND GRADING

1. Introduction. This section provides information regarding midterm and final exams. Over the past few years, we have changed many of our procedures regarding exams: Most exams are now taken on computer, we have new grading guidelines and proctoring procedures, and we require advanced notice for both take-home exams and midterms. If you have a question about exams or grading that is not answered here, or the information here is not clear, please ask Associate Dean Sundahl, Assistant Dean Lifter, or Records Officer Rechner.

2. Scheduling Exams. The exam schedule is posted on the law school website. See https://www.law.csuohio.edu/academics/schedules/current.

3. Preparing Exams. You are responsible for writing your own final exam. That can seem like a formidable task, but we can provide some guidance. First, the length of the final exam is typically determined by the course credit hours: e.g., a 3-hour exam for a 3-credit-hour course. If you decide to give graded quizzes during the semester, you may consider giving a shorter exam that counts for less than 100% of the final grade.

Second, we have a website that contains many prior exams which you may consult. Many professors now post their prior exams on the website so that students can use them as practice questions and have a sense of the type of exam the professor gives. You may want to look at some of these exams for guidance on types of questions, length of exams, etc. Many faculty use a variety of questions including multiple choice, true/false with explanation, short essay, as well as the traditional issue spotting question. The exams are available only to C|M|LAW students and faculty. You may access the site from the computer in the Adjunct Faculty room, LL 215. Go to https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/services/pastexams, then enter your user name and password. You will then be allowed to look at prior exams by topic and/or professor. As this is a restricted site, you will need to use the username and password assigned to you with your law school e-mail account. Alternatively, you may contact Associate Dean Sundahl to obtain copies of these exams.

4. Midterm Exams. Midterm Exams are an increasingly popular option used in many classes, both first-year and upper-level.

a. Scheduling. Students may take midterm exams on computer, as they do final in-class exams. You must give Automation two weeks advance notice so that the exam software can be made available to your class. You must also give Assistant Dean Lifter two weeks advance notice. See Proctoring infra.

b. Anonymity. If you give a midterm that is worth 10% or more of the final grade in the course, students must obtain exam numbers so that your grading is anonymous. See Academic Regulation 3.9.

c. Proctoring. If your midterm is worth 10% or more of the final grade in the course, you cannot proctor your own midterm. This is consistent with our new proctoring policy for final in-class exams. Please contact Assistant Dean Lifter two weeks before your midterm so that she may arrange for a staff member to proctor your exam. As with the final exam protocol, you will need to fill out the Exam Instruction sheet so that the proctor knows the procedural details for administering the exam. See Appendix 5.
If your midterm is not worth 10% or more of the final grade, you may proctor your own exam.

d. Materials for your Exam. If you proctor your exam, you are responsible for bringing bluebooks, scantron sheets, and pencils to the exam. Bluebooks and scantron sheets are available from Harold Jackson in the Copy Room. Pencils are available from Marcie Rechner in the Records Office.

e. Provisions for Students with Disabilities. If a student has received accommodations for taking exams pursuant to Academic Regulation 3.7, they will take the midterm exam under those same conditions. Assistant Dean Lifter will notify you of any such students in your class.

f. Rescheduling Individual Student’s Exam. If a student is unable to take the midterm at the scheduled time, s/he must make arrangements with Assistant Dean Lifter to reschedule the exam. No student may take the exam prior to the scheduled time: All rescheduled times will be after the regular exam time. This is consistent with our policy regarding final exams. See Academic Regulation 3.6.

g. Word Counts on In-Class Exams. Please see Word Counts under Final Examinations, infra.

h. Take-Home Exams. Please see Take-Home Exams under Final Examinations, infra. Unlike in the case of a Final Exam, no notice need be provided to Dean Lifter.

5. Final Exams.

a. Reading Period. Students are afforded a relatively short reading period between the last day of classes and first day of final exams. Therefore, this period cannot be used to make up classes or to give in-class or take-home exams. The reading period for each term is indicated on the master Course Schedule available in the Student Services Center and on our website at https://www.law.csuohio.edu/academics/calendar/current.
b. Scheduling of Final Exams. Assistant Dean Lifter circulates a tentative schedule of Fall term exams along with the tentative course schedules in the Spring of the prior year. She circulates a tentative schedule for the Spring term exams during the Fall semester. Please review these immediately and let her know if you identify any problems or conflicts with the exam schedules.

If you plan to give a take-home exam, you must notify Assistant Dean Lifter by the ninth week of the term with the information identified under Take-Home Exams, infra.

c. Preparation of Final Exams. If you need help typing your exam, please allow at least five working days for typing and duplication, which will be taken care of by the word processing department through Laverne Carter, Office Manager. On the first page of the exam, please indicate the course name, number, and section, instructor name and semester and leave a blank for the student exam number—all of this will facilitate collecting exams at the end of the exam (see Proctoring Responsibilities below). Please number the pages of your exam so that it will be certain each student has all of the pages of the exam.

You must complete the Exam Instruction Form for each exam you are administering. The Form is attached as Appendix 5. Please make sure that your instructions are complete. This is the document on which the proctor will rely when proctoring your exam. If your exam is administered in parts, please explain exactly how the exam is to be administered. If your exam has Multiple Choice Questions, you must specify whether students will use the Blue (up to 5 choices for the answers) or Green (up to 10 choices) scantron sheets. Also, please indicate whether copies of your exam should be given to the library (after the exam period) for inclusion in the Past Exams online (see infra at XI.E.6). If we have any questions about your instructions, we will contact you before your exam.

So that we can be sure that we have all exams and complete instructions for the proctor before the start of the exam, we will need to have copies of your exam with instructions for the proctor at least 48 hours before the scheduled beginning time of the exam. This means that you cannot bring the exam in with you on the day of the exam. You must have the exam and instruction form copied in time for it to be delivered to Jean Lifter 48 hours before the scheduled start time. So, for example, if your exam is scheduled for Monday at 9 a.m. Jean Lifter must have the exam by Friday at 9 a.m. (As you can tell, we are not counting weekends in the time frame.) You will need to give the exam to Laverne Carter sufficiently prior to that for her to have the exam copied. The exams are copied and secured so that no students have access to them prior to the exam.

d. Exams Taken on Computer. So many students prefer to take exams on computer that we will now assume that you will allow this option, unless we hear otherwise from you. Each semester Dan Thomas sends out an e-mail explaining this policy and asking those who do not want to allow students to take exams on computer to tell him.

As a faculty member, preparing for a computerized exam is exactly the same as preparing for one written by hand. Both groups will receive printed copies of your exam questions. After the exam is completed, the computerized exams are printed by the law school’s technology department and are then delivered to Dean Lifter for distribution. If you want your exams printed in large font or printed every other line, please tell the Automation Department prior to your exam date.

Students who can provide their own laptop computers are strongly encouraged to do so. However, students who do not have their own laptop computers may request the use of one of the law school owned laptops, subject to availability. If demand exceeds supply, the available laptops will be assigned via a lottery. This lottery will be held before the examination period so that students who wish to use a law school owned laptop will know whether or not one will be available to them. Thus far we have had enough computers for student use and have not had to use the lottery system.

e. Word Counts on In-Class Exams. Now that most of us allow students to take in-class exams on computer, many have thought about how to convert blue books pages to word counts on the computer. In the 2008-09 academic year, the Teaching Committee researched this issue and made the following recommendation:
Among other approaches that might be taken, faculty at C|M|LAW and other law schools have found success with simple page-to-words ratios for converting blue-book page limits to word limits for PC test takers. Based on our study, a fair estimate for the conversion would be to assume that each side of a single-spaced bluebook page contains between 250 and 300 words.

f. Proctoring In-Class Final Exams. Please see the Exam Procedures Memo attached as Appendix 4, which sets out the specifics of our proctoring system. Proctors will be assigned to proctor your exam by Laverne Carter. During the proctoring of your exam, you must be available to answer any questions that may arise during or immediately after your exam is administered. Please inform Assistant Dean Lifter how to reach you during the exam.

You will be notified once your exams are ready for pickup from Assistant Dean Lifter. See Appendix 4 Exam Procedures Memo, Section D. Picking Up Your Exams.

g. Rescheduling Exams. The exam schedule is available to students before they register for classes each term and can be obtained online at www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/course_and_examschedule/current_year_schedule. Students with two exams in close proximity may be able to reschedule one of the exams to a later date. See Academic Regulation 3.6(b). In such cases, Assistant Dean Lifter will request copies of exams to administer. Full instructions as to timing, permitted resources, etc. must accompany all such exams. Occasionally, students experience exceptional situations (personal illness, death in the family, and the like) preventing them from taking the exam at the scheduled time. If this occurs, Assistant Dean Lifter should be informed immediately; thereafter, the student will work directly with her to schedule a makeup date. In addition, a few of your students may take the exam separately from the rest of the class due to accommodations we make for students with documented disabilities. Students seeking special arrangements must formally submit documentation to Assistant Dean Lifter at least one month before the last day of classes to schedule their exams. Assistant Dean Lifter will notify you if we need exams for rescheduling purposes.
h. Take-Home Exams. Professors may utilize take-home exams to measure the students' comprehension of the course materials. Certain caveats accompany this type of exam. You must tell Dean Lifter by week nine of the semester (1) that you will give a take-home exam and (2) who will distribute and collect the exams. You must give students very specific directions as to when the exams will be available, what resources they can consult in preparing their answers, and the date (including a specific time) their answers are due. Take-home exams may not be distributed or administered during the reading period. The reading period is set aside for students to study; giving exams during this time defeats this purpose. Take-home exams may be given only during the exam period. Israel Payton, the law school’s receptionist, who is located in Student Services, may distribute and collect take-home exams. You must contact him well in advance to make appropriate arrangements and must provide him with any exam materials and a completed Take-Home Exam Form (provided in Appendix 6 and available online on the Faculty Resources page). The library will not assist in the administration of take-home exams.

6. Grades

a. Grading Guidelines. You will receive memoranda each term covering the grading procedures at C|M|LAW. We have an anonymous grading system and an academic policy that states all courses "shall be graded in a responsible and professional manner.” Faculty meeting minutes, April 28, 1988. The policy also states:

[I]t is expected that all first-year core courses, all Perspective courses with twenty or more students, and all upper-class courses which are either required for graduation or recommended for the bar examination, shall be graded on the basis of a reasonable distribution of grades across the various grade categories. The advisory guidelines currently in effect shall serve as prima facie evidence of what constitutes a reasonable distribution, respectively, in the first year and at the upper levels; the upper-level advisory guidelines shall apply to Perspective courses. As heretofore, the Dean will have discretion to disallow any course grades which do not reflect a responsible and professional system of grading.
The grading guidelines (new in Summer 2008) are as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Grade</th>
<th>Required Core Curriculum Guidelines for Contracts, Civil Procedure, Criminal Law, Property, Torts &amp; Legislation and the Reg. State</th>
<th>General Grading Guidelines for Other Law Courses</th>
</tr>

The Advisory Grade Distribution guidelines set forth the range—in terms of percentages—of As, B+s, Bs, etc. for each course. Grades fitting within the ranges are prima facie evidence of the reasonable grade distribution required by our academic grading policy. See Id. The ranges provide a certain amount of flexibility to the professor while also establishing uniform standards that prevent one professor from routinely awarding no grade lower than a B and another professor teaching the same course from refusing to give any grade higher than a C+. The Grade Distribution Form is available online on the Faculty Resources page.

After you have completed your grading, you must fill out and turn in to Marcie Rechner, our Records Officer, for every course, the Advisory Grade Distribution form on which you calculate the number and percentage of grades in each grade category. A copy of the Advisory Grade Distribution Form is attached as Appendix 7. (This form is provided to you with the grading memo at the end of each term.) The completed form must be reviewed and approved by Associate Dean Sundahl before the grades can be accepted by the school. Please indicate the high “A” in each class when you submit your grades as many honors and awards are based on these designations.

b. Anonymity. Student exams are graded anonymously. All precautions should be taken to protect anonymity. Students should be warned not to place their names or any other identifying marks on their exams. The anonymity of the grading process is facilitated through the use of exam numbers. Students fill out exam number cards at Student Records (in the Student Services Center) and deposit them in a box. The cards are compiled into a list matching students with exam numbers. Students use the same number for each exam they take at the end of a particular term. Students must, however, use a different number for midterm and final exams.

c. Upper Level Writing Requirement and Courses Requiring Papers. Obviously, no anonymity exists in courses where students write a paper rather than take an exam, since you work closely with individual students as they select their topics, prepare outlines, and submit various drafts to you for approval throughout the course. C|M|LAW has specific criteria for student papers that satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement. See Appendix 2.

d. Other Factors Affecting Final Grades. Many professors base course grades solely on student performance on the midterm and/or final exam. Although an accepted practice, this should not be viewed as a limitation on the methods used to assess a student's performance in a class. For example, you have the option to give more frequent exams or quizzes, require formal class presentations on particular subjects, assign writing and research projects, or base part of the grade on general class participation. Three caveats are warranted. First, as previously noted, ABA accreditation standards require class attendance, so a student's grade cannot be raised merely for meeting the class attendance requirement. The grade can be lowered for poor attendance, and you have the right to withdraw a student administratively from class if absenteeism becomes extreme. Second, you must state in your written syllabus provided to students at the start of the course the factors that will affect their final grades. Finally, you are highly encouraged to provide written feedback to students on their exams and other assignments explaining the reasons for the grade you assign.
e. Turning in Grades. Your grades are due approximately 21 days from the Friday of the week your exam is given. We will notify you of the exact date well in advance.

It is imperative that you turn your grades in on time. Late grades have a number of serious consequences apart from student anxiety about their grades. We cannot determine which students maintain or lose their scholarships; we cannot determine who will be academically dismissed; we cannot determine who has satisfied their graduation requirements; we cannot provide the Ohio Supreme Court with the final law school certification of completion required for students to take the Bar; we cannot determine the Dean’s List or class rankings, the latter of which affects the Law Review and Journal—knowing who has qualified for membership and who is eligible to participate in the write-on competition.

After grading your exams, give your list of exam numbers and corresponding grades to the Records Officer, Marcie Rechner; she will supply the students’ names and return the list to you. You can then make adjustments in the final grade for each student based on other criteria (e.g., class participation and attendance) that you made known to your class in your syllabus. Return your list of exam numbers, names and final course grades to the Records Officer for processing. She will enter grades for each course into CampusNet. Due to security concerns, the Records Officer is able to post grades only at certain limited times. This means that they may not be posted for several days.

f. Grade Changes. After you have finalized your grades, you cannot change a student's grade unless you made a computational error in the test score or final grade. In accordance with the Academic Regulations, you must submit a request to change a grade to the Academic Standards Committee, and you must provide in writing an explanation of the computational error. See Academic Regulation 2.4(c). A student may also petition the Academic Standards Committee for a grade change. See Id at 2.4(d). Assistant Dean Lifter supervises the petitioning process and will provide additional information to students or professors upon request.
Once grades are posted, students may elect to change up to two certain elective course grades to a Pass, if they received a grade higher than a C-. See Academic Regulation 4.6.

g. Incomplete. A faculty member may give a student an Incomplete as a grade if the student’s work has been satisfactory but the student, through no fault of her own, has not been able to complete the course work. See Academic Regulation 2.2. The course work must be completed, and a grade submitted, no later than the last day of classes of the subsequent semester. This includes the summer term; so, if you give an I in the Spring term, you must submit a letter grade by the last day of classes in the Summer term. Id. If the course work is not completed, a grade of F will be recorded. Id. A student may seek an extension by petitioning the Academic Standards Committee.

h. The Honor Code. CM|LAW has an Honor Code governing student conduct during examinations, while researching and writing papers, and in performing other school-related assignments. The Honor Code and the procedures for adjudicating possible violations are provided in the Student Handbook. It is advisable to direct your students' attention to parts of the Code that are relevant to any assignment or exam you give. It is also important that you become familiar with the procedures for handling potential violations of the Code. The Student Handbook, containing the Honor Code, may be found through the following link:

> https://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/resources/studenthandbook

7. Maintaining and Reviewing Student Exams and Papers. Ms. Carter manages the law school system that provides students an opportunity to review their exams in the Student Services Center during specific dates and times each semester.

After your grades are finalized, please submit your exams and papers to Israel Payton at the Student Services Center Information counter. If you prefer that students contact you directly to review their exams, please inform Mr. Payton in case he receives inquiries from your students. Obviously, exam reviews are much more valuable to students if you have provided written feedback on the exams themselves.
If you wish to review an exam personally with a student, please provide your course name and the student’s exam number to Mr. Payton or Ms. Carter, and they will pull the student’s exam for you. Please promptly return the exam to Mr. Payton or Ms. Carter.

Ms. Carter also oversees the long-term storage of exams and papers. Exams and papers are retained for two years. If you elect to retain your own exams for exam review purposes, you must retain the exams for two years or give them to Ms. Carter for storage.

8. Past Exams Online. The library maintains a secure webpage for posting past exams, which can be found through the following link:

https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/services/pastexams

Please consider placing your past exams online. When you submit your exam for copying, Ms. Carter will ask if you want your exam given to the library for this purpose. In addition, please consider posting online the top A answer or answer grid.

IX. APPOINTMENT TO THE LAW FACULTY

The initial appointment to the law faculty is at the level of Lecturer of Law. After a lecturer has successfully taught a course several times, s/he is eligible to receive a Letter of Appointment as an Adjunct Professor of Law. The success of a particular instructor is determined by an exercise of discretion by the Dean based on significant input from the Associate Dean for Administration. Unlike tenure-track faculty, adjuncts are not ranked as assistant, associate or full adjunct professors. The appointment as an adjunct professor is made upon the approval of the Dean and faculty. A lecturer promoted to an adjunct professor receives a letter indicating a three-year appointment as an adjunct professor to the College of Law. This letter does not obligate the adjunct to teach a specific number of times during the three-year period, and it does not obligate the law school to include an adjunct so appointed in the course schedule during any or all of the three-year period. Rather, separate teaching contracts are executed for any term during which an adjunct professor or lecturer is hired to teach. The letter of appointment authorizes the individual to represent her/his status as an adjunct professor at C|M|LAW throughout the three-year period. At the conclusion of the three-year period, the adjunct professor is eligible for another three-year appointment, with the appointment again being based on the approval of the Dean and faculty at the recommendation of the Associate Dean for Administration.

X. LAW SCHOOL COMPUTING

A. Computers. The adjunct faculty office is equipped with a Microsoft Windows-based computer and printer. All faculty computers have the following supported software packages: Microsoft Office (Word, PowerPoint, Excel, and Access), Corel WordPerfect, Mozilla Firefox and Thunderbird, Westlaw, and Lexis.

The law school uses Mozilla Thunderbird as its e-mail program. Microsoft Outlook is currently not supported due to numerous security concerns.

B. Classroom Technology. All of the classrooms in the law school feature projectors, document cameras, workstations, DVD/VCR units, as well as inputs for external USB drives and laptops. All classroom presentation workstations have standard Office software, including PowerPoint. If you would like an overview of the classroom technology control systems, please contact a member of the Information Technology staff for assistance.

The seminar rooms (LB 64, 65, and 66 - located across the hallway from the law clinics) are equipped with monitors and wall ports for laptop connection. If you would like to use the technology in these rooms, but do not own a laptop, please contact the Information Technology department for assistance.

C. Information Technology Support. When IT support is needed, users are encouraged to use one of the following three methods:

1. Open a Ticket
For your convenience, filling out the Technology Help Request Form located here will open a new ticket: https://www.law.csuohio.edu/techhelp. Once the ticket is successfully created, you will hear back from a tech within 30 minutes during business hours.
2. Send an E-mail

Users who prefer e-mail can send a request to newticket@law.csuohio.edu. Please remember to include your name, a descriptive subject, problem details, your phone number/office extension, and your office room number/location. A support ticket will automatically be created and you will hear back from a tech within 30 minutes during business hours. Please understand that incomplete requests may be delayed.

3. Call the 7555 “Tech Help” Line

If you have an emergency or need immediate assistance, please call the 7555 Tech Help line. While we strive to have this line covered at all times, leaving a message may be necessary. Any messages left will be returned as soon as possible. Alternatively, if you have an emergency and there is no answer, please visit the reference/circulation desk at the law library and ask for a tech.

If you need assistance with any of these methods, or have any other questions, please feel free to contact a Technology Operations staff member:

- Assistant Director, Dan Thomas (LL 120A; 523-7372) is responsible for the College’s IT functions, including faculty, staff and student computing, the College's website, and training and support for classroom technology. He also supervises the work and services provided by the C|M|LAW IT Staff.

- Systems/Data Manager Eric Domanski (LL 112, 523-7391) provides workstation support for faculty and law school staff. He has specific responsibility for supporting student PCs, the workstation lab, and related technology needs.

- Systems/Web Manager Rick Zhang (LL 115; 687-4574) provides primary support for web site development. He installs and upgrades hardware and software on law school workstations.

- Desktop/Server Specialist Greg Golembiski (LL 120; 523-7235) assists faculty and staff with desktop computing issues. He also provides assistance with classroom technology.
XI. LAW LIBRARY

For a comprehensive index of Law Library services to faculty, see https://www.law.csuohio.edu/lawlibrary/faculty/.

A. PERSONNEL

Associate Professor Kristina L. Niedringhaus (LL 110; 687-3547) is Director of the Law Library. Her staff includes:

Administrative Secretary Sylvia Dunham (LL 214A; 523-7392) provides administrative support for the Law Library Director and staff. Ms. Dunham also schedules use of the Law Library’s conference room and instruction room LL A059.

Assistant Director of Technology Operations Dan Thomas (LL 120A; 523-7372) is responsible for the College’s IT functions, including faculty, staff and student computing, the College's website, and training and support for classroom technology. He also supervises the work and services provided by the C|M|LAW IT Staff Rick Zhang (LL 115; 687-4574), Eric Domanski (LL 112; 523-7391), and Desktop/Server Specialist Greg Golembiski (LL 120; 523-7325).

Associate Director Jan Babbit (LL 122; 687-6913) is responsible for the Law Library’s budget, and supervises the work and services provided by the Collection Development, Technical Services, Access and/Faculty Services, and Research Services staff, including the personnel listed below.

- Collection Development /Acquisitions Librarian Rebecca Mattson (LL117; 523-7388) selects library materials and databases and manages the faculty allowance program, in addition to her research, reference, and instructional services.

- Head of Access and Faculty Services Amy Burchfield (LL 113; 687-6885), in addition to her role as a research and reference librarian with a specialty in international resources, manages the library’s faculty services and circulation functions. She supervises the work of Circulation Supervisor Jon Elias Evening/Weekend Supervisor Tom Hurray (LL 119B; 523-7396), Library Media Technical Assistant Meredith Hale (LL109; 687-2250) and Library Assistant Andres Garcia (LL109; 687-2250). This staff will facilitate your document delivery, circulation, OhioLink and ILL requests. Ms. Burchfield also supervises the Law Library’s Research Assistants.

- Electronic Services Librarian Karen Schneiderman (LL 114; 523-7364) coordinates the development of library webpage and blog content, manages electronic resources, and assists in the development of faculty course pages, in addition to her research, reference and instructional services.

- Instructional Services Librarian Laura Ray (LL118; 687-6880) coordinates Law Library instructional services to students and faculty and manages the Law Library’s participation in the Federal Depository Library Program. Please contact her if you would like to arrange research training for yourself, your research assistant, or your class.

- Digital Content Services and Reference Services Librarian Sue Altmeyer (LL116; 687-4894) is responsible for developing, managing, and organizing Law Library digital content as well as providing research, reference, and instructional services.

- Technical Services Librarian Beth Farrell (LL214C; 523-7395) manages the Library’s purchasing, receipt, cataloging, and materials processing functions. Beth supervises Library Associate Cassandra Baker (LL214; 523-7397), Library Media Technical Assistant Sean Kennedy (LL 214; 523-7306), and Acquisition/Purchasing Agent Karen Zima (LL214D; 523-7394).

B. CURRENT AWARENESS SERVICES

1. C|M|LAW Library Blog. The C|M|Law Library Blog seeks to inform the law school community about key legal education, research, practice, and law library news, with a particular focus on Cuyahoga County and Ohio as well as faculty research interests.  (CONTACT: Karen Schneiderman, ext. 7364).

2. SmartCILP.  SmartCILP is a customized e-mail service for Current Index to Legal Periodicals, with direct links to articles in LexisNexis and Westlaw.  Customizing your SmartCILP e-mail allows you to focus on only those areas of law that are of interest to you for your research and teaching.  To sign up for SmartCILP, you will need an institution authorization code.  (CONTACT: Amy Burchfield, ext. 6885).

3. Publications Routing.  The Law Library provides a publications routing service to meet the current awareness needs of law faculty.  Online newsletters such as Tax Notes Today or BNA’s Daily Labor Report are available to law faculty through the PCs in their offices or through library staff.  (CONTACT: Beth Farrell, ext. 7395; or Sean Kennedy, ext. 7306).

4. Other Services.  Other Current Awareness services the Law Library can assist you with include:

   - RSS Feeds - Obtain current content from the blogs (such as Law Professor Blogs), news articles and journals in a one stop organized RSS Reader such as Google Reader.

   - Bloomberg Law, Westlaw, LexisNexis and Google Alerts - Have new search results e-mailed to you.  CCH current awareness services on many topics are purchased by the library for use by students and faculty.

   - BNA current awareness services on many topics are purchased by the library for student and faculty use, including U.S. Law Week and Supreme Court Today.  The library can also sign up your entire class to receive e-mails from a particular BNA current awareness newsletter.  Sign up for BNA Current Awareness Services.

   - SSRN Author Alerts

5. Faculty Research Interests

You are invited to participate in our faculty research interests inventory if you wish to be informed of new developments and publications in your research interest areas.  We assign a Research Librarian liaison to monitor your designated subject areas as well as work with you or your research assistant to develop a current awareness plan.  (CONTACT: Amy Burchfield, ext. 6885).
C. RESEARCH SERVICES

1. Faculty Liaison Services. Upon request, we can designate a member of our Research/Instructional Team to assist you as your Law Library contact. This Faculty Liaison will provide current awareness services customized to your subject-specific areas of interest, serve as a referral contact for your students, assist you in developing research resources, work with your Research Assistant, and otherwise help you to take maximum advantage of our services. (CONTACT: Jan Babbit, ext. 6913).

2. Bloomberg Law, LexisNexis & Westlaw: Research Librarians can assist you with Bloomberg Law, LexisNexis or Westlaw searches, arrange training and refresher courses, and help resolve equipment problems. LexisNexis and Westlaw printers for C|M|LAW faculty are located behind the Law Library Information Services Desk. If you choose the stand-alone printer option on Westlaw, or the Law Library faculty printer on LexisNexis, your print requests will be sent to these printers. Law Library Information Services staff will then deliver your prints to your C|M|LAW faculty mailbox. (Regarding Bloomberg Law, LexisNexis and Westlaw services, CONTACT: Karen Schneiderman, ext. 7364; regarding delivery of prints by Access Services personnel, CONTACT: Jon Elias, ext. 2483).

D. INSTRUCTIONAL SUPPORT SERVICES

1. Course Materials Webpages. Library staff will assist you in setting up, maintaining, and adding items to Course Materials webpages for any classes you teach. Course Materials webpages are password-protected resource pages for individual classes that remain available throughout the semester in which the course is taught. Any items a faculty member places on Course Reserve, whether print or electronic, will be placed on a Course Reserve page. Electronic Course Reserve items will be linked from the page; print Course Reserve items will be represented by a link to their Scholar records. You can also add items such as syllabi, assignments, readings, relevant web links, CALI lessons, PowerPoint presentations, podcasts, videos, and more to your Course Materials page. (CONTACT: Sue Altmeyer, ext. 4894; or Amy Burchfield, ext. 6885).

2. Course Reserves. You may place course-related items on reserve in the Library. Print items will be held on reserve for students at the Library’s Information Services Desk. Electronic items will be linked from your Course Materials webpage. The Law Library complies with the Copyright Law. Jon Elias will contact each law professor before the semester begins to request a list of items to be put on course reserve. Print course reserve materials are taken off reserve at the end of the semester and returned to the library shelves and/or to the law faculty member’s mailbox. (CONTACT: Jon Elias, ext. 2483).

3. Research Lectures, Guides and Exercises. Our Research Librarians can present research lectures for your class. We discuss general and subject-specific legal research strategies and resources, highlighting both print and electronic resources, effective and efficient use of Bloomberg Law, LexisNexis, Westlaw, and OhioLINK research databases, and searching the Web. We can tailor a course-specific research guide for you to use on your own course page or as a handout for your class. We can also work with you to develop research assignments. CONTACT: Jan Babbit, ext. 6913. To arrange a lecture by a LexisNexis or Westlaw representative, contact the representative directly or contact Karen Schneiderman. ext. 7364.

4. Educational Technology. Reference Librarians can help you with PowerPoint, Prezi, Web 2.0 and other educational technologies. We also provide student group instructional sessions in the use of PowerPoint, Refworks, Zotero and other educational software. (CONTACT: Laura Ray, ext. 6880; or Karen Schneiderman, ext. 7364)

5. Past Exams. The College of Law's Administrative Office sends law exams to the Law Library at the end of each semester. With the faculty member’s permission, we place these exams online, accessible only to C|M|LAW faculty, staff, and students. We also bind the exams and put them on reserve for 10 years for law student review. Older exams are shelved in the library's stacks. If you do not wish to have your exams placed on reserve, you must let the College of Law's Administrative Office know. (CONTACT: Amy Burchfield, ext. 6885).

6. Course Evaluations. The College of Law's Administrative Office sends course evaluations to the Law Library at the end of each semester. We bind these evaluations and keep them on reserve for 5 years for law student review. Older evaluations are shelved in the library's stacks. (CONTACT: Amy Burchfield, ext. 6885).

7. Recording Lectures. We can offer assistance with in-house and CSU Instructional Media Services recording of course materials, as well as posting of media files to course pages. Options include podcast, screencast, vodcast (video), and MediaSite. (CONTACT: Greg Golembiski, ext. 7235).

8. Training Labs. Adjacent to the main Library PC Lab, we have two Training Labs to facilitate your class electronic instructional needs. Each Lab is equipped with 15 workstations and a data projector. Please note that Training Labs cannot be reserved during Reading and Exam Weeks. (CONTACT: Laura Ray, ext. 6880)

9. Other instructional support services include:

- CALI:
  Obtain a CALI password. Offers (1) Interactive electronic lessons. Professors set up a Lessonlink to see students' results, (2) Lawdibles – 10-minute audio recordings, explaining difficult concepts, (3) Classcaster - podcasting and blogging platform, (4) ELangdell and Legal Education Commons - sites for sharing teaching materials, and more.

- CSU Center for Teaching Excellence:
  Promotes and encourages "a culture of excellence in teaching and learning at Cleveland State University" by providing workshops, consultation services, classroom equipment, and specialized software and equipment (e.g., for scanning and digitizing). Also provides links to CSU's Center for eLearning, teaching tips, and copyright resources.

10. AV Viewing Room: The Law Library's AV viewing room may be used by your students to view class-related materials. Groups or individuals are welcome to use the room depending on availability. The room is equipped with DVD players and VCRs. (CONTACT: Amy Burchfield, ext. 6885).
XII. LAW SCHOOL OPERATIONS

A. Law School Functions. We encourage you to attend law school functions such as lectures, faculty luncheon seminars, receptions, and all other law school events.

B. Campus Net. Campus Net is the CSU online site where you can access information about yourself and your students. An easy way to access the site is from the law school home page: click on Campus Net located at the bottom of the page. Follow the instructions on Campus Net for how to log on. For information about students in your class, look under the Instructor tab. See Class Roster supra at VIII.C.1. for details.

Campus Net also contains your personal contact information that CSU uses to send you information (address, phone numbers, emergency contact numbers). You have the option to revise that information online once you have accessed your Campus Net account.

C. Security. You should always be alert to possible security problems. Keep your valuable belongings out of sight in the adjunct office. Use caution in walking around campus in the evenings, and try to do so in groups whenever possible. You can request an escort to walk you to your car by calling 687-2020.

D. Parking. Parking passes are for the semester or the year. The rates can be found at: http://www.csuohio.edu/services/parking/rates. Daily parking hangtags (scratch-off tags) can also be purchased for $8 per piece (or for $6 for outlying lots). A batch of these hangtags can be purchased and then used when needed. All hangtags must now be purchased online through your CampusNet account, which can be accessed at https://campusnet.csuohio.edu/index.jsp. Your account will become active once your contract for the semester has been processed. Another option is to park in the three garages that charge by the hour or half-hour. These include the South Garage and Prospect garages ($2 for the first hour: $1 each hour thereafter) and Lot 22 under the Student Center ($1 for 30 minutes). Another option is to park in a metered space on 18th Street or on Chester Ave. between 18th Street and 22nd Street. A final alternative is to park in a private parking lot in the neighborhood.
E. Use of Campus Facilities. As the holder of a CSU faculty identification card, adjuncts may take advantage of university services, including a guest pass for athletic facilities (687-4800 for more information), a 10% discount on merchandise at the CSU Bookstore (except textbooks, special orders, rings, computer software, periodicals and discounted items), and check cashing privileges at the Cashier's Office in Main Classroom.

F. CSU Wireless Network. While you are teaching at C|M|LAW, you will have access to the university’s wireless network. We can provide assistance in configuring your laptop computer to work with this network if your laptop has a wireless card. To make an appointment to bring your laptop in, please contact us at automation@law.csuohio.edu.

My availability
My office is located on the first floor: Room 153. My phone number is: 687-2528 and my e-mail is: brian.ray@law.csuohio.edu. My office hours are MW 4:15-5:15. These hours are not exclusive. You should feel free to make an appointment at any time or just stop in whenever my light is on.

Course Overview
Conflict of laws deals principally with three questions: Which state's courts have jurisdiction over a dispute? Which state's laws apply to a dispute? Can judgments by the courts of one state be enforced in another state? These questions can arise between states of the United States, between federal and state courts and between foreign states.

This course will focus on the development of choice-of-law rules in the United States and cover, to a lesser extent, other areas of conflict of laws, including jurisdiction and recognition/enforcement of judgments. We will deal with choice of law both in interstate and international settings and include some comparisons with European legal systems.

Class attendance and preparation
Attendance at and preparation for class are required. I understand that there are times when because of illness or personal matters you may be unable to attend class or you may not be prepared for class. To account for these times, each student can miss class or "pass" when called on four times over the course of each semester. If you miss class and/or "pass" more than four times, I reserve the right to lower your grade or withdraw you from the course. If you cannot prepare for class on a particular day, please e-mail me before class. I will not call on you, but that will count as one of the four absence/pass days.
Absences to observe religious holidays do not count as missed classes if you inform me in advance that you will be absent.

Grades

An 8-hour, open-book, take-home exam will constitute 80% of your final grade. Participation in class will make up the remaining 20% of your grade.

I may also distribute practice exercises at certain points in the semester. I will provide feedback on these exercises, but they will not be part of your grade.

Assignments

The assignments listed here are somewhat tentative and may change depending on how quickly we move through the material for each day. To account for that, I have only listed specific assignments through February 15. I will distribute the second installment of the syllabus later in the semester.

January 12-21: The Traditional Model Jurisdiction Selecting Rules

David W. Neel, Esq., Lecturer
dwneel.lawgmail.com
216-522-0011

Tuesdays & Thursdays 7:30 - 9:10 p.m.

Course Materials:

The required book for this course is:

Waltz, Park & Friedman's Evidence, Cases and Materials (Foundation, 11th ed., 2008) ("WP")

The following book is recommended but not required:

Graham C. Lilly, Principles of Evidence - This book will give you sensible and fairly straightforward information about black letter rules of evidence and some useful information about the policies underlying those rules. (Other excellent hornbooks are available. Use the hornbook that suits you best.)

Office Hours:

Please call me directly at 216-522-0011 to schedule an appointment.

Course Goals:

When you complete this class, you should possess a fairly sophisticated understanding of the Rules of Evidence. More than any other course (in my humble opinion), the study of evidence law trains you to think more like a lawyer. If you study, participate, practice, interact with your peers and reflect throughout the term, then by the end of the course you will be thinking more like a lawyer. That, primarily, is the goal I set before you, in addition, of course, to learning the rules of evidence.

Class Attendance Policy:

Class attendance is mandatory; however, if you have another important commitment that a reasonable person would say should take precedence over this class, then you may miss a class. You do not have to advise me beforehand or tell me the reason. You are allowed four such absences. Passing when called upon counts as an absence. (See also following section.) If you miss more than four classes for any reason, I reserve the right to administratively withdraw you from the course or to impose lesser sanctions.
including, but not limited to, lowering your final grade in this class, in my sole discretion.

Class Participation:

I expect you to be prepared for each class. Unsatisfactory preparation, as determined in my sole discretion, counts as an absence. Each of you will be called upon at least once to present an assigned case to the class and to discuss assigned problems from the casebook.

- Your case presentations should be no more than 5 minutes in length. A guideline for your presentation is as follows:
  - Basic facts leading to litigation - E.g., In Old Chief v. United States, the defendant was arrested after a fight involving a gun. He had a prior conviction.
  - Proceedings below — E.g., The government charged Old Chief with, among other things, a violation of 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1), which makes it unlawful for anyone to . . . . Old Chief objected to admission of evidence that . . . . The government responded that . . . . On appeal, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held that the district court did not abuse its discretion by . . . . The U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari.
  - Specific issue(s) before the court ruling on the case — E.g., At issue was evidence pertaining to one element required to prove a violation of 18 U.S.C. §922(g)(1)
  - The court's ruling on each issue — E.g., The S. Ct. reversed the court of appeals' decision.
  - The court's reasoning for its decision.
  - Doctrine, black letter law or analysis that the case establishes, stands for or approves.

Grading:

A total of 200 points is possible in this class based upon the following distribution:

- 80% (160 possible points) of your grade is based on the final exam.
- 20% (40 possible points) is based on your class participation.

Assignments:

For every assignment, read the applicable Federal Rule(s) of Evidence ("FRE") in Appendix A of WP and the corresponding Advisory Committee Note(s) in Appendix B.

APPENDIX 2

Upper Level Writing Requirement and Independent Legal Research Standards

The Upper Level Writing Requirement and Independent Legal Research (L860) Standards, as approved by the faculty in November 1997 and amended in May 1999 and supplemented in November 2006 are as follows:

A. Upper Level Writing Requirement

The purpose of the Upper Level Writing Requirement is to have each student undertake at least one rigorous writing experience prior to graduation, in addition to Legal Writing, Research and Advocacy (L504) and the third semester of legal writing. Although the focus of this requirement is writing skills, effective legal writing requires application of the broad spectrum of skills essential to effective lawyering generally. Thus, research, analysis, and organization are important components in the preparation of any quality product of legal writing. For this reason, the goal of the Upper Level Writing Requirement is to require each student to demonstrate his or her ability to apply each of these skills in producing one substantial, cohesive piece of legal writing prior to graduating from law school.

1. Students may satisfy this requirement by completion of any one of the following:

   a. A seminar for which a paper is required;
   b. A specially designated upper level course for which a paper is required or offered for writing credit; or
   c. An appropriate two or three semester-hour Independent Legal Research (L860) project.

2. The Upper Level Writing Requirement is satisfied by the completion of a paper, brief, casenote, or other piece of legal writing that combines writing, research, analytical and organizational skills into one substantial written product under the direction of a faculty supervisor. As a general rule, “faculty supervisor” means full-time tenured or tenure-track faculty member, full-time legal writing professor, or full-time clinical professor.

3. If the written product consists of an Independent Legal Research (L860) project, it must satisfy the page requirements for L860, as listed in Section B below. What constitutes a “substantial” written product in other courses shall be left to the discretion of the instructor, subject to review by the Curriculum Committee at the time the course is submitted for approval, as stipulated in paragraph 5.

4. To complete the Upper Level Writing Requirement, it is assumed that the student will undertake exhaustive library or other approved investigation under the supervision of a faculty member. In order to insure a meaningful one-on-one consultation and critique between the student and instructor, it is strongly urged that the instructor:

a. Require the student to meet regularly with the faculty sponsor during the course of the project;
b. Require the student doing an Independent Legal Research (L860) project to obtain the faculty sponsor’s written approval of a proposal prior to signing up for credit;
c. Require the student to submit and discuss an outline of the writing project prior to commencing the first draft;
d. Provide written comments concerning submitted drafts and discuss those comments in a meeting with the student;
e. Require the student to submit a detailed research path of one or two pages with the rough draft, indicating the full extent of the student’s research and sources used and showing unproductive investigation as well as that which produces materials bearing on the problem;
f. Require the student to familiarize himself or herself with the concept of plagiarism;
g. Make clear to the student that the Upper Level Writing Requirement is unrelated to, and independent of, any non-curricular requirements, such as those needed for acceptance of the paper by a student journal.

5. Any instructor wishing to designate a course as satisfying the Upper Level Writing Requirement must first obtain authorization from the Curriculum Committee.

6. Faculty have discretion, while awarding a passing grade to a student enrolled in a course or in Independent Legal Research (L860), to determine that nonetheless the student has not satisfied the Upper Level Writing Requirement. Students should be advised of this faculty option.

7. Copies of papers submitted in satisfaction of the Upper Level Writing Requirement shall be retained by the administration in the same manner as final examinations.

B. Independent Legal Research (L860) Standards

1. The minimum number of credit hours of Independent Legal Research (L860) that will satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement is two credit hours.

2. The text page minimum for Independent Legal Research (L860) projects completed to satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement should ordinarily be 12 to 15 double-spaced pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, per credit hour, but in no case less than 10 pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, per credit hour. Faculty may, in their discretion, define a “page” in terms of font size, margins, approximate number of words, etc.
3. Independent Legal Research (L860) may also be taken for one hour of credit, usually requiring a minimum of 12 to 15 double-spaced pages, exclusive of footnotes or endnotes, as described above, but such projects will not satisfy the Upper Level Writing Requirement.

4. A maximum of three semester hours of Independent Legal Research (L860) credit may be elected to count toward the J.D. or LL.M. degree.

5. No faculty member may sponsor more than six (6) students per academic year, exclusive of the summer term, in Independent Legal Research (L860) without the approval of the Dean or his or her designate.

C. Supplementary Guidelines Regarding Law Review and Journal Notes

In November 2006 the faculty adopted additional guidelines for faculty supervision of Law Review and Journal Notes:

1) supervisory faculty of notes for L860 credit should attempt to coordinate their schedule of topic, outline, bibliography and draft submissions with that of the journal for which the note is being written;

2) the law review and the journal should make available to every faculty member each fall a written schedule detailing the stages in which the writing of the note becomes due;

3) each faculty member is requested to be available to supervise up to three notes for L860 credit;

4) a summary of each faculty member’s research interests should be made available to the law review and journals staffs each year.

D. 3-Credit-Hour ULWR Seminars with Reduced Class Time

Faculty members may teach a seminar or upper level course (in which students write a paper to satisfy the ULWR) worth three credit hours but in the time block of a two-credit-hour course. This is allowed under the ABA Standards and Interpretations that permit “regularly scheduled class sessions” to include “in a seminar or other upper level course other than an independent research course, the minutes allocated for preparation of a substantial paper or project if the time and effort required and anticipated educational benefit are commensurate with the credit awarded.” ABA Interpretation 304-3(d). In light of the ABA Standard and Interpretation, faculty have the option, in a seminar or upper level course other than L860 (Independent Legal Research) in which students write a paper to satisfy the ULWR, of holding class meetings for the hours required for a two-credit-hour course while offering the course for three credit hours. This recognizes the substantial amount of time and effort that students and faculty are expected to spend on papers that satisfy the upper level writing requirement. Faculty may also offer the option to students of taking the seminar or upper level course for two credit hours if a student elects not to write a paper to satisfy the ULWR or for three credit hours if a student elects to write a paper to satisfy the ULWR. This policy is also available online on the Faculty Resources page.
APPENDIX 3

CSU Poll Worker Excused Absence Policy

In order to foster student engagement and participation in the civic sphere, Cleveland State University has encouraged students to serve as poll workers and in polling support positions for the last several national and statewide elections. In Spring 2008 the Faculty Senate of Cleveland State University adopted a policy pertaining to student absences arising because of such service in these elections.

I. CSU faculty members are required to

a. excuse all students from class attendance and from any assignments, quizzes, and other coursework otherwise due during the period beginning at 6:00 p.m. on the evening before any statewide election and ending at 12:00 midnight on election day who (i) serve in any of the official poll worker and polling support positions, including the Center for Election Integrity official observer or monitor positions (which can include, for example, polling place translators and technical support workers with respect to the voting machines), and (ii) satisfy their notification obligations described in paragraph II, below; and

b. allow such students to make up any assignments, quizzes, and other coursework otherwise due during this period, as described in paragraph II, below.

II. Any CSU student who desires to exercise the excused poll worker service option must

a. have officially applied and been selected to serve;

b. be scheduled for training that will be completed at least two days prior to the election;

c. inform the faculty members whose classes are affected in writing (electronically or in whatever manner the particular faculty member requests) no later than the second Friday before the election;

d. arrange with each affected faculty member to make up any coursework or quizzes that were missed due to the absence; and

e. provide official documentation to each affected faculty member at a later appropriate point that confirms the student’s service as a poll worker or in a polling support position.

At all times, the responsibility for making up coursework rests with the student.

---

1 Then Dean Mearns decided, in Fall 2008, based on available C.S.U. policies and information received from the C.S.U. administration, that this policy applies to students who work as B.O.E. poll workers and to those who volunteer as election observers or monitors for a bona fide organization such as the Democratic or Republican Party, or the Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under the Law.

EXAM PROCEDURES MEMORANDUM

TO: Faculty

FROM: Mark J. Sundahl, Associate Dean for Academic Affairs
       Jean Lifter, Assistant Dean for Academic Affairs
       Marcie Rechner, Records Officer

RE: Exam Procedures

DATE: April 20, 2011

ADMINISTRATION OF EXAMINATIONS

Each faculty member will proctor an in-class exam of a colleague at the same time as their in-class exam is being proctored by another faculty member. For this system to work smoothly, it is extremely important that exams be administered in accordance with the following procedures. Note: If you will not be in the building while your exam is being proctored you must be available by telephone in the event that any questions regarding your exam arise. In advance of your exam, please give Jean Lifter the telephone number at which you may be reached.

A. Submitting Exams and Exam Instructions

If you need help typing your exam, please allow at least five working days for typing and duplication, which will be taken care of by the word processing department through Laverne Carter, Office Manager.

On the first page of the exam, please put the course name, number, and section, instructor name and semester and leave a blank for the student exam number—all of this will facilitate collecting exams at the end of the exam (see Proctoring Responsibilities below). Please number the pages of your exam so that it will be certain each student has all of the pages of the exam.

You must complete the Exam Instruction Form for each of your exams. Please make sure that your instructions are complete. This is the document on which the proctor will rely when proctoring your exam. If your exam is administered in parts, please explain exactly how the exam is to be administered. If your exam has Multiple Choice Questions, you must specify whether students will use the Blue (up to 5 choices for the answers) or Green (up to 10 choices) scantron sheets. Also, please indicate whether copies of your exam should be given to the library (after the exam period) for inclusion in the Past Exams online (explained in the Faculty Manual). If we have any questions about your instructions, we will contact you before your exam.

So that we can be sure that we have all exams and complete instructions for the proctor before the start of the exam, we will need to have copies of your exam with instructions for the proctor at least 24 hours before the scheduled beginning time of the exam. This means that you cannot bring the exam in with you on the day of the exam. You must have the exam and instruction form copied in time for it to be delivered to Jean Lifter 24 hours before the scheduled start time of the exam. So, for example, if your exam is scheduled for Monday at 9 a.m. Jean Lifter must have the exam by Friday at 9 a.m. (As you can tell, we are not counting weekends in the time frame.) You will need to give the exam to Laverne Carter sufficiently prior to that for her to have the exam copied. The exams are copied and secured so that no students have access to them prior to the exam.

B. Proctoring Schedule

Proctoring assignments and exam rooms are noted on the exam schedule. Please keep a copy of the exam schedule with you when you proctor in case you need to ask the professor whose exam you are proctoring a question about the exam. Every exam will be given in one room—those handwriting and those taking on computer will take the exam in the same room. We will not provide a separate room for hand writers—we have not needed one in the past. If it becomes apparent to you that a student needs a separate room to hand write the exam, please send the student to Jean Lifter’s office during the day and to the Student Services reception desk in the evening. We will have a space for students to take the exam.

C. Electronic Devices and Other Personal Effects

Students are not permitted to bring any electronic devices other than their personal computer to an exam (e.g., cell phones, Personal Digital Devices (PDAs), mp3 players, cameras, or digital or tape recorders). Students may not keep book bags, purses, or briefcases at their table during the exam. If a student brings a bag, purse or briefcase to the exam, they must be left at the front of the exam room and may not be accessed during the exam. If a student has an emergency that requires the student to make or receive a call during an exam, the student should inform Dean Lifter and arrange to have the call made or received from the Student Services Center. Neither the law school nor the proctor shall be responsible for items left in the front of the room.

D. Proctoring Responsibilities

1. On the day of the exam, please pick up the exams, exam instructions, and class roster from Jean Lifter’s office.

2. Please bring blue books/blank paper (and scantron sheets and pencils if required) to the exam. The blue books/blank paper will be for all students—blue books for students who are handwriting the exam and blank paper for outlining for computer exams. Bluebooks, blank paper, and scantron sheets are available in the Copy Room. Pencils may be obtained from the Records Office.

3. Please plan to stay in the exam room for the entire exam.

4. Remind the students that electronic devices (as described above in Section C) are not permitted in the exam room. Tell the students that if they have any bags, purses, or briefcases, they must place the items in their locker or place them in the front of the room before taking the exam.

5. Before the exam begins, please ask that students not sit next to each other, but at least one seat apart if possible. Also, please make sure that students have turned off their cell phones.

6. Please make sure that each student initials the class roster and indicates on it whether s/he is handwriting or taking the exam on computer. Please do this before the exam begins or when students are turning in their exams at the end, but not during the exam itself. Please assure the students that this form will not be submitted to the course instructor but is for administrative use only to make sure that all exams are properly submitted.

7. At the beginning of the exam session, once you have distributed the exam please:

   a. ask students to make sure that they have all the pages of the exam – if there is a problem with the copies, please immediately see Dean Lifter or the staff person at the Student Services Center reception desk;

   b. ask students to put their exam numbers on the front of the exam questions;

   c. ask any student writing the exam to write their exam number and the name of the class on their bluebooks;

   d. if scantron sheets are being used, ask the students (i) to write their exam number on the sheet and bubble in the appropriate numbers and (ii) to write the name of their professor in the NAME box on the sheet – they should not fill in the bubbles for the professor’s name.

   e. inform the students that during the last five minutes of class students must remain in their seats and may not leave even if they have finished the exam (although they are free to leave prior to the five-minute warning);

   f. instruct students to turn in their exam materials by (i) tucking all materials inside the exam materials “jacket” and (ii) placing the materials in a single pile as they leave;
g. inform the students that the exam will be timed according to the classroom clock; and

h. write the time that the exam will end on the blackboard or whiteboard.

8. If a student has a question about the exam that requires information from the course professor, you, and not the student, may find the professor and ask for clarification. The student may not leave the exam room for this purpose.

9. Students who leave the exam room to use the restroom must leave all exam materials and their cell phones in the exam room.

10. If a student has computer problems during the exam, please make note of any significant period during which s/he was unable to work on the exam and extend, for that student, the time allowed on the exam. After a maximum of 20 minutes, a student with computer problems should be advised to switch to answering in a blue book and will be allowed to continue working on the exam for no more than the time lost, up to 20 minutes, after the regular exam ends. Tech staff can be reached during exams by dialing 216/523-7555 or x7555 from a University phone line; if not assisting students in another exam room, they will be in the law library – LL 112 (Eric or Dan); LL 114 (Greg); or LL 115 (Rick).

11. Five minutes before the end of the exam, announce to the students that five minutes remain and that they are to stay in their seats until the end of the exam.

12. At the end of the exam, announce that time is up and instruct all students to stop working on the exam. Except as indicated in paragraph 9, above, do not extend the time for any student.

13. At the end of the exam, have the students turn in their exam materials one at a time. For large classes, call students to line up and hand in their materials row by row in order to ensure an orderly process. When the students hand you their exam materials, make sure that:

   a. each student turns in the exam questions (with their exam numbers on them);

   b. if students have filled out a scantron sheet, they put the name of their professor in the NAME boxes on the sheet (they should not fill in the bubbles on this section of the sheet);

   c. each student’s exam materials are tucked into his/her exam “jacket”; and

   d. this package of materials is placed on a single pile (which pile will then be delivered to Dean Lifter or the Student Services Center per paragraph 13 below).

14. For daytime exams, please return the exam materials to Dean Lifter’s office. For evening exams, please return the exam materials to the staff person at the Student Services Center reception desk. Please return the exams promptly after the end of the exam.

E. Picking Up Your Exams

Once any computer exams have been printed, the Records Office will confirm that all exams are accounted for by comparing the exam numbers for all students on your roster with the blue book and/or printed exams. The Records Office will take into account exams yet to be taken due to rescheduling or exams taken under accommodations. Thereafter you will be notified that your exams are ready for pick up and grading. We anticipate that your exams will be available the day after you give the exam—allowing time for the exams to be printed and cross-checked. (Rescheduled and/or accommodated exams may, of course, come thereafter.)

LEARN LAW. LIVE JUSTICE.
Cleveland-Marshall College of Law
Empowering students to improve their lives by serving others.

For more than a century, Cleveland-Marshall College of Law has empowered our students to improve their own lives by serving others. Toward that end, the Law School is renowned for its commitment to excellence in teaching, service, and scholarship. A Cleveland-Marshall legal education makes possible the future you envision. Whether your voice is heard in the courtroom, in the board room, in the halls of government, or wherever your goals, interests, and ambitions take you, you will be an advocate for justice.

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law is recognized for the capacity of its graduates to effectively counsel and represent their clients. We are also highly regarded for the ability of our students, graduates, and faculty to think critically about our society’s strengths and weaknesses and to have the theoretical, doctrinal, and practical legal expertise to promote social justice, individual freedom, and economic growth.

In Cleveland, law is a major industry. It is a city of small practice-specific firms and a city of large firms with national and international practices. We belong to this city. One of the most important lessons our students learn, inside and outside the classroom, is how much this public law school means to the community around us—from the poorest citizens for whom we are a legal resource to members of the bench and bar for whom we have been a source of exceptional legal talent for more than a century.

We belong to the nation as well. Our graduates are everywhere in America. They distinguish themselves in private and corporate practices, head law firms, serve on every level of the judiciary, hold high offices in state and federal government, create and develop businesses and corporations, chair non-profit organizations, teach in public schools and universities, serve in the military and, on behalf of the public good, donate countless hours to individuals, charities, and community organizations. As a group profile, they are a remarkable portrait of a singular law school.

All of them began as you did: with a signature on a law school application. Like you, they sought a career in law to make a living, to make a life, to make a better world. They have done so, as you will.
The mission of Cleveland-Marshall College of Law is to foster a more just society through legal education, service, and scholarship. The Law School provides a rigorous legal education, enabling a diverse population of students to become accomplished, ethical citizen-lawyers who will make significant contributions to the region, the nation, and the world.

The practice of law is ever expanding to meet the region’s and the country’s economic, societal, and cultural challenges and students at Cleveland-Marshall have a unique advantage. They learn law in a major center of legal commerce, in a law school within walking distance of city, state, and federal courts, and some of the most prestigious law firms in America—firms whose practices span the country and the globe.

As a law school of excellence, Cleveland-Marshall values the importance of diversity as integral to enriching the classroom experience and the legal profession. From an historic position of strength as a leader in providing educational access to women and African-Americans, Cleveland-Marshall continues to value diversity. A diversity of race, gender, ethnicity, sexual orientation, geographic location, socio-economic status, and the wide range of life experiences of our students encourages a lively and thoughtful exchange of ideas in order to develop a deeper understanding of the law and its effect on societal values.
A city in the city.

Cleveland State University is the largest graduate school in the region with over 50% of its annual degrees given to graduate and professional students—the greatest proportion of any university in Ohio. The University offers a variety of degrees in specific academic disciplines within nine independent colleges pursuing excellence in their fields. The University is known for pushing the boundaries of 21st century student engagement by implementing cutting edge research, advanced academic resources, and developing state-of-the-art campus facilities to be a powerful transformational force.

Cleveland State University concentrates on applied research, economic disciplines, and coupling transformative technology with transnational talent. A University-wide initiative to maintain a strong connection to the regions’ growing health care and biomedical economy builds and strengthens resources across all disciplines; the results can be seen from the genetic research in the College of Science, to the creation of super-strength hybrid composite fibers at the Fenn College of Engineering, to studies on the economic implications of health care on multinational corporations at the Monte Ahuja College of Business. At C|M|LAW, we contribute to the initiative through our innovative Center for Health Law and Policy, our Community Health Advocacy Clinic, and our Journal of Law and Health.

As a public university in a major metropolitan area, CSU emphasizes inclusiveness and values diverse experiences and backgrounds. It shapes our belief in offering students hands-on education, real world experiences and a personal approach to fostering success in the pursuit of excellence. Advanced academic resources and rigorous intellectual inquiry are at the heart of CSU’s commitment to transforming America’s “labor pool” to a “talent pool.”

A $500-million-plus plan for the growth and development of Cleveland State University’s physical space, continues to change the face of campus and downtown Cleveland.

Our 85-acre campus in downtown Cleveland features multiple classroom, research and living facilities. Building blocks for the Future, a $500-million-plus plan for the growth and development of Cleveland State University’s physical space, continues to change the face of campus and downtown Cleveland with architecturally stunning buildings and an inviting neighborhood atmosphere. From a historically restored art deco residence hall to modern glass structures like the Student Center and College of Education and Human Services, Cleveland State University is at the forefront of Cleveland’s continued revitalization.

With a bustling campus in the heart of the city, students study and play in a vibrant, welcoming community that offers the best in academic pursuits.

As members of both the Cleveland State University and the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law communities, students have access to a number of world-class amenities, including free membership at the state-of-the-art recreation center, and access to the best in health care at the campus Wellness Center and Counseling Centers. CSU also offers on-campus graduate housing in contemporary spaces tailored for the needs of law students. From libraries and study spaces to multiple dining options across campus, law students find a thriving neighborhood at Cleveland State University.

With a bustling campus in the heart of the city, students study and play in a vibrant, welcoming community that offers the best in academic pursuits.
A Cleveland network includes friends and colleagues from renowned educational and cultural institutions, Fortune 500 companies, world-class research medical facilities, and global law firms. Cleveland is also one of the most affordable housing markets in the country and offers a wide variety of living options and neighborhood personalities. Choices range from downtown lake-view lofts to homes on tree-lined suburban streets; from contemporary chic cityscapes to old world neighborhoods.

For the law school years or a whole career, Cleveland is a great place to call home.

Vibrant, dynamic, in touch.

What makes people want to call Cleveland home? The answers to that question are as diverse as those who answer it.

It starts with youthfulness and energy. A Cleveland network includes friends and colleagues from renowned educational and cultural institutions, Fortune 500 companies, world-class medical research facilities, and global law firms. They come from all over the country and the world, shaping a community both vital and welcoming.

What about after hours? Cleveland comes to life with major-metro entertainment and nightlife. Venues like the Warehouse District and East 4th Street pedestrian district are alive with unique restaurants and nightclubs. Major league sports offer year-round action. Add the richness of great museums and the outdoor fun of lakefront and Metropark activities. There’s always something to do, see, and experience.

At Cleveland-Marshall, our academic program is rigorous and grounded in traditional legal theory. At the same time, our experiential learning opportunities, skills-based courses, and award-winning Pro Bono program prepare you to tackle contemporary legal issues.

Whether you’re coming to C|M|LAW directly from your undergraduate studies, looking for an opportunity to advance your career, or ready to embark on a new career path with unlimited potential, we meet you where you are and provide you with a relevant legal education that fits your individual goals and expectations.

Our academic program is flexible. Full-time enrollment at C|M|LAW provides a full immersion experience into the study of law. Our part-time day and part-time evening options allow you to juggle family and work responsibilities or the opportunity to ease into your legal studies at a slower pace. Whichever option works best, you are assured of an educational experience that meets the standards of excellence you expect and deserve. After the completion of the first year, C|M|LAW students can move between the full-time and part-time programs as needed.

Part-time students must commit to the course load outlined here. Part-time students cannot take fewer credits during their first two years of legal study.

After the successful completion of the first year curriculum, students may elect an optional concentration program of study or may elect an individualized course of study by selecting from courses representing the breadth and depth of legal inquiry.
In Support of Excellence.

C|M|LAW’s Academic Support Programs complement the law school curriculum by focusing on the process involved in developing the skills that are necessary to succeed. We recognize that students have different learning styles and experiences that can affect their learning process and performance in law school. For these reasons, Academic Support uses diverse teaching methods including small group discussions, large group sessions, and one-on-one assistance.

An Evolving Curriculum Infused with Professionalism.

C|M|LAW’s close relationship with the legal community helps keep our curriculum relevant and our students well-prepared to meet the professional expectations outside our walls. “The Problem of the Semester” is designed to increase student exposure to issues of ethics and professionalism. Each semester, the entire law school is presented with the same professionalism problem, which is incorporated into classes and lectures across the curriculum. Students see the same issue approached in different ways and from multiple perspectives, and come to understand the broader implications of the problem. These are tools needed every day in the real world of law—and skills that will make C|M|LAW students stand out.

Center for Health Law & Policy.

Cleveland-Marshall’s location in Cleveland, a city with a vibrant health care industry, makes us uniquely suited to train future health care attorneys. The Center for Health Law and Policy offers certification in health law, awarded with the JD. The innovative program is designed to give students practical skills acquisition and a high-level of exposure to the region’s health care and legal networks. Students may specialize in one of three areas, or take courses from all three groups.

Health Law Regulation

Students pursuing a Health Law Regulation focus are preparing to work in private practice or at government agencies to represent hospitals, physician groups, HMOs, or individual doctors to ensure that they are complying with government regulations. In addition, students will learn to lobby on behalf of their clients, investigate fraud, deal with Medicare/Medicaid/Stark Law policy and compliance, and to oversee the development of public health regulations.

Health Law Policy & Ethics

Health Law Policy and Ethics students will be trained to work in private, government or academic settings. Students will learn how to represent universities and other academic research centers, oversee clinical trials at universities and health care facilities, or work for the government to reform and create health care policy. Students who choose to work in the private sector will affect healthcare policy through lobbying and other activities. Graduates may work at think tanks and other organizations that focus on biomedical and research ethics issues.

Health Law Business & Litigation

Students who take courses in Health Law Business and Litigation will learn the business of health care in the public and private sector. Students will learn how to handle mergers and acquisitions, tax law, employee benefits, and risk management issues for hospitals, HMOs, long term care facilities, and insurance companies. In response to the impact of technology on health care, students will also learn how to guide their clients through intellectual property, biomedicine, and telemedicine issues. Graduates may choose to handle medical malpractice cases or to engage in other types of healthcare-related litigation.

Health Law and Policy students can supplement their theoretical training with practical, real-world experiences through externships, the Journal of Law and Health, and the Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic.
Dual degrees expand the scope of expertise.

Maxine Goodman Levin College of Urban Affairs
• J.D./Master of Public Administration
• J.D./Master of Urban Planning, Design, and Development
• J.D./Master of Arts in Environmental Studies

The Maxine Goodman Levin College of Urban Affairs, Ohio’s only College of Urban Affairs, is consistently ranked among the top urban affairs, city management, and urban policy schools in the country. Its metropolitan location provides an ideal setting for studying today’s issues in public policy, environmental policy, city planning, economic development, and nonprofit administration.

Through a partnership between Levin College and C|M|LAW, students have the opportunity to earn a dual degree of Juris Doctor and one of three urban affairs Masters’ degrees that are listed above.

Monte Ahuja College of Business
• J.D./Master of Business Administration

The Monte Ahuja College of Business provides students with a practical, applied, and effective education. It allows students to combine classroom theory and activities with opportunities to learn and experience real-world business practices via its strong partnerships with successful businesses in Cleveland and beyond. Students are also offered opportunities to experience global e-commerce first-hand while studying abroad at partner universities in countries such as Germany or Chile.

“The joint program in law and business grounds students in the law and context of business management today, and prepares them to serve business as managers, counselors, advisors, and advocates.”

Christopher L. Sagers
ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF LAW

The C|M|LAW and Monte Ahuja College partnership allow students the opportunity to earn a degree of Juris Doctor and Master of Business Administration (MBA) in four years instead of the five years that would normally be required to complete the two degrees separately. Students who enroll in this Dual Degree Program must complete their first year of study at C|M|LAW. The second year of study will consist of the first year’s curriculum at the Monte Ahuja College MBA program. Students will then have the following two years to take courses at both colleges.
College of Science

J.D./Master of Science in Environmental Science

Cleveland State University’s College of Science offers students interested in studying environmental science the opportunity to participate in an array of real-world, hands-on, engaged learning opportunities. The College’s Department of Biological, Geological, and Environmental Science operates the Woodlake Environmental Field Station. The station facilitates long-term, on-site research and is an excellent educational resource for field exercises in ecology, geology, and environmental biology for the Cuyahoga River Watershed Project, a multi-institutional collaboration that investigates the ecology of the Cuyahoga River Watershed.

The College of Science is also home to the Center for Gene Regulation in Health and Disease. The Center focuses on improving the understanding of biomedical research and how intervention at the genetic level can prevent or cure disease. Students and faculty work closely with the Cleveland Clinic’s Lerner Research Institute staff on research with international scientific impact.

The C|M|LAW and College of Science partnership allows students the opportunity to earn a Juris Doctor and Master of Science in Environmental Science. The program requires a total of four academic years of full-time study. Students spend their first year taking courses exclusively at C|M|LAW and their second year taking Environmental Science courses. In the third and fourth years, students take courses in both degree programs.

“The JD/MSES dual degree option is a great one for students who already have a strong background in science. Dual degree science students have shown that they’re not afraid to integrate scientific research processes into their legal training. They’ve carried out field studies and become experts in an area of environmental science.”

Advanced Technology.

In Cleveland-Marshall’s state-of-the-art trial courtroom—the most technologically advanced courtroom in any of Ohio’s law schools—students are able to apply their solid foundation of classroom knowledge as they immerse themselves in the world of trial attorneys and learn hands-on the latest technologies being used in litigation.

Technology has changed the way modern trials take place, and C|M|LAW responded with an enhanced simulated-learning environment in which students not only learn to argue a case, they also gain practical experience using the same technologies being used in real-world trials.

Modeled after modern courtrooms, the space includes on-screen annotation of evidence, video displays located at the judge’s bench and between each pair of jurors, high-definition recording devices for remote viewing and live streaming of both the courtroom and the jury deliberation room, real-time transcription of the hearing, and a jury deliberation room with a large plasma screen for viewing evidence. In addition, videotaping capabilities offer the opportunity for students to improve their performance by observing themselves in action.

"The rules of evidence come to life in our new trial courtroom, where students learn how to question a witness and introduce exhibits in a real-world environment."

Kevin F. O’Neill, ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR
Every law school has its own culture. But the foundation of every law school is its faculty. At C|M|LAW, our faculty is diverse in backgrounds, interests, and passions. All of our faculty members are committed to educating and inspiring the next generation of principled lawyers. All of our faculty members are creative scholars, who share their ideas and insights in the pursuit of justice. They are teachers, scholars, and citizen-lawyers. They are the heart and soul of this institution.

“When I first came to Cleveland-Marshall, I was struck by our students’ sense of purpose. Whether they come to Cleveland-Marshall to change their own lives or the lives of others, I feel privileged to play a small part in the professional development of the promising students who join us every year.”

Carolyn Broering-Jacobs
LEGAL WRITING PROFESSOR OF LAW
DIRECTOR OF THE LEGAL WRITING, RESEARCH, AND ADVOCACY PROGRAM

“We sometimes say that law school is the place for people who haven’t decided what they want to do in life. I tell my students that it’s quite the contrary: law school is the place for people who have decided that they want do something that matters in life. Cleveland-Marshall College of Law offers the opportunity to make a difference: in law, in business, in the community, or in the world.”

Lolita Buckner Inniss
PROFESSOR OF LAW
JOSEPH C. HOSTETLER-BAKER - HOSTETLER CHAIR IN LAW

“I entered the academy to make a positive difference in the lives of students and take part in training the lawyers of tomorrow. Cleveland-Marshall College of Law affords me that opportunity. The students are bright, engaged and inquisitive. I am very impressed by their eagerness to learn and desire to practice law in Cleveland and beyond. It is my absolute pleasure to be a part of their legal education.”

Matthew W. Green, Jr
ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF LAW

“Laughter, discovery, joy. This is law school? Yes, this is why I have stayed at Cleveland-Marshall for over three decades. An undiminished passion for learning is contagious... My students work hard, and then reap the satisfaction of becoming an expert in the law of the Constitution. They have changed, and they like the change in themselves.”

David F. Forte
PROFESSOR OF LAW
From the start, you learn to make a difference.

Clinics. Learning and contributing, from intake to resolution.

Students participating in C|M|LAW Clinics put what they learn in the classroom to work in the service of actual clients with real world legal problems. Under the close supervision of experienced attorneys, students serve the community while learning practical lawyering skills and tactics, professionalism, and ethics. This is an opportunity to participate in a case from intake to resolution, with full mentoring by clinic professors.

Each of our six clinics specialize in particular areas of the law: Community Health Advocacy Law, Employment Law, Environmental Law, Fair Housing Law, Law and Public Policy, and Urban Development Law. Some are litigation-oriented, others provide advice to clients by researching the law and counseling them, and still others combine counseling, transactional work, and litigation.
Urban Development Law Clinic

“I have the most rewarding career possible – I contribute to making northeast Ohio a better place. I do so by teaching law students to be ethical and committed members of their community and by providing legal advice to my clients in the Urban Development Law Clinic. The students in the clinic learn that the practice of law can transcend being just a job and, instead, be a vocation that has profound and lasting impacts on their community. The students learn that, as well as practice skills, by assisting our clinic clients with real estate and economic development projects as well as providing advice on important public policy issues. The most gratifying part is watching students gain confidence in their legal skills as they provide legal advice to our clients; their advice not only helps our clients to succeed it also helps our community.”

Carole Heyward
CLINICAL PROFESSOR OF LAW

Law and Public Policy Clinic

“During my year in the Law and Public Policy Clinic I conducted three, real-world research and writing exercises. In the fall semester I studied the effects of the foreclosure crisis on the City of Cleveland, then helped write the first draft of a legal complaint which was filed against national banks for acting as absentee landlords. In the spring semester I followed a United States Supreme Court case involving state regulation of national banks, then wrote a briefing memorandum on the case and its potential effects on cities like Cleveland. In the spring and summer semesters I researched innovations in regional governance across the United States. Once this research was complete, I conducted an extensive series of telephone and in-person interviews with governmental leaders across Ohio in preparation for a Brookings Institution study conducted by the Law and Public Policy Center. In my close workings with the Clinic professors I came to understand how attorneys approach public policy questions.”

Edward Herman
FORDHAM UNIVERSITY, B.A., 1996

Fair Housing Law Clinic

“My involvement with the Fair Housing Law Clinic is by and large one of the most memorable experiences during my law school career. The Fair Housing Law Clinic allowed me the opportunity to work one-on-one with real clients facing issues such as housing discrimination and foreclosure. I was able to test my legal acumen beyond the classroom and provide legal services to underprivileged residents in Ohio.

My biggest accomplishment during my clinical experience was writing an amicus brief to the Ohio Supreme Court. The amicus brief supported the recognition of a hostile housing environment as a cause of action under Ohio’s civil right statutes when a tenant harasses another tenant on the basis of race. Once the brief was submitted, I traveled with my supervisor to Columbus to hear the oral arguments before the Ohio Supreme Court. I gained valuable writing and oral advocacy skills through this experience and had an opportunity to see the legal process in action.”

Teirra Ndegwa
OHIO UNIVERSITY, B.A., 2004
Environmental Law Clinic

“Working in the Environmental Law Clinic was a great way to interact with and help the community while meeting and learning from business people with interests similar to my own. I chose to work with the Trust for Public Land on an investigation into utilizing Burke Lakefront Airport for alternative public use. Among the topics we explored, I researched land control issues, including land leases, and the current economics of Burke. I contacted people at the Port of Cleveland, Cleveland-Hopkins International Airport, Burke operations, and the Ohio Department of Natural Resources. Our research was made all the more interesting because we were dealing with real issues that are still in the forefront of Cleveland’s waterfront development plans today.”

Donna Anderson

Employment Law Clinic

“I very much enjoy teaching in the Clinic, as I get to work closely with our students and watch them grow as advocates. It is so rewarding to see a student do a great job in, for instance, an unemployment hearing - especially a student who came into the Clinic lacking confidence in his or her ability to make a presentation to the rest of the seminar class, let alone be an effective litigator. Perhaps the greatest moments in the Clinic for both the students and myself occur when clients express their gratitude for the hard work the students have done on their behalf. For many of our students, such moments reinforce the reasons they came to law school.”

Kenneth J. Kowalski
CLINICAL PROFESSOR OF LAW / DIRECTOR, EMPLOYMENT LAW CLINIC

Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic

“I am very pleased to be directing the law school’s Community Health Advocacy Law Clinic. It is a partnership between three public institutions with strong commitments to serving the poor: the Legal Aid Society of Cleveland, the MetroHealth Hospital System, and Cleveland-Marshall College of Law. Our law students will be addressing the unmet legal needs of poor patients seeking medical attention at one of MetroHealth’s neighborhood clinics. The clinic’s mission is to help the city’s most vulnerable citizens resolve legal problems that may place their health and healthcare at risk.”

Pamela A. Daiker-Middaugh
CLINICAL PROFESSOR OF LAW / DIRECTOR, PRO BONO PROGRAM
Externships. Active participation, close mentoring.

Externships provide students the opportunity to learn the law outside of the classroom by participating in and observing the legal system in action while earning course credits. A key aspect of every externship is close supervision by an attorney or judge who reviews and comments on the student’s work throughout the externship.

Students have the chance to learn the law by being active participants in the legal process. Externs also get to observe legal proceedings—depositions, settlement conferences, trials—so they receive broad exposure to the legal system. Students hone professional skills and expand their understanding of professional responsibilities to the court, a client, and fellow attorneys.

C|M|LAW offers externship placements with judicial, governmental and other organizations that serve the public interest.

Examples of externships include:

• U.S. Attorney’s Office
• U.S. Federal Trade Commission
• Immigration Court, U.S. Dept. of Justice
• Matrix Pointe Software
• National Labor Relations Board
• Internal Revenue Service
• Legal Aid Society of Cleveland
• Office of the Federal Public Defender
• Cuyahoga County Prosecutor’s Office
• Cleveland State University, Office of General Counsel
• Cleveland Clinic, Office of General Counsel

Pro Bono Opportunities. Public service, professional growth.

Our Pro Bono Program focuses on providing legal assistance to the Cleveland community in cooperation with local attorneys and community agencies serving under-represented groups, including the poor, elderly, and disabled. The program introduces students to the difficulties of the under-represented and the rewards of public service, and continually reminds students of the lawyer’s professional responsibility to render public interest service.

Recent programs include:

The 3Rs (Rights, Responsibilities and Realities) Program
Volunteer lawyers, law students and law faculty work with tenth grade government classes in Cleveland and East Cleveland high schools. Volunteers teach the American Constitution, provide practical career counseling, and encourage students to seek careers in law.

The Legal Aid Society of Cleveland Volunteer Program
Cleveland-Marshall law students volunteer at the Legal Aid Society of Cleveland to help provide pro bono legal services to low-income people in Northeast Ohio. Volunteers participate in the Saturday Free Advice and Referral Clinics in city neighborhoods and develop community legal education workshops.

The Homeless Legal Assistance Program
Our students work with volunteer lawyers through the Homeless Legal Assistance Program and staff at the Northeast Ohio Coalition for the Homeless to provide pro bono legal assistance to homeless men and women in our community. Volunteers conduct intake during weekly legal advice workshops at homeless shelters and assist with legal research for volunteer lawyers providing direct representation in pro bono legal cases.

Students have the chance to learn the law by being active participants in the legal process. Externs also get to observe legal proceedings—depositions, settlement conferences, trials—so they receive broad exposure to the legal system. Students hone professional skills and expand their understanding of professional responsibilities to the court, a client, and fellow attorneys.

The Driver License Reinstatement Project
Over 350,000 residents of Cuyahoga County are driving under suspended licenses. Working with a cadre of volunteer lawyers and judges, law students interview clients in North-east Ohio to determine why their licenses were suspended. Then students assist volunteer lawyers in researching their clients’ cases, and, when necessary, accompany their clients to court as they work toward license reinstatement.

The IRS-Certified Volunteer Tax Preparer Project
C|M|LAW students work with the Cuyahoga Earned Income Tax Coalition at area tax sites – including Cleveland-Marshall College of Law – to provide free tax preparation for low-wage taxpayers. In one year, 50 law students, together with other volunteers, helped over 3,200 citizens across Northeast Ohio receive $4.6 million in refunds.

The Pro Bono Program also offers regular community service opportunities, such as building homes with Habitat for Humanity, Alternative Spring Break in New Orleans, serving lunch at a local soup kitchen, collecting and organizing donations at the Cleveland Food Bank, and planting a garden in the inner city of Cleveland.

Public Interest Law Fellowships. Investing in people who invest their talents.

We put our money where our mouth is! Not only do we encourage students to engage in public interest work, we provide funding for summer experiences as diverse as:

- Legal Aid Society of Cleveland
- Kilimanjaro Women Information Exchange, Tanzania, East Africa
- AIDS Task Force, Cleveland
- Equal Rights Advocates, San Francisco
- Shoshone-Bannock Indian Tribe Commission, Idaho
- Cuyahoga County Public Defender’s Juvenile Division
- US Department of Education, Civil Rights Division
- US Environmental Protection Agency, Washington D.C.
During your first year at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, your studies focus on the jurisprudence and theory of American law—truly the most comprehensive foundation for every successful lawyer. Once you have mastered the material, Cleveland-Marshall offers an array of opportunities to apply your new-found knowledge to the practice of law. The pursuit of academic disciplines outside the classroom, including advocacy opportunities and scholarly journals, provide our students with a wonderful way to incorporate their legal studies with practical courtroom skills, written and oral advocacy, and working as a legal team.

Our scholarly journals are a source of academic study of the law by Cleveland-Marshall students, faculty and outside authors. These journals publish cutting-edge, thoughtful, and innovative articles about modern questions of law.

The Cleveland State Law Review is a journal with a proud tradition. The Law Review is dedicated to publishing a high quality legal journal containing articles from legal scholars throughout the country. These articles are of local and national significance, and each issue includes articles written by Cleveland-Marshall students. The editorial board of the Law Review selects submissions from judges, professors, and other legal scholars for publication, and works with the authors to revise and refine the articles in preparation for publication. Law Review develops a student’s legal writing and citation skills.

The Journal of Law and Health is a traditional, yet innovative online journal. Articles are drawn from all disciplines that offer a perspective on the legal aspects of medicine and health sciences. This interdisciplinary format allows flexibility in both the type and length of articles published. While retaining a scholarly format, the Journal encourages publication of the innovative idea, the bold statement, and the unique point of view. Students solicit articles, judge article quality, and select manuscripts for publication. Selected manuscripts are edited by students. Most importantly, students accept responsibility for the originality, accuracy, and quality of the published articles.

The Global Business Law Review (GBLR) provides an innovative, online platform for scholars and practitioners to explore novel and transformational issues in the field of international business law. The GBLR publishes volumes in the fall and spring of each year and sponsors a symposium every spring to address the most significant legal issues in international business. The GBLR is committed to fostering a transnational dialogue among scholars, practitioners and law students interested in issues in international and business law. The student-led staff of the GBLR is responsible for the editing and publication of the GBLR.
One of the most important attributes for a successful attorney is written and oral advocacy skills, and the Cleveland-Marshall Moot Court program provides students the opportunity to develop, refine, and showcase brief writing and appellate advocacy skills. Students are eligible to compete for a position on the team at the end of their first year by participating in an intramural competition. Second year students also have an opportunity to compete in an intramural competition to join the team after completion of the Advanced Brief Writing course. Once a member of the team, students compete in interscholastic competitions against teams from across the nation. The award-winning Cleveland-Marshall Moot Court team provides students the opportunity to obtain and develop real-world advocacy skills, both written and oral, while still in law school. Team members benefit from the advice and guidance of experienced alumni, faculty, and practitioners.

Another opportunity to develop trial advocacy skills is through the Trial Advocacy Competition, better known as our Trial Team. The Trial Team helps students develop and hone their trial advocacy skills. Students participate in two trial competitions: a local competition with Ohio and surrounding state law schools; and the National Trial Advocacy Competition. Using federal rules of evidence and civil procedure, teams develop arguments, create their own case theory, and prepare written and oral trial materials.
With prime location, prestigious alumni, and phenomenal academic resources, C|M|LAW has proven to be the best gateway into the exploration of the legal profession. Attending C|M|LAW has allowed me to gain invaluable experience and knowledge in both the private and public sector. In my first year, I was able to obtain a summer associate position at a national firm and now have gained the opportunity to clerk at the Cleveland Municipal Court."

Brandon Cox
GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY
B.S., 2007

“I decided to attend C|M|LAW because of its outstanding reputation for producing top-notch lawyers. The practical experience I have gained at C|M|LAW has been invaluable toward my passion to pursue a career as a civil defense attorney: moot court, mock depositions, various clinics, externships, and summer associate positions have all prepared me to enter the legal community with unflappable calm and confidence.”

Anna Stowe DeNicola
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS - AMHERST, BACHELOR OF MUSIC, 2001

“I have met numerous alumni through law school activities and have had the opportunity to meet Chief Justice O’Connor of the Ohio Supreme Court and present direct examination exercises before a federal district court judge. C|M|LAW’s rich network of alums provides a unique opportunity for C|M|LAW students to jumpstart their legal careers and gives them an edge in today’s challenging legal market.”
We have a diverse group of student organizations for a diverse population of students. They provide a great way for students to serve the law school and the Cleveland community, to grow personally and professionally, and to network with attorneys and other people who provide legal services.

Support for the student, the lawyer, the whole person.

Networking. Friends, colleagues, advisors.

- Cleveland-Marshall Law Alumni Association (CMLAA) Mentor Program —
  Only another law student, or a former law student, knows what students are going through. So take advantage of every opportunity to learn from those who have come before—our alumni.

  The CMLAA Mentor Program provides law students with a structured way to meet, observe, and obtain advice from C|M|LAW alumni practicing in Cleveland. The purpose of the Mentor Program is to create the opportunity for contact with an attorney who can provide emotional support and advice. This is truly the beginning of your professional network!

Speakers and Educational Series. Tapping into a world of knowledge.

- Employment & Labor Law Speakers Series
  Hear distinguished scholars and practitioners in the field of employment and/or labor law.

- Cleveland-Marshall Enrichment Fund Visiting Scholar
  This program brings a scholar to the Law School for two days to participate in the life of the school. The scholar serves as a guest professor in a substantive course, leads a faculty seminar on current research, makes an informal presentation at a faculty lunch, and presents a public lecture.
Criminal Justice Forum
Nationally recognized scholars and practitioners present a public lecture on a current issue in criminal law.

Littler Mendelson Employment & Labor Law Speakers Series
A distinguished scholar or practitioner in the field of employment and/or labor law presents.

The Forrest B. Weinberg Memorial Fund Lectures
This biannual lecture series addresses current issues in commercial law.

Joseph C. Hostetler-Baker & Hostetler Lecture
Each year a distinguished scholar in law or a related field is invited to present a public lecture.

Membership in Professional Associations. Developing the strong lifelong foundation.

American Bar Association-Law Student Division (ABA/LSD) —
The ABA/LSD membership offers a law student the beginning of a professional network. There is an opportunity to participate in one or more of the specialized ABA sections, such as tax, criminal justice, family law or professional diversity to learn more about current trends in that practice area. Students also receive many benefits such as the Student Lawyer magazine and other free or low-cost publications that will help in law school and in planning a legal career.

Ohio State Bar Association, Student Member—
The OSBA provides members with valuable connections and opportunities that will help students throughout law school and their careers. Student members have the opportunity to attend local conferences on various current issues within the legal field. Students also receive the OSBA weekly publication of recent Ohio court decisions, the Ohio Student Lawyer Journal, and the student newsletter.
From Day One we help you build your future.

Employers have confidence in the education students receive at C|M|LAW, and when it’s time for you to begin your job search, our Office of Career Planning (OCP) stands ready to help you connect with employment opportunities. The administrators who head the OCP are members of the bar and have extensive experience in the legal recruiting process; they know the legal market, locally and nationally.

The Office of Career Planning will link you to an extensive network of C|M|LAW graduates who have an influential presence on the bench and in the bar. Across the country, our graduates are well placed to help you become the kind of professional you aspire to be.

Individual counseling is at the core of OCP’s services, but it is only one of the many resources we make available to you. Our primary role as part of your career planning team is to help maximize all the ways you can add dimension and value to your law school experience. At C|M|LAW, numerous opportunities exist for you to enhance your legal talents and participate in programs that give you exposure to potential employers.

“I wish my school had done that.” That’s a phrase Jones Day Associate Ben Beckman hears a lot these days from colleagues who attended other law schools.

While many schools don’t give law students feedback until it’s too late to improve their performance in classes, Ben found the close instruction at C|M|LAW gave him the solid skills he needed to succeed.

“I was surprised by just how accessible my professors were and by their comprehensive approach to improving the aptitude of their students.”

“I was especially heartened by the level of attention my first-year professors paid to teaching the basics of being in law school. That passion for teaching techniques for success, as well as the substantive content of the courses, carried through to my later professors as well. I was surprised by just how accessible my professors were and by their comprehensive approach to improving the aptitude of their students.”

The engaged teaching method was just one way C|M|LAW surpassed Ben’s expectations. After working in real estate redevelopment, Ben decided to study law, and his impressive short list of schools included Harvard, Yale and Stanford.

“I considered the top schools in the country, but my wife and I love Cleveland. I investigated C|M|LAW because of the University’s reputation as a place where teachers placed equal emphasis on teaching, scholarship and practical application of their erudition. C|M|LAW’s engagement with the city was a major attraction. After talking with students, professors, admissions staff and others in the community, I concluded that I could get a great legal education with the engaged approach I was looking for.”

The mentoring program at C|M|LAW also had a significant impact on Ben, who was paired with a seasoned real-estate and banking practitioner. “If not for my mentor’s generous outlay of wisdom, I would not have known of the opportunity at Jones Day, nor would I have been as well prepared to secure the position. My mentor gave me the insight I needed to excel, and he continues to provide helpful advice as my career unfolds.”

“The mentoring program is another aspect of C|M|LAW that other attorneys I speak with wish their law school had provided. While every mentoring experience is unique, I know that this program is hugely beneficial to C|M|LAW students. It certainly made a difference for me.”
The Honorable
Benita Pearson

Class of 1995.

“I never wanted to be anything but a judge.”

Nominated for federal court by President Barack Obama and confirmed by the U.S. Senate, Benita Pearson is the first African-American woman to hold a U.S. District judgeship in Ohio.

Growing up in inner city Cleveland, Pearson wasn’t exactly clear how she would live a life of justice, but she knew it was what she wanted. She studied accounting at George-town so she could get a job that would pay for law school, and enrolled first in the part-time evening program at Cleveland-Marshall, and after a corporate buy out at her day job soon gave her the financial ability, switched to full time status.

“I was impressed with how involved the instructors and administrators were in the lives of students—even prospective students. That continued throughout my studies, and even continues today. I’d be surprised if Cleveland-Marshall’s individual attention is matched at other schools. That involvement lends itself to a culture that speaks of C|M|LAW.”

As an alum, she finds C|M|LAW engages beyond its walls. “Much of the legal community—both alums and non-alums—benefit from the school’s proximity. C|M|LAW is a great source for interns, externs, and associates. It keeps alums and the community involved because it continues to produce excellent practitioners.”

“C|M|LAW is very welcoming to the legal community. I walk in and still feel a part of it.”

Judge Pearson recalls the impact of alumni who came to C|M|LAW during her studies to talk with students, and takes special note of hearing from African-American women attorneys and judges. “Grads have an obligation to return to the school to share their experience—to answer questions about how they got where they are and be examples to future lawyers.”

“Grads have an obligation to return to the school to share their experience—to answer questions about how they got where they are and be examples to future lawyers.”

Her investiture in March 2011—proudly attended by some of the most distinguished members of the legal community and C|M|LAW community—was an experience so immense in thoughts, emotions, and significance that Judge Pearson finds it bigger than herself. “It was more than about me; it was about every accomplishment I’ve ever had, and C|M|LAW was a part of it.”
Thank you for your interest in C|M|LAW.

Admission to C|M|LAW is selective. The admission committee reviews all applications taking into consideration academic performance, LSAT scores, work and life experiences, and readiness for the rigors of legal education. At C|M|LAW, we are committed to enrolling academically talented and diverse students. In doing so, we recognize and embrace that academic talent and diversity can be identified in many interesting and exciting ways.

C|M|LAW promotes equal education opportunity for persons of every race, ethnicity, religion, national origin, gender, age, disability, sexual orientation, and veteran status. Applicants whose academic performance or LSAT results have been affected by life circumstances or other adversities are encouraged to apply to C|M|LAW’s Legal Career Opportunities Program (LCOP).

All applicants to the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, full-time and part-time, are required to complete the following: (transfer applicants, LCOP applicants, and international applicants: see additional requirements on the next page)

1. Successfully complete a bachelor’s degree from a regionally accredited college or university prior to the start of law school classes.

2. Complete, certify, and submit an electronic application for admission. Applications will be accepted from September 1 through May 1, each year. Please note that the application includes a request for an original personal statement.

3. Register for the Law School Credential Assembly Service (CAS) at www.lsac.org. This service is the clearing house for your LSAT score(s), academic transcripts, and letters of recommendation. Cleveland-Marshall College of Law will request your CAS report from the Law School Admission Council (LSAC) once your application is received.

4. Take the Law School Admission Test (LSAT) no later than February of the year you intend to enroll in law school. When more than one score is reported, C|M|LAW considers the highest score.

5. Secure official academic transcripts from all undergraduate and graduate college and universities attended. These transcripts must be submitted through the Law School Credential Assembly Service (CAS). The law school cannot accept any transcripts directly.

6. Provide a minimum of two letters of recommendation. Letters should be submitted through the Law School Credential Assembly Service (CAS).

Applicants are encouraged to apply early!
Application Deadline: May 1 (preferred deadline is February 1)

Completed applications are reviewed on a rolling basis beginning in late December.

New students are admitted in the Fall semester only.

Transfer Applicants.

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law invites students in good standing from law schools accredited by the American Bar Association (ABA) to apply as transfer students. The primary factor in the admission decision is prior law school performance as determined by grades and class rank. However, undergraduate grades and LSAT scores are considered.

Transfer applicants must complete the same application process as all potential students. In addition, transfer applicants must provide:

1. an official transcript of completed law school work;
2. a letter of good standing from their law school dean; and
3. an official class rank after all law school work is completed.

Letters of recommendation may be submitted, but are not required.

Transfer Application Deadlines
Fall Admission: July 1
Spring Admission: December 1
Summer Admission: April 1

Legal Career Opportunities Program (LCOP) Applicants.

LCOP applicants must complete the same application process as all potential students. In addition to completing the LCOP application for admission, applicants are required to provide three letters of recommendation.

LCOP Application Deadline: March 15

International Applicants.

International applicants seeking a JD must complete the same application process as all potential students, as well as complete the following additional steps to complete their application.

1. If you completed any post-secondary education outside the United States or Canada, you must use the JD Credential Assembly Service (JDCAS) to evaluate your foreign transcripts.
2. If your primary language is not in English, you will need to submit TOEFL and TWE scores.

International Application Deadline: May 1 (preferred deadline is February 1)

Legal Career Opportunities Program (LCOP).

The Legal Career Opportunities Program (LCOP) is a selective admission program for applicants who have encountered some form of adversity or other circumstance that has affected their LSAT score and/or academic performance. As a result, their academic indicators may not accurately reflect their potential to become successful law students. LCOP applicants may demonstrate their readiness for the challenges of law school through a record of career and professional accomplishments, personal statements, letters of recommendation, graduate work, and/or a trend of significantly improved academic performance over a period of time.

Students admitted through LCOP are required to participate in a three-credit-hour, evening course during the summer. This course runs for seven weeks, from late May through mid July. The course integrates substantive areas of the law, legal writing, and skills development to help the student become familiar with the structure of legal education. In addition, LCOP students are introduced to the Academic Excellence Program that is available to all C|M|LAW students.

Students admitted through LCOP are full members of the law school community; many become leaders in law school and in the legal profession.
Financing your C|M|LAW Legal Education.

A C|M|LAW legal education is an excellent investment in your future. In thinking about the cost of your legal education, consider tuition and fees, housing, books, transportation, and other personal expenses. C|M|LAW’s affordable tuition and Cleveland’s relative low cost of living mean that you can begin your legal career from a position of greater financial strength. With that financial strength comes greater flexibility to pursue the fullest array of practice areas and career opportunities.

Most Cleveland-Marshall law students finance a portion of their legal education with Federal Stafford Loans and Federal Grad Plus Loans.

Scholarships are awarded competitively based on the overall strength of each student’s academic record. As students continue through law school, additional scholarship opportunities and awards are available based on need, merit, and community activity.

Non-Ohio residents who are full-time students can become Ohio residents after completing the first year of law school and lower their tuition costs. Part-time non-Ohio resident students may be eligible for provisional residency before they begin law school and may immediately qualify for in-state tuition.
See yourself here.

We are delighted to welcome prospective students to our beautiful law school. The most important reason to visit is to meet our students, faculty, and staff. Our students are diverse, accomplished, and successful. Our faculty are dedicated teachers, researchers, and mentors. Our staff is committed to enriching your experience from the first day until graduation. These men and women are our greatest assets—and one of the best reasons to join the C|M|LAW community.

We encourage you to visit our campus to see all that we offer. And we do offer plenty! See our Smart Classrooms, Moot Court and Trial Courtrooms, dramatic glass entrance, student-friendly atrium, and our state-of-the-art Law Library—top ten in the country for its size, technology, and volumes.

Your visit. Your way.

The Office of Admission welcomes visitors weekdays when school is in session. We offer walking tours of our building. During the fall and spring semesters, the tour is generally followed by the opportunity to attend a first year class. During the spring semester, we also offer an information session with a member of our staff.

In addition, we offer specialized visitation events throughout the year.

- On-Campus Visitation Events: These events are scheduled in the fall and spring semesters and are geared for prospective students. Events include an admission presentation, a student panel, and tour of our building. All are welcome.

- Multicultural Perspectives Events: These events are geared for ethnically and culturally diverse prospective students. As an introduction to C|M|LAW, students have the opportunity to participate in a mock class, tour the law building, attend an admission presentation and interact with students, alumni, and professors. All are welcome to join us.

- Admitted Student Day: In the spring, we reserve an all-day visit event for students admitted to C|M|LAW. The day includes presentations from faculty, alumni, and students, including a luncheon with members of the C|M|LAW community.

- Off-Campus Visitation Events: We travel extensively throughout the United States and hope to see you when we are in your hometown or at your school. To see where we’re going visit the “On the Road” Section of our website.

To learn more about visiting and to register for visitation events, please visit our website at www.law.csuohio.edu. You may also contact the Office of Admission directly at admissions@law.csuohio.edu, 866-687-2304, or 216-687-2304. The Admission staff will help make your visit to Cleveland-Marshall College of Law as informative as possible.
DIRECTIONS

The Cleveland Innerbelt bridge project will impact downtown traffic for the next several years. Visitors are strongly encouraged to go to innerbelt.org and click “traffic impacts” to find out if there are any exit closures around CSU on the day of your visit and to help you plan alternate routes.

Directions from the East
Follow I-90 West to the Chester Avenue/CSU exit (#173B). Turn left onto East 24th Street; drive a half block to Chester Avenue and turn right.

Directions from the West (I-90)
Follow I-90 East to the East 22nd Street exit (#172B). Turn left onto East 22nd Street Drive several blocks; turn left onto Euclid Avenue. The law school is at the corner of Euclid Avenue and East 18th Street.

Directions from the West (Route 2)
Follow the Shoreway (Route 2) east to I-77/I-71 South. Exit at the Chester Avenue/CSU exit (#173B). Turn left onto East 24th Street; drive a half block to Chester Avenue and turn right.

Directions from the South (I-77)
Follow I-77 North to the East 22nd/East 14th Street exit (#162B) to East 22nd Street. Turn left onto East 22nd Street. Drive several blocks; turn left onto Euclid Avenue. The law school is at the corner of Euclid Avenue and East 18th Street.

Directions from the South (I-71)
Follow I-71 North to the East 22nd Street exit (#172B). Turn left onto East 22nd Street. Drive several blocks; turn left onto Euclid Avenue. The law school is at the corner of Euclid Avenue and East 18th Street.

Arriving by plane.
Renting a car? Follow the airport signs to I-71 North (take I-480 East to I-71 North) and follow the driving directions.

Want a cab? Follow the signs in the airport to ground transportation, near Baggage Claim 1, to take a cab to downtown Cleveland. The fare is about $40. Every airport cab must accept major credit cards.

Like public transportation? Take the Rapid Transit Red Line straight to downtown Cleveland. Follow the signs in the airport to the Rapid Transit (RTA). The fare is a few dollars and will drop you off at Tower City. You can use the same pass to take the #6 bus down Euclid Avenue or hop on the free trolley to the C|M|LAW stop.

Arriving by train.
Amtrak offers daily service from many major cities. The station is located downtown, along Lake Erie, about a 15 minute walk, a brief ride on the Waterfront Rapid, or a short cab ride to the law school.

Arriving by bus.
The Greyhound station is located at Chester Avenue and East 13th Street. Walk two blocks East (left turn out of the station) to East 18th Street. Make a right onto East 18th Street and one block up is our front entrance.

Mega Bus runs directly from Toledo and Chicago to Cleveland daily and drops passengers off behind Tower City, right downtown. Take the #6 bus down Euclid Avenue or hop on the free trolley to the C|M|LAW stop.
CLOSING THE DEAL.

Before becoming the Dean of C|M|LAW—and before becoming a legal academic—I was a corporate and international tax lawyer in private practice at law firms in New York City and Cleveland. My practice was devoted to providing strategic tax advice on mergers and acquisitions, asset purchases, private equity investments, corporate reorganizations and similar transactions. Regardless of the nature of the specific transaction, the goal was to see the deal through to closing. A deal would not close, however, until the investor was satisfied that the transaction would produce the desired return on investment.

In this publication—our “deal prospectus”—you’ve had the opportunity to see and read about the important features of the legal education that C|M|LAW offers to prospective students. It is my sincere hope that having read these pages you’re ready to “close the deal” and become a member of our law school community. Let me share a couple of final thoughts, though, to help assure you of the value of an investment in a legal education at C|M|LAW.

The last few years have been difficult for new lawyers, as the number of available legal jobs has shrunk significantly across the country. Despite this general contraction, C|M|LAW graduates continue to find employment at a rate competitive with the national average. In part, this is because there is a vast network of C|M|LAW alumni in Cleveland, throughout Ohio and across the nation, who are proud of the legal education they received here and believe it provided them the tools they needed to be successful. These alumni reach back to support our students in many different ways—they teach in our classrooms, they provide financial support in the form of scholarships, they are coaches to our moot court teams, they are mentors, and they are quite frequently employers of our graduates.

But we also believe our graduates continue to find employment because we offer our students a wide variety of experiential learning opportunities that give them the practical skills necessary to be valuable to legal employers as soon as they graduate. This dedication to providing practical engagement experiences was one of the principal reasons I decided to come to C|M|LAW as Dean. When a commitment to experiential learning is coupled with a talented teaching faculty that produces highly regarded, leading-edge scholarship, the result is a truly powerful learning environment.

If you are passionate about the legal profession, then close this deal by joining our community of scholars and students at C|M|LAW. You’ll be challenged and inspired to both “Learn Law” and “Live Justice.”

LEARN LAW. LIVE JUSTICE.
December 4, 2012

Dear «prefix_applicant» «last_name_applicant»:

I am delighted to offer you admission to C|M|LAW as a «Time_Long» student. Congratulations! You have worked hard and have demonstrated a desire to Learn Law and Live Justice. These lofty ideals represent a commitment to excellence in teaching, learning, professionalism, ethics, and service. As a student, your individual goals and expectations are integral as you choose from a variety of courses, clinics, externships, pro bono opportunities, and many other experiences that will guide you toward a rewarding legal career. For example, Erica Franz ’12 was awarded a Public Interest Law Fellowship for her work at the Kilimanjaro Women Information Exchange in Tanzania, East Africa while a student here. Or Phil Angelo ’09, who, as a C|M|LAW student, was awarded the competitive Presidential Management Fellowship to work with the Drug Enforcement Agency that has led to a successful United States government career.

You will network and develop professional relationships with our accomplished alumni and other members of Cleveland’s sophisticated legal community who are using their legal education in diverse and interesting ways. Take, for example, Arthur A. Elkins Jr. ’93, the Inspector General of the United States Environmental Protection Agency; or Betty Burley ’10 who manages a successful, growing solo practice in Northeast Ohio; or Randall F. Kender ’85, Senior Vice President of Fox Entertainment Group in Beverly Hills; or the Honorable Maureen O’Connor ’80, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Ohio. Be it the courtroom, boardroom, the halls of government and beyond, how and where you use your C|M|LAW education is up to you.

Enclosed with this letter is the Procedures and Requirements document that outlines upcoming deadlines and deposit information. Please review the entire document carefully to meet all admission requirements. In addition, if you have not yet visited the law school, I invite you to come see what makes C|M|LAW so distinctive among your law school options.

At C|M|LAW, you will be challenged, supported, and encouraged in your educational and professional endeavors. We look forward to welcoming you to our law school in August and anticipate your many successes as a student and your contributions to the legal community.

Again, congratulations on this well deserved accomplishment.

Sincerely,

Christopher Lucak
Assistant Dean for Admission and Financial Aid

OCP STRATEGIC PLAN – Y/E 2012 UPDATE
Jennifer Blaga, Director

The Office of Career Planning provides career counseling to students and recent graduates, and makes available to them every possible resource to facilitate their job search process. Our students receive an excellent education at C|M|Law and are ready to assume the trust and responsibilities of being attorneys in law firms, businesses, government offices, and nonprofit organizations. It is important, particularly in these challenging economic times, that we refine and broaden our efforts in order to identify more opportunities for our students and graduates here in Ohio and across the country. This draft of our strategic plan conveys how we intend to develop our program to best serve our students and graduates. We look forward to your advice on how to strengthen this plan.

STRATEGIC GOALS AND TACTICS

Goal #1: Increase employment percentage of our students at graduation

Strategy #1: Strengthen our Fall and Spring Interview Programs

Tactic #1: Increase number of employers invited through geographic diversity initiatives

Tactic #2: Create an effective follow-up plan with all invited employers to maximize attendance

Tactic #3: Enhance the existing relationships with our alumni board, Visiting Committee, and National Advisory Counsel members in order to encourage their law firms and organizations to participate in our programs

Y/E 2012 UPDATE: In the first two years following the implementation of our strategic plan, we were actively engaged in talking with members of our advisory groups, employers currently participating in our recruiting programs, and new employers in Columbus, Pittsburgh, DC, and Florida in order to encourage them to recruit our students. Through these measures, we have been successful in increasing the number of employers who participate in our interview programs, and we continue to nurture these relationships and grow the pool of employers for the benefit of our students.
Strategy #2: Increase and enhance practice area-specific information available to students

Tactic #1: Create practice area peer groups composed of faculty and students as a place for the exchange of information and job leads Tactic #2: Provide practical, specific information on OCP website regarding areas of the law and related career paths
Tactic #3: Work with CMLAA and mentors to create a potential career development network to counsel students on practice area interests

Y/E 2012 UPDATE: We have made minimal progress with these specific tactics, however we continue to work collaboratively with the faculty, the C|M|LAA, and individual alumni to connect students with practitioners in fields of interest.

Strategy #3: Increase the number of externship and internship opportunities available in corporate and non-profit legal departments

Tactic #1: Meet with in-house counsel to introduce our externship program and tailor a mutually beneficial externship opportunity
Tactic #2: Coordinate with the Association of Corporate Counsel (ACC) to facilitate mentoring or informational interview opportunities for our students
Tactic #3: Meet with staff of Business Volunteers Unlimited (BVU) to discuss the concept of students as board members of non-profits in order to open doors to additional job opportunities

Y/E 2012 UPDATE: We continue to expand the number of volunteer and for-credit opportunities for our students, and have added a significant number of in-house and non-profit externships during the first 3 years of our plan. In 2011, the OCP assumed the administration of the externship program and related counseling for students. This was a natural addition to the OCP function, as externships have traditionally been an integral part of the career planning process. Additionally, the Development team has a strong program in place to work with the ACC, providing us with an ongoing collaborative effort that will allow us to connect our students with in-house counsel. Finally, after an initial presentation by BVU in the first year of our plan, we were able to establish an ongoing working relationship with BVU, giving us updates on opportunities for our students to get involved with their member organizations.
Goal #2: Increase the geographic diversity of employment opportunities for our graduates

Strategy #1: Develop collaborative relationships with law firms in other major cities

Tactic #1: Encourage visits to C|M|Law

Tactic #2: Coordinate with the U.S. Law Firm Group to invite member firms to our Fall and Spring Interview Programs

Tactic #3: Coordinate with the National Advisory Committee members regarding employers in their geographic region

Y/E 2012 UPDATE: Because over 90% of our students stay in Northeast Ohio, we have not focused heavily on this particular goal. The group of students who do not intend to stay in Ohio upon graduation is a small enough group each year that we are able to employ a more targeted approach to their job search. For the benefit of these students, we continue to proactively work with the Development team, the C|M|LAA, and individual alumni across the country to ensure that we have the connections and resources necessary to maintain awareness of employment opportunities outside of Ohio.

Strategy #2: Create a career development network across the country

Tactic #1: Consult with the CMLAA alumni board regarding outreach strategies with alumni across the country to connect them with students for summer and post-graduation employment

Tactic #2: Coordinate with and participate in the Dean’s and Development team’s meetings with employers to generate networking and mentoring opportunities for our students

Y/E 2012 UPDATE: Although we have not created a formal career development network, we have an ongoing commitment to working with senior level administrators, the Development team and the C|M|LAA in order to have hand at all times a short list of contacts in other cities who willing to serve as informational resources for our students.

Strategy #3: Develop plan to get Cleveland-based national firms to hire for other offices
Tactic #1: Meet with law firm leaders to discuss creating opportunities for our students in offices outside of Cleveland

Y/E 2012 UPDATE: In 2009, we met with law firm leaders and found the consistent message was that individual offices of national law firms hire independent of their “home offices.”

Strategy #4: Allocate resources for our students to attend job fairs across the country

Tactic #1: Maintain current information regarding job fairs hosted in other cities on our website and distribute relevant information to our students

Tactic #2: Target students through student organizations and faculty members for attendance at public interest and practice-area specific conferences

Y/E 2012 UPDATE: We have made significant strides through our website, our job board, and specialized calendars for public interest and diversity events, in widely publicizing job fairs across the country. We also work hard to make sure that relevant student organizations distribute job fair information to their membership.

Goal #3: Increase the number of judicial clerkships among our recent graduates

Strategy #1: Revise and enhance the quality and accuracy of our clerkship information

Tactic #1: Create a judicial clerkship committee composed of faculty who were judicial clerks

Tactic #2: Consistently update on an annual basis contact lists of state and federal Ohio judges

Tactic #3: Contact judges regarding hiring process and availability of positions

Tactic #4: Compile and maintain a list of graduates who secure judicial clerkships

Y/E 2012 UPDATE: The faculty approved re-establishing the judicial clerkship committee in 2010 that provides annual programming and counseling for students interested in judicial clerkships. Because such a good number of the local federal judges participate in our externship program, we are able capitalize upon those site visits to learn of clerkship opportunities in the federal courts. We also attempt to continually update our state court information for students so that they have the necessary information in order to apply for state clerkships. We have begun to rebuild our list of graduates who interview for and secure clerkships, however we anticipate that project will be a work in progress over the next couple of years.

Strategy #2: Increase awareness of clerkship opportunities among our students and faculty

Tactic #1: Correspond with faculty regarding available clerkships to leverage their relationships with judges for our students and to encourage students to apply

Tactic #2: Increase counseling of students on the advantages of clerkships

Tactic #3: Publicize in law school and alumni communications and materials the judicial clerkships obtained by our graduates

Y/E 2012 UPDATE: In 2009/2010 we corresponded on a regular basis with the faculty as a whole about their relationships with judges who had openings; however that correspondence has become more targeted over time. The faculty, though, particularly the committee members, has been an integral part of the clerkship counseling that we now do as a law school community. We have yet to establish a formal, consistent way for publicizing when our students and graduates secure a clerkship.

Planning Services. The OCP staff will provide you with assistance and resources in order to facilitate your job search. We offer one on one counseling, resume review, cover letter review, valuable programming throughout the year and a monthly career planning newsletter among other services and resources. We will be helping you build your resume throughout your law school career. Some of the opportunities that you should seriously consider include externships, clinic courses, course concentrations, creative employment opportunities for summers, and networking every chance you can. Whether you are a full-time day student, a part-time evening student, a dual-degree student, and/or a student who wants to conduct an out of state job search- no matter what your interests are- our office can help. Schedule a one on one appointment today.

Print and Online Resources. The OCP has various resources to help you with your job search. This handbook should serve as a great starting point. You can also stop by our reference room to look at other printed materials and books. Our website (www.law.csuohio.edu/careerplanning) provides more information and links to career related websites for your reference. Aside from our website some other links you might find useful, that you should familiarize yourself with, include www.martindale.com, www.nalpdirectory.com, www.equaljusticeworks.org and www.pslawnet.org. As a member of the C|M|LAW student body, you also have access to Symplicity (see the following section) which serves as our office’s online interface.

Symplicity Web Site (https://law-csuohio-csm.symplicity.com/students). Symplicity is a web-based service which manages our resume approval process, job postings, and interview programs. In your first year at C|M|LAW, you will be emailed log on information along with direction for use - DO NOT DELETE THIS EMAIL. Even though you may not use Symplicity immediately, you will want to have access to the database throughout your time in law school and even after you graduate. All of the job postings we receive are placed in this database. During the Fall and Spring Interview Programs, almost all of the bidding, and scheduling of interviews is done on Symplicity. Symplicity also has a document library under the resources section where we place valuable employer information, various handbooks and guides, and links to other job posting boards among other important tools that can help you in your job search.

A Note on Out-of-State Job Searches and Reciprocity. No matter where in the country your job search takes you, the OCP is here to assist you, be it through networking opportunities, alumni connections, or various job search resources. The OCP has reciprocity with the career planning offices in other law schools around the country. If you are interested in searching for a job out of state, we will write a letter for you and you will be permitted (in most cases) to use another law school’s career office in your selected geographic location. The OCP also receives electronic newsletters and job postings from other schools for positions out of state which are available on our website here.

Programs
Take advantage of the career-boosting programs that the OCP provides for you. Each year we provide valuable career focused programs covering topics such as the Fall and Spring Interview Programs (as well as related informational programs), interviewing/etiquette tips, networking, specialty areas of the law (health care, labor/employment, IP), among others. Our monthly e-newsletter, Coffee Talk, will highlight programs on and off campus.

CAREER PLANNING BY YEAR

First-Year Law Students (1Ls)

Use your first few months to get adjusted to the pace and demands of law school before worrying about getting a law-related job. The National Association for Law Placement (NALP) employment guidelines prohibits first-year full-time students from talking with the career planning staff about specific legal employment prior to Nov. 1, and prohibits first-year students from having contact with employers prior to Dec. 1. Part-time students, however, may seek assistance with job searches during the school term. We are happy to discuss general employment questions until you’ve settled in.

Part-time Employment. The American Bar Association (the accreditation body for all law schools) does not allow students who are enrolled for more than 12 credit hours in any given semester to work more than 20 hours/week during that semester. Full-time students may work part-time (that means not more than 20 hours per week). The Cleveland-Marshall Academic Regulations provide that to work more than 20 hours per week you may not register for more than 12 credit hours without the Dean’s permission. These limitations are intended to ensure you have sufficient time to devote to your coursework.

Summer Full-Time Employment. Legal employers are often willing to employ first-year students at the end of their first year for the summer. Postings begin appearing in late February and March as firms and other employers begin to assess the summer caseload.

Minority students should plan to apply to the Minority Clerkship Program sponsored by the Cleveland Metropolitan Bar Association. This program has been specifically designed to enable minority students at C|M|LAW and CWRU to work in law firms and other law-related organizations during the first year summer. Part-time students should plan to apply after their second part-time year.

Additional ways to find employment include:
Networking with attorneys (including your CMLAA mentor) and others you know in the area to let them know you are interested in a position for the summer.

- Searching www.martindale.com for firms and attorneys (including alumni) that practice in the areas in which you are interested.
- Researching firms on their websites.
- If you are interested in a career in public interest, set up a job seeker account at www.pslawnet.org. You should also look at the programs available for law students on www.equaljusticeworks.org.
- Participating in Externships and Clinics, which are great ways to gain real life experience while also earning credits. See the Externship and Clinic portions of the website for a description of the various places students can work in the area while being supervised at work by an attorney and, in the case of clinics, by clinical faculty at school. These experiences can provide client contact and exposure to real life problems.

Second-Year Law Students (2Ls)

Part-time law clerk positions are not uncommon during the second year. Remember, the limit is 20 hours per week for students carrying more than 12 credit hours during the semester. (Although some employers may not be aware of this rule, we suggest you remind them in a very diplomatic fashion. If you are having a problem, contact us!) Clerks are hired by small and medium firms, corporations, and government and non-profit organizations for part-time employment during the school year and during the summer. The job postings received in the OCP are posted in job binders and are also on the Symplicity web site.

Summer employment after the second year. The Fall Interview Program is one program designed to aid both students and employers in their search for summer employment. Cleveland-Marshall hosts employers each fall to interview students on-campus. Most of these firms are the large ones that can plan ahead a year or so, but other employers like the Cuyahoga County Public Defender’s Office and the U.S. Army and Navy JAG Corps also participate. Most of the large firms will look at grades and the fall program tends to be geared towards the top 30% of the class. However, there are several employers who will also recruit at the same time so if you are not in the top 30%, you should still make sure to review the participating employers.

Many employers are anxious to have us collect resumes and send them to their offices. Still others encourage students to mail cover letters and resumes directly to them. More information can be found on our website. The Fall Interview Program packet is also available from the OCP beginning in late July. Most organizations are interested in second-year students although some are also interviewing third year students. Some of the summer associate positions obtained through this program will lead to permanent offers of employment that will be proffered at the beginning of the third year. Smaller firms come to the campus to interview for the Spring Interview Program, because they make their hiring decisions later in the academic year.

Department of Justice. Each year the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) accepts applications for its Summer Law Intern Program. The Summer Law Intern Program is the Department's competitive recruitment program for compensated summer internships in Washington, D.C. and in cities across the country. Information about this program and the application generally appear on the web in July (www.usdoj.gov/oarm). The application process and all related communication are completed online and via e-mail. The deadline for applications to be received in Washington is early September. Get yours completed early to avoid technical snafus. This program is very selective. For more detailed information, consult the DOJ materials on their web site.

Additional ways to achieve employment include:

- Networking with attorneys (including your CMLAA mentor) and others you know in the area to let them know you are interested in a position for the summer.
- Searching www.martindale.com for firms and attorneys (including alumni) that practice in the areas in which you are interested.
- Researching firms on their websites to determine if you’re interested in them.
- If you are interested in a career in public interest, set up a job seeker account at www.pslawnet.org. You should also look at the programs available for law students on www.equaljusticeworks.org.
- Participating in Externships and Clinics, which are great ways to gain real life experience while also earning credits. See the Externship and Clinic portions of the website for a description of the various places students can work in the area while being supervised at work by an attorney and, in the case of clinics, by a clinic member at school. These experiences can provide client contact and exposure to real life problems.

Third-Year Students (3Ls)

You are very close to becoming an attorney and it is time to get serious about your post graduate employment search. Employers are seeking candidates with practical legal experience. If you have yet to participate in an externship or clinic, now is the time. This is also the time to build your networks, attend professional events around town to meet people, request informational interviews with alumni, attorneys in town and friends who can provide insight into your job search. Apply to employers broadly and make sure to properly research every employer before sending a cover letter of contacting them directly. It is also time to reformat and have your resume reviewed.

- Take advantage of on-campus interviews. Some employers will be looking for third year students during the Fall and Spring Interview Programs.
- Do not overlook those firms that are interested in resume collect and resume direct collections rather than coming on campus to interview.
- Use your network to the fullest in locating jobs and gaining interviews.
- Continue to search through the job postings on Symplicity.
- Be flexible. Consider jobs in areas of law you might not have previously explored, including alternative geographical locations.
- Consider a Judicial Clerkship in all levels of the courts.
- Research positions with the government and the military.
- If you are interested in a career in public interest, set up a job seeker account at www.pslawnet.org. You should also look at the post graduate programs available on www.equaljusticeworks.org.
Explore alternative employment where a JD is a big plus (HR, hospitals, etc.).

Department of Justice. Each year the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) accepts applications for its Honors Program. The Honors Program is the Department's recruitment program for entry-level attorneys and is the only way the Department hires graduating law students. Information about this program and the application generally appear on the web in July (www.usdoj.gov/oarm). The application process and all related communication are completed totally online and via e-mail. The deadline for applications to be received in Washington is early September. Get yours completed early to avoid technical snafus. This program is very selective but is the only way to be hired into the Department of Justice’s various practice groups as a new attorney. Honors Program interviews are primarily held in Washington, and are paid for by the DOJ. For more detailed information, consult the DOJ materials on their web site.

Judicial Clerkships. A judicial clerkship is an excellent first step in a legal career. This is an incomparable opportunity to learn from a skilled judge and to observe the inner workings of the judicial system. A judge’s clerk will develop and refine his or her research and writing skills, learn the intricacies of trial or appellate procedure, and gain exposure to the bar that practices before that court. Clerkships are very prestigious and valued, and clerks have an edge in competing for subsequent jobs with both private and public sector employers.

Clerkship positions are offered to law school graduates and are usually for terms of one to two years. Appellate courts tend to stress research and writing, while trial courts offer greater exposure to trial practice and procedure. The nature of a law clerk’s duties varies from judge to judge and from court to court, from assisting in the legal research and writing associated with the judge’s case load and facilitating conferences between the judge and attorneys representing litigants to drafting bench memoranda outlining the issues in any given case to prepare the judge for oral argument.

Federal judicial clerkships may be applied for in two ways: on-line and through the mail. Most federal judges use an electronic system (OSCAR). Go to https://oscar.uscourts.gov for more information. Applications must be uploaded before Labor Day. There are still some judges who want paper in hand, although all judges are listed on the OSCAR system. You may therefore need to use both forms of application. Judges may view your application online the day after Labor Day. The day after Labor Day is the mailing date for hard copy materials.

Ohio State Court Clerkships: Ohio Supreme Court clerkship applicants should apply directly to the seven individual justices. Application materials should include a cover letter, resume, two letters of recommendation, an unofficial law school transcript, and two writing samples. Application timeframes vary by judge, and clerkships run for one to three years, commencing the summer following graduation. Eighth District Court of Appeals clerkship applicants should apply directly to the individual judge and to the District Court Administrator. Applicants must have passed the Ohio Bar or be awaiting Bar results. Application materials should include a cover letter, resume indicating GPA and class rank, short writing sample, and contact information for three professional and/or academic references. Each judge sets their term length individually.
The importance of deadlines in applying for these positions cannot be stressed enough. Most federal and state appellate judges interview students during the fall of their third year for the positions that are available for the August after graduation. If you are interested in pursuing a judicial clerkship, connect with the OCP immediately.

Part-time Students (1LEs, 2LEs, 3LEs, 4LEs)

It can be challenging for part-time students to gain legal experience while in law school but it is still important that you seek out opportunities to do so. The more substantive legal experience you have on your resume by the time you graduate, the better. At some point, you if you want to practice law, will need to fully make the transition into the legal field. Each part-time student’s circumstances are different and you may find that you are able to make the transition while you are still in school. Some of you may need to stay at your current full-time positions until you graduate. No matter what your circumstances, we can help you map out a plan. It is important that you schedule an appointment with your counselor as we can help you navigate your job search as you begin a new career path.

Some flexible ways that part-time students can gain legal experience include:

- Working as a research assistant for a professor
- Enrolling (for academic credit) in a clinical program
- Volunteering at LegalAid for one of their Brief Advice Clinics, Immigration Clinics and Pro Se Divorce Clinics
- Working more closely with the legal department in your current company

Dual-degree Students

You should make sure to meet with the Office of Career Planning at C|M|LAW and also with the school you are enrolled in for your dual degree. You also might need to create two versions of your resume depending on the jobs you are applying for. One might be more targeted to legal positions and the other more targeted for positions that would require/find your other degree more attractive.

You should also try to meet with alumni who received dual degrees to learn how they have utilized both degrees in the professional world.

II. RESUMES

Your resume is your first opportunity to make a first impression to prospective employers about your skills and abilities. It is very important that you take the time to organize your resume.

Think about how you would dress for an interview. You would want to put your best foot forward and show up in a business suit. The same applies for your resume. You want to make sure your resume is properly polished, grammatically correct and demonstrates your abilities in a clear and concise way.
To start, we recommend that you review the samples in the appendix of this handbook to get an idea of a legal format and how your resume should change each school year as you continue to gain practical experience and become closer to being an attorney. Your legal resume will look very different than the resume you provided to admissions and it will continue to change throughout law school.

Once you have reviewed the sample resumes, we recommend that you make an appointment with your career counselor to talk about your documents and to prepare a job search strategy.

You can also upload your resume into Symplicity for a resume review or email a copy of your resume to OCP staff members. In order to apply for positions listed in the Symplicity system, you will need an approved version of your resume on file. You should always have your most updated version uploaded into Symplicity!

RESUME FORMAT

A few helpful guidelines for resume writing:

Be consistent: For instance, if you abbreviate the name of any state, then abbreviate the names of all states throughout. The only exception to this rule is if you are presently employed, use the present tense to describe this employment. Use past tense for the jobs held previously.

Easy to read: Use a format that is easy to read. Avoid flashy or eye-catching backgrounds, as you are entering a conservative profession. Use the same stationery for the cover letter accompanying the resume.
- No misspellings and your resume must be grammatically correct
- Font should be at least 10 in size and no more than 12 (except for your header)
- When you are preparing your resume, think about what you as a reader would want to see
- Be cautious of spacing and repetitive action verbs (see list of verbs in appendix)
- Use standard Times New Roman font, or one close to it
- ONE PAGE: Consider 1 page for every 10 years of employment
- Allow for 1" margins or more on top, bottom and sides (leaving space for the interviewer to make positive remarks about you!)

RESUME CONTENT

Your resume must have at least the following three sections:

1. Header

Name: Consider type 2-3 points larger than resume; all letters may be capitalized; may be bold

Address: Use your current address. Avoid P.O. Box numbers. Also include a permanent address for employers in your home area if you plan to return. A sample of a long distance search resume can be found in the appendix.
Phone number: Provide a phone number where you are most accessible. Make sure your voice message is professional.

Email address: Use a professional email address and the address you are most accessible.

2. Education

Start with law school (formal name- not abbreviated, city and state*)

*Do not fail to include Cleveland State University after Cleveland-Marshall College of Law. This is legally correct, educationally sound, and furthermore, it enhances your law degree to have an entire university behind the law school. For example:

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law, Cleveland State University, Cleveland, OH

In addition, do not fail to include:
  o Graduation date
    o ie. Juris Doctor Candidate, May 2015
  o GPA if appropriate (see Grades Section below for more detail) o Class rank if appropriate. Impressive if you are in the top of your class o Selected class performance if appropriate- if your grades are not great but you have done extremely well in classes related to the position o Honors and Awards
  o Activities
  o Additional Legal Education – if you have sat in on Continuing Legal Education (CLE’s) classes through the bar or at school in a specific area that interests you. You may want to include it on your resume Undergraduate Institution: Should follow a similar format to law school.

High School: Should only be included to show a geographic tie or prestige of school.

3. Experience (Professional Experience/Legal Experience)

  o Listed chronologically with your most recent experience first o Make sure to include your position, employer, city and state and dates of employment. For example:

    Cleveland State University, Cleveland, OH
    Law Clerk, Summer 2012

Be Specific!!! Under your basic information, you will provide a description of what you did during this experience. This is the time to sell yourself and the skills you have accumulated while working/interning.
When you list research projects, explain what types of issues you researched. If you include law school activities, be sure to include offices held, duties performed (those that show leadership skills, organizational skills, management skills). Likewise, any volunteer experience should include those skills you developed through your service.

Activities are not listed to show how much time you spent on them. What they add is weight to a resume, where they indicate endeavors that make good lawyers: organizational skills, written and oral communication skills, networking, and precise attention to detail.

Experience and Lack Thereof: It is very important to have legal experience to put on your resume. Your experiences can be full time or part time employment, or volunteer service. The more legal experience it shows, the better. Experience may include pro bono projects that might include interviewing skills or handling hot line calls. Externships, internships and clinics show hands-on experience. Consider these courses as ways to get experience while also earning credit hours.

Demonstrate Proven Capabilities and Lawyering Skills. Include any supervisory titles you may have held in employment as well as important responsibilities. Specifically link these responsibilities to a legal career, and emphasize the skills you relied upon, not the duties you performed. Part time students: be sure to include your past and/or current careers and link the skills to the legal profession.

Obvious Gaps Should be Filled: Be sure to cover all bases. Do not leave large chronological holes in your resumes. Employers will eye years unaccounted for with suspicion and may fill in the time gaps with imaginative thoughts that may work against you. Account for all dates. If you were a waitress for three years, you can turn this transitional period into a “positive” by relating it to public contact, your positive attitude, and so on.

Additional optional sections to include on your resume:

- Hobbies/interests: Do you have hobbies that will spark instant interest or generate conversation? If not, leave them off the resume or they may be interpreted as filler. Be aware that some hobbies and interests carry baggage. Political affiliations are probably not beneficial if a hiring partner believes that you will create a politicized workplace. Other activities may create a similar effect. You should limit your interests to 1-3 hobbies.

- Skills and Licenses: Do you have any particular skills that are worth mentioning, aside from traditional Microsoft programs like Office? Mention them here. Also, are you a CPA, or have your real estate license? Mention any additional qualifications you have here.

- Language skills: State your level of proficiency ie. "Spanish, proficient” or “French, conversational” If you place that you have language skills on your resume, be prepared to share those skills in an interview so do not exaggerate your level of expertise.

SENDING RESUMES
Send your resume and cover letter as pdf attachments in an email. You can place a short paragraph in the body of the email to indicate the position for which you are applying, and directing the reader to the attachments. The subject line of your email resume should either contain the job title that advertised the position or your name. If you are e-mailing an unsolicited resume, use the subject line to grab the recipient’s attention, i.e., “Top 25% of class; strong in business courses and litigation…..” Before emailing your materials to an employer, send them to yourself or a friend to check for formatting problems.

If you are mailing or delivering your resume have it printed on either white or cream colored heavy bond paper with black ink.

RESUME ETHICS

Grades: There are a few thoughts regarding grades on your resume. Overall, it is your resume and the decision is up to you. However, remember that your resume is your marketing piece and should reflect your best skills. General rule of thumb: 3.0 and above should be included on your resume.

If you choose to leave your GPA off the resume, you must make sure to play on your strengths and construct the rest of your resume to show good work-related experience, leadership skills, self-motivation, and practical experiences to show your marketability. Grades are only one component but if they are not your strength, you need to make sure you have something else to rely on. Think about getting involved in the community and work experiences to build on the skills that you have.

If you have a 3.0 or above, you should include your class rank along with your GPA, which should also indicate the GPA within the 4.00 scale, e.g., 3.41/4.00; top 25%. These records are available from the Director of Records, Marcie Rechner at Marcie.rechner@law.csuohio.edu or 216.687.2289. In addition, it is impermissible to round up the final digit in your GPA. The consequences can be severe and you may be brought before the C|M|LAW Honor Code Committee.

Honesty is the ONLY Policy: Be ethical and practical. Every piece of information that you put on a resume or other application form will be verified. Students are expected to exhibit high standards of professional responsibility in all of their job seeking-activities. Students are cautioned to avoid even the appearance of impropriety in the preparation of their job resumes, letters and application forms. Misleading, inaccurate or false information on these materials will be viewed as a violation of the Law School Code of Conduct. In dealing with such violations, law schools across the country have begun to impose increasingly more stringent sanctions on individuals who yield to this temptation. Suspension, expulsion and state bar notification are among the actions that have been taken.

BEWARE: ALL credentials you list will be checked. Perhaps they will not be verified prior to your receiving a law clerk or summer associate position, but prior to full-time employment, someone will check you out. Verification of grades, prior employment, and credit is frequent.
III. COVER LETTERS and OTHER LETTERS

COVER LETTERS. Here is where you explain what you can do for the employer, show your special expertise, and explain what makes you “the person” to be hired for the job. Do not “repeat” your resume, but herald the experiences it contains. Cover letters are ONE PAGE in length and are printed on the same high quality paper as the resume. This letter presents what you want the recipient to remember about you. It is your selling piece. DO NOT use this letter to give lengthy explanations of issues. Trying to explain a low GPA, why you switched to law, your responsibilities to support your family while in law school, etc. are best addressed in an interview.

Format. There is a traditional and professional legal format that you should follow when writing cover letters. You should include your return address in the upper right hand corner or in letterhead format at the top center of the page. Unless using the letterhead format in the top center, the return address should exclude your name. You should then include the date you are writing. Lastly, include the contact block for the person you are addressing along the left margin. Be sure to use the proper title and name of the contact (including “Esq.” if the contact is an attorney). Then you can begin your letter and use a colon (not a comma) in your salutation. Type your name at the bottom while also including space for a hand-written signature. Please reference the cover letter examples in the appendix to ensure you are using proper format. You don’t want to give an employer the opportunity to dismiss your application because your cover letter is not organized well or formatted properly.

Address your letter to the appropriate individual. If you have obtained the job referral from the OCP, this office will provide you with the proper contact information. Avoid using “Dear Sir or Madam:” which makes you appear outdated and uninformed. A vague introduction (“To Whom It May Concern:”) also suggests that your letter may be one of many you are sending out and one not crafted for this particular job. If your research does not reveal the title or name of the person you need, try doing some more research. Call the office and ask for the proper name (spelling) and title of the hiring partner or head of the department you are applying to.

Organization and content. Here is a simple outline of what should be included in the body of your cover letter:

a) The first paragraph should provide an introduction. Tell the employer what year you are, where you go to school and what you are applying for. How did you hear of this position? If you were referred, mention the individual’s name. Why are you interested in the position and employer?

b) The second paragraph should describe your specific skills and expertise and how they match the recipient's needs. You will need to do some research on what the employer is looking for. Reread the position description and make sure you are detailing qualities and skills that would be attractive to the employer. This is where you sell yourself. You need to answer the employer’s questions, “Why should I hire you?” and “What can you do for me?”

c) The third paragraph can be used to explain anything unusual in your resume (gaps in your career, excessive number of moves in a short time period) or anything else that isn't readily apparent from your resume (unique experience or background, e.g., you are from the area where the job is located). If you are applying to positions outside of Ohio, be sure to mention all the contacts/ties you have in that area to assure the employer that you are serious about making a move.

d). The final paragraph closes the conversation. Thank the employer and express your appreciation. Depending on the situation, this might be a place to express that you will follow up with a phone call at an appropriate time—in a week or ten days—unless you have heard something prior to that time. Provide your contact information with any instructions on how you prefer to be reached. Regarding phone numbers, make sure you have a professional greeting waiting in case an employer leaves you a message, and plan to check for messages frequently.

1Ls. Even though it is likely that you don’t have any experience in the legal field, detail what experience you do have and how that translates well to the position for which you are applying. Show that you are a hard worker, responsible, and showcase any of your other skills and attributes.

2Ls. Be sure to detail what you did your first summer. Employers will want to know if you gained any legal experience or took classes, etc.

3Ls. If you are applying for a post-grad position, be sure to indicate your graduation date and when you are registered to take the bar. This will help the employer see if your timeline works with their hiring timeline.

APPROACH LETTERS. These are designed to get informational interviews with people who may be able to give you leads and names of contacts or information on employment possibilities. Much of the information given on cover letters applies to approach letters as well. Normally you do not include your resume with this letter, but take it with you to any meetings for discussion purposes. You may use your resume as a tool to get the individual to look at you or to enable the contact to refer to it in case other employers might be looking for someone with your skills and qualifications.

- First paragraph shows your connection to the contact/employer (“so-and-so suggested I contact you. . .”)
- Carefully craft a paragraph that requests advice and suggestions on how to find a position suited to your abilities. Emphasize the purpose of the meeting: seeking advice on plans, occupational information or employment opportunities. Giving a brief description of your present situation may also be useful. Make it clear that you are seeking information to alleviate any pressure the contact may have regarding offering you a job. That is not the purpose of an informational interview.
- Request a meeting. State that you will call in a few days to establish a mutually agreeable time.

THANK YOU LETTERS. You should always send a thank you letter to interviewers or contacts who you have met for an informational interview.

Handwritten Letters. Your grammar, spelling, and penmanship are key here. Spelling and grammatical errors will only detract from your employability. Thank you notes may be written on plain, professional looking note cards, and mailed within 24-48 hours of your interview or meeting. If you know you have messy handwriting, you should type out a letter and then sign it before sending it.

Typewritten Letters. Typewritten notes are appropriate for business purposes. The notes should be short, correct, and pleasant.

E-Mail Thank Yous. These should be reserved exclusively for when you are made aware that the hiring decision will be made in less than 2-3 days. Unless that is the case, send a thank you note in the mail.

Content. If you had an extremely good interview, you may want to thank the interviewer for his/her time, stating that you enjoyed yourself. Be sure that you express something specific to that interview, so that the interviewer will recall you (i.e., a topic discussed, an interest in common, etc.). Even if you had the worst time of your life, be courteous in the note. Firms keep track of communications with you. A recruiter or partner will probably notice if you send the same communication to everyone. Use your imagination and vary the message. A typical letter should include a) thank you, b) pertinent information to the interview, and 3) reiteration of interest.

IV. TRANSCRIPTS

Most beginning interviews do not ask for a transcript. However, for those employers who want them, they are usually content with UNOFFICIAL transcripts. Unofficial transcripts are obtainable from the Director of Records, Marcie Rechner. You must fill out a transcript form, which is available for download on the law school’s website. Just click on Current Students and then Student Records. She will print one out for you to pick up from her office or can email you an electronic copy in 24-48 hours.

You can learn more about ordering an OFFICIAL transcript by visiting Cleveland State University's Office of the Registrar’s website at:

V. WRITING SAMPLES

A writing sample of 5-10 pages is more than sufficient. The employer wants to know IF you can write, not what you write. This sample should be your own work. If you plan to use something that you wrote for beginning Legal Writing, think through this process: How many months ago was that? Are you a better writer now than you were then? If so, why not rewrite the piece so that your work really reflects your current writing ability? You may want to consult with a professor, colleague, or employer over whether the work you plan to submit will adequately portray your present skills. A sample showing your legal analysis is preferable.

Be certain that you have permission from an employer if you are using something you wrote for work. You must redact all identifying references to parties unless the document was filed in court and is a public record. Some suggestions of writing sample items include a memorandum, brief in support of a motion, or a short research paper.
Unless your Journal of Law and Health or Cleveland State Law Review Note or Moot Court Brief specifically relates to something in which this employer is/was involved, it is too long to submit as a writing sample. But take it with you to an interview and offer it for reading. Your Note should definitely be on your resume and be sure to mention it in an interview.

VI. REFERENCES

Select References Carefully. PRIOR to listing a reference, BE SURE to discuss the potential referral with the individual you plan to use, and give them a copy of your resume. Usually three references are sufficient. Try to use people who know you well from varying perspectives: a law professor, an employer, a pro bono project coordinator, or a community member with whom you have worked closely. Think of some of the people for whom you may have worked or clerked who are highly regarded in the legal field. The judge from a judicial externship, a partner from the firm you worked for, a well-known professor in his field are examples of people you should definitely list. Unless there was a grave problem at your last place of employment, you should list a superior from there. If you do not, the prospective employer will assume that there was a problem. Friends and relatives should NOT be references. The individuals you choose as references should be able to emphasize your key attributes such as your maturity, your work ethic and thoroughness.

Formatting Details. References should not be included as part of the resume. They should appear on a separate page so that you can revise any references used, depending on the position for which you are applying. You should also refrain from including the language “References Available Upon Request” at the bottom of your resume. All parties assume that references are available. References do not necessarily need to write letters; often the employer will call them. Take a “reference sheet” with you to the interview. Be sure to title it with your name included ("References for Tom Jones") so that the paper will not be misplaced as a stray paper containing three meaningless names. For each reference you provide, be sure to include their name and title; business address, phone, and e-mail; and how you know them.

Letters of Recommendation. If an employer asks for a written letter of recommendation, ask your reference to please send a letter recommending you to the person at the address on the envelope you provide (with stamp). This is more professional than having them write one for you and handing it to you to deliver.

Judicial Clerkship References. When applying for a judicial clerkship you should include among your references someone who knows your research and writing skills: your legal writing instructor, the judge for whom you externed, a professor for whom you were a research assistant, or a professor for whom you wrote a paper. These recommendations are crucial to the success of your application.

Judges are looking for skills that may be a bit different from those a law firm wants. Certainly, you will want your legal experiences emphasized with particular attention given to research, writing and analytical skills. Ask your references to please emphasize these. You will probably be interviewed by the judges’ office staff and getting along with them is crucial, but your social skills with clients will take a back seat.

Federal judges usually use the electronic OSCAR system for posting their positions. Applications are also done electronically through this system. The OSCAR system can be accessed at http://oscar.dcd.uscourts.gov/resources.html. The resources page tells the whys and hows of the system. The password will be sent to the reference through email. Be sure to tell your reference that this is the system used and to watch his/her email for a notice giving a password. Only one email will be sent so the reference must check periodically at his/her account to see if more reference letters are needed. You should be sure to remind individuals that you still need a letter if you look at your own account and there is not a letter there.

VII. INTERVIEWS

TYPES OF INTERVIEWS

Initial interviews

Screening interview. The first interview is often a screening interview. The purpose is to screen out those individuals who would not be acceptable for the position the firm seeks to fill. The “screen” used may be grades, personality, practice area, experience, or any number of other factors the interviewer chooses to employ.

Selection interview. Sometimes the initial interview is a selection interview. The emphasis, however, is to pick candidates from the class who would best fit the needs of the firm. The emphasis here is on positive attributes. In either case, there may be many factors at work, many of which the interviewee is totally unaware, that determine the list of candidates selected to continue down a particular firm’s interviewing path.

Decision or Second Interviews

Second or “call-back” interviews often involve more than one interviewer. You may meet with several partners, one at a time, or in a group.

Employers are establishing the answers to three concerns during the second interview:

- Will you be able to handle the position?
- Do you have the essential motivation for the job?
- Does the right chemistry exist between you and the firm (do you fit in the firm culture)?

Phone Interviews

More and more businesses are conducting initial interviews over the phone, both to save money and the time it takes to conduct personal interviews. Although these are usually screening interviews, many of the factors that go into a person-to-person interview will affect the outcome.

A phone interview may be only 5-10 minutes long, giving you even less time to make a positive impression. Consider what will make you “appear” more professional over the phone. Your tone of voice will be important. Hesitancies, lack of warmth to the person on the other end, sluggishness—all send negative messages. Since no visual cues exist, the voice message becomes even more important. Make your enthusiasm, smiling face, projection, and confident voice work for you.

Video Interviews

In a video conference, the viewer can only see a small part of the surroundings. The focus is on you—there are no detractors—no looking out the window, at the clock, glancing at the desk. The focus is on the speaker the entire time. Therefore, all of your mannerisms will be exaggerated. Your appearance will also become more important, especially from the waist up. Especially crucial is your eye contact with the camera (interviewer).

BEFORE THE INTERVIEW

Research and Preparation

You need to prepare for your interview well before your interview date and time. You should not go in and “wing it.” You should research the employer as much as possible so that you can form educated answers and ask educated questions during the interview. Google the employer, check out their website, talk with the OCP as well as anyone you know who has or currently works there.

Find out who you are interviewing with in advance of the interview and try to conduct research on the interviewer(s). You should Google them and look them up on LinkedIn as well as the employer’s website.

Review the job description for the position you are interviewing for and think about how to relate your discussion to the responsibilities and qualifications listed in the posting.

Review your resume and your cover letter and be prepared to discuss any part of it, no matter how insignificant that part may be to you. It is hard to tell what employers might ask about after looking at your application so you should be prepared to discuss anything you have presented to them.

Verify the date, time, and location of the interview. Mapquest the address and/or drive to the location a few days before the interview to ensure you will not get lost if you are unfamiliar with the location.

What to Wear and What to Bring

Remember that the legal field is still quite traditional and conservative and you should dress accordingly. You do not want the employer remembering the hot pink shirt or the goofy tie you wore over your ability to do the job.

You should always wear a nice, tailored suit to an interview.

Gentlemen

- Wear a nice tailored suit. The most accepted colors are black, navy blue, and dark grey.
- Wear a simple tie. No wild patterns, colors, or prints.
• Wear a conservatively colored shirt. Popular options are white, light blue, etc. No bright colors.
• Make sure your shoes are polished and not scuffed up. You want to take pride in the way that you are presenting yourself.
• Be aware of your hair and any facial hair. Try to keep it conservative, neat and trimmed.

Ladies
• Keep your jewelry simple.
• Wear a simple shell or button down shirt with your suit. No frills or ruffles or very bright colors. Remember, you don’t want your outfit to be distracting.
• If you wear a skirt suit, wear pantyhose.
• Wear simple, classic heels. Don’t wear your stiletto platforms to an interview.
• If you wear your hair down, make sure it is out of your face.

Make sure to bring extra copies of all of your application documents. The interviewers may not need it but you will look organized and prepared by having extra copies with you. Bring an extra set of copies for each person you are interviewing with plus one extra (to reference yourself, or in case you meet a partner in the hallway, etc.). You should also bring a notepad and pen so that you can jot down questions or notes during the interview. Prepare questions to ask in advance and take them with you (there is more about questions to ask the employer below). You can place all of this in a nice, professional looking pad folio, folder, or binder that you take with you to the interview.

If you have a specific question, ask someone in the OCP. We promise to give you honest feedback! It is better to ask if you are unsure about something before you walk into the interview.

DURING THE INTERVIEW

Be polite and courteous to all you meet. Remember that the office staff is interviewing you the second you step foot into the building, and their opinions are very highly regarded.

Make eye contact and have a firm handshake! Pay attention and be engaging. Let the interviewer set the tone of the interview. Some interviewers will get right to business and start asking questions right away while others will engage in casual conversation first. Err on the side of being too formal versus too casual.

Remember to ask questions if you are given the opportunity. Thank them for their time and consideration at the end and express your interest in the position and employer one more time before you leave.

AFTER THE INTERVIEW

Follow up with hand written thank you cards to every interviewer. If you know your handwriting is very messy, it is okay to send a typed (but hand signed) thank you letter. You should only send a thank you via email if you know the hiring decision is going to be made within a couple of days. In your correspondence, you should mention something specific that was discussed or brought up with that particular interviewer so that the letter is more personal and you aren’t sending the same letter to multiple people. Chances are, they will compare them.

SAMPLE QUESTIONS THE INTERVIEWER(S) MAY ASK

- What are your perceived strengths and weaknesses? (The interviewer is hoping you will reveal a weakness. Make the weakness into a positive. You might suggest that you enjoy researching almost to a fault and find yourself reading on and on in various ways as you come upon interesting points. Now, however, you are training yourself to be more pointed in your research and sometimes you create “research maps” to help you become more focused, but also to have notes on areas that you may want to go back to later for interest.)
- Where do you want to be five years from now? or What are your long term career objectives? (The interviewer wants to hear that your goals and the firm’s are compatible. Base your answer in terms of wanting more responsibility, looking for challenges. Be specific in listing positive goals with some backup.)
- What starting salary would you expect? (Try not to give a specific number that you absolutely have to make. It is better to give a range and say something like, “I am hoping to make between $50,000 to $65,000 to start.”)
- What are your hobbies and interests?
- What qualifications that you possess will make you successful in the law?
- Why did you decide to go to C-M?
- Explain an accomplishment that has given you great satisfaction and explain why. (Your answer might include a project showing teamwork or individual work. Pick something about which you are enthusiastic. Describe only one situation but include aspects of leadership, scholarship, etc.)
- Give an example of your creativity. (This is a great opportunity to refer to your accomplishments.)
- If you were not to become a lawyer what would you do and why?
- Evaluate your law school career as preparation for the future.
- How would you describe your personality?
- What was the last 1) book you read? 2) movie you saw? 3) event you attended?
- Give an example of your leadership skills.
- Do your grades accurately indicate your academic abilities?
- Explain your school’s grading system. (Be prepared to explain the ranking system that creates ranks by class i.e., first year full time, first year part time, etc. If you do not understand this, come to the OCP and ask!)
- What was your most rewarding law school experience?
- Why are you interested in this firm? (Your answer might focus on one of the firm’s strengths or litigation areas, (i.e., “I would like to be part of a firm that does....”))
- Why should the firm hire you? What can you contribute to our firm?
- What are you looking for in a law firm?
What do you want from this firm?
Do you have outstanding job offers? Where?
What have you learned from the other attorneys you have spoken with today?

Remember: there are usually no correct responses to these questions, BUT do not answer them in one word. Show some enthusiasm, thought, and interest. Interviews are about you...no one can present yourself better. Be positive about yourself...and be sure to highlight those attributes and accomplishments that set you apart. Employers seek motivated, interested students who have researched and studied both the firm and their own career considerations.

Also, when an interviewer asks if you have any questions, always have at least two or three. If you say you don’t have any questions, this will likely be interpreted as a lack of interest in the firm. If you are interviewing with multiple lawyers at the same firm, you may ask the same question in different interviews. You will probably get different answers! See below for some ideas:

SAMPLE QUESTIONS TO ASK THE INTERVIEWER(S)

- What type of work will I be doing as part of the summer program?
- Will I receive feedback?
- Will I be working with several attorneys? In what areas?
- How many summer associates/law clerks is the firm planning to hire?
- How many associate offers do you typically make?
- Why do you enjoy working for your firm?
- I read in (Martindale-Hubbell) that your client base is....., is that basically correct? Are you looking to expand into other areas (such as e-commerce)?
- Do you foresee any major changes for the firm in the future?
- How would you characterize the firm’s culture?
- What is the hiring philosophy of the firm?
- Do you anticipate more lateral hires or do you still see a value in hiring new graduates?
- What is the firm evaluation/review system?
- How are work assignments handled? Do they come from one person, a partner, a group or from a section?
- Do you have a rotation system for the first several months for associates or do they enter the firm in a specific area of law?
- What type of evaluation is given to determine partnership and when is this done? (this question is more suitable for associate-level interviews)

DO NOT ask about compensation during the first round of interviews. When you do ask about salary, couple the question with the expected hours (for summer associates) or the anticipated number of billable hours (for associates).

PERMITTED SCOPE OF INTERVIEWS
All interviews should be limited to what is relevant to the job. By law, employers are not supposed to ask about certain areas of one's personal life—marital status, health, disabilities, or financial matters such as bankruptcy. You should be prepared, however for the rare instance when an employer may ask, directly or indirectly, about one of these areas. Please use careful judgment in how you answer such a question. Our best advice is for you to attempt to redirect the conversation back to traditional interview questions and answers. Please don't hesitate to contact us for further direction and advice if the case arises.

VIII. NETWORKING

Networking is an important part of any job search. Networking is relationship building. You shouldn’t be seeking instant gratification by engaging in networking opportunities. That is not what it’s about. Networking is a process. You should take the time to cultivate relationships with your contacts (old and new) in the legal field. Touch base with them, talk to them about what they do, ask questions, invite them for coffee periodically. If some of your networking efforts turn into a job for you right away, that is great but you need to be aware that the benefits of networking may not be seen immediately and may pay off in other ways versus just job opportunities.

Here are some useful tips to help you expand your network:

- Make a list of everyone you know who is connected in the legal field. Think of family, friends, professors, alumni, current or past employers, contacts from your undergraduate career.
- Set up informational interviews.
- Join organizations you are interested in, including student groups and bar associations.
- Attend events in the legal community. Look at the C|M|LAW and the CMBA event calendars.
- Create a LinkedIn account and use it in a professional manner.
- Send thank-you notes to people who agree to speak or meet with you, or assist in any way in your job search.

Think of everyone you meet at a potential employer, client, colleague, or referral.

Chief Magistrate Brown
Cuyahoga County Court of Common Pleas, Probate Court
1 Lakeside Avenue
Cleveland, Ohio 44113

RE: Summer Externship Application

Dear Magistrate Brown:

I am a first year law student at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and I am submitting my application to be considered for an externship this summer with the Probate Court. I believe I would be an excellent addition to the Probate Court based on my enthusiasm and dedication.

I was very pleased to read the amount of legal exposure externs receive with the Court. Last summer, I worked with an attorney who provided me with an excellent opportunity to shadow him and handle meaningful legal research. I was also afforded the opportunity to speak directly with clients and provide case updates. I learned that I am natural when it comes to handling clients and public matters and hope to bring that to the position this summer with the Court.

Enclosed please find my resume and writing sample from my first year legal writing class. If you have any questions or need further information, please feel free to contact me at 216.216.2161 or Betty.Boop@law.csuohio.edu.

Thank you, in advance, for your time. I look forward to the opportunity to interview with you to talk more about how I can be an asset to the Probate Court this summer.

Sincerely,

Betty Boop

Ms. Sally Walters, Supervising Attorney
Ohio Bureau of Workers’ Compensation
615 W. Superior Avenue
Cleveland, OH 44113

Dear Ms. Walters:

I am a second year law student at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and am seeking a full-time law clerk position in the summer and a part-time work schedule during the academic year with the Ohio Bureau of Workers’ Compensation. I believe I am an excellent candidate for this position.

Last summer, I was a legal extern with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. I worked closely with the judges in the Hearings Unit and had the opportunity to observe various court hearings and investigations. I handled research and drafting on a variety of discrimination claims and, on occasion, researched issues related to workers’ compensation. Because of this experience, I believe I would be excellent at assisting in scheduling hearings, reviewing compensation orders, and researching legal questions.

I will also be a legal extern this fall at the City of Sheffield Law Department. I anticipate learning additional skills at the Law Department that will increase my legal skills and make me an asset to the Bureau.

I have attached in my application my resume and writing sample. Please feel free to contact me at 216.216.2161 or Peter.Griffen@law.csuohio.edu. I appreciate you taking the time to review my application and I hope to hear from you soon.

Sincerely,

Peter L. Griffin

*JOB POSTING: The Cleveland Law Division of the Ohio Bureau of Workers’ Compensation has an opening for a Legal Intern to assist this busy state agency in all aspects of legal and procedural work in the area of workers’ compensation law. Duties include: scheduling hearings, reviewing compensation orders, researching legal questions and drafting motions. An interest in labor law and workers’ compensation is desirable as well as familiarity with Westlaw, Lexis, and other office computer functions. This paid position’s hours are 40 per week during the summer and up to 20 per week during the school year.

*Do not include the job posting in your cover letters. This is provided solely so you can see what job announcement the cover letter is responding to.
RE: “C|M|LAW Student Seeks Advice”

Dear Mr. Taubman,

I am a second-year law student at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law. I am very interested in workers’ compensation, employment law and medical malpractice law in the Cleveland area.

I know that you are an experienced practitioner and C|M| LAW alumnus and have recently made the headlines with a case that would potentially allow employees to sue for negligence even after receiving workers’ compensation benefits.

I realize you are very busy, but I would be grateful for an opportunity to meet with you to talk more about your areas of expertise and seek any advice that you might have for me as a law student searching for employment in this area.

Please let me know if you would be willing to meet with me and if so, what your availability is. I look forward to hearing from you soon.

Sincerely,

Dear Ms. Carlson:

I am writing to express my interest in joining the Real Estate team at Thompson Hine as an Associate. Katie Thompson, a partner in the Real Estate group and my long-standing mentor, suggested I apply for this position. I am committed to building a legal career in Cleveland, and I am confident that I would be an excellent addition to the Thompson Hine team because of my success in law school and solid work experience. I am graduating this May and am registered to take the July Ohio Bar Exam. Academically, I rank third out of 155 students, which places me within the top five percent of my class.

My skills and experience will allow me to immediately add value as a member of your Real Estate group. As evidenced by both my Law Review Note being published in the Fall 2012 issue and also by receiving the "High A" awards several courses in law school. I worked last summer at Kohrman Jackson & Krantz which allowed me to familiarize myself with a mid to large size firm and provided an opportunity to see first-hand what it is like to be a junior associate.

I have included my resume, writing sample and transcript for your review. Please don’t hesitate to contact me at 216-354-1576, or at jenniferkhansen@yahoo.com. Thank you for your time.

Best regards,

RE: “Katie Thompson recommended I contact you”

Dear Ms. Johnson,

Katie Thompson, my mentor at Thompson Hine recommended I reach out you based on my interest in corporate mergers and acquisitions. I am a third year law student at C|M|LAW and ranked number three in my class. This past summer while working Kohrman Jackson & Krantz, I gained practical experience in corporate matters and the experienced only reinforced my interest in corporate law.

I realize you are very busy but I would appreciate a few moments of your time to meet for coffee or talk on the phone to learn any advice you might have for a law student seeking to gain more exposure in the corporate law field.

Hopefully your schedule will permit a brief meeting and I look forward to hearing your availability.

Judge Patricia A. Gaughan
Carl B. Stokes United States Court House
801 West Superior Avenue, Courtroom 19B
Cleveland, Ohio 44113-1835

Dear Judge Gaughan:

I am a third-year law student in the top 25% of my class at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and I am interested in a judicial externship in your chambers for the fall of 2012. I noticed that you have both public and private sector experience in Cleveland and as a native of Cleveland myself, I hope to practice here after I graduate. I look forward to the opportunity to gain insight into the legal system from your perspective as Judge and to improve upon my legal research and writing skills.

I have excellent time management skills and attention to detail, as evidenced by my academic performance during law school. Further, I performed well in my Legal Writing and Research classes, earning the high “A” in the spring of 2011, and a B+ in the spring of 2012. I have also gained professional experience while in law school and have been exposed to many facets of the law. This summer, I am gaining legal experience as a law clerk at Javitch, Rathbone & Block where I have been able to excel in legal writing and research.

I look forward to the opportunity to work in your chambers and have included my resume, writing sample and transcript for your review. Please don’t hesitate to contact me at 440.444.4444, or at Cleveland.Brown@law.csuohio.edu if I can answer any questions or provide you with further information about my qualifications. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Cleveland D. Brown

Sara C. DePaul, Esq.
U.S. Federal Trade Commission
111 Superior Avenue
Cleveland, Ohio 44114

Dear Ms. DePaul:

I am writing to express my interest for a summer externship with the Federal Trade Commission. I am a joint-degree student at the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law and the Monte Ahuja College of Business at Cleveland State University. I am in the top 30% of my law class, and have earned a 3.9 G.P.A. in the MBA program.

I have ambition to work in consumer protection matters and am particularly excited at the prospect of being in contact with consumer victims and preparing their statements, performing research and drafting documents that will assist them in their cases.

Last summer as a law clerk with Ross, Brittain & Schonenberg, I had the opportunity to work closely with attorneys on a variety of labor and employment law cases and learned a great deal about client interactions, successful memorandum writing and research skills that will enable me to be an asset to your organization this summer.

I think you will find that I am a quick learner and eager to take on anything that comes my way. Please do not hesitate to reach out if you need any additional information to assist you in making a decision. I can be reached at Glenn.Quagmire@law.csuohio.edu and 216.993.9939.

Sincerely yours,

Glenn Quagmire
RE: “Cleveland State Dual Degree Student seeking advice about JD/MBA”

Dear Ms. Henson,

I am currently a dual degree student at Cleveland Marshall College of Law and the Monte Ahuja College of Business at Cleveland State University.

My experiences while in school have focused mostly on my JD degree until this point and I would like to explore other opportunities where the MBA and JD could both be useful. I noticed that you graduated C|M|LAW with a JD and MBA and that you are currently a Compliance Manager at KeyBank.

I am wondering if you could take a few minutes to talk with me about your career path with the dual degree and any career related suggestions you might have for me to proceed.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Glenn Quagmire

CURRENT STUDENTS

Student Organizations

C|M|LAW has a diverse group of student organizations for a diverse population of students. Student organizations are a great way for students to serve the law school and the Cleveland community, grow personally and professionally, and network with attorneys and other persons who provide legal services. Every year our student organizations change depending upon the interest level of our students; some grow, some become inactive, and new organizations develop. The faculty and staff are here to help organizations thrive and achieve their missions.

For more information about our student organizations please review the list of all currently authorized student organizations provided below or contact Associate Dean Mark Sunday.

American Constitution Society for Law and Policy (ACS) [website]

The American Constitution Society for Law and Policy (ACS) is one of the nation’s leading progressive legal organizations. Founded in 2001, ACS is a rapidly growing network of lawyers, law students, scholars, judges, policymakers and other concerned individuals. Our mission is to ensure that fundamental principles of human dignity, individual rights and liberties, genuine equality, and access to justice enjoy their rightful, central place in American law. Cleveland-Marshall’s ACS Student Chapter furthers dialogue on constitutional philosophy and collaborates with the Northeast Ohio Lawyers Chapter, which recently won the ACS Chapter of the Year Award.

Asian Pacific Islander Law Student Association (APILSA)

The APILSA was formed to address the concerns of Asian students as well as to provide support to its members. APILSA welcomes and encourages all students to participate in the many events sponsored by APILSA through the year. Many of these events are aimed at educating persons to the many issues facing Asian Americans. APILSA also offers a forum for its members to meet Asian American lawyers working in the Cleveland area through its guest speaker series and through its close ties with the Asian American Bar Association of Ohio.

For more information contact Ka Lee or Shao Wang (co-presidents)

Black Law Student Association (BLSA) [website]

BLSA is a national organization with chapters at law schools across the country. The C-M chapter of BLSA sponsors and co-sponsors various educational and social events throughout the year. Our biggest event is the BLSA Scholarship Banquet, which is held every year in April. Although BLSA’s primary purpose is to provide assistance in preparation and retention of African-American law students, BLSA membership is open to all students.

For more information contact Brandon Cox (president)

Business Law Association

The Business Law Association is dedicated to providing students with an understanding of the intimate relationship between business practices and legal application. For students intending to practice corporate law or join a corporate institution, or for students who possess an entrepreneurial spirit, the Business Law Association is devoted to exposing students to this interdisciplinary relationship. Please join us as we seek to prepare students to be future leaders in the business and legal community.

For more information contact Zachariah Germaniuk (president)

Canadian Law Student Association (CLSA)

CLSA represents the interests of prospective and current Canadian students at the law school. Canadians applying for admission to the law school are encouraged to contact the CLSA for answers to various questions they are encountering. CLSA seeks to be an information source for Canadian students and provide assistance with respect to course selections, housing, visa issues, health insurance, employment, and getting licensed to practice law in the United States and various Canadian provinces. Additionally, CLSA serves as a liaison between the law school and Canadian students. During the school year, CLSA hopes to organize information forums, and invite speakers to talk about important aspects of US-Canada law practice.

The Catholic Lawyers Guild

The Catholic Lawyers Guild fosters spiritual growth and fellowship within the legal community, encourages observance of high ethical standards, and calls attention to legal and societal issues that affect morality, justice, and faith. The Guild is affiliated with the Lawyer’s Guild of the Catholic Diocese of Cleveland and sponsors speaker events as well as social and volunteer opportunities.

For more information contact Heather Cigoit (president)

Christian Legal Society (CLS)

The Christian Legal Society provides law students with an opportunity for fellowship and spiritual growth through prayer, Bible study, mutual support, get-togethers, speaker events, and volunteer work. Our purpose is to integrate our faith with our life as law students, and ultimately, our faith with our future profession. "Don’t lose Christ in the footnotes" is our motto.

Cleveland-Marshall ALLIES [website]

CM ALLIES is a social and political student organization dedicated to serving the lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender (LGBT) community at the Cleveland-Marshall School of Law. ALLIES sponsors speakers, events, and panel discussions on legal issues that affect the LGBT communities. Additionally, ALLIES provides a forum for social and professional interaction by hosting social events for CM students. Reformed in Fall of 2008, the ALLIES mission is to provide a welcoming environment for LGBT law students and faculty, and a voice for issues that are specific to the LGBT community both within the law school and the greater legal community. We welcome all LGBT students and straight allies to join our email list, and to become a part of CM ALLIES.

Cleveland State Law Review [website] ([academic/curriculum/studentpublications/lawreview])

The Cleveland State Law Review is a journal with a proud tradition. Four times each year, the Law Review publishes articles of both local and national significance. Students may be invited to join the Law Review as an Associate member at the end of their first year by either class ranking in the top ten percent or by successfully competing in a writing contest during the summer following their first year. Students in the evening division may choose to wait until the summer following their second year to enter the writing competition.

During the first year of Law Review participation, Associate members take part in the editorial work of the Law Review and produce a comprehensive Note on a topic of their choice. A select number of Notes are published in the Law Review the following year. Successful completion of the Note may also satisfy the upper level writing requirement.

Dual Degree Law Students Association

DDSA is an organization for those students that are enrolled in a dual degree program (JD/MPA, JD/MBA, JD/MAES, JD/MSES, and JD/MUPDD) or are interested in doing so. The purpose of DDSA is to advocate for the interests of dual degree students and assist with knowledge and information regarding the dual degree programs whenever it can.

Employment and Labor Law Association (ELLA)

Employment and Labor Law Association (ELLA) is a student organization formed to meet the strong interest in employment and labor issues at Cleveland-Marshall. Founded in 2004, this group is supplementary to the ongoing success of the faculty's Employment and Labor Law Group, which hosts a stimulating lecture series each year. ELLA sponsors employment and labor law themed "movie nights," wherein a movie or documentary is viewed followed by a discussion of the issues presented. ELLA annually contributes to Multiple Sclerosis, and other such degenerative diseases that bring rise to ADA related claims. ELLA also offers specialized networking opportunities through its participation with the labor and employment section of the Cleveland Bar Association. ELLA is a non-partisan organization and respects both the labor and management perspective.

Moot Court

The Cleveland-Marshall Moot Court program is an organization designed to provide students the opportunity to develop, refine, and showcase brief-writing and appellate advocacy skills. All students are eligible to compete for a position on the team at the end of their first year by submitting their final Legal Writing course paper. Submissions are reviewed anonymously by the Moot Court Board of Governors, and selected students then participate in an intramural competition. Second year students also have an opportunity to compete in an intramural competition to join the team after completion of the Advanced Brief Writing course. Once a member of the team, students compete in intercollegiate competitions against other teams from across the nation. The award-winning Cleveland-Marshall Moot Court team provides students the unique opportunity to obtain and develop real-world advocacy skills, both written and oral, while still in law school. Team members benefit from the advice and guidance of experienced alumni, faculty, and practitioners.

Student Intellectual Property Law Association (SIPLA)

The Student Intellectual Property Law Association (SIPLA) is an organization dedicated to representing the interests of students wishing to practice Intellectual Property Law. Intellectual Properties are products of the mind manifested as ideas, inventions, work of art, collection of words, and trade secrets. One of the many benefits of practicing intellectual property law is its ubiquitous nature. It encompasses the obvious fields such as the hard sciences but also fine arts, literature, and even baseball! Nearly every field in which you may have an interest probably has a need for intellectual property protection. Due to its wide-spread demand, Intellectual Property law is one of the fastest growing, highest paid segments of law. C|M|LAW Policy on Student Complaints Implicating ABA Compliance

A. Reporting a Complaint

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law wishes to hear any student concerns about significant problems that directly implicate the law school's program of legal education and its compliance with the Accreditation Standards of the American Bar Association (ABA). The ABA Accreditation Standards can be accessed here (http://www.americanbar.org/groups/legal_education/resources/standards.html). Any student having such a concern should submit a complaint in writing to the Ombudsman of the Student Bar Association (SBA). The complaint should state the facts that form the basis for the complaint and how the matter implicates the law school's program of legal education and its compliance with the ABA standards. The SBA shall submit the complaint to the Associate Dean of Administration no later than 10 business days after its date of submission by the complainant and shall notify the complainant of the submission. If the complainant has not received notification after 10 business days following submission of the complaint, the complainant may submit the complaint directly to the Associate Dean for Administration. Please see the SBA Complaint Policy which can be accessed here: https://www.law.csuohio.edu/printmail/currentstudents/sba_complaint_policy.pdf.

B. Resolving the Complaint

When a written complaint has been submitted to the Associate Dean of Administration in accordance with Section A, the Associate Dean for Administration shall investigate as soon as possible, but in no event later than 20 business days after the submission of the written complaint to the Associate Dean for Administration. The Associate Dean for Administration shall attempt to resolve the complaint, if possible, within the 20 business day period. If resolution is not possible, the Associate Dean for Administration may refer the matter to the appropriate administrator, administrative body, or an administrative official designated by the Dean (the "Dean's designee"). If referral of the complaint is made as referenced above, the administrator, administrative body or Dean's designate shall attempt to resolve the complaint as soon as possible, but in no event later than 20 business days after referral by the Associate Dean for Administration. Upon completing the investigation of the complaint, the law school shall communicate its findings and, if appropriate, its intended actions to the complainant and the SBA.

C. Appeal Process

If the complainant is dissatisfied with the outcome or resolution, the complainant has the right to appeal the decision to the Dean of the law school. The complainant should submit his/her appeal in writing in a timely manner to the Dean of the law school, but in no case more than 10 business days after communication to the complainant of the findings of the investigation. The Dean's decision shall be communicated to the complainant and the SBA within 20 business days of the submission of the appeal and the Dean's decision shall be final.

D. Maintaining a Written Record of the Complaint

The law school shall maintain a complete written record of each complaint submitted to the Associate Dean for Administration which shall contain a statement of the facts and an explanation of how the complaint was investigated and resolved. This record shall be maintained by the law school in a confidential manner for five years from the date of final resolution of the complaint.

E. Protection against Retaliation

The law school prohibits retaliation by a faculty member, administrator, staff employee, or student against any student who makes a complaint under this Policy.

Our Annual Report on Improving Cleveland-Marshall’s Bar Passage Rates is attached for your consideration. We thank you for the support you have provided the College of Law on this important initiative. We also look forward to continuing to work with you to make the law school and the university even stronger institutions of higher learning than they are today.

I. Introduction

A. The Call to Action

Cleveland-Marshall College of Law developed its Action Plan for Improving CSU Bar Passage Rates (the “Action Plan”) in the summer and fall of 2003. The law school faculty approved the Action Plan at its November 20, 2003 faculty meeting. President Schwartz and Provost Kuo approved the plan at a meeting on December 9, 2003. The Action Plan was presented to the CSU Board of Trustees at the February 25, 2004 meeting. Implementation began immediately and continues today. C|M’s continued commitment to the Action Plan is reflected in its Strategic Plan unanimously approved in 2007.1

Although C|M had implemented various strategies to help improve our graduates’ bar passage performance in the years preceding adoption of the Action Plan, the Action Plan represented a much more ambitious and comprehensive approach. It was inspired by the Board of Trustee’s resolution (see Attachment 1) directing the President and Provost to work with law faculty to develop admissions standards and implement other aggressive strategies “which would place the College of Law in the top one-third” of Ohio’s nine law schools in bar passage rates.

B. Primary Components of 2004 Action Plan

The Action Plan required commitment and contribution from every member of the law school community including the dean, faculty, staff, and students. The primary components are as follows:

1. A reduction in entering class size by at least 10 students per year over five years, beginning with an entering class of not more than 250 students in 2004 with an ultimate target of 200 students in 2009;

2. An increase in the number of full-tuition scholarships for entering students by 10 per year over five years beginning with 10 full-tuition scholarships in 2004;

3. Fair and rigorous application of the full spectrum of grades by faculty in an effort to obtain appropriate attrition levels;

1 See April 30, 2007, Memo to Faculty and Staff from Dean Geoffrey S. Mearns titled “Strategic Goals and Tactics” (containing full text of 2007 Strategic Plan with introductory material that explains the collaborative process that culminated in the faculty’s unanimous approval of the Strategic Plan on April 26, 2007).
4. Preservation of our long-held commitment to diversity, our LCOP program, and the part-time night program;

5. The hiring of a bar support coordinator to develop and implement a comprehensive program;

6. The addition of a full-time admissions professional to help recruit a diverse and well-qualified student body;

7. Establishment of a permanent Bar Committee; and

8. Preparation of an annual review of our progress in raising our bar passage rate and a comprehensive status review of all aspects of the Action Plan three years after implementation (during the 07-08 academic year).

II. 2010 Updates to 2008 Implementation Review Findings

As required by the 2004 Action Plan, Cleveland-Marshall’s Bar Pass Committee provided annual reports to the university in 2004, 2005, 2006, and 2007 detailing our progress. In 2008, as also mandated by the original Plan, we conducted a comprehensive review of the Plan’s effectiveness. In work done throughout the 2007-2008 academic year, every component of the Plan was scrutinized. Extensive qualitative and quantitative data were gathered and analyzed. This exercise allowed the law school to assess the overall strengths and weaknesses of the Plan and to identify areas in need of additional support or fine-tuning.

C|M presented its 2008 Implementation Review to the President, Provost, and Board of Trustees in August, 2008. That report documented how, with the aid and support of the university, Cleveland-Marshall had made major advancements in every area outlined in the original Action Plan. The Review also identified areas of continuing concern. The key findings of the 2008 Implementation Review are briefly recapped in each section, followed by information from 2009 and 2010.

A. Bar Passage Rates Increased

The 2008 Review demonstrated that we significantly increased our graduates’ success on the Ohio bar exam relative to other Ohio law schools and in overall exam scores. More specifically, ninety percent of CSU law graduates taking the exam for the first time passed the July 2007 exam, tying Ohio State for second place out of the nine Ohio law schools. In February 2008, 95 percent of all first-time CSU law graduates passed the bar, ranking C|M fourth in terms of first-time exam takers and first in the state for combined first-time and repeat takers. On average, graduates scored 408 points on the pre-Action Plan (2002-2004) bar exams and 426 points following the Action Plan (2006-2007), for an increase of more than 17 points per graduate.
Update: Results of the July 2008 and February 2009 bar exams show that C|M has solidified its bar performance. On the July 2008 exam, Cleveland-Marshall graduates passed at a rate of 89%, ranking sixth among the nine Ohio law schools. On the February 2009 exam, C|M graduates passed at a rate of 74% and achieved a seventh place ranking. More recently, on the July 2009 exam, C|M graduates passed at a rate of 86% and ranked 6th among the 9 Ohio law schools. On the February 2010 exam, C|M graduates passed at rate of 90%, placing them 3rd in the state.

The bar passage rates for first time CSU graduates since we began implementing the Action Plan in the Spring of 2004 are provided below. July bar results are generally considered more meaningful than the February results, because substantially more applicants take the exam in July than in February. Accordingly, the data are broken down by February and July results.²

² July 2010 bar results will be released in October 2010.
B. Entering Students Credentials Improved

The enhanced effectiveness of our Admissions Department through the addition of personnel, revamping of operations, and redesigning of the content and distribution of promotional materials were well-documented in the 2008 Review. As a result of the improvements in our Admissions Department from 2003 to 2007, the median Law Student Admission Test (LSAT) score for C|M’s combined full-time (FT) and part-time (PT) entering class increased from 152 to 154, and the median UGPA increased from 3.25 to 3.34. For FT students, the median LSAT increased from 152 to 155 and the UGPA increased from 3.25 to 3.37. To put this improvement in context, a student with an LSAT of 153 in 2003 was in the top half of the entering class. By 2007, a 153 LSAT score would put the student in the bottom quartile. As anticipated when the Action Plan was adopted, other Ohio law schools have employed aggressive measures to maintain or increase the credentials of their entering classes during this same time period.

Update: Cleveland-Marshall continued to improve the quality of each entering class for the classes of 2008 and 2009. For the 2008 entering class, the median FT LSAT increased to 156 and the median UGPA was 3.38. For the PT class, the median LSAT was 152 and the median UGPA was 3.30. For the 2009 entering class, the median FT LSAT remained at 156, and the median UGPA increased to 3.46. For the PT class, the median LSAT increased to 155 and the median UGPA increased to 3.44. Data for the 2010 entering class looks promising, but we will not have final numbers on that class until mid-fall.

In 2009, Cleveland-Marshall admitted more students with higher credentials than it had in the past. From 1998 through 2008, there were more applicants with LSAT scores at or below 139 (on a scale of 120-180) than applicants with LSAT scores at or above 160. In 2009, the number of applicants with LSAT scores at or above 160 exceeded those at or below 139. The number of applicants with LSAT scores between 157 and 159 increased 50% from 2007 to 2008, and another 11% from 2008 to 2009. The number of applicants with LSAT scores at or above 160 increased 43% from 2007 to 2008, and another 42% from 2008 to 2009. Unfortunately, it does not appear that this trend toward growth in the top LSAT score ranges and reductions in the lower LSAT ranges will continue for the entering class 2010 class. At present, we do not know why this is the case, but our admissions staff will be looking at national data when it is available in the fall.

Continuing to improve our students’ entering credentials in both absolute terms and in comparison to other Ohio schools will be challenging. Other Ohio law schools have implemented aggressive admissions strategies, especially with respect to financial incentives for incoming students. In addition, applications to law schools dropped significantly over the past five years both nationally and regionally. This trend has not continued nationally, but we do not yet know about Ohio and the region.

C. Student Body Downsized

With continued support from the university, C|M reduced the size of each entering class from 2004 to date. In the fall of 2009, Cleveland-Marshall admitted 203 students, closely approximating the Action Plan’s goal of 200. We remain on target for an entering class of 200 this fall (2010). The downsizing strategy has also been employed by other Ohio law schools.

D. Scholarships Increased

Although we were not able to meet the ambitious goal of adding ten full-tuition scholarships every year until 2008, the 2008 Review concluded that we had significantly increased our total scholarship funds through reallocation of C|M resources, aggressive fundraising, and assistance from the university. In 2002-2003, for example, C|M expended just $890,120, which equates with $1,200 per FTE, in scholarship dollars. By 2008-2009, we increased total scholarships to more than $1.6 million, or $2,729 per FTE. While this progress is indeed impressive, it does not represent any ground gained compared to Ohio’s other public law schools. Ohio’s four other public law schools – Ohio State, Cincinnati, Toledo, and Akron - still outspend C|M’s FTE scholarship average by a 2-1 or 3-1 ratio. Moreover, as the charts below indicate, the gap between Ohio’s other public law schools and C|M in terms of scholarship dollars per FTE continues to grow.

Cleveland-Marshall makes every effort to maximize the use of scholarship dollars in attracting highly qualified candidates. Previously, C|M awarded four levels of scholarships: Academic—$2000, Collegiate—$4000, Barristers—$8000, and Dean’s—Full In-state tuition. Last year (2009), C|M gave scholarships in the following amounts: Academic—$9000, Collegiate—$10,000, Barristers—$11,000, and Dean’s—Full In-state tuition. Although the minimum LSAT score for a scholarship was 156 (2008’s median LSAT), limited awards of $5000 were given to students with an LSAT of 155 and an outstanding GPA. This year (2010), C|M used a formula combining undergraduate GPA and LSAT scores to determine scholarship eligibility. The four categories used in 2010 are Academic: $5,000, Collegiate: $8,000, Barrister’s: $10,000, and Dean’s: full in-state tuition. The minimum LSAT score for scholarship consideration is 156, and all categories require a minimum 3.0 undergraduate GPA. In 2009, eligibility for the Dean’s scholarship began at the 159 LSAT score level. This year, 2010, the standard was raised significantly, to 165.

Scholarship dollars have become even more important in recent years because C|M’s substantial law school tuition increases make C|M a less attractive option to prospective students than it once was. In AY02-03, an Ohio resident paid $10,543 a year to attend C|M as a full-time student. By 2008-2009, in-state tuition had increased to $16,764, representing a 63% increase over a six-year period. In-state tuition for 2010 is $17,049.50. The cost of textbooks and living expenses also increased substantially. In fact, housing, food, transportation, and books add about another $16,000 per year to a law student’s annual expenses. As a result, the average C|M student faces close to $100,000 in expenses over the three years of a C|M education.

4 ABA Report Backs 2009, Table F-2.
Finally, the law school is grateful that the CSU Board of Trustees approved a tuition increase, effective in the fall semester 2010 of 7%. Of that 7% increase, the Board of Trustees has allocated 3.5% to law student scholarships.

E. Bar Preparation Program Enhanced

Then-Assistant Dean Gary Williams was appointed C|M’s Bar Coordinator in the spring of 2004. His title and responsibilities have evolved over the life of the Action Plan. Until July 2010, Mr. Williams remained primarily responsible for the creation and administration of numerous bar-related programs including C|M’s three-credit-hour Ohio Bar Exam Strategies and Tactics (OBEST) Course, workshops for students on the Multi-State Practice Test (MPT), coordinating programs co-sponsored by C|M and a private vendor on the multiple-choice part of the bar exam, individual counseling of students, and many other related tasks. Mr. Williams recently retired and C|M alum Mary Jane McGinty has taken over as Director of Bar Preparation and Academic Support.

Data analysis conducted for the 2008 Review and more recently confirms that students who successfully complete Mr. Williams’s OBEST course and who participate in other bar programs have higher passage rates than their non-participating counterparts. The first chart includes all students, regardless of their LGPA. Looking at the data for the last nine bar exams, the passing rate for those who took OBEST is 89% compared to 79% for those who did not take the class. The difference in passing rates is even more pronounced for students with a LGPA below 3.0—those most likely to benefit from the class: 78% of students with a LGPA less than 3.0 who took OBEST passed while only 49% of students with similar LGPAs who did not take OBEST passed the exam—a difference of almost 30 percentage points.

1. Making OBEST Mandatory?

ABA Accreditation Standard 302 governs law school curriculum. In the Spring of 2004, the American Bar Association (ABA) lifted Standard 302’s ban on law schools offering a bar preparation course, but prohibited law schools from giving academic credit for the class. C|M faculty immediately approved a non-credit OBEST course as part of our curriculum. The following year, the ABA changed its Standard 302 regulations to permit law schools to offer a bar preparation course for academic credit. However, Interpretation 302-7 made clear that law schools “may not require successful completion of a bar examination preparation course as a condition of graduation.” C|M law faculty approved the for-credit course in the spring of 2005. C|M students may now earn three credit hours for OBEST (of the total 90 needed for graduation). The course is graded on a pass/fail basis and, of course, is not a graduation requirement. In 2008, the ABA repealed Interpretation 302-7, clearing the way for law schools to add a bar preparation course to their graduation requirements. This change sparked an inquiry as to whether C|M should require the course for graduation.

In the spring of 2009, the Bar Exam Committee considered whether to make OBEST mandatory for all students or for students with a LGPA below a certain level (3.0). The Committee conducted a survey of the 41 students graduating in May 2009 who chose to not take the OBEST course prior to graduation. Thirty-five students responded, a response rate of slightly over 85%. Approximately one-third of the respondents who did not take OBEST are not taking the Ohio bar exam. One graduating student reported that he was taking OBEST this fall and sitting for the February 2010 Ohio bar. Only one of the 21 respondents who will be taking the July Ohio bar exam without taking OBEST has a LGPA below 3.0. In fact, 17 of these 21 students have a LGPA of 3.25 or higher. As previously noted, the bar passage rate for students at 3.0 or higher is traditionally 90%. In addition, three of the six students who did not respond to the survey have a LGPA at or above a 3.25. The other three were below 3.0. Even if one assumes that all six students who did not respond to the survey will take the Ohio bar, only four C|M graduates with a LGPA below 3.0 will sit for the Ohio bar without having taken the OBEST course. Given the small number of students affected, the Bar Exam Committee recommended, and the faculty concurred, that C|M should not make the OBEST course mandatory at this time.

F. Academic Support Expanded

Students who struggle academically are likely to do poorly on the bar exam (and be mediocre lawyers). Therefore, C|M has expanded and refined its Academic Excellence Program (AEP) to provide academic support for first-year students. Run by Mr. Daniel Dropko, C|M’s AEP utilizes highly motivated upper-level students as teaching assistants. Each TA leads a small study group drawn from each of the first-year sections (3 day and 1 evening) of Contracts, a required first-year course. In weekly meetings, the teaching assistants review and answer questions about the previous week’s class material and help students develop basic law school skills such as note-taking, outlining, case briefing, and exam writing. During the second semester, the study skills component diminishes, and exam practice is expanded. In addition to the weekly sessions, the TAs maintain office hours for two hours per week, in which they are available to any student or group of the students from the section. Mr. Dropko also offers seminars and workshops to help students increase their comprehension of substantive law and build the analytical skills necessary for law school success.

5 This includes the student who answered “maybe” but probably not.
1. AEP Success in First-Year Contracts

The data suggest that the Academic Excellence Program has assisted students in two ways. First, AEP participants outperform their non-participating counterparts in terms of their grades in Contracts. This year’s results were the strongest to date; students participating in the AEP program did remarkably well compared to their counterparts and reached a B- average. Second, it appears that the AEP is affecting students’ overall performance in law school. Learning skills acquired in the context of studying Contracts are helping students to increase their overall law school grade point average. Again, these data indicate that the AEP program had its most successful results in the last two years. Participants outperformed non-participants by an average of 6/10th of a grade compared to about a 2/10th difference in previous years. The following charts summarize differences between at-risk participants and non-participants in mean Contracts grades and cumulative first-year LGPAs for the past six years.

2. Expansion of AEP to Criminal Law

In the spring of 2009, Cleveland-Marshall experimentally expanded the Academic Excellence Program to another required, first-year course—Criminal Law, which is only taught in the spring semester. Mr. Dropko believed that it might be possible to reach a greater number of first-year students by providing an additional point of entry into AEP in the second semester. He recruited four Teaching Assistants to offer small group sessions for students in each section of Criminal Law and to maintain office hours for all members of the class. Although student participation in the program was less robust than in the Contracts sections, the program appeared to demonstrate success. Unlike the Contracts groups, where at-risk students were identified by test scores at admissions, the Criminal Law sections defined at-risk students as those with a first semester GPA below 2.7. Comparing participants and non-participants (all in the at-risk category), the following charts indicate that in both 2009 and 2010, AEP participants outperformed non-participants in Criminal Law grades overall (in 2010, 2.06 as compared to 1.74).

G. Increased Faculty Feedback and Support to Students

The drafters of the Action Plan intentionally refrained from suggesting that law faculty should change their materials or methodologies to “teach to the bar.” However, the Bar Exam Committee has worked closely with the Teaching Committee since the Action Plan’s inception, helping to organize and distribute information to faculty about the bar exam’s content and form, and encouraging faculty to incorporate that information into their classes as appropriate. Surveys described in the 2008 Implementation Plan of faculty indicate that faculty members are providing more feedback to students on exams and other exercises than was common prior to the plan’s adoption.

Beginning in the summer 2006, Bar Coordinator Williams coordinated a program, presented shortly before the July and February bar exams, in which faculty volunteers provided advice to CJM graduates on how to approach the essay portions of the exam. Most faculty members structured their presentations around essay questions given on previous Ohio bar exams, identifying for the students the most common subject areas emphasized on past exams and suggesting various strategies for answering bar essay questions. Participation by faculty members in this program has continued to be robust to date.

H. Attrition

The law school administration has been vigilant in reminding faculty of the importance of using the full range of grades so that students who do not have the aptitude for the study (or practice) of law are identified early and then provided with appropriate academic support or dismissed from the program. Faculty members are reminded semester of the importance of appropriately using the full range of grades.
Cleveland-Marshall’s first-year attrition rate has ranged from 9% in 2001 to 22% in 2003. The rate was 19% for the 2006 entering class, 15% for the 2007 entering class, and 17% for the 2008 entering class. Preliminary attrition data for the 2009 entering class is as follows: 8 students voluntarily withdrew, 7 were academically dismissed with no possibility of probation, 8 were academically dismissed but are eligible to apply for probation, and 9 students are attempting to transfer to other law schools. If none of the petitions for probation is granted and all students seeking to transfer are successful, the first-year attrition rate would be 32 out of 203 or 15.8%.

I. Traditional CSU and C|M Commitments and Values Maintained

When the Action Plan was proposed in 2004, concerns were raised that downsizing the class and increasing student credentials would inevitably erode our long-standing commitments to (a) minority students, (b) our Legal Careers Opportunity Program (LCOP), and (c) our part-time evening program. The 2004 Action Plan expressly affirmed C|M’s commitment in each area and the data analyzed in the 2008 Review confirmed that we kept true to our word. The 2008 Review also reiterated our promise to continue monitoring the Plan’s impact in these three areas, a promise which we honored throughout subsequent years.

1. Minority Students

C|M has never set quotas for minority enrollment. Nonetheless, maintaining a diverse student body has long been a core value of this law school and university. The hiring of C|M graduate Sandra English in April 2008 to fill the role of Coordinator for Law School Admissions/Multicultural Recruitment is further evidence of that commitment. Ms. English has allowed the Admissions Department to attend significantly more law school admissions fairs throughout the country and engage in other outreach efforts to prospective minority students. Those efforts were nationally recognized on June 5, 2010, when the Law School Admissions Council (LSAC) awarded its first ever “Diversity Matters Award” to C|M, citing the outstanding work C|M has done to encourage minority students to attend law school. C|M was chosen over 200 other US law schools vying for this prestigious award.

In 2008, Cleveland-Marshall admitted 30 students of color or 14.2%. This percentage compares favorably with 31 or 14.4% in 2007 and 33 or 14.5% in 2006. In 2009, 17% of the students were members of a minority group, with 15% in the full time program and 18% in the part time program.

2. Legal Careers Opportunity Program (LCOP)

Cleveland-Marshall enrolled 23 new LCOP students in the 2009 entering class. This is the largest LCOP class since 2004, and represents a proportionally larger percentage of the incoming class based on the reductions in class size mandated by the Action Plan. The median LSAT was 144 and the median GPA was 3.12. In 2009, eighty-six percent of the LCOP were students of color.

This year, Cleveland-Marshall enrolled 20 new LCOP students in the 2010 entering class. The 2010 LCOP class included 10 African-American students, and 1 Latino student. Eleven of the 20 students, or 55% of the class were students of color. Their median LSAT is 148, and their median UGPA was 3.06. The following chart demonstrates great stability in the LCOP program.

a. The 2008-2009 Evaluation of LCOP

In the fall of 2008, Dean Mearns appointed a Special Committee to Evaluate the LCOP Program and charged the committee to “evaluate and propose appropriate modifications to the current LCOP summer program.” The Committee gathered information from a number of sources, including a multiple regression analysis of data from traditional and LCOP students over the last decade, a survey of students who had comprised the 2008 entering LCOP class after they had completed one semester of law school, and the students’ teaching evaluations for the class for the last three years. The Committee also consulted with Professor Michael Hunter Schwartz, Co-Director of the Institute for Law Teaching and Learning, and several faculty members who expressed interest in teaching the LCOP course about their ideas for the class. The goal was to identify both the strengths of the existing program and the opportunities for improvement or refinement.

The Committee also considered a number of concrete proposals regarding LCOP: (1) whether we should adopt a conditional admission LCOP program, (2) whether we should expand the LCOP class to include some regular admission students, (3) whether we should change LCOP by altering the credit hours of instruction and/or the content of the course, and (4) whether we should offer a one-credit LCOP course in the fall. Following its investigation, the Special Committee recommended against a conditional admission program, changing the credit hours of instruction, and offering a one-credit LCOP course in the fall. However, the Committee concluded that LCOP should be modified by (1) increasing the substantive content of the course and making it more closely resemble a traditional law school class, (2) giving students in the LCOP course regular feedback on their progress in the substantive portion of the class, through quizzes or other types of feedback mechanisms, (3) supplementing the substantive portion of the course with a strong skills component, revolving around skills necessary to succeed in law school, such as case briefing, outlining, exam writing, and memo writing, and (4) coordinating and integrating the substantive and skills components of the course.
b. Update

These recommendations were implemented for the first time in the summer 2009 by Professor Stephen Lazarus and AEP Manager Daniel Dropko, who team-taught the LCOP class. Professor Lazarus and Mr. Dropko report that they were able to integrate skills exercises with the substantive law, and the students seemed responsive. The instructors indicated that they saw genuine progress on the part of many of the students in the LCOP class. In addition, they believe that the students have a solid foundation in the following areas:

1. Students have acquired a simplified, but fundamental acquaintance with reading case law, including some of the vocabulary of Civil Procedure (i.e., motions to dismiss, summary judgment). They have been introduced to how to read a case, at least at an introductory level.
2. Students are aware of the level of detail they need to absorb in order to do well on a law school exam.
3. Students know the structure of a "typical" essay exam answer.
4. Students have explored one small area of the law in depth (this year, the law of finders and of adverse possession).

Twenty-two students from the 2009 summer LCOP class completed the first year of law school. One student withdrew after the first semester for personal reasons, but has reenrolled for this academic year. Of the 22 who completed the first year, 4 were dismissed for academic reasons (GPS below 1.64) suggesting that these students had serious difficulties acquiring basic law school skills. The average GPA for participating students after the first year of law school was 2.275. If we remove the 4 students who were dismissed, the first year average for the group that remained was 2.44. One LCOP student finished the first year with a 3.57 GPA, and the next two were 3.07 and 3.03.

Two students dramatically improved their grades after the first semester (2.0 in the fall, to 3.0 in the spring, and 1.8 in the fall, to 2.9 in the spring) Our hope is that this improvement will mark a trend for these students.

3. Part-Time Program

Cleveland-Marshall has maintained its commitment to the part-time program since the enactment of the Action Plan. As the chart below indicates, CM has consistently enrolled between 28% and 32% of its class as part-time students over the last six years. Within the part-time category, however, a slight shift has occurred. More students are enrolling as part-time day students than as part-time evening students over this period. Looking at the 2004 and 2008 numbers demonstrates this shift quite clearly. In 2004, 25% of the students were PT evening and 5% were PT day; in 2008, 18.5% were PT evening and 12% were PT day.

III. Conclusion

With significant support from the university, the law school community has made important strides in implementing every aspect of our ambitious Action Plan. Although increased bar passage rates served as the original impetus, the many steps taken to improve those numbers have also increased the overall quality of legal education at C|M. While economic and other factors beyond our control will continue to pose challenges, we remain steadfastly committed to the Action Plan at C|M. We appreciate the outstanding support from the university over the years and look forward to our continued collaboration aimed at moving C|M from an excellent law school to an extraordinary one.

I. Introduction and Executive Summary of Implementation Review

This review of Cleveland-Marshall’s Action Plan for Improving CSU Bar Passage Rates (hereinafter, the “Action Plan”) is mandated by the Action Plan itself. Created and adopted during the 2003-2004 academic year to increase our graduates’ passage rates on the Ohio bar exam, this multi-faceted plan demanded significant changes in personnel, resource allocation, and operating procedures within a relatively short period of time.

Law faculty and administrators acknowledged that the number and nature of Action Plan components would make it difficult from an empirical perspective to identify the specific elements that most directly correlate with our graduates’ improved bar passage rates. Nonetheless, the urgency of the matter and the ineffectiveness of previous piecemeal strategies led us to conclude that immediate and extensive action was more appropriate than gradual implementation of Action Plan components. To balance the competing concerns of accountability and immediacy, the Action Plan called for annual progress assessments. The law school provided these annual reports to the university in 2004, 2005, 2006, and 2007. The Action Plan also called for a comprehensive analysis in 2008 to more closely scrutinize each element of the Action Plan to identify which components of the Action Plan are effective and those which need further examination and perhaps retooling. The ultimate goal of the 2008 review is to make necessary adjustments to the Action Plan to ensure the continued success of the Bar Pass program at Cleveland-Marshall (CM).

Law school personnel gathered and analyzed voluminous data for this report. The results are explained in detail in the following pages. In brief, the law school, with the aid and support of the university, has achieved the following in the four years since the Action Plan was approved:

• Increased our graduates’ success on the Ohio bar exam (a) relative to other Ohio law schools and (b) in terms of overall exam scores;

• Enhanced the effectiveness of our Admissions Department through the addition of personnel and revamping of operations and promotional materials;

• Reduced the size of each entering class, remaining on target for a class of 200 in the Fall of 2009;

1 Previous strategies included tutorial sessions for students experiencing academic difficulties and tightening of our Academic Standards related to probation and dismissal. These and other pre-2004 efforts to increase our bar passage rates are reported in Section II, Ongoing Efforts to Improve Cleveland-Marshall’s Bar Passage Rates, in the Memorandum proposing the comprehensive 2004 Plan to President Michael Schwartz and then-Provost Chin Y. Kuo on December 5, 2003.
- Improved the credentials of entering classes as measured in Law School Admission Test (LSAT) scores and undergraduate grade point averages;
- Increased scholarships available to entering students to attract more outstanding students;
- Expanded and refined our Academic Excellence Program to provide academic support for first-year and upper-level students;
- Streamlined the flow of information to law students about the bar exam;
- Supported students preparing for the bar exam by offering a for-credit bar exam strategies course, numerous workshops on bar related skills, and a variety of other programs;
- Revised the curriculum for first-year law students;
- Emphasized utilization by the faculty of the full range of grades to more accurately assess students’ academic progress and to achieve appropriate attrition rates based on substandard academic performance; and
- Continued to honor our long-standing commitments to minority students, to the part-time evening program, and to the Legal Careers Opportunity Program (LCOP).

While these achievements are important and substantial, a number of challenges remain. These are also discussed throughout the report and include the following:

- Applications to law schools have dropped significantly over the past four years both nationally and regionally, reflecting a trend likely to continue in the near future;
- CM’s total scholarship dollars still lag significantly behind the funds available at other Ohio public law schools; and
- Substantial increases in tuition over the past five years may make CM a less attractive option than in previous years.

II. Development and Implementation of the Bar Pass Plan

The Cleveland State University Board of Trustees approved the following resolution at its June 25, 2003 meeting:
RESOLUTION 2003-36
STANDARDS FOR ADMISSION TO THE COLLEGE OF LAW AND CURRICULUM REVIEW

BE IT RESOLVED, that the Provost and the President, with all reasonable speed, be directed to work with the faculty to establish admissions standards for the College of Law to include undergraduate academic performance, LSAT scores, and other appropriate criteria designed to achieve a passage rate of the Ohio State Bar Examination, which would place the College of Law in the top one-third of such colleges with regard to the bar passage rate annually; and that they inform the Board of Trustees of said standards, and that the Provost and/or the President report to the Board of Trustees on an annual basis the results of said standards with the goal of achieving the top one-third standard within five years.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that the Provost and the President are instructed to meet with the Dean of the College of Law and appropriate members of the law faculty to review curriculum and other support mechanisms for achieving the goal of reaching the top one-third standard.

In response to this resolution, then-College of Law Dean Steven Steinglass appointed an ad hoc law school Committee to investigate the challenges CM graduates face when taking the Ohio bar exam and to propose mechanisms to alleviate those challenges. The Committee explored myriad issues related to bar passage in the Summer and Fall of 2003. The Bar Pass Committee consulted with numerous constituencies within and outside the law school including faculty, students, alumni, and administrators; gathered significant data and information about Ohio’s other law schools; analyzed past efforts by the law school aimed at increasing bar passage; and reviewed literature and data on bar performance from experts who had studied the issue at other law schools. The law school community recognized the Trustees’s resolution not only as a challenge, but also as an opportunity to enhance the overall quality of legal education offered at CM.

Based on the information gathered from all these sources, the Bar Exam Committee brought forth eight resolutions for faculty consideration. The faculty’s approval of these resolutions in November 2003 created the comprehensive, multi-year “Action Plan for Improving CSU Bar Passage Rates.” Committee members and Dean Steinglass presented the Action Plan to the President and Provost in December 2003 and to the Board of Trustees in February 2004. With university support, the law school began implementing the Action Plan in early 2004.

III. Components of the Bar Pass Action Plan

The Action Plan contained numerous critical components. These included (1) adding bar support, academic support, and admissions personnel; (2) reducing the entering class for the next five years with the goal of 200 entering students in 2009; (3) adding 10 full scholarships every year for five years and re-evaluating the best use of our scholarship dollars; (4) achieving and maintaining an appropriate academic attrition rate; (5) retaining our commitment to a diverse student body, our LCOP program, and the part-time night program; and (6) establishing a standing Bar Pass Committee to monitor implementation of the Action Plan.

The Action Plan also delegated numerous tasks to various law school committees and administrators who possessed expertise and had jurisdiction over various components of the Action Plan. Committees were instructed to give these assignments highest priority. For example, the Admissions Committee was charged with monitoring the reduction of the size of entering classes, increasing strategic use of scholarship dollars, and making recommendations for strengthening student recruitment efforts. The Curriculum Committee was charged with examining the efficacy of changes the law school had made to the first-year curriculum several years earlier and making recommendations as to whether additional adjustments were needed. The Cleveland-Marshall Fund Committee was asked to re-examine income allocation to make more money available to student scholarships. The Teaching Committee was directed to survey professors about the type of feedback and testing they used to assess student comprehension of the material and provide support for teachers who wanted to incorporate more bar-type testing mechanisms into their classes. The initial deadline for some of these tasks was the end of the 2004 academic year. Many committees and administrators, however, have continued to focus on their respective aspects of the Action Plan.

As more fully explained below, each aspect of the Action Plan has been vigorously advanced by the law school with the aid and cooperation of the university. The law school reiterated its commitment to improving graduates’ bar passage rates in the Strategic Plan unanimously approved by the faculty in April 2007.² Goal #1 of the 2007 Strategic Plan is to “Substantially improve our graduates’ first-time bar passage rate on the Ohio State Bar Exam” and the primary tactic identified to achieve that goal is to “Continue the implementation of the Bar Passage Plan approved by the faculty on November 20, 2003.”³

IV. Status and Effectiveness of Components

A. Overall Improvement of Bar Pass Rates

Implementation of the Action Plan has resulted in significant improvements in our graduates’ performance on the bar, whether measured in relationship to other Ohio law school’s passage rates or the average scores achieved by our graduates on the exam. Both metrics are discussed below.

1. Relative Rankings

Due to the continued support of the President, Provost, and Trustees, and the unrelenting effort of virtually every member of the law school community, CM has stayed on task with the timely implementation of each component of the Action Plan. The effectiveness of these collective efforts is evident in our graduates’ outstanding performance on the two most recent bar exams administered in July 2007 and February 2008. These data are especially weighty because graduates taking these two bar exams represent the first classes to enroll after the Action Plan was adopted in 2004.

Ninety percent of CSU law graduates taking the exam for the first time passed the July 2007 exam, tying Ohio State for second place out of the nine Ohio law schools. In February 2008, 95 percent of all first-time CSU law graduates passed the bar. That performance ranked CM fourth in terms of first-time exam takers and first in the state for combined first-time and repeat takers.

The bar passage rates for first time CSU graduates and the relative state rank of each performance since we began implementing the Action Plan in the Spring of 2004 are provided below. July bar results are generally considered more meaningful than the February results, because substantially more applicants take the exam in July than in February. Accordingly, the data below is broken down by February and July results.

4 In bar exams administered between July 1997 and July 2003, the percentage of CSU graduates who passed the bar exam on the first try ranged from 53 to 75 percent. Based on these passage rates, CSU ranked between fifth and ninth place among Ohio’s nine law school during this time frame.

5 For example, 494 persons sat for the Ohio bar in February 2007, compared with 1,251 in July 2007. In February 2006, 545 persons took the Ohio exam, compared with 1,290 in July of that year. In addition, the February bar pass numbers are generally lower statewide due to the number of exam takers who have failed the previous July exam and are likely to fail on multiple attempts. For Ohio bar exams given in February 2007 and February 2006, for example, the combined passage rate for first time and repeat takers was 64% and 63% respectively. In contrast, the combined passage rates for bars given in July 2007 and 2006 was 81.3% and 78%.

6 July 2008 bar results will be released in October 2008.
As the above statistics show, success did not immediately follow the enactment of the Action Plan. This delay in improvement was anticipated. Although implementation began in the Spring of 2004, it was clear that the Action Plan’s benefits might take several years to realize. This is because graduates taking the bar exam in 2004 entered law school in 2001 or earlier; our 2005 bar exam takers commenced their legal education in 2002 or earlier.7 As a result, the 2004 and 2005 graduating classes were exposed to just a few components of the Action Plan toward the end of their law school careers. In contrast, the majority of the class taking the July 2007 exam began law school in 2004 and experienced most of the comprehensive program in effect today. (See Chart 1, which is attached, for additional data on CSU’s bar performance in relation to other Ohio law schools from 1997 to the present.)

2. Increased Scores of CM Graduates

Although the Trustees’ mandate required improving our bar pass rate relative to other Ohio law schools, the degree to which our comprehensive Action Plan has improved our graduates’ individual performances on the bar exam is also noteworthy. This is a key consideration because the Supreme Court of Ohio has complete discretion in setting the score necessary to pass the exam. Increased passing scores give the school a margin of safety in the event the passing score is raised.8 And while the relative bar exam performance of CM compared to other schools is important in terms of recruiting new students and faculty, fundraising, and boosting institutional morale, it is a somewhat capricious measure of success. The fickle nature of the relative ranking among Ohio’s nine law schools is demonstrated by the dramatic change in rank based on the performance of a handful of graduates and on the total number of graduates taking the exam from each of the Ohio schools.

The impact of a few graduates’ performance on relative rankings is evidenced by CM’s fourth place finish on the February 2008 bar exam. CM finished fourth out of the nine Ohio law schools despite achieving its highest percentage (95%) of first-time takers in at least the past 22 bar exams.9 Even though 35 of the 37 CM graduates who took the February 2008 bar passed, three schools ranked ahead of CM due to 100% passage rates. Of the three schools that outperformed CM on a percentage basis, Ohio State had just seven graduates taking that bar, Ohio Northern had four, and Cincinnati had three. If, however, just two more CM graduates passed that exam, CM would have been in a four-way tie for first place. Alternatively, if one student from each of those schools had failed, CM’s 95% pass rate would have constituted a first-place finish.

Although many more graduates took the bar exam in July 2007 than February 2008, the same pattern of a very few graduates determining the relative rankings emerged. In that exam, Ohio Northern took first place with a 95% first-time takers pass rate, CM tied Ohio State for second place at 90%, Capital took fourth place with an 89%, Cincinnati, Dayton, and Toledo all tied at 88% for fifth (through seventh) place, Akron was eighth at 85%, and Case ranked ninth at 7 Full-time law students usually finish law school in three academic years. Part-time students finish in four or more years.

8 In July 1996, the Supreme Court of Ohio raised the number of points required to pass the Ohio Bar Examination from 375 to 385; in July 1997, the Court raised the passing score to 405.
9 See Chart 1 for data on the 22 exams administered from 1997 to February 2008.
83%. But if just four more of CM’s 122 first-time takers had failed (i.e. 106 rather than the 110 who passed), CM’s overall rate would have dropped to 87%, and our relative ranking from second to seventh place.

Similar analyses of Ohio bar exam results from previous years confirm the phenomenon that just a few graduates’ success or failure has major ramifications for the relative rankings of the law schools, with the situation being compounded by the disparate number of exam takers from each school. This pattern suggests that we may want to evaluate the effectiveness of the Action Plan based on additional criteria, and not just relative rankings based on our graduates’ collective performance on each exam.

In sum, the overall increase in our graduates’ bar exam scores is an important indicator of change effectuated through implementation of the Action Plan. The following chart demonstrates the improvement in average scores of our graduates (combined 1st time and repeat takers) on the Ohio bar from 2002 to present.¹⁰

(increase of 16.73 points)  (increase of 18.38 points)

If one compares the mean scores that CM graduates received on the Ohio bar exam in the three years preceding and the two years following implementation of the Action Plan, the difference is striking. On average, graduates scored 408 points on the pre-Action Plan (2002-2004) bar exams and 426 points following the Action Plan (2006-2007), for an increase of more than 17 points per graduate. The differences are greater for the July exams; the mean score for the 2002-2004 exams was 418 points and the mean score for the 2006-2007 exams was 436 points, yielding an increase of more than 18 points. The February bar exams for the same comparison periods showed an increase of more than 16 points.

In addition to meeting our primary goal of improving bar passage scores and relative ranking vis-a-vis other Ohio law schools’ performance on the bar exam, implementation of the Action Plan has strengthened the overall academic support and educational experience of CM students. These advancements are discussed throughout the remainder of this report.

B. Law School Admissions: Changes, Effectiveness, and Impact

The Admissions components of the Action Plan contained three intertwined branches. First, the Action Plan called for the hiring of additional professional staff. The goal was to help level the playing field among CM and competing state law schools’ admissions departments. Second, the Action Plan required reducing the size of the entering class over a five-year period. The reduction was necessary because the number of law school applicants in Ohio and elsewhere waxes and wanes substantially over time, and CM has traditionally had one of the largest entering classes in the state. To increase the overall quality of the student body and to maintain the quality of entering classes in years when the applicant pool declines, the Action Plan reduced our entering class size to not more than 250 students in the Fall of 2004 and by an additional 10 students per year, with the final goal of an entering class of 200 students by 2009. Third, the Action Plan called for increasing the number of full scholarships by 10 each year until 2009.

11 In 2004, for example, 1,912 applicants sought admission to Cleveland-Marshall. Tracking a significant national downward trend in law school applications, CM applicants dropped to 1,796 in 2005, 1,723 in 2006, and 1,481 in 2007.
This increase was necessary because CM has historically had significantly fewer scholarship dollars available compared to other Ohio law schools, especially the Universities of Toledo and Akron.\textsuperscript{12}

The status, effectiveness and impact of each Action Plan component related to Admissions are discussed below.

\textbf{1. Admissions Personnel Changes}

The Admissions Department has been significantly strengthened since the adoption of the bar pass Action Plan. Christopher Lucak, an admissions professional with 20 years experience including five years as Director of Admissions at Case Western Reserve University (Case) School of Law, was hired as CM Assistant Dean for Admissions and Financial Aid in February 2007.\textsuperscript{13} Amy Miller, J.D., joined the department as Admissions Coordinator in April 2007. Ms. Miller had worked in undergraduate admissions prior to going to law school and was in private law practice when the law school recruited her as Admissions Coordinator. Sandra English, J.D., became the Coordinator for Law School Admissions/Multicultural Recruitment in April 2008. Ms. English was serving as a Cuyahoga County prosecutor when recruited for the law school position and had worked as a seasonal recruiter for CM while attending law school here.

Strengthening of the Admission Department had immediate results. Outreach and recruiting efforts have been intensified through extensive revisions to the CM Bulletin, Viewbook, Website, and other promotional materials. Mr. Lucak and Ms. Miller participated in more than 40 law school admissions fairs in the Fall of 2007 (prime recruiting season for the entering law class of 2008) and continue to participate in similar forums throughout the year. They have expanded the number of private visits to select undergraduate institutions, established and strengthened relationships with pre-law advisors at a number of colleges and universities, and have conducted numerous open houses and individual tours of the law school and university for prospective and admitted students. The Admissions Department is continuing to develop more precisely targeted direct mail campaigns, delivering key information to prospective students in hard copy and/or electronically at critical junctures in the admission process. The department has placed advertisements in Pre-Law and in Cleo Magazine (a publication aimed at minority students). Receptions for admitted students, including those who have not yet committed to CM, have been moved from the law school to prestigious law firms including Jones Day, Squire, Sanders & Dempsey, and Hahn Loeser & Parks, an arrangement that has impressed many prospective students. For the past three years, CM has hosted a Minority Recruitment Month Jump Start Program in which minority students from Tri-C, CSU, Lakeland, and local high schools are invited. The program provides information on law school preparation and the admissions process.

\textsuperscript{12} Additional specific steps for strengthening our admissions efforts are reflected in the tactics section accompanying Goal #2 of our 2007 Strategic Plan in which the law school affirmed its commitment to enhance “the quality and diversity of the student body.”

\textsuperscript{13} Mr. Lucak replaced Director Melody Stewart, who resigned the position after being elected to the Ohio Eighth District Court of Appeals.
Assistant Dean Lucak and his staff have ambitious plans to continue strengthening the admissions program. They are exploring more aggressive marketing of the part-time evening program and ways to increase the diversity of the student body in terms of race, ethnicity, age, and geographic location. They are also striving to create greater regional recognition of CM, initially targeting Pennsylvania, Indiana, Michigan, Kentucky, Illinois, and New York, with the ultimate goal of establishing a national reputation.

The restructuring of the Admissions Department and changes in personnel have had a very positive impact on law school enrollment. One of the most important measurements of any admission department’s effectiveness is its yield of desirable applicants, i.e., the number of students who accept the school’s offer of admission. For the classes entering in 2004 and 2005, 44% of the students accepted CM’s offer of admission; in 2006, 38% accepted. In 2007, however, yield was increased to 47.6%, CM’s highest in more than a decade. Other objective indicia of the Admission’s Department’s success, including the strengthening of the credentials of entering students, are discussed below.

2. Reduction in Entering Class Size

The law school matriculated 215 students in 2007, remaining on the course set by the Action Plan for a 2009 entering class of 200 students.

The intentional downsizing by CM parallels the state-wide trend. For example, Ohio State decreased its entering law school class from 269 in 2003 (the year before CM started implementing its Action Plan) to 202 in 2007; Cincinnati from 135 to 120; Case from 262 to 225; and Akron from 183 to 175. Among Ohio law schools, only Capital (at 243) and Case (at 225) had larger entering classes than CM in 2007.

As anticipated, the decrease in size has generally raised the LSAT scores and undergraduate grade point averages (UGPA) of CM entering classes. From 2003 to 2007, the median LSAT score for CM’s combined full-time (FT) and part-time (PT) entering class increased from 152 to 154, and the median UGPA increased from 3.25 to 3.34. For FT students, the median LSAT increased from 152 to 155 and the UGPA increased from 3.25 to 3.37.

14 The 2006 drop in yield was in part attributable to extensive turnover in Admissions Department personnel at key periods in the recruiting cycle.
15 Akron had previously decreased its entering class size from 228 in 2001 to 219 in 2002 to 183 in 2003. Toledo significantly downsized earlier than other Ohio law schools, dropping its entering class from 190 in 1999 to 140 in 2000. The reasons given by Toledo Law School Dean Closius for downsizing included increasing the credentials of entering students, creating a lower student-teacher ratio, enhancing graduates’ employment statistics, and raising the school’s bar pass rate. See Dean Phillip J. Closius, The Incredible Shrinking Law School, 31 Toledo L.Rev. 581 (2000).
16 The magnitude of this improvement is significant. An increase in one LSAT point translates into approximately four percentile points in the national pool of applicants who take the LSAT. Therefore, the increase from 152 (2003) to 155 (2007) translates into an increase in the national pool from the 53rd percentile (2003) to the 64th percentile (2007). We presently anticipate that the median LSAT score of the full-time entering class this year (2008) will be 156 – the 68th percentile of the national pool.
Increases in the strength of the entering classes can also be shown by comparison of the 25th and 75th percentiles, the most commonly used measure of a law school’s entering class, as reflected in the chart below.

In sum, decreased class size had a positive impact on entering credentials of full-time students measured by UGPA and LSAT standards. To put the degree of improvement in context, a student with an LSAT of 153 in 2003 was in the top half of the entering class; in 2007, a 153 LSAT score would put the student in the bottom quartile. The improvement is important because it indicates a class of entering students with a stronger aptitude for the study of law. This improvement also enhances the law school’s national reputation, because the entering credentials of full-time students are used for the U.S. News & World Report law school rankings.17

a) Comparisons to Other Ohio Law School’s Entering Classes

As anticipated when the Action Plan was adopted, other Ohio law schools have also employed aggressive measures to maintain or increase the credentials of their entering classes in this period of decreasing applications. These schools have generally been quite successful in this endeavor. Attached Chart 2 provides extensive data on the entering credentials of the nine Ohio law schools for the past 11 years. The chart provided below offers a snapshot of the relative strengths of full-time students matriculating at Ohio law schools in 2007 based on LSAT scores.

17 The U.S. News ranking system is subject to many legitimate criticisms. Nonetheless, this ranking system remains an important factor that prospective law students consult when choosing a law school.
As this chart illustrates, CM was sixth in a relative ranking of Ohio law schools’ 2007 entering class credentials as measured by LSAT scores. In comparison, CM ranked seventh of the nine Ohio law schools based on its 2003 entering class LSAT scores. These data illustrate that competition for strong students remains very high among the Ohio law schools.

b) Impact of Class Reduction on PT Evening Program

The impact of class reduction on the credentials of part-time students is less pronounced. Although UGPA is stronger in 2007 than in 2003 for students entering the part-time program, the LSAT scores have only increased slightly at the 25th percentile marker and have remained the same at the 75th percentile.

Several factors contribute to the lack of improved LSAT scores among PT students. The first is the general decrease in applications to the PT program. An approximate 50% increase in CM tuition over the past five years, paired with employers’ reduction or elimination of tuition-reimbursement programs for employees seeking advanced degrees, has contributed to this decline. Significant reductions in workforces at large employers who previously provided such benefits has also put additional burdens on the remaining employees, making it more difficult to fit law school into their schedules. Another key factor is that CM is, consistent with the nationwide trend, encouraging more students with weaker credentials to start law school with a reduced course load to improve their chances of academic success.

The Admissions Department is increasing its outreach to potential PT students. For example, Assistant Dean Lucak recently attended a forum sponsored by the Cleveland Clinic for employees interested in pursuing advanced degrees. The law school is exploring other ways to target select audiences of potential PT students whose goals and credentials are consistent with obtaining a law degree.

c) Impact of Class Reduction on Minority Enrollment

CM has never set quotas for minority enrollment. Nonetheless, maintaining a diverse student body has long been a core value of this law school and university. Accordingly, monitoring the impact of a reduced class size on minority students is a fundamental element of the Action Plan. It should noted, however, that data on minority applicants is hard to track with precision, as the number of applicants who chose not to disclose their ethnicity on law school applications at CM and other law schools varies from year to year.

18 Goal #2 of CM’s 2007 Strategic Plan identifies enhancing “the quality and diversity of the student body” as a core objective of the law school.
19 For example, less than one percent of all CM applicants for the entering classes of 2000 through 2003 and 2006 declined to provide ethnicity data, while 4.2% declined in 2004, 3.6% declined in 2005, and 11% declined in 2007.
Examining the four years since the Action Plan’s adoption demonstrates that CM’s commitment to recruit minority students has remained steadfast. Despite a 22.5% decline in total applications from 2004 to 2007, the Admissions Department increased the number of minority applications almost seven percent, from 493 to 526, during that time. The number of admission offers made to minority applicants increased 30 percent, from 117 in 2004 to 152 in 2007.

Measuring the impact of the Action Plan on minority enrollment is perhaps best illustrated by comparing admissions data for the four entering classes immediately preceding the Action Plan’s adoption (2000, 2001, 2002, and 2003) with the classes admitted since the Action Plan implementation commenced. As the data in the chart below confirms, in the four classes immediately preceding the Action Plan, minority students constituted between 11.5% and 18.5% of each entering class, representing enrollment of 148 minority students total. Since the Action Plan’s adoption in 2004, minority enrollment has ranged from 14.4% to 20.5% of each entering class, totaling 156 minority students during that four-year period. Thus, the percentages of minority students in each entering class has stayed in the same general range during the four years before and after the Action Plan and the total number of minority students enrolled has increased. Nonetheless, this data also shows that total minority enrollment has decreased from 20.5% of the entering class in 2004 to 14.4% in 2007, a situation we will continue to closely monitor. As previously noted, this effort will be aided by the recent hiring of Ms. Sandra English as Coordinator for Law School Admissions/Multicultural Recruitment, a job which entails significant outreach to minority applicants.

These data also indicate that enrollment has held steady in terms of enrollment of African-American students. For each class entering in 2000 to 2003, CM enrolled between 15 and 17 African-American students, averaging 16.25 students per year and totaling 65 students in all. From 2004 to 2007, CM enrolled between 12 and 19 African-American students each year, averaging 15.75 students per year and totaling 63 students.

For purposes of the analysis provided here, it is assumed that none of these students are minorities, but some of them may be.

For law school admissions purposes, minority applicants are defined as African-American, Hispanic, Native American, Asian, and others not of Caucasian ethnicity.
d) Impact of Class Reduction on Legal Careers Opportunity Program (LCOP)

The Action Plan embraces the commitment to opportunity that has long been a hallmark of this law school and university. Accordingly, the Action Plan adopted in 2003 and affirmed in the law school’s 2007 Strategic Plan\textsuperscript{21} called for closely monitoring the impact of downsizing on the Legal Career Opportunities Program (LCOP).

LCOP encourages applications from individuals who have encountered circumstances negatively affecting traditional academic indicators such as LSAT scores and/or undergraduate grade point averages (UGPAs). In most cases, applicants to the LCOP program have academic indicators that are a bit lower than those of regularly admitted applicants. The Admissions Committee rigorously reviews LCOP applications to evaluate the degree of adversity or unusual life circumstances that each applicant has faced, the strategies the applicant has used to overcome those challenges, and other evidence that the applicant can successfully manage the rigors of law school. Such evidence may be found in the applicant’s career and professional accomplishments, personal statements, letters of recommendation, graduate work, and/or significantly improved academic performance over a period of time. Admission to LCOP has historically been and remains highly selective. For example, of the 181 LCOP applicants for the 2007 entering class, 34, or 18.7 percent, were admitted.

Comparative data for students entering CM through the LCOP program for the four years preceding and the four years following adoption of the Action Plan is provided in the chart below.

* Because the 2008 entering class is not yet finalized, this percentage is based on an anticipated entering class of 210 students.

As these data demonstrate, the Action Plan has not negatively affected the LCOP program. The number of students admitted through LCOP as a percentage of each entering class has remained relatively stable throughout implementation of the Action Plan and entering median LSAT credentials of LCOP students have risen slightly.

\textsuperscript{21} See 2007 Strategic Plan, Goal #1, Tactic A(iv).
3. Increased Scholarships

Ohio’s other public law schools have historically devoted significantly more dollars to scholarships than CM. For instance, in 2002-2003, the academic year immediately preceding development of the Action Plan, Akron spent $1.5 million in scholarships, which equated to approximately $2,900 per FTE student; Cincinnati spent $1.1 million, or about $3,000 per FTE; Ohio State spent $1.9 million, or about $2,900 per FTE; and Toledo spent $1.6 million, about $3,900 per FTE. In contrast, CM spent $890,120 in scholarships, which equated to approximately $1,200 per FTE. Succinctly stated, all other Ohio public law schools spent more than twice the amount as CM per FTE in scholarship dollars.

Scholarships are critical because law schools often get into a bidding war over applicants with the best entering credentials, including those whose admission will increase the diversity of the class. The significant discrepancies between the scholarship monies available at CM and other Ohio schools necessitated an aggressive strategy. Accordingly, the Action Plan called for 10 additional full-tuition scholarships for entering students each year for five years, beginning in 2004 and achieving 50 additional full scholarships by 2009. Since the Action Plan’s inception, however, it has become clear that it is not the number of full scholarships per se that is important, but rather the total scholarship dollars that admissions personnel have available, paired with the flexibility to negotiate scholarship amounts with individual applicants. The scholarship data explained throughout this section also support CM’s continued downsizing efforts, as the reduced number of students overall will increase our scholarship dollars per FTE.

With the cooperation of the university, the law school has substantially increased its scholarship funds since 2004, but not at the ambitious level envisioned in the Action Plan. Scholarships have been generated from a number of sources, including increased fundraising from alumni, faculty and staff, students, and other donors, and reallocation of money within the law school to direct more dollars to scholarship funds. Due to these efforts, CM increased its scholarship allocation from $1,200 per FTE student in AY 02-03 to $2,266 per FTE in AY 06-07. (AY 06-07 is the most recent year for which comprehensive comparative data is available.) Total scholarship dollars were increased from $890,120 to $1,430,127 annually during that period.

While this progress is impressive, it does not represent any ground gained compared to Ohio’s other public law schools. Ohio’s other public law schools still outspend CM’s FTE scholarship average by at least a 2-1 ratio. The charts below illustrate the relative and absolute scholarship expenditures based on the most recent comprehensive data available (from the 2006-

22 Tuition varies slightly among the Ohio law schools but traditionally, CM has been among the most affordable of the state law schools. For students entering law school in the Fall of 2008, for example, tuition and fees for Ohio residents attending CM full time total $16,478 and $22,608 for nonresidents. Resident and nonresident tuition and fees for students entering other Ohio public law schools this Fall are as follows: Akron is $17,212 and $27,284; Cincinnati $19,361 and $33,764; Toledo $18,035 and $27,779; and OSU $19,232 and $34,516. The higher tuition and fees at other Ohio state law schools are, however, more than offset by the additional scholarship monies available at those schools compared to CM. See Chart 3 for comparative scholarship expenditures.

Toledo and Akron have been especially aggressive in using financial incentives to recruit strong students. A recent study reported in the National Law Journal identified the top 25 U.S. law schools based on the percentage of students at each institution who were awarded (1) full scholarships and (2) scholarships ranging from half to full tuition.27 Toledo ranked first and Akron ranked fifth nationally in terms of the percentage of students awarded full scholarships at each institution. This study also ranked Toledo fifth and Akron seventeenth in the percentage of scholarships awarded in the range of half-to-full tuition. CM was not mentioned in this ranking for reasons that become clear when comparative data are considered.

In AY 06-07 (the most recent data available), 14.5% of Toledo law students were given full-tuition scholarships plus a stipend and 5.3% of Akron law students received a similar financial package. In contrast, less than 1% of CM students were given a stipend in addition to full tuition that year. An additional 14.1% of Toledo law students and 12.2% percent of Akron law students were awarded full scholarships (but no stipend) in AY 06-07. Only 5.6% of CM students were given full scholarships that year.

Akron has further increased its financial attractiveness by substantially lowering the law school GPA necessary for scholarship recipients to retain their scholarships. Until this year, Akron required scholarship recipients to obtain a 3.3 GPA. Because law school is so academically rigorous, only students in the very top of their law school classes meet or exceed the 3.3 criteria. A low retention rate frees up scholarship dollars so that more money could be offered to incoming students.

Effective with the class entering this Fall, however, Akron law students will only need a 2.5 GPA to keep their scholarships. In contrast, students who receive full scholarships at CM must obtain a 3.2 GPA to keep their scholarship and students with lower-level scholarships must maintain a 3.1 GPA. Akron’s lowering of the GPA necessary for scholarship retention may prove advantageous in recruiting top students. Because lowering the retention standard has a huge impact on the overall dollars that a law school must devote to scholarships, and because CM is already disadvantaged compared to other Ohio law schools in terms of total scholarship dollars, we are not in a position to immediately lower our retention requirements in response to Akron’s decision. We will closely monitor the impact of Akron’s policy change before deciding whether our retention GPA will also need to be adjusted. This issue is just one that we will address as part of our continual assessment of the best strategic uses of our scholarship funds.

Finally, it should be noted that CM’s addition of scholarship dollars pursuant to the Action Plan has been offset by increases in tuition and fees. In AY02-03, Ohio residents paid $10,543 to attend CM as a full-time student. This year, CM students paid $16,478, representing a 56% increase over a five-year period. The cost of textbooks and living expenses has also increased substantially. Housing, food, transportation, and books add about another $16,000 per year to a law student’s annual expenses. As a result, the average CM student accumulates over $66,000 in school loans while attending law school. Prospective students are wary of taking on more debt than necessary to attend law school, and thus the amount of scholarship dollars available is becoming one of the most important factors when prospective students evaluate law schools. The continued tightening of the credit market due to the fallout from the nationwide home foreclosure crisis will undoubtedly increase the importance of cost in prospective students’ decision-making process.

For all of these reasons, it is critical that CM continue to identify and develop revenues devoted to scholarships. To date, the university and law school have worked toward this goal by (1) adjustments to the university’s internal budgeting and allocation process; (2) the law school’s internal reallocation of financial resources; (3) targeted fundraising for scholarships; and (4) freezing law tuition for this academic year (AY09). These collaborative efforts must continue.

C. Addition of Bar Coordinator and Academic Support Personnel

The Action Plan called for the immediate hiring of a bar support coordinator charged with developing and implementing a comprehensive program of educating students about the bar exam, aiding students in the development of skills needed to pass the bar exam (with special focus on weaker students), and addressing the unique problems faced by part-time students. As implementation of the Action Plan unfolded, it also became clear that academically challenged students needed support from the very beginning of their law school careers. As a result, the law school significantly strengthened its Academic Excellent Program (AEP). Details of these evolving programs and the data demonstrating their success is provided below.

1. The Bar Coordinator

Pursuant to the Action Plan, then-Dean Steinglass appointed then Assistant Dean Gary Williams as the law school’s Bar Coordinator in the Spring of 2004. As conceived by the Action Plan, the Bar Coordinator would be a focal point for bar-related activities at the law school and a standing member of the Bar Committee. During the period 2004-2007, Mr. Williams functioned as the Bar Coordinator, continued his duties as the Assistant Dean for Student Affairs, and taught the Ohio Bar Exam Strategies and Tactics (OBEST) course each semester. The intense time demands of being both the Bar Coordinator and Assistant Dean proved unworkable on a long-term basis.

In the Summer of 2007, the law school received permission from the university to split Mr. Williams’s duties into two parts and to hire an additional person in the newly created position of Manager of Student Affairs, essentially assuming many of the duties formerly assigned to the Assistant Dean.31 After one failed search, the law school recently hired an outstanding 2005 law graduate, Inga Laurent, to fill the Manager of Student Affairs position. At the same time, Mr. Williams became Director, Bar Exam Preparation.

a) Bar Preparation Course

In the Spring of 2004, the American Bar Association (ABA) lifted its ban on law schools offering a bar preparation course, but did not permit schools to give academic credit for the class. The law faculty immediately approved the non-credit OBEST course as part of our curriculum. The ABA changed its regulations a year later to permit law schools to offer a bar preparation course for academic credit, and in the Spring of 2005 the law faculty approved such a course. CM students may now earn three credit hours for OBEST (of the total 90 needed for graduation); the course is graded on a pass/fail basis. The law school offers OBEST in the Fall and Spring semesters each year. The enrollment is considerably larger in the Spring semester because most students graduate in May and take the bar exam in July.

CM’s OBEST course was designed and implemented by Mr. Williams. He currently enlists the aid of several additional instructors he selected and trained to provide more individualized attention to the students.

31 The Provost approved this restructuring in exchange for the law school’s permanent relinquishment of a tenure-track faculty slot.
Data indicate that the OBEST class has a significant impact on our graduates’ efforts to pass the Ohio State Bar Exam on their first attempt and that, over time, the course has become more effective. For the July 2007 bar exam, 96.3% of CM graduates who had taken the class passed the Ohio bar exam compared to 79.5% who had not taken it, more than a 16-percentage-point difference. For the February 2008 bar exam, graduates who took the OBEST class passed at a rate of 100% and non-OBEST graduates at a rate of 66%, an even greater difference. A similar pattern is seen in previous bar exam administrations.

Moreover, the OBEST class appears most helpful for graduates who have a law school GPA of less than 3.0. For graduates who have cumulative law school GPAs above 3.0, the passage rate of those who took OBEST and those who did not were fairly similar. For instance, on the July 2007 exam, the difference was 98% and 92%, respectfully. For graduates with GPAs below 3.0, the difference in bar pass rates was considerably greater—88% for graduates who took OBEST and 42% for graduates who did not.

A similar pattern emerges with an examination of the data on LSAT scores. Graduates who entered law school with LSAT scores below 150 who took OBEST passed at an 83% rate, while graduates with similar LSAT scores who did not take the class passed at a 45-54% rate. The differences in bar pass rates between OBEST and non-OBEST graduates diminished as the LSAT score increased.

All students are eligible to enroll in the OBEST course, and the law school especially encourages students with lower GPAs to do so. ABA regulations, however, prohibit law schools from requiring students to take a bar pass course.

b) Additional Bar Coordinator Responsibilities

Teaching the OBEST course and supervising the instructors who assist him are just two of Mr. Williams’ many responsibilities. In addition, the Mr. Williams contacts students at key times to alert them to a series of requirements and deadlines occurring throughout the multi-year bar exam application process, sends out other relevant bar information via emails and newsletters, counsels students individually and in groups, coordinates presentations from outside speakers such as Leann Ward, Admissions Manager of the Ohio Supreme Court Office of Bar Admissions, serves on the law school’s Bar Pass Committee, initiates and coordinates one hour course review and exam preparation sessions by faculty members on the 18 subjects tested on the Ohio bar exam, offers an eight-week bar essay writing workshop immediately prior to each bar exam and an eight week Multi-state Performance Test (MPT) workshop. Mr. Williams travels to Columbus in February and July to provide moral support, refreshments, and other needed items to graduates taking the bar exam. He also provides both oversight and makes many hands-on contributions to the Academic Excellence Program.

32 For the MPT, exam takers are given a file containing cases, statutes, memos and other sources that a practicing attorney would use, and are directed to draft a memo for another attorney, a motion or brief for a judge, or similar document based on the issues presented in the file.
2. Academic Excellence Program (AEP)

Bringing in stronger students and providing them with increased direction on how to prepare and take the bar exam are two of the primary tools CM has employed to achieve an outstanding bar pass rate. Providing academic support for students throughout their law schools careers is another key piece of the puzzle.

a) Background

In the Fall of 2002, then Assistant Dean Gary Williams started CM’s Academic Excellence Program (AEP). When Mr. Williams became the law school’s Bar Coordinator in 2004, Daniel Dropko was hired as Manager of the AEP. The structure of the program has remained the same during this time. Four Teaching Assistants, recruited from highly motivated upper-level students, each lead a small study group drawn from each of the first-year Contracts sections (3 day and 1 evening section.) (The Contracts course is one of the five core substantive subjects taught in the first year of law school and is a subject extensively tested on the bar exam.)

Student participants are initially selected based on their Law School Admissions Council (LSAC) Index scores. In general, index scores of 2.7 and below produce a sample of about 60 students, allowing the groups to remain small enough for effective study (usually 12 students or fewer). Each group meets once per week for approximately two hours. The Teaching Assistants review and answer questions about the previous week’s class material and help students develop basic law school study skills such as note-taking, outlining, and case briefing. Part way through the first semester, students are given practice exam questions that are reviewed by the TA. During the second semester, the study skills component diminishes, and the exam practice is expanded. In addition to the weekly sessions, the TAs maintain office hours for two hours per week, in which they are available to any student or group of the students from the section.

In the Fall of 2003, Mr. Williams instituted AEP II, a large-group session open to all students that meets once per week during the academic year. This program was in response to requests by many students not originally invited to participate in the small group program, but who wanted to participate in the skills activities. The emphasis in this session is on basic law school study skills and exam-taking techniques and practice. These sessions are still offered. Finally, Mr. Williams and Mr. Dropko engage in one-on-one counseling with individual students as needed.

b) AEP Success

The data suggest that the Academic Excellence Program has assisted students in two ways. First, AEP participants outperform their non-participating counterparts in terms of their grades in Contracts. (See below for a chart that summarizes the differences in Contracts grades between participants and non-participants for the past four academic years.) Second, it appears that the AEP is affecting students’ overall performance in law school. Learning skills acquired in the context of studying Contracts are helping students to increase their overall law school grade point average. The following chart summarizes differences between participants and non-participants in cumulative GPA after the first year of law school for the past four years.

c) AEP Expansion

In the Fall of 2007, the law school expanded the Academic Excellence Program to second-year students on an experimental basis. Mr. Dropko recruited three additional TAs to offer small group sessions for students in the three sections of Constitutional Law, a required second-year course. Although participation in the program was less robust than in the first-year Contracts sections, the program appeared to demonstrate modest success. The following chart indicates that participants outperformed non-participants in Constitutional Law grades.

D. Attrition

To assure that CM graduates are both competent to practice law and capable of passing the bar exam, the Action Plan called for faculty members to commit to apply the full spectrum of grades fairly and rigorously as established by existing Grading Guidelines (or other Guidelines that the faculty might adopt after further study). The law school’s goal was (and remains) achieving an overall attrition rate that reflects appropriate academic dismissals of students who fail to demonstrate sufficient aptitude for the practice of law. Our focus on achieving appropriate attrition rates resulted in modifications to both our Grading Guidelines and our Academic Standards governing academic probation.

But increased attrition is not an end in itself. It represents one tool among many that must be used wisely and monitored carefully as we continue to strengthen our bar pass performance and the overall quality of the educational experience of our students. As discussed in detail above, the law school has devoted significant resources to its Academic Excellence Program and other components of the bar pass program that offer extensive support to students with low entering credentials and/or initially poor academic performance in law school. For these reasons, the law school has declined to set specific numeric goals for attrition rates.

1. Changes to Grading Guidelines and Academic Standards

In direct response to the Action Plan, the faculty of the law school adopted new Grading Guidelines in 2004 calling for an increase in the number of grades in the D+, D, and F ranges, with a corresponding increase in the number of grades in the A, B+, and B ranges. In 2007, the faculty adopted revised Grading Guidelines that increase the number of grade categories from eight to eleven, without fundamentally altering the overall grade distribution. The 2007 changes went into effect in Summer 2008. One motivation for the additional categories is to allow faculty to more precisely assess students’ academic performance.

36 Participation by students in the third section of Constitutional Law was too low to permit analysis.
The law school’s Academic Standards have also been tightened just prior to and immediately following adoption of the Action Plan. Law students must maintain a minimum 2.00 GPA to remain in good academic standing. It is fairly obvious that seriously academically challenged students are ill-equipped for the intellectual rigors of law practice, and data indicated that they find it extremely difficult to pass the bar exam.

Effective in 2002, the law school set a 1.75 GPA as the floor below which students are dismissed without immediate recourse, meaning that they cannot seek a probationary period in which to reach the required 2.00 GPA. Also effective in 2002, students with GPAs between 1.75 and 2.00 were no longer automatically granted probation, but instead had to petition the Academic Standards Committee for a one-semester probationary period. Students who successfully petition for a probationary semester are dismissed if (1) they fail to reach the 2.00 minimum after the probationary semester or (2) achieve at least a 2.00 at the conclusion of probation but fall below the 2.0 cumulative GPA at the conclusion of any subsequent semester. The faculty revisited the Academic Standards following adoption of the Action Plan and in 2004 raised the threshold for petitioning the Academic Standards Committee for an initial probationary period to a 1.8 GPA.

Changes to the Academic Standards have affected attrition rates. Only a few students petition for probation each year, and only a few of those petitions are granted. The very small number of students who do file successful petitions for probation have all been able to achieve the requisite 2.0 GPA or higher at the end of the probationary period, often with assistance from the Academic Excellence Program.

2. Effectiveness of Increased Focus on Attrition

As previously noted, increased focus on attrition rates was initially inspired by two considerations. First, we predicted that our reduction in size and use of scholarship dollars would affect only some portion of the entering class and that attrition would be an additional means to achieve a stronger cohort that would ultimately take the bar exam. Thus, attrition was designed to complement our admissions strategy and further our long-standing goal of producing highly competent graduates. Second, our analysis of other Ohio law schools’ rates of attrition suggested that schools with similarly or better credentialed entering classes (e.g. Akron and 37 Academic Regulations are provided in the Student Handbook, available to students at http://www.law.csuohio.edu/currentstudents/handbook/. Regulations 5.1 to 5.4 govern academic dismissal, petitions for probation, and re-admission following dismissal.

38 Less than 30% of students who graduate with a cumulative GPA below a 2.5 typically pass the bar exam on the first try, and some never pass despite repeated attempts.

39 Any academically dismissed student may apply for re-admission to CM through the regular Admissions process not less than two years after dismissal pursuant to Academic Regulation 5.2(a). However, a student may petition the Academic Standards Committee for permission to reduce the waiting period to reapply to one year under Academic Regulation 5.3(a)(1).

40 Academic Regulation 5.3(c) provides that the Academic Standards Committee may grant petitions for probation only where a student demonstrates that he or she has (1) “experienced substantial hardship caused by extraordinary and unforeseeable circumstances, (2) the factors that contributed to the student's insufficient academic performance no longer exist, and (3) there is a reasonable likelihood that the student will attain a cumulative grade point average of 2.0 at the end of the Probationary period.” A Student may appeal the Committee’s decision to the full faculty under Academic Regulation 5.4.
Capital) had traditionally higher attrition rates than CM. To be competitive in terms of bar passage rates, we believed that our attrition standards should reflect a standard appropriate to our entering classes. We also recognized, however, that higher attrition rates were not an end in themselves, and that this aspect of the Action Plan might become less significant if we were successful in strengthening the quality of entering classes, improving the effectiveness of our Academic Excellence Program, and implementing other student-support mechanisms established or inspired by the Action Plan.

The overall attrition rate (including both academic dismissals and students who leave to transfer or because they get low grades) for first-year students during the five entering classes before the Action Plan became effective (i.e. entering classes of 1998 to 2002) ranged from 8.4 to 14.4%. In contrast, the overall attrition rate for the five entering classes since the Action Plan’s inception for which data is available (i.e. classes entering in 2003 to 2007) has ranged from 14.8 to 22.2%. Unlike other aspects of the Action Plan that have taken several years to fully implement, we were able to implement higher attrition rates during the 2003-2004 academic year while still devising the Action Plan. (For more detailed attrition data, see attached Chart 4 for comparative attrition data on first and second year students at Ohio law schools and Chart 5, focusing on first-year attrition.)

While these overall attrition rates suggest that the more vigorous grading has had the desired effect of dismissing students who are not well suited to the study of law, it is difficult to determine the impact of this aspect of the Action Plan. This is because we can identify the number of students dismissed each year for poor academic performance, but we cannot discern the number of students who left voluntarily due to low grades. A few students, usually those with very high grades, also withdraw after their first year to transfer to another law school.

With those caveats in mind, one year’s data appears especially instructive. In 2003, CM had its highest combined (i.e. academic and non-academic) rate of attrition at 22.2% of the first-year class. Three years later, when the majority of that class graduated and took the bar exam, CM ranked fifth of the nine Ohio law schools in bar passage. At that time, this fifth place finish was the best ranking result in several years. These data strongly suggest, but do not definitively establish, a strong correlation between dismissal of academically weak students and significant improvement on bar pass scores.

Focusing only on the data for academic dismissals, in the five years preceding the implementation of the Action Plan, CM dismissed an average of 12.8 students in their first two years of law school. Since the inception of the Action Plan, the average dismissal rate has increased to 18.6 students per year. Another data point that is of particular interest related to attrition rates concerns the entering class of 2004. CM academically dismissed 27 students that year. Three years later, CM had the second-highest rate on the July 2007 Ohio bar exam. These numbers demonstrate that, by maintaining high academic standards, we have positively affected our bar passage rates.

41 From 1998 to 2002, for example, five Ohio law schools realized higher yearly attrition rates than CM: Akron, Capital, Dayton, Ohio Northern, and Toledo.
3. Impact of Attrition on Minority Students

Minority students have not been disproportionately affected by our increased focus on attrition. Five minority students were academically dismissed from both the entering class of 2002 and class of 2003, the two years prior to implementation of the Action Plan. Five minority students were also academically dismissed during the year the Action Plan was being formulated (2004). Since then, two minority students were dismissed from the entering class of 2005, three from the entering class of 2006, and five from the entering class of 2007.

E. Curriculum

1. Pre-Plan Changes

Curricular changes developed and approved by the law faculty went into effect in the Fall of 2000. The modifications were intended to improve our students’ educational experience in first-year foundational courses and inject appropriate additional rigor in upper-level course requirements. The revised curriculum (1) reduced the full-time first-year students’ course load from six to five class per semester; (2) increased Property, Torts, and Contracts from five to six credit hours each; (3) expanded the first-year legal writing course from four to five credit hours; (4) removed the “perspective elective” course requirement from the mandatory first-year schedule; (5) delayed Civil Procedure until the Spring semester and split the course so that the second half was not taken until the students’ second year of law school; and (6) mandated that upper-level students satisfy a third-semester legal writing requirement. Property, Torts and Contracts, all two-semester courses, were restructured so that students received grades recorded on their permanent transcripts (rather than temporary mid-term grades) at the conclusion of their first semester of law school.

Even though these changes pre-date the Action Plan, they were done with an eye towards increasing our bar passage rates. The courses increased by one credit hour each - Property, Torts, and Contracts – were then and remain “double tested” on the Ohio State Bar Examination, meaning that these subjects are covered in both the essay and the multiple-choice portions of the exam. The reduction from six to five courses a semester would enable students to more fully immerse themselves in these fundamental subjects and provide faculty with more opportunity to provide feedback to students through mid-term exams, quizzes, and other mechanisms. Legal writing was enhanced at both the first year and upper class level because data indicated that many of our students struggled with the essay portions of the Ohio bar exam. The change from a mid-term to a permanent grade in Property, Torts, and Contracts allowed the law school to identify students with serious academic deficiencies earlier and to appropriately increase academic attrition levels that lagged noticeably behind other Ohio law schools with similar students.

By the Fall of 2003, faculty had identified several concerns about the revised curriculum. The most pressing questions were whether the additional credit hour allotted to Property, Torts, and Contracts was providing increased value to the students and whether splitting Civil Procedure into courses taken in separate academic years was pedagogically sound. Another issue was that the revised curriculum only totaled 29 credit hours for full-time students, leaving them one credit hour short of the 30 credits students need to take each academic year to reach the 90 needed for graduation. The Action Plan focused on these issues and directed the Curriculum Committee to reconsider them in light of the other objectives of the Action Plan.

2. Post-Plan Alterations

Following study of these and related subjects by the Teaching Committee and the Curriculum Committee, the faculty voted to revise the first year curriculum. Effective Fall 2005, Property, Torts, and Contracts were returned to five credit hours each, Civil Procedure was re-combined as a six-credit hour, two semester courses taught entirely in the first year, and Legal Writing was expanded to a six credit hour course. The third semester of legal writing requirement was retained.

In addressing curricular matters at CM, it should be noted that a number of universities, including Harvard, are currently engaged in an intense examination of their law school curriculum. These studies are largely inspired by the “Carnegie Report.” Published in 2007, the report concludes that law school graduates often lack critical lawyering skills. In reaction to this data, the ABA has recently augmented its accreditation requirements related to skills-based course offerings.

CM has intentionally and significantly increased its skills courses over the past decade and has aggressively counseled students to enroll in classes, externships, and clinics that develop fundamental skills including research, drafting, oral advocacy, negotiating, and similar skills. On May 8, 2008, the faculty approved an additional graduation requirement for students beginning with the entering 2008 class. Each student must now “take at least one course providing substantial instruction in professional skills generally regarded as necessary for effective and responsible participation in the legal profession.” Courses that satisfy the professional skills requirement are ones that "engage each student in skills performances that are assessed by the instructor."

We will continue to monitor our curriculum as it affects bar passage rates and the overall quality of legal education we provide. This continued action is dictated by both the Action Plan and by Goal #5 of our 2007 Strategic Plan, which affirms CM’s commitment to provide an educational experience for students “to prepare them to practice law in the 21st century.”

43 Clinical faculty also noted that students who do not make up the one-credit hour deficiency in their second year are one hour short of the credits required for Supreme Court of Ohio standards for student practitioners as they enter their third year of law school.
F. Teaching

Nothing in the Action Plan suggests that law faculty should change their materials or methodologies to “teach to the bar.” To the contrary, we specifically avoided any such directives in the Action Plan. In addition to undermining core principals of academic freedom, such directives would likely prove counterproductive. Superior teaching occurs when each faculty member is free to identify the best methods and materials for the subject being taught. Nonetheless, it appears that the predominance of the Action Plan in the life of the law school over the past four years has caused some professors to reconsider certain aspects of their teaching strategies.

1. Status of Teaching Components Outlined in the Action Plan

The law school has long been committed to strengthening the quality of teaching and has adopted a number of mechanisms to further that objective. The Action Plan did not make specific teaching recommendations. Rather, the Action Plan instructed that “The Teaching Committee will examine possible methods of increasing the efficacy of our instruction, including but not limited to (1) increasing the instructional hour from 50 to 55 or 60 minutes; (2) shortening the semester to 13 weeks; (3) encouraging the use of multiple choice and bar essay type exams; and (4) encouraging the use of closed-book exams.” The Teaching Committee studied these and related issues and presented a detailed report and recommendations to the faculty during its March 24, 2004 faculty meeting. The faculty discussed these recommendations at length and adopted the Committee’s recommendations to reject proposals (1) and (2) and adopt proposals (3) and (4). These and other teaching proposals considered by the faculty following adoption of the Action Plan are discussed below.

a) Extension of Teaching “Hour”

The Teaching Committee recommended against extending the instructional hour from its current 50 minute to a 55 or 60 minute model after concluding that increasing the class hour would be more of a cosmetic rather than substantive change and that the extended class hour presented significant logistical problems with class scheduling. The extended classes would require substantially reducing time between classes, and most three-credit-hour courses would need to meet three days per week rather than two. Logistical complications were significantly compounded with night classes.

44 See, e.g., Plan to Enhance Quality Teaching at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law approved at May 15, 2003 faculty meeting (outlining proposals to encourage the use of feedback to students, provide summer grants for faculty to develop innovative teaching materials and mechanisms, and sponsoring annual teaching workshops or retreats for law faculty); 2007 CM Strategic Plan, Goal #5 (stating our intent “to expand our teaching strategies to maximize the educational experience for our students”).

45 Among other things, the Teaching Committee examined the impact of a recent curricular change that had added a credit hour each to Property, Contracts, and Torts, and concluded based on faculty surveys that the additional credit hour had not resulted in innovation in methods of delivering material to students or other pedagogical benefits. See Teaching Committee Memoranda of March 18, 2004 titled Response to Bar Pass Resolution 6(a) and Proposals for Consideration at the March 25 Faculty Meeting and Teaching Committee Report of Oct. 31, 2003 on Impact of Changes on First Year Curriculum.
b) Shortening Semester to 13 weeks

Shortening the semester from 14 to 13 weeks was considered as a means to allow students more time to prepare for the bar following law school graduation. The shortened semester, however, caused the same logistical problems as the increased instructional hour. ABA Standards require 700 minutes of instruction per credit hour per semester, so a 13-week semester demands at least 54-minute classes. In addition, the Teaching Committee concluded a shortened semester would produce an even more hurried pace throughout the semester, and thus be counterproductive to our goals of increasing students’ absorption and comprehension of complex legal materials.

c) Beginning Spring Semester Earlier

In lieu of shortening the semester to 13 weeks, the Teaching Committee endorsed the Bar Committee’s suggestion that the Spring semester begin one week earlier than usual. The result of this change, like shortening the semester to 13 weeks, is that graduates finish their last exams at approximately the same time as students graduating from the other eight Ohio law schools and have an additional week to study for the July bar examination. The faculty initially tabled this idea, but after further study adopted the change effective January 2007.

d) Use of Bar-Type Testing Formats

Traditional law school exams consist of detailed fact patterns followed by one or more questions. Students are required to write essays in which they identify key legal issues implicated by the facts and discuss possible resolutions of each issue at length. Some professors do not allow students to bring any materials to the exam, some allow students to bring limited resources such as a student-created outline of the course, and others allow students to consult a wide range of resources including textbook, outlines, study guides, and similar materials.

While not questioning the validity of traditional essay exams, the Teaching Committee concluded that faculty should be encouraged to use (1) multiple choice and short essay questions and (2) closed-book exams to help students become more familiar with these bar exam formats. However, the Teaching Committee also acknowledged that each professor should retain discretion to determine the most appropriate exam format for evaluating students in each course. Accordingly, the Committee did not suggest that the faculty adopt a uniform policy on these matters but encouraged professors to consider these alternatives.

2. Changes in Teaching Following Bar Plan Adoption

In 2003, 2006, and 2008, the Teaching Committee (with the participation of the Bar Committee in the later two years) conducted surveys on the teaching, grading, and feedback methodologies of the CM faculty. The survey instruments used in 2006 and 2008 were identical; the 2003 version was slightly different because we were gathering data on the impact of the 2000 curricular changes.
The response rates of the surveys were similar: 21 tenured or tenure-track faculty and 7 legal writing professors responded in 2003, 21 tenured or tenure-track, 5 legal writing, and 2 clinical faculty responded in 2006, and 21 tenured or tenure-track faculty members, 1 legal writing professor, 1 clinician, and 2 professors who did not indicate their status responded to the 2008 survey. The following section provides comparative data for only tenured or tenure-track faculty, because an insufficient number of responses exist for either the legal writing professors or the clinical faculty.\footnote{It can be safely assumed, however, that clinical and legal writing faculty routinely provide substantive, individualized feedback to their students due to the skills-intensive nature of their courses.}

\textbf{a) Feedback Mechanisms}

In 2003, 38\% of faculty indicated that they used graded quizzes, midterms, or tests other than the final exam. In 2006, 9.5\% of respondents said they used midterms and 14\% said they used graded quizzes or tests. The numbers for 2008 were even higher: 24\% of the faculty indicated that they used midterms and 14\% said they used graded quizzes or tests. Overall, this data indicates that little has changed in the number of grading opportunities that professor supply for their students. In addition, it appears that fewer faculty used ungraded quizzes or practice exams over this five-year period: 66\% in 2003, 43\% in 2006, and 57\% in 2008.

\textbf{b) Closed Versus Open Book Exams}

In the 2003 survey, 8 out of 21 (38\%) respondents indicated that they used completely closed book exams. That number rose to 48\% in 2006 and declined to 43\% in 2008, for an overall gain of 5\%. The percentage of faculty members giving limited open book exams (permitting students to only rely upon a rule book or very brief outline) was 19\% in 2003, 14\% in 2006, and 14\% in 2008. The number of faculty giving open book exams was 33\%, 19\%, and 28\%, respectively. The percentage of faculty allowing students to use their books as well as commercial outlines was 9.5\%, 14\%, and 9.5\%, respectively. The data on different forms of open book exams does not seem to indicate any significant change occurred among faculty members following adoption of the bar pass Plan.

\textbf{c) Exam Format and Feedback}

Traditional essay questions continue to be the predominant method of testing at the law school. In 2003, 76\% of faculty indicated that they used this type of question. In 2006, the number rose to 81\% and, in 2008, the number rose to 86\%. There was a decline in the percentage of faculty who used bar-type questions—short answer questions with limited space provided (38\% in 2003 compared to 33\% in 2006 and 33\% in 2008), but an increase in the percentage of faculty members using short answer questions without space limitations (38\% in 2003, 43\% in 2006, and 43\% in 2008.) The use of multiple-choice questions also declined over this five-year period: 43\% faculty used them in 2003, 38\% in 2006, and 33\% in 2008.

In terms of feedback on exams, professors at the law school appear to be using written comments more frequently (71\% in 2003, 76\% in 2006, and 90\% in 2008). In addition, a greater percentage of faculty members are meeting with students on a one-on-one basis to discuss their exams (52% in 2003, 71% in 2006, and 76% in 2008). Professors’ use of answer keys has fluctuated with no distinct pattern—33%, 19%, and 43%, respectively, but their use of model answers has tended to decline (33%, 24%, 14%, respectively). It is possible that greater written comments and individual conferences are supplanting the use of answer keys or model answers.

d) Course Content and Bar Exam

The 2006 and 2008 surveys also asked faculty members who taught courses tested on the bar exam a number of questions concerning course content and the relationship between content and the bar exam. One question was “Have you changed the substantive content of your course or coverage of your subject matter in any way in the last two years?,” meaning in the two years since adoption of the bar pass Plan. In 2006, 57% of faculty members said that they had changed the substantive content of their courses during those two years. That number declined to 38% in 2008, presumably because many faculty members had already changed their courses as reflected in the 2006 survey.

In 2006, 38% of faculty also reported that they emphasized key or core concepts in greater detail rather than adding new materials. The percentage increased to 48% in 2008. In 2006, 52% of faculty members indicated that they had identified the areas in their subject matter covered on the Ohio bar exam; 57% said that they had done so in 2008. Finally, in 2006, 48% of faculty said that they had reviewed multiple-choice or essay questions in their subjects, while in 2008, the percentage of faculty members doing so declined to 38%.

Some faculty members also provided comments on the surveys vis-à-vis the bar exam. The following comments came from the 2006 survey:

“For more than the past 2 years, I have compared my curriculum to the outline of subjects tested on the bar for this course; as it happens, my curriculum covers most of these topics. I also use old bar questions as practice questions in class.”

“I try to include as much of the material listed by the Ohio Supreme Court as ‘fair game’ for the bar exam as I can without overwhelming the students.”

“I have reviewed the outline of topics covered on the bar from the Ohio Supreme Court web site and tried to cover most of the topics; I have also taught a lot more substantive law through problems and eliminated some case law materials, hoping to strengthen students analytical abilities.”

“Made sure I covered all topics listed as tested on the bar exam.”

The following comments are from the 2008 survey:

“Five and six years ago, when our bar passage was quite poor, I instituted a number of changes on my own in an effort to help my students better absorb the material. For all of my courses I created overhead transparencies and then PowerPoint slides that furnish a running outline of what I’m covering in the classroom. I make these available to the students immediately after class. For my two upper-division bar courses, I created course outlines which students can download at the semester's outset. Because of these changes, students are much less likely to garble the concepts presented in my classroom. Because they have a better grasp of the law, their chances of passing the Bar Exam are improved.”

“Added new cases/statutes outside of casebook that reflect recent developments in Ohio law.”

“I review the outline of subjects tested on the Ohio bar provided by the Supreme Court of Ohio and make some of my decisions as to what topics to cover based on that outline. I revise my syllabus for each course every time I teach it to accommodate new developments in the law, so I am always making decisions on what to include and what to exclude. All coverage decisions, of course, also involve consideration as to what students need to learn for practice as well as for passing the bar. But when my decision comes down to a bar tested versus a nonbar tested topic, I usually choose the bar tested topic.”

“I talk with students about the bar exam more now than I did prior to the bar pass plan, both inside and outside of class. My goal in these conversations is to make students aware of the concrete steps they can take throughout law school to prepare for the bar, while trying not to raise their anxiety levels. Many of these bar prep tips – like preparing thoroughly for class, participating in class discussions, working on their writing skills, and learning as much material as possible now – are of course compatible with my primary objective of producing competent lawyers.”

G. Additional Initiatives to Improve Bar Passage Rate

In addition to implementing all the components of the Action Plan, the law school has taken other steps directed at increasing our students’ rates of bar exam success. Key initiatives are briefly summarized here.

- Addition of Manager, Student Affairs. Effective June 30, 2007, in exchange for the Provost’s approval of a staffing reorganization, the law school relinquished one full-time tenure-track faculty slot and the position of Assistant Dean for Student Affairs was been eliminated. The assistant deanship and the faculty slot were replaced with the positions of (1) Director, Bar Examination Preparation and (2) Manager of Student Affairs. The Manager of Student Affairs position was filled in June 2008.

- Advising 1st Year Students. Starting in the Spring of 2007, we expanded our advising activities to the first-year students. In meetings with each of the four first-year sections, we inform students of the overall format of the Ohio State Bar Examination, the deadline for applying to take the exam, and the subjects tested on the exam. Because law students are assigned to their first-year classes, these counseling sessions were held immediately prior to the time when they register for their second-year courses. This bar counseling was also offered in 2008 and will be provided in the same or a similar format in the future.

- Counseling 2nd Year Students. Starting in the Fall of 2006, Dean Geoffrey Mearns, Associate Dean Phyllis Crocker, Associate Dean Patricia Falk, Mr. Gary Williams, Mr. Daniel Dropko, and Clinical Professor Pamela Daiker-Middaugh divided up the entire second year class (both FT and PT) and scheduled individual counseling sessions with every second-year student. Professor Susan Becker joined the counseling team in 2007. The counselors provided students with information about the multiple steps necessary to apply for the bar and also guidance on how to best manage the bar preparation process. Counselors also gathered data from students to help identify individualized risk factors and trends regarding students’ preparation (or lack thereof) for the bar exam. Students have been very receptive to this program, and we will continue it.

- Development of Bar Exam Checklist. During the 07-08 academic year, the Bar Committee developed an Administrative Checklist for Taking the Ohio Bar Examination. Modeled after our Graduation Requirements checklist and available via the school’s website, this document provides information about the bar exam and highlights the specific steps each law student must complete throughout law school to qualify to take the bar exam immediately following graduation.

- PMBR Partnership. Commencing in the 2006-07 academic year, the law school partnered with a private entity, PMBR, to more effectively prepare our students for the Multistate Bar Examination (MBE), the multiple-choice component of the bar exam. This arrangement allowed students to take a six-day “Early Bird” MBE preparation course in the Spring semester of their last year of law school, and then take the six-day program again when it is offered in May to prepare them for the July bar exam. The law school subsidized each law student by about $200 and students paid an additional $350 for a review that usually costs about $700. Seventy-three students signed up for the program. Participants also received a workbook that provided six Multistate subjects and significant hands-on experience with MBE questions. Data indicate that participation in this program has a significant positive impact on student success rates. We continued this program this past summer.

- Distribution of Ohio Bar Exam Material to Faculty. In the summer of 2006, the law school gathered the last ten years of essay questions and model answers from the Ohio State Bar Examination, sorted them by subject, and provided copies to all faculty members teaching those subjects. The law school continues to make more recent exams available to faculty members immediately following release of the questions and model answers by the Ohio Supreme Court.

- Faculty Presentations to Exam Takers. In the summer of 2006, Mr. Williams instituted a program in which faculty volunteers provided advice to bar applicants on how to approach the essay section of the exam. Most faculty members structured their presentations around essay questions given in previous Ohio bar exams, identifying for the students the most common subject areas emphasized on past exams and suggesting various strategies for answering bar essay questions.

- Loans for Bar Takers. In 2006, the law school allocated $25,000 as a bar loan fund. The fund was intended to encourage students to enroll in a commercial bar preparatory course and to take a minimum of six weeks off to study for the bar examination. To date, however, 11 students have taken advantage of this funding source.

- Support During Exam. For the past five years, law school administrators including Dean Mearns, Associate Dean Patricia Falk and Mr. Williams and faculty, including Professor Pamela Daiker-Middaugh, have been present in Columbus during the bar exam, providing sustenance and moral support to bar takers throughout the three-day test. Students have been extremely appreciative of these efforts.

- Law Library Support. Law library personnel have implemented a variety of initiatives to aid students preparing for the Ohio bar exam. Library staff members developed and routinely update numerous online and print sources addressing each subject matter tested on the bar and publications that advise students how to prepare for the exam. Library hours are extended during the weeks immediately preceding the bar exam and library privileges such as access to the PC lab and other online sources are extended to graduates who are studying for the bar. The Director of the Library is a standing member of the law school’s Bar Exam Committee.

V. Conclusion

The goal of the Bar Pass Plan was to improve our students’ performance on the bar exam and to enhance the overall quality of legal education offered at CM. As documented by the data and analyses presented throughout this report, those twin goals have been substantially advanced during the first four academic years of Action Plan implementation. While these achievements are cause for celebration, it is equally apparent that we cannot rest on our laurels.

The need to allocate additional scholarship dollars and to closely monitor the effective use of those dollars is critical to attracting a talented and diverse student body. Admissions Department personnel need continued support of their multifaceted efforts to increase the law school’s reputation and to recruit solid students in this highly competitive market.

Once an entering class is recruited, the task of producing exceptional graduates who can pass the bar exam and become productive members of the legal profession shifts onto the shoulders of the entire law school community. The Academic Excellence Program and the numerous programs initiated, implemented and supervised by the Bar Pass Coordinator should be continuously strengthened and refined. Efforts of faculty members to strengthen the quality of their teaching and provide meaningful and timely feedback to students also deserve continued support. Law school personnel should also continue to gather and analyze data of the type highlighted by this report and from other sources\textsuperscript{47} to monitor the effectiveness of various law school programs and initiatives. The focus on appropriate levels of academic attrition must also be maintained.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, the law school and university must continue to work as a team to successfully surmount the inevitable challenges, and to take advantage of the many opportunities, inherent in managing an engaged and successful law school.

These data may yield insightful feedback relevant to our efforts to improve our bar passage rates and the general quality of legal education at CM.

FY 2012 continued our transitional period. Departures of two staff and prolonged health care absences of two others required creativity and flexibility for scheduling and projects. While two professional vacancies and one support position have been filled for FY13, we have lost the Government Information/Special Projects Librarian position, so we begin FY13 making adjustments again. This report summarizes activities our Librarians managed in 2012, and our collective thoughts on the directions we would like to take in 2013.
The central access point for library services, the Information Services Desk is the face of the Cleveland Marshall Law Library. Open an average of 95 hours per seven day work week during the academic year, the Access & Faculty Services staff employees, Reference & Research Librarians, student assistants and the Associate Director open and close the library and lab, and handle requests from all the library’s varied users. Seventy-five percent of reference and circulation transactions with library patrons in the last year were with College of Law faculty and students, eight percent were with University students and faculty, and seventeen percent with alumni and the greater legal community, persons affiliated with other OhioLINK institutions, and members of the general public.

Librarians conducted over thirty research consultation sessions with students throughout the year. Students make an appointment with the librarian for assistance in researching a particular issue or area of law. Typically, the Librarian prepares for one of these consultation sessions in advance, meet with the student for up to an hour, and do follow-up as needed. We market the service on our website and digital signage, with sign up sheets at the front desk, and through the course of regular reference transactions. We need to repeat the message to faculty teaching courses with a writing requirement and encourage them to refer students in need of research help to us.

We circulated 18,325 items from the collection in 2011/12, compared to 20,866 the previous year. Nearly twenty –two percent of our circulation represented items from the Professional and Practice Skills Collection in room A066. Law students and other patrons continue to seek out the collection for study aids and practice support materials, and we should continue to keep their needs in perspective in our acquisitions decisions. Ohio Room circulation represented five percent of overall figures. Forty-five percent of our circulation was to law faculty and staff, thirty percent to law students and other members of the College of Law community, nine percent to CSU faculty and students, and eight percent to OhioLink members. These numbers are nearly identical to last year. Books are the most checked-out library materials, at 61.6% of total circulation. Bound periodicals circulated at a rate of 7.5%, while unbound periodicals circulated at a similar rate of 7.1% With the cancellation of the majority of law review titles, we expect that circulation figure to drop in FY13.

Last year we started tracking in-house use count in Millennium in order to gather additional statistics on collection use. In-house count tracks materials that are used in the library, but are not checked out. We officially started keeping in-house count statistics on July 1, 2010. Based on our count, 6,593 items were used in-house this past year, an increase of 371 over the previous year. As could be expected, the reference section saw the most in-house use (2,337 counts); the next two areas of the library most heavily used in-house were the Ohio Room (1,235 counts) and the Second floor (1,028).

The law library continues to serve patrons through interlibrary loan and OhioLINK. For ILL, the library is a net borrower (borrowing more materials through ILL than we lend). In this past year, our patrons made 146 requests of other institutions.
through ILL. The heaviest ILL users are our law students, with 95 requests. Our law faculty were also active ILL users, with 40 requests. The library filled 121 requests for other institutions (32 books and 89 articles).

The library is active in OhioLINK. This year we received 1,891 OhioLINK requests on behalf of our patrons, and shipped out 1,335 to other schools. OhioLINK numbers are down from last year, when we received 1,974 requests and shipped out 1,623 orders to other schools.

Taking ILL, OhioLINK, Document Delivery, and patron initiated inter-campus holds into account, the law library made 2,329 requests of other libraries, of which 2,286 of those requests were filled. The library received 2,596 requests for materials through ILL, OhioLINK, Document Delivery, and patron initiated inter-campus holds, of which 2,012 of these requests were successfully fulfilled by our library for other institutions.

Faculty Services:

Faculty Services can be broken down into two broad categories of services – (1) document delivery, course reserves, and course / TWEN page support and (2) research and publication support. Access services staff continue to assist faculty by maintaining and creating TWEN pages and course pages, putting materials on course reserves, and fulfilling paper and electronic document delivery requests. Some professors who have benefited from faculty services in this first category include Profs. Hoke, Keating, Ray, Weinstein, and O’Neill.

Library research assistants and librarians continued to support faculty research and publications with 148 faculty research sessions this year. Library RAs and librarians have completed research memos, compiled bibliographies, conducted non-legal research, and completed literature reviews for a number of faculty members. Librarians and RAs have also assisted faculty in preparing near-finished articles and books for publication. We have assisted faculty with cite-checking their work, with formatting footnotes in the required styles, and with formatting bibliographies for publication. Some professors who have benefited from research and publication support include Profs. Majette, Sundahl, Plecnik, Lewis, and Ray.

This year marks the start of Cleveland State University’s new institutional repository (IR), EngagedScholarship@CSU. With the help of the law library, the Cleveland Marshall College of Law has a significant presence in the new IR. The goal is to transfer all of the records in the library’s Faculty Publications Database into the IR, and use the IR exclusively going forward. Toward this goal, the access services department has assisted Sue as Digital Content Services Librarian in preparing texts and records for upload into the IR and in securing copyright permissions for journal articles. Specifically, department staff members have scanned articles only available in print, checked for online access to articles, completed portions of the batch upload spreadsheets, corresponded with publishers for copyright permissions, and organized copyright permission responses.

Last year, Tom Hurray was assigned to be the key staff person to maintain the Faculty Publications database. With the new IR, all access services staff members have made significant contributions to the project. Going forward, once the bulk of the older Faculty Publication database materials have been uploaded into the IR, we expect that Tom will resume a more leading role in helping to maintain IR content. For now, however, this is a group project.

Educational Programming and Instruction Services:

During the 2011-2012 year, Librarians conducted or facilitated seventy-one educational sessions, sixty-eight for Cleveland-Marshall students, two for Cleveland State University classes, and one tour for paralegal students.

Fourteen of our C|M|L Law sessions were part of the Orientation program, thirteen were Research Certificate seminars. We provided two sessions at the request of BLSA and three sessions for law journal staff and research assistants, two were individual training for faculty, and thirty-seven guest lectures at the request of faculty. Topics ranged from effective use of Lexis and Westlaw and Internet resources and searching dockets, to research techniques in substantive areas such as comparative constitutional law and war crimes, as well as research strategies in non-law disciplines.

The thirteen Law Library Research Certificate Seminars attracted a total of fifty-nine students, compared to sixty-four students in the previous year, and thirty-three of them were first years. Students attending four or more of these seminars receive a Research Certificate, and we awarded thirteen of them this year. Twenty-six students attended two or more of our programs.

In 2011-2012, LexisNexis and Westlaw vendor representatives conducted several sessions in Legal Writing & Research classes and ten sessions in our training labs. Legal Writing & Research faculty continue to generally to rely on vendor reps to conduct LexisNexis/Westlaw trainings.

Web and Blog Content:

One of the major responsibilities of the Electronic Services Librarian is to coordinate development of content and enhancements for the law library webpage and blog. While taking over the role of Digital Content Services Librarian early in the year, Sue continued to manage these webpage duties until we were able to bring Karen Schneiderman to the position at the end of June.
Sue set up LibGuides as the new platform for our exceptional research guides, and began the process of migrating them to the new format. She trained staff and two library practicum students in the use of the software, and planned the conversion based on an analysis of statistics on hits and relevance to classes with a writing requirement. There were 60,233 hits to our research guides last year, nearly double that of the prior year. While part of that increase is surely increased staff use in making the format conversion, they are clearly valuable and frequently consulted. The new format was also useful in showcasing our two exhibitions: Our Lincoln, the Constitution and the Civil War: An Exhibition, and Lawyers Without Rights: Jewish Lawyers in Germany under the Third Reich Libguides both advertised the installations and supplemented the exhibit themes.

Staff members continue to post blog entries as a means to explore new library resources or databases, services or policies or relevant news items. Sue created a mobile app for the library’s website and a QR code tour of the library collection. In the spring, we acquired the Libcal module from Springshare (the provider of Libguides), and used it to create a system for online study room reservations. We are testing it this summer and certain students will be pleased with the innovation when the fall semester gets underway.

Technical Services

Our new Technical Services Librarian Beth Farrell reorganized the workflow of her department from ordering materials through claiming, processing and delivery in order to accomplish greater efficiencies and make best use of the skills of her staff. She also took on the responsibility of hiring and training all the Law Library’s student assistants so that they can work wherever needed in technical, administrative or public services functions. She has made significant inroads into increasing access to electronic and print titles through the library’s catalog by implementing improved cataloging practices.

The Technical Services staff added 11,284 titles to Scholar in FY12, including 7,194 digital resources, and received and processed 7,702 new physical items. As part of our ongoing collection maintenance projects, they also withdrew 22,685 volumes. The process to accelerate withdrawals in preparation for the loss of shelving for the solo practice incubator project has commenced: we anticipate 100,000 items will need to be withdrawn. This is a labor intensive process which we are hoping to complete by the end of December so that we can commence the relocation of the remaining volumes before construction commences.

Collection Development and Maintenance
A stagnant library materials budget accompanied by double digit inflation in the cost of many legal publications has been the norm for the last several years. We maintained a steady process of canceling print titles for which we have Lexis or Westlaw access, recognizing that such decisions are at the expense of serving University students and faculty and community users. This year, we took a long, serious look at print titles which had been traditional mainstays of the collection and eliminated those which no longer seemed relevant to today’s digital researchers. We also analyzed the usage rates of our electronic databases as best we could, and determined that several of our CCH resources were not generating enough hits to justify renewing them.

BNA was purchased by Bloomberg Law in the fall. Bloomberg has been making inroads in the law firm market as an alternative to Westlaw and Lexis and is offering its product to law schools at no charge. At years’ end, we negotiated an agreement with Bloomberg/BNA which reduced the cost of our comprehensive BNA Premier database package in exchange for an agreement to provide Bloomberg with access to our students and faculty on a par with that provide to Westlaw and Lexis. We welcome the opportunity to introduce our community to this important new product.

We lost the position of Government Information/Special Projects Librarian with the retirement of Schuyler Cook at the end of the year. Schuyler managed the Federal Depository Library Program for both the Michael Schwartz Library’s depository collection and ours. He trained Laura Ray in the procedures for processing documents here and Carol Zsulya for MSL. We are in the process of examining the extent to which either or both of the libraries wish to remain active in the program and analyzing impacts on our collections and services should we make changes to the current structure.

Projects/Plans ahead of us for 2013 (in no particular order of importance):

- Completing conversion of our Research Guides to the Lib Guides format – Karen has assumed leadership of the project and is working with Sue on the transition.
- Documenting use of digital subscriptions: This is a continuing conundrum as we are dependent on vendor supplied statistics (or lack thereof). Karen and our new Collection Development/Acquisitions Librarian will pursue options.
- Systematic weeding and reorganization of the print collection in preparation for the solo practice incubator construction.
- Continue development of Research Assistant faculty support program under Amy’s direction. We are also looking at potential publishing related services to law reviews. Is there a larger role for the law library or law librarian skills in support of law school publishing and scholarship initiatives?
• Integrate media site presentations for College of Law programs into Scholar. This is a project we have yet to address, and with the implementation of the IR, should look at anew.
• Implement regular program of staff development opportunities designed to educate the staff on new trends and services as well as meet specific training needs. Laura has been assigned this duty under her revised job description, and we expect progress this fall.
• Document and systematically implement procedures for acquiring, preserving and archiving all College of Law publications. This project was on the agenda of the previous Collection Development/Acquisitions Librarian, but was not addressed upon his departure. The IR brings us new opportunities for archiving, and the new CD Librarian will explore options with Sue.
• Continue Research Certificate program, with additional offerings emphasizing practical skills, and more half-hour programs. In FY 12 we made increased use of vendors as presenters, and offered fewer programs. With a full staff again, we should raise the profile of this service.
• Continue developing web exhibits for the Legal Landmarks project, and brand the page and collection as our own. This project was put on hold most of the year as our digital content production concentrated on the IR, and as Sue was performing the duties of two positions.
• Examine ebook opportunities
• Increase Scholar access to titles in our subscription databases

We are fortunate to have talented and creative staff, who are eager to embrace new projects and maximize their skills in support of the C|M|Law community. FY13’s two new librarians enhance our family, adding their perspectives, experiences and insights. We are looking forward to a great year!

I. Mission and Goals

The primary mission of the Cleveland State University Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Library is to support the curriculum and research needs of the students and faculty of the College of Law. The Law Library also serves as a legal research center for the Cleveland State University community. In addition, the Law Library is available for use by the local bench, bar, and general public for the purpose of conducting legal research.
The goals of the Collection Development Policy are to guide in the acquisition, retention, and provision of materials and resources that support the academic needs of the College of Law, as well as to articulate the scope of our collection and general responsibilities toward its management. Among the subject areas of particular strength in the Law Library collection are: Constitutional Law, Employment and Labor Law, Jewish Law, Islamic Law, Law Careers, Legal Research and Writing, Ohio Law and Practice, and Urban Law.

While the need to provide access to certain core legal materials remains central to the library's mission, the means of such access is continuously evolving. The curriculum, faculty and student research interests continuously develop and change. To ensure that the Library anticipates and supports academic needs, the Collection Development Policy and its accompanying procedures are reviewed annually.

II. Selection Principles

A. Methodology
The Law Library Director and the Collection Development/Acquisitions Librarian, with the input of other Librarians and staff, select materials. Final decision-making authority rests with the Director. The librarians meet periodically to review and recommend serial and monograph titles as well as evaluate content and access for electronic collections. In addition, the librarians solicit input from faculty and consider usage statistics in developing the Collection with particular emphasis placed on the needs of College of Law faculty and students.

B. Standards
The Law Library adheres to the standards of its accrediting organizations, the American Bar Association and Association of American Law Schools, as well as the standards of the United States Government Depository program.

C. Selection Criteria Based on Jurisdiction
The Law Library provides access to primary materials for all state/federal jurisdictions. A greater concentration is placed on the states comprising the Sixth Circuit while the primary jurisdictional emphasis of the collection is on Ohio and federal law. Foreign, international, and comparative law resources are collected at introductory levels, as well as in subject areas complementing collection strengths and curricular emphasis. English language materials are preferred.

D. Selection Criteria Based on Content and Use
1. The Law Library collects materials and provides resources which support the current curriculum, advance the goals of the teaching staff, and/or support student learning and skill-building.

2. Selection considerations include relevance to our jurisdiction, quality, author’s reputation, treatment of legal issues either new or of recurring interest; coverage in a subject infrequently treated; and uniqueness.

3. The Law Library very selectively collects materials and resources of sociological, economic, and historical value in non-law disciplines when these materials support the teaching and/or research needs of Cleveland-Marshall College of Law faculty and students.

4. The Law Library generally does not acquire materials already held by the Cleveland State University Library unless the School of Law curriculum or demand by School of Law faculty and students supports such acquisitions.
E. Selection Criteria Based on Format
The Law Library seeks to select material formats most appropriate for the needs of our patrons. Considerations include cost, accessibility, coverage, probable demand, technology platform support, licensing guidelines, financial ability to keep current, availability of alternate and/or back-up source, and projected longevity. We aim to eliminate duplicate coverage among formats unless multiple copies are required.

III. Gifts
The Law Library sometimes accepts gift materials when they are given without restrictions. We reserve the right to review all gifts, select materials of interest, and decline offers of materials. All gift materials become the exclusive property of the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Library and are added to the collection or otherwise disposed of as appropriate to the needs of the Law Library. Potential donors are urged to provide a list of the items considered for donation. The Law Library acknowledges receipt of any donation with a letter as soon as possible after receipt of the gift, but, pursuant to IRS Rules, we cannot appraise the value of, nor itemize, the donation.

IV. Package Plans and Standing Orders
Vendors and publishers offer package plans and standing orders as a mechanism to automatically ship their materials, sometimes at discount prices. The Law Library subscribes to package plans and standing orders, such as those of the Ohio State Bar Association, Practising Law Institute, and the American Bar Association. These plans help to ensure that the Law Library receives, in a timely manner, significant publications considered essential to the collection.

V. Memberships and Consortia
The Law Library is a member of several law and library related organizations and consortia. Consortia and memberships provide resource-sharing for member institutions. Currently, the Law Library is a member of the Law Libraries' Microform Consortium (LLMC), and, in partnership with the CSU University Library, is a member of OhioLINK, the resource-sharing consortium for most of Ohio’s academic libraries. OhioLINK membership provides member institutions, faculty, and students with access to materials held by other OhioLINK members. OhioLINK membership presumes that member institutions will maintain collections of value to be shared among consortium members.

VI. Specific Collections
A. Archival and Rare Materials (Special Collections Room)
The Law Library seeks to acquire all official publications and productions of the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law including law reviews, audiovisual materials, program materials, promotional and informational materials, and final reports resulting from College sponsored celebrations and special events, as well as all publications of the Law Faculty.

When budget allocations permit, the Law Library seeks to acquire materials of special curricular or scholarship interest or historical value, with particular emphasis on Ohio law.
B. Casual Reading
The Law Library collects a number of legal and general interest periodicals and newspapers. In addition, the Law Library acquires through donations of popular legal fiction and non-fiction titles for circulation.

C. Government Documents
The Law Library is a designated United States Government Depository Library, and selects government publications and productions to support the subject areas of administrative and judicial law, as well as legislative and legal-related topics addressed by a variety of government agencies (e.g., Department of Commerce, Department of Justice, Department of the Treasury, Federal Communications Commission, Internal Revenue Service, National Labor Relations Board). As the University Library is also a member of the Depository program, the two libraries collaborate on selection decisions. The goal of the collaboration is to ensure a comprehensive non-redundant collection, which supports the University and Law School curriculum.

D. Ohio Room
The Law Library collects Ohio primary and secondary legal materials extensively and houses the materials in the Ohio Room. The goal of the Ohio Room is to provide comprehensive access to Ohio legal primary and secondary materials, Ohio practice materials, as well as other materials on Ohio politics and government. To support teaching programs, some duplication of resources is necessary, so additional copies of selected materials are kept in Reference or Reserve.

E. Professional and Study Skills Collection
This collection assists students to master fundamental legal concepts and practice skills. It includes research and writing texts, study skills materials, law exam and bar exam preparation guides and sample tests, career materials, materials on how to set up and manage a legal practice, as well as circulating copies of study aids and donated casebooks. Emphasis is placed on substantive areas covered by the Ohio bar examination. Since this collection is intended to emphasize current texts and methodologies, it is weeded on a regular basis.

F. Reference
The Reference collection includes key high-use federal and Ohio primary and secondary materials, as well as selected non-law ready reference titles such as dictionaries, directories, encyclopedias, handbooks, and non-circulating copies of study aids.

G. Reserve
The Reserve collection includes non-circulating copies of faculty designated course reserve materials drawn from the Law Library collection or provided by the faculty member, bound volumes of course examinations, current faculty evaluations, current issues of periodicals and newspapers, unbound or current binders from selected high-use loose-leaf services and reporters, selected high-use Ohio practice materials, as well as selected treatises consistently referenced in multiple areas of the curriculum and designated by faculty or library staff as requiring Reserve status to ensure their availability.
VII. Retention, Weeding, and Withdrawal of Materials

A. Standards
The Law Library weeds materials on a continuous basis, considering the current value, permanent value, potential for use by patrons, multiple copies, alternative formats, other local or OhioLINK availability, and physical condition.

B. Remote Storage
The Library's archived materials at the Northeast Regional Depository in Rootstown, Ohio have been contributed to the Ohio Depository System (OHDEP), shared by public academic libraries throughout the state. Materials in OHDEP can be borrowed for circulation by patrons of any contribution institution. Turnaround time is approximately 48 hours.

Laura E. Ray, MA, MLS, Instructional Services Librarian

Laura E. Ray has been at the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law Library since 1989, where she currently serves as the Instructional Services Librarian, and was previously the Media/Reference Librarian. She coordinates Law Library instructional programs, advises on collection issues for medical and health care materials, as well as provides classroom research instruction, reference service, and assistance with faculty instructional support. From 1980 till 1989 Laura was the librarian at the Northeast Ohio Multipurpose Arthritis Center, directed by Doctor Roland Moskowitz.

Laura received her MLS from Case Western Reserve University in 1979, and her MA in History and BA from Cleveland State University in 1976 and 1974. She is currently working on her PhD in History, concentrating on Antebellum slave health care.

Laura has been a member of the American Association of Law Libraries (AALL) since 1990. She currently chairs the AALL Micrographics/Audiovisual Special Interest Section (SIS), has chaired the Legal History & Rare Books SIS, and has chaired the Education Committee of both of these SISs for many years. Laura is also an active member of the Ohio Regional Association of Law Libraries (member of several ORALL Committees), Special Libraries Association (currently President-Elect of the SLA Cleveland Chapter), as well as the Association of Rheumatology Health Professionals and American College of Rheumatology (chair and member of many ARHP and ACR Committees).

Laura has presented numerous workshops and lectures at national and regional library and medical conferences since 1982, addressing a myriad of topics on the audiovisual enhancement of learning, educational design and learning styles, library and Web-based support of teaching and practice, legislative and administrative advocacy, as well as legal and medical research. Her most recent presentations are: Law Library Collections Post-Microform: Future Implications for the Newest Legacy Format (2012 AALL Annual Meeting), Web-Based Tools for Enhancing and Managing Teaching and Clinical Practice (Invited Speaker Workshop, 2012 ACR/ARHP Annual Scientific Meeting), Old into New: Collaborative Law Library Digital Collections (2011 AALL Annual Meeting), What You Need to Know about Using DVD Clips in the Classroom: Now You Can! Report of Independent Auditors

To the Board of Trustees
Cleveland State University

We have audited the accompanying financial statements of the business-type activities and aggregate discretely presented component units of Cleveland State University (the “University”), a component unit of the State of Ohio, as of and for the years ended June 30, 2010 and 2009, which collectively comprise the University’s basic financial statements as listed in the table of contents. These financial statements are the responsibility of the University’s management. Our responsibility is to express opinions on these financial statements based on our audits. We did not audit the financial statements of The Cleveland State University Foundation, Inc. or the Euclid Avenue Housing Corporation, discretely presented component units of the University. Those financial statements were audited by other auditors whose reports thereon have been furnished to us, and our opinion, insofar as it relates to the amounts included for the discretely presented component units, is based on the reports of the other auditors.

We conducted our audits in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America and the standards applicable to financial audits contained in Government Auditing Standards, issued by the Comptroller General of the United States. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audits to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements, assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, and evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits and the reports of other auditors provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, based on our audits and the reports of other auditors, the financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the respective financial position of the University as of June 30, 2010 and 2009 and the respective changes in financial position and, where applicable, cash flows thereof for the years then ended in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America.

The management’s discussion and analysis on pages 3 through 10 is not a required part of the basic financial statements but is supplemental information required by the Governmental Accounting Standards Board. We have applied certain limited procedures, which consisted principally of inquiries of management, regarding the methods of measurement and presentation of the required supplemental information. However, we did not audit the information and express no opinion on it.
To the Board of Trustees
Cleveland State University

In accordance with Government Auditing Standards, we have also issued our report dated October 15, 2010 on our consideration of the University’s internal control over financial reporting and our tests of its compliance with certain provisions of laws, regulations, contracts, grant agreements, and other matters. The purpose of that report is to describe the scope of our testing of internal control over financial reporting and compliance and the results of that testing, and not to provide an opinion on the internal control over financial reporting or on compliance. That report is an integral part of an audit performed in accordance with Government Auditing Standards and should be considered in assessing the results of our audits.

Introduction

The following discussion and analysis provides an overview of the financial position and activities of Cleveland State University (the “University”) as of and for the year ended June 30, 2010. This discussion has been prepared by management and should be read in conjunction with the financial statements and the notes thereto, which follow this section.

The University was established in 1964 by action of the Ohio General Assembly and is part of the State of Ohio’s (the “State”) system of state-supported and state-assisted institutions of higher education. It is one of the 13 state universities in Ohio. By statute, it is a body politic and corporate and an instrumentality of the State. Located in the city of Cleveland, the University is an urban institution. A majority of the University’s students commute daily from their homes in the Cleveland metropolitan area.

Using the Annual Financial Report

The University’s financial report includes financial statements prepared in accordance with Governmental Accounting Standards Board (GASB) Statement No. 35, Basic Financial Statements – and Management’s Discussion and Analysis – for Public Colleges and Universities. These principles require that financial statements be presented on a consolidated basis to focus on the financial condition, the changes in financial condition, and the cash flows of the University as a whole. Many other non-financial factors also must be considered in assessing the overall health of the University, such as enrollment trends, student retention, strength of the faculty, condition of the buildings, and the safety of the campus.

The financial statements prescribed by GASB Statement No. 35 (the statement of net assets, the statement of revenues, expenses and changes in net assets, and the statement of cash flows) present financial information in a form similar to that used by corporations. They are prepared under the accrual basis of accounting, whereby revenue and assets are recognized when the service is provided and expenses and liabilities are recognized when others provide the service, regardless of when cash is exchanged.

Under the provisions of GASB Statement No. 39, Determining Whether Certain Organizations are Component Units, the Cleveland State University Foundation, Inc. (the “Foundation”) and the Euclid Avenue Housing Corporation (the “Corporation”) are treated as component units of the University. Accordingly, the Foundation and the Corporation are discretely presented in the University’s financial statements. The Foundation and the Corporation are excluded from management’s discussion and analysis. Financial statements for the Foundation can be obtained from the Office of the Executive Director at 2121 Euclid Avenue, Keith Building Room 300, Cleveland, OH 44115-2214; financial statements for the Corporation can be obtained from the Office of the President at 2121 Euclid Avenue, Administration Center Room 210, Cleveland, OH 44115-2214.
The statement of net assets presents the financial position of the University at the end of the fiscal year and includes all assets and liabilities. The difference between assets and liabilities—net assets—is one indicator of the current financial condition of the University, while the change in net assets is an indicator of whether the overall financial condition has improved or worsened during the year. Assets and liabilities are generally measured using current values. One notable exception is capital assets, which are stated at historical cost less an allowance for depreciation. A summary of the University’s assets, liabilities, and net assets at June 30, 2010, 2009 and 2008 is as follows:

Current assets consist primarily of cash, operating investments, accounts and notes receivable, prepaid expenses, deferred charges and inventories. Current liabilities consist primarily of accounts payable, accrued payroll and other liabilities, deferred revenue and the current portion of long-term debt.

Current assets increased in 2010 from 2009 primarily due to an increase in cash and cash equivalents, which was partially offset by a decrease in investments. In 2010, the University kept most of its cash on deposit with the bank, because the rate of interest paid by the bank was greater than other short-term investment vehicles.

Current assets increased in 2009 from 2008 primarily due to an increase in cash and cash equivalents. During 2009, the University increased its holdings in money market funds (which are classified as cash equivalents) because they offered greater returns than other short-term investment vehicles.

Net capital assets increased in 2010 from 2009 by $80.2 million, or 21.1%, and in 2009 from 2008 by $39.5 million, or 11.6%. Both increases were due to construction on the University’s campus. Projects under construction during these years include a new student center building and a new building to house the College of Education and Human Services.

Other assets decreased in 2010 from 2009 by $50.8 million, or 33.7%. The decrease was due primarily to the spending of bond proceeds on construction.

Other assets decreased in 2009 from 2008 by $8.5 million, or 5.4%. The decrease was the result of two factors: the increased use of money market funds, which are classified as current assets, and the spending of bond proceeds on construction.
Liabilities increased in 2010 from 2009 by $8.8 million, or 3.3%, due primarily to a $14.5 million capital lease for a new parking garage that was entered into in 2010.

Liabilities increased in 2009 from 2008 by $47.3 million, or 21.7%, due primarily to a $42.8 million capital lease for energy conservation projects that was issued in 2009.

Capital and Debt Activities

One critical factor affecting the quality of the University’s programs is the development and renewal of its capital assets. Capital additions totaled $100.4 million in 2010, $57.1 million in 2009, and $37.4 million in 2008. Capital retirements totaled $6.0 million in 2010, $25.7 million in 2009, and $2.7 million in 2008. Capital additions and retirements for 2010, 2009 and 2008 exclude transfers from construction in progress to buildings in the amounts of $31.3 million, $0.7 million and $6.2 million, respectively. Capital additions include construction of new facilities, repair and renovation of existing facilities, and acquisition of equipment and library books. Capital asset additions are funded, in part, by capital appropriations from the State. These appropriations amounted to $20.0 million in 2010, $15.1 million in 2009, and $3.4 million in 2008.

In August 2009, the University entered into a capital lease with the Corporation in the amount of $14.5 million. The lease covers a parking garage that was constructed by the Corporation on the University’s campus. The lease requires the University to operate and maintain the garage, and to make periodic payments to the Corporation equal to its required debt service payments.

In March 2009, the University entered into a capital lease in the amount of $42.8 million. Proceeds will be used to fund a variety of energy conservation projects on the University’s campus. When the projects are complete, energy savings will be sufficient to fund the lease payments.

Net Assets

Net assets represent the residual interest in the University’s assets after liabilities are deducted. The University’s net assets at June 30, 2010, 2009 and 2008 are summarized as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>

Net assets invested in capital assets, net of related debt represent the University’s capital assets net of accumulated depreciation and outstanding principal balances of debt attributable to the acquisition, construction, or improvement of those assets. Changes in this category of net assets are due to the net effect of additions to, disposals of, and depreciation on capital assets. In both 2010 and 2009, additions exceeded disposals and depreciation.

Restricted-expendable net assets are subject to externally imposed restrictions governing their use. Changes in this category are due to the timing of revenue and expenses in funds provided by donors and grantors. Restricted-nonexpendable net assets consist primarily of endowment funds held by the University. Changes in this category are driven primarily by investment performance, which was positive in 2010 and negative in 2009.

Unrestricted net assets are not subject to externally imposed stipulations. This category includes funds functioning as endowment (quasi-endowment) of $4.5 million at June 30, 2010, $4.0 million at June 30, 2009, and $4.7 million at June 30, 2008. The changes in value from year to year are due to gains or losses on investments.

For the year ended June 30, 2010, the University had an increase in total net assets of $23.8 million, or 7.6%. Net assets invested in capital assets, net of related debt, increased by $7.4 million, or 3.0%, because capital asset additions exceeded deductions and depreciation expense. Unrestricted net assets increased by $18.2 million, or 37.5%, due primarily to increases in net tuition income (which went from $115.3 million in 2009 to $126.2 million in 2010) and in investment income (which went from ($6.5 million) in 2009 to $7.7 million in 2010), along with a decrease in operating expenses in 2010 from 2009 of $0.2 million. The decrease in operating expenses was the result of a freeze on salaries and wages and energy conservation efforts.

For the year ended June 30, 2009, the University had a decrease in total net assets of $8.3 million, or 2.6%. Net assets invested in capital assets, net of related debt, increased by $5.1 million, or 2.1%, because capital asset additions exceeded deductions and depreciation expense. Unrestricted net assets decreased by $13.2 million, or 21.5%, due primarily to decreased investment income (which went from ($533,000) in 2008 to ($6.5 million) in 2009), and increased operating expenses (which went from $257.3 million in 2008 to $269.9 million in 2009). Expenses for salaries and wages, fringe benefits, and energy were higher in 2009 than in 2008.

Statement of Revenue, Expenses and Changes in Net Assets

The statement of revenues, expenses and changes in net assets presents the revenues earned and expenses incurred during the year. Activities are reported as either operating or nonoperating. As a public institution, the University is dependent on state assistance. This dependency contributed toward an operating deficit because the financial reporting model classifies state appropriations as nonoperating revenue. The utilization of capital assets is reflected in the financial statements as depreciation, which amortizes the cost of an asset over its expected useful life. Summarized revenue, expenses, and changes in net assets for the years ended June 30, 2010, June 30, 2009 and June 30, 2008 are as follows:

Total revenue and other changes in fiscal 2010, 2009 and 2008 was $298.8 million, $264.9 million, and $259.3 million, respectively. The most significant sources of 2010 operating revenue for the University were student tuition and fees of $126.2 million, grants and contracts of $20.5 million, and auxiliary services of $15.9 million.

Revenue from tuition and fees (net of scholarship allowances) increased in 2010 from 2009 by $10.9 million, or 9.5%, due to an increase in enrollment and an increase in tuition rates. Headcount enrollment increased by 6.9% from the prior year, while full-time equivalent enrollment increased by 7.4% from the prior year. A tuition increase of 3.5% was implemented in the spring 2010 semester.

Revenue from tuition and fees (net of scholarship allowances) decreased in 2009 from 2008 by $1.4 million, or 1.2%, due primarily to an increase in scholarships allowances (which are netted against revenue) of $1.3 million. Enrollment was essentially flat (headcount enrollment increased by 0.36%), and there were no tuition increases.

Revenue from grants and contracts decreased in 2009 from 2008 by $4.7 million, or 20.1%. The decline was in federal grants, and is attributable to fewer proposals for federal funding being funded. This decline was reversed in 2010, with revenue from federal grants and contracts increasing by $2.3 million, or 23.9%, over 2009.
Total expenses in fiscal 2010, 2009 and 2008 were $275.0 million, $273.3 million, and $260.2 million, respectively. Operating expenses include the costs of instruction, research, public service, general administration, utilities, libraries, and auxiliary services. Operating expenses also include depreciation and amortization. The increase in total expenses of $1.7 million (0.6%) in 2010 was due primarily to increased interest on debt. The increases in operating expenses of $12.6 million (4.9%) in 2009 were due primarily to salary increases granted to University employees, increases in the cost of medical insurance and other fringe benefits, and rising costs for energy.

Sources of nonoperating revenue include state appropriations of $63.7 million in 2010, $79.1 million in 2009, and $72.9 million in 2008; grants and contracts of $24.8 million in 2010, $18.0 million in 2009, and $16.4 million in 2008; gifts of $4.5 million in 2010, $4.6 million in 2009, and $6.4 million in 2008; and investment income (loss) of $7.7 million in 2010, ($6.5 million) in 2009, and ($553,000) in 2008. State funding increased in 2009 by $6.1 million, or 8.4%, but declined in 2010 by $15.4 million, or 19.4%, as the State used federal stimulus dollars to replace State funds. In 2010, such federal stimulus funds passed-through the State and received by the University as subsidy amounted to $10.4 million.

Net nonoperating revenue increased in 2010 from 2009 by $14.1 million, or 15.3%, due primarily to increases in funding for the Federal Pell Grants program and federal stimulus funds, offset by a decrease in state support. Net nonoperating revenue decreased in 2009 from 2008 by $562,000, or 0.6%, due primarily to the decline in investment income, offset by the increase in state support.

Other changes consist primarily of state capital appropriations of $20.0 million in 2010, $15.1 million in 2009, and $3.4 million in 2008.

Statement of Cash Flows

The statement of cash flows presents information related to cash inflows and outflows summarized by operating, noncapital financing, capital financing and investing activities, and helps measure the ability to meet financial obligations as they mature. A summary of the statement of cash flows for the years ended June 30, 2010, June 30, 2009 and June 30, 2008 is as follows:

Major sources of cash included student tuition and fees of $125.2 million in 2010, $116.1 million in 2009, and $116.1 million in 2008; state appropriations of $74.1 million in 2010, $79.1 million in 2009, and $72.9 million in 2008; grants and contracts (operating and nonoperating) of $46.0 million in 2010, $38.4 million in 2009, and $41.4 million in 2008; and auxiliary activities of $15.9 million in

The largest payments were for employee compensation and benefits totaling $163.9 million in 2010, $163.8 million in 2009, and $163.3 million in 2008; suppliers of goods and services totaling $87.9 million in 2010, $86.8 million in 2009, and $80.8 million in 2008; and purchases of capital assets totaling $99.4 million in 2010, $60.1 million in 2009, and $37.8 million in 2008.

The change in cash flows from 2009 to 2010 in the investing category is due primarily to the University electing to leave most of its cash in the bank in 2010 (because the rate of return was higher than other short-term investment vehicles), which resulted in a decrease in investments purchased.

The changes in cash flows from 2009 to 2010 and from 2008 to 2009 in the capital financing category is due primarily to the $42.8 million capital lease for energy conservation projects that was issued in 2009.

Credit Rating

The University’s bonds are rated “A” by Standard & Poor’s, with the most recent rating published on April 14, 2008. This rating is consistent with the years ended June 30, 2009 and 2008. The highest achievable rating is “AAA.” The University’s capacity to meet its financial obligations is considered strong considering this rating.

Looking Ahead

The ability of the University to fulfill its mission and execute its strategic plan is directly influenced by enrollment, state support, and the cost of healthcare, utilities, employee compensation and unfunded state and federal mandates.

In the fall of 2010, headcount enrollment at the University climbed to 17,204, increase of 4.2% from fall 2009 and the highest enrollment at the University in 18 years. Furthermore, first-year students entered the University as the most academically competitive class in its history.

Paramount to the University’s continuing success is its accreditation by the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools (NCA), which in 2000 awarded the University a 10 year renewal with enthusiasm and without condition. A team from the NCA will visit the University in Fall 2010 as part of the normal reaccreditation process.

The University faces significant cost pressures in the future. These relate to attracting and retaining high-quality faculty and staff, increasing costs of medical care and prescription drugs, volatile energy prices, and others.

A critical element to the University’s future is its relationship with the State. There is a direct relationship between the level of state support and the University’s ability to control tuition growth, as declines in state appropriations generally result in increased tuition levels. The state’s capital appropriations continue to support construction and renovation of the University’s facilities. Economic pressures affecting the State may affect the State’s future support of the University.

In September 2010, the State announced the planned lapse of $127.5 million in state subsidy to higher education for fiscal year 2011. The State’s estimate is that the University’s June 2011 subsidy payment from the State will be reduced by $4.7 million, which represents a reduction in the State’s support of the University for 2011 of 6.4%.
It has been widely reported that the State faces a revenue shortfall of $8 billion for its biennial budget that begins July 1, 2011 and ends June 30, 2013. As the State’s Constitution requires the adoption of a balanced budget, it is virtually certain that the State will have to cut spending and that support to higher education will be affected. The amount of any reduction in the State’s support of the University is not known at this time.

In the summer of 2010, the University’s president appointed a budget task force and charged it to make recommendations as to how the University would maintain a balanced budget if its State subsidy were to be cut by 10%, 15%, or 20%. The report of the task force is due to the president by December 31, 2010.

NOTE 1 – SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES

Organization and Basis of Presentation

Cleveland State University (the “University”) was established by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio (the “State”) in 1964 by Statutory Act under Chapter 3344 of the Ohio Revised Code. As such, the University is a component unit of the State. The University is exempt from federal income taxes under Section 115 of the Internal Revenue Code, except for unrelated business income.

In accordance with Governmental Accounting Standards Board (GASB) Statement No. 14, The Reporting Entity, the University’s financial statements are included, as a discretely presented component unit, in the State’s Comprehensive Annual Financial Report.

The financial statements have been prepared in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America, as prescribed by GASB Statement No. 35, Basic Financial Statements – and Management’s Discussion and Analysis – for Public Colleges and Universities. GASB Statement No. 35 establishes standards for external financial reporting for public colleges and universities and requires that resources be classified for accounting and reporting purposes into the following net asset categories:

- Invested in capital assets, net of related debt: Capital assets, net of accumulated depreciation and outstanding principal balances of debt attributable to the acquisition, construction or improvement of those assets.

- Restricted, Expendable: Net assets whose use by the University is subject to externally-imposed stipulations that can be fulfilled by actions of the University pursuant to those stipulations or that expire by the passage of time. Income generated from these funds may be designated for student scholarships, loans, instruction, research, and other specific University needs.

- Restricted, Nonexpendable: Net assets subject to externally imposed stipulations that they be maintained permanently by the University. Income generated from these funds may be designated for student scholarships, loans, instruction, research, and other specific University needs.

- Unrestricted: Net assets that are not subject to externally imposed stipulations. Unrestricted net assets may be designated for specific purposes by action of management or may otherwise be limited by contractual agreements with outside parties.

The accompanying financial statements have been prepared on the accrual basis. The University reports a Business-Type Activity, as defined by GASB Statement No. 35, Business-Type Activities as those that are financed in whole or in part by fees charged to external parties for goods or services.
FASB Pronouncements

Pursuant to GASB Statement No. 20, Accounting and Financial Reporting for Proprietary Funds and Other Governmental Entities That Use Proprietary Fund Accounting, the University has the option to apply all Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB) pronouncements issued after November 30, 1989, unless the FASB conflicts with the GASB. The University has elected not to apply FASB pronouncements issued after the applicable date.

Operating Activities

The University’s policy for defining operating activities as reported on the statement of revenue, expenses and changes in net assets are those that result from exchange transactions such as payments received for providing services and payments made for goods or services received. The University also classifies as operating revenue grants classified as exchange transactions and auxiliary activities. Certain significant revenue streams relied upon for operations are recorded as nonoperating revenue, including state appropriations and investment income. Operating expenses include educational resources, administrative expenses and depreciation on capital assets. Under the University’s decentralized management structure, it is the responsibility of individual departments to determine whether to first apply restricted or unrestricted resources when an expense is incurred for purposes for which both restricted and unrestricted net assets are available. The principal operating revenue is student tuition and fees. Student tuition and fees revenue is presented net of scholarships and fellowships applied to student accounts.

Summary of Significant Accounting Policies

Cash and Cash Equivalents. The University considers all highly liquid investments purchased with an original maturity of three months or less to be cash equivalents.

Investments. Investments are recorded at fair value, as established by the major securities markets. Purchases and sales of investments are accounted for on the trade date basis. Investment income is recorded on the accrual basis. Realized and unrealized gains and losses are reported as investment income. The University classifies all investments that mature in less than one year as current investments. Endowment investments are subject to the restrictions of gift instruments, requiring principal to be maintained in perpetuity with only the income from the investments available for expenditure. The University may set aside other assets for the same purposes as endowment investments (quasi-endowment); the University may expend the principal of quasi-endowment at any time.

Inventories. Inventories are reported at cost. Cost is determined on the average cost basis.

Capital Assets. Capital assets are stated at historical cost or at an appraised value at date of donation, if acquired by gift. It is the University’s policy to capitalize equipment costing $2,500 or more and buildings and improvements costing $100,000 or more. Depreciation of capital assets is provided on a straight-line basis over the estimated useful lives (5 to 40 years) of the respective assets and is not allocated to the functional expenditure categories. Amortization of the capitalized cost of assets held under capital leases is generally computed using the straight-line method over the estimated useful lives of the underlying assets or the term of the lease, whichever is shorter. The University capitalizes but does not depreciate works of art or historical treasures that are held for exhibition, education, research and public service. Deferred bond issuance costs are capitalized and amortized over the life of the bonds using the straight-line method.
Compensated Absences. Classified employees earn vacation at rates specified under state law. Full-time administrators and 12 month faculty earn vacation at a rate of 22 days per year. The maximum amount of vacation that an employee can carry over from one fiscal year to the next is 30 days.

All University employees are entitled to a sick leave credit equal to 10 hours for each month of service (earned on a pro rata basis for less than full-time employees). This sick leave will either be absorbed by time off due to illness or injury, or within certain limitations, be paid to the employee upon retirement. The amount paid to an employee, with 10 or more years of service upon retirement, is limited to one-quarter of the accumulated sick leave up to a maximum of 240 hours.

The University has an accrued liability for all accumulated vacation hours, plus an estimate of the amount of sick leave that will be paid upon retirement. Salary-related fringe benefits have also been accrued.

Deferred Revenue. Deferred revenue consists primarily of amounts received in advance of an event, such as student tuition and fees, and advance ticket sales related to the next fiscal year.

Summer term tuition and fees and corresponding expenses relating to the portion of the term that is within the current fiscal year are recognized as tuition revenue and operating expense. The portion of sessions falling into the next fiscal year are recorded as deferred revenue and prepaid expense in the statement of net assets and will be recognized in the following fiscal year.

Perkins Loan Program. Funds provided by the United States government under the Federal Perkins Loan program are loaned to qualified students and re-loaned after collection. These funds are ultimately refundable to the government and, therefore, are recorded as a liability in the accompanying financial statement of net assets.

Auxiliary Enterprises. Auxiliary enterprise revenue primarily represents revenue generated by parking, residence hall, Wolstein Center, food service, bookstore, recreation center, childcare center and intercollegiate athletics.

Scholarship Allowances and Student Aid. Financial aid to students is reported in the statement of revenues, expenses, and changes in net assets under the alternative method as prescribed by the National Association of College and University Business Officers (NACUBO). Certain aid such as loans, funds provided to students as awarded by third parties, and Federal Direct Lending is accounted for as a third-party payment (credited to the student’s account as if the student made the payment). All other aid is reflected in the financial statements as operating expenses, or scholarship allowances, which reduce revenue. The amount reported as operating expense represents the portion of aid that was provided to the student in the form of cash. Scholarship allowances represent the portion of aid provided to the student in the form of reduced tuition. Under the alternative method followed by the University, scholarship allowances are computed by allocating the cash payments to students, excluding payments for services, to the ratio of aid not considered to be third-party aid to total aid.

Component Units. The Cleveland State University Foundation, Inc. (the “Foundation”) and the Euclid Avenue Housing Corporation (the “Corporation”) are private nonprofit organizations that report under FASB standards, Financial Reporting for Not-for-Profit Organizations. As such, certain revenue recognition criteria and presentation features are different from GASB revenue recognition criteria and presentation features. No modifications have been made to the Foundation’s or the Corporation’s financial information included in the University’s financial report for these differences.
Use of Estimates. The preparation of financial statements in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the amounts reported in the financial statements and accompanying notes. Actual results may differ from those estimates.

NOTE 2 – DEPOSITS AND INVESTMENTS

Deposits

Custodial credit risk is the risk that, in the event of the failure of a depository financial institution, the University will not be able to recover deposits or will not be able to recover collateral securities that are in the possession of an outside party. Protection of University cash and deposits is provided by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation as well as qualified securities pledged by the institution holding the assets. Under State law, financial institutions must collateralize all public deposits. The value of the pooled collateral must equal at least 105 percent of public funds deposited. Collateral is held by trustees including the Federal Reserve Bank and designated third-party trustees of the financial institution.

At June 30, 2010, the cash and cash equivalents balance of $24,270,510 is after the University recorded an overdraft consisting of items in transit of $5,035,527 in accounts payable. The bank balance at June 30, 2010 was $24,177,001, of which $1,255,662 was covered by federal depository insurance, and $22,921,339 was covered by collateral held by the trust department of a bank other than the pledging bank in the name of the pledging bank.

At June 30, 2009, the cash and cash equivalents balance of $11,056,456 is after the University recorded an overdraft consisting of items in transit of $5,786,959 in accounts payable. The bank balance at June 30, 2009 was $10,230,150, of which $1,118,526 was covered by federal depository insurance, and $9,111,624 was covered by collateral held by the trust department of a bank other than the pledging bank in the name of the pledging bank.

Investments

In accordance with the board of trustees’ resolution, the types of investments that may be purchased by the University include United States Treasury securities, federal government agency securities, certificates of deposit, bank repurchase agreements, commercial paper, bonds and other obligations of the State of Ohio or any of its political subdivisions, the State Treasurer’s Asset Reserve (STAR Ohio), bankers acceptances, money market funds, common stocks, and corporate bonds. The endowment investments are managed by the Foundation, which can also invest in real estate and alternative investments.

STAR Ohio is an investment pool managed by the Ohio state treasurer’s office that allows governments within the State to pool their funds for investment purposes. STAR Ohio is not registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission as an investment company, but does operate in a manner consistent with Rule 2A7 of the Investment Company Act of 1940. The investment is valued at STAR Ohio’s share price, which represents fair market value, on June 30, 2010 and 2009.

Restricted investments consist of unspent debt proceeds.
As of June 30, 2010, the University had the following types of investments and maturities:

Some of the U.S. agency securities are callable at various dates. The University believes that no securities will be called.

Interest Rate Risk. Interest rate risk is the risk that changes in interest rates will adversely affect the fair value of an investment. Investments with interest rates that are fixed for longer periods are likely to be subject to more variability in their fair values as a result of future changes in interest rates.

Credit Risk. Credit risk is the risk that an issuer or other counterparty to an investment will not fulfill its obligations. As of June 30, 2010 and 2009, the University’s investment in STAR Ohio is rated AAA by Standard & Poor’s and Moody’s. While the University’s bond mutual fund investment itself is not rated, the credit quality of the fund’s holdings is AA or better, as rated by Standard & Poor’s and Moody’s.

Custodial Credit Risk. Custodial credit risk is the risk that, in the event of the failure of a counterparty to a transaction, the University will not be able to recover the value of investment securities that are in the possession of an outside party. At June 30, 2010 and 2009, the University had no exposure to custodial credit risk.
Concentration of Credit Risk. Concentration of credit risk is the risk of loss attributed to the magnitude of investment in a single issuer. The University’s investment policy places no limitation on the amount that may be invested in a single issuer. At June 30, 2010 and 2009, the University did not have more than 5% of its fixed income investments in any single issuer.

Foreign Currency Risk. Foreign currency risk is the risk that changes in exchange rates will adversely affect the fair value of an investment. At June 30, 2010 and 2009, investments include approximately $5.2 million and $8.5 million, respectively, managed by international equity managers that are subject to foreign currency risk. Although the University’s investment policy does not specifically address foreign currency risk, it does limit foreign investments to no more than 20% of the portfolio.

NOTE 4 – STATE SUPPORT

The University is a state-assisted institution of higher education, which receives a student-based subsidy from the State. This subsidy is determined annually, based upon a formula devised by the Ohio Board of Regents.

In addition, the State provides the funding and constructs major plant facilities on the University’s campus. The funding is obtained from the issuance of revenue bonds by the Ohio Public Facilities Commission (OPFC), which in turn causes the construction and subsequent lease of the facility, by the Ohio Board of Regents. Upon completion, the board of regents turns over control of the facility to the University. Neither the obligation for the revenue bonds issued by OPFC nor the annual debt service charges for principal and interest on the bonds are reflected in the University’s financial statements. The OPFC revenue bonds are currently being funded through appropriations to the board of regents by the general assembly.

The facilities are not pledged as collateral for the revenue bonds. Instead, the bonds are supported by a pledge of monies in the Higher Education Bond Service Fund established in the custody of the Treasurer of State. If sufficient monies are not available from this fund, a pledge exists to assess a special student fee uniformly applicable to students in state-assisted institutions of higher education throughout the State.

In May 2008, the University issued general receipts bonds in the amount of $20,910,000. The General Receipts Series 2008 Bonds were issued as fixed-rate bonds maturing in 2013, 2033 and 2036. The proceeds of the bonds were used to refinance the 2003B and 2007B Bonds. The bonds have various call provisions.

During the year ended June 30, 2007, the University issued Series 2007A general receipts bonds. The Series 2007A general receipts bonds were issued for $42,110,000, bear interest rates between 4% and 5.75%, and mature in 2036. Proceeds were used to fund the construction of a new student center.

The Series 2007B general receipts bonds were issued for $9,210,000. They bear variable interest rates that reset weekly and mature in 2036. The interest rate is set at rates based upon yield evaluations at par of comparable securities. The interest rate was 4.51% at April 24, 2008. Proceeds were used to fund the construction of a new building on the University’s campus to house the College of Education and Human Services. This bond was called and refinanced in May 2008, using the proceeds of the General Receipts Series 2008 Bonds.

In August 2004, the University issued general receipts bonds in the amount of $62,000,000. The General Receipts Series 2004 Bonds were issued as fixed-rate bonds with serial maturities through 2008 and term bonds maturing in 2014, 2019, 2024, 2029 and 2034. The proceeds of the bonds were used to pay the cost of a variety of projects, including construction of a student center, parking facilities and a bookstore, renovations to a portion of Fenn Tower, and landscaping and other permanent site improvements to the main plaza.

In June 2003, the University issued Series 2003A and 2003B (Series 2003) general receipts bonds. The Series 2003A general receipts bonds were issued for $35,745,000, bear interest rates between 2.5% and 5.25%, and mature in 2033. Proceeds were used to refund outstanding Series 1993 general receipts bonds, rehabilitate the Howe Mansion and construct an administrative center.

The University issued $3,430,000 of general receipts bonds on November 1, 1996 (Series 1996). The proceeds were used to refinance existing debt and to renovate existing buildings. The bonds have various call provisions, and mature through 2011.
Interest expense on indebtedness was $5,275,459 in fiscal 2010 and $3,360,216 in fiscal 2009. On construction-related debt, interest cost of $4,420,254, net of $626,222 of interest earned on invested proceeds, was capitalized in fiscal 2010 and $5,295,569, net of $1,426,870 of interest earned on invested proceeds, was capitalized in fiscal 2009.

The University leases various pieces of equipment which have been recorded under various capital leases in amounts representing the present value of future minimum lease payments. Capital lease obligations are collateralized by equipment with an aggregate net book value of $46,764,994 at June 30, 2010 and $44,066,383 at June 30, 2009. The capital leases have varying maturity dates through 2040.

The University has entered into various lease agreements for office equipment and office and classroom space which are considered operating leases. The University has leased space in the Fenn Tower building from the Corporation, which it uses for classrooms and meeting rooms. Total rental expense under operating leases during the years ended June 30, 2010 and 2009 amounted to $1,679,523 and $1,581,361, respectively. The operating leases have varying maturity dates through 2037.

NOTE 7 – EMPLOYMENT BENEFIT PLANS

Retirement Plans

Substantially all non-student University employees are covered by one of three retirement plans. The University faculty are covered by the State Teachers Retirement System of Ohio (STRS). Non-faculty employees are covered by the Ohio Public Employees Retirement System (OPERS). Employees may opt out of STRS and OPERS and participate in the Alternative Retirement Plan (ARP).

STRS and OPERS both offer three separate retirement plans: the defined benefit plan, the defined contribution plan, and a combined plan.

Defined Benefit Plans

STRS is a statewide retirement plan for certified teachers. STRS provides retirement and disability benefits, annual cost-of-living adjustments, and death benefits to plan members and beneficiaries. Benefits are established by state statute. Contribution rates are established by the State Teachers Retirement Board, not to exceed the statutory maximum rates of 10% for employees and 14% for employers. Currently, employees contribute 10% of covered payroll and employers contribute 14% of covered payroll. The University's contributions to STRS for the years ending June 30, 2010, 2009, and 2008 were $7,185,855, $7,402,446, and $7,408,781, respectively, equal to the required contributions for each year. STRS issues a stand-alone financial report. The report may be obtained by writing to STRS Ohio, 275 East Broad Street, Columbus, OH 43215-3771, by calling 1-888-227-7877, or by visiting the STRS Ohio Web site at www.strsoh.org.

OPERS is a statewide retirement plan, which covers non-teaching University employees. OPERS provides retirement and disability benefits, annual cost-of-living adjustments, and death benefits to plan members and beneficiaries. Benefits are established by state statute. Contribution rates are established by the Ohio Public Employee Retirement Board, not to exceed the statutory maximum rates of 10% for employees and 14% for employers. Currently, employees contribute 10% of covered payroll and employers contribute 14% of covered payroll. The University's contributions to OPERS for the years ending June 30, 2010, 2009, and 2008 were $7,228,118, $7,364,278, and $7,161,846, respectively, equal to the required contributions for each year.
OPERS issues a stand-alone financial report. The report may be obtained by writing to OPERS, 277 East Town Street, Columbus, OH 43215-4642, or by calling (614) 222-5601 or 800-222-7377.

Defined Contribution Plan

The University also offers eligible employees an alternative retirement program. The University is required to contribute to STRS 3.50% of earned compensation for those employees participating in the alternative retirement program. The University’s contributions for the years ended June 30, 2010, 2009 and 2008 were $347,415, $327,263 and $319,559, respectively, which equal 3.50% of earned compensation.

STRS also offers a defined contribution plan in addition to its long established defined benefit plan. All employee contributions and employer contributions at a rate of 10.5% are placed in an investment account directed by the employee. Disability benefits are limited to the employee’s account balance. Employees electing the defined contribution plan receive no postretirement health care benefits.

OPERS also offers a defined contribution plan, the Member-Directed Plan (MD). The MD plan does not provide disability benefits, annual cost-of-living adjustments, postretirement health care benefits or death benefits to plan members and beneficiaries. Benefits are entirely dependent on the sum of contributions and investment returns earned by each participant’s choice of investment options.

Combined Plans

STRS offers a combined plan with features of both a defined contribution plan and a defined benefit plan. In the combined plan, employee contributions are invested in self-directed investments, and the employer contribution is used to fund a reduced defined benefit. Employees electing the combined plan receive postretirement healthcare benefits.

OPERS also offers a combined plan. This is a cost-sharing, multiple-employer defined benefit plan that has elements of both a defined benefit and defined contribution plan. In the combined plan, employee contributions are invested in self-directed investments, and the employer contribution is used to fund a reduced defined benefit. OPERS also provides retirement, disability, survivor, and postretirement health care benefits to qualified members.

Post-employment Benefits

STRS provides other postemployment benefits (OPEB) to all retirees and their dependents, while OPERS provides postretirement health care coverage to age and service retirees (and dependents) with 10 or more years of qualifying Ohio service credit. Health care coverage for disability recipients and primary survivor recipients is also available under OPERS. A portion of each employer’s contributions is set aside for the funding of postretirement health care. For STRS, this rate was 1.0% of the total 14.00%, while the OPERS rate was 7.0% from January 1 through March 31, 2009 and 5.5% from April 1 through June 30, 2009 of the total 14.00% for the year ended June 30, 2009.

The Ohio Revised Code provides the statutory authority for public employers to fund postretirement health care through their contributions to STRS and OPERS. Postretirement healthcare under STRS is financed on a pay-as-you-go basis. Assets available in the health care reserve fund for STRS amounted to $2.7 billion at June 30, 2009 (the latest information available). The number of benefit recipients eligible for OPEB was 129,659 for STRS at June 30, 2009. The amount contributed by the University to STRS to fund these benefits for the years ended June 30, 2010, 2009 and 2008 was $513,275, $528,746, and $529,199, respectively.
Postretirement health care under OPERS is advance-funded on an actuarially determined basis. The actuarial value of OPERS net assets available for OPEB at December 31, 2008 (the latest information available) is $10.7 billion. The actuarially accrued liability and the unfunded actuarial accrued liability, based on the actuarial cost method used, were $29.6 billion and $18.9 billion, respectively. Significant actuarial assumptions include a 6.5% investment return, a 4% individual pay increases, and a 4% increase in health care costs. All investments are carried at market value. For actuarial valuations purposes, a smoothed market approach is used. The number of OPERS active contributing participants was 357,584 for the year ended December 31, 2009. The amount contributed by the University to OPERS for OPEB funding for the years ended June 30, 2010, 2009 and 2008 was $3,614,059, $3,682,139 and $2,579,782, respectively.

NOTE 8 – RISK MANAGEMENT

The University is exposed to various risks of loss related to torts; theft of, damage to, and destruction of assets; errors and omissions; injuries to employees; and natural disasters. On July 1, 1993, the University joined with 11 other state-assisted universities in Ohio to form an insurance-purchasing pool for the acquisition of commercial property and casualty insurance. The University pays annual premiums to the pool for its property and casualty insurance coverage based on its percentage of the total insurable value to the pool. Future contributions will be adjusted based upon each university’s loss history. Each university has a base deductible of $100,000. The next $250,000 of any one claim is the responsibility of the pool, which has a total annual aggregate deductible limit of $700,000. The commercial property insurer is liable for the amount of any claim in excess of $350,000, or $100,000 in the event the pool has reached its annual limit. There were no significant reductions in coverage from the prior year.

The University maintains a self-insured dental plan for its employees. The University’s risk exposure is limited to claims incurred. The changes in the total liability for actual and estimated dental claims for the years ended June 30, 2010 and 2009 are summarized below:

The University maintains a self-insured medical plan for its employees. The University’s risk exposure is limited to claims incurred. There is a $150,000 specific stop loss for any given claim. Medical claims are based upon estimates of the claims liabilities. Estimates are based upon past experience, medical inflation trends, and current claims outstanding, including year-end lag analysis. Differences between the estimated claims payable and actual claims paid are reported as an operating expense in the statement of revenue, expenses and changes in net assets.

The University participates in a State pool of agencies and universities that pays workers’ compensation premiums into the State Insurance Fund on a pay-as-you-go basis (the “Plan”), which pays workers’ compensation benefits to beneficiaries who have been injured on the job. Losses from asserted and unasserted claims for the participating state agencies and universities in the Plan are accrued by the Ohio Bureau of Workers’ Compensation (the “Bureau”) based on estimates that incorporate past experience, as well as other considerations including the nature of each claim or incident and relevant trend factors. Participants in the Plan annually fund the workers’ compensation liability based on rates set by the Bureau to collect cash needed in subsequent fiscal years to pay the workers’ compensation claims of participating state agencies and universities.

During the normal course of its operations, the University has become a defendant in various legal actions. It is not possible to estimate the outcome of these legal actions; however, in the opinion of legal counsel and the University administration, the disposition of these pending cases will not have a material adverse effect on the financial condition or operations of the University. Settled claims resulting from these risks have not exceeded insurance coverage in any of the past three fiscal years.

NOTE 9 – GRANT CONTINGENCIES

The University receives significant financial assistance from numerous federal, state and local agencies in the form of grants. The disbursement of funds received under these programs generally requires compliance with terms and conditions specified in the grant agreements and are subject to audit by the grantor agencies. Any disallowed claims resulting from such audits could become a liability of the University. However, in the opinion of the University administration, any such disallowed claims will not have a material effect on any of the financial statements of the University at June 30, 2010.
NOTE 10 – NET ASSETS

The temporarily and permanently restricted net assets of the Foundation are balances whose use by the Foundation has been limited by the donors to a specific time period or purpose. Temporarily restricted net assets are available, and permanently restricted net assets are held in perpetuity, for the following purposes:

NOTE 11 – COMPONENT UNITS

The Foundation and the Corporation are legally separate not-for-profit entities organized for the purpose of providing support to the University. Both the Foundation and the Corporation are exempt from federal income taxes under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code.

The Foundation acts primarily as a fundraising organization to supplement the resources that are available to the University in support of its programs. The board of the foundation is self-perpetuating and consists of business leaders and friends of the University. Although the University does not control the timing or amount of receipts from the Foundation, the majority of resources, or income thereon, that the Foundation holds and invests are restricted to the activities of the University by donors. Because these restricted resources held by the Foundation can only be used by, or for the benefit of, the University, the Foundation is considered a component unit of the University and is discretely presented in the University’s financial statements. Complete financial statements for the Foundation can be obtained from the Office of the Executive Director at 2121 Euclid Avenue, Keith Building Room 323, Cleveland, OH 44115-2214.

During the years ended June 30, 2010 and 2009, the Foundation paid $3,880,958 and $3,921,197, respectively, to the University. At June 30, 2010 and 2009, the University had receivables from the Foundation totaling $662,662 and $777,496, respectively.

As authorized by the board of trustees, beginning in fiscal year 1998, the University placed endowment and quasi-endowment funds on deposit with the Foundation for investment. At June 30, 2010 and 2009, the amount on deposit with the Foundation totaled $1,993,632 and $1,804,588, respectively.

The Corporation was organized primarily to further the educational mission of the University by developing, owning and managing housing for the students, faculty and staff of the University. On March 1, 2005, the Corporation leased the Fenn Tower building, located on the University’s campus, from the University. Annual rent is equal to the net available cash flows from the Fenn Tower project. No rent was paid during fiscal years 2010 and 2009. On March 1, 2005, the Corporation entered into a development agreement with American Campus Communities (ACC) to plan, design and construct housing units in Fenn Tower. In addition, the Corporation entered into a management agreement with ACC to manage Fenn Tower. The project was completed in August 2006. The facility has the capacity to house 430 residents.
On March 17, 2005, the Corporation issued $34,385,000 of Cleveland-Cuyahoga County Port Authority bonds (Series 2005 Bonds) to finance the costs of the Fenn Tower project. The Series 2005 Bonds are serial bonds maturing between 2007 and 2036. Interest rates are fixed and vary from 3.0% to 4.5%.

On June 1, 2008, the Corporation leased land, owned by the University and located on its campus, from the University. On August 22, 2008, the Corporation entered into a design-build agreement with the Apostolos Group to construct a 623-car parking garage on the site. On July 1, 2008, the Corporation entered into a lease agreement with the University to operate the garage once construction is completed. On July 25, 2008, the Corporation issued $14,500,000 of tax-exempt bonds with the Cleveland-Cuyahoga County Port Authority to finance construction of the garage. The Series 2008 Bonds are serial bonds maturing between 2009 and 2040. They bear variable interest rates that reset weekly. The interest rate is set at rates based upon yield evaluations at par of comparable securities. The interest rate was .20% at June 30, 2010. Construction of the garage was completed in August 2009.

On December 18, 2009, the Corporation leased land, owned by the University and located on its campus, from the University. On August 24, 2009, the Corporation entered into a development agreement with ACC to plan, design and construct 600 beds of student housing and a 300-car parking garage on this land. In addition, the Corporation entered into a management agreement with ACC to manage the student housing. On December 18, 2009, the Corporation issued $59,005,000 of County of Cuyahoga, Ohio bonds (Series 2009 bonds) to finance the project. The 2009 bonds are serial bonds maturing between 2011 and 2042. They bear variable interest rates that are reset weekly. The interest rate is set at rates based upon yield evaluations at par of comparable securities. The interest rate was .26% at June 30, 2010.

Independent Auditor's Report

To the Board of Trustees
Cleveland State University

We have audited the basic financial statements of Cleveland State University, a component unit of the State of Ohio, as of and for the years ended June 30, 2011 and 2010, which collectively comprise the University’s basic financial statements, and have issued our report thereon dated October 14, 2011. Those basic financial statements are the responsibility of the management of Cleveland State University. Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these basic financial statements based on our audits. We did not audit the financial statements of Cleveland State University Foundation, Inc. and Euclid Avenue Housing Corporation, which represent all of the assets and revenue of the presented component units ("component units"). Those financial statements were audited by other auditors, whose report thereon has been furnished to us, and our opinion, insofar as it relates to the amounts included for the component units, is based on the report of the other auditors.

We conducted our audits in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America and the standards applicable to financial audits contained in Government Auditing Standards, issued by the Comptroller General of the United States. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audits to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the basic financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the basic financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, based on our audits and the reports of the other auditors, the basic financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the respective financial position of Cleveland State University and its presented component units as of June 30, 2011 and 2010 and the respective changes in financial position and cash flows for the years then ended, in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America.

In accordance with Government Auditing Standards, we also have issued our report dated October 28, 2011 on our consideration of Cleveland State University’s internal control over financial reporting and on our tests of its compliance with certain provisions of laws, regulations, contracts, grant agreements, and other matters for the years ended June 30, 2011 and 2010. The purpose of that report is to describe the scope of our testing of internal control over financial reporting and compliance and the results of that testing, and not to provide opinions on the internal control or on compliance. That report is an integral part of an audit performed in accordance with Government Auditing Standards and should be considered in assessing the results of our audits.
To the Board of Trustees
Cleveland State University

The management’s discussion and analysis presented on pages 3 through 10 is not a required part of the basic financial statements, but is supplemental information required by the Governmental Accounting Standards Board. We have applied certain limited procedures, which consisted principally of inquiries of management, regarding the methods of measurement and presentation of the supplemental information. However, we did not audit the information and express no opinion on it.

Toledo, Ohio
October 28, 2011
Introduction

The following discussion and analysis provides an overview of the financial position and activities of Cleveland State University (the “University”) as of and for the year ended June 30, 2011. This discussion has been prepared by management and should be read in conjunction with the financial statements and the notes thereto, which follow this section.

The University was established in 1964 by action of the Ohio General Assembly and is part of the State of Ohio’s (the “State”) system of State supported and State assisted institutions of higher education. It is one of the 13 state universities in Ohio. By statute it is a body politic and corporate and an instrumentality of the State. Located in the city of Cleveland, the University is an urban institution. A majority of the University’s students commute daily from their homes in the Cleveland metropolitan area.

Using the Annual Financial Report

The University’s financial report includes financial statements prepared in accordance with Governmental Accounting Standards Board (GASB) Statement No. 35, Basic Financial Statements - and Management’s Discussion and Analysis - for Public Colleges and Universities. These principles require that financial statements be presented on a consolidated basis to focus on the financial condition, the changes in financial condition, and the cash flows of the University as a whole. Many other non-financial factors also must be considered in assessing the overall health of the University, such as enrollment trends, student retention, strength of the faculty, condition of the buildings, and the safety of the campus.

The financial statements prescribed by GASB Statement No. 35 (the statement of net assets, the statement of revenue, expenses and changes in net assets, and the statement of cash flows) present financial information in a form similar to that used by corporations. They are prepared under the accrual basis of accounting, whereby revenue and assets are recognized when the service is provided and expenses and liabilities are recognized when others provide the service, regardless of when cash is exchanged.

Under the provisions of GASB Statement No. 39, Determining Whether Certain Organizations are Component Units, the Cleveland State University Foundation, Inc. (the “Foundation”) and the Euclid Avenue Housing Corporation (the “Corporation”) are treated as component units of the University. Accordingly, the Foundation and the Corporation are discretely presented in the University’s financial statements. The Foundation and the Corporation are excluded from the management’s discussion and analysis. Financial statements for the Foundation can be obtained from the Office of the Executive Director at 2121 Euclid Avenue, Keith Building Room 300, Cleveland, OH 44115-2214; financial statements for the Corporation can be obtained from the Office of the President at 2121 Euclid Avenue, Administration Center Room 210, Cleveland, OH 44115-2214.
Statement of Net Assets

The statement of net assets presents the financial position of the University at the end of the fiscal year and includes all assets and liabilities. The difference between assets and liabilities - net assets - is one indicator of the current financial condition of the University, while the change in net assets is an indicator of whether the overall financial condition has improved or worsened during the year. Assets and liabilities are generally measured using current values. One notable exception is capital assets, which are stated at historical cost less an allowance for depreciation. A summary of the University’s assets, liabilities, and net assets at June 30, 2011, 2010 and 2009 is as follows:

Current assets consist primarily of cash, operating investments, accounts and notes receivable, prepaid expenses, deferred charges and inventories. Current liabilities consist primarily of accounts payable, accrued payroll and other liabilities, deferred revenue and the current portion of long-term debt.

Current assets decreased in 2011 from 2010 primarily due to a decrease in investments, which was partially offset by an increase in cash.

Current assets increased in 2010 from 2009 primarily due to an increase in cash and cash equivalents, which was partially offset by a decrease in investments. In 2010, the University kept most of its cash on deposit with the bank, because the rate of interest paid by the bank was greater than other short-term investment vehicles.

Net capital assets increased in 2011 from 2010 by $20.9 million, or 4.5%, and in 2010 from 2009 by $80.2 million, or 21.1%. Both increases were due to construction on the University’s campus. Projects under construction during these years include a new student center building and a new building to house the College of Education and Human Services.

Other assets decreased in 2011 from 2010 by $10.2 million or 10.2%. The decrease was due primarily to the spending of bond proceeds on construction.

Other assets decreased in 2010 from 2009 by $50.8 million, or 33.7%. The decrease was due primarily to the spending of bond proceeds on construction.
Liabilities decreased in 2011 from 2010 by .5 million or .02%. Liabilities increased in 2010 from 2009 by $8.8 million, or 3.3%, due primarily to a $14.5 million capital lease for a new parking garage that was entered into in 2010.

Capital and Debt Activities

One critical factor affecting the quality of the University’s programs is the development and renewal of its capital assets. Capital additions totaled $45.7 million in 2011, $100.4 million in 2010, and $57.1 million in 2009. Capital retirements totaled $5.9 million in 2011, $6.0 million in 2010, and $25.7 million in 2009. Capital additions and retirements for 2011, 2010 and 2009 exclude transfers from construction in progress to buildings in the amounts of $87.0 million, $31.3 million and $0.7 million, respectively. Capital additions include construction of new facilities, repair and renovation of existing facilities, and acquisition of equipment and library books. Capital asset additions are funded, in part, by capital appropriations from the State. These appropriations amounted to $4.6 million in 2011, $20.0 million in 2010, and $15.1 million in 2009.

In August 2009, the University entered into a capital lease with the Corporation in the amount of $14.5 million. The lease covers a parking garage that was constructed by the Corporation on the University’s campus. The lease requires the University to operate and maintain the garage, and to make periodic payments to the Corporation equal to its required debt service payments.

In March 2009, the University entered into a capital lease in the amount of $42.8 million. Proceeds will be used to fund a variety of energy conservation projects on the University’s campus. When the projects are complete, energy savings will be sufficient to fund the lease payments.

Net Assets

Net assets represent the residual interest in the University’s assets after liabilities are deducted. The University’s net assets at June 30, 2011, 2010 and 2009 are summarized as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>

</table>

Net assets invested in capital assets, net of related debt represent the University’s capital assets net of accumulated depreciation and outstanding principal balances of debt attributable to the acquisition, construction, or improvement of those assets. Changes in this category of net assets are due to the net effect of additions to, disposals of, and depreciation on capital assets. In both 2011 and 2010, additions exceeded disposals and depreciation.

Restricted - expendable net assets are subject to externally imposed restrictions governing their use. Changes in this category are due to the timing of revenue and expenses in funds provided by donors and grantors. Restricted - nonexpendable net assets consist primarily of endowment funds held by the University. Changes in this category are driven primarily by investment performance, which was positive in both 2011 and 2010.
Unrestricted net assets are not subject to externally imposed stipulations. This category includes funds functioning as endowment (quasi-endowment) of $5.3 million at June 30, 2011, $4.5 million at June 30, 2010, and $4.0 million at June 30, 2009. The changes in value from year to year are due to gains or losses on investments.

For the year ended June 30, 2011, the University had an increase in total net assets of $9.6 million, or 2.9%. Net assets invested in capital assets, net of related debt, decreased by $4.4 million, or -1.7%, because deductions and depreciation expense exceeded capital asset additions. Unrestricted net assets increased by $12.1 million or 18.2%, due primarily to increases in net tuition income (which went from $126.2 million in 2010 to $140.7 million in 2011) and in investment income (which went from $7.7 million in 2010 to $13.2 million in 2011), and increased operating expenses (which went from $269.7 million in 2010 to $292.2 million in 2011). Expenses for salaries and wages, and depreciation were higher in 2011 than 2010.

For the year ended June 30, 2010, the University had an increase in total net assets of $23.8 million, or 7.6%. Net assets invested in capital assets, net of related debt, increased by $7.4 million, or 3.0%, because capital asset additions exceeded deductions and depreciation expense. Unrestricted net assets increased by $18.2 million, or 37.5%, due primarily to increases in net tuition income (which went from $115.3 million in 2009 to $126.2 million in 2010) and in investment income (which went from $6.5 million in 2009 to $7.7 million in 2010), along with a decrease in operating expenses in 2010 from 2009 of $0.2 million. The decrease in operating expenses was the result of a freeze on salaries and wages and energy conservation efforts.

Statement of Revenue, Expenses and Changes in Net Assets

The statement of revenue, expenses and changes in net assets presents the revenue earned and expenses incurred during the year. Activities are reported as either operating or nonoperating. As a public institution, the University is dependent on State assistance. This dependency contributed toward an operating deficit because the financial reporting model classifies State appropriations as nonoperating revenue. The utilization of capital assets is reflected in the financial statements as depreciation, which amortizes the cost of an asset over its expected useful life. Summarized revenue, expenses, and changes in net assets for the years ended June 30, 2011, June 30, 2010 and June 30, 2009 are as follows:

Net assets at beginning of year: 337,059,117, 313,257,696, 321,585,430

Net assets at end of year: $346,737,213, $337,059,117, $313,257,696

Total revenue and other changes in fiscal 2011, 2010 and 2009 were $311.4 million, $298.8 million, and $264.9 million, respectively. The most significant sources of 2011 operating revenue for the University were student tuition and fees of $140.7 million, grants and contracts of $19.2 million, and auxiliary services of $20.8 million.

Revenue from tuition and fees (net of scholarship allowances) increased in 2011 from 2010 by $14.5 million, or 11.5% due to an increase in enrollment and an increase in tuition rates. Headcount enrollment increased by 5.3% from the prior year, while full-time equivalent enrollment increased by 6.1% from the prior year. A tuition increase of 3.3% was implemented in the Fall 2011 semester.

Revenue from tuition and fees (net of scholarship allowances) increased in 2010 from 2009 by $10.9 million, or 9.5%, due to an increase in enrollment and an increase in tuition rates. Headcount enrollment increased by 6.9% from the prior year, while full-time equivalent enrollment increased by 7.4% from the prior year. A tuition increase of 3.5% was implemented in the Spring 2010 semester.

Revenue from grants and contracts increased in 2011 by $3.4 million or 7.5%, and increased in 2010 by $8.5 million or 23.2%. The increases are due to higher revenue from federal grants and contracts.
Total expenses in fiscal 2011, 2010 and 2009 were $301.7 million, $275.0 million, and $273.3 million, respectively. Operating expenses include the costs of instruction, research, public service, general administration, utilities, libraries, and auxiliary services. Operating expenses also include depreciation and amortization. The increase in total expenses of $26.7 million (10.0%) in 2011 was due primarily to increased interest on debt and depreciation expense. The increase in total expenses of $1.7 million (0.6%) in 2010 was due primarily to increased interest on debt.

Sources of nonoperating revenue include State appropriations of $63.5 million in 2011, $63.7 million in 2010, and $79.1 million in 2009; grants and contracts of $29.5 million in 2011, $24.8 million in 2010, and $18.0 million in 2009; gifts of $4.4 million in 2011, $4.5 million in 2010, and $4.6 million in 2009; and investment income (loss) of $13.2 million in 2011, $7.7 million in 2010, and ($6.5 million) in 2009. State funding decreased in 2011 by $.1 million or .23% and by $15.4 million in 2010, or 19.4%, as the State used federal stimulus dollars to replace State funds. Such federal stimulus funds passed-through the State and received by the University as subsidy amounted to $10.6 million in 2011 and $10.4 million in 2010.

Net nonoperating revenue increased in 2011 from 2010 by $5.9 million, or 5.62%, due primarily to increases in funding for the federal Pell Grants program and an increase in investment income. Net nonoperating revenue increased in 2010 from 2009 by $14.1 million, or 15.3%, due primarily to increases in funding for the federal Pell Grants program and federal stimulus funds, offset by a decrease in State support.

Other changes consist primarily of State capital appropriations of $4.6 million in 2011, $20.0 million in 2010, and $15.1 million in 2009.

Statement of Cash Flows

The statement of cash flows presents information related to cash inflows and outflows summarized by operating, noncapital financing, capital financing and investing activities, and helps measure the ability to meet financial obligations as they mature. A summary of the statement of cash flows for the years ended June 30, 2011, June 30, 2010 and June 30, 2009 is as follows:

Major sources of cash included student tuition and fees of $138.2 million in 2011, $125.2 million in 2010, and $116.1 million in 2009; State appropriations of $74.1 million in 2011, $74.1 million in 2010, and $79.1 million in 2009; grants and contracts (operating and nonoperating) of $47.0 million in 2011, $46.0 million in 2010, and $38.4 million in 2009; and auxiliary activities of $20.8 million in 2011, $15.9 million in 2010, and $16.7 million in 2009.
The largest payments were for employee compensation and benefits totaling $165.6 million in 2011, $163.9 million in 2010, and $163.8 million in 2009; suppliers of goods and services totaling $103.0 million in 2011, $88.8 million in 2010, and $86.8 million in 2009; and purchases of capital assets totaling $42.6 million in 2011, $99.4 million in 2010, and $60.1 million in 2009.

The change in cash flows from 2011 to 2010 and 2009 to 2010 in the investing category is due primarily to the University electing to leave most of its cash in the bank (because the rate of return was higher than other short-term investment vehicles), which resulted in a decrease in investments purchased.

Credit Rating

The University’s bonds are rated “A” by Standard & Poor’s, with the most recent rating published on April 14, 2008. An “A” rating indicates a strong capacity to meet financial commitments, but somewhat susceptible to adverse economic conditions and changes in circumstances. This rating is consistent with the years ended June 30, 2010 and 2009. The highest achievable rating is “AAA.” The University’s capacity to meet its financial obligations is considered strong.

Looking Ahead

The primary challenge facing Ohio public institutions of higher learning, including Cleveland State University (CSU), is remaining true to their missions in the face of shrinking public assistance. In the State of Ohio’s FY12- FY13 budget, CSU lost approximately $11 million, or 15%, of its State Share of Instruction (SSI) allocation, the major state funding source for state colleges and universities. In order to help offset this significant decline in operating revenue, the University implemented plans for certain revenue enhancements and expense reductions as part of its FY12 Operating Budget plan. Revenue from student instructional fee tuition increased 10.2% in FY11 over FY10 due to a 5% increase in student credit hour enrollment and an increase in undergraduate and graduate tuition rates of 3.3% and an increase in the law tuition rate of 6.75%. Anticipated FY12 tuition revenue should benefit from improved retention of students from FY11 plus an expected increase of approximately 2% in student credit hour enrollment in FY12, along with a tuition rate increase of approximately 5% for undergraduates and graduate courses and a 9% increase in the tuition rate for law courses. However, the FY12 ratio of state funding as a percentage of total operating revenue continued to fall to approximately 29%, giving rise to a heavier reliance on student tuition as the primary source of revenue. The ability of the University to fulfill its mission and execute its strategic plan is even more dependent upon student enrollment and tuition than it was just a year ago.

The University is also affected by decisions at the state level regarding capital funding through the biennial capital appropriations bill. The funds pay for campus renovation and maintenance of existing facilities, as well as refunding debt for state-approved projects that the University has assumed on its own. The State is not expected to provide any capital funding for the capital cycle FY11-FY12. As a result of missing an entire capital funding cycle, the University has begun to reserve operating funds for undertaking necessary capital maintenance and renovation projects on campus. The outlook for the State’s FY13-FY14 capital appropriations bill is uncertain at this time. While the State anticipates some level of appropriation, it remains to be seen whether it will be funded at historical levels.
Cleveland State University received continuing accreditation by the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools (NCA), for an additional 10-year period (2011-2020) without any conditions or qualifications. A team from the NCA visited the University in Fall 2010 as part of the standard reaccreditation process.

The University continues to face significant cost pressures in the future. These relate to attracting and retaining high quality faculty and staff, increased costs of employee benefits, most notably medical care and prescription drug coverage, and the cost of energy. The University recently reached labor contract agreements with its three major bargaining units - AAUP (faculty union), SEIU and CWA (clerical and service employees.) These contracts are for a term of three years.

In the summer of 2010, the University’s president appointed a budget task force and charged it to make recommendations as to how the University would maintain a balanced budget, pending state reductions in subsidy (SSI) for FY12. Various recommendations to the president were accepted and implemented, resulting in both labor and other expense reductions to the University’s FY12 budget. All areas of the University were directed to provide operating plans at reduced budget levels and reductions were made strategically by the president, the senior management team, and with assistance of the Budget Task Force. The core missions of student instruction and student services were essentially preserved with some moderate reductions. Other University support functions contributed more significantly to the budget targets. The University traditionally monitors its revenue sources and the operating budgets of its units very closely. While operating at a lower level of state subsidy in FY12, it appears that, barring unforeseen events, CSU should receive its expected FY12 allocation of subsidy from the State. Instructional fee tuition revenue for the Fall 2011 semester was essentially at the plan level - $250,000 short of the revenue budget of $64.6 million, .4% below plan.

NOTE 1 – SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES

Organization and Basis of Presentation

Cleveland State University (the “University”) was established by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio (the “State”) in 1964 by statutory act under Chapter 3344 of the Ohio Revised Code. As such, the University is a component unit of the State. The University is exempt from federal income taxes under Section 115 of the Internal Revenue Code, except for unrelated business income.

In accordance with Governmental Accounting Standards Board (GASB) Statement No. 14, The Reporting Entity, the University’s financial statements are included, as a discretely presented component unit, in the State’s Comprehensive Annual Financial Report.

The financial statements have been prepared in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America, as prescribed by GASB Statement No. 35, Basic Financial Statements – and Management’s Discussion and Analysis – for Public Colleges and Universities. GASB Statement No. 35 establishes standards for external financial reporting for public colleges and universities and requires that resources be classified for accounting and reporting purposes into the following net asset categories:

- Invested in capital assets, net of related debt: Capital assets, net of accumulated depreciation and outstanding principal balances of debt attributable to the acquisition, construction or improvement of those assets.

- Restricted, Expendable: Net assets whose use by the University is subject to externally imposed stipulations that can be fulfilled by actions of the University pursuant to those stipulations or that expire by the passage of time. Income generated from these funds may be designated for student scholarships, loans, instruction, research, and other specific University needs.

- Restricted, Nonexpendable: Net assets subject to externally imposed stipulations that they be maintained permanently by the University. Income generated from these funds may be designated for student scholarships, loans, instruction, research, and other specific University needs.

- Unrestricted: Net assets that are not subject to externally imposed stipulations. Unrestricted net assets may be designated for specific purposes by action of management or may otherwise be limited by contractual agreements with outside parties.

The accompanying financial statements have been prepared on the accrual basis. The University reports as a business-type activity, as defined by GASB Statement No. 35. Business-type activities are those that are financed in whole or in part by fees charged to external parties for goods or services.
FASB Pronouncements

Pursuant to GASB Statement No. 20, Accounting and Financial Reporting for Proprietary Funds and Other Governmental Entities That Use Proprietary Fund Accounting, the University has the option to apply all Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB) pronouncements issued after November 30, 1989, unless FASB conflicts with GASB. The University has elected not to apply FASB pronouncements issued after the applicable date.

Operating Activities

The University’s policy for defining operating activities as reported on the statement of revenue, expenses and changes in net assets are those that result from exchange transactions such as payments received for providing services and payments made for goods or services received. The University also classifies as operating revenue grants classified as exchange transactions and auxiliary activities. Certain significant revenue streams relied upon for operations are recorded as nonoperating revenue, including State appropriations and investment income. Operating expenses include educational resources, administrative expenses and depreciation on capital assets. Under the University’s decentralized management structure, it is the responsibility of individual departments to determine whether to first apply restricted or unrestricted resources when an expense is incurred for purposes for which both restricted and unrestricted net assets are available. The principal operating revenue is student tuition and fees. Student tuition and fees revenue is presented net of scholarships and fellowships applied to student accounts.

Summary of Significant Accounting Policies

Cash and Cash Equivalents. The University considers all highly liquid investments purchased with an original maturity of three months or less to be cash equivalents.

Investments. Investments are recorded at fair value, as established by the major securities markets. Purchases and sales of investments are accounted for on the trade date basis. Investment income is recorded on the accrual basis. Realized and unrealized gains and losses are reported as investment income. The University classifies all investments that mature in less than one year as current investments.

Endowment investments are subject to the restrictions of gift instruments, requiring principal to be maintained in perpetuity with only the income from the investments available for expenditure. The University may set aside other assets for the same purposes as endowment investments (quasi-endowment); the University may expend the principal of a quasi-endowment at any time.

Accounts Receivable Allowance. The allowance for bad debt is determined based on historical average and a reasonableness ratio of A/R to bad debt. The objective is to increase the collectibility of current receivables to assist the University's objectives regarding enrollment and retention. As such, we enforce policies that prohibit registration with an unpaid balance over $1,000 and limit registration for those students with a current unpaid balance between $200 - $1,000. The new federal regulations regarding Title IV returns have unfortunately, increased our outstanding of A/R; the ratio between the bad debt allowance and the A/R, however, is still within a reasonable parameter.

Inventories. Inventories are reported at cost. Cost is determined on the average cost basis.
Capital Assets. Capital assets are stated at historical cost or at an appraised value at date of donation, if acquired by gift. It is the University’s policy to capitalize equipment costing $2,500 or more and buildings and improvements costing $100,000 or more. Depreciation of capital assets is provided on a straight-line basis over the estimated useful lives (5 to 40 years) of the respective assets and is not allocated to the functional expenditure categories. Amortization of the capitalized cost of assets held under capital leases is generally computed using the straight-line method over the estimated useful lives of the underlying assets or the term of the lease, whichever is shorter. The University capitalizes but does not depreciate works of art or historical treasures that are held for exhibition, education, research and public service. Deferred bond issuance costs are capitalized and amortized over the life of the bonds using the straight-line method.

Compensated Absences. Classified employees earn vacation at rates specified under State law. Full-time administrators and 12-month faculty earn vacation at a rate of 22 days per year. The maximum amount of vacation that an employee can carry over from one fiscal year to the next is 30 days.

All University employees are entitled to a sick leave credit equal to 10 hours for each month of service (earned on a pro-rata basis for less than full-time employees). This sick leave will either be absorbed by time off due to illness or injury, or within certain limitations, be paid to the employee upon retirement. The amount paid to an employee, with 10 or more years of service upon retirement, is limited to one-quarter of the accumulated sick leave up to a maximum of 240 hours.

The University has an accrued liability for all accumulated vacation hours, plus an estimate of the amount of sick leave that will be paid upon retirement. Salary-related fringe benefits have also been accrued.

Deferred Revenue. Deferred revenue consists primarily of amounts received in advance of an event, such as student tuition and fees, and advance ticket sales related to the next fiscal year.

Summer term tuition and fees and corresponding expenses relating to the portion of the term that is within the current fiscal year are recognized as tuition revenue and operating expense. The portion of sessions falling into the next fiscal year is recorded as deferred revenue and prepaid expense in the statement of net assets and will be recognized in the following fiscal year.

Perkins Loan Program. Funds provided by the United States government under the Federal Perkins Loan program are loaned to qualified students and re-loaned after collection. These funds are ultimately refundable to the government and, therefore, are recorded as a liability in the accompanying statement of net assets.

Auxiliary Enterprises. Auxiliary enterprise revenue primarily represents revenue generated by parking, residence hall, Wolstein Center, food service, bookstore, recreation center, child care center and intercollegiate athletics.
Scholarship Allowances and Student Aid. Financial aid to students is reported in the statement of revenue, expenses, and changes in net assets under the alternative method as prescribed by the National Association of College and University Business Officers (NACUBO). Certain aid such as loans, funds provided to students as awarded by third parties, and Federal Direct Lending is accounted for as a third-party payment (credited to the student’s account as if the student made the payment). All other aid is reflected in the financial statements as operating expenses or scholarship allowances, which reduce revenue. The amount reported as operating expense represents the portion of aid that was provided to the student in the form of cash. Scholarship allowances represent the portion of aid provided to the student in the form of reduced tuition. Under the alternative method followed by the University, scholarship allowances are computed by allocating the cash payments to students, excluding payments for services, to the ratio of aid not considered to be third-party aid to total aid.

Component Units. The Cleveland State University Foundation, Inc. (the “Foundation”) and the Euclid Avenue Housing Corporation (the “Corporation”) are private nonprofit organizations that report under FASB standards, Financial Reporting for Not-for-Profit Organizations. As such, certain revenue recognition criteria and presentation features are different from GASB revenue recognition criteria and presentation features. No modifications have been made to the Foundation’s or the Corporation’s financial information included in the University’s financial report for these differences.

Use of Estimates. The preparation of financial statements in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the amounts reported in the financial statements and accompanying notes. Actual results may differ from those estimates.

Accounting Pronouncements

Service Concession Arrangements: In December 2010, the GASB issued Statement No. 60, Accounting and Financial Reporting for Service Concession Arrangements (SCA). An SCA is an agreement between a College/University and another legally separate College/University or private sector entity in which two things happen. First, the College/University transfers to the other entity the right and related obligation to provide public services through the use of a public asset (such as using a part of a university facility as a bookstore) in exchange for significant consideration from the other entity. In the context of these agreements, the College/University that transfers rights and obligations is referred to as the transferor. The entity to which these rights and obligations are transferred is referred to as the operator. Second, this operator - whether it is in the public or private sector - collects fees from the users or customers of the public asset (for example, students at the university/college). Finally, the transferor maintains control over the services provided. For example, the College/University has the ability to modify or approve the rates that can be charged for the services and the type of services that are provided.

For an SCA that involves an existing facility, the transferor should continue to report the capital asset. For a new facility or an improvement to an existing facility, the transferor should report the new facility or the improvement as a capital asset at fair value when the facility is placed in operation. The transferor should also report any related contractual obligations as liabilities. Finally, the transferor should report the difference between those two amounts as a deferred inflow of resources. This pronouncement must be applied for years that begin after December 15, 2011.
Reporting Entity Standards: In December 2010, the GASB issued Statement No. 61, Financial Reporting Entity: Omnibus. This standard is intended to improve the information presented about the financial reporting entity, which is made up of the College/University financial reporting entity and related entities (component units). The statement modifies certain requirements for inclusion of component units in the financial reporting entity. For organizations that previously were required to be included as component units by meeting the fiscal dependency criteria, a financial benefit or burden relationship is also needed between the College/University and that organization for it to be included in the reporting entity as a component unit. The statement also modifies the criteria for reporting component units as if they were part of the College/University (i.e., blending). Blending should be used when the College/University and the component unit have a financial benefit or burden relationship, or management has operational responsibility for the component units. Additionally, for equity interests in legally separate organizations, the entity is required to report its interest as “restricted net assets – nonspendable.” This standard is effective for financial statements for reporting periods beginning after June 15, 2012; however, earlier application is encouraged.

Private Sector Accounting Rules: In December 2010, the GASB issued Statement No. 62, Codification of Accounting and Financial Reporting Guidance Contained in Pre-November 30, 1989 FASB and AICPA Pronouncements. This changes the requirement for the College/University to apply any private sector accounting guidance that existed as of November 30, 1989 and instead incorporates all such guidance in this statement. The College/University will no longer have the ability to choose to continue to follow FASB statements written after that date, although such guidance still qualifies as “other accounting literature” in the GAAP hierarchy. This pronouncement must be applied for years that begin after December 15, 2011.

Deferred Inflows/Outflows and Net Position: In June 2011, the GASB issued Statement No. 63, Financial Reporting of Deferred Outflows of Resources, Deferred Inflows of Resources, and Net Position. This standard provides financial reporting guidance for deferred inflows and outflows of resources. Concepts Statement No. 4, Elements of Financial Statements, introduced and defined those elements as a consumption of net assets by the College/University that is applicable to a future reporting period, and an acquisition of net assets by the College/University that is applicable to a future reporting period, respectively. Previous financial reporting standards do not include guidance for reporting those financial statement elements, which are distinct from assets and liabilities. The standard also incorporates deferred outflows of resources and deferred inflows of resources into the definitions of the required components of the residual measure and by renaming that measure as net position, rather than net assets. The provisions for this standard are effective for financial statements for periods beginning after December 15, 2011.

Derivative Instruments – Termination Provisions: In June 2011, the GASB issued Statement No. 64, Derivative Instruments: Application of Hedge Accounting Termination Provisions - An Amendment of GASB Statement No. 53. This Statement clarifies whether an effective hedging relationship continues after the replacement of a swap counterparty or a swap counterparty’s credit support provider and sets forth criteria that establish when the effective hedging relationship continues and hedge accounting should continue to be applied. The requirements of this Statement enhance comparability and improve financial reporting by clarifying the circumstances in which hedge accounting should continue when a swap counterparty, or a swap counterparty’s credit support provider, is replaced. The provisions of this Statement are effective for financial statements for periods beginning after June 15, 2011.
NOTE 2 - DEPOSITS AND INVESTMENTS

Deposits

Custodial credit risk is the risk that, in the event of the failure of a depository financial institution, the University will not be able to recover deposits or will not be able to recover collateral securities that are in the possession of an outside party. Protection of University cash and deposits is provided by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation as well as qualified securities pledged by the institution holding the assets. Under State law, financial institutions must collateralize all public deposits. The value of the pooled collateral must equal at least 105 percent of public funds deposited. Collateral is held by trustees including the Federal Reserve Bank and designated third-party trustees of the financial institution.

At June 30, 2011, the cash and cash equivalents balance of $27,386,909 is after the University recorded an overdraft consisting of items in transit of $4,622,342 in accounts payable. The bank balance at June 30, 2011 was $27,280,702, of which $1,005,778 was covered by federal depository insurance, and $26,274,924 was covered by collateral held by the trust department of a bank other than the pledging bank in the name of the pledging bank.

At June 30, 2010, the cash and cash equivalents balance of $24,270,510 is after the University recorded an overdraft consisting of items in transit of $5,035,527 in accounts payable. The bank balance at June 30, 2010 was $24,177,001, of which $1,255,662 was covered by federal depository insurance, and $22,921,339 was covered by collateral held by the trust department of a bank other than the pledging bank in the name of the pledging bank.

Investments

In accordance with the Board of Trustees’ resolution, the types of investments that may be purchased by the University include United States treasury securities, federal government agency securities, certificates of deposit, bank repurchase agreements, commercial paper, bonds and other obligations of the State of Ohio or any of its political subdivisions, the State Treasurer’s Asset Reserve (STAR Ohio), bankers’ acceptances, money market funds, common stocks, and corporate bonds. The endowment investments are managed by the Foundation, which can also invest in real estate and alternative investments.

STAR Ohio is an investment pool managed by the Ohio state treasurer’s office that allows governments within the State to pool their funds for investment purposes. STAR Ohio is not registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission as an investment company, but does operate in a manner consistent with Rule 2A7 of the Investment Company Act of 1940. The investment is valued at STAR Ohio’s share price, which represents fair market value, on June 30, 2011 and 2010.

Restricted investments consist of unspent debt proceeds.
As of June 30, 2011, the University had the following types of investments and maturities:

Some of the U.S. agency securities are callable at various dates. The University believes that no securities will be called.

Interest Rate Risk. Interest rate risk is the risk that changes in interest rates will adversely affect the fair value of an investment. Investments with interest rates that are fixed for longer periods are likely to be subject to more variability in their fair values as a result of future changes in interest rates.

Credit Risk. Credit risk is the risk that an issuer or other counterparty to an investment will not fulfill its obligations. As of June 30, 2011 and 2010, the University’s investment in STAR Ohio is rated AAA by Standard & Poor’s and Moody’s. While the University’s bond mutual fund investment itself is not rated, the credit quality of the fund’s holdings is AA or better, as rated by Standard & Poor’s and Moody’s.

Custodial Credit Risk. Custodial credit risk is the risk that, in the event of the failure of a counterparty to a transaction, the University will not be able to recover the value of investment securities that are in the possession of an outside party. At June 30, 2011 and 2010, the University had no exposure to custodial credit risk.

Concentration of Credit Risk. Concentration of credit risk is the risk of loss attributed to the magnitude of investment in a single issuer. The University’s investment policy places no limitation on the amount that may be invested in a single issuer. At June 30, 2011 and 2010, the University did not have more than 5% of its fixed income investments in any single issuer.
Foreign Currency Risk. Foreign currency risk is the risk that changes in exchange rates will adversely affect the fair value of an investment. At June 30, 2011 and 2010, investments include approximately $5.6 million and $5.2 million, respectively, managed by international equity managers that are subject to foreign currency risk. Although the University’s investment policy does not specifically address foreign currency risk, it does limit foreign investments to no more than 20% of the portfolio.

NOTE 4 - STATE SUPPORT

The University is a State-assisted institution of higher education, which receives a student-based subsidy from the State. This subsidy is determined annually, based upon a formula devised by the Ohio Board of Regents.

In addition, the State provides the funding and constructs major plant facilities on the University’s campus. The funding is obtained from the issuance of revenue bonds by the Ohio Public Facilities Commission (OPFC), which in turn causes the construction and subsequent lease of the facility, by the Ohio Board of Regents. Upon completion, the Board of Regents turns over control of the facility to the University. Neither the obligation for the revenue bonds issued by OPFC nor the annual debt service charges for principal and interest on the bonds are reflected in the University’s financial statements. The OPFC revenue bonds are currently being funded through appropriations to the Board of Regents by the General Assembly.
The facilities are not pledged as collateral for the revenue bonds. Instead, the bonds are supported by a pledge of monies in the Higher Education Bond Service Fund established in the custody of the Treasurer of State. If sufficient monies are not available from this fund, a pledge exists to assess a special student fee uniformly applicable to students in state-assisted institutions of higher education throughout the State.

In May 2008, the University issued general receipts bonds in the amount of $20,910,000. The General Receipts Series 2008 Bonds were issued as fixed rate bonds maturing in 2013, 2033 and 2036. The proceeds of the bonds were used to refinance the 2003B and 2007B Bonds. The bonds have various call provisions.

During the year ended June 30, 2007, the University issued Series 2007A general receipts bonds. The Series 2007A general receipts bonds were issued for $42,110,000, bear interest rates between 4% and 5.75%, and mature in 2036. Proceeds were used to fund the construction of a new Student Center.

The Series 2007B general receipts bonds were issued for $9,210,000. They bear variable interest rates that reset weekly and mature in 2036. The interest rate is set at rates based upon yield evaluations at par of comparable securities. The interest rate was 4.51% at April 24, 2008. Proceeds were used to fund the construction of a new building on the University’s campus to house the College of Education and Human Services. This bond was called and refinanced in May 2008, using the proceeds of the General Receipts Series 2008 Bonds.

In August 2004, the University issued general receipts bonds in the amount of $62,000,000. The General Receipts Series 2004 Bonds were issued as fixed rate bonds with serial maturities through 2008 and term bonds maturing in 2014, 2019, 2024, 2029 and 2034. The proceeds of the bonds were used to pay the cost of a variety of projects, including construction of a student center, parking facilities and a bookstore, renovations to a portion of Fenn Tower, and landscaping and other permanent site improvements to the main plaza.

In June 2003, the University issued Series 2003A and 2003B (Series 2003) general receipts bonds. The Series 2003A general receipts bonds were issued for $35,745,000, bear interest rates between 2.5% and 5.25%, and mature in 2033. Proceeds were used to refund outstanding Series 1993 general receipts bonds, rehabilitate the Howe Mansion and construct an Administrative Center.

Interest expense on indebtedness was $9,460,196 in fiscal 2011 and $5,275,459 in fiscal 2010. On construction-related debt, interest cost of $0 was capitalized in fiscal 2011, and $4,420,254, net of $626,222 of interest earned on invested proceeds, was capitalized in fiscal 2010.
The University leases various pieces of equipment which have been recorded under various capital leases in amounts representing the present value of future minimum lease payments. Capital lease obligations are collateralized by equipment with an aggregate net book value of $37,909,684 at June 30, 2011 and $46,764,994 at June 30, 2010. The capital leases have varying maturity dates through 2041.

The University has entered into various lease agreements for office equipment, and office and classroom space, which are considered operating leases. The University has leased space in the Fenn Tower building from the Corporation, which it uses for classrooms and meeting rooms. Total rental expense under operating leases during the years ended June 30, 2011 and 2010 amounted to $2,581,938 and $1,679,523, respectively. The operating leases have varying maturity dates through 2042.

NOTE 7 - EMPLOYMENT BENEFIT PLANS

Retirement Plans

Substantially all non-student University employees are covered by one of three retirement plans. The university faculty are covered by the State Teachers Retirement System of Ohio (STRS). Non-faculty employees are covered by the Ohio Public Employees Retirement System (OPERS). Employees may opt out of STRS and OPERS and participate in the Alternative Retirement Plan (ARP).

STRS and OPERS both offer three separate retirement plans: the defined benefit plan, the defined contribution plan, and a combined plan.

Defined Benefit Plans

STRS is a statewide retirement plan for certified teachers. STRS provides retirement and disability benefits, annual cost-of-living adjustments, and death benefits to plan members and beneficiaries. Benefits are established by State statute. Contribution rates are established by the State Teachers Retirement Board, not to exceed the statutory maximum rates of 10% for employees and 14% for employers. Currently, employees contribute 10% of covered payroll and employers contribute 14% of covered payroll. The University's contributions to STRS for the years ended June 30, 2011, 2010, and 2009 were $7,282,885, $7,185,855, and $7,402,446, respectively, equal to the required contributions for each year. STRS issues a stand-alone financial report. The report may be obtained by writing to STRS Ohio, 275 East Broad Street, Columbus, OH 43215-3771, by calling 1-888-227-7877, or by visiting the STRS Ohio website at www.strsoh.org.

OPERS is a statewide retirement plan, which covers non-teaching University employees. OPERS provides retirement and disability benefits, annual cost-of-living adjustments, and death benefits to plan members and beneficiaries. Benefits are established by State statute. Contribution rates are established by the Ohio Public Employee Retirement Board, not to exceed the statutory maximum rates of 10% for employees and 14% for employers. Currently, employees contribute 10% of covered payroll and employers contribute 14% of covered payroll. The University's contributions to OPERS for the years ended June 30, 2011, 2010, and 2009 were $7,437,768, $7,228,118, and $7,364,278, respectively, equal to the required contributions for each year. OPERS issues a stand-alone financial report. The report may be obtained by writing to OPERS, 277 East Town Street, Columbus, OH 43215-4642, or by calling (614) 222-5601 or 800-222-7377.

Defined Contribution Plan

The University also offers eligible employees an alternative retirement program. The University is required to contribute to STRS 3.50% of earned compensation for those employees participating in the alternative retirement program. The University’s contributions for the years ended June 30, 2011, 2010 and 2009 were $371,702, $347,415 and $327,263, respectively, which equal 3.50% of earned compensation.

STRS also offers a defined contribution plan in addition to its long established defined benefit plan. All employee contributions and employer contributions at a rate of 10.5% are placed in an investment account directed by the employee. Disability benefits are limited to the employee’s account balance. Employees electing the defined contribution plan receive no postretirement healthcare benefits.

OPERS also offers a defined contribution plan, the Member-Directed Plan (MD). The MD plan does not provide disability benefits, annual cost-of-living adjustments, postretirement healthcare benefits or death benefits to plan members and beneficiaries. Benefits are entirely dependent on the sum of contributions and investment returns earned by each participant’s choice of investment options.
Combined Plans

STRS offers a combined plan with features of both a defined contribution plan and a defined benefit plan. In the combined plan, employee contributions are invested in self-directed investments, and the employer contribution is used to fund a reduced defined benefit. Employees electing the combined plan receive postretirement healthcare benefits.

OPERS also offers a combined plan. This is a cost-sharing, multiple-employer defined benefit plan that has elements of both a defined benefit and defined contribution plan. In the combined plan, employee contributions are invested in self-directed investments, and the employer contribution is used to fund a reduced defined benefit. OPERS also provides retirement, disability, survivor, and postretirement healthcare benefits to qualified members.

Postemployment Benefits

STRS provides other postemployment benefits (OPEB) to all retirees and their dependents, while OPERS provides postretirement healthcare coverage to age and service retirants (and dependents) with 10 or more years of qualifying Ohio service credit. Healthcare coverage for disability recipients and primary survivor recipients is also available under OPERS. A portion of each employer’s contributions is set aside for the funding of postretirement health care. For STRS, this rate was 1.0% of the total 14.00%, while the OPERS rate was 5.0% of the total 14.00% for the year ended June 30, 2010.

The Ohio Revised Code provides the statutory authority for public employers to fund postretirement health care through their contributions to STRS and OPERS. Postretirement healthcare under STRS is financed on a pay-as-you-go basis. The amount contributed by the University to STRS to fund these benefits for the years ended June 30, 2011, 2010 and 2009 was $520,206, $513,275, and $528,746, respectively.

Postretirement health care under OPERS is advance-funded on an actuarially determined basis. The amount contributed by the University to OPERS for OPEB funding for the years ended June 30, 2011, 2010 and 2009 was $3,718,884, $3,614,059 and $3,682,139, respectively.

NOTE 8 - RISK MANAGEMENT

The University is exposed to various risks of loss related to torts; theft of, damage to, and destruction of assets; errors and omissions; injuries to employees; and natural disasters. On July 1, 1993, the University joined with 11 other state-assisted universities in Ohio to form an insurance-purchasing pool for the acquisition of commercial property and casualty insurance. The University pays annual premiums to the pool for its property and casualty insurance coverage based on its percentage of the total insurable value to the pool. Future contributions will be adjusted based upon each university’s loss history. Each university has a base deductible of $100,000. The next $250,000 of any one claim is the responsibility of the pool, which has a total annual aggregate deductible limit of $700,000. The commercial property insurer is liable for the amount of any claim in excess of $350,000, or $100,000 in the event the pool has reached its annual limit. There were no significant reductions in coverage from the prior year.
The University maintains a self-insured dental plan for its employees. The University’s risk exposure is limited to claims incurred. The changes in the total liability for actual and estimated dental claims for the years ended June 30, 2011 and 2010 are summarized below:

The University maintains a self-insured medical plan for its employees. The University’s risk exposure is limited to claims incurred. There is a $150,000 specific stop loss for any given claim. The changes in the total liability for actual and estimated medical claims for the years ended June 30, 2011 and 2010 are summarized below:

<thead>

Medical claims are based upon estimates of the claims liabilities. Estimates are based upon past experience, medical inflation trends, and current claims outstanding, including year-end lag analysis. Differences between the estimated claims payable and actual claims paid are reported as an operating expense in the statement of revenue, expenses and changes in net assets.

The University participates in a State pool of agencies and universities that pays workers’ compensation premiums into the State Insurance Fund on a pay-as-you-go basis (the Plan), which pays workers’ compensation benefits to beneficiaries who have been injured on the job. Losses from asserted and unasserted claims for the participating state agencies and universities in the Plan are accrued by the Ohio Bureau of Workers’ Compensation (the Bureau) based on estimates that incorporate past experience, as well as other considerations including the nature of each claim or incident and relevant trend factors. Participants in the Plan annually fund the workers’ compensation liability based on rates set by the Bureau to collect cash needed in subsequent fiscal years to pay the workers’ compensation claims of participating state agencies and universities.

During the normal course of its operations, the University has become a defendant in various legal actions. It is not possible to estimate the outcome of these legal actions; however, in the opinion of legal counsel and the University administration, the disposition of these pending cases will not have a material adverse effect on the financial condition or operations of the University. Settled claims resulting from these risks have not exceeded insurance coverage in any of the past three fiscal years.
NOTE 9 - GRANT CONTINGENCIES

The University receives significant financial assistance from numerous federal, state and local agencies in the form of grants. The disbursement of funds received under these programs generally requires compliance with terms and conditions specified in the grant agreements and are subject to audit by the grantor agencies. Any disallowed claims resulting from such audits could become a liability of the University. However, in the opinion of the University administration, any such disallowed claims will not have a material effect on any of the financial statements of the University at June 30, 2011.

NOTE 10 - NET ASSETS

The temporarily and permanently restricted net assets of the Foundation are balances whose use by the Foundation has been limited by the donors to a specific time period or purpose. Temporarily restricted net assets are available, and permanently restricted net assets are held in perpetuity, for the following purposes:

NOTE 11 - COMPONENT UNITS

The Foundation and the Corporation are legally separate not-for-profit entities organized for the purpose of providing support to the University. Both the Foundation and the Corporation are exempt from federal income taxes under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code.

The Foundation acts primarily as a fund-raising organization to supplement the resources that are available to the University in support of its programs. The Board of the Foundation is self-perpetuating and consists of business leaders and friends of the University. Although the University does not control the timing or amount of receipts from the Foundation, the majority of resources, or income thereon, that the Foundation holds and invests are restricted to the activities of the University by donors. Because these restricted resources held by the Foundation can only be used by, or for the benefit of, the University, the Foundation is considered a component unit of the University and is discretely presented in the University’s financial statements. Complete financial statements for the Foundation can be obtained from the Office of the Executive Director at 2121 Euclid Avenue, Keith Building Room 323, Cleveland, OH 44115-2214.
During the years ended June 30, 2011 and 2010, the Foundation paid $3,802,834 and $3,880,958, respectively, to the University. At June 30, 2011 and 2010, the University had receivables from the Foundation totaling $1,051,798 and $662,662, respectively.

As authorized by the Board of Trustees, beginning in fiscal year 1998, the University placed Endowment and Quasi-Endowment funds on deposit with the Foundation for investment. At June 30, 2011 and 2010, the amount on deposit with the Foundation totaled $2,590,934 and $1,993,632, respectively.

The Corporation was organized primarily to further the educational mission of the University by developing, owning and managing housing for the students, faculty and staff of the University. On March 1, 2005, the Corporation leased the Fenn Tower building, located on the University’s campus, from the University. Annual rent is equal to the net available cash flows from the Fenn Tower project. No rent was paid during fiscal years 2010 and 2009. On March 1, 2005, the Corporation entered into a Development Agreement with American Campus Communities (ACC) to plan, design and construct housing units in Fenn Tower. In addition, the Corporation entered into a Management Agreement with ACC to manage Fenn Tower. The project was completed in August 2006. The facility has the capacity to house 430 residents.

On March 17, 2005, the Corporation issued $34,385,000 of Cleveland-Cuyahoga County Port Authority bonds (Series 2005 Bonds) to finance the costs of the Fenn Tower project. The Series 2005 Bonds are serial bonds maturing between 2007 and 2036. Interest rates are fixed and vary from 3.0% to 4.5%.

On June 1, 2008, the Corporation leased land, owned by the University and located on its campus, from the University. On August 22, 2008, the Corporation entered into a design-build agreement with the Apostolos Group to construct a 623-car parking garage on the site. On July 1, 2008, the Corporation entered into a lease agreement with the University to operate the garage once construction is completed. On July 25, 2008, the Corporation issued $14,500,000 of tax-exempt bonds with the Cleveland-Cuyahoga County Port Authority to finance construction of the garage. The Series 2008 Bonds are serial bonds maturing between 2009 and 2040. They bear variable interest rates that reset weekly. The interest rate is set at rates based upon yield evaluations at par of comparable securities. The interest rate was .09% at June 30, 2011. Construction of the garage was completed in August 2009.

On December 18, 2009, the Corporation leased land, owned by the University and located on its campus, from the University. On August 24, 2009, the Corporation entered into a development agreement with ACC to plan, design and construct 600 beds of student housing and a 300-car parking garage on this land. In addition, the Corporation entered into a management agreement with ACC to manage the student housing. On December 18, 2009, the Corporation issued $59,005,000 of County of Cuyahoga, Ohio bonds (Series 2009 bonds) to finance the project. The 2009 bonds are serial bonds maturing between 2011 and 2042. They bear variable interest rates that are reset weekly. The interest rate is set at rates based upon yield evaluations at par of comparable securities. The interest rate was .08% at June 30, 2011. Phase 1 opened in August 2010, and Phase 2 is scheduled to open in August 2011.

NOTE 12 - SUBSEQUENT EVENT

On September 23, 2011, the University issued taxable general receipts bonds in the principal amount of $5,775,000. The General Receipts Series 2011 Bonds were issued as fixed rate bonds with monthly maturities beginning October 1, 2013 through April 1, 2042. Interest is payable monthly at the rate of 5.32%. The proceeds of the bonds will be used to finance a portion of the costs of public improvements identified as the North Campus Neighborhood - Project Phase I. This phase is the subject of a "project development agreement" dated July 14, 2011 by and between Cleveland State University and CSU Housing, LLC, an Ohio limited liability company which serves as the project developer.

Independent Auditor’s Report

To the Board of Trustees
Cleveland State University

We have audited the accompanying financial statements of Cleveland State University (the “University”) as of and for the years ended June 30, 2012 and 2011. We did not audit the financial statements of Cleveland State University Foundation, Inc. (the “Foundation”) and Euclid Avenue Development Corporation (the “Corporation”), which present all of the balances and activity reported in the discretely presented component units. Those financial statements were audited by other auditors, whose report thereon has been furnished to us, and our opinion, insofar as it relates to the amounts included for the Foundation and Corporation, are based on the report of the other auditors. The University and the discretely presented component units collectively comprise the basic financial statements. These financial statements are the responsibility of the University’s management. Our responsibility is to express opinions on these financial statements based on our audits.

We conducted our audits in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America and the standards applicable to financial audits contained in Government Auditing Standards, issued by the Comptroller General of the United States. Those standards require that we plan and perform the audits to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the basic financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the basic financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

In our opinion, based on our audits and the reports of the other auditors, the basic financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the respective financial position of Cleveland State University and its discretely presented component units as of June 30, 2012 and 2011 and the respective changes in financial position and cash flows, if applicable, for the years then ended, in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America.
To the Board of Trustees
Cleveland State University

In accordance with Government Auditing Standards, we have also issued our report dated October 15, 2012 on our consideration of Cleveland State University’s internal control over financial reporting and on our tests of its compliance with certain provisions of laws, regulations, contracts, and grant agreements. The purpose of that report is to describe the scope of our testing of internal control over financial reporting and compliance and the results of that testing, and not to provide opinions on the internal control over financial reporting or on compliance. That report is an integral part of an audit performed in accordance with Government Auditing Standards and should be considered in assessing the results of our audit.

Accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America require that management's discussion and analysis, as identified on pages 3 through 10, be presented to supplement the basic financial statements. Such information, although not a part of the basic financial statements, is required by the Governmental Accounting Standards Board, which considers it to be an essential part of financial reporting for placing the basic financial statements in an appropriate operational, economic, or historical context. We have applied certain limited procedures to the required supplemental information in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America, which consisted of inquiries of management about the methods of preparing the information and comparing the information for consistency with management’s responses to our inquiries, the basic financial statements, and other knowledge we obtained during our audit of the basic financial statements. We do not express an opinion or provide any assurance on the information because the limited procedures do not provide us with sufficient evidence to express an opinion or provide any assurance.

Toledo, Ohio
October 15, 2012
Introduction

The following discussion and analysis provides an overview of the financial position and activities of Cleveland State University (the “University”) as of and for the year ended June 30, 2012. This discussion has been prepared by management and should be read in conjunction with the financial statements and the notes thereto, which follow this section.

The University was established in 1964 by action of the Ohio General Assembly and is part of the State of Ohio’s (the “State”) system of State-supported and State-assisted institutions of higher education. It is one of the 13 State universities in Ohio. By statute, it is a body politic and corporate and an instrumentality of the State. Located in the city of Cleveland, the University is an urban institution. A majority of the University’s students commute daily from their homes in the Cleveland metropolitan area.

Using the Annual Financial Report

The University’s financial report includes financial statements prepared in accordance with Governmental Accounting Standards Board (GASB) Statement No. 35, Basic Financial Statements - and Management’s Discussion and Analysis - for Public Colleges and Universities. These principles require that financial statements be presented on a consolidated basis to focus on the financial condition, the changes in financial condition, and the cash flows of the University as a whole. Many other nonfinancial factors also must be considered in assessing the overall health of the University, such as enrollment trends, student retention, strength of the faculty, condition of the buildings, and the safety of the campus.

The financial statements prescribed by GASB Statement No. 35 (the Statement of Net Assets, the Statement of Revenue, Expenses and Changes in Net Assets, and the Statement of Cash Flows) present financial information in a form similar to that used by corporations. They are prepared under the accrual basis of accounting, whereby revenue and assets are recognized when the service is provided and expenses and liabilities are recognized when others provide the service, regardless of when cash is exchanged.

Under the provisions of GASB Statement No. 39, Determining Whether Certain Organizations are Component Units, the Cleveland State University Foundation, Inc. (the “Foundation”) and the Euclid Avenue Development Corporation (the “Corporation”) are treated as component units of the University. Accordingly, the Foundation and the Corporation are discretely presented in the University’s financial statements. The Foundation and the Corporation are excluded from the management’s discussion and analysis. Financial statements for the Foundation can be obtained from the Office of the Executive Director at 2121 Euclid Avenue, Keith Building Room 300, Cleveland, OH 44115-2214; financial statements for the Corporation can be obtained from the Office of the Vice President for Business Affairs and Finance at 2121 Euclid Avenue, Administration Center Room 210, Cleveland, OH 44115-2214.
Statement of Net Assets

The statement of net assets presents the financial position of the University at the end of the fiscal year and includes all assets and liabilities. The difference between assets and liabilities—net assets—is one indicator of the current financial condition of the University, while the change in net assets is an indicator of whether the overall financial condition has improved or worsened during the year. Assets and liabilities are generally measured using current values. One notable exception is capital assets, which are stated at historical cost less an allowance for depreciation. A summary of the University’s assets, liabilities, and net assets at June 30, 2012, 2011, and 2010 is as follows:

Current assets consist primarily of cash, operating investments, accounts and notes receivable, prepaid expenses, deferred charges, and inventories. Current liabilities consist primarily of accounts payable, accrued payroll and other liabilities, deferred revenue, and the current portion of long-term debt.

Current assets increased in 2012 from 2011, primarily due to an increase in restricted accounts receivable and unbilled grants.

Current assets decreased in 2011 from 2010, primarily due to a decrease in investments, which was partially offset by an increase in cash.

Net capital assets decreased in 2012 from 2011 by $3.7 million, or 0.8%, and increased in 2011 from 2010 by $20.9 million, or 4.5%. The decrease in 2012 was primarily due to demolition of two buildings on campus. The increase in 2011 was due to construction on the University’s campus. Projects under construction in 2011 included a new student center building and a new building to house the College of Education and Human Services.

Other assets increased in 2012 from 2011 by $2.0 million, or 2.3%. The increase was due primarily to the 2011 bond issuance increasing restricted investments.

Other assets decreased in 2011 from 2010 by $10.2 million, or 10.2%. The decrease was due primarily to the spending of bond proceeds on construction.

Liabilities decreased in 2012 from 2011 by 4.4 million, or 1.6%, primarily due to a decrease in capital lease obligations. Liabilities decreased in 2011 from 2010 by $.5 million, or .2%.
Capital and Debt Activities

One critical factor affecting the quality of the University’s programs is the development and renewal of its capital assets. Capital additions totaled $22.7 million in 2012, $45.7 million in 2011, and $100.4 million in 2010. Capital retirements totaled $16.9 million in 2012, $5.9 million in 2011, and $6.0 million in 2010. Capital additions and retirements for 2012, 2011 and 2010 exclude transfers from construction in progress to buildings in the amounts of $87.0 million in 2011 and $31.3 million in 2010. Capital additions include construction of new facilities, repair and renovation of existing facilities, and acquisition of equipment and library books. Capital asset additions are funded, in part, by capital appropriations from the State. These appropriations amounted to $3.2 million in 2012, $4.6 million in 2011, and $20.0 million in 2010.

In September, 2011, the University issued taxable general receipts bonds in the principal amount of $5,775,000. The General Receipts Series 2011 Bonds were issued as fixed rate bonds with monthly maturities beginning October 1, 2013 through April 1, 2042. Interest is payable monthly at the rate of 5.32%. The proceeds of the bonds will be used to finance a portion of the costs of public improvements identified as the North Campus Neighborhood - Project Phase I. This phase is the subject of a "project development agreement" dated July 14, 2011 by and between Cleveland State University and CSU Housing, LLC, an Ohio limited liability company which serves as the project developer.

In August 2009, the University entered into a capital lease with the Corporation in the amount of $14.5 million. The lease covers a parking garage that was constructed by the Corporation on the University’s campus. The lease requires the University to operate and maintain the garage, and to make periodic payments to the Corporation equal to its required debt service payments.

In August 2010, the University entered into a capital lease with the Corporation in the amount of $7.07 million. The lease covers a parking garage that was constructed by the Corporation on the University’s campus. The lease requires the University to operate and maintain the garage, and to make payments to the Corporation equal to its required debt service payments.

In March 2009, the University entered into a capital lease in the amount of $42.8 million. Proceeds will be used to fund a variety of energy conservation projects on the University’s campus. When the projects are complete, energy savings will be sufficient to fund the lease payments.

Net Assets

Net assets represent the residual interest in the University’s assets after liabilities are deducted. The University’s net assets at June 30, 2012, 2011, and 2010 are summarized as follows:

<table>

</table>
Net assets invested in capital assets, net of related debt represent the University’s capital assets net of accumulated depreciation and outstanding principal balances of debt attributable to the acquisition, construction, or improvement of those assets. Changes in this category of net assets are due to the net effect of additions to, disposals of, and depreciation on capital assets.

Restricted-expendable net assets are subject to externally imposed restrictions governing their use. Changes in this category are due to the timing of revenue and expenses in funds provided by donors and grantors. Restricted-nonexpendable net assets consist primarily of endowment funds held by the University. Changes in this category are driven primarily by investment performance, which was positive in both 2012 and 2011.

Unrestricted net assets are not subject to externally imposed stipulations. This category includes funds functioning as endowment (quasi-endowment) of $5.3 million at June 30, 2012, $5.3 million at June 30, 2011, and $4.5 million at June 30, 2010.

For the year ended June 30, 2012, the University had an increase in total net assets of $11.6 million, or 3.4%. Net assets invested in capital assets, net of related debt, increased by $1.4 million, or .5%, because capital asset additions exceeded deductions and depreciation expense. Unrestricted net assets increased by $7.5 million, or 9.6%, due primarily to an increase in net tuition income (which went from $140.7 million in 2011 to $148.9 million in 2012), along with a decrease in operating expenses in 2012 from 2011 of $12.1 million. The decrease in operating expenses was the result of budget cuts and energy conservation efforts.

For the year ended June 30, 2011, the University had an increase in total net assets of $9.6 million, or 2.8%. Net assets invested in capital assets, net of related debt, decreased by $4.4 million, or -1.7%, because deductions and depreciation expense exceeded capital asset additions. Unrestricted net assets increased by $12.1 million or 18.2%, due primarily to increases in net tuition income (which went from $126.2 million in 2010 to $140.7 million in 2011) and in investment income (which went from $7.7 million in 2010 to $13.2 million in 2011), and increased operating expenses (which went from $269.7 million in 2010 to $292.2 million in 2011). Expenses for salaries and wages and depreciation were higher in 2011 than 2010.

Statement of Revenue, Expenses and Changes in Net Assets

The Statement of Revenue, Expenses and Changes in Net Assets presents the revenue earned and expenses incurred during the year. Activities are reported as either operating or nonoperating. As a public institution, the University is dependent on State assistance. This dependency contributed toward an operating deficit because the financial reporting model classifies State appropriations as nonoperating revenue. The utilization of capital assets is reflected in the financial statements as depreciation, which amortizes the cost of an asset over its expected useful life. Summarized revenue, expenses, and changes in net assets for the years ended June 30, 2012, June 30, 2011, and June 30, 2010 are as follows:

Total revenue and other changes in fiscal 2012, 2011 and 2010 were $300.7 million, $311.4 million, and $298.8 million, respectively. The most significant sources of 2012 operating revenue for the University were student tuition and fees of $148.9 million, grants and contracts of $22.5 million, and auxiliary services of $22.5 million.

Revenue from tuition and fees (net of scholarship allowances) increased in 2012 from 2011 by $8.2 million, or 5.8%, due to an increase in enrollment and an increase in tuition rates. Headcount enrollment increased by .35% from the prior year, while full-time equivalent enrollment increased by 1.6% from the prior year. A tuition increase of 3.5% was implemented in the Fall 2011 semester.

Revenue from tuition and fees (net of scholarship allowances) increased in 2011 from 2010 by $14.5 million, or 11.5% due to an increase in enrollment and an increase in tuition rates. Headcount enrollment increased by 5.3% from the prior year, while full-time equivalent enrollment increased by 6.1% from the prior year. A tuition increase of 3.3% was implemented in the Fall 2011 semester.

Total expenses in fiscal 2012, 2011, and 2010 were $289.1 million, $301.7 million, and $275.0 million, respectively. Operating expenses include the costs of instruction, research, public service, general administration, utilities, libraries, and auxiliary services. Operating expenses also include depreciation and amortization. Expenses decreased by $12.6 million (4.2%) in 2012, due primarily to energy conservation savings and budget cuts. The increase in total expenses of $26.7 million (9.7%) in 2011 was due primarily to increased interest on debt and depreciation expense.
Sources of nonoperating revenue include State appropriations of $64.4 million in 2012, $63.5 million in 2011, and $63.7 million in 2010; grants and contracts of $26.1 million in 2012, $29.5 million in 2011, and $24.8 million in 2010; gifts of $7.2 million in 2012, $4.4 million in 2011, and $4.5 million in 2010; and investment income of $1.0 million in 2012, $13.2 million in 2011, and $7.7 million in 2010.

Net nonoperating revenue decreased in 2012 from 2011 by $21.9 million, or 19.7%, due primarily to decreases in federal stimulus funds and investment income. Net nonoperating revenue increased in 2011 from 2010 by $5.9 million, or 5.62%, due primarily to increases in funding for the federal Pell Grants program and an increase in investment income.

Other changes consist primarily of State capital appropriations of $3.2 million in 2012, $4.6 million in 2011, and $20.0 million in 2010.

Statement of Cash Flows

The Statement of Cash Flows presents information related to cash inflows and outflows summarized by operating, noncapital financing, capital financing and investing activities, and helps measure the ability to meet financial obligations as they mature. A summary of the statement of cash flows for the years ended June 30, 2012, June 30, 2011 and June 30, 2010 is as follows:

Major sources of cash included student tuition and fees of $148.1 million in 2012, $138.2 million in 2011, and $125.2 million in 2010; State appropriations of $64.4 million in 2012, $74.1 million in 2011, and $74.1 million in 2010; grants and contracts (operating and noncapital) of $38.2 million in 2012, $47.0 million in 2011, and $46.0 million in 2010; and auxiliary activities of $21.5 million in 2012, $20.8 million in 2011, and $15.9 million in 2010.

The largest payments were for employee compensation and benefits totaling $166.9 million in 2012, $165.6 million in 2011, and $163.9 million in 2010; suppliers of goods and services totaling $88.6 million in 2012, $103.0 million in 2011, and $88.8 million in 2010; and purchases of capital assets totaling $20.2 million in 2012, $42.6 million in 2011, and $99.4 million in 2010.

The change in cash flows from 2012 to 2011 and 2011 to 2010 in the investing category is due primarily to the University electing to leave most of its cash in the bank (because the rate of return was higher than other short-term investment vehicles), which resulted in a decrease in investments purchased.
Credit Rating

The University’s bonds are rated “A+” by Standard & Poor’s, with the most recent rating published on July 25, 2012. An “A” rating indicates a strong capacity to meet financial commitments, but somewhat susceptible to adverse economic conditions and changes in circumstances. This rating is consistent with the years ended June 30, 2011 and 2010. The highest achievable rating is “AAA.” The University’s capacity to meet its financial obligations is considered strong. The University’s bonds are rated “A1” by Moody’s Investors Service, with the most recent rating published on July 23, 2012. Obligations rated “A” by Moody’s are judged to be upper-medium grand and are subject to low credit risk. The highest achievable rating is “AAA.”

Looking Ahead

The primary challenge facing Ohio public institutions of higher learning, including Cleveland State University (CSU), continues to be maintaining the quality of academic instruction and controlling costs in the face of declining public funding from the State. In the State of Ohio’s FY12- FY13 budget, CSU lost approximately $11 million, or 15%, of its State Share of Instruction (SSI) allocation, the major state funding source for state colleges and universities. In order to help offset this significant decline in operating revenue, the University implemented plans for certain revenue enhancements and expense reductions as part of its FY12 and FY13 Operating Budget plans. Revenue from student instructional fee tuition increased 5.8% in FY12 over FY11 due to a slight increase in student credit hour enrollment and an increase in undergraduate and graduate tuition rates of 5.5% and an increase in the law tuition rate of 9.1%. Anticipated FY13 tuition revenue should benefit from improved retention of students from FY12, plus an expected increase of approximately 2.1% in student credit hour enrollment in FY13, along with a tuition rate increase of approximately 3.5% for undergraduates and graduate courses and a 9.5% increase in the tuition rate for law courses. The FY13 ratio of state funding as a percentage of total operating revenue remains the same as FY12 at approximately 29%. The percentage continues to solidify the heavy reliance on student tuition as the primary source of revenue. The ability of the University to fulfill its mission and execute its strategic plan continues to be more dependent upon student enrollment and tuition.

In order to improve recruitment and retention, the University has implemented a comprehensive enrollment plan. Tactics to achieve increased enrollment and retention include new technology system, new staff, reorganization of recruitment territories, re-engineering campus visitation programs, including a new welcome center, as well as campus and downtown Cleveland development improvements.

The University is also affected by decisions at the state level regarding capital funding through the biennial capital appropriations bill. The funds pay for campus renovation and maintenance of existing facilities, as well as refunding debt for State-approved projects that the University has assumed on its own. The State did not provide any capital funding for the capital cycle FY11-FY12. As a result of missing an entire capital funding cycle, the University has begun to reserve operating funds for undertaking necessary capital maintenance and renovation projects on campus. The University requested $12.8 million from the State for the State’s FY13-FY14 capital appropriations budget. The State accepted the University’s capital improvement plan and approved the $12.8 million funding request. The capital funding will be used for the University’s Strategic STEMM Facilities Enhancement Project comprised of engineering and inter-disciplinary laboratory upgrades and physical infrastructure improvements to the Fenn College of Engineering building.
During the Summer of 2012, the University issued Series 2012 General Receipts Bonds in the amount of $152 million. Included in this issuance was $45 million of funding for a planned new facility on campus to advance the University’s growing role in health sciences and expand its alliance with Northeast Ohio Medical University (NEOMED). The University plans to demolish a vacant dormitory and replace it with a health sciences and life sciences building. Construction is expected to begin in November 2012 with a February 2015 estimated completion.

Cleveland State University is accredited by the North Central Association of Colleges and Schools (“NCA”), until 2020, having received unconditional accreditation in 2011.

The University continues to face significant cost pressures in the future. The University has taken measures to address ongoing operating cost challenges, such as attracting and retaining high quality faculty and staff, increased costs of employee benefits, most notably medical care and prescription drug coverage, and the cost of energy. The University recently reached labor contract agreements with its four major bargaining units – AAUP (faculty union), SEIU, CWA (clerical and service employees), and FOP (police). These contracts are for a term of three years.

The University traditionally monitors its revenue sources and the operating budgets of its units very closely. While operating at a lower level of State subsidy in FY13, it appears that, barring unforeseen events, CSU should receive its expected FY13 allocation of subsidy from the State. Instructional fee tuition revenue for the Fall 2012 semester was above the plan level - $741,000 greater than the revenue budget of $65.9 million.

NOTE 1 – SUMMARY OF SIGNIFICANT ACCOUNTING POLICIES

Organization and Basis of Presentation

Cleveland State University (the University) was established by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio (the “State”) in 1964 by statutory act under Chapter 3344 of the Ohio Revised Code. As such, the University is a component unit of the State. The University is exempt from federal income taxes under Section 115 of the Internal Revenue Code, except for unrelated business income.

In accordance with Governmental Accounting Standards Board (GASB) Statement No. 14, The Reporting Entity, the University’s financial statements are included, as a discretely presented component unit, in the State’s Comprehensive Annual Financial Report.

The financial statements have been prepared in accordance with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America, as prescribed by GASB Statement No. 35, Basic Financial Statements – and Management’s Discussion and Analysis – for Public Colleges and Universities. GASB Statement No. 35 establishes standards for external financial reporting for public colleges and universities and requires that resources be classified for accounting and reporting purposes into the following net asset categories:

- Invested in capital assets, net of related debt: Capital assets, net of accumulated depreciation and outstanding principal balances of debt attributable to the acquisition, construction or improvement of those assets.

- Restricted, Expendable: Net assets whose use by the University is subject to externally-imposed stipulations that can be fulfilled by actions of the University pursuant to those stipulations or that expire by the passage of time. Income generated from these funds may be restricted for student scholarships, loans, instruction, research, and other specific University needs.

- Restricted, Nonexpendable: Net assets subject to externally-imposed stipulations that they be maintained permanently by the University. Income generated from these funds may be restricted for student scholarships, loans, instruction, research, and other specific University needs.

- Unrestricted: Net assets that are not subject to externally-imposed stipulations. Unrestricted net assets may be designated for specific purposes by action of management or may otherwise be limited by contractual agreements with outside parties.

The accompanying financial statements have been prepared on the accrual basis. The University reports as a Business-Type Activity, as defined by GASB Statement No. 35. Business-Type Activities are those that are financed in whole or in part by fees charged to external parties for goods or services.
FASB Pronouncements

Pursuant to GASB Statement No. 20, Accounting and Financial Reporting for Proprietary Funds and Other Governmental Entities That Use Proprietary Fund Accounting, the University has the option to apply all Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB) pronouncements issued after November 30, 1989, unless the FASB conflicts with the GASB. The University has elected not to apply FASB pronouncements issued after the applicable date.

Operating Activities

The University’s policy for defining operating activities as reported on the statement of revenue, expenses, and changes in net assets are those that result from exchange transactions such as payments received for providing services and payments made for goods or services received. The University also classifies as operating revenue grants classified as exchange transactions and auxiliary activities. Certain significant revenue streams relied upon for operations are recorded as nonoperating revenue, including State appropriations and investment income. Operating expenses include educational resources, administrative expenses and depreciation on capital assets. Under the University’s decentralized management structure, it is the responsibility of individual departments to determine whether to first apply restricted or unrestricted resources when an expense is incurred for purposes for which both restricted and unrestricted net assets are available. The principal operating revenue is student tuition and fees. Student tuition and fees revenue are presented net of scholarships and fellowships applied to student accounts.

Summary of Significant Accounting Policies

Cash and Cash Equivalents. The University considers all highly liquid investments purchased with an original maturity of three months or less to be cash equivalents.

Investments. Investments are recorded at fair value, as established by the major securities markets. Purchases and sales of investments are accounted for on the trade date basis. Investment income is recorded on the accrual basis. Realized and unrealized gains and losses are reported as investment income. The University classifies all investments that mature in less than one year as current investments. Endowment investments are subject to the restrictions of gift instruments, requiring principal to be maintained in perpetuity with only the income from the investments available for expenditure. The University may set aside other assets for the same purposes as endowment investments (quasi-endowment); the University may expend the principal of quasi-endowment at any time.

Accounts Receivable Allowance. The allowance for bad debt is determined based on historical average and a reasonableness ratio of accounts receivable to bad debt. The objective is to increase the collectibility of current receivables to assist the University's objectives regarding enrollment and retention. As such, the University enforces policies that prohibit registration with an unpaid balance over $1,000 and limit registration for those students with a current unpaid balance between $200 - $1,000. The new federal regulations regarding Title IV returns has unfortunately increased our outstanding accounts receivable; the ratio between the bad debt allowance and the accounts receivable, however, is still within reasonable parameters.

Inventories. Inventories are reported at cost. Cost is determined on the average cost basis.
Capital Assets. Capital assets are stated at historical cost or at an appraised value at date of donation, if acquired by gift. It is the University’s policy to capitalize equipment costing $2,500 or more and buildings and improvements costing $100,000 or more. Depreciation of capital assets is provided on a straight-line basis over the estimated useful lives (five to forty years) of the respective assets and is not allocated to the functional expenditure categories. Amortization of the capitalized cost of assets held under capital leases is generally computed using the straight-line method over the estimated useful lives of the underlying assets or the term of the lease, whichever is shorter. The University capitalizes but does not depreciate works of art or historical treasures that are held for exhibition, education, research and public service. Deferred bond issuance costs are capitalized and amortized over the life of the bonds using the straight-line method.

Compensated Absences. Classified employees earn vacation at rates specified under State law. Full-time administrators and twelve-month faculty earn vacation at a rate of 22 days per year. The maximum amount of vacation that an employee can carry over from one fiscal year to the next is 30 days.

All University employees are entitled to a sick leave credit equal to 10 hours for each month of service (earned on a pro rata basis for less than full-time employees). This sick leave will either be absorbed by time off due to illness or injury, or within certain limitations, be paid to the employee upon retirement. The amount paid to an employee, with 10 or more years of service upon retirement, is limited to one-quarter of the accumulated sick leave up to a maximum of 240 hours.

The University has an accrued liability for all accumulated vacation hours, plus an estimate of the amount of sick leave that will be paid upon retirement. Salary-related fringe benefits have also been accrued.

Deferred Revenue. Deferred revenue consists primarily of amounts received in advance of an event, such as student tuition and fees, and advance ticket sales related to the next fiscal year.

Summer term tuition and fees and corresponding expenses relating to the portion of the term that is within the current fiscal year are recognized as tuition revenue and operating expense. The portion of sessions falling into the next fiscal year are recorded as deferred revenue and prepaid expense in the statement of net assets and will be recognized in the following fiscal year.

Perkins Loan Program. Funds provided by the United States government under the Federal Perkins Loan program are loaned to qualified students and re-loaned after collection. These funds are ultimately refundable to the government and, therefore, are recorded as a liability in the accompanying statement of net assets.

Auxiliary Enterprises. Auxiliary enterprise revenue primarily represents revenue generated by parking, residence hall, Wolstein Center, food service, bookstore, recreation center, child care center and intercollegiate athletics.
Scholarship Allowances and Student Aid. Financial aid to students is reported in the statement of revenue, expenses, and changes in net assets under the alternative method as prescribed by the National Association of College and University Business Officers (NACUBO). Certain aid such as loans, funds provided to students as awarded by third parties, and Federal Direct Lending is accounted for as a third-party payment (credited to the student’s account as if the student made the payment). All other aid is reflected in the financial statements as operating expenses, or scholarship allowances, which reduce revenue. The amount reported as operating expense represents the portion of aid that was provided to the student in the form of cash. Scholarship allowances represent the portion of aid provided to the student in the form of reduced tuition. Under the alternative method followed by the University, scholarship allowances are computed by allocating the cash payments to students, excluding payments for services, to the ratio of aid not considered to be third-party aid to total aid.

Component Units. The Cleveland State University Foundation, Inc. (the Foundation) and the Euclid Avenue Development Corporation (the Corporation) are private nonprofit organizations that report under FASB standards, Financial Reporting for Not-for-Profit Organizations. As such, certain revenue recognition criteria and presentation features are different from GASB revenue recognition criteria and presentation features. No modifications have been made to the Foundation’s or the Corporation’s financial information included in the University’s financial report for these differences.

Use of Estimates. The preparation of financial statements in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America requires management to make estimates and assumptions that affect the amounts reported in the financial statements and accompanying notes. Actual results may differ from those estimates.

Accounting Pronouncements

Service Concession Arrangements: In December 2010, the GASB issued Statement No. 60, Accounting and Financial Reporting for Service Concession Arrangements (SCA). An SCA is an agreement between a University and another legally-separate University or private sector entity in which two things happen. First, the University transfers to the other entity the right and related obligation to provide public services through the use of a public asset (such as using a part of a university facility as a bookstore) in exchange for significant consideration from the other entity. In the context of these agreements, the university that transfers rights and obligations is referred to as the transferor. The entity to which these rights and obligations are transferred is referred to as the operator. Second, this operator—whether it is in the public or private sector—collects fees from the users or customers of the public asset (for example, students at the University). Finally, the transferor maintains control over the services provided. For example, the University has the ability to modify or approve the rates that can be charged for the services and the type of services that are provided.

For an SCA that involves an existing facility, the transferor should continue to report the capital asset. For a new facility or an improvement to an existing facility, the transferor should report the new facility or the improvement as a capital asset at fair value when the facility is placed in operation. The transferor should also report any related contractual obligations as liabilities. Finally, the transferor should report the difference between those two amounts as a deferred inflow of resources. This pronouncement must be applied for years that begin after December 15, 2011.
Reporting Entity Standards: In December 2010, the GASB issued Statement No. 61, Financial Reporting Entity: Omnibus. This standard is intended to improve the information presented about the financial reporting entity, which is made up of the University financial reporting entity and related entities (component units). The statement modifies certain requirements for inclusion of component units in the financial reporting entity. For organizations that previously were required to be included as component units by meeting the fiscal dependency criteria, a financial benefit or burden relationship is also needed between the University and that organization for it to be included in the reporting entity as a component unit. The statement also modifies the criteria for reporting component units as if they were part of the University (ie: blending). Blending should be used when the University and the component unit have a financial benefit or burden relationship, or management has operational responsibility for the component units. Additionally, for equity interests in legally separate organizations, the entity is required to report its interest as “restricted net assets – nonspendable.” This standard is effective for financial statements for reporting periods beginning after June 15, 2012; however, earlier application is encouraged.

Private Sector Accounting Rules: In December 2010, the GASB issued Statement No. 62, Codification of Accounting and Financial Reporting Guidance Contained in Pre-November 30, 1989 FASB and AICPA Pronouncements. This changes the requirement for the University to apply any private sector accounting guidance that existed as of November 30, 1989 and instead incorporates all such guidance in this statement. The University will no longer have the ability to choose to continue to follow FASB statements written after that date, although such guidance still qualifies as “other accounting literature” in the GAAP hierarchy. This pronouncement must be applied for years that begin after December 15, 2011.

Deferred Inflows/Outflows and Net Position: In June 2011, the GASB issued Statement No. 63 Financial Reporting of Deferred Outflows of Resources, Deferred Inflows of Resources, and Net Position. This standard provides financial reporting guidance for deferred inflows and outflows of resources. Concepts Statement No. 4, Elements of Financial Statements, introduced and defined those elements as a consumption of net assets by the University that is applicable to a future reporting period, and an acquisition of net assets by the University that is applicable to a future reporting period, respectively. Previous financial reporting standards do not include guidance for reporting those financial statement elements, which are distinct from assets and liabilities. The standard also incorporates deferred outflows of resources and deferred inflows of resources into the definitions of the required components of the residual measure and by renaming that measure as net position, rather than net assets. The provisions for this standard are effective for financial statements for periods beginning after December 15, 2011.

Items Previously Reported as Assets and Liabilities: In March 2012, the GASB issued Statement No. 65, Items Previously Reported as Assets and Liabilities. Statement No. 65 establishes accounting and financial reporting standards that reclassify, as deferred outflows and inflows of resources, certain items that were previously reported as assets and liabilities. This statement also provides other financial reporting guidance related to the impact of the financial statement elements deferred outflows of resources and deferred inflows of resources. The provisions of this Statement are effective for financial statements for periods beginning after December 15, 2012 (or June 30, 2014). Statement No. 65 will be implemented for the University as of June 30, 2014.

Reporting for Pensions: In June 2012, the GASB issued Statement No. 68, Accounting and Financial Reporting for Pensions. Statement No. 68 requires governments providing defined benefit pensions to recognize their unfunded pension benefit obligation as a liability for the first time, and to more comprehensively and comparably measure the annual costs of pension benefits. The statement also enhances accountability and transparency through revised note disclosures and required supplementary information (RSI). The University is currently evaluating the impact this standard will have on the financial statements when adopted. The provisions of this statement are effective for financial statements for the year ending June 30, 2015.
NOTE 2 – DEPOSITS AND INVESTMENTS

Deposits

Custodial credit risk is the risk that, in the event of the failure of a depository financial institution, the University will not be able to recover deposits or will not be able to recover collateral securities that are in the possession of an outside party. Protection of University cash and deposits is provided by the federal deposit insurance corporation as well as qualified securities pledged by the institution holding the assets. Under State law, financial institutions must collateralize all public deposits. The value of the pooled collateral must equal at least 105 percent of public funds deposited. Collateral is held by trustees including the Federal Reserve Bank and designated third-party trustees of the financial institution.

At June 30, 2012, the cash and cash equivalents balance of $22,397,834 is after the University recorded an overdraft consisting of items in transit of $3,860,475 in accounts payable. The bank balance at June 30, 2012 was $22,131,686, of which $690,982 was covered by federal depositary insurance, and $21,440,704 was covered by collateral held by the trust department of a bank other than the pledging bank in the name of the pledging bank.

At June 30, 2011, the cash and cash equivalents balance of $27,386,909 is after the University recorded an overdraft consisting of items in transit of $4,622,342 in accounts payable. The bank balance at June 30, 2011 was $27,280,702, of which $1,005,778 was covered by federal depositary insurance, and $26,274,924 was covered by collateral held by the trust department of a bank other than the pledging bank in the name of the pledging bank.

Investments

In accordance with the Board of Trustees’ resolution, the types of investments that may be purchased by the University include United States treasury securities, federal government agency securities, certificates of deposit, bank repurchase agreements, commercial paper, bonds and other obligations of the State of Ohio or any of its political subdivisions, the State Treasurer’s Asset Reserve (STAR Ohio), bankers acceptances, money market funds, common stocks, and corporate bonds. The endowment investments are managed by the Foundation, which can also invest in real estate and alternative investments.

STAR Ohio is an investment pool managed by the Ohio state treasurer’s office that allows governments within the State to pool their funds for investment purposes. STAR Ohio is not registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission as an investment company, but does operate in a manner consistent with Rule 2A7 of the Investment Company Act of 1940. The investment is valued at STAR Ohio’s share price, which represents fair market value, on June 30, 2012 and 2011.

Restricted investments consist of unspent debt proceeds.
As of June 30, 2012, the University had the following types of investments and maturities:

Some of the U.S. agency securities are callable at various dates. The University believes that no securities will be called.

Interest Rate Risk. Interest rate risk is the risk that changes in interest rates will adversely affect the fair value of an investment. Investments with interest rates that are fixed for longer periods are likely to be subject to more variability in their fair values as a result of future changes in interest rates.

Credit Risk. Credit risk is the risk that an issuer or other counterparty to an investment will not fulfill its obligations. While the University’s bond mutual fund investment itself is not rated, the credit quality of the fund’s holdings is AA or better, as rated by Standard & Poor’s and Moody’s.

Custodial Credit Risk. Custodial credit risk is the risk that, in the event of the failure of a counterparty to a transaction, the University will not be able to recover the value of investment securities that are in the possession of an outside party. The University does not have a policy for custodial credit risk. At June 30, 2012 and 2011 none of the investment securities were uninsured and unregistered, with securities held by the counterparty or by its trust department or agent but not in the University's name.

Concentration of Credit Risk. Concentration of credit risk is the risk of loss attributed to the magnitude of investment in a single issuer. As of June 30, 2012 and 2011, not more than 5% of the University’s total investments were invested in any one issuer except those which are obligations of, or fully guaranteed as to both principal and interest by, the U.S. Government or its agencies.
Foreign Currency Risk. Foreign currency risk is the risk that changes in exchange rates will adversely affect the fair value of an investment. At June 30, 2012 and 2011, investments include approximately $5.2 million and $5.6 million, respectively, managed by international equity managers that are subject to foreign currency risk. Although the University’s investment policy does not specifically address foreign currency risk, it does limit foreign investments to no more than 20% of the portfolio.

NOTE 4 – STATE SUPPORT

The University is a State-assisted institution of higher education, which receives a student-based subsidy from the State. This subsidy is determined annually, based upon a formula devised by the Ohio Board of Regents.

In addition, the State provides the funding and constructs major plant facilities on the University’s campus. The funding is obtained from the issuance of revenue bonds by the Ohio Public Facilities Commission (OPFC), which in turn causes the construction and subsequent lease of the facility, by the Ohio Board of Regents. Upon completion, the Board of Regents turns over control of the facility to the University. Neither the obligation for the revenue bonds issued by OPFC nor the annual debt service charges for principal and interest on the bonds are reflected in the University’s financial statements. The OPFC revenue bonds are currently being funded through appropriations to the Board of Regents by the General Assembly.
The facilities are not pledged as collateral for the revenue bonds. Instead, the bonds are supported by a pledge of monies in the Higher Education Bond Service Fund established in the custody of the Treasurer of State. If sufficient monies are not available from this fund, a pledge exists to assess a special student fee uniformly applicable to students in State-assisted institutions of higher education throughout the State.

In September, 2011, the University issued taxable general receipts bonds in the principal amount of $5,775,000. The General Receipts Series 2011 Bonds were issued as fixed rate bonds with monthly maturities beginning October 1, 2013 through April 1, 2042. Interest is payable monthly at the rate of 5.32%. The proceeds of the bonds will be used to finance a portion of the costs of public improvements identified as the North Campus Neighborhood - Project Phase I. This phase is the subject of a "project development agreement" date July 14, 2011 by and between Cleveland State University and CSU Housing, LLC, an Ohio limited liability company which serves as the project developer.

In May 2008, the University issued general receipts bonds in the amount of $20,910,000. The General Receipts Series 2008 Bonds were issued as fixed rate bonds maturing in 2013, 2033 and 2036. The proceeds of the bonds were used to refinance the 2003B and 2007B Bonds. The bonds have various call provisions.

During the year ended June 30, 2007, the University issued Series 2007A general receipts bonds. The Series 2007A general receipts bonds were issued for $42,110,000, bear interest rates between 4% and 5.75%, and mature in 2036. Proceeds were used to fund the construction of a new Student Center.

The Series 2007B general receipts bonds were issued for $9,210,000. They bear variable interest rates that reset weekly and mature in 2036. The interest rate is set at rates based upon yield evaluations at par of comparable securities. The interest rate was 4.51% at April 24, 2008. Proceeds were used to fund the construction of a new building on the University’s campus to house the College of Education and Human Services. This bond was called and refinanced in May 2008, using the proceeds of the General Receipts Series 2008 Bonds.

In August 2004, the University issued general receipts bonds in the amount of $62,000,000. The General Receipts Series 2004 Bonds were issued as fixed rate bonds with serial maturities through 2008 and term bonds maturing in 2014, 2019, 2024, 2029 and 2034. The proceeds of the bonds were used to pay the cost of a variety of projects, including construction of a student center, parking facilities and a bookstore, renovations to a portion of Fenn Tower, and landscaping and other permanent site improvements to the main plaza.
In June 2003, the University issued Series 2003A and 2003B (Series 2003) general receipts bonds. The Series 2003A general receipts bonds were issued for $35,745,000, bear interest rates between 2.5% and 5.25%, and mature in 2033. Proceeds were used to refund outstanding Series 1993 general receipts bonds, rehabilitate the Howe Mansion and construct an Administrative Center.

Interest expense on indebtedness was $9,034,400 in fiscal 2012 and $9,460,196 in fiscal 2011. On construction-related debt, interest cost of $211,647 was capitalized in fiscal 2012, net of $2,360 of interest earned on invested proceeds; interest cost of $0 was capitalized in fiscal 2011.

The University leases various pieces of equipment which have been recorded under various capital leases in amounts representing the present value of future minimum lease payments. Capital lease obligations are collateralized by equipment with an aggregate net book value of $21,367,511 at June 30, 2012 and $37,909,684 at June 30, 2011. The capital leases have varying maturity dates through 2041.

The University has entered into various lease agreements for office equipment, and office and classroom space, which are considered operating leases. The University has leased space in the Fenn Tower building from the Corporation, which it uses for classrooms and meeting rooms. Total rental expense under operating leases during the years ended June 30, 2012 and 2011 amounted to $2,852,250 and $2,581,938, respectively. The operating leases have varying maturity dates through 2042.

NOTE 7 – EMPLOYMENT BENEFIT PLANS

Retirement Plans

Substantially all nonstudent University employees are covered by one of three retirement plans. The university faculty are covered by the State Teachers Retirement System of Ohio (STRS). Nonfaculty employees are covered by the Ohio Public Employees Retirement System (OPERS). Employees may opt out of STRS and OPERS and participate in the Alternative Retirement Plan (ARP).

STRS and OPERS both offer three separate retirement plans: the defined benefit plan, the defined contribution plan, and a combined plan.

Defined Benefit Plans

STRS is a statewide retirement plan for certified teachers. STRS provides retirement and disability benefits, annual cost-of-living adjustments, and death benefits to plan members and beneficiaries. Benefits are established by State statute. Contribution rates are established by the State Teachers Retirement Board, not to exceed the statutory maximum rates of 10% for employees and 14% for employers. Currently, employees contribute 10% of covered payroll and employers contribute 14% of covered payroll. The University's contributions to STRS for the years ending June 30, 2012, 2011, and 2010 were $6,826,392, $7,282,885, and $7,185,855, respectively, equal to the required contributions for each year. STRS issues a stand-alone financial report. The report may be obtained by writing to STRS Ohio, 275 East Broad Street, Columbus, OH 43215-3771, by calling 1-888-227-7877, or by visiting the STRS Ohio Web site at www.strsoh.org.
OPERS is a statewide retirement plan, which covers nonteaching University employees. OPERS provides retirement and disability benefits, annual cost-of-living adjustments, and death benefits to plan members and beneficiaries. Benefits are established by State statute. Contribution rates are established by the Ohio Public Employee Retirement Board, not to exceed the statutory maximum rates of 10% for employees and 14% for employers. Currently, employees contribute 10% of covered payroll and employers contribute 14% of covered payroll. The University’s contributions to OPERS for the years ending June 30, 2012, 2011, and 2010 were $7,151,384, $7,437,768, and $7,228,118, respectively, equal to the required contributions for each year. OPERS issues a stand-alone financial report. The report may be obtained by visiting www.opers.org/investments/cafr.shtml, writing to OPERS, 277 East Town Street, Columbus, OH 43215-4642, or by calling (614) 222-5601 or 800-222-7377.

Defined Contribution Plan

The University also offers eligible employees an alternative retirement program. The University is required to contribute to STRS 3.50% of earned compensation for those employees participating in the alternative retirement program. The University’s contributions for the years ended June 30, 2012, 2011 and 2010 were $288,450, $371,702 and $347,415, respectively, which equal 3.50% of earned compensation.

STRS also offers a defined contribution plan in addition to its long established defined benefit plan. All employee contributions and employer contributions at a rate of 10.5% are placed in an investment account directed by the employee. Disability benefits are limited to the employee’s account balance. Employees electing the defined contribution plan receive no postretirement health care benefits.

OPERS also offers a defined contribution plan, the Member-Directed Plan (MD). The MD plan does not provide disability benefits, annual cost-of-living adjustments, postretirement health care benefits or death benefits to plan members and beneficiaries. Benefits are entirely dependent on the sum of contributions and investment returns earned by each participant’s choice of investment options.

Combined Plans

STRS offers a combined plan with features of both a defined contribution plan and a defined benefit plan. In the combined plan, employee contributions are invested in self-directed investments, and the employer contribution is used to fund a reduced defined benefit. Employees electing the combined plan receive postretirement health care benefits.

OPERS also offers a combined plan. This is a cost-sharing, multiple-employer defined benefit plan that has elements of both a defined benefit and defined contribution plan. In the combined plan, employee contributions are invested in self-directed investments, and the employer contribution is used to fund a reduced defined benefit. OPERS also provides retirement, disability, survivor, and postretirement health care benefits to qualified members.

Post-employment Benefits

STRS provides other postemployment benefits (OPEB) to all retirees and their dependents, while OPERS provides postretirement health care coverage to age and service retirants (and dependents) with 10 or more years of qualifying Ohio service credit. Health care coverage for disability recipients and primary survivor recipients is also available under OPERS. A portion of each employer’s contributions is set aside for the funding of postretirement health care. For STRS, this rate was 1.0% of the total 14.00%, while the OPERS rate was 4.0% of the total 14.00% for the year ended June 30, 2011.
The Ohio Revised Code provides the statutory authority for public employers to fund postretirement health care through their contributions to STRS and OPERS. Postretirement healthcare under STRS is financed on a pay-as-you-go basis. The amount contributed by the University to STRS to fund these benefits for the years ended June 30, 2012, 2011 and 2010 was $487,599, $520,206, and $513,275, respectively.

Postretirement health care under OPERS is advance-funded on an actuarially determined basis. The amount contributed by the University to OPERS for OPEB funding for the years ended June 30, 2012, 2011 and 2010 was $3,575,692, $3,718,884 and $3,614,059, respectively.

NOTE 8 – RISK MANAGEMENT

The University is exposed to various risks of loss related to torts; theft of, damage to, and destruction of assets; errors and omissions; injuries to employees; and natural disasters. On July 1, 1993, the University joined with eleven other State-assisted universities in Ohio to form an insurance-purchasing pool for the acquisition of commercial property and casualty insurance. The University pays annual premiums to the pool for its property and casualty insurance coverage based on its percentage of the total insurable value to the pool. Future contributions will be adjusted based upon each university’s loss history. Each university has a base deductible of $100,000. The next $250,000 of any one claim is the responsibility of the pool, which has a total annual aggregate deductible limit of $700,000. The commercial property insurer is liable for the amount of any claim in excess of $350,000, or $100,000 in the event the pool has reached its annual limit. There were no significant reductions in coverage from the prior year.

The University maintains a self-insured dental plan for its employees. The University’s risk exposure is limited to claims incurred. The changes in the total liability for actual and estimated dental claims for the years ended June 30, 2012 and 2011 are summarized below:

The University maintains a self-insured medical plan for its employees. The University’s risk exposure is limited to claims incurred. There is a $150,000 specific stop loss for any given claim. The changes in the total liability for actual and estimated medical claims for the years ended June 30, 2012 and 2011 are summarized below:

<table>

Medical claims are based upon estimates of the claims liabilities. Estimates are based upon past experience, medical inflation trends, and current claims outstanding, including year-end lag analysis. Differences between the estimated claims payable and actual claims paid are reported as an operating expense in the Statement of Revenue, Expenses, and Changes in Net Assets.

The University participates in a State pool of agencies and universities that pays workers’ compensation premiums into the State Insurance Fund on a pay-as-you-go basis (the Plan), which pays workers’ compensation benefits to beneficiaries who have been injured on the job. Losses from asserted and unasserted claims for the participating state agencies and universities in the Plan are accrued by the Ohio Bureau of Workers’ Compensation (the Bureau) based on estimates that incorporate past experience, as well as other considerations including the nature of each claim or incident and relevant trend factors. Participants in the Plan annually fund the workers’ compensation liability based on rates set by the Bureau to collect cash needed in subsequent fiscal years to pay the workers’ compensation claims of participating State agencies and universities.

During the normal course of its operations, the University has become a defendant in various legal actions. It is not possible to estimate the outcome of these legal actions; however, in the opinion of legal counsel and the University administration, the disposition of these pending cases will not have a material adverse effect on the financial condition or operations of the University. Settled claims resulting from these risks have not exceeded insurance coverage in any of the past three fiscal years.

NOTE 9 – GRANT CONTINGENCIES

The University receives significant financial assistance from numerous federal, state and local agencies in the form of grants. The disbursement of funds received under these programs generally requires compliance with terms and conditions specified in the grant agreements and are subject to audit by the grantor agencies. Any disallowed claims resulting from such audits could become a liability of the University. However, in the opinion of the University administration, any such disallowed claims will not have a material effect on any of the financial statements of the University at June 30, 2012.

NOTE 10 – NET ASSETS

The temporarily and permanently restricted net assets of the Foundation are balances whose use by the Foundation has been limited by the donors to a specific time period or purpose. Temporarily restricted net assets are available, and permanently restricted net assets are held in perpetuity, for the following purposes:

NOTE 11 – COMPONENT UNITS

The Foundation and the Corporation are legally separate not-for-profit entities organized for the purpose of providing support to the University. Both the Foundation and the Corporation are exempt from federal income taxes under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code.

The Foundation acts primarily as a fundraising organization to supplement the resources that are available to the University in support of its programs. The Board of the Foundation is self-perpetuating and consists of business leaders and friends of the University. Although the University does not control the timing or amount of receipts from the Foundation, the majority of resources, or income thereon, that the Foundation holds and invests are restricted to the activities of the University by donors. Because these restricted resources held by the Foundation can only be used by, or for the benefit of, the University, the Foundation is considered a component unit of the University and is discretely presented in the University’s financial statements. Complete financial statements for the Foundation can be obtained from the Office of the Executive Director at 2121 Euclid Avenue, Keith Building Room 323, Cleveland, OH 44115-2214.

During the years ended June 30, 2012 and 2011, the Foundation paid $1,101,358 and $3,802,834, respectively, to the University. At June 30, 2012 and 2011, the University had receivables from the Foundation totaling $2,343,930 and $1,051,798, respectively.

As authorized by the Board of Trustees, beginning in fiscal year 1998, the University placed Endowment and Quasi-Endowment funds on deposit with the Foundation for investment. At June 30, 2012 and 2011, the amount on deposit with the Foundation totaled $2,530,750 and $2,590,934, respectively.

As of June 30, 2012, the Foundation had the following types of investments:

The Foundation reclassified net assets as of 2011 to properly reflect the allocation of investment income related to prior years.

The Corporation was organized primarily to further the educational mission of the University by developing, owning and managing housing for the students, faculty and staff of the University. On March 1, 2005, the Corporation leased the Fenn Tower building, located on the University’s campus, from the University. Annual rent is equal to the net available cash flows from the Fenn Tower project. No rent was paid during fiscal years 2012 and 2011. On March 1, 2005, the Corporation entered into a Development Agreement with American Campus Communities (ACC) to plan, design and construct housing units in Fenn Tower. In addition, the Corporation entered into a Management Agreement with ACC to manage Fenn Tower. The project was completed in August 2006. The facility has the capacity to house 430 residents.

On March 17, 2005, the Corporation issued $34,385,000 of Cleveland-Cuyahoga County Port Authority bonds (Series 2005 Bonds) to finance the costs of the Fenn Tower project. The Series 2005 Bonds are serial bonds maturing between 2007 and 2036. Interest rates are fixed and vary from 3.0% to 4.5%.

On June 1, 2008, the Corporation leased land, owned by the University and located on its campus, from the University. On August 22, 2008, the Corporation entered into a design-build agreement with the Apostolos Group to construct a 623-car parking garage on the site. On July 1, 2008, the Corporation entered into a lease agreement with the University to operate the garage once construction is completed. On July 25, 2008, the Corporation issued $14,500,000 of tax-exempt bonds with the Cleveland-Cuyahoga County Port Authority to finance construction of the garage. The Series 2008 Bonds are serial bonds maturing between 2009 and 2040. They bear variable interest rates that reset weekly. The interest rate is set at rates based upon yield evaluations at par of comparable securities. The interest rate was .15% at June 30, 2012. Construction of the garage was completed in August 2009.
On December 18, 2009, the Corporation leased land, owned by the University and located on its campus, from the University. On August 24, 2009, the Corporation entered into a development agreement with ACC to plan, design and construct 600 beds of student housing and a 300-car parking garage on this land. In addition, the Corporation entered into a management agreement with ACC to manage the student housing. On December 18, 2009, the Corporation issued $59,005,000 of County of Cuyahoga, Ohio bonds (Series 2009 bonds) to finance the project. The 2009 bonds are serial bonds maturing between 2011 and 2042. They bear variable interest rates that are reset weekly. The interest rate is set at rates based upon yield evaluations at par of comparable securities. The interest rate was .15% at June 30, 2012. Both phases of the project were complete as of August 2011.

NOTE 12 – SUBSEQUENT EVENT

On August 21, 2012, the University issued general receipts bonds in the principal amount of $152,835,000. The General Receipts Series 2012 Bonds were issued as fixed rate bonds with monthly maturities beginning June 1, 2013 through June 1, 2037. Interest is payable monthly at the rate of 5.0%. The proceeds of the bonds will be used to (1) pay costs of constructing a new building on the University’s campus, rehabilitation of existing buildings, campus-wide upgrades of electrical, mechanical and security systems and improvements to campus walkways; (2) refund portions of the Outstanding Series 2003A Bonds, Series 2004 Bonds and Series 2008 Bonds; and (3) pay costs relating to the issuance of the Series 2012 Bonds.
MEMORANDUM

TO: The Faculty

FROM: Ad Hoc Committee (Professors Patricia J. Falk, David F. Forte, Stephen W. Gard, Sandra J. Kerber, Kenneth J. Kowalski, Lloyd B. Snyder, and student members Paul Deegan and Catherine Reichel)

DATE: May 8, 2007

RE: Moot Court Course Credits and Grading

Over the spring semester, the Ad Hoc Committee met regularly to discuss issues related to credits and grading of the Moot Court Program, the Cleveland State Law Review, and the Journal of Law and Health. We devoted the first part of the semester to fact-finding. We invited Karin Mika and Steve Werber to tell us about the current moot court program and its origins, including the awarding of credits and grades. In addition, we invited Greg Jolivette, the Chair of the Moot Court Board of Governors, Joe Mieskowski, editor-in-chief of the Cleveland State Law Review, and Austin McGuan and Anupriya Krishna, co-editors of the Journal of Law and Health to discuss students’ perceptions of the importance of these activities and the academic credits associated with them. At the end of the semester, we invited Katie McFadden, the new Chair of the Moot Court Board of Governors, to review the following proposals and provide feedback on them before presenting them to the faculty. The second part of the semester we discussed various aspects of the proposals in this memorandum.

The Moot Court program serves three different primary functions:

1. It is an academic program for which students receive academic credit;

2. It is a competition program which serves institutional purposes;¹ and

3. It is a student organization with its own by-laws and some degree of self-governance.

These three functions are not necessarily inconsistent. One of our goals was to resolve, to the greatest extent possible, the inherent tension between these functions.

¹ The Moot Court program also potentially serves various other institutional functions, including but not limited to alumni relations, admissions, fund-raising, and first-year orientation. The most prominent ancillary function is the annual Moot Court Night event.
I. Academic Credits

At present, students receive a maximum of six credits for participating in the Moot Court program, as follows:\(^2\)

- Moot Court Tryout – 1 credit (pass/fail)
- Competition – 3 credits (graded)
- Moot Court Board – 2 credits (graded)\(^3\)

The Ad Hoc Committee proposes that Moot Court students would receive a maximum of six credits,\(^4\) typically three credits in their second year and three credits in their third year of law school.\(^5\) The courses would be called simply:

- Moot Court I – 3 credits (graded)
- Moot Court II – 3 credits (graded)

Thus, “Moot Court Board” would be eliminated as a course. The one-hour credit for Moot Court tryout also would be eliminated and the second-year competition would be changed so that students wanting to join Moot Court in their second year would simply hand in their brief for Advanced Brief Writing to try out for the team.

Gradual Implementation. If the faculty approves these changes, the Ad Hoc Committee recommends that the new system be gradually phased in over the next few years and that students, who are currently enrolled in the Moot Court program, receive credits in accordance with the system as it existed prior to these proposed changes. Thus, for example, a student in her second year of law school, who has competed but not received credit for that competition, should be allowed to sign up for the five credits in her third year that she would have earned under the old system.

Rationale:

\(^2\) Advanced Brief Writing is not part of the Moot Court program, just as Scholarly Writing is not part of the law review program. Both courses are third semester courses that are part of the legal writing program. All students are required to take three semesters of legal writing and may choose between several offerings, including Advanced Brief Writing and Scholarly Writing.

\(^3\) The references here are to the sequence followed by full-time students. Everything herein applies equally to part-time students except that the timing of the sequence is somewhat different.

\(^4\) Under no circumstances may a student earn more than six credit hours for any moot court-type of activity. Thus, for instance, a student might sign up for Moot Court I and Moot Court II or Moot Court I and the Jessup competition, but not Moot Court I, Moot Court II, and the Jessup competition.

\(^5\) Some students may take only one of these courses, depending upon when they join the Moot Court Board (i.e., after their first year or after their second year of law school.) Also, part-time students may sign up for these classes in their third and fourth years of law school.
Our fact-finding disclosed that virtually all students on Moot Court compete two times during their academic careers: once in their second year, for which they currently receive no academic credit even though they do work that has academic character and value, and a second time in their third year, when they receive 3 credits for a competition and 2 credits for being on the Moot Court Board of Governors. This system of credits is upside down, giving students credits (and grades) for the non-academic function (Moot Court Board) and expecting students to perform the academic work (second-year competition) for “free” without credit.

The Ad Hoc Committee’s proposal, chiefly authored by Steve Gard, is quite simple. We propose that students receive credits and grades for the two times they prepare for and participate in a moot court competition. This will ensure that students are earning law school credit for real academic work—the research, writing, and oral advocacy skills that are needed for a strong competitive effort. After hearing from the two previous advisors, moot court participants, and others, we believe that Moot Court competitions have considerable academic value. The skills that students develop, practice, and refine during their two-year association with the Moot Court program are skills that good lawyers should possess: the ability to write well, to communicate effectively both in writing and orally, the ability to advocate for a particular position, and the ability to work with others in achieving an intellectual goal. In reality, Moot Court is a specialized skills training course, not simply preparation for an appellate practice.

Moreover, the Ad Hoc Committee believes that participation in two separate competitions, one in the second year and one in the third year, has academic merit. In-depth legal research and writing on different legal issues has academic value that is only enhanced by oral defense of the ideas contained in the legal writing. In addition to the academic soundness of giving students credits for developing and perfecting both written and oral advocacy skills in a second competition, awarding credit for a second competition also serves greater institutional goals. Cleveland-Marshall’s success as a Moot Court program relies upon an experienced cadre of students participating in national competitions. Without experience, our students will not be able to effectively compete with the experienced students who come from other schools. This system, then, will encourage students to compete in both their second and third years.

Finally, to promote and preserve the high quality of the Moot Court program as an institutional endeavor, the second function of our Moot Court program, we propose that the course descriptions of Moot Court I and Moot Court II include, in addition to the competitions themselves, activities traditionally associated with being a member of the Moot Court Board of Governors, such as the preparation of problems to be used in competitions, the grading of briefs, and the judging of moot court oral rounds. These activities may be viewed as the equivalent of attendance or class participation points in a traditional law school class, which are a necessary part of the course but do not serve as the principal basis upon which the grade is based. Other activities performed by the Moot Court Board are clearly non-academic in character and involve the third function of our Moot Court program—as a student organization. These activities include Moot Court Night and the Moot Court Banquet planning and execution, publicity, and fund-raising.
We propose that these non-academic activities by the Moot Court Board be supervised by and coordinated with the law school administration and staff to the greatest possible extent.

II. Grades versus Pass/Fail

Based on our investigation, the Ad Hoc Committee believes that traditional academic grading of academic work is entirely appropriate and proper. Therefore, we propose to retain graded credits for Moot Court I and Moot Court II rather than to change these credits to pass/fail. We also believe that the advisor for the Moot Court program, who works closely with the students on their briefs and their oral arguments, is the appropriate person to award these grades. Steve Gard, the new advisor for the Moot Court program, believes that it is possible to grade fairly and accurately the academic work of each student in the Moot Court program. For many years, grading by faculty members has been subject solely to administrative oversight and should continue in that fashion.

As noted earlier, the Ad Hoc Committee met with representative of the Cleveland State Law Review and the Journal of Law and Health to discuss with them academic credits and grading in connection with those activities. The Committee came to two conclusions as the result of these conversations. First, it is extremely difficult to make comparisons between the Moot Court program and the two Cleveland State law reviews/journals because they perform very different functions. The Committee came to believe that we were doing a disservice to both activities by trying to equate them. Second, the clear message that we received from students in law review/journal-related activities is that they wish the system to remain as it is currently configured. Currently, students get academic credit for writing their law review/journal notes and receive pass/fail credit for various administrative activities. Therefore, the Ad Hoc Committee recommends that no changes be made in the grading procedures for the two law review/journal activities.

III. Unresolved Issues—the Ad Hoc Committee’s Work Continues

Unfortunately, the Ad Hoc Committee did not have sufficient time to resolve two additional issues related to the Moot Court program: (1) whether the Jessup International Moot Court Competition should be subsumed under the umbrella of the Moot Court program or remain as a separate course/activity and (2) whether students wishing to compete in a subject-specific “moot court” event not under the auspices of the Moot Court program should receive academic credit for those efforts. Currently, a system exists for these students to obtain financial support from the administration for participation in these “unofficial” or extramural moot court activities, but not academic credit. The Ad Hoc Committee has agreed to continue its work next fall to resolve these additional issues. In the meantime, Steve Gard will have greater experience as the Moot Court advisor and may have insights helpful to the resolution of these issues.
